Dear Friends,

Why does community matter? What is its value to us as Jews? In so many ways, current events have demonstrated the strength and necessity of the Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia and Jewish communal bonds. We are there for the celebrations and the crises because we have the networks and partnerships already in place to rush to where we are most needed. In order to respond to a tragedy, we need to be ready the day before, and we are.

Over the past year, we banded together in times of significant simchas and sorrows. We celebrated together for Israel's 70th anniversary with dozens of events bringing together thousands of people. We responded together when our Israel partnership region was in crisis, rushing to their aid with emergency funding for their physical and emotional safety. And when 11 Jews were murdered in Pittsburgh during Shabbat worship — followed closely by another tragic shooting in a Poway, California synagogue, killing one — we grieved together and declared our collective determination to stand up to anti-Semitism and hate in all its forms.

At the very same time, the Jewish Federation has been stalwart in continuing to do our sacred day-to-day work of sustaining our Jewish communities and helping to ensure its vibrant future. Every year, thanks to your generosity, we support so many wonderful organizations and programs that serve vulnerable populations, inspire community engagement and support Jewish life and learning. That programming directly affects the lives of hundreds of thousands of people, and is something they know they can depend on, year after year — because the Jewish Federation will always be there.

Therein lies the meaning and value of community. It's the place that has your interests at heart, where you know you belong and can always turn. It's a support system; a safety net; a big, noisy, loving mishpachah. It's where we can amplify our voices to the point no one can ignore. Every dollar and volunteer hour is used to strengthen our community — and for that, I am grateful to each of you, since any community is only as strong as the people who participate. For everything you do to Carry the Light for our Jewish communities, I thank you.

As I enter my final year as board chair, I encourage you to continue reaching out to me with your feedback and suggestions at selachs@jewishphilly.org. And to keep up with the latest in our Jewish communities and how your involvement with the Jewish Federation impacts our world, I encourage you to sign up for our Jewish Philly e-newsletter at jewishphilly.org/newsletter.

From my family to yours, I wish you a sweet, happy and healthy 5780.

Reconstructionist Judaism

Reconstructionists approach Judaism – and life – with deep reverence for the past and a passion to relate it to the present.

We view Judaism as the evolving civilization of the Jewish people in an ongoing relationship with God.

We have originated many of the core innovations within American Judaism and lead efforts to make our community even more forward-thinking, inclusive and relevant.

Does this approach to Judaism resonate with you?

HOW SPEAKING HEBREW MAKES YOUR CHILD BETTER AT CODING

From their first day of school, our students learn to think in two languages. Because Hebrew syntax is dramatically unlike English, kids actually see language differently. They search for patterns, learn to read in a different direction and understand new symbols.

This acumen – constantly shifting thought between two very diverse languages – has astounding benefits. Children gain a distinct advantage writing code in our engineering labs. They discover breakthrough ways to convey ideas and to unlock other abstract subjects, like algebra, art and music. They view the world with extraordinary curiosity, insight and compassion.

POWERED BY PERELMAN

Our peerless curriculum fuses Jewish and general studies in a way that elevates higher learning into highest learning. Students apply over 5,700 years of proven wisdom to subjects like architecture, financial literacy, anthropology and music theory.

The result? An experience that you cannot find at any other school, anywhere.

The Horwitz-Wasserman Holocaust Memorial Plaza teemed with anticipation the morning of Oct. 22 as more than 200 people buzzed about, chatting and exchanging pleasantries as they waited for the opening ceremony to begin.

The Philadelphia Holocaust Remembrance Foundation (PHRF) formally unveiled the new plaza with speeches by those involved with the project, local officials and a Holocaust survivor, as well as a ribbon-cutting ceremony. Following the event, the plaza opened to the public.

Located at the corner of 16th Street and the Benjamin Franklin Parkway, the Monument to Six Million Jewish Martyrs stands at the plaza's focal point. The late sculptor Nathan Rappaport created the bronze monument in 1964, which will now be joined in its mission of remembrance by the surrounding plaza.

