C. M. Maqutu.[34] Judge Solomy B. Bossa was appointed to the bench assigned to this case on 20 October 2003 to replace Judge Maqutu, whose term of office ended on 24 May 2003.[35] The trial resumed on 26 January 2004, with the continued presentation of the Prosecution case.[36] The Prosecution closed its case on 18 October 2004 and the co-Accused presented their cases from 31 January 2005 to 2 December 2008.[37] Four Prosecution witnesses were recalled and gave further testimonies on 23 and 24 February 2009.[38] The closing arguments were heard from 20 to 30 April 2009.[39]

B. Trial Judgement

10. The Trial Chamber pronounced the Trial Judgement on 24 June 2011 and issued it in writing on 14 July 2011. The Trial Judgement was rendered on the basis of four indictments.

11. The events giving rise to this case concern crimes committed in Butare Prefecture. The Trial Chamber found that widespread killings did not occur in Butare before mid-April 1994.[40] It also found established beyond reasonable doubt that from 9 April until 14 July 1994, and in particular between 9 April and 19 April 1994, members of the Interim Government agreed to issue directives to encourage the population to hunt down and kill Tutsis in Butare Prefecture.[41] It determined in particular that, on 16 or 17 April 1994, the Interim Government decided to remove the longstanding prefect of Butare, Jean-Baptiste Habyalimana ("Habyalimana"), who had posed an obstacle to the killing of Tutsis in the prefecture and to replace him with Nsabimana for reasons other than maintaining peace.[42] The Trial Chamber further determined that at the swearing-in ceremony of Nsabimana as new prefect of Butare that took place on 19 April 1994 ("Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony"), President Théodore Sindikubwabo ("Sindikubwabo") and Prime Minister Kambanda made inflammatory speeches and called upon the population to kill Tutsis in the presence of many officials, including Nyiramasuhuko and Kanyabashi.[43] The Trial Chamber held that the removal of Prefect Habyalimana, the appointment of Nsabimana as the new prefect, and Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's speeches at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony contributed significantly to triggering the widespread killings in Butare Prefecture, including in the communes that had resisted such massacres until that time.[44]

12. The Trial Chamber found established beyond reasonable doubt that, from 20 April 1994 to late June 1994, mass killings, mainly of Tutsis, were perpetrated throughout Butare Prefecture in people's homes, in places where Tutsis had sought refuge, and at roadblocks that were mounted in response to encouragement from officials to target and kill Tutsis.[45]

13. The Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko guilty of:

- conspiracy to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute of the Tribunal ("Statute") by entering into an agreement with members of the Interim Government on or after 9 April 1994 to kill Tutsis within Butare Prefecture;[46]
- genocide, crimes against humanity (extermination and persecution), and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the office of Butare Prefecture in Butare Town, Ngoma Commune ("Butare Prefecture Office"), in May and June 1994;[47] and
- crime against humanity (rape) and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (outrages upon personal dignity) pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish rapes perpetrated by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office in May and June 1994.[48]

The Trial Chamber determined that Nyiramasuhuko also bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings that she ordered at the prefectoral office and took this into account in sentencing.[49] The Trial Chamber sentenced Nyiramasuhuko to life imprisonment.[50]

14. The Trial Chamber found Ntahobali guilty of:

- genocide, crimes against humanity (extermination and persecution), and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) killing numerous Tutsis in late April 1994 at the roadblock erected near Hotel Ihuliro in Butare Town,[51] including a girl he had first raped; (ii) ordering the killing of Léopold Ruvurajabo ("Ruvurajabo") at this roadblock in late April 1994, killings at the Institut de recherche scientifique et technique ("IRST") on 21 April 1994, and killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office in May 1994; and (iii) aiding and abetting the killing of an individual named Rwamukwaya and his family around 29-30 April 1994 as well as the killings of Tutsis abducted from the EER perpetrated between mid-May and early June 1994;[52] and

- crime against humanity (rape) and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (outrages upon personal dignity) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) raping a young Tutsi girl near the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994 as well as Tutsi women who were taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office; (ii) ordering the rapes of Tutsi women at the prefectoral office; and (iii) aiding and abetting the rapes of a Tutsi woman by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.[53]

The Trial Chamber determined that Ntahobali also bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings and rapes committed by Interahamwe that he ordered at the prefectoral office, the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, and the killings committed by Interahamwe at or near the EER that he aided and abetted, and took this into account in sentencing.[54] The Trial Chamber sentenced Ntahobali to life imprisonment.[55]

15. The Trial Chamber found Nsabimana guilty of genocide, crimes against humanity (extermination and persecution) and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office by failing to discharge

[51] Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber should have referred to this roadblock as the "EER roadblock" instead of "Hotel Ihuliro roadblock" as the roadblock was located opposite the École évangéliste du Rwanda ("EER") and 50 to 100 metres from the hotel. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 8. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber carefully reviewed the evidence concerning the location of the roadblock and referred to the roadblock in relation to its proximity to the Hotel Ihuliro. See Trial Judgement, para. 3108. See also ibid., Section 3.6.23.4.2, paras. 3107, 3111, 3113. The Appeals Chamber finds that the expression "Hotel Ihuliro roadblock" accurately reflects the evidence adduced by both Prosecution and Defence witnesses and will therefore, for the sake of clarity and consistency, refer to the roadblock which the Trial Chamber found was located in the proximity of the EER and the garage known as the "MSM garage" and very close to Hotel Ihuliro as the "Hotel Ihuliro roadblock" throughout this Judgement.

his duty to provide assistance to people in danger and to protect civilians against acts of violence.[56] The Trial Chamber sentenced Nsabimana to 25 years of imprisonment.[57]

16. The Trial Chamber found Nteziryayo guilty of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making speeches that constituted direct appeals to the population to kill Tutsis at public meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes in mid to late June 1994 and at Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune that took place on 22 June 1994.[58] The Trial Chamber sentenced Nteziryayo to 30 years of imprisonment.[59]

17. The Trial Chamber found Kanyabashi guilty of:

- committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making megaphone announcements on two occasions in May and June 1994 directly calling on the population to kill Tutsis;[60] and
- genocide, crimes against humanity (extermination and persecution), and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons) as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish the killings of Tutsis perpetrated by Ngoma commune policemen at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994.[61]

The Trial Chamber sentenced Kanyabashi to 35 years of imprisonment.[62]

18. The Trial Chamber found Ndayambaje guilty of:

- committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by directly inciting a crowd outside Mugombwa Church to kill the Tutsis who were taking refuge in the church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and by making a speech containing

The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber on a few occasions in the Trial Judgement and Kanyabashi in his appeal submissions also referred to the clinic in Matyazo as the "dispensary" or "health center". For the sake of clarity, the Appeals Chamber will use the terminology most commonly used in the Trial Judgement and will refer to the clinic in Matyazo Sector, Ngoma Commune, Butare Prefecture, as the "Matyazo Clinic" throughout this Judgement.

inciting statements to commit genocide at his swearing-in ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 22 June 1994;[63] and

- genocide, crimes against humanity (extermination and persecution), and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsis at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994 as well as instigating the killings of Tutsi women and girls abducted from Mugombwa Sector after his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994.[64]

The Trial Chamber sentenced Ndayambaje to life imprisonment.[65]

C. The Appeals

19. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, Ndayambaje, and the Prosecution filed appeals against the Trial Judgement.

20. Nyiramasuhuko initially advanced 32 grounds of appeal against her convictions and sentence in her notice of appeal but formally abandoned Ground 6 of her appeal.[66] She requests that the Appeals Chamber stay the proceedings, or set aside her convictions and acquit her of all counts or, in a further alternative, reduce her sentence.[67]

21. Ntahobali advanced 44 grounds of appeal against his convictions and sentence in his notice of appeal but formally abandoned Grounds 3.8 and 4.10 of his appeal.[68] He requests that the Appeals Chamber set aside his convictions and acquit him of all counts or, in the alternative, order a retrial or, in a further alternative, reduce his sentence.[69]

22. Nsabimana advanced 16 grounds of appeal against his convictions and sentence in his notice of appeal but formally abandoned Ground 3 of his appeal.[70] He requests that the Appeals Chamber set aside his convictions and acquit him of all counts or, in the alternative, substantially reduce his sentence, at least to the time already served.[71]

23. Nteziryayo advances 11 grounds of appeal against his conviction and sentence.[72] He requests that the Appeals Chamber set aside his convictions and acquit him on all counts or, in the alternative, reduce his sentence to time served.[73]

24. Kanyabashi advanced 36 grounds of appeal against his convictions and sentence in his notice of appeal and separately developed 33 grounds of appeal in his appeal brief.[74] He requests that the Appeals Chamber set aside his convictions, acquit him on all counts, and order his immediate release or, in the alternative, stay the proceedings or, in a further alternative, substantially reduce his sentence.[75]

25. Ndayambaje advances 21 grounds of appeal against his convictions and sentence.[76] He requests that the Appeals Chamber set aside his convictions, acquit him on all counts, grant him financial compensation for the prejudice suffered, and order his immediate release or, in the alternative, reduce his sentence to time served and order any other appropriate remedy.[77]

26. The Prosecution advances two grounds of appeal against Kanyabashi's acquittals on the counts of genocide and direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the speech he gave at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony on 19 April 1994.[78] It requests that the Appeals Chamber set aside Kanyabashi's acquittals and enter findings of guilt of genocide and direct and public incitement to commit genocide based on the speech he made at this event and, consequently, increase Kanyabashi's sentence to life imprisonment or, in the alternative, substantially increase his prison sentence.[79]

27. In response to the Prosecution's appeal, Kanyabashi advances seven supplementary grounds of appeal challenging the Trial Chamber's findings related to Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[80]

28. The Appeals Chamber heard oral submissions regarding these appeals from 14 to 22 April 2015.

II. STANDARD OF APPELLATE REVIEW

29. The Appeals Chamber recalls the applicable standard of appellate review pursuant to Article 24 of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber reviews only errors of law which have the potential to invalidate the decision of a trial chamber and errors of fact which have occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[81]

30. Regarding errors of law, the Appeals Chamber has stated:

> Where a party alleges that there is an error of law, that party must advance arguments in support of the submission and explain how the error invalidates the decision. However, if the appellant's arguments do not support the contention, that party does not automatically lose its point since the Appeals Chamber may step in and, for other reasons, find in favour of the contention that there is an error of law.[82]

31. Where the Appeals Chamber finds an error of law in the trial judgement arising from the application of an incorrect legal standard, it will articulate the correct legal standard and review the relevant factual findings of the trial chamber accordingly.[83] In so doing, the Appeals Chamber not only corrects the legal error, but, where necessary, also applies the correct legal standard to the evidence contained in the trial record and determines whether it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the factual finding challenged by the appellant before that finding may be confirmed on appeal.[84] The Appeals Chamber will not review the entire trial record de novo. Rather, it will in principle only take into account evidence referred to by the trial chamber in the body of the trial judgement or in a related footnote, evidence contained in the trial record and referred to by the parties, and, where applicable, additional evidence admitted on appeal.[85]

32. Regarding errors of fact, it is well established that the Appeals Chamber will not lightly overturn findings of fact made by a trial chamber:

> Where the Defence alleges an erroneous finding of fact, the Appeals Chamber must give deference to the Trial Chamber that received the evidence at trial, and it will only interfere in those findings where no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the same finding or where the finding is wholly erroneous. Furthermore, the erroneous finding will be revoked or revised only if the error occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[86]

The same standard of reasonableness and the same deference to factual findings of a trial chamber apply where the Prosecution appeals against an acquittal.[87] The Appeals Chamber will only hold that an error of fact was committed when it determines that no reasonable trier of fact could have made the impugned finding.[88] However, considering that it is the Prosecution that bears the burden at trial of proving the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt, the significance of an error of fact occasioning a miscarriage of justice is somewhat different for a Prosecution appeal against acquittal than for a defence appeal against conviction.[89] A convicted person must show that the trial chamber's factual errors create a reasonable doubt as to his guilt.[90] The Prosecution must show that, where account is taken of the errors of fact committed by the trial chamber, all reasonable doubt of the accused's guilt has been eliminated.[91]

33. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, where additional evidence has been admitted on appeal and an alleged error of fact is raised, but there is no error in the legal standard applied in relation to the factual finding, the following two-step standard will apply:

> The Appeals Chamber will first determine, on the basis of the trial record alone, whether no reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt. If that is the case, then no further examination of the matter is necessary as a matter of law.
> If, however, the Appeals Chamber determines that a reasonable trier of fact could have reached a conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt, then the Appeals Chamber will determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the finding of guilt.[92]

34. A party cannot merely repeat on appeal arguments that did not succeed at trial, unless it can demonstrate that the trial chamber's rejection of those arguments constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[93] Arguments which do not have the potential to cause the impugned decision to be reversed or revised may be immediately dismissed by the Appeals Chamber and need not be considered on the merits.[94]

35. In order for the Appeals Chamber to assess arguments on appeal, the appealing party must provide precise references to relevant transcript pages or paragraphs in the decision or judgement to which the challenge is made.[95] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber cannot be expected to consider a party's submissions in detail if they are obscure, contradictory, vague, or suffer from other formal and obvious insufficiencies.[96] Finally, the Appeals Chamber has inherent discretion in selecting which submissions merit a detailed reasoned opinion in writing, and it will dismiss arguments which are evidently unfounded without providing detailed reasoning.[97]

III. COMMON GROUNDS OF APPEAL ON FAIRNESS OF THE PROCEEDINGS

A. Arrest and Initial Appearance (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 2; Ntahobali Ground 1.2; Nteziryayo Ground 9 in part; Ndayambaje Ground 15 in part)

36. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, and Ndayambaje allege violations of their right to a fair trial in the context of their arrests and initial appearances.[98] The Appeals Chamber will examine their grounds of appeal in turn. Before doing so, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, according to Articles 19(2) and 20(4)(a) of the Statute, an accused is entitled to be informed promptly and in detail in a language which he understands of the nature and cause of the charges against him. Furthermore, pursuant to Article 19(3) of the Statute and Rule 62 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal ("Rules"), once an accused is taken into the custody of the Tribunal, the accused is to appear before a trial chamber or a judge without delay to be formally charged.[99]

1. Nyiramasuhuko's Arrest and Initial Appearance

37. Nyiramasuhuko was arrested in Kenya and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 18 July 1997.[100] Her initial appearance took place on 3 September 1997.[101] On 2 March 2000, Nyiramasuhuko filed a motion alleging that, following her arrest, the Tribunal failed to promptly inform her of the nature and cause of the charges against her and that her initial appearance was not held without delay.[102] On 12 October 2000, Judge Kama, sitting as a single judge of Trial Chamber II of the Tribunal, found that the Registrar transmitted to Nyiramasuhuko all relevant documents informing her of her rights and the charges against her on 26 July 1997 and, while "deplor[ing] this delay", considered that it did not constitute "a substantial violation of [her] fundamental rights".[103] Judge Kama also found that Nyiramasuhuko's initial appearance was not without delay as required under Rule 62 of the Rules but that this delay had not caused her serious and irreparable prejudice.[104]

38. On 25 June 2003, after the commencement of trial, Nyiramasuhuko requested a stay of the proceedings against her as a remedy for the accumulation of the alleged violations of her fair trial rights, a request which the Trial Chamber denied on 20 February 2004.[105] The Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko had failed to demonstrate that her fair trial rights were violated as a result of delays in the trial proceedings.[106] It also rejected Nyiramasuhuko's submissions related to her right to be promptly informed of the reasons of her arrest and her right of initial appearance without delay on the grounds that Nyiramasuhuko had failed: (i) to raise objections in this regard prior to the 25 June 2003 Motion and that the belatedness of her submissions had a purely disruptive effect; and (ii) to show that the alleged violations caused her material prejudice.[107] Nyiramasuhuko requested certification to appeal this decision, highlighting her 2 March 2000 Motion, in which she had raised objections relating to her arrest and initial appearance, and the resulting 12 October 2000 Decision.[108] On 19 March 2004, the Trial Chamber acknowledged that Nyiramasuhuko had previously raised these objections but determined that the issues of violation of her rights were res judicata and denied her request for certification based on a lack of legal basis.[109]

39. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber "erred in law and in fact in failing to consider the previous violations of [her] rights in the course of her arrest and initial appearance, which violations were pleaded cumulatively with the alleged violations of her right to be tried fairly and without undue delay in her [25 June 2003 Motion]."[110] The Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko to argue that the Trial Chamber erred in its 20 February 2004 Decision in failing to re-assess and cure the prejudice suffered as a result of the violation of her right to be promptly informed of the nature and cause of the charges against her, which were assessed in the 12 October 2000 Decision, and the violation of her right of initial appearance without delay, which was alleged in her 25 June 2003 Motion, in light of "the other violations of her fair trial rights".[111] In support of her contention, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the issue of the accumulation of violations had not been ruled upon in the 12 October 2000 Decision and, consequently, that the question of prejudice was not res judicata.[112] Nyiramasuhuko also requests that the Appeals Chamber take into account the violations of her rights that have been found at trial and to grant her an appropriate remedy.[113]

40. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments should be summarily dismissed as they misrepresent the Trial Chamber's findings and Nyiramasuhuko fails to articulate any error.[114]

41. Nyiramasuhuko's submissions fail to acknowledge that, in the 20 February 2004 Decision, the Trial Chamber rejected her submission that her fair trial rights were violated as a result of delays in the trial proceedings.[115] Her submissions also ignore that the Trial Chamber did assess the prejudice allegedly resulting from the purported violations of her right to be promptly informed of the nature and cause of the charges against her and her right to initial appearance without delay, finding that Nyiramasuhuko had failed to show material prejudice.[116] Although the Trial Chamber originally erred in finding that Nyiramasuhuko had failed to raise the issue of the violation of these two particular rights earlier in the proceedings,[117] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that she had not shown that she suffered material prejudice for the alleged violations of these rights.

42. As regards Nyiramasuhuko's request for an appropriate remedy for the violations found at trial, the Appeals Chamber observes that the only violations determined to have occurred were the violations of her rights to be informed of the charges against her and of initial appearance without delay recognised in the 12 October 2000 Decision.[118] The Appeals Chamber recalls that "any Nyiramasuhuko's submissions are particularly unclear, especially with respect to which Trial Chamber's decision or finding is being challenged as well as with respect to which "other violations of her fair trial rights" she is referring. Although Nyiramasuhuko's ground of appeal could be summarily dismissed based on her failure to properly identify the challenged finding and the lack of clarity of her submissions, the Appeals Chamber will examine the merits of what it understands her challenges to be.

[115] See 20 February 2004 Decision, paras. 13-16.
[116] See 20 February 2004 Decision, para. 25. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in its 19 March 2004 Decision, the Trial Chamber found that the issues of violations of certain of her rights were res judicata, not the question of the prejudice suffered as a result of the accumulation of the violation of her rights. See 19 March 2004 Decision, para. 28.
[117] See 20 February 2004 Decision, paras. 18-26.
[118] See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 71 (p. 21). The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to identify in her submissions any other violation recognised by the Trial Chamber that may require remedy and will therefore limit its consideration to the violations of her rights to be informed of the charges against her and of initial appearance without delay, which are expressly discussed in her submissions under this ground of appeal.

violation, even if it entails a relative degree of prejudice, requires a proportionate remedy".[119] The nature and form of the effective remedy should be proportional to the gravity of harm that is suffered.[120] In practice, "the effective remedy accorded by a Chamber for violations of an accused's fair trial rights will almost always take the form of equitable or declaratory relief."[121] The Appeals Chamber considers that, in situations where the violation has not materially prejudiced the accused, a formal recognition of the violation may be considered an effective remedy.[122] Nyiramasuhuko has not developed any argument to demonstrate that the recognition of the violations of her rights to be informed of the charges against her and of initial appearance without delay by Judge Kama in the 12 October 2000 Decision was not an effective remedy. Nyiramasuhuko's claim is therefore dismissed.

43. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 2 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

2. Ntahobali's Initial Appearance

44. Ntahobali was arrested in Kenya and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 24 July 1997.[123] He appeared before the Trial Chamber for the first time 41 days later on 3 September 1997 but, in the absence of legal representation, did not enter a plea.[124] Ntahobali entered a plea in the presence of his counsel on 17 October 1997, 86 days after his arrest and transfer to the Tribunal.[125] On 26 November 2008, the Trial Chamber concluded that the failure of Ntahobali's counsel to appear in court on 3 September 1997 and the delay between 3 September 1997 and the initial appearance on 17 October 1997 were attributable to Ntahobali's counsel.[126] The Trial Chamber, however, considered that, even if Ntahobali's initial appearance had been held on 3 September 1997 as initially scheduled, it was not without delay as required under Rule 62 of the Rules.[127] The Trial Chamber further concluded that this delay had not caused serious

Ntahobali made his first appearance on 3 September 1997 before a bench of Trial Chamber II composed of Judges Kama, Pillay, and Sekule. For the sake of legibility, the Appeals Chamber will refer to this bench of Trial Chamber II, to the benches that ruled on all pre-trial motions in the separate cases before their joinder, and to the bench that ultimately ruled on the joint case as the "Trial Chamber".

and irreparable prejudice so as to warrant the stay of proceedings and immediate release requested by Ntahobali.[128]

45. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in the 26 November 2008 Decision in finding that the delay between 3 September and 17 October 1997 was attributable to his counsel and in failing to acknowledge that his right to initial appearance without delay was violated during this period.[129] Relying on the Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, Ntahobali argues that he should not be blamed for the unavailability of his counsel, and that it was the responsibility of the Tribunal to ensure that the appointed counsel would be available for the initial appearance or to find an alternative solution.[130] Ntahobali asserts that the length of the delay to be taken into account for the evaluation of the violation should accordingly be 86 days and not 41 days.[131]

46. In addition, Ntahobali submits that, regardless of the length of the delay, the Trial Chamber erred in not granting a remedy for the violation of his right to initial appearance without delay and that the Appeals Chamber should correct this error.[132] He contends that the appropriate remedy in this case is a financial compensation if he is acquitted or, should this not be the case, a substantial reduction of his sentence.[133]

47. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's arguments should be dismissed as he fails to establish any error in the Trial Chamber's findings.[134] It asserts that the delay between the first attempted initial appearance on 3 September 1997 and the initial appearance on 17 October 1997 is attributable to Ntahobali and that his reliance on the Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement is misplaced as the circumstances differ.[135] The Prosecution also submits that Ntahobali fails to describe any prejudice that would warrant a remedy of any kind for the 41-day delay between his arrest and the initial appearance scheduled for 3 September 1997, and that his failure to raise the issue for 11 years shows that the delay did not result in any prejudice.[136]

48. The Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the delay between 3 September 1997 and 17 October 1997 was attributable to Ntahobali's counsel. The Appeals

Ntahobali replies that the fact that the circumstances of his case were different from that of the Kajelijeli case did not prevent the Tribunal from appointing a duty counsel to ensure that his rights were respected. See Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 5.

Chamber notes that the first scheduled initial appearance was postponed due to the absence of Ntahobali's counsel, who was unavailable and had not made any arrangement for a colleague to represent his client on 3 September 1997.[137] When asked whether he wished to enter his plea in the absence of his assigned counsel or "to do that only in the presence of [his] counsel", Ntahobali unambiguously responded that he "prefer[red] to wait" for his assigned counsel.[138] The new initial appearance was scheduled on 17 October 1997 as a result of Ntahobali's counsel's declared unavailability until mid-October 1997.[139]

49. The Appeals Chamber considers that the circumstances of this case differ from the situation in the Kajelijeli case, in which the Appeals Chamber found that the delay in the holding of the initial appearance was attributable to the Tribunal notwithstanding any attribution of fault to Kajelijeli.[140] Unlike in Ntahobali's case, Kajelijeli's initial appearance was held 211 days after his transfer to the Tribunal as a result of difficulties in assigning him a counsel, the Registrar's failure to assign a duty counsel, and the Registry's difficulties in finding a date acceptable to all counsel representing Kajelijeli's co-indicted.[141] Further, unlike Kajelijeli, Ntahobali was given the opportunity to enter his plea on 3 September 1997 but preferred to wait for his assigned counsel. The Appeals Chamber considers that when, like in Ntahobali's case, the counsel for an accused explicitly requests the date of the initial appearance to be postponed and the accused expresses his preference for entering his plea in the presence of his assigned counsel rather than entering it at an earlier opportunity, the delay caused by the postponement of the initial appearance is not attributable to the Tribunal.[142]

50. Turning to the question of remedy for the 41-day delay between Ntahobali's arrest and his first scheduled initial appearance on 3 September 1997, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that this violation of Ntahobali's right had not caused him serious and irreparable

The Trial Chamber explained that, although Ntahobali's counsel was aware on 21 August 1997 that he would not be available until mid-September and suggested that one of his colleagues replace him to represent Ntahobali at the initial appearance, once officially notified of the date of the hearing "there is no evidence that [he] made the necessary arrangement for his colleague to be present in Arusha to represent Ntahobali on 3 September 1997." See 26 November 2008 Decision, para. 49, *referring to The Prosecutor v. prejudice and therefore did not warrant the stay of proceedings and immediate release which Ntahobali requested as relief.[143] Ntahobali fails to show that the Trial Chamber erred in so finding. In addition, the Appeals Chamber considers that, by recognising that his right to initial appearance without delay had been violated, the Trial Chamber granted him a declaratory remedy for the 41-day delay.[144] Apart from alleging that the appropriate remedy on appeal is a financial compensation or a reduction of his sentence, Ntahobali has not developed any argument demonstrating that the Trial Chamber granted a remedy which was not proportionate to the gravity of any harm he suffered.[145]

51. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 1.2 of Ntahobali's appeal.

3. Nteziryayo's Arrest and Initial Appearance

52. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that Nteziryayo was arrested in Burkina Faso on 24 April 1998.[146] He was transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 21 May 1998 and his initial appearance took place on 17 August 1998.[147]

53. Under Ground 9 of his appeal, Nteziryayo alleged a violation of his rights as a result of the delay between his arrest and his initial appearance.[148] However, on 5 July 2013, the Appeals Chamber granted the Prosecution's request for summary dismissal of this allegation on the ground that Nteziryayo had waived his right to raise the issue on appeal.[149] As a result of Nteziryayo's request for clarification of the date of his arrest, the Appeals Chamber further instructed the Registrar to make written representations as to Nteziryayo's date of arrest.[150] On 14 March 2014, the Registrar indicated that the authorities of Burkina Faso provided the date of the arrest of Nteziryayo as 26 March 1998.[151]

54. At the appeals hearing, Nteziryayo requested that the Appeals Chamber reconsider its decision to dismiss his allegation of violation of his right to initial appearance without delay on the ground that the delay between his arrest and initial appearance now appeared to be 144 days and not

115 days as initially presumed.[152] In the alternative, Nteziryayo requested that the Appeals Chamber find that special circumstances justifying the non-application of the waiver principle exist or that it exercise its discretion suo motu to consider the allegation in the interests of justice.[153]

55. The Prosecution responded that Nteziryayo's requests should be dismissed.[154]

56. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it may reconsider a previous interlocutory decision under its inherent discretionary power to do so if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to do so to prevent an injustice.[155] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, finds that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate any error of reasoning in the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Nteziryayo also does not show that reconsideration of the decision, which summarily dismisses his allegation of violation of his rights as a result of the delay between his arrest and his initial appearance, is necessary to prevent an injustice. The decision was not premised on the length of the delay but on Nteziryayo's "failure to raise the issue in the nearly 14 years that the trial proceedings lasted in his case."[156] The fact that his arrest occurred a month earlier than the date relied upon in the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision does not therefore affect the Appeals Chamber's rationale. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the correction of Nteziryayo's date of arrest constitutes a special circumstance that would justify the non-application of the waiver principle.[157]

57. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, declines to reconsider its 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision and examine on the merits Nteziryayo's allegation of violation of his right resulting from the delay between his arrest and initial appearance.

[154] AT. 17 April 1994 p. 35. The Prosecution argued that Nteziryayo was "mixing" issues as the issue "struck" in the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision related to the delay between his transfer to the Tribunal and his initial appearance, not to the violation of his rights while being detained in Burkina Faso. It submitted that Nteziryayo could not aggregate the time spent in detention in Burkina Faso to calculate the delay before his initial appearance in Arusha as there is no relationship between the two issues. See idem. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution's arguments stem from a misunderstanding of both the 5 July 2013 Decision which addressed the allegation of delay between Nteziryayo's arrest and initial appearance and Nteziryayo's oral arguments at the appeals hearing.

[157] As recalled in the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, it is settled jurisprudence that if a party raises no objection to a particular issue before the Trial Chamber, in the absence of special circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will find that the party has waived its right to adduce the issue as a valid ground of appeal. See 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, para. 15 and references cited therein.

4. Ndayambaje's Arrest and Initial Appearance

58. Ndayambaje was arrested in Belgium on 28 June 1995.[158] On 11 January 1996, the Trial Chamber requested Belgium to defer the criminal proceedings against him in favour of the competence of the Tribunal.[159] On 21 June 1996, Ndayambaje's initial indictment was confirmed and an arrest warrant was issued.[160] Ndayambaje was transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 8 November 1996 and his initial appearance took place on 29 November 1996.[161]

59. Ndayambaje submits that he was illegally detained from 24 January 1996 – the date from which he was allegedly detained on behalf of the Tribunal – until 13 August 1996 as there was no indictment issued by the Tribunal against him during that period.[162] Ndayambaje also complains that three months elapsed between the issuance of his initial indictment and his initial appearance, which took place 21 days after his transfer to the custody of the Tribunal.[163] He asserts that these delays violated his right to be promptly informed of the charges against him and that the Appeals Chamber should remedy this violation.[164] At the appeals hearing, Ndayambaje further submitted that he was deprived of his right to counsel from 24 January 1996 until 22 November 1996, which caused him prejudice.[165]

60. The Prosecution objected to Ndayambaje's contentions at the appeals hearing on the ground that he had waived his right to raise them on appeal since he had failed to raise them at trial and in his notice of appeal.[166]

61. Ndayambaje orally replied that: (i) he had raised the issue of his right to counsel of his own choosing in a motion dated 28 November 1996 and indicated all relevant delays relating to his right to be informed of the charges against him in a motion dated 15 August 2002; (ii) his arguments related to these violations cannot be disassociated from his arguments on his right to be tried without undue delay; and (iii) the seriousness of the violations requires the intervention of the Appeals Chamber, which could intervene proprio motu to correct a miscarriage of justice.[167]

[166] AT. 21 April 2015 p. 32. The Prosecution further pointed out that Ndayambaje's sole reference in his appeal brief to the violation of his right to be promptly informed of the charges against him was one single sentence and argued that it was not in a position to respond to Ndayambaje's allegation relating to his right to counsel since Ndayambaje was raising it for the first time at the appeals hearing. See idem.
[167] AT. 21 April 2015 p. 62. Ndayambaje added that he would not object to the Prosecution filing written submissions in response. See ibid., p. 63.

62. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje failed to raise the allegations of violations of his right to be promptly informed of the charges against him and his right to counsel in his notice of appeal. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, considers that Ndayambaje has further failed to demonstrate that he raised these allegations of violations of his rights at trial, and to identify the error allegedly committed by the Trial Chamber which would justify the intervention of the Appeals Chamber. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, is of the view that, contrary to Ndayambaje's argument, these allegations were not raised in the motions he referred to during the appeals hearing.[168] Given the specificity of these allegations and the nature of his submissions on his right to be tried without undue delay, the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Ndayambaje's argument that these allegations were encompassed in his submissions related to his right to be tried without undue delay.

63. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, if a party raises no objection to a particular issue before the Trial Chamber, in the absence of special circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will find that the party has waived its right to adduce the issue as a valid ground of appeal.[169] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, does not consider that the seriousness of the violations alleged by Ndayambaje constitutes special circumstances warranting the consideration on the merits of these allegations raised for the first time in the Ndayambaje Appeal Brief or at the appeals hearing. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, dismisses without further consideration this part of Ground 15 of Ndayambaje's appeal as well as Ndayambaje's new allegation of error raised at the appeals hearing.

B. Joinder of Trials (Nyiramasuhuko Grounds 1 in part and 4; Ntahobali Ground 1.4)

64. The cases against Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje were initially not joined together.[170] On 5 October 1999, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's motion for joinder and ordered the joint trial of the six accused.[171] In the course of the proceedings, the Trial Chamber dismissed several requests from the co-Accused seeking severance pursuant to Rule 82(B) of the Rules.[172]

65. On 19 June 2001, the Trial Chamber decided that the order for the cross-examination of the Prosecution witnesses would follow the order in which the co-Accused were cited on the cover of the Joinder Decision and, thus, that Nyiramasuhuko would have to cross-examine first among the co-Accused.[173] During a status conference held on 18 October 2004, the Trial Chamber decided to follow the same order for the presentation of the Defence cases, explaining that remedies were available should any prejudice arise in the course of the trial.[174]

66. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber held that it would not reconsider the Joinder Decision and concluded that "the joinder did not create an injustice."[175] The Trial Chamber also stated that it would not reconsider its 18 October 2004 Oral Decision that required Nyiramasuhuko to present her case first among the co-Accused.[176]

The Appeals Chamber rejected the appeals lodged against the Joinder Decision for lack of jurisdiction or as filed out of time. *See Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali v. 67. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in granting the Prosecution's motion for joinder of trials.[177] In addition, Nyiramasuhuko asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting her motion for severance and that her right to a fair trial was violated as a result of the order for cross-examination and presentation of the Defence cases.[178]

68. Before examining Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's arguments, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber's decision on joinder, severance, or the order of cross-examination and presentation of cases, like any decision related to the general conduct of trial proceedings, is a matter within the discretion of the trial chamber.[179] This discretion must be exercised consistently with Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute, which require trial chambers to ensure that trials are fair and expeditious.[180] In order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, the appealing party must demonstrate that the trial chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party.[181] The Appeals Chamber will only reverse a trial chamber's discretionary decision where it is found to be based on an incorrect interpretation of the governing law, based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact, or where it is so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the trial chamber's discretion.[182]

1. Applicable Law

69. Joinder and severance of trials are governed by Rules 48 and 82 of the Rules. Rule 48 of the Rules provides that "[p]ersons accused of the same or different crimes committed in the course of the same transaction may be jointly charged or tried." A transaction is defined under Rule 2 of the Rules as "[a] number of acts or omissions whether occurring as one event or a number of events, at the same or different locations and being part of a common scheme, strategy or plan." It has been held that, pursuant to Rule 2 of the Rules, a common scheme, strategy, or plan therefore includes one or a number of events at the same or different locations.[183] There is no requirement under Rules 2 and 48 of the Rules that the events constituting the "same transaction" take place at the same time or be committed together.[184] In deciding whether the case against more than one accused should be joined pursuant to Rule 48 of the Rules, a trial chamber should base its determination upon the factual allegations contained in the indictments and related submissions.[185]

70. Where a trial chamber finds that two or more persons have allegedly committed crimes in the course of the same transaction, it then considers various factors, which it weighs in the exercise of its discretion as to whether joinder should be granted.[186] Rule 82 of the Rules provides:

> (A) In joint trials, each accused shall be accorded the same rights as if he were being tried separately.
> (B) The Trial Chamber may order that persons accused jointly under Rule 48 be tried separately if it considers it necessary in order to avoid a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused, or to protect the interests of justice.

