FOREWORD

Since the earliest days of Iowa history the manufacture of lumber and forest products has been an important part of the state's economy. There are numerous manufacturing plants, some of which are very large, using wood as all or a part of some product. These add much to our state's income.

For many years Iowa has been a leader in the volume production of window frames and sash, wooden doors and other types of millwork. About a third of the lumber consumed in Iowa is used in the manufacture of these products. This totals about 200 million board feet annually.

Many Iowa wood-using industries require various kinds of hardwood lumber for their products. Fortunately, the forest lands of Iowa provide a wide variety of hardwood lumber to meet almost any demand by our industries. Perhaps more Iowa hardwood lumber would be used by the state's industries if manufacturers could be sure they would receive properly manufactured, properly seasoned native hardwood lumber.

This directory of Iowa's wood-using industries provides Iowa's lumber producers with a list of manufacturers to whom they may turn for markets. The directory should also be useful to extension workers, farm foresters and others whom saw-mill operators may turn to for help in locating a market for their lumber production. The work involved in preparation of this directory has been shared by several individuals and agencies.

AUTHORSHIP

The facts in this publication were collected in 1957 through the efforts of Dr. James G. Yoho and Vernon L. Robinson, both formerly of the Forestry Department, Iowa State University. This publication was compiled and prepared in 1959 by Robert Davidson, Extension Forester, Iowa State University, Ames, Iowa.

INTRODUCTION

This list of Iowa wood-using industries was prepared for use by sawmill operators, farm and small woodland operators, foresters, extension directors and others who are interested in markets for Iowa's forest crops. The wood-using industries have been further divided by types of products produced and species of wood used in manufacturing these products. An additional list of van and storage companies has been included since these firms frequently have a periodic demand for crating and blocking material.

The Iowa wood-using industries listed include both industries which manufacture products that are part wood, such as house trailers, and industries which manufacture all-wood products, such as boxes and millwork. Frequently, as in the case of boxes and crates, it is not possible to distinguish between firms which actually manufacture boxes and crates and firms which merely use boxes and crates to ship other manufactured products. Although the list includes most of the industries which use wood in the manufacture of products, it is doubtful whether a high percentage of industries have been included which use wood solely in crating and shipping their products.

Data on some wood-using industries, products and wood species was not available when we compiled these lists. Also, errors may have crept in during compilation. We would appreciate it if such omissions and errors are brought to the attention of the Department of Forestry, Iowa State University, Ames, Iowa, so future revisions will be more accurate.

Lumber yards generally are not included except those that manufacture portable buildings, feed bunks or other wood items. Also, many which possibly manufacture these items may have been omitted unintentionally. The Iowa Retail Lumbermen's Association publishes an annual directory which lists the lumber yards in the state.

More than a thousand sawmills which operate in Iowa have not been listed among the wood-using industries except for a very few which have developed a wood-using industry in conjunction with their operations. The sawmills of Iowa are listed in a separate publication.

Many of the wood-using industries listed here, especially those requiring uniformly sawed and well-dried lumber, do not use any Iowa-grown wood. This group depends almost entirely upon West Coast or Deep South supplies of processed lumber. Some industries used Iowa lumber and found it less satisfactory than Southern and Western lumber because it was not surfaced or dried sufficiently, not accurately manufactured as to thickness and width, or was not available in quantities and grades desired. Industries requiring the better grades of lumber discount market rates for Iowa lumber heavily. They buy local lumber only when supplies are extremely short at their regular source or when buying from Iowa sawmillers will not jeopardize their dependable regular supply.

Some wood-using industries listed use Iowa forest products almost exclusively. This is especially true of concerns manufacturing boxes, crates, feed bunks and other products in which veneer logs of native species and the rough grades of lumber can be used satisfactorily. Considerable native wood is also used for dunnage and car blocking, especially by industrial plants manufacturing and shipping heavy equipment.

Only a limited number of lumber yards in Iowa stock native lumber. This is because much of the native lumber is not properly surfaced or dried to meet demands of lumber users. It is due also to the erroneous belief held by many that native lumber is not satisfactory for construction.

These words of caution about the limited demands for native lumber are directed to Iowa sawmillers new to the business. They may face a limited market for their products. Also, they are not selling wood or lumber alone, but may be selling limited grades possibly manufactured and dried to rigid specifications suitable for a definite product. They also are faced with selling a reputation which can be established only by demonstrated responsibility over a long period of time.

The limited markets for local forest products point up the need of improving quality of sawing jobs, drying, processing and grading of native lumber by Iowa sawmills if they expect to enjoy wider markets and maximum prices. Some consideration possibly should be given to forming cooperatives of local woodland owners and sawmill operators for the purpose of better processing and marketing their forest products. Such cooperatives are proving successful in other locations where problems are similar to those in Iowa.

THE WOOD-USING INDUSTRIES OF IOWA

The wood-using industries of 538 wood-using firms are listed alphabetically by counties and firm names. The products manufactured and species of wood used by each firm are shown respectively in the middle and right-hand columns. Some counties are omitted since these were reported as not having any wood-using industries.

WOOD PRODUCTS MANUFACTURED BY IOWA INDUSTRIES

The following is an alphabetical list of wood products manufactured by the Iowa wood-using industries, reported on pages 7 through 18.

In the columns designated as "Key," the numbers indicate the name and location of each industry manufacturing or using the product. The first number identifies the county in which the industry is located, and the second number identifies the name of the firm within that county. For example, the numbers 22-2 mean that archery equipment is manufactured in county 22 by the firm identified as No. 2 in the alphabetical list of manufacturers. By turning to county No. 22 (Clayton County, page 9) and locating firm No. 2, it can be determined that archery equipment is made by Eddings Archery Co., McGregor, Iowa.

WOOD SPECIES USED BY IOWA INDUSTRIES

The following is an alphabetical list of wood species used by the Iowa wood-using industries reported on pages 7 through 18.

In the columns designated as "Key," the numbers indicate the name and location of each industry using the particular wood species. The first number identifies the county in which the industry is located, and the second number identifies the firm within that county. For example, the numbers 52-1 mean that butternut is used in county 52 by the firm identified as No. 1 in the alphabetical list of manufacturers. By turning to county No. 52 (Johnson County, page 12) and locating firm No. 1, it can be determined that butternut is used by Associated Enterprises, Coralville, Iowa.