"For many of us, today is a day of conflicting emotions, as we reflect on an event that represents the ultimate manifestation of human evil and, without a doubt, the most significant violation of human rights in modern history," PHRF Chairman David Adelman said. "But today is also a reason to celebrate — celebrate the democratic values that bind us, celebrate the furtherance of Holocaust education and celebrate the people

Different elements and additions to the plaza serve as a reminder of the Holocaust. These include six pillars on one side of the plaza for the 6 million Jews murdered. One side of each pillar mentions a key event of the Holocaust to contrast with a different democratic value. Train tracks that once led to the Treblinka concentration camp are embedded in the pavement to underscore the deportations that led to genocide.

One of the saplings of the original Theresienstadt tree — planted and nurtured by children imprisoned in that concentration camp — now stands at the plaza. The sapling’s presence is intended to highlight the investment that must be made for future generations. At the far western portion of the plaza is a tree grove, which represents the woodlands that sheltered those in the resistance movement and those forced into hiding.

PHRF worked with the USC Shoah Foundation to include the plaza in its iWalk app. The app provides users with three different guides through the plaza — for middle school students, high school students and general audiences — to learn about its different sections. The guides include testimonies from Holocaust survivors, maps and other multimedia content. The information is also available in Spanish.

“I’m here today, proud three times over,” said Stephen Cozen, chair of USC Shoah Foundation board of councilors and founder and chairman of Cozen O’Connor. “I’m a Jewish American, I’m a Survivor Anneliese Nossbaum speaks, with David Adelman beside her.

Philadelphia native and I'm the chair of the USC Shoah Foundation. I'm proud of this inspiring memorial and important teaching tools that we will add to it."

"I grew up in Budapest, Hungary, and all four of my grandparents are Holocaust survivors," said PHRF Acting Director Eszter Kutas, who was not one of the speakers but was praised for her work in creating the plaza several times during the speeches. "This project has been a personal calling for me because of that legacy. It makes me extremely proud and inspired to be able to participate in something that is going to have a lasting impact for future generations in Holocaust education."

In 2004, PHRF began brainstorming possible ways to use the land surrounding the monument. The foundation decided on a plaza, "an open public space that's accessible to everybody," Kutas said.

Two and a half years ago, PHRF unveiled its plans. Then, on Nov. 28, PHRF broke ground and construction began.

With its location at such a central point in the city, some speakers noted that while many would come to explore the plaza, many others would happen upon it accidentally.

"It's just beautiful," said Sarah Meller, a Holocaust survivor who attended the opening. "I know so many people will come here and read about it and see and experience this. It's really a good thing they did this. It's a wonderful memorial. Of course, a lot of people come to Philadelphia to visit, a lot of tourists, and this will be nice for people to see."

Meller was 8 in 1941 when Italy invaded her hometown in what was then Yugoslavia. Her father and brother fled to the mountains to hide with the partisans, but Meller stayed with her mother. Her father thought Germans wouldn't hurt women and children.

Meller and her mother eventually fled as well. They lived in hiding with a farmer for six months, then fled for the mountains.

The British liberated them. She and her family eventually came to the United States as refugees.

"People should know what happened, and it should never happen again," Meller said. "People should know how terrible Hitler was. He killed so many."

The final speaker was Holocaust survivor Anneliese Nossbaum, whose testimonial is included in the iWalk app.

Nossbaum grew up in Germany. The war started when she was 12. She survived Theresienstadt and Auschwitz, but lost her family in the Holocaust.

Her speech, she said, was a tribute to her family.

"When I speak to students, my message to them is this: Try to understand other people," she said. "Try to be tolerant, be kind and maybe even a little bit loving. Know right from wrong, and demand justice." ●

'Community Evaluates

Selah Maya Zigelboim | JE Staff

A “Community portrait” study of the Greater Philadelphia Jewish population is underway to help identify and meet needs for services and engagement.

The study, which is being commissioned by the Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia, looks at the Jewish population in Philadelphia, Bucks, Montgomery, Chester and Delaware counties. It poses questions about socioeconomic status, philanthropy and volunteering, perceptions of Israel and more.

“If we don’t do a study, then we have no idea because if you ask a Jewish organization, then they only know the people they serve,” said Kelly Romirowsky, director of evaluation, research and knowledge management at Jewish Federation. “That’s exactly why we need to do this study.”

The preliminary results are expected in November, and the full study will be ready in early 2020. The results will be made widely available so that different Jewish organizations can use them.

The study is led by Romirowsky, who is supported by a lay leadership committee and a technical advisory committee. The Jewish Federation selected Westat as the research firm to conduct the study.