71. In light of Rule 82 of the Rules, it is therefore appropriate for a trial chamber deciding on a motion for joinder pursuant to Rule 48 of the Rules to consider and weigh the following factors: (i) protection of the fair trial rights of the accused pursuant to Article 20 of the Statute; (ii) avoidance of any conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused; and (iii) protection of the interests of justice. Factors that a trial chamber may look to in the interests of justice include: (i) avoiding the duplication of evidence; (ii) promoting judicial economy; (iii) minimising hardship to witnesses and increasing the likelihood that they will be available to give evidence; and (iv) ensuring consistency of verdicts.[187]

2. Joinder Decision

72. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its assessment of the "same transaction" requirement; (ii) its assessment of the factors weighing in favour of joinder and the rights of the accused; and (iii) showing bias in the Joinder Decision.[188]

(a) "Same Transaction" Requirement

73. In the Joinder Decision, the Trial Chamber decided to apply the following "guidelines" or "test" to determine whether the co-Accused were accused of crimes committed in the course of the same transaction within the meaning of Rule 48 of the Rules:

> 1. The acts of the [a]ccused must be connected to material elements of a criminal act [… ;]
>
> 2. The criminal acts to which the acts of the accused are connected must be capable of specific determination in time and space;
> 3. The criminal acts to which the acts of the accused are connected must illustrate the existence of a common scheme, strategy or plan.[189]

74. The Trial Chamber found that the first and second prongs of the test were satisfied as most of the co-Accused, according to their indictments, "held official positions in the Government"[190] and the events in which the co-Accused were alleged to have participated "occurred between 1 January to 31 December 1994 in various Communes in Butare."[191] The Trial Chamber found that the third prong was also satisfied on the grounds that: (i) all co-Accused were alleged to have "elaborated, adhered to and executed" a national plan to exterminate the Tutsis; (ii) "[a]mong the most common facts alleged are the role the accused played in the incitement of people to exterminate the Tutsi, the training of militiamen and the distribution of weapons"; and (iii) "the acts the Accused are alleged to have committed, such as Genocide and Conspiracy to Commit Genocide" correspond to a number of events being part of a common scheme, strategy, or plan.[192] The Trial Chamber concluded that, in the instant case, there was "sufficient showing of 'same transaction'".[193]

[188] In addition, Nyiramasuhuko submits in her appeal brief that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the joinder of trials could be granted on the basis of Rule 48 of the Rules as such an interpretation would make the addition of Rule 48*bis* of the Rules superfluous. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 143. However, because Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise this specific allegation of error in her notice of appeal, even though she amended it twice, and the Prosecution did not respond to it, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider this argument as it exceeds the scope of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

[193] Joinder Decision, para. 13. The Appeals Chamber observes that the phrase "same transaction" in Rule 48 of the Rules, translated as "même operation" in the French version of the Rules, was incorrectly translated in the French

75. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the alleged criminal acts against the co-Accused were part of the "same transaction" for the purpose of joining trials under Rule 48 of the Rules.[194] Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali contend that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the fact that most of the co-Accused held official positions in the government was sufficient in itself to connect them with alleged criminal acts.[195] Pointing out that he did not hold any official position in the government, Ntahobali argues that the first condition was not met in his case.[196]

76. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali also argue that the Trial Chamber erred in generally relying on the fact that all alleged events occurred between 1 January and 31 December 1994 in various communes of Butare Prefecture without examining whether the factual allegations against the co-Accused specifically connected them in time and space and illustrated the existence of a common plan.[197]

77. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali further submit that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the count of conspiracy to commit genocide to find a connection between their alleged acts and a common plan.[198] In particular, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the broad allegation in paragraph 5.1 of each indictment against the co-Accused that a national plan to exterminate the Tutsis existed, "whereas it should have sought out sufficient factual allegations of the criminal acts to which the Accused [were] connected through joint participation in a common plan."[199] According to Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali, the factual basis set out by the Prosecution in the indictments did not support the count of conspiracy.[200] Nyiramasuhuko also asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that the charges of conspiracy to commit genocide and genocide were version of the Joinder Decision as "entreprise criminelle commune", which is a distinct legal concept translated into English as "joint criminal enterprise". Consequently, the Appeals Chamber will solely rely on the original English version of the Joinder Decision in this Judgement. See The Prosecutor v. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko et al., Case No. ICTR-98-42-I, Décision relative à la requête du Procureur en jonction d'instances, 5 October 1999 (originally filed in English, French translation filed on 25 October 1999), paras. 5-13, 17. In her notice of appeal and appeal brief originally filed in French, Nyiramasuhuko relied on the French version of the Joinder Decision and refers to the notion of "entreprise criminelle commune". See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 1.16 (French); Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 144, 146, 151, 152, 161, 163 (French). The Appeals Chamber considers that a plain reading of Nyiramasuhuko's submissions shows that she intended to challenge the Trial Chamber's finding that the "same transaction" requirement of Rule 48 of the Rules was satisfied and will address her submissions accordingly.

factual allegations that could demonstrate their participation in a crime committed as part of a common plan since they constitute the "legal definition of the material elements."[201] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali argue that, had the Trial Chamber tried to identify in the indictments the common factual allegations supporting the existence of a common scheme, strategy, or plan connecting the co-Accused, it would have concluded that the joinder of trials was unreasonable.[202]

78. The Prosecution responds that most of Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's arguments should be dismissed as the criteria applied by the Trial Chamber have been superseded by the jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber[203] and that "it is now evident that there are no mandatory criteria for purposes of determining joinder other than the need for sufficient factual allegations that the persons whose cases are to be joined participated in a common scheme, strategy, or plan."[204] The Prosecution further contends that neither Nyiramasuhuko nor Ntahobali demonstrates that the Trial Chamber erred in the exercise of its discretion in concluding that there were sufficient alleged facts that the co-Accused had participated in a common scheme, strategy, or plan.[205]

79. Ntahobali replies that he contested the Joinder Decision on the basis of the criteria used by the Trial Chamber and maintains that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact based on these criteria.[206]

80. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali do not challenge the "guidelines" or "test" identified and followed by the Trial Chamber or the applicable law as such, but rather their application by the Trial Chamber. With respect to the applicable law, the Appeals Chamber clarified a few years after the Joinder Decision that the "same transaction" may be found to exist even where the alleged crimes of the accused are different, or are carried out in different geographical areas or over different periods of time, as long as the acts or omissions of the accused whose cases are to be joined are alleged to form part of a common scheme, strategy, or plan.[207]

81. Comparing the guidelines adopted by the Trial Chamber with the Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence, the Appeals Chamber considers that the third prong of the Trial Chamber's guidelines – the criminal acts to which the acts of the accused are connected must illustrate the existence of a common scheme, strategy, or plan – is the only relevant criterion for the interpretation of the "same transaction" requirement under Rule 48 of the Rules.[208] The Appeals Chamber will therefore only examine Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions that there were insufficient factual allegations in the indictments to support a finding that their alleged acts or omissions formed part of a common scheme, strategy, or plan.

82. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions regarding the co-Accused's connection to a common scheme, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted that, in each relevant indictment, the Prosecution alleged that "there existed a national plan to exterminate the Tutsi":

> It is alleged, in Paragraph 5.1 of the concise statement of facts, that from the late 1990s to July 1994, inter alia, members of the Government, political leaders and other personalities conspired among themselves and worked out a plan with intent to exterminate the civilian population and eliminate members of the opposition. It is further alleged that all the accused […] elaborated, adhered to and executed the said plan with the aim of exterminating the Tutsi. Among the most common facts alleged are the role the accused played in the incitement of people to exterminate the Tutsi, the training of militiamen and the distribution of weapons.[209]

83. The Trial Chamber also held that "the acts the Accused are alleged to have committed, such as Genocide and Conspiracy to Commit Genocide" corresponded to "a number of events, at the same or different locations and being part of a common scheme, strategy or plan."[210] The formulation of the Trial Chamber's latter statement may be confusing as the crimes charged against an accused should be distinguished from the alleged acts and omissions of the accused that give rise to his responsibility for the crimes charged. However, reading the Trial Chamber's statement in context, the Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber was satisfied that the alleged acts and omissions of the accused, charged as genocide and conspiracy to commit genocide in the relevant indictments, constituted events that were part of a common scheme, strategy, or plan.

84. In support of its conclusion, the Trial Chamber did not make explicit references to specific paragraphs in each indictment, save for paragraph 5.1 which alleged the existence of a national plan to exterminate the Tutsis and the co-Accused's adhesion and execution of the plan. However, the Trial Chamber further stated that the "most common facts alleged are the role the [co-Accused] played in the incitement of people to exterminate the Tutsi, the training of militiamen and the distribution of weapons."[211] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this reflects that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions, the Trial Chamber relied on the factual allegations in the indictments that connected the co-Accused to this plan, prior to concluding that these allegations were sufficient to support a finding that the alleged acts or omissions formed part of a common scheme, strategy, or plan. A review of the paragraphs of the indictments listed as underpinning the charges of conspiracy to commit genocide and genocide supports the Trial Chamber's finding regarding the existence of a common scheme connecting the co-Accused for the purpose of Rule 48 of the Rules.[212]

85. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali have failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the co-Accused were accused of crimes committed in the course of the same transaction.

(b) Factors Weighing in Favour of Joinder and Rights of the Accused

86. In the Joinder Decision, the Trial Chamber stated that the joinder "will not cause undue delay, since none of the trials has started or is about to start" and that, rather, the joinder "will promote efficiency and avoid delay in bringing those accused of involvement in one criminal transaction to trial."[213] The Trial Chamber specified that "the accused jointly tried does not lose any of the protection" under Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute.[214] It also considered that the joinder will allow for a better administration of justice by ensuring "a better protection of the victims' and witnesses' physical and mental safety, and by eliminating the need for them to make several journeys and to repeat their testimony."[215]

87. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the date of the commencement of trial is only one of the factors of undue delay and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider: (i) the delays that had already occurred, notably the fact that the co-Accused had been in pre-trial detention for at least two years, and that the joinder would infringe her right to be tried without undue delay;[216] and (ii) "other factors, such as 'concurrent presentation of evidence that is unrelated to the Accused.'"[217]

In their notices of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali further argued that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the cross-examinations were enough to remedy the prejudice suffered as a result of the joinder. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that Nyiramasuhuko and

88. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that her "rights could be given up in order to ensure a better protection of witnesses" as Article 19(1) of the Statute "cannot be interpreted as permitting subordination of the fundamental rights of an accused to the said protection."[218] She asserts that Rule 75(A) of the Rules clearly states that measures for the protection of witnesses may be ordered provided that they are consistent with the rights of the accused.[219]

89. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show any discernible error in the Trial Chamber's findings that joinder would not result in undue delay and that it would protect victims and witnesses from the hardships of multiple trials.[220]

90. The Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko's submission on the length of the pre-trial detention and the "concurrent presentation of evidence" as alleging that, had the Trial Chamber considered the time already spent in detention and the fact that the co-Accused would present evidence irrelevant to the other accused's cases, it would have determined that the joinder would unduly delay the proceedings.[221] The Appeals Chamber rejects this contention. The Joinder Decision reflects that the Trial Chamber did not ignore the time already spent in pre-trial detention but was convinced that the joinder would "promote efficiency and avoid delay in bringing those accused of involvement in one criminal transaction to trial."[222] A plain reading of the Joinder Decision shows that the Trial Chamber was aware of the importance of bringing the co-Accused to trial as early as possible and was of the view that the joinder would not unduly delay the proceedings. Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in this regard. Further, the Appeals Chamber considers that, while aware of the possibility that the trial may be lengthened as a result of the concurrent presentation of unrelated evidence, the Trial Chamber could not have effectively taken this particular factor into account when it ruled on the Prosecution's motion for joinder as, at that stage, the scope of unrelated evidence to be presented by the co-Accused was hypothetical and speculative.

Ntahobali failed to reiterate and develop with argument their allegation in their appeal briefs. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these unsubstantiated allegations without further consideration. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 1.22; Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 30. In the absence of any identification of error on the part of the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber also declines to address Nyiramasuhuko's argument that, in support of the joinder, the Prosecution claimed that only half a dozen witnesses were common for three co-accused, while the joinder concerned six co-accused and the Prosecution announced that it would call 103 witnesses. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 169.

[218] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 167.

[219] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 168.

[220] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 16-21.

[221] The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise an allegation of error with respect to the factors considered by the Trial Chamber to weigh in favour of the joinder in her notice of appeal. However, since the Prosecution did not object on this basis and responded to Nyiramasuhuko's submissions, the Appeals Chamber exercises its discretion to consider the arguments developed in her appeal brief.

[222] Joinder Decision, para. 15.

91. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's argument relating to the protection of witnesses, the Appeals Chamber recalls that minimising hardship to witnesses and increasing the likelihood that they will be available to give evidence are factors that a trial chamber may take into account in determining whether joinder would be in the interests of justice.[223] Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's allegation, the Trial Chamber neither stated nor implied that her fair trial rights could be "given up" for the protection of the witnesses. The Trial Chamber expressly held that there must be a balance between the rights of the accused and the protection of witnesses.[224] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in its approach or in balancing the rights of the accused and the protection of witnesses in the Joinder Decision.[225]

92. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the factors weighing in favour of joinder and, therefore, dismisses her contentions in this respect.

(c) Alleged Bias

93. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber's statement that "[o]n the basis of the separate Indictments, it is clear that sufficient elements of each charge have been established to show probability that the Accused participated in a common scheme, strategy, or plan with one another or that they conspired to commit genocide" shows the Trial Chamber's bias and lack of objectivity, especially as it implicitly shifted the burden of proof.[226]

94. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments should be dismissed as she makes no attempt to meet the high threshold required to establish a reasonable apprehension of bias on behalf of the Trial Chamber.[227] The Prosecution contends that, read in context, the excerpts she quotes cannot support an allegation of actual or apparent bias but, on the contrary, reflect that the Trial Chamber withheld judgement on whether or not a conspiracy existed and refrained from looking for prima facie evidence to support joinder.[228]

[227] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 12, 15.
[228] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 12-14.

95. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a presumption of impartiality attaches to the judges of the Tribunal and that this presumption cannot be easily rebutted.[229] It is for the appealing party alleging bias to rebut the presumption of impartiality enjoyed by judges of this Tribunal.[230]

96. In the Joinder Decision, the Trial Chamber expressly emphasised that it was "not called upon at this stage of the proceedings to judge the merits of the charges against the Accused", but only to determine whether, "on the basis of legal and factual assessment", there existed a justification for holding a joint trial.[231] In the course of its decision, the Trial Chamber reiterated that "in view of the present stage of the proceedings, [it] will not, at this time, address the issue of whether or not a conspiracy existed" because it was "a substantive issue of the forthcoming Trial on the merits."[232] Just before making the impugned statement, it also stated that there was "no need in its view for an enquiry into whether there [was] prima facie evidence in support of a joint trial."[233] Just after the statement with which Nyiramasuhuko takes issue, the Trial Chamber again stressed that "[a]lthough the additional charge of Conspiracy ha[d] been allowed in the amended Indictment, the Prosecutor will have to convince the Trial Chamber in due course that this charge will hold in law and in fact."[234] Later in the decision, it repeated that it was "not determining a question of fact, nor assessing the truth of the acts alleged, but [was] making a determination about whether or not there exist[ed] a basis for Joinder"[235] and that it was "the Prosecutor's burden to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt".[236]

97. Read in context, the impugned statement could not reasonably be understood as a pre-judgement by the Trial Chamber or a shift in the burden of proof as suggested by Nyiramasuhuko. Rather, the statement simply reflects that the Trial Chamber was satisfied that there were sufficient factual allegations in the indictments supporting the allegations that the co-Accused participated in a common scheme, strategy, or plan or conspired to commit genocide.

98. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber showed bias and lack of objectivity, or shifted the burden of proof in the Joinder Decision.

3. Decision Denying Severance

99. In the course of the proceedings, the Trial Chamber dismissed several requests from the co-Accused seeking separate trials pursuant to Rule 82 of the Rules.[237] On 7 April 2006, the Trial Chamber denied Nyiramasuhuko's request for a separate trial, concluding that she had not demonstrated the existence of a conflict of interests between her defence strategy and that of Nsabimana and Kanyabashi that would cause her serious prejudice, and that it would not be in the interests of justice to grant the request.[238] The Trial Chamber rejected Nyiramasuhuko's claims that its decisions regarding the timing of the disclosure of the materials relied upon by her co-accused and the fact that she would cross-examine and present her case first had caused her prejudice.[239] The Trial Chamber emphasised that the Rules provided for remedies, which were available should any prejudice arise within the course of the trial, including cross-examination, further cross-examination, recall, or rebuttal evidence.[240]

100. With respect to whether a separate trial was in the interests of justice, the Trial Chamber found that the "instant case raises complex issues of law and fact" and that a joint trial might last longer than that of a single accused without encroaching upon the right to be tried without undue delay.[241] It added that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions that the trials of all accused would be concluded by now had the joinder been denied were "hypothetical and speculative".[242] The Trial Chamber concluded that, on balance, "the length of the proceedings ha[d] not violated […] Nyiramasuhuko's right to be tried without undue delay, given the complexity of the present case

[237] See supra, fn. 172. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in the 2 February 2005 Decision "by failing to take that opportunity to minimize the prejudice caused to [him] and by failing to allow severance." See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 27; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 71. See also Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 65. However, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred without particularising any alleged error of law or fact in the 2 February 2005 Decision. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 26, 27; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 71. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contention without further consideration. Under Ground 15 of his appeal related to the right to be tried without undue delay, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in the 25 April 2001 Decision in finding that the requested severance would create further delays. He asserts that the joinder did not protect his rights but rather violated them by unnecessarily prolonging the delays. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 305, referring to 25 April 2001 Decision, para. 17. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 121. In the absence of any substantiation of Ndayambaje's allegation of error, the Appeals Chamber dismisses his contention without further consideration.

and taking into account the other elements that make up the interests of justice within the ambit of Rule 82(B) [of the Rules] […], as well as the advanced stage of the proceedings."[243]

101. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in denying her request for a separate trial.[244] She contends that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion in support of its conclusions that: (i) she had not demonstrated a conflict of interests between her defence strategy and that of Nsabimana and Kanyabashi;[245] and (ii) she had not been prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's decisions to present her case first and to allow her co-accused to present evidence without disclosing it to her in due time.[246] She also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that alternative remedies were available should any prejudice arise from the joint case without assessing whether those alternative remedies could cure the alleged prejudice and without taking into account their "uncertain nature".[247]

102. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of whether a separate trial was in the interests of justice.[248] In particular, she submits that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion in analysing the complexity of the case.[249] In her view, the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that her right to a fair trial without undue delay was outweighed by the advantages of a joint trial and the need to protect witnesses, and in finding that her right to a fair trial without undue delay was not violated.[250]

103. The Prosecution responds that the 7 April 2006 Decision was sufficiently reasoned and that Nyiramasuhuko does not identify how the Trial Chamber's reasoning is lacking or erroneous.[251] It submits that Nyiramasuhuko's claims are unsupported by arguments or references to the record and should accordingly be summarily dismissed.[252]

104. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the few paragraphs that served as reasoning in the 7 April 2006 Decision do not respond to the detailed arguments she developed in her request for severance.[253]

105. The Appeals Chamber emphasises that, while a trial chamber must provide reasoning in support of its findings on the substantive considerations relevant for a decision, it is not required to articulate every step of its reasoning and to discuss each submission.[254] Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's claim, the Appeals Chamber considers that the 7 April 2006 Decision was sufficiently reasoned. The Trial Chamber expressly stated that it had reviewed "all arguments, including the portions of transcripts in support of the alleged conflict of interests" prior to reaching its decision on Nyiramasuhuko's arguments on the conflict of interests, which it summarised at length in the decision, and provided reasons for rejecting her submissions.[255] The Trial Chamber also expressly rejected Nyiramasuhuko's contention that subsequent decisions, including decisions to present her case first and to allow her co-accused to present evidence without disclosing it to her in due time, had aggravated the prejudice on the ground that they "were legally made".[256] The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko merely disagrees with the Trial Chamber's assessment without showing any error in its reasoning and rejects her claim that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion.

106. The Appeals Chamber also sees no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the Rules provided for several remedies should any prejudice arise in the course of the trial, including cross-examination, further cross-examination, recall, or rebuttal evidence.[257] In light of the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko had failed to demonstrate any prejudice, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's claim that the Trial Chamber should have conducted an assessment of whether the remedies available could have cured any future alleged prejudice or considered the "uncertain nature" of the remedies.

107. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that separate trials would not be in the interests of justice, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's claim that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion in support of its conclusion that the case [255] 7 April 2006 Decision, paras. 1-28, 34, 35, 44-52, 59-61, 66, 68-71. Further, the Trial Chamber expressly referenced all the transcripts it reviewed in the decision. See ibid., fn. 178. The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted that it is not up to the Trial Chamber to decipher parties' pleadings and that many of the portions of the transcripts cited and relied upon by the Defence were not properly referenced, if referenced at all. See ibid., para. 62.

[256] 7 April 2006 Decision, para. 69.
[257] 7 April 2006 Decision, para. 70.

raised complex issues of law and fact.[258] In the circumstances of this case – the largest case ever heard before the Tribunal involving numerous allegations, crimes that occurred in several locations and on different dates, and given the broad scope of the counts charged[259] – the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was not required to articulate in any further detail its conclusion that the instant case raised "complex issues of law and fact."[260]

108. As to whether the joinder created undue delay and thus required the severance of the cases, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the fact that a joint trial might last longer than that of a single accused does not necessarily encroach the co-accused's right to be tried without undue delay.[261] The Appeals Chamber recalls that Article 20(4)(c) of the Statute makes clear that the right to be tried without undue delay does not protect against any delay in the proceedings; it protects against undue delay.[262] Nyiramasuhuko also fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that her submissions to the effect that trials of all accused would have been concluded by the time the Trial Chamber issued its 7 April 2006 Decision had joinder been denied were "hypothetical and speculative."[263] The Appeals Chamber finds that, although the joinder added some degree of complexity to the proceedings, the mere allegation that separate trials would have proceeded faster is insufficient to substantiate a claim that undue delay occurred as a result of the joinder and that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to deny the severance of Nyiramasuhuko's case.[264]

109. The Appeals Chamber also observes that, contrary to what Nyiramasuhuko suggests, the Trial Chamber did not conclude that her right to a fair trial without undue delay was outweighed by the advantages of a joint trial and the need to protect witnesses.[265] In the impugned decision, the Trial Chamber balanced relevant factors such as the length of the proceedings with the advantages of a joint trial, including the protection of witnesses, and the advanced stage of the proceedings to determine whether the severance requested by Nyiramasuhuko was in the interests of justice.[266] The 7 April 2006 Decision reflects that the Trial Chamber did not "prioritize" the protection of witnesses as alleged by Nyiramasuhuko,[267] but reached its conclusion on whether severance should be granted after balancing issues relevant to such a determination.

110. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges against the 7 April 2006 Decision made under Ground 1 of her appeal.

4. Order for Cross-Examination and Presentation of Defence Cases

111. In her closing submissions, Nyiramasuhuko alleged that she was prejudiced by the fact that she had been required to cross-examine and to present her case first among the co-Accused.[268] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko only offered a "general allegation of prejudice" and that she had not suggested any new fact or material change in circumstances that might justify reconsideration of the 18 October 2004 Oral Decision which decided that she would have to present her case first amongst the co-Accused.[269] The Trial Chamber recalled that to the extent that an accused who had presented his evidence earlier was prejudiced by the order of the presentation of the cases, he may present rejoinder evidence as provided by the Rules, and that the co-Accused "were granted considerable freedom to cross-examine other Defence witnesses" in this case.[270] It added that it would consider the order of the presentation of the cases and any concomitant prejudice in evaluating testimony and other evidence offered by each accused.[271]

112. Nyiramasuhuko reiterates on appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in directing her to cross-examine first despite the fact that she had drawn its attention to the potential conflict of interests with Nsabimana and, subsequently, in deciding, without prior consultation of the parties, that she had to present her case first.[272] In this respect, she argues that the Trial Chamber's decision that the will-say statements of Defence witnesses be filed 21 days before they testified caused her serious prejudice as she had to present her defence without knowing the evidence her co-accused

In Section 2.7 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that: "[w]hen an accused in a joint trial testifies before other co-accused present their cases, the Chamber will take this fact into consideration when assessing the weight of testimony of each accused relative to evidence subsequently presented, in recognition of the fact that the accused testified without the benefit of knowing what subsequent witnesses would say about their evidence beyond the indication provided in those witnesses' will-say statements". The Trial Chamber also stated that it "is cognisant of the rule that in joint trials, each accused is entitled to the same rights as he or she would be in an individual trial. In this regard, the Chamber has been attentive to the risk that one Accused's evidence will prejudice another Accused, and will diligently assure that the guarantees of Rule 82 (A) are respected." See ibid., paras. 189, 191 (internal references omitted).

would adduce and knowing that she had a conflict of interests with some of her co-accused.[273] Nyiramasuhuko also contends that her right, provided for in Rule 82 of the Rules, to be tried in a joint trial as if she would be tried alone was violated as a result of the Trial Chamber's reliance on statements made by her co-accused Nsabimana as well as by Kanyabashi Defence Expert Witness Filip Reyntjens and Nsabimana Defence Witness Charles Karemano to convict her.[274] In her view, such reliance was in contradiction with the Trial Chamber's commitment to consider the order of the Defence cases in reaching its conclusions.[275]

113. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to establish that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion and made a discernible error in its decisions on the order of cross-examinations and the time-limits imposed for Defence disclosures of will-stay statements.[276] The Prosecution adds that Nyiramasuhuko omits to mention that the witnesses she refers to were relied upon where corroborated.[277]

114. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments fall short of demonstrating any error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in the control of the order of interrogating witnesses and presenting evidence provided for in Rule 90(F) of the Rules. Nyiramasuhuko fails to substantiate her contention that the alleged conflict of interests between her defence and that of Nsabimana required that she not present her case first. Nyiramasuhuko also fails to consider that the parties were given the opportunity to be heard on the order of the presentation of the Defence cases, and that the Trial Chamber expressly referred to her counsel's objection on this matter when making its decision.[278] Nyiramasuhuko also does not substantiate her contention that she was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's decision regarding the timing for the filing of the witnesses' will-say statements with any specific examples or supporting references.[279]

115. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's contention pertaining to her right under Rule 82 of the Rules to be tried in the joint trial as if she were tried alone, the Appeals Chamber notes that it has addressed and rejected Nyiramasuhuko's arguments relating to Nsabimana's statements in Section III.H below. As for the Trial Chamber's reliance on Expert Witness Reyntjens and Witness Karemano in support of Nyiramasuhuko's conviction for conspiracy to commit genocide,[280] the Appeals Chamber does not see how relying on Defence evidence presented by other co-accused is "contrary"[281] to the Trial Chamber's commitment to "consider the order of Defence cases and any concomitant prejudice in evaluating testimony and other evidence offered by each Accused."[282] Moreover, Rule 82(A) of the Rules does not, as a matter of principle, bar trial chambers from relying on the evidence presented by a co-defendant where that evidence supports the Prosecution case. Trial chambers are tasked with determining the guilt or innocence of the accused and must do so in light of the entirety of the evidence admitted into the record.[283] As noted by the Trial Chamber, the Rules provide for remedies where the presentation of incriminating evidence through co-accused after the close of the Prosecution case may prejudice one of the co-accused. In the instant case, the evidence of Witnesses Reyntjens and Karemano upon which the Trial Chamber relied was already part of the Prosecution case-in-chief and was only accepted as corroborative of Prosecution evidence.[284] The record shows that Nyiramasuhuko was also afforded the opportunity to cross-examine these witnesses at length and Nyiramasuhuko does not show that she requested further cross-examination, recall, or the presentation of rejoinder evidence. Accordingly, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber's reliance on this evidence violated her fair trial rights or caused her prejudice.

116. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions related to the order of cross-examination and presentation of the Defence cases.

5. Conclusion

117. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali have not demonstrated any error in relation to the joinder of trials. The Appeals Chamber further finds that no demonstration of error has been made by Nyiramasuhuko as to the Trial Chamber's 7 April 2006 Decision denying severance or its order for cross-examination and presentation of the cases. C. Replacement of Judge Maqutu (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 5; Ntahobali Ground 1.6; Ndayambaje Ground 16)

118. On 12 June 2001, the joint trial in this case started before Trial Chamber II, composed of Judges William H. Sekule, Arlette Ramaroson, and Winston C. M. Maqutu.[285] Judge Maqutu's term of office ended on 24 May 2003.[286] On 15 July 2003, the two remaining judges, Judges Sekule and Ramaroson, acting pursuant to Rule 15*bis*(D) of the Rules,[287] found that the interests of justice were best served by continuing the trial with a substitute judge.[288] The Appeals Chamber upheld this decision on 24 September 2003.[289] Judge Solomy B. Bossa was appointed to the bench of Trial Chamber II assigned to this case on 20 October 2003, and certified that she was familiar with the proceedings on 5 December 2003.[290] The trial resumed on 26 January 2004, with the continued presentation of the Prosecution case.[291] On 30 March 2004, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's request to drop 30 witnesses from its witness list and add three new witnesses.[292]

119. Following the appointment of Judge Bossa, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje requested the recall of some of the Prosecution witnesses who had testified prior to the replacement of Judge Maqutu.[293] The Trial Chamber granted Ndayambaje's request to recall Prosecution Witness TO on a specific issue but denied the other requests.[294]

120. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber rejected Nyiramasuhuko's claim that she had been prejudiced by the fact that Judge Bossa had not heard all Prosecution witnesses in person.[295]

121. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje allege on appeal that the trial was rendered unfair by the fact that the substitute judge did not see or hear most of the witnesses upon whom the Trial Chamber ultimately relied in finding them guilty. In particular, Ntahobali submits that the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial should be reconsidered.[296] Moreover, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje assert that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing their requests to recall some of the witnesses.[297] In addition, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali argue that the Trial Chamber committed additional errors on this issue in the Trial Judgement.[298] The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

1. Reconsideration of the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial

122. In the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial, the Appeals Chamber found that the Trial Chamber did not err in concluding that it was in the interests of justice to continue the proceedings with a substitute judge.[299] The Appeals Chamber noted the contention that it would not be possible for the substitute judge to evaluate the witnesses' demeanour in assessing their credibility given the absence of video-recordings of their testimonies.[300] However, the Appeals Chamber declined to address this point as it had not been previously raised before the two remaining trial judges and held that, in any event, the two judges were entitled to regard the question of adequacy of the records, including the availability of video-recordings, as a matter for the substitute judge.[301]

123. Ntahobali submits that reconsideration of the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial is warranted on the grounds that: (i) the Appeals Chamber committed a clear error of reasoning in refusing to take into account the absence of video-recording;[302] and (ii) it is necessary to prevent an injustice, given the change of circumstances caused by the subsequent withdrawal of 30 Prosecution witnesses and the fact that, as a result, Judge Bossa would have heard almost none of the Prosecution witnesses who testified on four incidents for which he was convicted.[303] Ntahobali contends that a new trial should have been ordered and that, given the length of the proceedings to date, the only remedy is to stay the proceedings.[304]

124. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's request for reconsideration should be struck or summarily dismissed as improperly filed because an appeal brief should only include arguments in support of alleged errors made by the trial chamber.[305] It argues that Ntahobali should have filed a separate motion for reconsideration with the Appeals Chamber.[306] In the alternative, the Prosecution submits that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate a clear error of reasoning or that reconsideration is necessary to prevent an injustice.[307]

125. Ntahobali replies that the importance of the issue justifies that the Appeals Chamber consider his arguments.[308]

126. The Appeals Chambers recalls that once a trial judgement is pronounced, any request for reconsideration of a decision taken within the framework of first instance proceedings must be raised through the notice of appeal and the appeal brief.[309] The Appeals Chamber therefore rejects the Prosecution's argument that Ntahobali has improperly sought reconsideration of an interlocutory appeal decision through his appeal.

The Appeals Chamber has in the past reconsidered previous interlocutory decisions in an appeal judgement. See Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, paras. 203-207.

127. Under the settled jurisprudence of the Tribunal, the Appeals Chamber may reconsider a previous interlocutory decision under its inherent discretionary power to do so if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to do so to prevent an injustice.[310] The Appeals Chamber emphasises that the exercise of this reconsideration power is only designed to apply in exceptional circumstances.[311] Indeed, the Appeals Chamber recalls that reconsideration is an exception to the principle that prior interlocutory appeal decisions are binding in continued proceedings in the same case as to all issues definitively decided by those decisions.[312] This principle prevents parties from endlessly relitigating the same issues, and is necessary to fulfil the very purpose of permitting interlocutory appeals: to allow certain issues to be finally resolved before proceedings continue on other issues.[313]

128. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali waited nearly a decade, and until after the completion of the trial proceedings, to seek reconsideration of the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial through his appeal against the Trial Judgement, without explaining why he did not seek reconsideration earlier. The Appeals Chamber stresses that a "matter must be raised with the court at the time the problem is perceived in order to enable the problem to be remedied".[314] As held in the Čelebići Appeal Judgement, "the requirement that the issue must have been raised during the proceedings is not simply an application of a formal doctrine of waiver, but a matter indispensable to the grant of fair and appropriate relief."[315] By failing to raise this matter before the Appeals Chamber prior to the completion of the trial proceedings, Ntahobali deprived the Appeals Chamber of the opportunity to re-examine whether it was in the interests of justice to continue the trial with a substitute judge.

129. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber declines to exercise its discretionary power to consider Ntahobali's request for reconsideration of the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial. Accordingly Ntahobali's request for reconsideration is dismissed.

2. Decisions Denying the Recall of Witnesses

130. In the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial, the Appeals Chamber emphasised that, in the absence of video-recordings, "the recomposed Trial Chamber may, on a motion by a party or proprio motu, recall a witness on a particular issue which in the view of the Trial Chamber involves a matter of credibility which the substitute judge may need to assess in the light of the witness's demeanour."[316] The Trial Chamber rejected a number of requests filed by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje to recall Prosecution witnesses who had not testified before Judge Bossa mainly because they had failed to demonstrate any particular issue involving a matter of credibility which the substitute judge may have needed to assess in light of the witness's demeanour.[317]

131. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje submit that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting their respective requests.[318] The Appeals Chamber will address their submissions in turn.