The study is more than just a census because it has practical goals, said Adam Laver, who, along with his wife Sara, is co-chair of the lay leadership committee. That goal is for the community to better prioritize resources based on need.

“If we have true numbers on the extent of that need, it can help us delve deeper into meeting the needs and finding ways to respond,” said Laver, who is on the board of trustees of the Jewish Federation, board chairman of Jewish Family and Children’s Service and a member of Temple Beth Zion-Beth Israel.

The participants are randomly selected to ensure the sample isn’t biased.

The first stage is a screener that asks the participant basic questions. The invitation to complete this screener, either online or with a hard copy, is mailed out. This step includes both Jewish and non-Jewish respondents, but only those who identify as Jewish are invited to complete the next stage: an in-depth 20-minute survey, either online or via hard copy. The survey can also be done over the phone for those who need extra assistance, and is available in Russian.

It’s been a decade since this kind of study of the local Jewish community has been done. Romirowsky said such studies usually take place every 10 years in similar cities.

One of the differences between the last study and the current one is terminology; for example, the current survey uses the phrase “interfaith” instead of “mixed” to refer to marriage. This study also has more questions about anti-Semitism, Israel, health and transportation.

“I don’t believe in the past we asked much about transportation,” Romirowsky said. “I know, being an evaluation director here, that transportation is a huge issue for our community members, both young and old, in being able to access both religious Jewish and just general social services.”

The survey 10 years ago defined Jewish engagement as synagogue membership or participation in rituals like lighting Shabbat candles or attending a Passover seder. The new survey has broadened that definition by including visits to a Chabad House and less traditional ways to celebrate holidays, such as a Shabbat hike.

She also said the new study may reveal an uptick in concern about anti-Semitism, at least since the last survey was done. She'll also be interested to see the new demographic information.

They are holding focus groups to gather qualitative data that can supplement the information they collect through the study.

"We can't ask everything because you really want to keep it to about 20, 25 minutes," Romirowsky said. "That's why we're following up, and we've already started doing focus groups to really get the story and the why for people and really get a rich picture of what people are experiencing."

The focus groups allow researchers to delve deeper into issues facing specific subsets of the Jewish community, such as Russian speakers, Israelis, older adults, college students and more. Focus group participation is open to the community; participants do not need to have been selected for the study.

"This is Abraham's tent," Adam Laver said, "and it's open to all."

A Gift Guide for Every Life-Cycle Occasion

Selah Maya Zighelboim | JE Staff

There's no shortage of B'nai Mitzvah gift guides out there in the world, but the average Jewish person will go through a whole spectrum of life-cycle events beyond the coming-of-age ceremony.

So you may one day find yourself wondering, "What kind of gift are you supposed to give for an upsherin?"

Here, the Jewish Exponent presents your one-stop shop for gifts for every life-cycle event (or at least, for a bunch of them).

BRIT/SIMCHAT BAT

"Laila Tov" Elephant Blanket

Amazon

$22

A typical baby gift will work well for either a Brit — short for Brit Milah, an 8-day-old baby boy's ritual circumcision — or a Simchat Bat — a baby-naming ceremony held for a girl. This example is a baby blanket and a stuffed animal in one, plus it includes the Hebrew phrase, "Laila tov," — "Good night."

Diaper Cake

Bed Bath & Beyond

Starts at $39.99

Newborns go through an average of 10 diapers a day, so there's never too few diapers when it comes to an 8-day-old infant. Looking past the rather unappetizing name, a diaper cake is basically just a nicely packaged gift of diapers. At Bed Bath & Beyond, they also come in different designs — rose blossom, teal tribal and panda pattern.

UPSHERIN

Aleph Bet Look & See Puzzle

Amazon

$22.99

An upsherin is a ceremony in which a 3-year-old boy gets his first haircut. It also marks the time when a boy starts wearing a kippah and tzitzit. Any gift for a 3-year-old is an appropriate upsherin gift, which makes this aleph bet look-and-see puzzle perfect. It's a hands-on activity for a toddler with a Jewish twist.

PJ Library Subscription

An upsherin also celebrates a new stage in a toddler's education, in addition to his first haircut. What better way to acknowledge this than by giving a subscription to PJ Library? PJ Library sends age-appropriate Jewish children's books to families every month.