(a) 6 May 2004 Decision on Nyiramasuhuko Motion to Recall Witnesses

132. On 6 May 2004, the Trial Chamber dismissed Nyiramasuhuko's motion to recall 11 Prosecution witnesses who had testified in relation to events at the Butare Prefecture Office prior to Judge Maqutu's replacement.[319] Recalling the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial, the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko sought a complete re-hearing of the specified witnesses without demonstrating any particular issue that involved a matter of credibility which the substitute judge needed to assess in light of the witness's demeanour.[320] In response to the argument that Judge Bossa had not heard the bulk of the evidence against Nyiramasuhuko, the Trial Chamber explained that the decision to continue the trial was based on an evaluation of the totality of the pertinent circumstances, including the number of witnesses remaining to be heard.[321] It further recalled the Appeals Chamber's statement that it is not "useful to lay down a hard and fast relationship between the proportion of witnesses who have already testified and the exercise of the power to order a continuation of the trial with a substitute judge."[322] The Trial Chamber added that:

> in considering whether to recall a witness, it must be born in mind that the substitute judge has certified that she has familiarized herself with the records of the proceedings. Those records include audio-recordings in which the substitute judge can assess the credibility of the witnesses in light of their demeanour when giving evidence in court.[323]

The Trial Chamber concluded that no case had been made by Nyiramasuhuko for the re-hearing of the witnesses as a whole.[324] The Trial Chamber ultimately relied on certain aspects of the testimonies of the witnesses Nyiramasuhuko sought to recall in support of a number of findings against her.[325]

133. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing her motion.[326] In particular, she contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the "rules" for the recall of witnesses enunciated in the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial as these "rules" could no longer be applied in the new circumstances arising from the withdrawal of 30 Prosecution witnesses.[327] The Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko to argue that the Trial Chamber misinterpreted the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial in which, according to her, the Appeals Chamber considered that there was a limit as to the proportion of witnesses heard beyond which the trial would be rendered unfair. In her view, this limit was clearly reached as the substitute judge had not seen 11 of the 12 witnesses who testified against her in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office events. According to Nyiramasuhuko, the proportion of witnesses not heard by the substitute judge no longer permitted the Trial Chamber to exercise its discretion to continue the trial without recalling the witnesses.[328]

134. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that she did not raise any "particular issue" that would justify the requested recall as she had asked in the alternative that the witnesses be recalled solely to testify on the allegations raised against her in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office.[329] Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that Judge Bossa could assess the demeanour of witnesses based on the audio-recordings as a witness's demeanour needs also to be observed through the witness's "non-verbal language".[330] She adds that, since all Prosecution witnesses testified in Kinyarwanda, it was difficult, if not impossible, for any judge not proficient in this language to "listen" to the original audio-recordings.[331]

135. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber's refusal to recall the relevant witnesses in the new circumstances arising from the modification of the Prosecution's witness list violated her right to a fair trial, especially as the Trial Chamber relied on these witnesses to hold her criminally responsible.[332]

136. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko mostly repeats arguments already rejected at trial and that she does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[333]

137. The Appeals Chamber highlights that, like all decisions relating to the conduct of the proceedings before them, decisions on requests to recall witnesses are matters within the discretion of trial chambers.[334] The Appeals Chamber did not suggest otherwise in the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial, but merely stated that "the recomposed Trial Chamber may, on a motion by a party or proprio motu, recall a witness".[335] The Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial did not strip the Trial Chamber of its discretion to determine whether recalling witnesses was necessary or dictate that the substitute judge was required to hear a certain proportion of witnesses to ensure a fair trial. The Appeals Chamber therefore rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber misinterpreted the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial and erred in considering that it retained discretion to decide whether or not to recall the witnesses.

138. The question before the Appeals Chamber is whether the Trial Chamber exercised its discretion consistently with Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute, which require trial chambers to ensure that trials are fair and expeditious.[336] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that in order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, a party must demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party.[337]

139. As discussed above, Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in misinterpreting the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial.[338] Nyiramasuhuko also does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that she did not raise any particular issue which involved a matter of credibility that the substitute judge needed to assess in light of the witness's "visually observable" demeanour.[339] Nyiramasuhuko's alternative request in her motion that witnesses be recalled to testify solely on the factual allegations raised against her in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office is not the same as raising particular issues involving a matter of credibility which the substitute judge may need to assess in light of the witness's "visually observable" demeanour.

140. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that Judge Bossa could not assess the demeanour of witnesses based on the audio-recordings, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the importance of observing first-hand the demeanour of witnesses in court cannot be discounted on the ground that audio-recordings exist. Although the preference for live testimony to be heard by each judge does not represent an "unbending requirement",[340] the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that audio-recordings alone allow a substitute judge to thoroughly assess all aspects of the witness's demeanour in court, in particular when the judge is not proficient in the language spoken by the witness.[341]

141. That being said, in the case at hand, Nyiramasuhuko fails to point to any particular aspect of any witness's demeanour in court which could not have been properly assessed without seeing or hearing the witness live. Judge Bossa certified that she had familiarised herself with the record of the proceedings,[342] and the impugned decision reflects that she did not consider that there were any credibility matters that she needed to assess in light of the witnesses' "visually observable" demeanour in court.[343] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's denial of the Nyiramasuhuko Motion to Recall Witnesses was not so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion.

142. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges against the 6 May 2004 Decision on Nyiramasuhuko Motion to Recall Witnesses.

(b) 29 June 2004 Decision

143. On 29 June 2004, the Trial Chamber denied a request from Ntahobali to recall all the Prosecution witnesses who were heard before the appointment of Judge Bossa or, at a minimum, the 14 Prosecution witnesses who testified against him.[344] The Trial Chamber found that parts of Ntahobali's request were "nothing else than an attempt to relitigate issues that were already determined in the [Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial]."[345] The Trial Chamber further stated that:

> Submissions by the Defence indistinctly refer to miscellaneous demeanours of witnesses, among which are aggressiveness and threats against counsels, reluctance to answer questions, evasiveness, lack of emotion, material inconsistencies, hesitations, doubts, silences, confusing answers, and arrogance. The Defence also referred to "non-verbal demeanour" of witnesses without further explanation. The Trial Chamber notes that the first series of demeanours are reflected in the written transcripts and/or audio-recordings of the witnesses' testimony in court. The Trial Chamber further notes that none of these alleged demeanours constitutes a particular issue which involves a matter of credibility which the substitute Judge may need to assess in the light of the witness' demeanour. Nowhere does the Defence identify such a particular issue.[346]

144. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting his request to recall the Prosecution witnesses.[347] First, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the question of the recall of the witnesses was an issue that had already been litigated in the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial.[348] He contends that the Trial Chamber ignored his argument that his request was based on the change of circumstances caused by the withdrawal of 30 witnesses from the Prosecution's witness list and the fact that, as a result, Judge Bossa would see none or almost none of the witnesses who testified against him in relation to certain incidents.[349] In Ntahobali's view, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to determine whether this new situation required the recall of witnesses.[350]

145. Second, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that the aggressiveness, reluctance to answer questions, lack of emotion, silences, and arrogance of witnesses were reflected in the transcripts and audio-recordings of the testimonies.[351] He asserts that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, such behaviour constituted "particular issues" which, given the new circumstances, should have required the recalls sought.[352]

[352] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 114.

146. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to these arguments.

147. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's suggestion, the Ntahobali Motion to Recall Witnesses was not premised on the contention that the withdrawal of 30 Prosecution witnesses created a new situation which required the recall of witnesses he had requested. While Ntahobali clearly referred to the new situation arising from the withdrawal of 30 Prosecution witnesses and the fact that, as a result, Judge Bossa would not have seen or heard any of the Prosecution witnesses testifying on four important crime scenes,[353] his main contention was that the interests of justice required that Judge Bossa see and hear all the testimonies which she was expected to assess.[354] The Trial Chamber was correct in stating that this contention had already been determined in the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial. It also bears noting that, in line with the Appeals Chamber's guidance in that decision, the Trial Chamber considered whether it was necessary to recall the requested witnesses to testify on particular issues that the substitute judge would need to assess in light of the witnesses' "visually observable" demeanour.[355] By concluding that there was no need to recall these witnesses, the Trial Chamber implicitly determined that the situation did not require the recalls sought.

148. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that transcripts or audio-recordings of a witness's testimony in court do not necessarily always allow a judge to assess thoroughly the witness's possible aggressiveness, reluctance to answer questions, lack of emotion, silences, and arrogance. The 29 June 2004 Decision, however, shows that Judge Bossa did not consider that there were issues with the demeanour of witnesses raised by Ntahobali that she needed to assess by seeing them testify. This reflects that Judge Bossa, together with the two other judges, considered that she was in a position to properly assess the demeanour issues raised by Ntahobali on the basis of the written transcripts and/or audio-recordings of the witnesses' testimony. Ntahobali submits in broad terms that all of the demeanour issues he raised constituted "particular issues" justifying the recall sought in light of the new circumstances.[356] However, he fails to explain how the Trial Chamber erred in finding that none of these issues required that the witnesses be recalled for Judge Bossa to assess their credibility by observing their demeanour in court first-hand. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is not a second trier of fact and that a party cannot simply repeat arguments on appeal that did not succeed at trial in the hope that the Appeals Chamber will consider them afresh.[357]

149. Recalling the Trial Chamber's broad discretion in the conduct of the proceedings before it and in the absence of a demonstration of error, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's challenges against the 29 June 2004 Decision.

(c) 6 May 2004 Decisions on Ndayambaje Motions to Recall Witnesses QAQ and QAR

150. On 6 May 2004, the Trial Chamber granted Ndayambaje's request to recall Prosecution Witness TO on the ground that there was a particular issue "which may involve a matter of credibility which the substitute judge may need to assess in the light of the witness' demeanour."[358] The same day, the Trial Chamber denied Ndayambaje's requests to recall Prosecution Witnesses QAQ and QAR on the grounds that the issues of credibility raised by Ndayambaje were related to the substance of the evidence and that Ndayambaje had failed to raise any specific issue which involved a matter of credibility that the substitute judge may have needed to assess in light of the witnesses' demeanour.[359] The Trial Chamber ultimately relied on the evidence of Witnesses QAQ and QAR in support of a number of findings against Ndayambaje.[360]

151. Ndayambaje submits that by rejecting his requests to recall Witnesses QAQ and QAR whereas Judge Bossa did not see them testify, the Trial Chamber deprived him of a fair trial and caused him serious prejudice.[361] He argues that, without seeing the witnesses' explanations on the many contradictions and inconsistencies in their testimonies, Judge Bossa was not in a position to properly assess their evidence.[362] In Ndayambaje's view, Article 11(2) of the Statute was implicitly violated as he was in fact convicted by only two judges.[363] He highlights that the credibility of Witnesses QAQ and QAR was highly contested at trial, that Witness QAR was the sole witness the Trial Chamber relied upon in finding him guilty in relation to the events at Mugombwa Church, and [361] Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 128-132; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 318, 322, 327, 328. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in his notice of appeal, Ndayambaje further submitted that the decision to continue the trial with a substitute judge constitutes an error of law. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 126. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje failed to substantiate this allegation in his appeal brief and dismisses it as a result. The Appeals Chamber also notes that, in his appeal brief, Ndayambaje develops arguments related to the Trial Chamber's decision to recall Witness TO on a limited basis and the assessment of Witness TO's evidence. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 321, 324. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje not only failed to give notice of his contentions pertaining to the evidence of Witness TO in his notice of appeal, but that he also failed to articulate the alleged error committed by the Trial Chamber in relation to the recall of Witness TO. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will not examine Ndayambaje's contentions in this regard. Ndayambaje also submits that the replacement of Judge Maqutu resulted in an adjournment of the hearing that delayed the entire proceedings and caused him prejudice. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 127. This argument is dealt with below in paragraph 364 under Section III.K.

[362] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 323, 328.
[363] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 324. Pointing out that the testimonies of Witnesses QAQ and QAR were not recorded on video, Ndayambaje argues that it was improper for Judge Bossa to evaluate the credibility of the witnesses that Witness QAQ's testimony was considered as largely corroborative of Prosecution evidence for a number of events.[364] Ndayambaje requests that the Appeals Chamber exclude the testimonies of Witnesses QAQ and QAR and quash the findings of guilt based solely on Witness QAR's testimony.[365]

152. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's submissions should be summarily dismissed as he does not show that the rejection of his requests to recall Witnesses QAQ and QAR constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[366] The Prosecution contends that Ndayambaje does not identify any specific aspects of the witnesses' testimonies that the Trial Chamber would not have relied upon, had Judge Bossa seen the witnesses testify.[367]

153. The Appeals Chamber observes that the decisions denying the recall of Witnesses QAQ and QAR indicate that Judge Bossa, along with the two other judges on the bench, considered that Ndayambaje had failed to raise specific issues in the evidence of these two witnesses that involved matters of credibility which the judges needed to assess in light of the witnesses' "visually observable" demeanour.[368] While Ndayambaje contests the credibility of the two witnesses, he does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he had failed to raise specific issues of this sort in his motions seeking the recall of Witnesses QAQ and QAR.

154. Turning to Ndayambaje's argument that he was convicted by only two judges, the Appeals Chamber recalls its finding in the Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial that the question of adequacy of the record, including the availability of video-recordings, was a matter for the substitute judge.[369] In this case, Judge Bossa certified her familiarisation with the record despite the absence of video-recordings,[370] which demonstrates that she considered that the record of proceedings provided to her was sufficient to enable her to appreciate what had happened.[371] The decisions denying the recall of Witnesses QAQ and QAR further reveal that Judge Bossa did on the basis of the written transcripts and audio recordings of the proceedings as the role of the trial judge cannot be fulfilled by an assessment "on paper". See ibid., para. 325; Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 127.

Failure to review video-recordings which, because they are non-existent, do not form part of the record of the proceedings, does not mean that the judge has not familiarized himself with the record of the proceedings as the record stands and therefore does not disqualify him from joining the bench. He may decide to join the bench with any questions of demeanour being left to be resolved".).

not consider that there were issues in relation to the evidence of these two witnesses which involved credibility matters that she needed to assess by observing the witnesses' demeanour.[372] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that this determination was so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion.

155. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's challenges against the 6 May 2004 Decision on Motion to Recall Witness QAQ and the 6 May 2004 Decision on Motion to Recall Witness QAR.

3. Alleged Errors in the Trial Judgement

156. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that:

> The Nyiramasuhuko Defence avers that Nyiramasuhuko was prejudiced by the fact that Judge Bossa was not present during the presentation of the Prosecution's case and, consequently, did not hear all the Prosecution witnesses testify in person, as she was only appointed to the Bench in 2004.[373]

The Trial Chamber rejected Nyiramasuhuko's contention, reasoning as follows:

> As contemplated by the [Appeal Decision on Continuation of Trial], Judge Bossa did not personally hear all of the Prosecution's evidence in this case. She did, however, familiarise herself with the evidence adduced before she joined the current Bench on the basis of both the written transcripts and audio recordings of the proceedings. Where it was necessary to assess a particular witness' credibility in light of the witness' demeanour, the Chamber granted the motions to recall particular witnesses to be re-heard on specific issues. In such cases, involving Witnesses QCB, QY, SJ, QBQ and QA, Judge Bossa based her assessment of the witness' demeanour on the testimony given when the witness was recalled. The Trial Chamber's approach to this issue has already been endorsed by the Appeals Chamber, and the Nyiramasuhuko Defence demonstrates no new fact, material change in circumstance, or legal error associated with the Chamber's approach. Accordingly, the Chamber will not reconsider its decision on this issue.[374]

157. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber distorted her closing arguments and failed to understand that she was not requesting reconsideration of the decisions on the continuation of the trial with a substitute judge but, instead, that she was arguing that the withdrawal of 30 Prosecution witnesses constituted new circumstances which led to the violation of her fair trial rights.[375] She argues that the Trial Chamber therefore erred in finding that she had not demonstrated the existence of any new fact, material change in circumstance, or legal error related to the Appeals Chamber's approach since it was not her argument.[376]

158. Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber erred by suggesting that Prosecution Witnesses QCB, SJ, QBQ, and QA were recalled to allow Judge Bossa to assess their credibility, arguing that they were recalled for other reasons.[377] Similarly, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred by stating that it adopted the practice of recalling witnesses that Judge Bossa had not observed in court on specific issues as, in fact, it rejected the entirety of his requests to recall witnesses.[378]

159. Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko submit that, despite their arguments in this respect at trial and the importance of this factor, the Trial Chamber's failure in the Trial Judgement to refer to the behaviour of the Prosecution witnesses when assessing these witnesses' credibility caused them prejudice.[379] This, Nyiramasuhuko argues, amounts to a failure to provide a reasoned opinion and leads to the conclusion that the credibility and reliability of the testimonial evidence was not properly evaluated by the Trial Chamber, which renders the trial unfair.[380] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali also contend that they were ultimately tried by only two judges in violation of Article 11 of the Statute.[381] As relief, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali request a permanent stay of proceedings.[382] In the alternative, Nyiramasuhuko requests her acquittal on all counts, and Ntahobali requests the exclusion of the testimonial evidence that Judge Bossa did not observe.[383] In a further alternative, Ntahobali argues that the Appeals Chamber should not accord to the Trial Chamber's findings the deference normally due on the ground that the trial judges observed the witnesses in person.[384]

160. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to these arguments.

161. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber addressed Nyiramasuhuko's claim that it was necessary to recall the relevant witnesses in light of the reduction of the number of Prosecution witnesses in the 6 May 2004 Decision on Nyiramasuhuko Motion to Recall Witnesses.[385] Since Nyiramasuhuko's claim had already been adjudicated, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering that, by raising it again in her closing arguments, Nyiramasuhuko was seeking reconsideration of the approach the Trial Chamber had taken. In light of Nyiramasuhuko's closing arguments and the relevant portion of the Trial Judgement, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to address her contention.

[383] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 242; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 118.

162. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's submission that the Trial Chamber erred by suggesting that Prosecution Witnesses QCB, SJ, QBQ, and QA were recalled to allow Judge Bossa to assess their credibility, the Appeals Chamber notes that, regardless of the reason why these witnesses were recalled, Judge Bossa was able to observe their demeanour in court. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber's rejection of his requests to recall witnesses demonstrates that the Trial Chamber did not recall witnesses where it was necessary to assess their credibility in light of their demeanour.

163. As for the arguments concerning the absence of reference in the Trial Judgement to the observable demeanour of the witnesses when testifying, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber is not required to articulate each step of its reasoning and to discuss each submission made at trial.[386] With regard to factual findings, a trial chamber is only required to make findings of those facts which are essential to the determination of guilt on a particular count.[387] It is to be presumed that the trial chamber has evaluated all the evidence presented to it, as long as there is no indication that the trial chamber completely disregarded any particular piece of evidence.[388] Having carefully reviewed the specific instances pointed out by Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali in support of their claim, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the absence of express reference to specific behaviour of witnesses in the Trial Judgement indicates that the Trial Chamber disregarded these aspects when assessing their credibility. The Trial Judgement generally reflects a detailed and careful assessment of the testimonial evidence and the fact that the Trial Chamber did not explicitly discuss the elements pointed out by Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber did not properly assess the credibility and reliability of the witnesses.

164. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that, while there is a clear preference for live testimony to be heard by each and every judge, this preference does not represent an unbending requirement.[389] In the present case, Judge Bossa certified her familiarisation with the record despite the absence of video-recordings, and the decisions challenged by the appellants under these grounds of appeal reveal that she did not consider that there were particular issues which involved credibility matters that she needed to assess in light of the witnesses' "visually observable" demeanour in court. This indicates that Judge Bossa, together with the two other judges, considered that she was in a position to properly assess the testimonies of the relevant witnesses and appropriately perform her duties in this case. Nothing in the Trial Judgement suggests that such an assessment did not take place and that the appellants were only tried by the two judges who observed all testimonies live. The Appeals Chamber accordingly dismisses these arguments.

4. Conclusion

165. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 5 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal, Ground 1.6 of Ntahobali's appeal, and Ground 16 of Ndayambaje's appeal in their entirety.

[389] See supra, para. 140.

D. Addition of Witnesses to the Prosecution's Witness List (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 10; Ntahobali Ground 1.11)

166. On 30 March 2004, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's request to remove 30 witnesses from its witness list and, against the objections of the co-Accused, to add Expert Witness Évariste Ntakirutimana as well as Witnesses FA and FCC.[390] The Trial Chamber found that it was in the interests of justice to add these prospective witnesses to the Prosecution's witness list.[391] The Prosecution ultimately did not call Witness FCC to testify.[392]

167. In their closing submissions, Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko argued that their right to prepare their defence had been violated by a lack of sufficient notice of Witnesses Ntakirutimana's and FA's evidence, and requested the exclusion of their evidence.[393] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that no prejudice had been established as a result of Witnesses Ntakirutimana and FA being permitted to testify and found no reason to reconsider its 30 March 2004 Decision.[394] The Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness Ntakirutimana in finding Nyiramasuhuko liable for conspiracy to commit genocide[395] and on that of Witness FA in relation to several of Ntahobali's convictions.[396] The Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness FA's evidence in support of any of Nyiramasuhuko's convictions.[397]

168. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its 30 March 2004 Decision in concluding that the addition of Witnesses Ntakirutimana, FA, and FCC to the Prosecution's witness list at a late stage of the proceedings was in the interests of justice.[398] She contends that the Trial

The Appeals Chamber notes that, in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber referred to Expert Witness Ntakirutimana at times as "Francis" Ntakirutimana (see Trial Judgement, paras. 589, 594, 695, p. 151) and at times as "Evariste" Ntakirutimana (see ibid., paras. 194, 457, 476, 3602, 3768, 4446, 6400, pp. 880, 921, 1080). The Appeals Chamber observes that Expert Witness Ntakirutimana testified that his name was "Évariste Ntakirutimana". See Évariste Ntakirutimana, T. 13 September 2004 pp. 3, 4. The Appeals Chamber therefore considers the Trial Chamber's reference to "Francis" to be a typographical error.

Chamber erred in effectively authorising the Prosecution to mould its case in light of the evidence already presented, emphasising that the Prosecution was in possession of Witness Ntakirutimana's report since December 2002 and had failed to give notice of its intention to call an expert witness in support of its allegations concerning Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[399] Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the considerable time she had to spend investigating and preparing for the testimonies of Witnesses FA and FCC and convincing an expert to come testify to counter Witness Ntakirutimana's evidence prejudiced her in the preparation of her defence.[400] According to Nyiramasuhuko, the Trial Chamber failed to strike a proper balance between the Prosecution's obligation to present the best available evidence and her fundamental right to prepare her defence.[401] Nyiramasuhuko requests that the Appeals Chamber recognise "the cumulative violation of Article 20(4)(b) of the Statute" and order a complete stay of proceedings.[402]

169. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the addition of Witness FA to the Prosecution's witness list was in the interests of justice.[403] He contends that the Trial Chamber failed to address some of his arguments and failed to consider or erroneously minimised the prejudice arising from: (i) the impossibility of cross-examining witnesses who had already testified on matters to be raised by Witness FA in her forthcoming testimony; (ii) the addition of the witness at such an advanced stage of the proceedings; and (iii) the disclosure of the witness's identity and unredacted statements ten years after the alleged facts.[404]

170. Ntahobali also contends that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, the time period between the disclosure of Witness FA's particulars and her taking the stand was insufficient for him to adequately prepare for cross-examination.[405] Like Nyiramasuhuko, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the balance that had to be struck between the Prosecution's obligation to present the best available evidence and his right to be afforded adequate time and

[404] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 69; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 131-135, 140. In particular, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider his arguments that: (i) when Witness FA's identity was finally disclosed, 44 Prosecution witnesses had already testified, including all the witnesses who testified about the crime scenes Witness FA would cover; (ii) the substantial lapse of time between the events and the disclosure of Witness FA's particulars rendered the investigations into her allegations extremely difficult; and (iii) despite being in possession of Witness FA's statements since 26 November 1996 and asserting that her evidence constituted the best available evidence, the Prosecution did not explain why it had not included Witness FA in its original witness list. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 133-135, *referring to The Prosecutor v. facilities to prepare his defence.[406] Relying on trial decisions of the ICTY in the Mrkšić et al. case, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber should have denied the addition of Witness FA given the closing stage of the Prosecution case and the Prosecution's failure to explain why the request was not presented at an earlier stage.[407] Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in allowing the Prosecution to substitute a number of witnesses with a single witness whose testimony did not cover the same facts.[408]

171. In addition, Ntahobali submits that, in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to acknowledge that his rights had been prejudiced, a finding which would have required the exclusion of Witness FA's evidence.[409] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness FA's evidence for convicting him even though it was clear that the Prosecution merely added this evidence to mould its case in light of the evidence already presented.[410] Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber exclude the evidence of Witness FA in its entirety, and consequently overturn his convictions for the murder of members of the Rwamukwaya family and in relation to the events at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[411]

172. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali fail to show any error or abuse of discretion in the Trial Chamber's decision to authorise the addition of Witnesses Ntakirutimana and FA and do not substantiate their claim that the addition of these witnesses caused them prejudice.[412] It further contends that, in support of its request to add Witness FA, it specifically argued that other witnesses who could have testified to the events at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock were deceased, making the witness's evidence unique and valuable to prove several counts.[413]

173. Ntahobali replies that his ability to investigate Witness FA's allegations was greatly affected by the hearings held at the time and the need to investigate another new witness and prepare for the cross-examination of expert witnesses.[414] He also submits that, despite the Prosecution's assertion that Witness FA was added because of the death of a number of other prospective witnesses, none of the removed witnesses was expected to testify about the events at Hotel Ihuliro and its roadblock.[415]

174. Rule 73*bis*(E) of the Rules provides that after the commencement of the trial, the Prosecutor, if he considers it to be in the interests of justice, may move the trial chamber for leave to reinstate the list of witnesses or to vary his decision as to which witnesses are to be called. The rule does not impose a time limit to validly raise a request under this provision. However, the jurisprudence of both the Tribunal and the ICTY indicates that, when assessing whether it is in the interests of justice to permit the Prosecution to vary its witness list, the trial chamber shall take into account the potential prejudice to the Defence and the stage of the proceedings among other factors.[416] The Appeals Chamber nonetheless emphasises that decisions concerning the variation of a party's witness list are among the discretionary decisions of the trial chamber to which the Appeals Chamber must accord deference.[417]

175. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the 30 March 2004 Decision reflects that the Trial Chamber duly considered the potential prejudice caused to the Defence by the addition of Witnesses Ntakirutimana, FA, and FCC to the Prosecution's witness list at that stage of the proceedings.[418] Notably, the Trial Chamber recalled that it was required to take into consideration the "prejudice to the Defence, including elements of surprise, on-going investigations, replacements and corroboration of evidence" and to balance the Prosecution's duty to present the best available evidence against the right of the accused to have adequate time and facilities to prepare his defence and his right to be tried without undue delay.[419] The Trial Chamber took into account that Witness Ntakirutimana's report and the redacted statements of Witnesses FA and FCC had been disclosed to the parties on 12 January 2004 and that the Prosecution submitted that it would not call them "for at least two months following disclosure of their identities to the Defence or call the expert witness until the end of its case."[420] In granting the Prosecution's motion, the Trial Chamber also directed that the newly added witnesses testify at the end of the Prosecution case "[i]n consideration of the interests of the Accused and the fair administration of the proceedings".[421] It further ordered that the unredacted witness statements be disclosed immediately "in order to avoid any delay which could prejudice the Defence in its preparation".[422] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber emphasised that Witness FA was only called on 30 June 2004, at the end of the Prosecution case, and that Witness Ntakirutimana was called after the Defence cases had already started, in September 2004.[423]

176. Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how the time the Trial Chamber allocated for the preparation of the testimonies of the new witnesses was insufficient to prepare an adequate defence. On this matter, it bears noting that Nyiramasuhuko cross-examined Witnesses Ntakirutimana and FA[424] and called Expert Witness Shimamungu to counter Expert Witness Ntakirutimana's evidence.[425] Likewise, Nyiramasuhuko does not substantiate her claim that the time she had to spend investigating and preparing for the testimonies of Witnesses Ntakirutimana, FA, and FCC prejudiced her in the preparation of her defence or that she was not given enough time to prepare for the hearing of these three Prosecution witnesses.

177. Turning to Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to consider some of his submissions, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, as a general rule, a trial chamber is not required to articulate every step of its reasoning for each finding it makes[426] and that it is within its discretion as to which arguments to address.[427] While the Trial Chamber did not expressly address some of Ntahobali's objections to the addition of Witness FA,[428] the 30 March 2004 Decision reflects that the Trial Chamber appropriately balanced the Prosecution's right to vary its witness list against the co-Accused's fair trial rights and potential prejudice before concluding that the addition of Witness FA was in the interests of justice.

178. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali is correct in his submission that none of the 30 prospective witnesses dropped by the Prosecution was expected to testify about events at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[429] The Prosecution's contention that it requested the addition of Witness FA because other witnesses who could testify about these events were deceased therefore does not explain why Witness FA was not included in the original witness list. However, the purpose of Rule 73*bis*(E) of the Rules is to allow the Prosecution to correct its prior assessment of which witnesses to call "after the commencement of [t]rial". Nothing in Rule 73*bis*(E) of the Rules requires that the addition of new witnesses be conditioned upon the removal of witnesses who were expected to testify about the same facts.[430] The Appeals Chamber further notes that the addition of Witness FA was not granted on the basis of a substitution. Rather, the Trial Chamber examined the materiality of the witness's proposed testimony to the case before it, determined that it "could address specific factual circumstances which [were] relevant to the case",[431] and concluded that the witness's addition would be in the interests of justice.[432] Even though the Prosecution had failed to provide a cogent explanation as to why Witness FA was not included in its original witness list, it was within the purview of the Trial Chamber to reach these conclusions and to grant leave to add Witness FA to the Prosecution's witness list.

179. Ntahobali largely repeats submissions made at trial but does not show how the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in finding that it was in the interests of justice to authorise the addition of Witness FA. In particular, like Nyiramasuhuko, he does not demonstrate how the time the Trial Chamber allocated for the preparation of the testimony of Witness FA was insufficient to conduct the necessary investigation. Furthermore, while the Appeals Chamber observes that trial chambers of the ICTY have previously emphasised considerations such as the stage of the proceedings and the justification provided in support of requests for the amendment of witness lists,[433] the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's reliance on the Mrkšić et al. decisions is not pertinent. The Appeals Chamber stresses that the manner in which the discretion to manage trials is exercised by a trial chamber should be determined in accordance with the case before it; what is reasonable in one trial is not automatically reasonable in another.[434] The question of whether a trial chamber abused its discretion should not be considered in isolation, but rather by taking into account all relevant circumstances of the case at hand.[435] It can therefore not be held that granting a request for the addition of witnesses in the last stages of a party's presentation of its case is per se unreasonable and prejudicial to the opposing party; such an assessment rather requires a careful balancing of various interests and circumstances on a case-by-case basis.

[428] The Trial Chamber did not expressly address Ntahobali's arguments that: (i) the addition of Witness FA at this late stage of the proceedings made it impossible for him to cross-examine witnesses who had already testified on matters raised by Witness FA in her upcoming testimony; (ii) the substantial lapse of time between the events and the disclosure of Witness FA's particulars rendered the investigations into her allegations extremely difficult; and (iii) the Prosecution had not explained why Witness FA had not been included in its original witness list. See Ntahobali Response to Prosecution Motion to Vary Witness List, paras. 26, 27, 49, 50, 53; 30 March 2004 Decision, paras. 28-39.

180. The Appeals Chamber thus finds that, like those of Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali's submissions fail to demonstrate an error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in granting the Prosecution's request to add Witness FA to its witness list. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate the existence of prejudice which the Trial Chamber should have considered in the Trial Judgement. In the absence of a demonstration of an error in the 30 March 2004 Decision and of any subsequent prejudice, there is no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submission that the Trial Chamber should not have relied upon Witnesses Ntakirutimana's and FA's testimonies. Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's argument[436] that the Prosecution should not have been permitted to mould its case is also not pertinent in light of the express provision in the Rules allowing the Prosecution to amend its witness list in the course of the presentation of its case.

181. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 10 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal and Ground 1.11 of Ntahobali's appeal.

E. Presence of Prosecution Witnesses in the Courtroom During Objections (Ntahobali Ground 1.9; Ndayambaje Ground 14)

182. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled that it determined on 30 January 2004 that, for the remainder of the trial, witnesses would be excluded from the courtroom during objections and associated arguments raised during the course of their testimony.[437]

183. Ntahobali and Ndayambaje submit that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in failing to exclude the witnesses from the courtroom during objections by the parties prior to 30 January 2004.[438] They argue that the witnesses' presence made it possible for them to adjust their testimony based on the arguments advanced by the parties[439] and that, by applying the non-exclusion rule during the major part of the presentation of the Prosecution evidence, the Trial Chamber put the Prosecution at an undue advantage.[440] Ntahobali and Ndayambaje contend that this violated their rights to equality of arms and to a fair trial, causing them serious prejudice.[441] Ntahobali requests a stay of the proceedings or, alternatively, compensation.[442] Ndayambaje requests that the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses QAR, TO, and QAQ be excluded from the record.[443]

184. The Prosecution did not respond to these submissions.[444]

185. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje does not point to any instance in the trial record demonstrating that the witnesses he refers to may have adjusted their testimonies upon hearing the parties' arguments relating to objections. Similarly, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that he actually suffered any prejudice as a result of the Trial Chamber not excluding witnesses from the Likewise, Ndayambaje did not develop his arguments in his appeal brief, simply referring to his notice of appeal. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 129; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 294. In contrast, Nyiramasuhuko formally abandoned Ground 6 of her appeal relating to the presence of witnesses during the parties' objections. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 7. Based on the language used in their appeal briefs, the Appeals Chamber considers that neither Ntahobali nor Ndayambaje has abandoned their respective ground of appeal and is of the view that the arguments Ntahobali and Ndayambaje developed in their notices of appeal in support of their allegations of error should be addressed as a matter of fairness.

courtroom during arguments pertaining to objections prior to 30 January 2004. The Appeals Chamber recalls that trial chambers enjoy considerable discretion in the conduct of proceedings before them, including in the modalities of examination of witnesses,[445] and that, in order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, a party must demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party.[446] Having failed to demonstrate any prejudice, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's and Ndayambaje's submissions.

186. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 1.9 of Ntahobali's appeal and Ground 14 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

F. Cross-Examination of Prosecution Witness TA (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 12 in part; Ntahobali Ground 1.5 in part)

187. On 24 October 2001, the Trial Chamber denied Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's oral request for the postponement of the cross-examination of Prosecution Witness TA.[447] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali argued that they were not able to conduct the cross-examination of Witness TA as the Prosecution had failed to disclose the identity and unredacted statements of most of its protected witnesses expected to give evidence in relation to the same allegations about which Witness TA was to testify.[448] The Trial Chamber held that the "parties ha[d] sufficient information upon which they could carry on their cross-examination".[449] Ntahobali's counsel conducted the cross-examination of Witness TA from 29 October to 1 November 2001, while Nyiramasuhuko's counsel cross-examined Witness TA on 1, 5, and 6 November 2001.[450]

188. On 24 November 2008, Ntahobali requested the Trial Chamber to exclude the evidence of Witness TA or, alternatively, to recall the witness for further cross-examination, notably on the ground that the Prosecution's delayed disclosure of the full unredacted statements and personal particulars of its other witnesses impaired his right to effectively cross-examine Witness TA.[451] The Trial Chamber dismissed Ntahobali's request on 19 January 2009 on the basis that the issue of the Prosecution's failure to comply with its disclosure obligations was settled and did not need re-litigation since measures were taken to remedy these failures, including and not limited to the issuance of warnings to Prosecution counsel, and that the request had no legal basis.[452] The Trial Chamber relied on Witness TA's evidence in finding Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali criminally liable for crimes perpetrated at the Butare Prefecture Office.[453]

189. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing their request to postpone the cross-examination of Witness TA on the crimes allegedly committed during attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office despite the fact that they had not been provided with the identity and the unredacted statements of several protected witnesses the Prosecution intended to call in relation to these allegations.[454] They argue that, as a result, they were not able to counter Witness TA's allegations with the information contained in the other witnesses' statements, which prevented them from conducting an effective cross-examination of the witness in violation of their fundamental rights.[455] Ntahobali points out that the Trial Chamber itself had recognised that the provision of all unredacted statements and identities of all witnesses was crucial to allow him to prepare an adequate defence.[456] Nyiramasuhuko also highlights that her convictions relating to the attack conducted at the prefectoral office in mid-May 1994 were based solely on the evidence of Witness TA.[457]

190. Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its 19 January 2009 Decision on Exclusion of Evidence and Recall of Witnesses in denying the request to recall Witness TA for further cross-examination.[458] He contends that the issuance of warnings did not remedy the prejudice he suffered for not being able to cross-examine Witness TA effectively.[459] Ntahobali argues that because he was deprived of the relevant statements when cross-examining Witness TA, he could not, for instance, question her on her ties with other witnesses whom she denied knowing.[460]

191. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali fail to demonstrate how they were prejudiced in their material ability to prepare their defence.[461]

192. It is not disputed that, at the time of Witness TA's cross-examination, the Prosecution had failed to comply with its disclosure obligations pursuant to Rules 66(A)(ii) and 69(C) of the Rules, which provided that the Prosecution shall disclose to the Defence "[n]o later than 60 days before the date set for trial, copies of the statements of all witnesses whom the Prosecutor intends to call to testify at trial" and that "the identity of the victim or witness shall be disclosed in sufficient time prior to the trial to allow adequate time for preparation of the prosecution and the defence".[462] Prior to Witness TA's testimony, the Trial Chamber had stressed the importance of disclosing the statements of the witnesses that the Prosecution intended to call so that the accused could be in a position to prepare their defence and, in particular, to fully cross-examine the witnesses.[463] Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber held that, since "disclosures ha[d] been made" for a "big part" of the witnesses listed for the session, it "imagine[d] parties ha[d] sufficient information upon which they could carry on their cross-examination once the witness testifies."[464]

193. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's ruling does not reflect proper consideration of whether the material disclosed to the Defence was indeed sufficient for adequate preparation and, in particular, for allowing Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko to fully cross-examine Witness TA. By merely relying on the fact that a "big part" of the necessary disclosure had been made for that session, the Trial Chamber failed to consider Ntahobali's and Nyiramasuhuko's argument that some of the information which the Prosecution had failed to disclose at the time of Witness TA's testimony would have been relevant to their cross-examinations.[465] The Appeals Chamber considers that, in the absence of a proper consideration of whether the Defence had indeed sufficient information to be able to fully cross-examine Witness TA, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that "parties ha[d] sufficient information upon which they could carry on their cross-examination" was so unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in its 24 October 2001 Oral Decision.

194. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that neither Nyiramasuhuko nor Ntahobali demonstrates that the Trial Chamber's error resulted in prejudice.[466] Indeed, while Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali contend that they were prejudiced by their inability to counter Witness TA with the [462] Rule 69(C) of the Rules was amended at the 12th plenary session held on 5 and 6 July 2002 to read: "Subject to Rule 75, the identity of the victim or witness shall be disclosed within such time as determined by Trial Chamber to allow adequate time for preparation of the Prosecution and the Defence". The Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution does not dispute that it failed to disclose the identity and unredacted statements of seven protected witnesses relevant to the allegations relating to the Butare Prefecture Office. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 70, 71. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to discuss Ntahobali's contention that he was not provided with the identity and statements of 34 Prosecution witnesses.

information contained in the witnesses' statements not disclosed at the time, they fail to identify which information contained therein would in fact have been material to their cross-examination of Witness TA. As the only demonstration of prejudice, Ntahobali refers to his inability to question Witness TA on her ties with Witness QBP, whom she denied knowing. Ntahobali, though, refers to information provided by Witness QBP in her testimony before the Trial Chamber, rather than to information provided through any of the witness's prior statements.[467]

195. Additionally, in the absence of any demonstration of prejudice resulting from his inability to cross-examine Witness TA on the basis of the information that had not been disclosed at the time, the Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ntahobali's challenge to the 19 January 2009 Decision on Exclusion of Evidence and Recall of Witnesses without further consideration.

196. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the relevant parts of Ground 12 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal and Ground 1.5 of Ntahobali's appeal.

G. Refusal to Recall Witnesses (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 7 in part; Ntahobali Ground 1.5 in part)

197. During the course of the trial, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submitted several motions requesting the recall of Prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination, including Witnesses QBQ, QCB, QJ, QY, TA, and TK.[468] The Trial Chamber denied some of these requests[469] and partially granted the others.[470] In its decisions, the Trial Chamber set out that the jurisprudence of the Tribunal allowed for the recall of witnesses if good cause had been shown by the moving party.[471] The Trial Chamber stated that, in the assessment of good cause, it would have to consider the purpose of the proposed testimony and the moving party's justification for not having sought such evidence when the witness originally testified.[472] The Trial Chamber emphasised that:

> The recall of a witness should be granted only in the most compelling of circumstances where further evidence is of significant probative value and not of a cumulative nature, such as to explore inconsistencies between a witness's testimony and a declaration obtained subsequently. In case of inconsistencies, the Defence may request the recall of a witness if prejudice can be shown from its inability to put these inconsistencies to that witness. If there is no need for the witness's explanation of the inconsistency, because it is minor or its nature is self-evident, then the witness will not be recalled.[473]

198. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in denying their various requests to recall Witnesses QBQ, QCB, QJ, QY, TA, and TK for further cross-examination.[474] They contend that by relying on the very witnesses whom it did not recall in finding them guilty, the Trial Chamber violated their fair trial rights.[475] Nyiramasuhuko requests that the Appeals Chamber invalidate the Trial Judgement or, at a minimum, exclude the evidence of all witnesses implicated by Prosecution Witnesses SJ and QY to have been part of an alleged collusion.[476] Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber stay the proceedings against him or, in the alternative, exclude the evidence of the concerned witnesses in the determination of his guilt, or draw the relevant inferences based on the information before it.[477]

199. Before turning to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's specific challenges, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that, like all decisions relating to the conduct of the proceedings before them, decisions on requests to recall witnesses are matters within the discretion of trial chambers.[478]

1. 3 March 2006 Decision

200. On 9 January 2006, Ntahobali moved the Trial Chamber for the recall of Witness QY and requested permission to further cross-examine her on three issues, namely: (i) the number of times she was raped near the EER; (ii) the identity of the man who allegedly raped her at the EER; and (iii) her presence in Kibeho and Gikongoro.[479] Ntahobali argued that inconsistencies in relation to these matters became apparent after Witness QY's subsequent testimony in the Muvunyi case.[480]

The Appeals Chamber notes that, in her appeal brief, Nyiramasuhuko challenges the Trial Chamber's 9 December 2008 Decision on Motion to Recall Witness QBQ, but failed to raise the alleged error in her notice of appeal, even though she amended it twice. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 248. Similarly, Ntahobali challenges the Trial Chamber's 3 December 2008 Decision denying the recall of, inter alia, Witnesses TK, QJ, and TA, but failed to raise this allegation in his notice of appeal. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 88. Because these allegations of error exceed the scope of Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's appeals as defined in their notices of appeal and the Prosecution did not respond to these new allegations, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider them.

[477] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 37; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 102. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in his notice of appeal, Ntahobali further requested that the Appeals Chamber either: (i) order a re-trial; (ii) admit into evidence transcripts from the Canadian case against Désiré Munyaneza, the admission of which the Trial Chamber had denied; or, at a very minimum, (iii) apply caution towards the evidence of the witnesses concerned; (iv) award him compensation for the numerous violations of his fair trial rights. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 37, 38. In his appeal brief, Ntahobali specifically argues that a re-trial would be inappropriate as it would violate his right to a fair trial and does not reiterate this specific alternative relief. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 102.

The Trial Chamber granted Ntahobali's motion to recall Witness QY in respect of the latter two issues.[481] It denied Ntahobali's request to put questions to the witness concerning the number of times she was raped at the EER on the ground that the discrepancies in the witness's testimonies in this respect did "not seem to relate directly to the Accused" and did not therefore warrant the witness's recall.[482]

201. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in denying his request to recall Witness QY on the subject matter of the number of times she was raped near the EER.[483] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the contradictions regarding the number of alleged rapes did not seem to directly relate to the co-Accused.[484] According to him, there is no requirement that the contradictions in a witness's testimony have a direct link to the accused in order for a chamber to grant a request for recall.[485] Ntahobali argues that, in fact, it is established jurisprudence that a witness may be recalled for impeachment purposes.[486] In this regard, he points out that the Trial Chamber authorised the recall of Witness QY in relation to questions pertaining to the identity of the rapist which, he submits, was not more directly linked to the co-Accused than the number of rapes.[487]

202. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to Ntahobali's submissions.

203. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali does not dispute the legal standard for the recall of witnesses set out by the Trial Chamber in its 3 March 2006 Decision.[488] In the legal standard, the Trial Chamber did not set out as a requirement to authorise a recall that the contradictions in the witness's testimonies must directly relate to the accused. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in exercising its discretion in deciding whether an issue is of such nature or importance as to require further explanation from the witness, a chamber is entitled to look at all factors it deems to be relevant, including whether a discrepancy directly relates to the accused. Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the Trial Chamber did not elevate this consideration to the level of being a criterion for authorising a recall.[489] Rather, the Trial Chamber considered whether the question was of such centrality to the accused's responsibility that it required further explanation from the witness and found that it did not rise to this level. Given that the impugned discrepancy related to whether Witness QY was raped once at the EER or twice in the course of one evening,[490] the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion. Conversely, the Appeals Chamber finds that the issue of the identity of the rapist, which the Trial Chamber found to justify the recall of Witness QY, was directly related to Ntahobali's alleged responsibility for ordering, aiding and abetting, and as a superior.[491] Ntahobali therefore fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in authorising the recall of Witness QY on that matter while refusing her recall on the subject matter of the number of times she was raped.

204. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's challenge against the 3 March 2006 Decision.

2. 20 November 2008 Decision

205. On 1 October 2008, Ntahobali moved the Chamber for the recall of Witness QCB.[492] Ntahobali argued that, since his testimony before the Trial Chamber, Witness QCB had given several statements to the Canadian police between 2000 and 2004 and testified in 2007 before a Canadian court in the case against Désiré Munyaneza ("Munyaneza" and "Munyaneza case", respectively), which, according to Ntahobali, revealed a number of inconsistencies in Witness QCB's evidence.[493] Ntahobali requested Witness QCB's recall so as to question him further in relation to six specific matters, including the location of the killing of Ruvurajabo and the presence of Munyaneza and Pierre-Célestin Halindintwali ("Halindintwali") at "roadblocks 5 and 6".[494]

206. The Trial Chamber denied Ntahobali's request in its entirety. At the outset, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QCB's statements to the Canadian police provided by Ntahobali in support of his request lacked sufficient indicia of reliability as they consisted of visibly edited, unsigned documents, and contained several words in Kinyarwanda that had not been translated into French.[495] It thus considered that their content had to be assessed with caution and in the context of Witness QCB's subsequent testimony before the Canadian court.[496]

[496] 20 November 2008 Decision, para. 36.

207. In relation to the location of the killing of Ruvurajabo, the Trial Chamber found that, while there appeared to be an inconsistency in Witness QCB's account between his testimony before the Trial Chamber and the statement he had given to the Canadian police on 16 October 2000, his subsequent statements given to the Canadian police as well as his testimony before the Canadian court seemed to accord with the account he gave before the Trial Chamber.[497] After having recalled its finding on the reliability of the statements Witness QCB had given to the Canadian police, the Trial Chamber concluded that, when viewed in the context of the witness's testimony in the Munyaneza case, it could find no discrepancy in the witness's account in relation to the location of the killing of Ruvurajabo and denied Ntahobali's request for recall.[498]

208. With respect to the presence of Munyaneza and Halindintwali at roadblocks 5 and 6, the Trial Chamber considered that Witness QCB's testimony before it and his subsequent statements to the Canadian police did not appear to be inconsistent.[499] Specifically, the Trial Chamber noted that, in his testimony before the Trial Chamber, Witness QCB stated that roadblock 5 was manned by Ntahobali and Interahamwe and roadblock 6 was manned by Interahamwe.[500] The Trial Chamber observed that the witness was not asked about the presence of Munyaneza or Halidintwali at either roadblock when he gave evidence before the Trial Chamber.[501] On this basis, the Trial Chamber considered that "omitting to mention […] Munyaneza and […] Halidintwali, without having been specifically asked about their presence, [did] not amount to an inconsistency which would require the recall of the [w]itness."[502]

209. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in denying his request to recall Witness QCB for further cross-examination on the issues of the location of Ruvurajabo's killing and the presence of Munyaneza and Halindintwali at roadblocks 5 and 6.[503] With respect to the location of Ruvurajabo's killing, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QCB's 16 October 2000 statement given to the Canadian police lacked reliability and in relying on the fact that the witness's subsequent statements and testimony before the Canadian court seemed to accord with his testimony before the Tribunal.[504] According to Ntahobali, [502] 20 November 2008 Decision, para. 38.

[503] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 78, 80. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali failed to develop his contention that the Trial Chamber erred in denying his motion for reconsideration of the 20 November 2008 Decision and therefore dismisses it as unsubstantiated. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 32, 33; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 78, fn. 109.

safeguarding the fairness of the proceedings would have required the Trial Chamber to recall the witness for further cross-examination on this matter, which is a material fact in issue.[505]

210. Regarding the presence of Munyaneza and Halindintwali at roadblocks 5 and 6, Ntahobali asserts that no reasonable trial chamber would have expected the Defence to question the witness about the presence of these two individuals when the witness denied knowing them during his testimony before the Trial Chamber.[506] Ntahobali argues that the contradiction only transpired after Witness QCB testified before the Canadian court.[507]

211. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to Ntahobali's submissions.

212. In relation to the recall on the location of the killing of Ruvurajabo, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not exclude Witness QCB's 16 October 2000 statement from consideration but stated that it would assess it with caution and in the context of the witness's testimony before the Canadian court.[508] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the assessment of material for the purposes of admission as evidence as well as the weighing of evidence are matters within the purview of trial chambers to which the Appeals Chamber must accord deference.[509] While in this case the Trial Chamber did not assess the material for the purposes of admission but for the purposes of considering whether there was an inconsistency between the witness's testimony before it and his subsequent statements, the Appeals Chamber considers that the same standard of reasonableness and the same deference applies. In the present instance, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's cautious approach to edited, unsigned statements such as Witness QCB's 16 October 2000 statement. The Appeals Chamber also finds no error in the Trial Chamber's approach in considering the said statement within the context of the other statements Witness QCB made to the Canadian police and his subsequent testimony in the Munyaneza case to determine whether his subsequent statements revealed an inconsistency as to the issue in question. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate any discernible error in the Trial Chamber's decision to deny Ntahobali's request to further question Witness QCB on the issue of the location of the killing of Ruvurajabo.

213. With respect to the issue pertaining to the presence of Munyaneza and Halindintwali at roadblocks 5 and 6, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali largely repeats his arguments put forth at trial.[510] Ntahobali does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QCB's omission to mention Munyaneza and Halindintwali in the absence of specifically being asked about them did not amount to an inconsistency that would require his recall.[511]

214. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's challenges against the 20 November 2008 Decision.

3. 9 December 2008 Decision on Motion to Recall Witness TK

215. On 13 October 2008, Nyiramasuhuko moved the Trial Chamber for the exclusion of the evidence of Witness TK or, alternatively, the admission into evidence of transcripts of her testimony in the Munyaneza case or, in a further alternative, her recall for additional cross-examination on specific topics.[512] On 14 October 2008, Ntahobali joined Nyiramasuhuko's request for further cross-examination of Witness TK on matters relevant to his case.[513] On 9 December 2008, the Trial Chamber denied Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's requests to recall Witness TK.[514] The Trial Chamber held that apparent contradictions between a witness's statement to Tribunal investigators which were not repeated during the witness's testimony before the Tribunal and testimony given before another court do not prejudice the accused and therefore cannot justify a recall.[515] It also explained that: (i) Witness TK provided explanations for some of the contradictions; (ii) some of the discrepancies were minor; (iii) some of the differences within the witness's evidence or omissions did not amount to inconsistencies; and (iv) some of the Defence's assertions were mere speculations.[516]

In December 2008, the Trial Chamber partially granted Ntahobali's request to recall Prosecution Witnesses SJ and QY on the basis that there were discrepancies between their testimonies before the Trial Chamber and their evidence in the Munyaneza case in Canada as to their knowledge of other Prosecution witnesses, including Witness TK, and in light of the witnesses' alleged admissions in the Munyaneza case that they had lied when testifying before the Trial Chamber upon the instructions of Tribunal employees. The Trial Chamber denied Ntahobali's request to recall all other Prosecution witnesses who had testified against him to be questioned on whether they also had been unduly influenced. See 3 December 2008 Decision, paras. 23-28, p. 7.

216. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact by denying her motion to recall Witness TK in order to explore the inconsistencies and "relevant omissions" between Witness TK's testimony before the Trial Chamber and the testimony the witness gave in the Munyaneza case.[517]

217. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in denying the recall of Witness TK on the numerous contradictions revealed after her testimony in the Munyaneza case concerning: (i) the time of the death of her parents; (ii) whether family members accompanied her when she fled from Gikongoro to Butare; (iii) her parents' presence at the Butare Prefecture Office; (iv) the murder of a number of men at the Butare Prefecture Office; and (v) her knowledge about Witness SJ's travels to Arusha.[518] Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that a contradiction between a witness's statement to Tribunal investigators not repeated during the witness's testimony before the Tribunal and the witness's testimony before another court cannot justify a recall, and in finding that the alleged contradictions were minor or did not amount to contradictions.[519] He argues that the denial of Witness TK's recall eventually resulted in her being judged a credible witness and being relied upon by the Trial Chamber in convicting him of crimes committed at the prefectoral office.[520]

218. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution did not specifically respond to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions in its response brief. In response to a question from the Appeals Chamber at the appeals hearing, the Prosecution submitted that the Trial Chamber's reasoning in relation to the discrepancy in Witness TK's evidence concerning the death of her parents was correct.[521]

219. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to develop arguments supporting her allegation concerning the recall of Witness TK and therefore dismisses it without further consideration.

220. Turning to Ntahobali's submissions, the Appeals Chamber notes that, apart from stating that a contradiction can become apparent only after subsequent testimony,[522] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in holding that any apparent contradiction between a witness's statement to Tribunal investigators not repeated during the witness's testimony before the Tribunal and the witness's testimony before another court does not prejudice the accused and therefore could not justify a recall. Recalling the Tribunal's general preference for live testimony[523] and the trial chambers' discretionary power in deciding whether to recall witnesses,[524] the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's approach.

221. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's remaining arguments reflect mere disagreement with the Trial Chamber's assessment of the alleged contradictions. Ntahobali fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's conclusions that the Defence's assertions as to discrepancies were based on mere speculation or did not amount to inconsistencies which, if not put to the witness, would prejudice the accused and warrant the recall of the witness.[525]

222. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's challenges against the 9 December 2008 Decision on Motion to Recall Witness TK.

4. 24 February 2009 Oral Decision

223. On 24 February 2009, after the completion of the recall testimony of Witnesses QY and SJ,[526] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali jointly moved the Trial Chamber for the recall of several other Prosecution witnesses, including Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK, based on the evidence given by Witnesses QY and SJ which suggested that there was a possibility of contamination of other witnesses who came to Arusha at the same time as these witnesses did and stayed in the same safe houses.[527] Nyiramasuhuko submitted that she should be allowed to recall all witnesses who travelled to Arusha together with other witnesses and testified about the events at the Butare Prefecture Office.[528] In particular, she argued that these witnesses should be questioned as to whether "they were invited to say they didn't know each other" because the evidence given by Witness SJ upon recall, namely that Withess SJ was instructed to deny knowing two other Prosecution witnesses, was "of the utmost importance for the credibility of [the] trial".[529]

224. Acknowledging that, on 3 December 2008, the Trial Chamber rejected as speculative his motion for the recall of witnesses other than Witnesses QY and SJ, Ntahobali argued that the situation had changed with Witness SJ's recall evidence since "the witness said before [the Trial

Chamber] that Witnesses TK, QJ, and TA were present when she received instructions to lie, as well as other witnesses that had [come] from Butare".[530]

225. The Trial Chamber denied the oral motion, finding that "there [was] entirely no basis that would justify the recall of witnesses that have been mentioned in the submissions".[531] The Trial Chamber considered that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali "talked about possible possibilities [sic], but […] having heard these witnesses and having heard the issues that were canvassed and demonstrated before the Trial Chamber during these proceedings, [it was] satisfied that there's no basis that has been demonstrated that could justify the recall of the witnesses concerned."[532]

226. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in denying the oral request to recall Witnesses TA and TK.[533] She argues that, in light of Witnesses QY's and SJ's admissions that they provided false testimony, the Trial Chamber's refusal to recall Witnesses TA and TK was particularly serious, as it deprived her of the opportunity to demonstrate that other Prosecution witnesses had also been instructed to lie.[534] Nyiramasuhuko argues that this, in turn, affected her ability to conduct an effective defence by demonstrating the lack of credibility of Prosecution witnesses and their "conspiracy to lie".[535] In support of her argument, Nyiramasuhuko relies on a decision rendered by the trial chamber seised of the Karemera et al. case, granting a request for the recall of a Prosecution witness on the basis of suspicion of collusion between witnesses.[536]

227. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the requests to recall Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK lacked legal basis.[537] He points out that Witness SJ testified that Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK were present when a Prosecution employee gave instructions to deny knowing other witnesses, which, in his view, raised serious probabilities that Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK received the same instructions.[538] He argues that Witness TA's testimony that she did not know any other witnesses despite contradictory evidence that she did should have led a reasonable trier of fact to find that the allegations of instructions to lie were more than mere "possibilities" and, as a result, grant the request for recall.[539] According to Ntahobali, the impossibility of challenging the credibility of Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK regarding these allegations of collusion and the Trial Chamber's reliance on these witnesses to find him guilty caused him serious prejudice.[540]

228. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions.

229. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber heard Witnesses QY and SJ state that they had been instructed by Tribunal interpreters to deny knowledge of other witnesses, including Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK, prior to testifying in the instant proceedings.[541] The Trial Chamber also heard from Witness SJ that she once travelled to Arusha together with Witness TK and on another occasion with Witness QJ,[542] and that while she was alone when she received the instruction from the interpreter to deny knowing the other witnesses,[543] "[i]t used to happen that we discussed this as we chatted and to ask how we were going to deny that we knew our neighbours."[544] Witness SJ explained that when she was asked by the Trial Chamber in her previous testimony about who was with her in the safe house, she answered the way she had been instructed to answer, namely that there were many witnesses she did not know who had come from Butare.[545] When she was asked, upon recall, whether she recalled the names of other witnesses who were with her when this instruction was given to her, she stated that there were many others, but that she only remembered the names of Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK.[546] On the second day of her recall testimony, however, Witness SJ insisted that she had been alone when she was instructed to deny knowing other witnesses and that she could not confirm that Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK had received the same instructions.[547]

230. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that the suspicions raised by the testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ were sufficient to warrant the recall of Witnesses QJ, TK, and TA for questioning on whether they were also instructed to deny knowing other witnesses. However, the Appeals Chamber emphasises that when an appellant challenges a discretionary decision by a trial chamber, the issue is not whether a reasonable trier of fact could have reached a different conclusion or whether the Appeals Chamber agrees with that decision, but whether the trial chamber has correctly exercised its discretion in reaching that decision. As recalled earlier, a trial chamber enjoys considerable discretion in the conduct of the proceedings before it[548] and the Appeals Chamber will only reverse a trial chamber's discretionary decision where it is found to be based on an incorrect interpretation of the governing law, based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact, or where it is so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the trial chamber's discretion.[549]

231. In the present case, the Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali to allege that the Trial Chamber's decision is both based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact and is so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the trial chamber's discretion. Given the inconclusiveness of the evidence before the Trial Chamber concerning whether Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK were also instructed to deny knowing other witnesses, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the joint Defence request was based on "possibilities".[550] Noting that Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence did not give rise to an indication of collusion between witnesses[551] but was limited in nature since it only pertained to the issue whether witnesses knew each other, the Appeals Chamber is further not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's decision denying the recall of Witnesses TK, QJ, and TA was so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of discretion.

232. In relation to Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on a decision rendered by the trial chamber seised of the Karemera et al. case, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the manner in which the discretion to manage trials is exercised by a trial chamber should be determined in accordance with the case before it; what is reasonable in one trial is not automatically reasonable in another.[552] The Appeals Chamber therefore does not find persuasive the argument that the Trial Chamber erred simply > collusion has been defined as an agreement, usually secret, between two or more persons for a fraudulent, unlawful, or deceitful purpose. If an agreement between witnesses for the purpose of untruthfully incriminating an accused were indeed established, their evidence would have to be excluded pursuant to Rule 95 of the Rules. However, a mere risk of collusion is insufficient to exclude evidence under Rule 95 of the Rules.

because another trial chamber of the Tribunal had authorised the recall of witnesses on the basis of suspicion of collusion.

233. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's challenges against the 24 February 2009 Oral Decision.

5. Conclusion

234. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali have failed to demonstrate any discernible error in the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion with respect to its 3 March 2006 Decision, 20 November 2008 Decision, 9 December 2008 Decision on Motion to Recall of Witness TK, and 24 February 2009 Oral Decision. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the relevant parts of Ground 7 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal and Ground 1.5 of Ntahobali's appeal.

H. Nsabimana's Statements (Nyiramasuhuko Grounds 4 and 19 in part; Ntahobali Ground 3.9 in part; Nsabimana Grounds 6 in part and 7)

235. In the course of the trial, the Trial Chamber admitted into evidence the transcript of a journalist's interview with Nsabimana dated 1 October 1994,[553] a letter written by Nsabimana in 1996,[554] and the transcript of a March 1996 phone interview between Prosecution Expert Witness Alison Des Forges and Nsabimana[555] as Exhibits P114, P113, and P185, respectively. The Trial Chamber also heard Witness Des Forges's testimony concerning phone conversations she had with Nsabimana in March and April 1996.[556]

236. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Nsabimana submit that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in relying on Exhibits P113, P114, and P185 as well as on the testimony of Witness Des Forges concerning Nsabimana's 1996 phone conversations to establish their criminal responsibility.[557]

237. Prior to considering the challenges with respect to each piece of evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Exhibits P114 and P185 in support of any of Nyiramasuhuko's convictions.[558] Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's submissions,[559] the Trial Judgement reflects that Exhibits P114 and P185 were relied upon in relation to Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony only to rebut Nsabimana's assertion that he did not understand the [553] Exhibit P114 (Interview with Nsabimana, dated 1 October 1994). The English translation of the document was admitted as Exhibit P114A and the French original as Exhibit P114B. The Appeals Chamber conducted its analysis on the basis of the English version as it was the version the Trial Chamber relied upon. It will refer to this version as "Exhibit P114" in this Judgement.

[554] Exhibit P113 (The Truth About the Massacres in Butare, by Nsabimana). The English version of the document initialed by Nsabimana was admitted as Exhibit P113A and the French translation as Exhibit P113B. The Appeals Chamber conducted its analysis on the basis of the English version as it was the version the Trial Chamber relied upon. It will refer to this version as "Exhibit P113" in this Judgement. Nsabimana tendered the French original of the letter, which was admitted as Exhibit D494A.
[555] Exhibit P185 (Telephone conversation with Alison Des Forges, March 1996). The French original was admitted as Exhibit P185A and the English translation as Exhibit P185B. The Appeals Chamber conducted its analysis on the basis of the English version as it was the version the Trial Chamber relied upon. It will refer to this version as "Exhibit P185" in this Judgement.

Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Exhibit P113 and Witness Des Forges's testimony on her phone conversations with Nsabimana. Similarly, Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Exhibits P113 and P114. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 759, 774, 775, 778, 780, 782; Nsabimana Notice of Appeal, paras. 64-66; Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 180-202, 303, 305. These allegations have been addressed together with Ntahobali's and Nsabimana's submissions regarding the assessment of the evidence of each relevant incident. See infra, Sections V.G, V.I.2(v), VI.D.2(a)(i). The Appeals Chamber also notes that Nyiramasuhuko further challenges the Trial Chamber's reliance on a correspondence from Nsabimana to the Prosecutor dated 20 January 1997 admitted as Exhibit D492 (Correspondence from Nsabimana to the Prosecutor of the Tribunal, Carla Del Ponte, 20 January 1997). See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 658. However, since the Trial Chamber did not rely on Exhibit D492 in support of any of its findings, the Appeals Chamber declines to address Nyiramasuhuko's contention in relation to this particular exhibit.

inflammatory nature of the speeches made during the ceremony.[560] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber declines to address Nyiramasuhuko's contentions as they relate to Exhibits P114 and P185 and will only examine her claim concerning Witness Des Forges's testimony about phone conversations the witness had with Nsabimana.

1. Exhibits P113 and P114

238. During Witness Des Forges's testimony on 8 June 2004, the Trial Chamber admitted into evidence Exhibit P113, a letter written by Nsabimana entitled "The Truth about the Massacres in Butare",[561] which Nsabimana sent to Witness Des Forges after telephone conversations between the two in March and April 1996.[562] The Trial Chamber also admitted as Exhibit P114, the transcript of a journalist's interview of Nsabimana dated 1 October 1994.[563] In admitting Exhibits P113 and P114, the Trial Chamber observed that Witness Des Forges's expert report relied upon these documents and determined that they could be admitted through her.[564] During his examination-in-chief, Nsabimana affirmed that Exhibit P113 was the English version of a letter he wrote in French and sent to Witness Des Forges in both French and English.[565] Nsabimana explained that he was not the one who communicated Exhibit P114 to Alison Des Forges, but that he did not object to the introduction of the document in order not to hinder the progress of the proceedings and because what was contained in the document was not 100 percent different from his own way of seeing things or his own writing on certain issues.[566]

239. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted the objections raised by Nsabimana that Exhibits P113 and P114 were accepted only for the purpose of "establishing the basis for Des Forges'[s] opinions" and "contradictions, if necessary".[567] The Trial Chamber rejected these contentions, noting that its deliberations on the admission of Exhibits P113 and P114 necessarily "implicate[d] the weight and probative value" to be attributed to these exhibits.[568] The Trial Chamber further recalled that "Nsabimana acknowledged that Prosecution Exhibit P113 was his own, including all that it entails, but that he preferred to rely on the French version of the document introduced as Defence Exhibit 494" and that "Nsabimana stated that Prosecution Exhibit P114 reflected his own views."[569] The Trial Chamber further stated that, "[b]ased upon Nsabimana's acknowledgement that these documents were authentic", it would evaluate the weight and probative value of Exhibits P113 and P114 in light of the other evidence, including the testimonies of Witness Des Forges and Nsabimana about these exhibits.[570]

240. The Trial Chamber relied on Exhibit P113 in finding Ntahobali criminally liable for killings perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[571] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that Exhibit P113 corroborated other evidence that Tutsis were beaten, raped, and killed at the roadblock[572] as well as additional evidence that Ntahobali manned the roadblock and utilised it to abduct and kill Tutsis.[573] The Trial Chamber also relied on Exhibits P113 and P114 in finding that Nsabimana was aware of the night-time attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office, posted gendarmes or soldiers at the prefectoral office sometime between 5 and 15 June 1994, and was aware of a plan to kill Tutsis and of the genocidal intent of those who perpetrated crimes at this office.[574]

241. Nsabimana and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting and relying on Exhibits P113 and P114 to establish their criminal responsibility.[575] In particular, Nsabimana contends that the Trial Chamber violated his right to a fair trial in failing to consider whether the admission of these documents would infringe his fair trial rights, in particular his right to remain silent,[576] and in failing to anticipate that their admission would cause him prejudice.[577]

The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that Nsabimana was not convicted in relation to this event and that the Trial Chamber did not rely on its finding about Nsabimana's understanding of the nature of Sindikubwabo's speech in support of any of Nsabimana's convictions. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's undeveloped allegation of error concerning Exhibit P114. By contrast, Nsabimana challenges the use of both Exhibits P113 and P114 and developed submissions in respect of both exhibits in his appeal brief.
[576] Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 276, 281-288, 298-300, 304, 306. Nsabimana refers in particular to Articles 19(1), 20(4)(a), and 20(4)(g) of the Statute and to Rules 85, 89(B) and (D), and 95 of the Rules. See ibid., paras. 298, 302, 304;

He acknowledges that he did not object to the admission of the documents, but stresses that he did not know at the time that they could be used against him.[578]

242. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber violated Rule 89(C) of the Rules by admitting Exhibit P113 given the fact that it was a statement by a co-accused and "double hearsay" evidence.[579] In Ntahobali's view, statements of a co-accused posterior to the 1994 events lack sufficient reliability and probative value given the obvious incentive of the author to limit his responsibility while accusing his co-accused.[580] He also asserts that its "nature of double-hearsay" deprived the statement of any probative value.[581] Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber should have refused to admit Exhibit P113 into evidence as the probative value of the statement was outweighed by the prejudice he suffered.[582]

243. Nsabimana also contends that it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber to consider that the document admitted as Exhibit P114, a document which was neither signed nor initialed by him and of which Witness Des Forges did not disclose the origin, was his writing.[583] He argues that the fact that he said that the views in the document did not differ completely from his own views did not make him the author of the document and did not allow the Trial Chamber to attribute extracts from the document to him.[584]

244. In addition, Ntahobali and Nsabimana submit that the Trial Chamber erred in using Exhibits P113 and P114 in convicting them given that the Trial Chamber: (i) admitted these exhibits for the limited purpose of identifying one of the sources relied upon by Witness Des Forges in formulating her expert opinions and of establishing contradictions;[585] and (ii) stated that an accused's writing or statement could not be considered as proof of its content but only in the evaluation of the credibility of his testimony.[586] Nsabimana submits that, in contravention of well-established jurisprudence that requires trial chambers to specify the purpose for admission of a statement, the Trial Chamber failed to indicate that the documents could be used for proof of their contents.[587] Ntahobali stresses that, because he relied on the Trial Chamber's representations that Exhibit P113 would only be admitted as a source relied upon by the expert witness or to evaluate the credibility of his testimony, he did not defend against its content, as he did not understand that it would be used for the purpose of establishing facts in support of his guilt.[588] In the same vein, Nsabimana argues that he was prejudiced as, had he known that Exhibits P113 and P114 could be relied upon by the Trial Chamber as it did, he would have prepared an adequate defence.[589] Ntahobali adds that, to the extent Exhibit P113 was used to support Witness Des Forges's testimony, it could not be used to assess the acts and conduct of the co-Accused given Witness Des Forges's status as an expert witness.[590]

245. The Prosecution responds that neither Ntahobali nor Nsabimana demonstrates that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in admitting Exhibits P113 and P114.[591] According to it, both exhibits were properly admitted under Rule 89(C) of the Rules.[592] As regards Exhibit P114 in particular, the Prosecution emphasises that Nsabimana stated that the document reflected his own views, that it could be used, and that he "ha[d] nothing against it".[593] It also argues that Nsabimana never questioned its admissibility or authenticity.[594]

246. The Prosecution further responds that the Trial Chamber's rulings reflect that Exhibits P113 and P114 were not admitted for the restricted purpose of assessing credibility and that the Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion in admitting the documents.[595] It argues that the 23 November 2006 Oral Decision relied upon by Nsabimana was not a general statement of law that all written statements by accused persons would be dealt with in a particular manner, but rather referred specifically to the use of an interview Nsabimana gave to Tribunal investigators which was not presented during the Prosecution case-in-chief.[596] In the Prosecution's view, Exhibits P113 and

P114 were not admitted as prior statements and it was correct for the Trial Chamber to ascribe to them weight and probative value, given that Nsabimana accepted their contents as his own.[597]

247. Nsabimana replies that, contrary to the Prosecution's submissions, he never stated or accepted that the content of Exhibits P113 and P114 reflected the truth and that merely stating that Exhibit P114 could be used does not mean that he conceded that the document was his or approved its content.[598] He also maintains that the 23 November 2006 Oral Decision should have applied to Exhibits P113 and P114 and stresses that these exhibits were not adduced by the Prosecution for the proof of their contents.[599] He reiterates that he did not have any interest in objecting to the admissibility of Exhibits P113 and P114 since he assumed that they were admitted only to support Witness Des Forges's expert opinion.[600]

248. The Appeals Chamber notes that, although his co-accused objected to the admission of Exhibits P113 and P114 partly because Exhibit P114 was unsigned and Exhibit P113 was not tendered by him, Nsabimana did not object to their admission and did not raise any allegation of violation of his right against self-incrimination or any other fair trial right when the documents were admitted.[601] Nsabimana did not raise any claim of this sort when questioned on the exhibits during cross-examination or in his closing submissions.[602] To the contrary, he stated that he accepted Exhibit P113, which he had signed, and made it clear that he had "nothing against" Exhibit P114 and that it could be used in cross-examination.[603] The record also reflects that Nsabimana is the one who communicated Exhibit P113 to the Prosecution in 1997 "to help the ICTR establish the truth"[604] and that Nsabimana's counsel requested the admission of the original French version of Exhibit P113, arguing that there was no reason not to admit this document written by Nsabimana.[605] The Appeals Chamber does not consider that Nsabimana's purported incomprehension that Exhibits P113 and P114 could be used against him prevented him from raising at trial any violation of his fair trial rights when the documents were admitted, regardless of the weight and probative value subsequently attributed to them by the Trial Chamber. Recalling that a "matter must be raised with the court at the time the problem is perceived in order to enable the problem to be remedied",[606] the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nsabimana's submissions in this respect.