Fair Trade Wooden Tzedakah Box

If you're looking for a gift that is both meaningful and unique, this tzedakah box should fit the bill. The box was hand-carved by fair-trade artisans in India from mango wood. On top of being aesthetically beautiful, it is a utilitarian gift that can start a young Jewish teenager on a path of good values.

In many communities, a B'nai Mitzvah receives a tallis for their big day. That tallis will probably be a gift from the B'nai Mitzvah's family, but you can complement it with this personal accessory. Tallis clips make a nice gift before the actual service, but can also be given afterward.

GRADUATION

Homesick Candles

homesick

$29.95

For the graduate who's headed off away from home — for either college or that first full-time job — this scented candle might ward off homesickness. Homesick candles come in a variety of scents based on location. There are scents available for every state and some countries and cities. Philadelphia does not (yet?) have a scent, but the Pennsylvania candle smells like “caramel, maple, buttery rum and malty molasses,” while the United States candle has the “taste of freedom and the smell of home. Warm baked American pie, wafting of tart Granny Smith apples, vanilla and cinnamon.”

Animal Card-Holder

Amazon

Ranges between $15 and $22.52, depending on color and animal

One thing a recent graduate might not know is how many business cards will soon inundate the next chapter of their life. You can prepare them in advance with a cute place to store those business cards. Gift the graduate in your life with an animal card-holder, available in green turtle, blue armadillo, yellow hedgehog and more.

These kippot were handmade by Mayan artisans in Guatemala. The gold threaded throughout the kippah or as a band around it give it an elegant look, but if these are not quite your friend’s style, MayaWorks has a variety of other handmade kippot available in tuxedo black and white, psychedelic rainbow and floral patterns.

A Tree in Israel

Jewish National Fund
$18

You might be buying a gift for someone who missed out on a Bar or Bat Mitzvah when they were 12 or 13, but that doesn't mean they need to miss out on some of the gifts associated with a more traditional ritual. That includes planting a tree in Israel in their honor through the Jewish National Fund, which has been making the desert bloom for more than a century. Older B'nai Mitzvah would also certainly have a greater appreciation for this gift than a teenager. ●

New Resources Available for Area Holocaust Survivors

Eric Schucht | JE Staff

An estimated one of every three Holocaust survivors in the United States today lives at or near the poverty line.

In Philadelphia, they will now have access to new resources, courtesy of a partnership between Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia, Jewish Family and Children's Service of Greater Philadelphia (JFCS), Kavod and the Seed the Dream Foundation.

The new resources expand a collaboration with Kavod that's been in place for about a year, said JFCS CEO and President Paula Goldstein.

"We're delighted for the partnership. We are really committed to doing anything that we can to help our Holocaust survivors live out their lives in good health and having their various needs met, and Kavod is one spoke on the wheel in terms of enabling that to happen with emergency needs," Goldstein said. "We're always very grateful for any funding that comes our way to take care of Holocaust survivors."

Kavod was started by Amy Israel Pregulman and John Pregulman, a Denver couple who launched the nonprofit 3½ years ago. In May, the organization announced a new initiative to expand the aid it provides, partnering with the Seed the Dream Foundation to launch Kavod Survivors of the Holocaust Emergency Fund (SHEF).

It's made possible by a national fundraising campaign with money raised in 12 local communities across the country matched dollar-for-dollar by a coalition of national donors. The additional $3.6 million, raised over two years, will be used to help survivors pay for medical bills, rent, food and home repairs.

“The issue is so striking,” said Amy Israel Pregulman, who serves as Kavod's executive director. “It's such a crisis that's happening across the country, and internationally as well, that these individuals who have suffered a tremendous, horrific experience that most of us can't even wrap our heads around, that at this stage in their lives that they're still struggling just [with] day-to-day basic needs. When we share the issue with people, it doesn't take much for them to say, ‘Oh my gosh, how can I help?’”

One of the communities that partnered with Kavod to raise funds for the initiative is Philadelphia, with 100 percent of the money raised locally going to survivors throughout the area.

A Northeast NORC employee speaks with a Holocaust survivor.

Normally, it takes about two to three weeks for Kavod to fulfill funding requests. Locally, such requests will be directed to JFCS via a hotline: 720-295-8484. JFCS will distribute funds from Kavod SHEF anonymously to survivors in the form of gift cards or by directly paying their bills.

Jewish Federation President and CEO Naomi Adler encouraged survivors and loved ones to call the number and take advantage of the available resources.

“There are many survivors that are living at or below the poverty level, which is completely unacceptable given our strong affinity to ensure that they live the rest of their days with dignity and with as much help as possible,” Adler said. “Every single person, take a look at who is in their neighborhood, or in their friend group or [anyone] who would know a Holocaust survivor who is living in the Greater Philadelphia area, and take a moment to grab the national phone number and make sure that every Holocaust survivor knows that if they have emergency medical or dental or rent or any issue that’s going on in their lives, there is additional support for them now.”

Kavod founder John Pregulman hopes to raise awareness of survivor needs through Kavod SHEF and through the nonprofit’s other project — photographing every Holocaust survivor alive today.

“When you think about these seniors and what they’ve been through, we’re trying to raise awareness that these people should not have to suffer again after the suffering they went through 70 years ago,” John Pregulman said. “It just seems like a much larger problem that people don’t know about.” ●

Group Helps Jewish Women for 200 Years

jesse bernstein | je staff

Eileen Sklaroff forgives you if you haven't heard of the Female Hebrew Benevolent Society (FHBS), an organization celebrating its 200th anniversary. "We are a very well-kept secret," said Sklaroff, the organization's president.

The tiny social services organization was founded in 1819 with the help of legendary Philadelphian Rebecca Gratz. At the time, Sklaroff said, Philadelphia Jewish women who found themselves unexpectedly without a husband (whether by illness, death or greener pastures) were in the doubly unenviable position of being both without much of a safety net or a Jewish organization that could cater to their needs. There were Christian missionaries who assisted such women in procuring food, shelter and clothing, but there was also "a good dose of indoctrination," according to Sklaroff.

Thus the FHBS was born, a product of work done by a group of women from Congregation Mikveh Israel, with Gratz leading the charge; she'd hold the secretary position for close to 40 years. The women of the FHBS, according to the constitution penned in 1837, were "desirous of rendering themselves useful to their indigent Sisters of the House of Israel, associated themselves together for the purposes of charity."

FHBS was small then, and remains small now — run completely by a 13-member volunteer board. They focus on four core areas: emergency aid, sometimes in the form of monthly stipends; personal emergency response systems for frail, elderly women who need assistance; a pharmacy stipend program and summer camp scholarships for children.

These programs, Sklaroff noted, are a reflection of the needs of the day; the current iteration of FHBS does significantly different work than the FHBS of 35 years ago when Sklaroff joined the group, let alone 200 years ago. Board members were doing monthly home visits when she began.

Sklaroff was a reluctant sign-up at first. Her mother died when she was young, and she was quite close to her grandmother. One day, her grandmother's closest friend, Bertha Braude — their husbands were first cousins — asked her to join the board of the FHBS. Sklaroff, grateful to Braude for years of friendship to her grandmother, agreed.

She had reservations. For one, she was committed at the time to working in charitable organizations that had some sort of relevance to her life as a mother with two young children.

"I didn't really want to do anything that didn't impact them directly," she said.

To further the feeling of not belonging, she was far and away the youngest woman at the first meeting she attended, held in Braude's John F. Kennedy Boulevard apartment. Braude, then president, conducted the meeting in a suit, hat and gloves.

"I was horrified," she remembered.

But she felt she had to continue for her grandmother and pressed on. Within two years, Braude called Sklaroff to tell her that she was being unilaterally declared treasurer. Since then, Sklaroff has worked to make FHBS sustainable, helpful and meaningful to its constituents, some of whom are Holocaust survivors.

Most of the women helped by FHBS are not made self-sufficient by the help they receive, nor is that really the point, Sklaroff said, although she certainly doesn't complain when it turns out that way. Some women depend on the group for many years; others get a one-time stipend and are never heard from again. The object is to simply be a place for women who need help, Sklaroff said.

"Our donors like us," she said, "because we're quiet, we're quick and they know their money is going directly to a Jewish woman in need."

Pam Stein, a tax partner at an accounting firm, is the current FHBS treasurer. She finds herself fascinated by the history of the group, and how changing societal mores and women's legal standing have allowed the Pam Steins of the world to flourish in a way they couldn't before. Aside from her work as an accountant, Stein worked for the Jewish Federation of Greater Philadelphia at the local and national level for many years.