249. As to Ntahobali's contention that Exhibit P113 lacked sufficient probative value to be admitted under Rule 89(C) of the Rules, the Appeals Chambers considers that the mere fact that a statement is made by a co-accused does not ipso facto render the document's contents so unreliable that it could not be admitted under Rule 89(C) of the Rules.[607] Likewise, Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting Exhibit P113 because it was double-hearsay has no merit, as the Rules do not prohibit the admission of hearsay evidence as long as it is of probative value.[608] Ntahobali does not show that Exhibit P113 was so lacking in terms of indicia of reliability that it lacked probative value and was therefore inadmissible. He also fails to substantiate his claim that the probative value of the statement was outweighed by the prejudice he allegedly suffered. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali was able to cross-examine Nsabimana, who was the author of the statement.[609] Thus, any prejudice that might have resulted from admitting an out-of-court statement by a co-accused was effectively remedied.

250. Regarding Nsabimana's challenge to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the document admitted as Exhibit P114 as his own writing, the Appeals Chamber observes that the exhibit is an unsigned document entitled "Interview with Sylvain Nsabimana" dated 1 October 1994, which does not contain information about the circumstances of the interview or the person who conducted the interview or who transcribed it. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness Des Forges testified that she had received a copy of Exhibit P114 from Nsabimana.[610] During his cross-examination, Nsabimana explained that:

> When Ms. Des Forges tendered this document interview with Sylvain Nsabimana of the 1st of October l994, the French version, like the English here, I did not want to challenge this document simply not to hinder the advance that the Chamber needs to make in these proceedings, but I don't know who gave this document to Ms. Des Forges. If you are interested, I can tell you roughly how she had this document from what I imagine, but I am not the one who gave this document to Ms. Des Forges. I did not oppose it simply because what is said in here is not a hundred percent different from my thinking, my view, and it is [not] different from what I wrote in some instances, > otherwise, apart from this document which is in English and even the one in French, I have the same observations […].[611]

251. When questioned about specific passages of Exhibit P114 in cross-examination, Nsabimana confirmed in one instance that what was written was exact,[612] in two others that it was not,[613] that it was "very probable" that he had said particular words contained in the document to someone,[614] or referred to his examination-in-chief.[615] More importantly, Nsabimana also expressly stated that the words contained in Exhibit P114 were not necessarily his and insisted that he could not accept the statements in the document as his and was referring to his testimony for his views on the questions that were asked to him.[616] It is in this context that Nsabimana stated that the exhibit could be used and that he had "nothing against it."[617] A careful review of the transcripts, together with the video-recording, of the relevant parts of Nsabimana's testimony reflects that Nsabimana unambiguously denied authorship of Exhibit P114 and insisted that the views attributed to him in the document were not necessarily his as he had never seen the document before and could not be sure it was a proper transcription of the interview he had given.[618] When specifically asked if he

Having examined the original video-recording of Nsabimana's testimony, the Appeals Chamber notes that some aspects of his testimony were not fully or accurately transcribed in the French or English transcripts. The Appeals Chamber has referred to the version of the transcripts that accurately transcribed Nsabimana's live testimony and has deliberately omitted specific aspects of the transcripts when neither the English nor the French version accurately reflected the live testimony. See, in particular, video-recording of Nsabimana's testimony of 22 November 2006, at 20:00-23:00.

I think those are the two people that I might have talked, and I think they are the ones who – they are the only ones whom I would have given a document, if they had it on video. This is not a transcription. I never had a video. I never had a transcript. And I've also been in contact with Ken Barrow and Stanley, but I never had this document. But I think it came from those people, and they are the ones who might have sent it to Madam Des Forges, that is the videocassette, and she's the one who might have put everything together to produce this document. But at the time that Madam Des Forges was producing this agreed with the content of Exhibit P114, in particular that he was aware of a plan to exterminate the Tutsis, he responded that he did not.[619]

252. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Nsabimana stated that Exhibit P114 "reflected his own views" or "contained a faithful reflection of what he said during the interview"[620] and acknowledged that the document was "authentic".[621] The Trial Chamber also erred in relying on the exhibit as proof of Nsabimana's views, especially in finding that Nsabimana was aware of the plan to exterminate Tutsis when Nsabimana expressly testified to the contrary.[622] The Appeals Chamber will discuss the impact of this finding when examining Nsabimana's submissions on his responsibility for aiding and abetting by omission crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office in relation to which the Trial Chamber relied upon Exhibit P114.[623] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers it unnecessary to discuss Nsabimana's remaining arguments regarding Exhibit P114 summarised above.

253. Turning to Ntahobali's and Nsabimana's arguments that the Trial Chamber's use of Exhibit P113 was inconsistent with its own decisions, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in admitting Exhibit P113 during Witness Des Forges's testimony, the Trial Chamber noted that it was relevant and probative of her expert opinion and a source relied upon in her expert report.[624] However, the Trial Chamber's oral decision to admit the statement in no way reflects that the Trial Chamber limited its use to supporting Witness Des Forges's expert opinion. Indeed, although Exhibit P113 was admitted through Witness Des Forges, the Trial Chamber's rulings reflect that it was not admitted as expert opinion evidence.[625] Ntahobali's argument that Exhibit P113 was used beyond the limitations imposed on expert evidence is therefore without merit.

254. The Appeals Chamber also notes that, contrary to Ntahobali's and Nsabimana's submissions, the Trial Chamber did not state that co-accused's statements shall only be used for the purposes of assessing the credibility of their testimonies. Ntahobali and Nsabimana advance their arguments by referring to oral rulings and decisions of the Trial Chamber which reflect the Trial

Chamber's discretionary decision to limit the use of statements from the co-Accused to prosecutorial authorities for impeachment purposes and could not reasonably be interpreted as applying to all statements by the co-Accused.[626] It also bears noting that, when Nsabimana's counsel sought the admission of Exhibit D494, the French original of Exhibit P113, the Trial Chamber did not accept the arguments that Exhibit P113 had not been admitted for the purpose of establishing the truth of its contents.[627]

255. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali and Nsabimana have failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting or placing undue reliance on Exhibit P113. Although the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting Exhibit P114, it finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering Exhibit P114 as reflecting Nsabimana's views and in placing undue reliance on it as a result.

2. Exhibit P185

256. During the cross-examination of Nsabimana, the Prosecution tendered a French transcript of a March 1996 phone interview between Witness Des Forges and Nsabimana that the Trial Chamber admitted as Exhibit P185.[628] Nsabimana authenticated the document when it was admitted.[629] As indicated in the Trial Judgement, Exhibit P185 reflects that Nsabimana saw a Peugeot 504 that belonged to someone "he knew".[630] Exhibit P185 further reflects that Nsabimana learned that the person that he saw in the vehicle was named "Shalom".[631]

257. The Trial Chamber found Ntahobali responsible for aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family based, in part, on evidence that Ntahobali was in possession of Rwamukwaya's Peugeot 504 around the time the members of the Rwamukwaya family were killed.[632] In assessing this evidence, the Trial Chamber observed that, during his testimony, Nsabimana agreed that the owner of the Peugeot 504 he referred to in Exhibit P185 was Rwamukwaya.[633] The Trial Chamber further observed that, contrary to what was contained in Exhibit P185, Nsabimana testified that he saw Ntahobali driving a different Peugeot 504.[634] The Trial Chamber noted that Nsabimana's testimony departed from Exhibit P185, expressed concern that his testimony was intended to protect Ntahobali, and concluded that, in light of other consistent evidence, "the Peugeot 504 in which Nsabimana saw Ntahobali is the one belonging to Rwamukwaya".[635]

258. Similar to his submissions concerning Exhibit P113, Ntahobali argues that statements of co-accused posterior to the events lack sufficient probative value and that Exhibit P185 should not have been admitted as it constitutes double-hearsay.[636] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber improperly used Exhibit P185 for purposes beyond evaluating the credibility of its author.[637] He adds that the Trial Chamber erred when it preferred the account in Exhibit P185, which it had elsewhere stated it would view with caution, over Nsabimana's testimony that contradicted Exhibit P185.[638]

259. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion in admitting and using Exhibit P185.[639]

260. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that posterior statements of co-accused and hearsay evidence are not per se barred from admission under Rule 89 of the Rules because of their alleged intrinsic lack of probative value.[640] Ntahobali's arguments in this respect are therefore rejected.[641]

261. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its use of Exhibit P185. Contrary to his assertion, the Trial Judgement indicates that the Trial Chamber limited the use of Exhibit P185 to the purposes of impeachment, relying only on testimonial evidence to establish Ntahobali's possession of Rwamukwaya's vehicle.[642]

[642] Trial Judgement, para. 3219. Noting the discrepancy with Exhibit P185, the Trial Chamber decided to disregard the testimony of Nsabimana that he did not see Ntahobali in Rwamukwaya's Peugeot 504 and instead relied on the consistent testimony of several witnesses who gave evidence that Ntahobali was in possession of Rwamukwaya's

262. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed an error in relation to Exhibit P185.

3. 1996 Telephone Conversations

263. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing Witness TA's evidence concerning an attack at the Butare Prefecture Office that occurred in mid-May 1994, the Trial Chamber noted that the statement, which Nsabimana gave to Witness Des Forges during a telephone conversation in 1996, that "soldiers and others were coming to take away women to rape them and other people were being selected to be killed"[643] was "consistent" with the testimony of Witness TA.[644] When considering the number of refugees abducted and killed from the prefectoral office, it noted that "Des Forges testified that Nsabimana told her he did not know how many refugees were taken away from the [Butare Prefecture Office], but that he did know that this was happening."[645] The Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali criminally responsible for ordering the killings of Tutsi refugees taken from the prefectoral office during this specific attack and Ntahobali responsible for raping Witness TA during the attack.[646]

264. Nyiramasuhuko submits that, by relying on Witness Des Forges's testimony about Nsabimana's statement during their 1996 telephone conversations to corroborate Witness TA's testimony, the Trial Chamber contradicted its own position that prior statements from co-Accused would be admitted for the sole purpose of testing the credibility of the witness.[647] She argues that this aspect of Witness Des Forges's testimony should not have been admitted as "[t]his kind of extrajudicial statement, made after the fact and overwhelmingly against an accused to limit his own responsibility, is inadmissible against co-accused at common law".[648] Ntahobali asserts that the Trial Chamber should not have admitted Witness Des Forges's testimony about Nsabimana's statements during her 1996 telephone conversations with him as it was hearsay and lacked sufficient probative value.[649]

265. The Prosecution did not respond to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's arguments concerning this aspect of Witness Des Forges's testimony.

266. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments fail to appreciate that Witness Des Forges's testimony on Nsabimana's oral statements constitutes testimonial evidence and is not akin to a prior statement given by an accused outside a courtroom. As such, the impugned aspect of Witness Des Forges's testimony is not subject to any rules the Trial Chamber may have adopted regarding accused's prior statements or the jurisprudence that Nyiramasuhuko cites in support of her claim. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber's oral ruling upon which Nyiramasuhuko relies in support of her claim was confined to the use of statements given by a co-accused to Tribunal investigators.[650] Nyiramasuhuko's arguments are therefore rejected.

267. Turning to Ntahobali's contention, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness Des Forges was allowed to testify as an expert in history and the human rights situation in Rwanda up to and including the events of 1994.[651] The Appeals Chamber recalls that expert witnesses are ordinarily afforded significant latitude to offer opinions within their expertise and that their views need not be based upon first-hand knowledge or experience.[652] It is also settled jurisprudence that experts are allowed to rely on a variety of sources in support of their conclusions and that this may include hearsay.[653] Ntahobali's argument that the impugned aspect of Witness Des Forges's testimony should have been excluded because it was hearsay is therefore without merit. Ntahobali's unsubstantiated claim that it lacked probative value is likewise rejected.

268. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali have not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting Witness Des Forges's testimony concerning her 1996 telephone conversations with Nsabimana or in placing undue reliance on this aspect of Witness Des Forges's testimony.

4. Conclusion

269. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the relevant parts of Grounds 4 and 19 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal, Ground 3.9 of Ntahobali's appeal, and the part of Ground 7 of Nsabimana's appeal related to Exhibit P113. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering Exhibit P114 as reflecting Nsabimana's views and in placing undue reliance on it as a result. The impact of this finding will be discussed in Section VI.D.2 below.

I. Participation of a Former Prosecution Legal Officer in the Preparation of the Trial Judgement (Ntahobali Ground 1.8; Ndayambaje Ground 13)

270. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that, on reviewing the procedural history of the case in July 2009, it became aware that Chile Eboe-Osuji ("Eboe-Osuji"), the then Chief of the Chambers Support Section at the Tribunal, had participated in the present case as an employee of the Office of the Prosecutor in 1998 and 1999.[654] Considering the issue proprio motu, the Trial Chamber stated that:

> As an immediate precautionary measure, and before Mr. Eboe-Osuji had participated in any deliberations relating to the guilt or innocence of any of the various Accused, the Chamber determined he would preliminarily not be involved in the judgement drafting process. After reviewing relevant case law, the Trial Chamber concluded that it is unclear whether Mr. Eboe-Osuji's participation would raise a conflict of interest which would impact on the fair trial rights of the various Accused. However, out of an abundance of caution and intent on preserving both justice and the appearance of justice, the Chamber determined in November 2009 that Mr. Eboe-Osuji's involvement from the judgement drafting process would be excluded.[655]

271. Ntahobali and Ndayambaje submit that Eboe-Osuji's participation in the preparation of the Trial Judgement undoubtedly affects their right to a fair trial.[656] Specifically, Ntahobali asserts that Eboe-Osuji's participation in the work of the Trial Chamber in this case prior to his exclusion in November 2009 constitutes a serious conflict of interest or, at least, an appearance of conflict of interest.[657] He adds that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to take precautionary measures when Eboe-Osuji was hired as the Chief of the Chambers Support Section to avoid this situation; (ii) not providing sufficient details about the extent of Eboe-Osuji's participation in the work of the Trial Chamber; and (iii) allowing the prejudice to persist even though it became aware of the situation in July 2009.[658] Ndayambaje submits that, as a party to the proceedings, Eboe-Osuji should not have participated in the drafting of the Trial Judgement and that there is a "glaring absence of a semblance of justice".[659] He "leaves it to the Appeals Chamber to demand further information about the actual involvement of Eboe-Osuji in the Chamber's deliberations".[660] As a relief, Ntahobali [657] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 54.

[658] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 55. Ntahobali explained that he could not develop Ground 1.8 in his appeal brief due to the word limit imposed for this brief. Likewise, Ndayambaje did not develop further arguments in his appeal brief, simply referring to his notice of appeal. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 128; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 293. Based on the language used in their appeal briefs, the Appeals Chamber considers that neither Ntahobali nor Ndayambaje has abandoned their respective ground of appeal and is of the view that the arguments Ntahobali and Ndayambaje developed in their notices of appeal in support of their allegations of error should be addressed as a matter of fairness.

requests a stay of the proceedings or, alternatively, any other reasonable remedy.[661] Ndayambaje requests the Appeals Chamber to reverse all the findings of guilt entered against him.[662]

272. The Prosecution did not respond to these submissions.[663]

273. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that there is a presumption of impartiality which attaches to the judges of the Tribunal and which cannot be easily rebutted.[664] It also emphasises that legal officers assisting judges at the Tribunal are not subject to the same standards of impartiality as the judges of the Tribunal,[665] and that judicial decision-making is the sole purview of the judges.[666] Legal officers merely provide assistance to the judges in legal research and preparing draft decisions, judgements, opinions, and orders in conformity with the instructions given to them by the judges.[667]

274. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali and Ndayambaje do not point to any element which may suggest that Eboe-Osuji participated in the judicial decision-making process or may have exercised any undue influence on this process. The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber excluded Eboe-Osuji from participating in any deliberations relating to the guilt or innocence of the co-Accused, and that he was excluded from all aspects of the Trial Judgement drafting process from July 2009.[668] Ntahobali and Ndayambaje do not provide support for the assertion that the impartiality or appearance of impartiality of the judicial-making process and, consequently, their fair trial rights, may have been affected by Eboe-Osuji's limited involvement in this case prior to July 2009.

275. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 1.8 of Ntahobali's appeal and Ground 13 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

J. Allegations of False Testimony and Contempt (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 7 in part; Ntahobali Grounds 1.3 and 3.12; Kanyabashi Ground 3.11)

276. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi submit that the Trial Chamber erred in relation to the allegations of false testimonies by Prosecution Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ.[669]

1. Procedural Background

277. Witness QA testified at trial in March 2004 and, upon Kanyabashi's request, was recalled for further cross-examination in October 2008 on specific inconsistencies within his testimony and statements made in Rwanda.[670] While being further cross-examined, Witness QA admitted to having lied during his testimony in 2004 about statements made by Kanyabashi and Nsabimana in 1994 and that, "[f]or the most part, [his] testimony was […] lies".[671] On 7 November 2008, the Trial Chamber found that there were strong grounds to believe that Witness QA may have willingly and knowingly given false testimony with the intent to mislead it.[672] As a result, the Trial Chamber directed the Registrar to appoint an independent amicus curiae to investigate the allegations of Witness QA's false testimony pursuant to Rule 91(B) of the Rules as well as the allegations of intimidation and bribery related to the witness's appearances before it pursuant to Rule 77 of the Rules, and to report back to it as soon as practicable.[673]

278. Witness SJ testified at trial in May and June 2002,[674] and Witness QY in March 2003 and April 2006.[675] On 3 December 2008, upon Ntahobali's request, the Trial Chamber ordered the recall of both witnesses regarding possible lies in their testimonies and the circumstances surrounding such lies.[676] Upon their recall in February 2009, Witnesses QY and SJ testified that, upon instruction from Prosecution staff, they had falsely denied knowing certain Prosecution witnesses [674] Witness SJ testified from 28 to 30 May 2002 and from 3 to 5 June 2002.

[675] Witness QY testified on 19, 20 and from 24 to 26 March 2003 as well as on 10 April 2006.
[676] 3 December 2008 Decision, paras. 24, 26, p. 7. Ntahobali sought the recall of Witnesses QY and SJ following their testimonies in the trial of Munyaneza held in Canada in April 2007 where, according to him, they admitted knowing several Prosecution witnesses they had denied knowing when testifying in this case. See ibid., para. 3.

when they in fact knew them.[677] On 19 March 2009, the Trial Chamber found that there were strong grounds to believe that Witnesses QY and SJ may have knowingly and wilfully provided false testimonies with the intent to mislead it.[678] The Trial Chamber ordered the Registrar to appoint an independent amicus curiae to investigate the allegations of false testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ pursuant to Rule 91(B) of the Rules and coercion by "certain staff of this Tribunal" with respect to these witnesses' testimonies pursuant to Rule 77 of the Rules, and to report back to it as soon as practicable.[679]

279. On 2 July 2009, the amicus curiae designated by the Registrar ("First Amicus Curiae") filed confidentially and ex parte his report on the result of his investigations into the allegations concerning Witnesses QA's, QY's, and SJ's testimonies.[680] On 30 October 2009, noting multiple omissions in the First Amicus Curiae Report, including a failure to conduct and/or report on some of the investigations it had requested, the Trial Chamber directed the Registrar to appoint a new amicus curiae to investigate the allegations outlined in its prior decisions and to report back to it.[681] On 4 March 2010, the Trial Chamber denied motions by Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Kanyabashi to transmit the First Amicus Curiae Report to the parties.[682]

280. The second amicus curiae designated by the Registrar ("Second Amicus Curiae") filed confidentially and ex parte his report on the investigations he conducted into the allegations concerning Witness QA's testimony on 25 March 2010 and his report concerning the allegations related to the testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ on 18 May 2010.[683]

The ex parte status of the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ was lifted by the Trial Chamber on 2 September 2011, whereas the ex parte status of the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA was lifted by the Appeals Chamber on 18 March 2013. See infra, para. 288.

281. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that "since their testimony in the present case, Prosecution Witnesses QA, QY and SJ ha[d] become the subject of on-going investigations before the Tribunal for false testimony and contempt of court."[684] The Trial Chamber stated that without prejudice to any formal proceedings for false testimony and contempt which may come before the Tribunal, it will "treat these witnesses' testimony with added caution."[685]

282. On 2 September 2011, after the delivery of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber issued a decision in which it found that sufficient grounds existed to believe that Witness QA knowingly and wilfully gave false testimony in this case, issued an order in lieu of an indictment against Witness QA, and directed the Registry to appoint a new amicus curiae to prosecute the matter.[686] The same day, the Trial Chamber issued a second decision, in which it found that, despite evidence that Witnesses SJ and QY falsely denied knowing other Prosecution witnesses in their 2002 and 2003 testimonies, it would not be efficient or effective to initiate proceedings against them.[687] The Trial Chamber further considered that there was no prima facie case of contempt against any Prosecution staff and insufficient information to justify initiating proceedings against the Prosecution counsel who had prepared Witnesses QY and SJ for trial.[688] In this decision, the Trial Chamber considered that, "in the interests of transparency", the First A*micus Curiae* Report and the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ should be released to the parties.[689]

283. On 18 March 2013, the Appeals Chamber granted Kanyabashi's request to lift the ex parte status of the Second A*micus Curiae* Report Concerning Witness QA in the interests of justice and transparency, and directed the Registry to disclose it to the parties without delay.[690]

284. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi submit that the Trial Chamber violated their right to a fair trial in the context of the false testimonies of Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ.[691]

They contend that the Trial Chamber erred in failing: (i) to communicate the First Amicus Curiae Report and the Second Amicus Curiae Reports (collectively "Amici Curiae Reports") before the delivery of the Trial Judgement; (ii) to consider the impact of Amici Curiae Reports on the credibility of the Prosecution evidence; and (iii) to take into account that the acts of the Prosecution as revealed in the Amici Curiae Reports affected the fairness of the proceedings.[692] In addition to their arguments related to the Amici Curiae Reports, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali also argue that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to exclude the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ as a result of their lies or, in the alternative, to apply the requisite caution in assessing both their testimonies and the evidence of the witnesses who were also allegedly instructed to lie.[693]

285. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali request the Appeals Chamber to order a stay of proceedings, or, in the alternative, to exclude or treat with appropriate caution the testimony of Witnesses QY and SJ as well as the testimonies of all witnesses implicated by Witnesses QY and SJ.[694] Kanyabashi requests the reversal of his conviction for public and direct incitement to commit genocide.[695]

286. The Appeals Chamber will first address the contentions related to the Amici Curiae Reports before turning to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's additional submissions.

In their respective notices of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali also contended that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to issue a decision on whether to initiate false testimony proceedings against Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ prior to the delivery of the Trial Judgement. Ntahobali further argued that the Trial Chamber erred by merely noting in the 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ that there was insufficient evidence from the First Amicus Curiae Report and the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ to initiate false testimony proceedings against the two witnesses. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 1.33; Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 22, 23. However, neither Nyiramasuhuko nor Ntahobali reiterated or substantiated these allegations in their appeal briefs. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber rejects them without further consideration.

2. Amici Curiae Reports

(a) Communication of the Amici Curiae Reports

287. As noted above, the Trial Chamber denied Ntahobali's, Nyiramasuhuko's, and Kanyabashi's requests for transmission of the First A*micus Curiae* Report to the parties on 4 March 2010.[696] In its decision, the Trial Chamber stated that the reports were not commissioned to evaluate the credibility of Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ but to guide it in addressing conduct that interfered with its administration of justice.[697] After noting that the parties had ample opportunity to raise issues of credibility regarding the testimonies of these witnesses and to cross-examine them, the Trial Chamber found that the parties had an adequate opportunity to direct the Chamber's attention to any issues of importance and concluded that the First Amicus Curiae Report did not affect the co-Accused's fair trial rights and that its non-disclosure did not prejudice them.[698] It further observed that it had not yet received the report from the Second Amicus Curiae and that, upon receipt and review of it and after making its decision thereon, it may consider whether to disclose both reports to the parties.[699] The Trial Chamber pronounced the Trial Judgement on 24 June 2011 and issued it in writing on 14 July 2011.[700]

288. In September 2011, the Trial Chamber decided that the First Amicus Curiae Report and the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ should be released to the parties in the interests of transparency.[701] The Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA was communicated to the parties pursuant to the Appeals Chamber's decision of 18 March 2013.[702]

289. There is no reference to the Amici Curiae Reports in the Trial Judgement.[703]

290. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi submit that the Trial Chamber erred in law in refusing or failing to communicate the Amici Curiae Reports to them prior to the delivery of the Trial Judgement.[704] They contend that, by doing so, the Trial Chamber deprived them of the Nyiramasuhuko also contends that the Trial Chamber erred by designating a second amicus curiae proprio motu without notifying the parties. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 245. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali also argue that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that the investigations against Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ were "on-going", given that the investigations were completed by May 2010.

opportunity to raise issues related to the contents of the Amici Curiae Reports which would have had a significant impact on the trial, rendering the trial unfair.[705]

291. Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi submit that the First Amicus Curiae Report and the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ contain highly relevant information concerning the credibility of Witnesses QY and SJ and other Prosecution witnesses that should reasonably have led to the exclusion of their evidence, establish the existence of collusion between Prosecution witnesses, and confirm that acts of members of the Prosecution seriously interfered with the administration of justice, vitiating the entire proceedings.[706] Ntahobali argues that these reports confirm and establish that, on several occasions, members of the Prosecution instructed witnesses to lie to the Trial Chamber.[707]

292. Kanyabashi also submits that the Trial Chamber's failure to disclose the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA rendered his trial unfair as the report supported his case that the testimonies against him were forged.[708] He contends that this report was crucial to the credibility assessment of Prosecution Witness QI and the allegations of incitement by megaphone[709] as it further shows the involvement of Witness QI's former employer in the fabrication of evidence against him.[710] Kanyabashi submits that, had he been provided with the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA at trial, he would have relied on it in his closing arguments and requested the exclusion of Witness QI's evidence.[711]

293. The Prosecution responds that nothing in the Statute or the Rules obliges chambers to release amicus curiae reports to the parties.[712] It also submits that "the role of the Amicus Curiae was to investigate allegations of contempt and false testimony as an agent of the Tribunal and its judges; he was independent vis-[à]-vis the Parties."[713] The Prosecution further responds that: (i) the

First Amicus Curiae Report cannot be relied upon given its multiple defects and the fact that it was rejected by the Trial Chamber;[714] (ii) the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ does not establish that witnesses were given specific instructions to lie and the Trial Chamber was correct in concluding that the false testimony of Witnesses QY and SJ had a minimal effect on the outcome of this case;[715] and (iii) the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA does not contain any information that was not already available to Kanyabashi through Witness QA's testimony of October 2008.[716] It adds that the Amici Curiae Reports do not implicate members of the Prosecution interfering with the administration of justice and that Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's arguments in this respect misrepresent the evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings.[717]

294. Ntahobali replies that, even if there is nothing in the Statute or the Rules that obliged the Trial Chamber to disclose the reports to the parties to the main proceedings, the Trial Chamber had the obligation to ensure that the co-Accused's rights were respected.[718]

295. It is not disputed by the parties that nothing in the Statute or the Rules imposes the mandatory communication to the parties to the main proceedings of an amicus curiae report requested pursuant to Rules 77(C)(ii) or 91(B)(ii) of the Rules.[719] The decision to communicate an amicus curiae report filed before the trial chamber pursuant to Rules 77 or 91 of the Rules to the parties of the main proceedings therefore falls within the discretion of the trial chamber. This discretion must be exercised consistently with Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute, which require trial chambers to ensure that trials are fair and expeditious.[720] In order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, the appealing party must demonstrate that the trial chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party.[721] The Appeals Chamber will only reverse a trial chamber's discretionary decision where it is found to be based on an incorrect interpretation of the governing law, based on a patently incorrect conclusion of fact, or where it is so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of the trial chamber's discretion.[722]

296. The Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi to argue that, because it deprived them of the opportunity to raise arguments at trial in relation to the Amici Curiae Reports on matters that had a significant impact on the case, the Trial Chamber's failure to communicate the reports was so unfair or unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of its discretion. The Appeals Chamber will first discuss the parties' submission concerning the communication of the First Amicus Curiae Report, before addressing those relating to the communication of the Second Amicus Curiae Reports.

(i) First Amicus Curiae Report

297. The Appeals Chamber observes that none of the appellants develops arguments challenging the Trial Chamber's finding that the parties had ample opportunity to raise issues of credibility regarding the testimonies of Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ and to cross-examine them at trial.[723] The Trial Chamber relied on this finding to conclude that the non-disclosure of the First Amicus Curiae Report did not affect the fair trial rights of the co-Accused and did not prejudice them.[724] Instead, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali assert that there was information in the report which was not known to them at the time of the delivery of the Trial Judgement, and which would have impacted the credibility assessment of several witnesses and shows that the fairness of the trial was vitiated.[725]

298. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali, however, fail to appreciate that the First Amicus Curiae Report was found to be defective, notably because the First Amicus Curiae "did not conduct and/or did not report" on some of the investigations requested by the Trial Chamber, "conducted insufficient investigations into the false testimony of Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ before the Tribunal", and "submitted a report containing conclusions based on his opinion, rather than the results of an investigation."[726] As a result, the Trial Chamber appointed a new amicus curiae to "conduct fresh investigations".[727] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that, assuming arguendo that the First Amicus Curiae Report contains information that was not known by the parties at trial, it was unfair or unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to decline to communicate a report which was found to suffer from such serious defects, especially where the parties had ample opportunity to raise issues of credibility regarding the testimonies of the witnesses under investigation.[728] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion by not communicating the First Amicus Curiae Report before the delivery of the Trial Judgement.

(ii) Second Amicus Curiae Reports

299. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Second Amicus Curiae Reports contain information about Prosecution witnesses who testified in this case that may have been relevant to the assessment of their credibility. Unlike the First Amicus Curiae Report, the Second Amicus Curiae Reports were not found by the Trial Chamber to suffer defects that required that new investigations be ordered. Notwithstanding their relevance to the proceedings, the Trial Chamber did not explain the reasons why it elected not to communicate the Second Amicus Curiae Reports to the parties before the delivery of the Trial Judgement or, at a minimum, inform the parties that the reports had been filed.[729] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this not only ran against the interests of transparency,[730] but also deprived the parties of the opportunity to: (i) expose the reasons why they should have been communicated the results of the investigations; and (ii) raise at trial issues related to the credibility of some Prosecution witnesses based on the contents of the Second Amicus Curiae Reports.

300. Mindful that the decision to communicate to the parties of the main proceedings an amicus curiae report filed pursuant to Rules 77 or 91 of the Rules falls within the discretion of the relevant chamber and that there may be instances where the communication of such reports is not in the interests of justice, the Appeals Chamber fails to understand why, in this case, the Trial Chamber decided to deprive the parties of information that might have been relevant to their cases in the absence of any circumstances that may have justified its non-communication. The Appeals [727] 30 October 2009 Order, p. 3. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Chamber entirely disregarded the First Amicus Curiae Report in the decisions it issued on 2 September 2011. See 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witness QA; 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ.

[728] The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's unsubstantiated allegation that the Trial Chamber erred by designating a second amicus curiae proprio motu without notifying the parties, an allegation which she had also failed to raise at trial. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 245.

[729] The Appeals Chamber recalls that there is no reference to the Second Amicus Curiae Reports in the Trial Judgement and that it is only in September 2011, when the Trial Chamber decided that the First A*micus Curiae* Report and the Second A*micus Curiae* Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ should be released to the parties, that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi became aware of the existence of the Second Amicus Curiae Reports. See 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, para. 40.

[730] The Appeals Chamber observes that, after the delivery of the Trial Judgement, on 2 September 2011, the Trial Chamber itself stated that the First Amicus Curiae Report and the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning

Chamber therefore finds that the Trial Chamber's decision not to communicate the Second Amicus Curiae Reports to the parties before the delivery of the Trial Judgement was unreasonable and constituted an abuse of the Trial Chamber's discretion.[731]

301. Recalling that in order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, the appealing party must demonstrate that the trial chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice, the Appeals Chamber will now turn to examine whether Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi show that they have been prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's failure to communicate the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning QA and the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning QY and SJ before the delivery of the Trial Judgement.

a. Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA

302. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA was wanting in several respects.[732] The Trial Chamber noted in particular that the report "applied the incorrect legal standard", "repeatedly examined issues of the credibility and reliability of witness testimony", "confused the alleged contemnors' names", and "may have failed to respect the requirements under Rule 77(E) and 91(D) by interviewing suspects without informing them of their rights."[733]

303. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber rejected the entirety of Witness QA's evidence because he lacked credibility[734] and that Witness QA's implication of Witness QI's former employer in the fabrication of evidence was known to Kanyabashi at trial. Indeed, Witness QA testified before the Trial Chamber in 2008 that he was encouraged to lie against Kanyabashi by three men he specifically named,[735] and Witness QI revealed in his 2004 testimony that one of the three men named by Witness QA was Witness's QI's former employer.[736] Kanyabashi's closing brief reflects that he was fully aware at trial of the alleged involvement of Witness QI's former employer in the fabrication of evidence against him.[737]

Witnesses QY and SJ should be disclosed to the parties in the "interest of transparency". See 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, para. 40.

[731] In light of this outcome, the Appeals Chamber finds it unecessary to considers Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in stating in the Trial Judgement that the investigations against Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ were "on-going".

[736] Witness QI, T. 23 March 2004 pp. 42, 82, 83 (closed session).

[737] In his closing brief, Kanyabashi asserted that Witness QI was doubtful, expressly relying on the witness's close ties with his former employer and arguing that, "urged" by his former employer, Witness QI had already accused a number of people, that he could have done it again out of loyalty, and that he and his former employer "belonged to a group of

304. The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the Second Amicus Curiae concluded that there were sufficient grounds for initiating contempt proceedings against Witness QI's former employer in connection with Witness QA's testimony of March 2004 does not show that Witness QI may also have been incited to fabricate evidence against Kanyabashi.[738] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber stated that the only evidence to support the contempt allegations against Witness QI was that of Witness QA, who had admitted lying before the Tribunal and confessed that most of his 2004 testimony was not truthful.[739]

305. Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that he was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's failure to communicate the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA to the parties in a timely manner.

b. Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ

306. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ confirmed that, when testifying in May 2002, Witness QY falsely denied knowing Prosecution Witnesses TK, SJ, and QBQ and that, when testifying in March 2003, Witness SJ lied about not knowing Prosecution Witnesses TK, QJ, and TA.[740] In this report, the Second Amicus Curiae noted that Witnesses QY and SJ explained that they falsely denied knowing these other witnesses upon instructions of a Prosecution interpreter after the interpreter spoke with Prosecution lawyers.[741]

307. The Second Amicus Curiae concluded that there were sufficient grounds for initiating proceedings against Witnesses QY and SJ for "'willingly' giving false testimony having a relevant connection with a material issue in this case before the Tribunal in 2002-2003".[742] He nonetheless wrote that "the Tribunal should seriously consider exercising its discretion to not [initiate] witnesses giving false testimony against him." See The Prosecutor v. Joseph Kanyabashi, Case No. ICTR-96-15-T, Joseph Kanyabashi's Closing Brief, 17 February 2009 (originally filed in French, English translation filed on 6 April 2009) (confidential) ("Kanyabashi Closing Brief"), paras. 205, 292, 480.

[738] See Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA, p. 30. See also ibid., pp. 26-29. The Second Amicus Curiae also noted that Witness QI's former employer declined his request to be interviewed. See ibid., p. 8.

[739] The Trial Chamber, noting that the only evidence supporting the contempt allegations was the testimony of Witness QA who had admitted lying for the most part and the serious shortcomings of the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witness QA, did not consider that initiating proceedings against the alleged contemnors was the most efficient and effective way of ensuring the proper administration of justice. See 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witness QA, paras. 39-41.

proceedings or to impose a nominal punishment, if any."[743] With respect to the allegations concerning members of the Prosecution, the Second Amicus Curiae concluded that there were insufficient grounds to initiate contempt proceedings against the Prosecution lawyers who prepared Witnesses SJ and QY for their testimonies – or the interpreters or staff who assisted them – for coercing Witnesses SJ and QY to give false testimony in 2002 and 2003.[744]

308. As emphasised in the 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, the issue of Witnesses QY's and SJ's false testimonies was known to the parties and the Trial Chamber prior to the delivery of the Trial Judgement.[745] Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi do not point to any information in the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ regarding the reliability or credibility of the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ that was not already before the parties and the Trial Chamber at trial.[746] As to the conclusion from the Second Amicus Curiae that there were sufficient grounds for initiating proceedings against them for false testimony before the Tribunal in 2002 and 2003, the Appeals Chamber recalls that proceedings for contempt and false testimony are independent of the proceedings out of which they arise[747] and that an assessment of a witness's credibility is a separate inquiry from that of the prosecution of a witness for false testimony.[748]

309. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi further submit that the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ supports their claim that Witnesses QJ, QBQ, QBP, SS, TA, and TK were also instructed to lie and may have lied at trial and, as such, contains valuable and directly relevant information affecting the credibility of these witnesses.[749]

Ntahobali further refers to Prosecution Witnesses SD, SW, HF, RO, RJ, ALW, and GIO. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 820, 834, 835, 839. The Appeals Chamber will not entertain Ntahobali's contention that Prosecution Witness RJ (a witness in the Rwamakuba case) told the Second Amicus Curiae that Witness SD also received instructions to deny knowing other persons she knew as a careful reading of the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ reveals that Witness RJ was not referring to Witness SD but to Prosecution Witness GIO, a witness in the Rwamakuba case. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 834, referring to Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, pp. 19-23. The Appeals

310. Having carefully reviewed the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the information contained therein regarding Witnesses QJ, QBQ, QBP, SS, TA, and TK was such that the Trial Chamber's failure to disclose it to the parties resulted in prejudice.

311. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber notes that the report only mentions that Witness QJ was with Witness SJ while in Arusha.[750] This information was already known to the Trial Chamber and the parties at trial since Witness SJ had testified to this effect and had even suggested at one point during her recall testimony in 2009 that Witness QJ may also have been instructed to deny knowing other witnesses.[751]

312. The Appeals Chamber also notes that there is no information in the report concerning Witness QBQ that was not before the parties and the Trial Chamber at trial since the report merely confirmed that Witness QY falsely denied knowing Witness QBQ in court in 2003.[752]

313. With respect to Witnesses QBP and SS, the Appeals Chamber notes that the report reveals that Witness QY identified Witnesses QBP and SS as among the witnesses who also received instructions to lie about knowing other Prosecution witnesses, a fact which was not known by the parties at trial.[753] The report also indicates that: (i) Witness QBP refuted the allegation of having been instructed to lie and stated that she could not remember the names of the people from Butare

Chamber will also not entertain Ntahobali's allegations as they relate to Witnesses HF, RO, RJ, ALW, and GIO as none of them testified in the present case but were either prospective witnesses or witnesses in the Rwamakuba case. As for Witness SW, the Appeals Chamber notes that none of the references Ntahobali points to refers to a "Witness SW" and that no witness with this pseudonym testified in this case.

[750] The Appeals Chamber does not interpret the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ as indicating that Witness QJ received instructions to lie. The Second Amicus Curiae noted that Witness SJ told him that: "The first time she was told [that if she admitted to knowing other people, the judges will think she is manufacturing a conspiracy to tell lies], she was alone with the interpreter and the prosecutor. Other times, there were other witnesses present. Some were from other places. The only ones she knew were [inter alios Witness QJ]." See Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 16. This is consistent with Witness SJ's 2009 testimony that she was with Witness QJ in Arusha but that, although suggesting earlier that Witness QJ was also instructed to deny knowing witnesses, she could not confirm whether Witness QJ received similar instructions as she was alone when receiving the instruction. See Witness SJ, T. 24 February 2009 p. 19 (closed session).

[751] Although Witness SJ insisted in cross-examination that she did not know whether Witness QJ had received the same instruction to lie from the interpreter, she had suggested earlier during her testimony that she discussed with Witness QJ how they were going to deny that they knew their neighbours. See Witness SJ, T. 23 February 2009 pp. 83, 84 (closed session); T. 24 February 2009 pp. 11, 19 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber observes that, during their closing arguments, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali specifically challenged the credibility of Witness QJ's testimony in relation to the allegations of false testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ. See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 22 April 2009 pp. 25, 26, 65; Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 23 April 2009 p. 6. Moreover, in the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the indication in the report that Witness QJ "failed to appear for his interview" with the Second Amicus Curiae relied upon by Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko is irrelevant to the question of reliability or credibility of the witness's evidence and, accordingly, did not warrant communication to the parties.

[752] See Witness QY, T. 23 February 2009 pp. 37-42 (closed session); Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 14. The Appeals Chamber observes that counsel for Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali specifically challenged the credibility of Witness QBQ's testimony in relation to the allegations of false testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ. See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 22 April 2009 pp. 27-30, 67; Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 23 April 2009 p. 6.

she met while in Arusha to testify;[754] and (ii) Witness SS "declined to be interviewed".[755] The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the information regarding Witness QY's identification of Witnesses QBP and SS as two of the witnesses instructed to lie about knowing other witnesses was material to the present case. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness QBP expressly denied being instructed to lie about knowing other witnesses when questioned on the matter[756] and is not persuaded that the fact that Witness QY stated that Witness QBP was also instructed to lie demonstrates that Witness QBP actually lied in court when denying knowing a person by the name of Witness QY.[757] As to Witness SS, Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko do not point to any instance in her testimony at trial where Witness SS denied knowing other Prosecution witnesses that she may have in fact known or how the fact that she declined being interviewed by the Second Amicus Curiae impacted the credibility of her testimony at trial.

314. Turning to Witness TA, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ contains elements that suggest that Witness TA may have lied in court as to her knowledge of Witness SJ since it reveals that Witness TA indicated to the Second Amicus Curiae that she was with someone with Witness SJ's first name when in Arusha the second time, although she had testified in court to not knowing Witness SJ.[758] However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the information that Witness TA was with Witness SJ in Arusha and that they knew each other was already known to the parties before the delivery of the Trial Judgement, as Witness SJ had unambiguously testified to that effect at trial.[759] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this available information was sufficient for the parties to question Witness TA's testimony that she did not know Witness SJ and to address the impact of this on the credibility of Witness TA's evidence.[760] In fact, the Appeals Chamber observes that counsel for Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali jointly moved the Trial Chamber to recall Witness TA on the ground that the [757] Witness QBP, T. 29 October 2002 p. 53 (closed session) ("Q. Madam Witness, do you know a lady who is also from the same region as your mother called [Witness QY] A. I do not know all these people."). Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's claim, there is no indication in Witness QY's testimony upon recall that the witness testified that she knew Witness QBP. See Witness QY, T. 23 February 2009 pp. 36-66 (closed session).

[758] Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 24; Witness TA, T. 7 November 2001 pp. 113, 114 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber is further not convinced that the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ may be interpreted as suggesting that Witness TA received instructions to lie since it merely appears to suggest that, at times, Witness SJ was with other witnesses, including Witnesses QJ and TA. This is not inconsistent with Witness SJ's testimony before the Trial Chamber that she was with Witness TA in Arusha, but that she could not confirm whether Witness TA received instructions about denying knowing witnesses as she was alone when receiving the instruction. See Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 16; Witness SJ, T. 24 February 2009 p. 19 (closed session).

evidence given by Witnesses QY and SJ suggested that there was a possibility of contamination of other witnesses who came to Arusha at the same time as Witnesses QY and SJ and stayed in the same safe houses.[761] The Appeals Chamber also considers that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submission,[762] the fact that Witness TA was not found to be "cooperative" by the Second Amicus Curiae is immaterial to the question of the credibility of Witness TA's evidence.[763]

315. As regards Witness TK, the Appeals Chamber notes that there is no information in the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ that was not before the parties and the Trial Chamber at trial since both Witnesses SJ and TK admitted knowing each other at trial.[764]

316. As noted above, Ntahobali further contends that the information contained in the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ confirms the existence of collusion between some Prosecution witnesses in this case, in particular Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK.[765] Ntahobali, however, fails to identify what information in the report supports his allegation of collusion. In support of his claim, Ntahobali does not rely on any part of the report but on an aspect of Witness SJ's 2009 testimony[766] and thus does not point to any information in the report regarding possible collusion that was not already before the parties and the Trial Chamber at trial.

317. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's claim that the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ should have been communicated to the parties because it "confirmed and established that the acts of members of the [762] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 263; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 835.

[763] The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali misrepresent the Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ when arguing that Witness TA stated that she wanted to refer to IBUKA before answering as they instructed her not to cooperate with the Tribunal. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 263; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 835. The report instead reads: "[Witness TA] was reluctant to speak with [the Second Amicus Curiae] at all because IBUKA had told her (and others) not to cooperate with ICTR, because ICTR was not convicting the perpetrators of the genocide." See Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 24.

[764] See Trial Judgement, para. 2685, referring to Witness TK, T. 21 May 2002 pp. 83, 85; Witness SJ, T. 23 February 2009 p. 82 (closed session). As indicated supra in fn. 750, the Appeals Chamber does not understand the phrases in the report "[o]ther times, there were other witnesses present. Some were from other places. The only ones she knew were [inter alios Witness TK]" as indicating that Witness SJ stated that she was instructed to lie in the presence of Witness TK. In addition, the Appeals Chamber observes that counsel for Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali specifically challenged the credibility of Witness TK's testimony in relation to the allegations of false testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ. See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 22 April 2009 pp. 25, 26; Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 23 April 2009 p. 6. In addition, the Appeals Chamber finds that the fact that Witness TK "declined to be interviewed" is information that is of no relevance to the assessment of the credibility and reliability of the witness's evidence. See Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 12.

[765] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 47, 48. See also ibid., paras. 820, 831, 833, 834; AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 19, 20 and 23-25 (closed session); AT. 16 April 2015 p. 21 (closed session); Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 264. The Prosecution is correct in its contention that Ntahobali had failed to raise the allegation of collusion in his notice of appeal. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 61, 62. The Appeals Chamber nevertheless considers that it is in the interests of justice to examine this challenge. As the Prosecution responded to this contention despite its objection to its consideration, the Appeals Chamber considers that there is no unfairness to the Prosecution in this respect.

Prosecution staff seriously interfered with the administration of justice" and "vitiated the entire proceedings" and "that the trial was rendered unfair".[767] The allegation reported in the report that Prosecution staff instructed witnesses to lie was already brought to light by both Witnesses QY and SJ when they testified in 2009. More importantly, contrary to what Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali contend, the Second Amicus Curiae expressly concluded that there was "insufficient evidence to link the lawyers with [the] instruction [to lie] to find beyond a reasonable doubt that they intended for QY and SJ to testify falsely"[768] and "not sufficient evidence for a reasonable trier of fact to find beyond a reasonable doubt that any particular, identifiable language assistant coerced QY or SJ to give false testimony."[769] Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions fail to appreciate that the Second Amicus Curiae expressly concluded that – although the two witnesses "felt compelled", "truly believed, perhaps incorrectly", and "thought that they were being ordered to testify falsely" – evidence was lacking as to "whether that was what the people instructing them actually intented them to understand" and the witnesses "perhaps misunderstood".[770]

318. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi have failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's discernible error in not communicating the Second Amicus Curiae Reports to the parties before the delivery of the Trial Judgement resulted in prejudice and that it therefore warrants the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.

(b) Failure to Consider the Impact of the A*mici Curiae* Reports

319. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses QA, QY, and SJ had become "the subject of on-going investigations before the Tribunal for false testimony and contempt of court" and stated that, without prejudice to any formal proceedings for false testimony

Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali also rely on the First Amicus Curiae Report in support of their claim but the Appeals Chamber will not address this part of their submissions in light of its conclusion above regarding the First Amicus Curiae Report. See supra, para. 298.
[768] Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, pp. 54, 55.
[769] Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, p. 56. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber stated that it agreed with the Second Amicus Curiae that there was "no prima facie case against any of the language assistants because none of them was identified with any particularity" and "no direct evidence" that Prosecution's lawyers "told Witnesses QY or SJ to testify that they did not know other prosecution witnesses" and, on the basis of Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, ruled that there was insufficient information to justify pursuing this matter further under Rule 77 of the Rules. See 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, paras. 36, 38. Ntahobali clarified at the appeals hearing that he was not arguing that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to initiate contempt proceedings. See AT. 16 April 2015 p. 21 (closed session).
[770] Second Amicus Curiae Report Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, pp. 58, 59.

and contempt which may come before the Tribunal, it will "treat these witnesses' testimony with added caution."[771]

320. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi contend that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider and discuss in the Trial Judgement the evidence contained in the Amici Curiae Reports and the impact it had on the admissibility and assessment of the testimonies of many Prosecution witnesses.[772] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali add that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to discuss the seriousness of the Prosecution's conduct as confirmed and established by the reports and its impact on the fairness of the proceedings.[773]

321. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko do not substantiate their claim that the Trial Chamber did not take into account the Amici Curiae Reports and recalls that there is a presumption that the Trial Chamber has evaluated all the evidence presented to it.[774] According to the Prosecution, Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in its assessment of the Amici Curiae Reports.[775]

322. With respect to the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to consider the information contained in the Amici Curiae Reports, in particular their impact on the admissibility of the evidence and the assessment of the credibility of Prosecution witnesses, the Appeals Chamber observes that, as noted by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi, there is no mention of any of the reports in the Trial Judgement. However, as discussed at length above, the Appeals Chamber finds that the information in the Amici Curiae Reports, including regarding the Prosecution's conduct, would have had no impact on this case. Accordingly, assuming arguendo that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider the information contained in the Amici Curiae Reports, this error would not have the potential to invalidate the decision of the Trial Chamber concerning the admissibility and the assessment of the impugned evidence.[776]

[776] The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ntahobali's contention concerning the proprio motu recall of Witnesses TK, QJ, and TA in light of its conclusion on the contents of the Amici Curiae Reports.

323. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's, Ntahobali's, and Kanyabashi's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider and discuss in the Trial Judgement the contents of the Amici Curiae Reports.

3. Failure to Exclude Evidence and Apply the Requisite Caution

324. On 23 February 2009, upon recall for further cross-examination regarding possible lies in their prior testimonies of May 2002 and March 2003, Witnesses QY and SJ testified that they had not been truthful in their prior testimonies and that they had lied about not knowing other Prosecution witnesses.[777] Witness QY revealed that she lied about not knowing Witnesses TK, SJ, and QBQ[778] and Witness SJ admitted that she in fact knew Witnesses TK, QJ, and TA, who were with her in Arusha when she came to testify the first or second time.[779] Both Witnesses QY and SJ explained that they falsely denied knowing these other witnesses upon the instructions of Prosecution staff.[780]

325. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that "since their testimony in the present case, Prosecution Witnesses […] QY and SJ have become the subject of on-going investigations before the Tribunal for false testimony and contempt of court."[781] The Trial Chamber stated that:

> With respect to these allegations, and without prejudice to any such proceedings which may come before the Tribunal, the Chamber will treat these witnesses' testimony with added caution.[782]

326. In addition to their arguments pertaining to the impact of the Amici Curiae Reports on the credibility of Prosecution witnesses, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit that the Trial Chamber erred in fact in referring to "allegations" of false testimony in the Trial Judgement, as both Witnesses QY and SJ admitted their false testimony in court.[783] They contend that this error resulted in an incorrect assessment of Witnesses QY's and SJ's testimonies and that, in accordance with common law principles, the witnesses' admission that they gave false testimony should have led to the exclusion of their entire testimonies.[784] In their view, the Trial Chamber therefore erred in not excluding their evidence.[785]

327. In the event the Appeals Chamber were to find that the Trial Chamber did not err in not excluding Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submit in the alternative that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to apply added caution in assessing their evidence.[786] They argue that the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber failed to draw any distinction between "added caution" and mere "caution" and was inconsistent throughout in its assessment of their testimonies.[787] In particular, Ntahobali points out that, while on two occasions the Trial Chamber found that the credibility of Witnesses QY and SJ was seriously undermined because they had lied about knowing other Prosecution witnesses,[788] the Trial Chamber accepted other portions of their testimonies without applying any caution and without even referring to their false testimonies.[789] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali argue that this approach runs contrary to the Trial Chamber's obligation to provide a reasoned opinion justifying why it accepted their testimonies without exercising the added caution that was at the very least required.[790] According to Ntahobali, the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ should be excluded from the assessment of the evidence or, in the alternative, the exercise of proper caution should lead the Appeals Chamber to reject all aspects of their testimonies that were accepted by the Trial Chamber.[791]

328. Nyiramasuhuko further argues that no reasonable trier of fact would have failed to address: (i) Witness SJ's testimony that Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK had also been instructed to lie before the Trial Chamber; (ii) Witness TA's testimony that she did not know Witness SJ and was not with other witnesses while in Arusha, although Witness SJ's testimony shows that it was not true; and (iii) Witness QBP's testimony that she did not know Witness QY, although Witness QY testified that she knew Witness QBP.[792] She contends that, in light of this evidence, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to apply caution when assessing the evidence of Witnesses QBP, QJ, TA, and TK.[793]

329. The Prosecution responds that the claims that the Trial Chamber did not exercise caution with respect to Witnesses QY and SJ and that Witnesses QBP, TA, TK, and QJ received instructions to lie are without merit.[794]

330. The Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reference to "allegations" of false testimonies in the Trial Judgement as none of the relevant witnesses were convicted of false testimony.[795] Moreover, the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that the Trial Chamber did not misinterpret the facts before it as it expressly and repeatedly noted that Witnesses QY and SJ admitted that they had lied in court regarding their knowledge of other Prosecution witnesses.[796]

331. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's argument that the fact that the witnesses lied required that their testimonies be excluded. In support of this claim, Ntahobali refers to national jurisprudence.[797] However, the Appeals Chamber highlights that Rule 89(A) of the Rules specifically provides that the Tribunal is not bound by national rules of evidence,[798] and recalls that decisions on the admission or exclusion of evidence fall within the trial chambers' discretion.[799] In the instant case, the Appeals Chamber observes that the testimonies on recall of Witnesses QY and SJ reveal that the witnesses admitted lying in their testimonies with respect to one discrete point which, in the Appeals Chamber's opinion, had no bearing on any material aspects of the case. Witnesses QY and SJ both explained that they understood that they were instructed by Prosecution staff to testify that they did not know other Prosecution witnesses and that, although they did know it was not the truth, they did as they were told.[800] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali do not demonstrate that the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ was so lacking in terms of the indicia of reliability that it was deprived of any probative value

Because Nyiramasuhuko's challenge in this respect is unrelated to the issue of Witnesses SJ's and QY's false testimonies, the Appeals Chamber will address it in the section addressing Nyiramasuhuko's submissions relevant to this aspect of Witnesses TK's and QJ's evidence. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 260, 261; infra, Section IV.F.2(e).

[793] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 268. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali's arguments regarding the assessment of the evidence of witnesses other than Witnesses QY and SJ are premised on the contents of the Amici Curiae Reports and were not developed independently in his appeal brief. As a result, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali did not intend to argue that the Trial Chamber should have exercised particular caution when assessing the evidence of witnesses other than Witnesses QY and SJ in light of their 2009 testimonies.

and consequently should have been excluded by the Trial Chamber. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that their argument that the Trial Chamber erred by not excluding their evidence is unpersuasive.[801]

332. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber does not understand the Trial Chamber's statement that it will treat Witnesses QY's and SJ's testimonies with "added caution" as a reflection of its intention to apply a higher standard than the one it decided to apply to the evidence that it deemed required "caution", "additional caution", or "appropriate caution".[802] The Appeals Chamber considers that, by stating that it would treat the evidence with added caution, the Trial Chamber was merely referring to the fact that it would take into account the fact that Witnesses QY and SJ lied in court about knowing other Prosecution witnesses when assessing the reliability and credibility of their evidence.

333. However, the Appeals Chamber agrees with Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali that the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ in the Trial Judgement is inconsistent in certain respects. The Appeals Chamber refers to the relevant sections of this Judgement addressing Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions related to the Butare Prefecture Office, where it finds that the conclusions of the Trial Chamber regarding Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence pertaining to attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office are irreconcilable and that the Trial Chamber erred in reaching contradictory findings.[803] In these sections, the Appeals Chamber consequently concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence in relation to the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office.[804]

334. That being said, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that it was inconsistent or unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to reject parts of Witnesses QY's and SJ's testimonies relating to the Butare Prefecture Office while accepting other aspects of their testimonies relating to Ntahobali's participation in attacks at the EER.

335. The Trial Chamber explained that it would not rely on the part of Witness QY's testimony relating to specific incidents that allegedly occurred at the end of April or early May 1994 at the [800] See 2 September 2011 Decision Concerning Witnesses QY and SJ, para. 33.

[801] Ntahobali also argues that the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ should have been excluded on the basis of Rule 95 of the Rules because the role of the Prosecution in their false testimonies as revealed by the Amici Curiae Reports seriously undermined the integrity of the proceedings. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 824. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already dismissed Ntahobali's contention that the reports revealed that acts by members of the Prosecution undermined the integrity of these proceedings. See supra, para. 317.

Butare Prefecture Office because of the witness's admission that she lied about knowing Witnesses QBQ and SJ, and also because of discrepancies in her testimony concerning these specific events and the unreliable nature of her identification evidence.[805] By contrast, the Trial Chamber did not find discrepancies in Witness QY's testimony regarding the events at the EER and found that her identification of Ntahobali was reliable.[806] The Trial Chamber further made it clear that it relied on Witness QY's testimony as also partly corroborated by Witnesses RE, SX, and TB,[807] witnesses whom she had not falsely denied knowing. Although the Trial Chamber did not expressly refer to Witness QY's lies when assessing her evidence relating to the EER, the Trial Chamber's repeated references to this matter show that it was not ignored.[808]

336. With respect to Witness SJ, the Trial Chamber explained that it did not accept the witness's testimony about the abduction of particular individuals during one of the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office because she admitted that she had falsely denied knowing Witnesses TK, TA, and QJ.[809] The Appeals Chamber notes that Witnesses TK and QJ were the two other main witnesses testifying to this particular event for which the Trial Chamber refused to rely on Witness SJ's evidence.[810] By contrast, the Trial Chamber found that Witness SJ's evidence relating to the EER was consistent with and corroborative of the testimonies of several other witnesses who were not implicated by her admitted dishonesty.[811] In particular, after stating that it was "cognisant" of Witness SJ's admission upon recall in 2009 that she lied about not knowing Witnesses QBQ and TA, the Trial Chamber concluded that Witness SJ's testimony on the killings near the EER was "credible in that it [was] corroborated by other witnesses and [was] consistent with the other evidence before [it]".[812]

337. The Appeals Chamber has found in the sections discussing Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings related to the Butare Prefecture Office that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ relating to the prefectoral office. However, in light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's decision to rely on their evidence on events at the EER despite their admission that they lied and the Trial Chamber's rejection of other aspects of their evidence. Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's contention, the Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial

Chamber did provide reasons for relying on both witnesses' evidence concerning the events at the EER.[813]

338. As for Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to apply caution when assessing the evidence of Witnesses QBP, QJ, TA, and TK, the Appeals Chamber notes the ambiguity in Witness SJ's recall testimony about whether or not Witnesses QJ, TA, and TK had also been instructed to lie about knowing other witnesses. As noted by the Trial Chamber,[814] Witness SJ stated that she was with persons bearing the same first names as Witnesses QJ, TK, and TA when she received instructions to lie,[815] prior to denying it and testifying that she did not know whether they had received similar instructions.[816] Regardless of the lack of clarity of Witness SJ's testimony, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have decided not to treat the evidence of Witnesses QBP, QJ, TA, and TK with particular caution given the immateriality of the subject-matter of the alleged lie to the facts of the case. Although Nyiramasuhuko is correct that Witness SJ testified to knowing Witness TA despite the fact that the latter said she did not know anyone by the name of the former,[817] the Appeals Chamber does not find that this establishes that a reasonable trier of fact could not have relied on Witness TA's evidence on the material facts of the case.[818] Finally, the Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that Witness QY testified to knowing Witness QBP when recalled for further cross-examination in 2009[819] is unsupported by the record.

4. Conclusion

339. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi have demonstrated that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion thereby committing a discernible error by not communicating the Second Amicus Curiae Reports to the parties before the delivery of the Trial Judgement. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Kanyabashi have failed to show that this error resulted in prejudice. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali have failed

[813] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony. See, e.g., Nizeyimana Appeal Judgement, para. 108; Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 243; Ntawukulilyayo Appeal Judgement, para. 155; Munyakazi Appeal Judgement, para. 103.

[817] Witness SJ, T. 23 February 2009 p. 84 (closed session); Witness TA, T. 7 November 2001 p. 114 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's claim, Witness TA did acknowledge that she was staying with other persons while in Arusha. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 257; Witness TA, T. 7 November 2001 p. 116 (closed session).
[818] The Appeals Chamber notes that, although Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali submitted in their closing arguments that the witnesses named by Witnesses QY and SJ in their 2009 testimonies may also have lied in court about knowing each others, they did not argue that the alleged inconsistency between the testimonies of Witnesses SJ and TA undermined the credibility of Witness TA's testimony. See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 22 April 2009 pp. 31, 65; Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 23 April 2009 p. 6.

to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion by not communicating the First Amicus Curiae Report before the delivery of the Trial Judgement, erred in failing to consider and discuss in the Trial Judgement the contents of the Amici Curiae Reports, or erred in deciding not to exclude from its consideration the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ.

340. Furthermore, although it has found in the sections discussing Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings related to the Butare Prefecture Office that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence in relation to the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber did not err in relying on Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence for the events at the EER. The Appeals Chamber also finds no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence of Witnesses QBP, QJ, TA, and TK in relation to the allegations of false testimonies.

341. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber grants in parts Ground 7 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal and 3.12 of Ntahobali's appeal to the extent that the Trial Chamber relied on Witnesses QY and SJ for the events at the Butare Prefecture Office and dismisses Ground 1.3 of Ntahobali's appeal, Ground 3.11 of Kanyabashi's appeal, and the remaining parts of Ground 7 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal and 3.12 of Ntahobali's appeal.

K. Right to be Tried Without Undue Delay (Nyiramasuhuko Ground 1 in part; Ntahobali Ground 1.1; Nteziryayo Ground 9; Kanyabashi Ground 6; Ndayambaje Ground 15 in part)

342. Kanyabashi and Ndayambaje were arrested in Belgium on 28 June 1995 and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 8 November 1996.[820] Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana were arrested in Kenya and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 18 July 1997.[821] Ntahobali was arrested in Kenya and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 24 July 1997.[822] Nteziryayo was arrested in Burkina Faso on 26 March 1998 and transferred to the custody of the Tribunal on 21 May 1998.[823] On 5 October 1999, the Trial Chamber ordered that the cases of the co-Accused be tried jointly.[824]

343. As noted above, the Prosecution case started on 12 June 2001 before a bench of Trial Chamber II composed of Judges Sekule, Ramaroson, and Maqutu.[825] Following the expiration of Judge Maqutu's term of office on 24 May 2003, Judges Sekule and Ramaroson decided to continue the trial with a substitute judge.[826] Judge Bossa was appointed to the bench on 20 October 2003 and certified her familiarity with the proceedings on 5 December 2003.[827] The Prosecution case resumed on 26 January 2004 and ended on 18 October 2004.[828] The co-Accused presented their cases from 31 January 2005 to 2 December 2008.[829] A total of 189 witnesses were heard in 726 trial days.[830] Closing arguments were heard from 20 to 30 April 2009.[831] The Trial Chamber pronounced the judgement orally on 24 June 2011 and issued its written Trial Judgement on 14 July 2011.[832]

344. In the course of the proceedings, the Trial Chamber denied several motions filed by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje alleging violations of their right to be tried without undue delay.[833] The Trial Chamber also considered the issue in the Trial Judgement and concluded that, given the complexity of the case, the total duration of the proceedings was reasonable and the co-Accused's right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated.[834] It determined that the co-Accused had not demonstrated that they suffered any "legal prejudice".[835]

345. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje submit that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that their right to be tried without undue delay was not violated and that they did not suffer prejudice from the delays in the proceedings.[836] They request that the Appeals Chamber find that their proceedings were unduly delayed, conclude that they suffered prejudice as a result, and order a stay or termination of the proceedings[837] or, in the alternative, a reduction of their sentences.[838] Ntahobali and Ndayambaje further request financial compensation for the violation of their right to be tried without undue delay.[839]

346. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the right to be tried without undue delay is enshrined in Article 20(4)(c) of the Statute and protects an accused against undue delay, which is determined on a case-by-case basis.[840] A number of factors are relevant to this assessment, including: the length of the delay; the complexity of the proceedings; the conduct of the parties; the conduct of the relevant authorities; and the prejudice to the accused, if any.[841] In this context, the Appeals Chamber recalls that when an appellant alleges on appeal that his right to a fair trial has been infringed, he must prove that the trial chamber violated a provision of the Statute or the Rules and that this violation caused prejudice that amounts to an error of law invalidating the trial judgement.[842] The Appeals Chamber also emphasises that trial chambers have a duty to be proactive in ensuring that the accused is tried without undue delay, regardless of whether the accused himself asserts that right.[843]

347. The Appeals Chamber will first examine the arguments advanced by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje regarding the length of the delay, the complexity of the proceedings, and the conduct of the parties and relevant authorities prior to addressing their submissions on prejudice.

1. Length of the Delay, Complexity of the Proceedings, and Conduct of the Parties and Relevant Authorities

348. In addressing the allegation of undue delay in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that the trial chambers seised of the Nahimana et al., Bagosora et al., and Bizimungu et al. cases had concluded that, given the complexity of these cases, periods between dates of arrest and the issuance of the trial judgement of seven years and eight months, 11 years, and more than ten years, respectively, did not constitute undue delay.[844] The Trial Chamber then reasoned as follows:

> The Chamber considers the instant case to be at least as complex as Bagosora. The Chamber heard 189 witnesses over the course of 726 trial days. Thus, the case is approximately twice the length of Bagosora and more than three times the length of Nahimana et al. Moreover, while there were fewer witnesses in this case than Bagosora, the increased length was necessitated by the replacement of a Judge, the presentation of six different Defence cases and a plurality of cross-examinations for every witness. In the circumstances, given the complexity of the instant case, the Chamber does not consider the length of this case to violate the Accused's right to be tried without undue delay.[845]

349. In addition, the Trial Chamber recalled that, in its 26 November 2008 Decision, it had rejected Ntahobali's arguments that undue delay had resulted from the arrest of his investigator, the non-reelection of Judge Maqutu, and the lack of cooperation of the Rwandan authorities on the basis that the gravity of the charges and the complexity of the case did not render unreasonable the length of the proceedings.[846] It found that there was "no reason to reconsider its assessment of Ntahobali's motion at this time".[847]

350. Ultimately, the Trial Chamber found that, considering the complexity of the case along with the expansive trial record, the total duration of the proceedings, including the time needed for the drafting of the Trial Judgement, was reasonable and did not violate the co-Accused's right to be tried without undue delay.[848] It concluded that, "[a]s the length of delay in this case [was] adequately explained by the complexity of the case, and the Accused ha[d] not demonstrated that they suffered legal prejudice", it did not need to "consider the conduct of the Prosecution or other legal authorities."[849]

351. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje submit that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that their right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated.[850] Pointing out that they spent between 13 to 16 years in detention before the Trial Judgement was delivered, they assert that the proceedings have been excessively lengthy and that this in itself suggests undue delay.[851]

352. Nyiramasuhuko, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje argue, in particular, that the Trial Chamber erred in its complexity assessment by simply comparing the overall size of the instant case with other cases before the Tribunal without taking into account the particular circumstances of this case and by failing to consider that the individual allegations against them were not complex as such.[852] Kanyabashi adds that the Trial Chamber inappropriately engaged in circular reasoning since it initially set out to consider whether the length of the proceedings could be explained by the complexity of the case but eventually held that the length of the proceedings in itself suggested that the case must have been complex.[853]

353. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje also contend that the Trial Chamber erroneously concluded that the length of the proceedings could be explained by the complexity of the case alone.[854] They submit that significant and unjustifiable delays were caused by the conduct of the Prosecution, the Tribunal, the United Nations, and the Government of Rwanda.[855] In this regard, they point to: (i) delays resulting from Judge Maqutu's replacement;

(ii) the lack of cooperation of the Government of Rwanda in providing relevant evidence; (iii) the decision to join their trials; (iv) delays caused by the Prosecution's repeated attempts to modify the indictments, its consistent failure to disclose relevant material to the Defence, and several postponements of the start of the trial because the Prosecution was not ready to present its case; (v) the slow pace of the trial proceedings; and (vi) the simultaneous assignment of the judges of the bench to other cases before the Tribunal which limited their availability to finish the present case in due course.[856] Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje argue that an assessment of undue delay must always be made on the basis of all relevant factors and that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that it did not need to consider the above-mentioned issues due to the complexity of the case.[857]

354. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje further argue that the drafting phase of the Trial Judgement was excessively long.[858] Ntahobali and Nteziryayo add that it took an unreasonable time for the Tribunal to translate the Trial Judgement into French.[859]

355. The Prosecution responds that the Appeals Chamber should summarily dismiss Nteziryayo's submissions on undue delay because he failed to raise them at trial and thus waived his right to challenge this issue on appeal.[860] On the merits, the Prosecution contends that, although the proceedings in the present case were long, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, Nteziryayo, and Ndayambaje fail to demonstrate that there was undue delay.[861] In its view, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that any delays could be explained by the complexity of the case was supported by

Kanyabashi also alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider the fact that the Prosecution artificially complicated and lengthened the proceedings by introducing irrelevant evidence and by increasing the number of allegations to which the co-Accused had to respond, although they had no prospect of succeeding, and in rejecting his requests for exclusion of evidence. See Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-paras. 6.2.2.2, 6.2.3.2, 6.2.3.5; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 376. precedent and was reasonable in light of the particular circumstances in this case.[862] The Prosecution further submits that the joinder of trials with which some of the co-Appellants take issue is provided for in the Statute and was justified in the present case.[863] At the appeals hearing, the Prosecution underlined that the co-Accused did not object to the pace at which the trial was proceeding but, on the contrary, requested additional time to prepare their respective defences.[864]

356. Nteziryayo replies that he raised the issue of undue delay in his closing arguments at trial.[865]

357. The Appeals Chamber notes that, at the time of the oral pronouncement of the Trial Judgement, Kanyabashi and Ndayambaje had been detained for almost 16 years, Nyiramasuhuko, Nsabimana, and Ntahobali for almost 14 years, and Nteziryayo for over 13 years.[866] Some of the co-Appellants will have waited more than 20 years for a final determination of their case. It is therefore indisputable that the proceedings in this case have been of an unprecedented and considerable length.