"I feel an obligation to perpetuate it," she said of the FHBS.

As one might expect of a low-key organization, the main part of its anniversary celebration will consist of a small, private affair: A ceremony and stone-placing will be conducted at the Mikveh Israel Cemetery, where seven original board members are buried.

What is certainly against the group's M.O. is an anniversary banner ad on the PECO Building. Anonymity aside, Sklaroff said, 200 years is a big deal.

The future of the group, Sklaroff said, will be up to the women who run it, just as it was put to her on the day she took a leadership position. "I would want it to look like what the women who are leading it want it to be," she said.

Stein hopes that whatever form it takes, its continued existence is assured. For the 400th anniversary, she said, it'll be good to know that "there's still a group of Jewish women in the Philadelphia area that are helping other Jewish women." •

Partner. It's such a simple word. But, most would say, it's the most important word when you're in need of Personal Care Services. It's certainly how we see it at The Landing of Collegeville - like a great dance partner we know when to lead and when to follow. We're always helpful, but not obtrusive, so you get exactly what you need, when you need it.

Call (484) 854-1600 now to schedule your complimentary lunch and tour. And come see what steps we can take together.

Enrichment for Older Adults

Better Than a 55-Plus Community

Senior Living

What makes a Continuing Care Retirement Community (CCRC) so much better than a 55-plus community?

Moving takes a lot of work. At a CCRC like Masonic Village, additional care and services, if ever needed, are available right in your backyard amongst people you trust. You'll never have to move again, and your needs will be met long into the future. In addition to a beautiful home, a variety of amenities and friendly neighbors, you'll find peace of mind. Make your last move the best move, and choose a CCRC.

Quote from a member -
I can't say enough about how impressed I am with the religious school at CBOI. Watching my daughter and her classmates confidently lead Friday and Saturday night services and hearing her read from the Torah and Haftarah scrolls on her bat mitzvah was overwhelming. Knowing she enters her teenage years--and later goes off into the world--with this strong foundation, for me, is priceless.

THE GUIDE

to Everything Jewish in the Greater Philadelphia Area

A Tribute to Linda Roth

Linda Roth joined the Jewish Federation as a volunteer in the 1980's and then as staff member in 1996. She became the Director of our Jewish Information and Referral Service in 2007, and retired this past winter. As the face of our referral service, Linda answered inquiries and provided referrals for all kinds of services in our Jewish community, from high holiday tickets to in-home care for an aging parent, to how to find a tour guide in Israel. She was unfailingly patient and kind, and if she did not know an answer for a caller, she would research it and get back to them as quickly as she could.

In addition to her regular work, Linda was the force behind this Guide for over two decades. Every spring and summer, Linda would begin checking the data in the guide and updating it for the coming year. It was a tedious task that took her many weeks to complete, but she was committed to making the guide as up-to-the-minute as possible.

This spring/summer, even though she had officially retired, Linda once again reviewed all of the data in this Guide and submitted it to the Jewish Exponent. Linda, we salute you for your service on this, your final Guide, and all of the preceding Guides. Thank you. You are dearly missed, but we know you are enjoying retirement.

SERVICES AND PROGRAMS

The range of services offered by the Jewish community for its members and for the general public is varied and wide-ranging, with the community priding itself on offering high-quality services. Though it is not possible to provide for all needs in all parts of the Greater Philadelphia area, the organized Jewish community hopes that people will take advantage of available programs and services to which they are entitled. Almost all Jewish communal agencies charge fees on a sliding-scale basis or make other provisions for assisting those with limited financial means. Residents of the five-county region are eligible to use these services, as are local college students, visitors and members of the armed services stationed nearby.

JEWISH GENETIC DISEASES

Jewish genetic diseases are a group of diseases for which screening is recommended in the Ashkenazi population. One in five Ashkenazi Jews is a carrier for at least one of the current 19 preventable and life-threatening diseases. Tay-Sachs is an inherited genetic disorder — invariably fatal — that mainly affects Jewish infants. It is inherited from two healthy parents who both carry the gene, and there is a one-in-four chance that a baby will develop the disease if both parents are carriers. A simple blood test can determine whether an individual carries the Tay-Sachs gene. All Jewish people considering having children should arrange for Tay-Sachs testing. Late onset Tay-Sachs disease is a degenerative genetic disorder that causes debilitating physical and/or mental symptoms.