358. Considering the extraordinary length of these proceedings, the Trial Chamber's determination in the Trial Judgement that none of the co-Accused's right to a trial without undue delay had been violated,[867] and the interests of justice, the Appeals Chamber will consider Nteziryayo's arguments on undue delay and, if necessary, will proprio motu consider the impact of its findings on Nsabimana's rights regardless of the fact that he did not raise allegations in this regard on appeal.

359. Turning to the merits of the submissions before it, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, as previously held, the length of an accused's detention does not in itself constitute undue delay, and the fact that the co-Appellants had been detained for many years at the time of the issuance of the Trial Judgement is insufficient, in itself, to show that the Trial Chamber erred in its determination that there was no undue delay in the proceedings.[868] Because of the Tribunal's mandate and of the inherent complexity of the cases before it, it is not unreasonable to expect that the judicial process will not always be as expeditious as before domestic courts.[869]

360. It is well established in the Tribunal's jurisprudence that the complexity of a case is one of the factors to be taken into account when assessing whether undue delay has occurred.[870] A number of factors are relevant to determining the level of complexity of a particular case, including the number of counts, the number of accused, the number of witnesses, the quantity of evidence, and the complexity of the facts and of the law.[871]

361. Although the Trial Chamber heavily relied on a comparison with other multi-accused cases at the Tribunal, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the particular circumstances of the case in determining that it was complex. In its assessment in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber expressly relied on the large number of accused, the number of witnesses heard, the need to replace a judge, the presentation of six different Defence cases and the plurality of cross-examinations for every witness, and the quantity of evidence tendered in the case.[872] In prior interlocutory decisions, the Trial Chamber also considered that the case raised complex issues of law and fact.[873] When arguing that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the individual allegations against them were not complex as such, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje fail to appreciate these additional factors that the Trial Chamber took into account. Kanyabashi's claim that the Trial Chamber applied circular reasoning and ultimately relied on the length of the proceedings to determine that the case was complex is also not supported by a reading of the Trial Judgement.

362. The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering that the instant proceedings were complex. With six accused, this case is the largest ever heard before the Tribunal. The six accused were prosecuted on the basis of numerous allegations with regard to crimes that occurred in several locations and on different dates. The Trial Chamber also had to rule on a particularly broad scope of counts, from conspiracy to commit genocide, genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, to several crimes against humanity and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, as well as to consider a wide range of modes of liability.[874] As noted in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber heard numerous witnesses and had to consider an exceptionally large amount of tendered evidence and trial transcripts.[875]

363. However, the crucial question before the Appeals Chamber is whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the length of the proceedings could be explained by the complexity of this case alone. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, in addition to the length and the complexity of the proceedings, a number of other factors are relevant to the assessment of an allegation of undue delay, including the conduct of the parties and of the relevant authorities.[876] The Appeals Chamber will therefore examine these other factors pointed out by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje which, they argue, unjustifiably delayed the proceedings.

364. With respect to the delays resulting from the replacement of Judge Maqutu and the lack of cooperation of the Government of Rwanda, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled its 26 November 2008 Decision where it stated that the non-reelection of Judge Maqutu and the lack of cooperation of the Rwandan authorities "may have contributed to the length of the proceedings" but did not find that there was undue delay.[877] The Trial Chamber determined that there was no reason to reconsider its 26 November 2008 Decision.[878] The Appeals Chamber observes that Judge Maqutu was not reelected as a judge of the Tribunal by the United Nations General Assembly in May 2003 and thus had to be replaced midway through the Prosecution case, leading to a suspension of the trial for over eight months.[879] As noted by the Trial Chamber, the proceedings were also stalled at some point due to the inability of witnesses to travel from Rwanda to Arusha as scheduled, resulting in the postponement of several weeks of a planned trial session.[880] However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Article 20(4)(c) of the Statute makes clear that the right to be tried without undue delay does not protect against any delay in the proceedings; it protects against undue delay.[881] In the absence of any arguments showing that the Tribunal's or the United Nations' response to the non-reelection of Judge Maqutu and the inability of witnesses to travel from Rwanda to Arusha was inadequate and [880] As a result of the inability of witnesses to travel from Rwanda to Arusha as scheduled, the Trial Chamber was not able to hear any Prosecution witnesses starting on 10 June 2002. On 27 June 2002, the Trial Chamber decided to adjourn the session, which resulted in a loss of a total of five weeks of planned trial session. The Trial Chamber decided to adjourn the trial until 14 October 2002. See T. 10 June 2002 pp. 63-67; T. 27 June 2002 pp. 64-66. See also Trial Judgement, para. 6374.

further delayed the proceedings, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion.

365. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje also rely on the delays allegedly caused by the decision to join the trials. When examining the co-Accused's challenges to the joinder in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled its finding that any assertion that the length of a particular trial if conducted independently would have concluded more quickly was "hypothetical and speculative" and concluded that "the joinder did not create an injustice."[882] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the joinder of trials is provided for by the Rules and that it had found no error in the Trial Chamber's decisions to join the trials of the co-Accused and to reject their requests for separate trials.[883] The argument that the excessive length of the proceedings in this case was an unavoidable and clearly foreseeable consequence of the joinder decision is not substantiated.[884] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that, notwithstanding that the joinder added some degree of complexity to the proceedings, the mere contention that separate trials would have proceeded faster is insufficient to substantiate a claim that undue delay occurred as a result of the joinder.[885] The Appeals Chamber rejects the arguments made in this respect.

366. As for the remaining arguments relating to the conduct of the Prosecution and of the other relevant authorities, the Appeals Chamber finds merit in the submission that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that it did not need to "consider the conduct of the Prosecution or other legal authorities."[886] As held repeatedly, the conduct of the parties and of the relevant authorities are relevant factors to take into account in determining whether an accused's fundamental right to a trial without undue delay has been infringed.[887] Given the significant length of the instant proceedings at the time it delivered its judgement, it was incumbent upon the Trial Chamber to carefully assess whether, besides the complexity of the case, the conduct of the parties and of other relevant authorities may have contributed to any unjustifiable delays in this case.

367. Concerning the conduct of the Prosecution, the Appeals Chamber observes that, from their arrests to the commencement of the trial on 12 June 2001, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Nsabimana spent almost four years in pre-trial detention, Nteziryayo three years, and Kanyabashi and Ndayambaje six years. The Appeals Chamber accepts that preparing such a case for trial can reasonably require a lengthy period of time but emphasises that every effort should be made to bring cases to trial as expeditiously as possible.[888]

368. Although the decisions of the Prosecution to request to amend the indictments and to join the trials may have increased the length of the pre-trial proceedings in this case, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje do not demonstrate that these decisions, which are expressly allowed by the Rules, improperly prolonged the trial.[889]

369. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that the Trial Chamber expressly acknowledged in its 26 November 2008 Decision that the Prosecution repeatedly failed to comply with its disclosure obligations towards the Defence.[890] The Trial Chamber generally concluded in this context that measures had been taken to remedy these failures and that the issue was therefore settled and did not need to be relitigated.[891] However, neither in its 26 November 2008 Decision nor in the Trial Judgement did the Trial Chamber specifically address Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's claim that the Prosecution's disclosure violations unduly delayed the proceedings.[892]

370. As regards the impact of the Prosecution's failure to comply with its disclosure obligations on the length of the proceedings, the Appeals Chamber observes that when the Prosecution requested in 1998 that the trials of the co-Accused be joined and the indictments against them be modified, it stated that it would be ready to start the trial "as soon as the Trial Chamber" would render its decisions on these matters.[893] The amendments of the indictments were granted on 10 and 12 August 1999, and the joinder was decided on 5 October 1999.[894] The trial, however, did not start [888] See Renzaho Appeal Judgement, para. 240.

[889] The Appeals Chamber also rejects Kanyabashi's contention that by requesting his transfer to the Tribunal, the Prosecution deprived him of the opportunity to have a trial within a reasonable time in Belgium as it fails to see how the fact that his trial could have been conducted faster in Belgium has any impact on whether undue delay occurs in these proceedings. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber rejects Kanyabashi's general and unsubstantiated claims that the Prosecution artificially complicated and lengthened the proceedings and that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting his requests for exclusion of evidence. See supra, fn. 856.

before 12 June 2001,[895] primarily as a result of the Prosecution's failure to comply with its disclosure obligations and its lack of readiness, as discussed in detail below.

371. Specifically, in June 2000, the Prosecution stated that it would be ready to start the presentation of its case only in November 2000.[896] Because the trial had not yet started by February 2001, the then presiding judge of the case, Judge Kama, convened a status conference on 2 February 2001 during which he asked the Prosecutor whether all the disclosures pursuant to Rule 66 of the Rules were finally completed, emphasising that it was the pre-condition for the trial to begin.[897] The record reflects that the Prosecution had still not complied with its Rule 66 disclosure obligations at the time.[898] Judge Kama stressed that the longest periods of detention had occurred in this case and stated that "2001 seemed to be very far away when some commitments were made", expressly referring to the commitment made by the Prosecution in June 2000 to start its case in November of that year.[899] The Prosecutor responded that "it is true that we are rather late. We made pledges that we were not able to keep. I believe that at this time […] we are absolutely ready to begin our trial […] on 1st of April of this year."[900] During this status conference, the trial was set to commence on 14 May 2001.[901] Following the death of Judge Kama on 6 May 2001, the trial finally started on 12 June 2001.[902]

372. It transpires from the procedural history summarised above that the Prosecution's failure to comply with its disclosure obligations and lack of readiness delayed the start of the trial by several months. Although the Prosecution acknowledged its lack of readiness and belatedness in fulfilling its disclosure obligations, upon which the start of the trial depended, it does not provide any explanation as to why it was not in a position to disclose some of the relevant materials despite express orders from the Trial Chamber or why it repeatedly changed the date for its readiness to commence trial. While the trial was postponed by one month as a result of the death of Judge Kama,[903] the record shows that the fact that the trial was delayed to spring 2001 was largely caused by the Prosecution's inability to meet its disclosure obligations and lack of readiness. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution's failure to fulfill its disclosure obligations created unjustified delays in the start of the trial.

[895] Trial Judgement, paras. 74, 6341. The Appeals Chamber also observes that, before the joinder of trials, the dates for the start of the individual trials of Kanayabashi and Ndayambaje had already been set up for 8 April 1997 and 20 May 1997, respectively. See ibid., paras. 6278, 6287, 6290.

373. With respect to the trial phase, the Appeals Chamber observes that, as highlighted by Ntahobali and Kanyabashi, the trial phase lasted over eight years and was thus proportionally longer than in other multi-accused cases at the Tribunal.[904] The Appeals Chamber, however, stresses that a more accelerated pace of other multi-accused cases does not, in and of itself, demonstrate undue delay.[905]

374. As noted by the Trial Chamber, the length of the proceedings was increased in this particular case by the replacement of a judge in the course of the trial, the presentation of six Defence cases and the plurality of cross-examinations for every witness.[906] Although not taken into account by the Trial Chamber when examining whether undue delay occurred, the Appeals Chamber further observes that, during the trial phase, the judges sitting in this case were also involved in several other proceedings before the Tribunal. Indeed, the Trial Chamber expressly noted in the "Procedural History" section of the Trial Judgement that it was not able to sit in the Nyiramasuhuko et al. case: (i) from 4 to 25 July 2001, 1 to 5 October 2001, 26 November to 13 December 2001, 16 September to 9 October 2002, 18 November to 12 December 2002, and 31 March to 24 April 2003 because all three judges of the Trial Chamber were seised of the Kajelijeli case; and (ii) from 3 to 25 September 2001, 28 January to 19 February 2002, 6 to 14 May 2002, 19 August to 12 September 2002, 13 January to 30 April 2003, and 5 to 15 May 2003 because all three judges of the Trial Chamber were seised of the Kamuhanda case.[907] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that: (i) Judge Bossa, who was assigned to the case on 20 October 2003, was also at the time assigned to the Ndindabahizi case, which was in session notably from [903] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's undeveloped claim that the death of Judge Kama unduly delayed the commencement of the trial. See supra, fn. 856.

[904] For example:
- in the Ndindiliyimana et al. case, a four-accused case, the trial phase extended over four years and nine months;
- in the Bizimungu et al. case, a four-accused case, the trial phase lasted over five years;
- in the Bagosora et al. case, a four-accused case, the trial phase lasted for five years and two months; and
- in the Nahimana et al. case, a three-accused case, the trial phase lasted two years and ten months.

27 October to 28 November 2003 and on 1 and 2 March 2004;[908] (ii) all three judges of the Trial Chamber were also seised of the Bisengimana sentencing case, in which they sat on 17 November 2005, 7 December 2005, 19 January 2006, and 20 April 2006;[909] and (iii) all three judges of the Trial Chamber were seised of the Nzabirinda sentencing case, in which they sat on 14 December 2006, 17 January 2007, and 23 February 2007.[910]

375. It is unquestionable that the pace of the trial was affected by the judges' obligations in other cases. Whereas the proceedings in this case needed interruptions so as to allow the parties to prepare,[911] the judges' obligations in other cases prevented them from sitting in this case for approximately 36 weeks. In light of the time required to dispose of the motions filed in these other cases, deliberate on their merits, and write the judgements, these additional obligations also necessarily significantly reduced the time the Trial Chamber judges could devote to the present case.

376. The Appeals Chamber observes that it was practice for judges of the Tribunal to participate simultaneously in multiple proceedings given the workload of the Tribunal during the relevant period.[912] It also notes that significant efforts were made by the authorities of the Tribunal to obtain the necessary resources to complete its mandate while ensuring the utmost respect for the rights of all accused.[913] However, in the particular circumstances of this case where the co-Accused had already been in detention for nearly 4 to 6 years at the start of the trial and which had already suffered from significant delays,[914] the Appeals Chamber concludes that the additional delays resulting from the judges' simultaneous participation to other proceedings caused undue delay. The Appeals Chamber recalls that logistical considerations should not take priority over the trial

[911] As regards the Prosecution's heavy reliance on the fact that most of the co-Accused repeatedly requested more time to prepare their defence, the Appeals Chamber emphasises that an accused cannot be blamed for trying to take full advantage of the resources afforded by the law in their defence as long as his conduct is not obstructive. Noting that the right to a fair trial in Article 20 of the Statute is in pari materia with Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, the Appeals Chamber considers that the jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights ("ECtHR") may provide useful guidance for the interpretation of the right to trial without undue delay. In this regard, see, e.g., Yagci and Sargin v. Turkey, ECtHR, Nos. 16419/90 and 16426/90, Judgment, 8 June 1995, para. 66. Regarding the reliance on the jurisprudence of the ECtHR, see Prosecutor v. Milan Martić, Case No. IT-95-11-AR73.2, Decision on Appeal against the Trial Chamber's Decision on the Evidence of Witness Milan Babić, 14 September 2006, paras. 18, 19.
[912] During the Nyiramasuhuko et al. trial, the Tribunal's trial chambers were seised of 38 cases involving 53 accused.
[913] The Appeals Chamber notes that, in 2002, in response to the request made by the then President of the Tribunal to complete its tasks within a reasonable amount of time in order to "respect the rights of the accused and to meet the expectations of the victims, Rwandan society and the United Nations", the Security Council established a pool of ad litem judges. See "Identical Letters dated 14 September 2001 from the Secretary-General addressed to the President of the General Assembly and the President of the Security Council", UN Doc. [914] The Appeals Chamber refers to the delays caused by the Prosecution's lack of readiness, the replacement of Judge Maqutu, and the inability of witnesses to travel from Rwanda to Arusha as scheduled. See supra, paras. 364, 370-372.

chamber's duty to safeguard the fairness of the proceedings.[915] In the same vein, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that organisational hurdles and lack of resources cannot reasonably justify the prolongation of proceedings that had already been significantly delayed.[916]

377. With respect to the contention that the judgement drafting phase was excessively long, the Appeals Chamber observes that two years and two and a half months elapsed between the end of the closing arguments and the written delivery of the Trial Judgement.[917] Given the size and complexity of the case, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that this period was excessive and amounted to undue delay.[918] The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's, [916] The Appeals Chamber notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, the African Commission on Human and People's Rights, and the ECtHR have held that it is for the contracting States to organise their legal systems in such a way that their courts can meet the requirement of a trial within a reasonable time. See, e.g., *B. [917] See Trial Judgement, paras. 85, 6610, 6615.

[918] The Appeals Chamber notes that in the Mugenzi and Mugiraneza case, it did not consider that a three-year period between closing submissions and the issuance of the Trial Judgement constituted undue delay. See Mugenzi and Mugiraneza Appeal Judgement, para. 35. The Appeals Chamber also found that an 18-month Judgement drafting phase in a complex single accused case, while concerning, did not amount to undue delay. See Renzaho Appeal Judgement, para. 241.

Ntahobali's, Nteziryayo's, Kanyabashi's, and Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber erred when it found that in light of the complexity of this case the duration of the judgement drafting phase was reasonable.

378. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that delays in the start of the trial due to the Prosecution's conduct and delays resulting from the Trial Chamber judges' simultaneous assignment to multiple cases cannot be reasonably explained or justified. As a result, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred when it found that the length of the proceedings was reasonable and adequately explained by the complexity of the case.

379. The Appeals Chamber now turns to Ntahobali's and Nteziryayo's argument that the appellate stage of the proceedings was also unduly delayed as a result of the unreasonable time taken to translate the Trial Judgement into French.[919] On this matter, the Appeals Chamber observes that the official French translation of the Trial Judgement was served on the parties on 5 February 2013,[920] over one year and a half after the issuance of the written Trial Judgement in English.[921] Given the co-Appellants' inability to understand English, extensions of time for the filing of their appeal briefs were granted from the date of service of the French translation of the Trial Judgement to allow them to make full answer and defence.[922] The initial scheduling of this case was based on a formal revised translation available at the end of August 2012.[923] However, only a non-revised informal working copy of the French translation of the Trial Judgement was made available to the parties in July 2012. As a result of the belated filing of the finalised formal French translation of the Trial Judgement, the co-Appellants' appeal briefs were delayed to April 2013, which impaired the Appeals Chamber's ability to examine their appeals within the expected schedule.

380. The Appeals Chamber underlines the difficulty of translating a 1,468 single-spaced pages document which contains thousands of references and addresses complex legal concepts. The French translation of the Trial Judgement also reflects that the highest quality standards were applied in the present case. Neither Ntahobali nor Nteziryayo effectively demonstrates that the overall time taken to translate and revise a trial judgement of this complexity and magnitude from English to French was unreasonably long and created undue delay. Their contention is therefore rejected.

However, the French translation of the trial judgement was only completed and served on the parties at the beginning of February 2013, occasioning a five-month delay in the filing of the appeal briefs of the six convicted persons and of the response brief to the prosecution's appeal.").

381. The Appeals Chamber will now examine the allegations of prejudice.

2. Prejudice

382. In the context of its discussion on undue delay, the Trial Chamber noted that the Defence had offered "no specific assertion of legal prejudice beyond the general complaint that the trial was unfair and that Ndayambaje could not properly answer the charges against him".[924] It concluded that the co-Accused had "not demonstrated that they suffered any legal prejudice".[925]

383. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje submit that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of their prejudice resulting from the delays in the proceedings.[926] In this respect, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje contend that the Trial Chamber erred in requiring them to demonstrate a "legal prejudice" and in failing to provide a reasoned opinion in this respect.[927] Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje allege that they suffered prejudice because of: (i) the prolonged detention on remand; (ii) the death or disappearance of witnesses and the alteration of the witnesses' memory due to the passage of time; (iii) limitations in the number of witnesses and the time allowed for examination during trial; (iv) the Trial Chamber's refusal to conduct a site visit because of the considerable time that had elapsed since 1994 and the additional delays it would create; (v) the physical, psychological, and emotional distress caused by the lengthy detention on remand and separation from their families; (vi) pecuniary losses incurred as a result of their detention; and (vii) their inability to complete educational studies.[928] Nyiramasuhuko adds that the Trial Chamber failed to address her argument that, as the only woman in the Tribunal's custody, the conditions of her detention were particularly harsh because she was almost completely isolated.[929]

384. The Prosecution generally responds that the co-Appellants "vigorously litigated their cases", that the record reflects that they had recourse to all available remedies, and that the Trial Chamber was "generous" in allotting them the time to ensure that their fair trial rights were respected.[930]

385. The meaning of "legal prejudice" in the Trial Judgement is not clear. In any event, the Appeals Chamber clarifies that any form of prejudice that a party allegedly suffered as a result of undue delay ought to be considered. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's failure to expressly address the entirety of the co-Accused's arguments[931] and conduct a comprehensive assessment of their alleged prejudice in the Trial Judgement infringed the co-Accused's rights to a reasoned opinion under Article 22 of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules.

386. Turning to the specific allegations of prejudice, the Appeals Chamber rejects as unsubstantiated or insufficiently supported the arguments related to the death or disappearance of witnesses,[932] the alteration of the witnesses' memory,[933] the limitations in the number of witnesses and time allowed for cross-examination, the pecuniary losses incurred as a result of detention, and the inability to complete educational studies.

387. Although the Trial Chamber specifically relied on the fact that it was unlikely that the sites remained in the same condition so many years after the events in question and that the visits may not have been "completed in a short period of time" in support of its decision to refuse site visits,[934] its decision reflects that it relied on a number of other reasons unrelated to the length of the proceedings to reach its conclusion.[935] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no merit in the submission that the length of the proceedings deprived the parties of site visits.

[930] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 7. See also AT. 21 April 2015 pp. 35, 36.

[931] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali raised lengthy arguments regarding their prejudice that the Trial Chamber did not address in the 20 February 2004 Decision and 26 November 2008 Decision. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 59-64, referring to 24 June 2003 Motion, paras. 164-190, 20 February 2004 Decision, para. 16; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 4, referring to 22 August 2008 Motion, paras. 53, 120, 134-136, 145-152, 182, 183, 26 November 2008 Decision, paras. 54, 55, 59-61.

[932] Ntahobali does not point to any specific incident where he was unable to locate and present potential Defence witnesses nor does he explain how the testimony of such witnesses would have supported his case. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 24, fn. 41.

[933] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's reliance on the passage of time between the events and the witnesses' testimonies to explain inconsistencies or errors of some Prosecution witnesses caused him prejudice. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 24, fn. 40, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 171, 1436, 2090, 2725, 2770, 3801, 3948, 4174, 4598, 4631, 4711. The Appeals Chamber observes that: (i) paragraphs 171, 1436, 2090, 3801, 4174, 4598, 4631, 4711 of the Trial Judgement referred to by Ntahobali relate to allegations on the basis of which he was not charged; (ii) Ntahobali was not convicted in relation to the allegation discussed in paragraph 2725 of the Trial Judgement; and (iii) although the Trial Chamber relied on the passage of time in paragraphs 2770 and 3948 of the Trial Judgement, there is no indication that such a conclusion would have been different if the witness had testified earlier.

[935] The Trial Chamber further concluded that the visits were not necessary since: (i) a considerable number of exhibits, including photographs and maps, had already been tendered to assist the Trial Chamber's familiarisation with the

388. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls its finding that the present proceedings were unduly delayed as a result of the Prosecution's conduct and the Trial Chamber judges' simultaneous assignment to multiple proceedings, delays which are not attributable to the co-Accused.[936] These delays prolonged the detention of the co-Accused. The Appeals Chamber finds that these delays and the resulting prolonged detention constitute prejudice per se and that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the co-Accused did not suffer prejudice.[937]

389. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's specific argument regarding her conditions of detention, the Appeals Chamber is mindful that, as the only woman in the Tribunal's custody, Nyiramasuhuko's conditions of detention differed from those of the other detainees. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko fails to substantiate her claim on appeal that the prejudice resulting from the prolongation of her detention on remand was greater than that suffered by her co-Accused. The Appeals Chamber therefore rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that she was adversely affected by the undue delay in the present proceedings due to her status as the only female detainee in the Tribunal's custody.

390. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the period of almost 16 years of pre-trial and trial proceedings was adequately explained by the complexity of the case and that the right of Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje to be tried without undue delay provided for in Article 20(4)(c) of the Statute had not been violated. The Appeals Chamber further finds that this violation caused them prejudice. The Appeals Chamber will now turn to the issue of remedy.

3. Remedy

391. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that "any violation, even if it entails a relative degree of prejudice, requires a proportionate remedy".[938] The nature and form of the effective remedy should be proportional to the gravity of harm that is suffered.[939]

392. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, Nteziryayo, and Ndayambaje request that the Appeals Chamber order a stay or termination of the proceedings[940] or, in the alternative, a reduction of their sentences.[941] Ntahobali and Ndayambaje further request financial compensation for the violation of their right to be tried without undue delay.[942]

393. As held above, the Appeals Chamber considers that the undue delay in this case has prejudiced Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje.

394. However, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the violation of the co-Appellants' right to be tried without undue delay and the prejudice they suffered were so serious or egregious as to justify a stay or the termination of the proceedings requested by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, Nteziryayo, and Ndayambaje.[943] Nevertheless, in light of the length of the undue delay, the Appeals Chamber is also not convinced that a formal recognition of the violation would constitute an effective remedy in the present case.

395. The Appeals Chamber observes that a reduction of sentence has been considered an effective remedy in cases where the breach of the fair trial rights resulted in the accused being detained impermissibly or for a longer period than necessary.[944] Financial compensation has also been envisioned in limited situations where the accused was ultimately not found guilty.[945] In the Rwamakuba case, where the accused was acquitted of all charges, a financial compensation was awarded to André Rwamakuba as part of an effective remedy for the violations of his rights to legal assistance and to initial appearance without delay.[946]

> […] However, even if it were to reconsider the issue of its personal jurisdiction, the Appeals Chamber does not find that these newly and more detailed submitted breaches rise to the requisite level of egregiousness amounting to the Tribunal's loss of personal jurisdiction. The Appeals Chamber is mindful that it must maintain the correct balance between "the fundamental rights of the accused and the essential interests of the international community in the prosecution of persons charged with serious violations of international humanitarian law." While a Chamber may use its discretion under the circumstances of a case to decline to exercise jurisdiction, it should only do so "where to exercise that jurisdiction in light of serious and egregious violations of the accused's rights would prove detrimental to the court's integrity." For example, "in circumstances where an accused is very seriously mistreated, maybe even subject to inhuman, cruel or degrading treatment, or torture, before being handed over to the Tribunal, this may constitute a legal impediment." However, those cases are exceptional and, in most circumstances, the "remedy of setting aside jurisdiction, will . . . be disproportionate." The Appeals Chamber gives due weight to the violations alleged by the Appellant; however, it does not consider that this case falls within the exceptional category of cases highlighted above.

396. The Appeals Chamber considers that any determination as to whether a reduction of sentence or granting of financial compensation may be appropriate and effective remedies in the present case can only be made in light of the gravity of the offences the co-Appellants are convicted of and their individual circumstances. The Appeals Chamber will therefore rule on the matter only after examining the merits of the remaining challenges raised by the co-Appellants and the Prosecution and after reaching its final conclusions on the co-Appellants' guilt and individual circumstances in Section XII below.

4. Conclusion

397. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje have demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that their right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused them prejudice. The Appeals Chamber nonetheless finds that Ntahobali and Nteziryayo have failed to demonstrate that undue delay occurred on appeal.

398. In the interests of justice, the Appeals Chamber finds proprio motu that the Trial Chamber also erred in finding that Nsabimana's right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused him prejudice.

399. The Appeals Chamber will rule on the appropriate remedy in Section XII below.

IV. APPEAL OF PAULINE NYIRAMASUHUKO

400. The Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko guilty of conspiracy to commit genocide.[947] It also found her guilty of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.[948] The Trial Chamber further found Nyiramasuhuko guilty of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for rapes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office.[949]

401. Nyiramasuhuko raises challenges related to the fairness of the proceedings, her indictment, and the assessment of her allegations of fabrication of evidence. She also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her of conspiracy to commit genocide, in its assessment of her alibis, in finding her responsible in relation to crimes at the Butare Prefecture Office, and in relation to her responsibility for distributing condoms at the beginning of June 1994. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

The Trial Chamber also determined that Nyiramasuhuko bore superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings committed by Interahamwe following her orders during attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office and took this into account as an aggravating factor in sentencing. See ibid., paras. 5886, 5970, 6052, 6207.

A. Fairness of the Proceedings (Grounds 8, 9, 11, and 12 in part)

402. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber demonstrated an appearance of bias through applying different standards when assessing Prosecution and Defence evidence and raises challenges related to Expert Witness Guichaoua's report and testimony, the cross-examination of Prosecution witnesses, and the disclosure of potentially exculpatory material and information that could have assisted her in the preparation of her defence.[950] The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

1. Appearance of Bias (Ground 8)

403. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber demonstrated an appearance of bias through applying different standards when assessing Prosecution and Defence evidence.[951] She contends that this bias is demonstrated through the Trial Chamber's: (i) failure to scrutinise the credibility of several Prosecution witnesses in light of their ties and the evolving nature of their evidence which suggested collusion, when considered together with its rejection of her Defence witnesses simply because of the witnesses' relationships with her;[952] (ii) quasi-systematic acceptance of "harebrained" explanations from Prosecution witnesses concerning inconsistencies within their evidence,[953] viewed alongside its rejection of Defence evidence based on insignificant contradictions without considering the relevant circumstances;[954] and (iii) reasoning when rejecting certain Defence evidence.[955] Nyiramasuhuko requests that she be acquitted as a result of the appearance of bias demonstrated by the Trial Chamber.[956]

404. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly articulated and applied the law as it relates to the burden of proof, presumption of innocence, and the assessment of evidence and contends that Nyiramasuhuko merely disagrees with the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence without identifying any specific error.[957]

[951] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 1.48; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 284-316. See also Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 711. Nyiramasuhuko develops further allegations of bias on the part of the Trial Chamber under other grounds of appeal, which she had failed to raise in her notice of appeal, despite amending it twice. The Appeals Chamber has addressed these allegations where directly relevant above and below when it deemed it in the interests of justice.
[952] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 1.48-1.50; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 285-302, 305-308, 312, 313.

405. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that a presumption of impartiality attaches to the judges of the Tribunal and that this presumption cannot be easily rebutted.[958] An appearance of bias exists if "the circumstances would lead a reasonable observer, properly informed, to reasonably apprehend bias."[959] It is for the appealing party alleging bias to rebut the presumption of impartiality enjoyed by the judges of this Tribunal.[960] The Appeals Chamber also recalls that the appealing party must set forth the arguments in support of an allegation of bias in a precise manner and that the Appeals Chamber cannot entertain sweeping or abstract allegations that are neither substantiated nor detailed to rebut the presumption of impartiality.[961]

406. While the possibility is not ruled out that decisions rendered by a judge or a chamber could suffice to establish bias, it was held that this would be "truly extraordinary".[962] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that the European Court of Human Rights has affirmed on several occasions that complaints concerning judges' lack of independence and impartiality grounded on the content of judicial decisions cannot be considered objectively justified.[963]

407. In the present instance, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko seeks to demonstrate an appearance of bias through a fragmented view and incomplete reading of the Trial Judgement, challenging only the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in assessing specific parts of the record and particular aspects of the evidence which led to adverse findings.[964]

[964] Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the assessment of the evidence raised under Ground 8 of her appeal, where developed, have been addressed by the Appeals Chamber in the context of the challenges to each of her convictions. See, e.g., infra, Sections IV.E.2, IV.F.2(b).

Nyiramasuhuko overlooks, for instance, the Trial Chamber's express consideration of ties between Prosecution witnesses,[965] the reasons the Trial Chamber provided for accepting some Prosecution evidence despite her allegation of fabrication,[966] the fact that her alibi evidence was not rejected simply because her alibi witnesses were related to her,[967] and entire portions of the Trial Chamber's explanations for rejecting the Defence evidence she deems should have been accepted.[968] Nyiramasuhuko also fails to take into account the Trial Chamber's analysis that led to the rejection of Prosecution evidence implicating her in crimes,[969] the Trial Chamber's refusal to enter certain convictions on the basis that it would be prejudicial to her,[970] as well as the fact that she was acquitted of the majority of the charges brought against her by the Prosecution.[971] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable observer, properly informed, would not be led to reasonably apprehend bias in these circumstances. As such, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions, even if they revealed errors in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence, would not establish a reasonable apprehension of bias.

408. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to rebut the presumption of impartiality attached to the judges of the Trial Chamber and, accordingly, dismisses Ground 8 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

2. Expert Witness Guichaoua's Report and Testimony (Ground 9)

409. On 27 April 2004, the Trial Chamber denied Nyiramasuhuko's motion to prevent the Prosecution from filing a portion of a report by André Guichaoua ("Guichaoua") based on Nyiramasuhuko's 1994 diary, seized during her arrest on 18 July 1997 and put under seal pursuant

The Appeals Chamber further observes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's claim, the Trial Chamber did not disregard Defence Witness Babin's evidence, but took it into account in order to assess the evidence relevant to her alibi. Similarly, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not dismiss Defence Witness WTRT's evidence on the basis of his status as a Hutu soldier. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 314, 315; Trial Judgement, paras. 2541. 2776, 2778; infra, Section IV.E.2(b)(iii)c.

to a decision of 12 October 2000.[972] The Trial Chamber concluded that the fact that the diary was put under seal did not preclude the Prosecution from using the material for the purposes of prosecution and that any contention about the admissibility of the report or the diary was premature.[973] On 28 April 2004, the Prosecution disclosed Guichaoua's report ("Guichaoua Report"), which contained materials from and an analysis of Nyiramasuhuko's diary for the purposes of disclosure pursuant to Rule 94*bis*(A) of the Rules.[974]

410. On 23 June 2004, the Trial Chamber certified Guichaoua as an expert witness in political science.[975] On 24 June 2004, the Trial Chamber admitted the two volumes of the Guichaoua Report as Exhibits P136 and P137, respectively.[976] In admitting Exhibit P137, the Trial Chamber rejected Nyiramasuhuko's objection that the diary discussed in the Guichaoua Report was not admissible.[977] Nyiramasuhuko filed an appeal against the 24 June 2004 Oral Decision, which the Appeals Chamber dismissed on 4 October 2004.[978]

411. Expert Witness Guichaoua testified in June, September, and October 2004.[979]

412. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber rejected the contention that Expert Witness Guichaoua lacked impartiality and that his evidence was beyond his area of expertise.[980] The Trial Chamber also dismissed a request to exclude the Guichaoua Report and the expert's testimony on the basis of the lack of notice of his evidence.[981] The Trial Chamber partly relied on the Guichaoua Report and his testimony in finding Nyiramasuhuko responsible for conspiracy to commit genocide.[982]

413. Nyiramasuhuko raises challenges relating to the admission into evidence of the Guichaoua Report containing her diary, and submits that the Trial Chamber erred in allowing Expert Witness Guichaoua to testify beyond his area of expertise and in violation of his obligation of neutrality.[983] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Admission of the Guichaoua Report

414. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Prosecution disclosed the Guichaoua Report only at the end of its case in April 2004 despite its earlier commitment in 2001 to disclose the report as soon as it was received.[984] She contends that by failing to notify her of its intention to use the diary and to disclose the report prior to April 2004, the Prosecution violated its due diligence and disclosure obligations.[985] In her view, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that these violations of the Prosecution's obligations and the addition of this voluminous piece of evidence into the record at the end of the Prosecution case violated her fair trial rights and caused her serious prejudice in the preparation of her defence.[986] She also contends that, by authorising the admission of the Guichaoua Report in such circumstances, the Trial Chamber endorsed and encouraged the Prosecution's grossly negligent conduct and demonstrated its partiality in violation of Article 12 of the Statute.[987] Nyiramasuhuko specifies that she "is not requesting the Appeals Chamber to reconsider" the 24 June 2004 Oral Decision but "seeks to present the outcome of the Prosecutor's reprehensible

Nyiramasuhuko's written submissions are also particularly unclear as to whether or not she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting into evidence the Guichaoua Report, which led to the indirect admission of her diary, or in admitting the diary itself. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 1.57-1.63, 1.65-1.67, heading Ground 9 at p.13; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, heading Ground 9 at p. 59, paras. 353, 637 (French).

conduct and the Chamber's complaisant attitude towards [her] during the trial, thus undermining the fairness of the trial."[988]

415. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to rule on the arguments pertaining to the violation of fair trial rights that she and Ntahobali submitted at the close of the trial and in limiting itself to the sole question of the admissibility of the Guichaoua Report.[989] Nyiramasuhuko requests that the Appeals Chamber recognise the irreparable harm she suffered and order a permanent stay of proceedings.[990]

416. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko attempts to relitigate the admissibility of the diary which was already adjudicated by the Appeals Chamber.[991]

417. At the appeals hearing, in response to the Appeals Chamber's invitation, Nyiramasuhuko clarified that she was not challenging the 24 June 2004 Oral Decision by which the Trial Chamber admitted the Guichaoua Report into evidence but was instead taking issue with the conduct of the Prosecution with respect to the Guichaoua Report.[992] She also explained that she did not raise the Prosecution's alleged violation of its disclosure obligations at the time the Trial Chamber decided to admit the report because she believed, at the time, that she could not raise an objection on the matter.[993] She argued that her allegation on the matter should nonetheless be examined considering that the Trial Chamber itself did not find her allegation untimely and the significance of the prejudice she suffered.[994]

418. The Appeals Chamber observes that, despite her explanation during the appeals hearing, Nyiramasuhuko's submissions remain particularly unclear, if not contradictory. While expressly stating that she does not request the Appeals Chamber to reconsider the 24 June 2004 Oral Decision by which the Trial Chamber admitted the Guichaoua Report, she also unambiguously requests it to [988] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 358. Under Ground 9 of her appeal, Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in allowing Witness Guichaoua to tender her diary into evidence, thus permitting him to add material evidence to the trial, instead of limiting his function to assist the Trial Chamber in understanding the evidence already admitted. See ibid., para. 637. Nyiramasuhuko, however, fails to substantiate her claim and fails to appreciate that the diary was tendered by the Prosecution and admitted into the record as a separate piece of evidence as Exhibit P144 on 25 June 2004.

[991] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 102, referring to 4 October 2004 Appeal Decision, para. 6. During the appeals hearing, the Prosecution submitted that there was "no showing of prejudice", arguing that: (i) Nyiramasuhuko had the appropriate time to prepare her defence; (ii) she never raised the issue of insufficient time and resources for making a defence to the Guichaoua Report; and (iii) the Trial Chamber "went to great lengths to avoid any prejudice to her in the use of those exhibits because it only relied on diary entries that she herself had admitted were her own." See AT. 14 April 2015 pp. 53, 54.
[992] See Order for the Preparation of the Appeals Hearing, 25 March 2015 ("25 March 2015 Order"), pp. 1, 2; AT. 14 April 2015 pp. 30, 31 (French).

find that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting the report into the record and grant her remedy for the prejudice allegedly suffered from the violation of her rights in this regard.

419. As conceded by Nyiramasuhuko, the Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko did not raise to the attention of the Trial Chamber in the context of the admission of the Guichaoua Report the matter of the Prosecution's alleged failure to give notice of its intention to use the diary prior to April 2004 and to timely disclose the report, as well as the alleged resulting violation of her right to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of her defence. At the time, Nyiramasuhuko limited her objections to the reliability of her diary, its unlawful seizure and improper custody, and the violation of her right to remain silent.[995] The Trial Chamber cannot therefore be faulted for not considering the alleged violation of the Prosecution's obligations and Nyiramasuhuko's resulting prejudice when authorising the admission of the Guichaoua Report on 24 June 2004. Nyiramasuhuko's argument alleging a lack of impartiality on the part of the Trial Chamber in authorising the admission of the Guichaoua Report despite the Prosecution's alleged "grossly negligent conduct" is therefore also dismissed.

420. Nyiramasuhuko raised the matter of the Prosecution's alleged failure to give timely notice of its intention to use the diary and the resulting prejudice in her closing submissions. Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali requested the exclusion of Expert Witness Guichaoua's evidence, including the Guichaoua Report – which relied heavily upon Nyiramasuhuko's diary – based on the prejudice that they allegedly suffered from the Prosecution's failure to notify them of its intention to use Nyiramasuhuko's diary prior to 16 April 2004.[996] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber determined that there was no reason to reconsider its 24 June 2004 Oral Decision but did not expressly address the new contention raised by Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali about the prejudice resulting from the late notice of the Prosecution's intention to rely on this evidence.[997] Regardless of whether the Trial Chamber erred in failing to expressly assess this new contention in the Trial Judgement, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's submissions at trial regarding the belated notice are without merit. Indeed, the record reveals that the Prosecution gave notice of its intention to retain Nyiramasuhuko's diary "for purpose of the trial" prior to its commencement on 31 January 2001,[998] and included it on its exhibit list submitted on 30 April 2001.[999] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's allegation of prejudice resulting from the admission of the Guichaoua Report, which relied upon Nyiramasuhuko's diary.

(b) Expert Witness Guichaoua's Testimony

421. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in allowing Expert Witness Guichaoua to testify beyond the scope of his expertise by giving his opinion and speculating on allegations levelled against her.[1000] She contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness Guichaoua's lack of impartiality and his failure to comply with his obligation as an expert to testify with the utmost neutrality and scientific objectivity.[1001] In support of her argument, Nyiramasuhuko points out Witness Guichaoua's long-standing and active involvement in the Prosecution's investigations[1002] as well as his close friendship with a person killed in April 1994 in Butare and his distress during his cross-examination when the death of his friend was discussed.[1003] Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber's failure to properly evaluate Witness Guichaoua's objectivity was so unjust and unreasonable as to constitute an abuse of discretion.[1004]

422. The Prosecution did not respond to these submissions.[1005]

423. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to substantiate her submission that the Trial Chamber erred by allowing Expert Witness Guichaoua to testify beyond his area of expertise. Nyiramasuhuko does not provide any argument in support of her submission beyond the generic

The Appeals Chamber also notes that, on 17 October 2002, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's request to lift the seal on Nyiramasuhuko's diary for the purpose of translation and that the Prosecution agreed to provide a copy of the translation to the Defence. See T. 17 October 2002 pp. 57, 58.

[1001] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 360, 363, 364.
[1002] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 361, 362. Nyiramasuhuko argues that Witness Guichaoua introduced himself as having assisted the Prosecution for eight years as a Prosecution expert witness and that he participated in several meetings where the Prosecution's strategy was discussed. She also points out that his implication in the Prosecution's policy was acknowledged in the Karemera et al. trial case. See ibid., para. 361.

[1004] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 364.
[1005] The Prosecution explained that, by not presenting arguments in her appeal brief and merely referring to her notice of appeal in support of her contentions concerning Witness Guichaoua's qualification as an expert, Nyiramasuhuko has abandoned these contentions. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 103. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to the Prosecution's submission, Nyiramasuhuko did set forth arguments in her appeal brief in addition to referring to her notice of appeal. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 359-364.

assertion that, as an expert in political sociology, the expert could not give opinions and make speculations on the notes contained in her diary[1006] and appears to ignore that expert witnesses are ordinarily afforded wide latitude to offer opinions within their expertise.[1007] Nyiramasuhuko's undeveloped references to paragraphs of the Trial Judgement also fail to substantiate her claim that Witness Guichaoua testified beyond his expertise.[1008] Nyiramasuhuko's submission in this regard is therefore dismissed.

424. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contentions regarding the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to properly assess Expert Witness Guichaoua's alleged lack of objectivity and neutrality. It is well settled that an expert before the Tribunal "is obliged to testify with the utmost neutrality and with scientific objectivity."[1009] However, the Appeals Chamber has also held that the mere fact that an expert witness is employed by or paid by a party does not disqualify him from testifying as an expert witness.[1010] Nyiramasuhuko argues that Witness Guichaoua had a long-standing relationship with the Prosecution but fails to show how this relationship deprived Witness Guichaoua's evidence of reliability and probative value. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how the witness's emotion when remembering the death of a close friend in Butare during the genocide[1011] evinces the witness's inability to provide his opinion with the utmost objectivity and impartiality or any possible bias against Niyramasuhuko.

425. The Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred by allowing Witness Guichaoua to testify beyond his area of expertise or in the assessment of his testimony.

(c) Conclusion

426. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 9 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal in its entirety.

3. Undue Limitation of Prosecution Witnesses Cross-Examinations (Ground 11)

427. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in unduly limiting the cross-examination of Prosecution witnesses by the co-Accused by imposing the limits set out in former Rule 90(G) of the Rules.[1012] She argues that the Trial Chamber should have used its discretionary power to "permit enquiry into additional matters, as if on direct examination."[1013] Nyiramasuhuko contends that, in the circumstances, the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in allowing the amended Rule 90(G) of the Rules to apply as soon as it came into effect, thus violating the principle of equality of arms.[1014]

428. The Prosecution did not respond to these submissions.

429. In the absence of identification of the specific findings challenged and considering that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions are not substantiated, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 11 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal without further consideration.

4. Disclosure of Evidence (Ground 12 in part)

430. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to order the Prosecution to disclose potentially exculpatory material and information that could have assisted her in the preparation of her defence.[1015] Specifically, she alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to direct the Prosecution to provide her with the surnames and first names of the parents of its anticipated witnesses; and (ii) dismissing her motion seeking disclosure of the statements of the witnesses who were former members of the Rwandan Patriotic Army ("RPA").[1016]

431. Before examining Nyiramasuhuko's submissions, the Appeals Chamber recalls that decisions concerning the disclosure of evidence relate to the general conduct of trial proceedings and therefore fall within the discretion of the trial chamber.[1017] It also reiterates that in order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, the appealing party must demonstrate that the trial chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party.[1018]

(a) Disclosure of Names of the Prosecution Witnesses' Parents

432. On 8 June 2001, the Trial Chamber ordered the Prosecution to provide specific items of information regarding its anticipated protected witnesses when disclosing their written statements, such as the witnesses' names, places of birth, and ethnic origins.[1019] On 26 March 2002, the Trial Chamber dismissed a request by Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali to order the Prosecution to disclose additional information on the identifying coversheets of the witnesses' statements, including the names of the witnesses' parents.[1020]

433. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to direct the Prosecution to provide the surnames and names of the witnesses' parents.[1021] She contends that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting her argument that this information was essential to enable her to investigate and prepare her defence regarding the Prosecution witnesses because, in the Rwandan context, surnames are as common as first names.[1022] Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber's decision prevented her from conducting the necessary investigations in the preparation of her defence.[1023]

434. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate any error in the 26 March 2002 Decision and does not substantiate how she was prejudiced in the preparation of her defence.[1024]

435. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Rules, which specifically impose the disclosure of all witnesses' statements and their identity, do not provide for the disclosure of the identity of the witnesses' parents.[1025] Nyiramasuhuko's submissions, in fact, merely reflect her disagreement with the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in denying disclosure to the Defence of the identity of the Prosecution witnesses' parents. She does not demonstate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in rejecting her argument that the surnames and names of the witnesses' parents were [1019] 8 June 2001 Disclosure Decision, p. 10. The bench of Trial Chamber II was then composed of Judges Sekule, Güney, and Møse. As noted earlier, the Appeals Chamber has elected, for the sake of legibility, to refer to this bench of Trial Chamber II, to the benches that ruled on all pre-trial motions in the separate cases before their joinder, and to the bench that ultimately ruled on the joint case as the "Trial Chamber".

[1020] The Trial Chamber observed that the issue had already been adjudicated in a prior decision ruling on motions by Nteziryayo and Kanyabashi in which it had concluded that it was not convinced that the disclosure of additional information on the coversheets of the Prosecution witnesses' statements was required. See The Prosecutor v. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko et al., Case No. ICTR-98-42-T, Decision on Defence Motions for Disclosure of Information on the Coversheets of Prosecution Witness Statements, 26 March 2002 ("26 March 2002 Decision"), paras. 24, 34, p. 4, *referring to The Prosecutor v. essential to prepare her defence and does not substantiate her claim that she was prejudiced in the preparation of her defence. Her contention is therefore dismissed.

(b) Disclosure of Statements of Former RPA Members

436. On 29 April 2008, the Trial Chamber denied Nyiramasuhuko's motion seeking disclosure under Rule 68 of the Rules of witness statements of former RPA members, which were partially disclosed in another case before the Tribunal.[1026] The Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko had failed to show how such material might have been exculpatory or have a mitigating effect on her defence or how it might have affected the Prosecution witnesses' credibility.[1027] The Trial Chamber was accordingly not satisfied that the statements in question were within the scope of Rule 68(A) of the Rules.[1028]

437. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing her request to order the Prosecution to disclose the statements of the witnesses who were former RPA members whereas this evidence was material to her defence and she had demonstrated that the Prosecution had the material in its possession and that some of the statements directly related to Butare.[1029]

438. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments are unsubstantiated and should be dismissed.[1030]

439. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate any discernible error in the 29 April 2008 Decision. She provides no arguments in support of her contention, beyond the general assertion that such evidence was material to her defence and was in the Prosecution's possession. Nyiramasuhuko's submissions in this respect are accordingly dismissed.

(c) Conclusion

440. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this remaining part of Ground 12 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

B. Indictment (Grounds 3, 14-18, and 26 in part)

441. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in authorising the Prosecution to amend her indictment to add new charges against her and contends that she was not charged with the criminal conduct on the basis of which she was convicted or lacked notice thereof, and that she was materially prejudiced in the preparation of her defence.[1031] Nyiramasuhuko requests that the Appeals Chamber order a stay of the proceedings or overturn all her convictions.[1032]

442. The Appeals Chamber will first examine Nyiramasuhuko's contentions related to the amendment of the indictment, before turning to her submissions related to notice of the allegations concerning conspiracy to commit genocide, the Butare Prefecture Office, and the distribution of condoms. The Appeals Chamber will finally discuss Nyiramasuhuko's allegation of prejudice resulting from the cumulative effect of the defects in the Indictment.

1. Amendment of the Indictment (Ground 3)

443. The Prosecution submitted an initial indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali on 26 May 1997, which was confirmed on 29 May 1997.[1033] On 10 August 1999 the Prosecution was granted leave to amend the indictment, which included adding six new counts, consolidating two existing ones in a single count, and adding in relevant counts the allegation that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[1034]

444. In deciding to grant the Prosecution leave to amend the indictment as requested, the Trial Chamber held that there was no need to inquire whether or not a prima facie case had been established in support of the new counts since it had only been seised of a motion to amend the

To facilitate readibility, the Appeals Chamber will use the term "Indictment" in the body text of the present section when referring to the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment. The Appeals Chamber has also considered Nyiramasuhuko's arguments related to notice developed throughout her appeal submissions under other grounds of appeal, in particular under Grounds 19, 23, and 25.

Under Ground 18 of her appeal, Nyiramasuhuko requests a stay of the proceedings against her or, in the alternative, to be acquitted of the count of conspiracy to commit genocide "for flagrant errors of law, abuse of process, ultra vires, and irremediable prejudice to the fairness of her trial." See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 584, 585.

indictment pursuant to Rule 50 of the Rules.[1035] The Trial Chamber only satisfied itself that the Prosecution "provided sufficient grounds both in fact and in law".[1036] The Trial Chamber determined that Nyiramasuhuko "will suffer no substantial prejudice if the amendment is granted" and that "whatever prejudice might occur can be cured by the relief provided in the Rules, in particular by Rule 72".[1037]

445. On 5 October 1999, the trial of Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali was joined to the trials of Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje.[1038] In discussing in the Trial Judgement the claim that it permitted the amendment of the indictment to add the count of rape against Nyiramasuhuko without performing the requisite evaluation of the existence of prima facie evidence to support such a charge, the Trial Chamber reiterated its position that it was not required to do so, reasoning that the relevant provision in Rule 50 of the Rules requiring such determination was only introduced into the Rules in 2004 and, therefore, that it was not bound by this provision.[1039]

446. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that it did not have to ascertain the existence of prima facie evidence in support of the six new counts before authorising their inclusion in the indictment and in stating that any prejudice could be cured by Rule 72 of the Rules whereas it dismissed the bulk of the Defence's requests for additional information.[1040]

[1037] 10 August 1999 Decision, para. 20.

[1038] See Joinder Decision; Trial Judgement, paras. 16, 6320. The Prosecution further amended the indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali pursuant to the Trial Chamber's orders. The new amendments, however, did not alter the counts against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali. This fourth amended indictment, the operative one, was filed on 1 March 2001. See Trial Judgement, para. 17.

[1039] See Trial Judgement, para. 2157, fn. 5735. Relying further on the fact that Nyiramasuhuko did not appeal the 10 August 1999 Decision or seek reconsideration by the Trial Chamber and that, after the completion of the Prosecution case, sufficient evidence that could sustain a conviction for the crime of rape under Article 6(3) of the Statute had been presented by the Prosecution, the Trial Chamber found that "Ntahobali's assertion on behalf of Nyiramasuhuko is unfounded, untimely and moot." See ibid., para. 2157.

The Appeals Chamber observes that, in paragraphs 130 and 132 of her appeal brief, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in ruling that the Prosecution did not have to specify the dates of the alleged attacks in the Indictment. This argument is addressed in Section IV.B.3(a) infra, para. 493. Nyiramasuhuko further submits in her appeal brief that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) deciding that the supporting material presented by the Prosecution in Annexure B of its motion to amend the indictment would not be disclosed to her since Rule 66(A)(i) of the Rules applied; (ii) failing to recall that she requested already on 30 July 1998 that a date be set for her trial and that, during the two preceding years, she had prepared her defence on the basis of the information in the original indictment; (iii) "allowing the Prosecut[ion] to add the count of responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute […] whereas [the Prosecution] did not include any factual allegation of [her] status as a superior or, still less, any essential elements of the said status"; and (iv) permitting the addition of the count of rape as a crime against humanity when the count did not

She requests that the Appeals Chamber "note the illegality" of the indictment, quash it, and order her acquittal or a stay of proceedings.[1041] The Appeals Chamber will address Nyiramasuhuko's contentions in turn.

(a) Leave to Amend the Indictment

447. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that it did not have to ascertain the existence of prima facie evidence before granting leave to include the six new counts in the indictment.[1042] In particular, she argues that, according to the Statute and the Rules, the Trial Chamber was bound to evaluate the materials presented by the Prosecution in support of the additions sought before granting leave to amend the indictment.[1043] Nyiramasuhuko claims that even before the 2004 amendment of Rule 50 of the Rules, some trial chambers assessed whether prima facie evidence justified the requested amendment of the indictment.[1044] In her view, as a result of its failure to observe the required standard and by stating that the confirmation of the initial indictment was applicable to all amendments that followed, the Trial Chamber reversed the principle of presumption of innocence.[1045] Similarly, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably in holding, on one hand, that the guarantee set forth in Article 18 of the Statute and the procedure provided for in Rule 47 of the Rules did not apply in deciding to grant leave to amend the indictment and, on the other hand, that the deadline provided for in Rule 66(A)(i) of the Rules did apply.[1046]

448. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber exceeded its jurisdiction by justifying post facto, in its Joinder Decision, its previous decision to "intentionally" allow the count of conspiracy to commit genocide to be added "solely to enable the Prosecutor to proceed by joinder".[1047] According to her, this demonstrates that the Trial Chamber had not satisfied itself that there was an appropriate basis for adding this count.[1048] Nyiramasuhuko further claims that the Trial contain the factual basis. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 79, 80, 84, 85, 99, 110, 117-120. However, since Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise these specific allegations of error in her notice of appeal, even though she amended it twice, and since the Prosecution did not respond to her allegations, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider these arguments as they exceed the scope of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

Chamber failed to consider the Prosecution's justification for the delay in obtaining the new evidence that allegedly supported the amendments.[1049]

449. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that there was sufficient factual and legal basis in its oral and written arguments for the amendment of the indictment and that Nyiramasuhuko's allegations are mere assertions of disagreement with the Trial Chamber's ruling without demonstrating any error.[1050]

450. The Appeals Chamber notes that the requirement in Rule 50(A)(ii) of the Rules for granting leave to amend an indictment was only introduced in the Rules on 15 May 2004, following the 14th plenary session held on 23 and 24 April 2004.[1051] According to this amendment, trial chambers shall examine each of the counts and any supporting materials the Prosecution may provide to determine, applying the standard set forth in Article 18 of the Statute, whether a case exists against the accused. The Appeals Chamber also observes that, prior to the enactment of Rule 50(A)(ii) of the Rules, the practice of the trial chambers of the Tribunal regarding the need to establish a prima facie case before granting leave to amend an indictment was not uniform. In several cases, trial chambers found that granting leave to amend an indictment was a matter for their discretion and only required the Prosecution to establish the factual and legal basis in support of its motion to amend.[1052] In other cases, trial chambers examined whether prima facie evidence supported the motion to amend.[1053] When seised with appeals against decisions related to the amendment of the indictment prior to the modification of Rule 50 of the Rules, the Appeals Chamber did not provide guidance on this issue.[1054] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and

Judge Liu dissenting, finds Nyiramasuhuko's allegation that the Trial Chamber erred in law by not requiring the Prosecution to present a prima facie case in support of the new counts to be without merit and deems it unnecessary to discuss Nyiramasuhuko's remaining arguments premised on this alleged error of law.

451. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's unsubstantiated argument that the Trial Chamber exceeded its jurisdiction by justifying the addition of the count of conspiracy to commit genocide in order to enable the joinder. The 10 August 1999 Decision reflects that the Trial Chamber was satisfied that the Prosecution sufficiently supported the factual and the legal basis for the amendment of the indictment, regardless of any possible joinder of the trials.[1055] Similarly, when reading the Joinder Decision as a whole, it is clear that the Trial Chamber did not allow the inclusion of the additional count of conspiracy to commit genocide so as to support the joinder of the trials, as suggested by Nyiramasuhuko. The Trial Chamber merely concluded that the additional count of conspiracy to commit genocide provided the basis for the joinder.[1056]

452. The Appeals Chamber further rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that, in this case, the Trial Chamber failed to consider the belated nature of the Prosecution's request for the amendment. The 10 August 1999 Decision shows that the Trial Chamber took note of the Prosecution's explanation that "the amendments will bring to light evidence gathered in recent months" and that the "newly acquired evidence was obtained after confirmation of the initial indictment and after much investigation at the Butare prefecture".[1057]

453. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Liu dissenting, rejects Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the leave to amend the Indictment.

(b) Dismissal of Requests for Additional Information

454. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that any prejudice could be cured by Rule 72 of the Rules while dismissing her requests for additional information made [1056] See Joinder Decision, para. 13. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber demonstrated an appearance of bias in favour of the Prosecution by allowing the addition of the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide "so as to enable [the Prosecution] to carry out [its] strategy to charge [Nyiramasuhuko] with conspiracy to commit genocide, as part of a joinder of the Accused". See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 106-108. Recalling that the appealing party must set forth the arguments in support of an allegation of bias in a precise manner and that the Appeals Chamber cannot entertain sweeping or abstract allegations that are neither substantiated nor detailed to rebut the presumption of impartiality, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these additional unsubstantiated allegations of bias on the part of the Trial Chamber judges. See supra, para. 35.

through her preliminary motion alleging defects in the form of the indictment.[1058] Specifically, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that her amended preliminary motion of 17 April 2000 was filed out of time since, according to her, the deadline only ran from the time her statement was disclosed on 25 May 2000.[1059] She asserts that, as a result, it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber not to consider the said request for additional information.[1060]

455. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's allegations of procedural irregularities are mere assertions of disagreement with the Trial Chamber's ruling without demonstrating any error or showing resulting prejudice.[1061]

456. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that, according to the time limit that was set in Rule 72 of the Rules at the relevant time, the deadline for bringing preliminary motions was 27 October 1999.[1062] With regard to Nyiramasuhuko's first preliminary motion, filed on 29 October 1999, the Trial Chamber decided proprio motu to waive the time limit and admitted the motion even though it was filed two days after the time limit elapsed.[1063] However, the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko's 17 April 2000 Amended Motion was time barred and, as a result, inadmissible.[1064]

457. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that her 17 April 2000 Amended Motion was filed past the time limit. Nyiramasuhuko fails to provide any reference to the trial record in support of her argument that the deadline of 27 October 1999 was incorrect or that she was granted an extension of time. Nyiramasuhuko's only argument is that she received her additional statements on 25 May 2000 and that, therefore, her 17 April 2000 Amended Motion was submitted within the time limits of Rule 72(A) of the Rules.[1065] However, Nyiramasuhuko does not provide any support for this argument.[1066] Moreover, even according to her argument regarding the chain of events, Nyiramasuhuko fails to explain how the receipt of her own statement in May 2000 affects the decision of the Trial Chamber that the deadline for bringing preliminary motions was 27 October 1999, as Nyiramasuhuko confirmed that she received the Prosecution's supporting materials on 28 August 1999.[1067]

458. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the dismissal of her requests for additional information.

2. Conspiracy to Commit Genocide (Ground 18)

459. The Trial Chamber found that from 9 April until 14 July 1994, and in particular between 9 April and 19 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko agreed with other members of the Interim Government to issue directives to encourage the population to hunt down and kill Tutsis in Butare Prefecture.[1068] The Trial Chamber determined that: (i) during a Cabinet meeting of the Interim Government held on 16 or 17 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko agreed with other members of the Interim Government to remove Prefect Habyalimana and to replace him with Nsabimana;[1069] (ii) on 19 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko attended Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony and failed to dissociate herself from the content of the speeches of Prime Minister Kambanda and President Sindikubwabo during the ceremony ("Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches"), effectively endorsing their inflammatory statements;[1070] and (iii) Nyiramasuhuko, as a member of the Interim Government, adopted and issued a directive on 27 April 1994 encouraging the population to mount and man roadblocks, the purpose of which was to encourage the killing of Tutsis.[1071]

460. On this basis, and considering Nyiramasuhuko's participation with the Interim Government in many of the Cabinet meetings at which the massacre of Tutsis was discussed and in decisions which triggered the onslaught of massacres in Butare Prefecture, the Trial Chamber concluded that the only reasonable conclusion was that Nyiramasuhuko entered into an agreement with members of the Interim Government on or after 9 April 1994 to kill Tutsis within Butare Prefecture with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group.[1072] Based on these findings, the Trial

Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of conspiracy to commit genocide (Count 1) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[1073]

461. In summarising the Prosecution case against Nyiramasuhuko with respect to the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 5.1, 6.52, and 6.56 of the Indictment.[1074] The Indictment indicates that these allegations were being pursued under Count 1 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[1075] While the Trial Chamber considered that common paragraph 5.1 of the indictments of the co-Accused ("Indictments") set forth the basic elements of the alleged conspiracy, it found that the Indictments were defective in that they did not identify the specific individuals alleged to have entered into the agreement or "when and where the agreement was executed and when the conspiracy ended."[1076] However, the Trial Chamber found that these defects were cured through the Prosecution's opening statement.[1077]

462. Nyiramasuhuko submits that her Indictment was defective in relation to the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide and that the defect was neither curable nor cured.[1078] Specifically, she argues that the Indictment did not inform her of the period when she was alleged to have joined the alleged conspiracy.[1079] She also contends that the allegation that she conspired to commit

> 5.1 From late 1990 until July 1994, military personnel, members of the government, political leaders, civil servants and other personalities conspired among themselves and with others to work out a plan with the intent to exterminate the civilian Tutsi population and eliminate members of the opposition, so that they could remain in power. The components of this plan consisted of, among other things, recourse to hatred and ethnic violence, the training of and distribution of weapons to militiamen as well as the preparation of lists of people to be eliminated. In executing the plan, they organized, ordered and participated in the massacres perpetrated against the Tutsi population and of moderate Hutu. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, André Rwamakuba, Sylvain Nsabimana, Alphonse Nteziryayo, Joseph Kanyabashi, Elie Ndayambaje, Ladislas Ntaganzwa and Shalom Arsène Ntahobali elaborated, adhered to and executed this plan.
> 6.52 The massacres and the assaults thus perpetrated were the result of a strategy adopted and elaborated by political, civil and military authorities in the country, at the national as well as the local level, such as Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, Shalom Arsène Ntahobali, Joseph Kanyabashi, Elie Ndayambaje, André Rwamakuba, Sylvain Nsabimana, Alphonse Nteziryayo and Ladislas Ntaganzwa, who conspired to exterminate the Tutsi population.

The crimes were committed by them personally, by persons they assisted or by their subordinates, and with their knowledge or consent.

[1079] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 572. See also ibid., para. 594. The Appeals Chamber also understands Nyiramasuhuko to argue that the Trial Chamber failed to determine whether the Prosecution demonstrated that the genocide with the Interim Government was not pleaded in the Indictment and that this defect could not be cured as this allegation constituted a new charge distinct from the one alleged in her Indictment[1080] or constituted a radical transformation of the case against her.[1081] She argues that, because the Indictment specifically identified the co-conspirators with whom she was alleged to have conspired as her co-accused and "others" but failed to mention the Interim Government or its specific members, the Prosecution could not substitute these alleged co-conspirators with unidentified members of the Interim Government.[1082] Nyiramasuhuko contends that the members of the Interim Government with whom she was found to have conspired should have been identified in the Indictment.[1083]

463. Nyiramasuhuko's additional submissions under Ground 18 of her appeal are unclear but the Appeals Chamber understands her to argue that, although paragraphs of the Indictment refer to the implication of the Interim Government in a plan to commit genocide, they did not provide her with notice that the facts that they mentioned were pleaded in support of the count of conspiracy to commit genocide.[1084] In particular, she argues that paragraphs 6.10 through 6.12 of the Indictment did not mention her and were not cited in support of Count 1, which demonstrates that she was not charged with conspiracy with the Interim Government.[1085] She also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on her responsibility for adopting governmental directives and instructions to kill Tutsis and removing Prefect Habyalimana from office since, read together with the Prosecution's submissions filed on 31 May 2000 in response to her motion on lack of jurisdiction: (i) paragraph 6.14 of the Indictment could only be understood as alleging that she was responsible for her mission of pacification in Butare and not for the adoption of directives, notably because paragraphs 6.15 and 6.16 of the Indictment, which mention specific directives, were not cited in support of Count 1;[1086] and (ii) paragraph 6.20 of the Indictment could only be understood as alleging that she incited the population to commit massacres and not that she was responsible for the removal of Prefect Habyalimana, especially since paragraph 6.12 of the Indictment relating to the removal of the prefect does not mention her and was not cited in support of Count 1.[1087]

464. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber also erred in finding that: (i) ministers were briefed on the situation of the killings without specifying, as the Indictment did, that this was done on a regular basis;[1088] (ii) the massacres began closer to 17 April 1994 rather than after 19 April 1994 as pleaded in the Indictment, leading to a transformation of a material element of paragraph 6.22 of the Indictment;[1089] and (iii) Sindikubwabo's speech contained "coded language" while the Indictment alleged that it openly and explicitly called on the people of Butare to follow the example of the other prefectures.[1090]

465. Finally, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the Prosecution's opening statement clarified the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide and in failing to consider the irreparable prejudice she suffered as a result of the Prosecution's failure to give her notice that she was accused of having conspired with the Interim Government.[1091]

Nyiramasuhuko adds that, given that paragraphs 6.15 and 6.16 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment contained material facts that were cited in support of the count of conspiracy to commit genocide in the Bizimungu et al. case, the fact that these material facts were not pleaded against her informed her that she was not charged with them. See idem. She also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the double meaning of words such as "enemy", "accomplice", "infiltration", or "infiltrator" in the 27 April Directive whereas paragraph 6.15 did not concern her. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 611.

The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise this allegation of error in her notice of appeal, despite amending it twice, and notes that the Prosecution objects to this impermissible expansion of her appeal and did not respond to this argument. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 271. The Appeals Chamber therefore declines to consider this argument as it exceeds the scope of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

Nyiramasuhuko argues that, in its opening statement, the Prosecutor did not refer to her specifically but to the co-Accused in general and confirmed that she was charged with having conspired with her co-accused. She also contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief informed the co-Accused that they conspired "jointly and severally with one another and others known and unknown" and that the Prosecution's closing brief was the only document reflecting an allegation of conspiracy with the Interim Government in its entirety. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 3.9, 3.27; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 564

466. The Prosecution responds that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, the Indictment was not defective regarding the count of conspiracy to commit genocide as it put Nyiramasuhuko on adequate notice that she was charged with having conspired with the Interim Government from 9 April until 14 July 1994.[1092] It argues that a number of paragraphs clearly pleaded that Nyiramasuhuko conspired with members of the Interim Government as well as the conduct that manifested their agreement.[1093] It further argues that a number of paragraphs provided the timeframe for the conspiracy as "between 9 April and 14 July 1994".[1094] In the Prosecution's view, co-conspirators can be adequately pleaded by reference to a category and paragraphs 6.11, 6.15, and 6.16 of the Indictment did not need to be expressly pleaded in support of Count 1 as they referred to evidence.[1095] The Prosecution also contends that Nyiramasuhuko wrongly relies on the 31 May 2000 Prosecution Response as it does not support her claims and paragraphs of this filing "in no way superseded the Indictment which is the primary accusatory instrument".[1096] It adds that its opening statement and closing brief provided further consistent information that Nyiramasuhuko was charged with conspiracy with members of the Interim Government.[1097]

467. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the Prosecution "presents its arguments as though it were appealing the finding that the Indictment was defective because it failed to identify the co-conspirators" although it did not seek leave to do so.[1098] She also argues that the persons alleged to have entered into a conspiracy together must be identified specifically.[1099]

468. As a preliminary matter, the Appeals Chamber clarifies that it considers that the Prosecution did not exceed the scope of its response brief by arguing that the Indictment was not defective regarding the count of conspiracy to commit genocide. The purpose of a response brief is to give a full answer to the issues raised in the relevant appeal brief[1100] and there is nothing in the Rules or the relevant practice directions prohibiting a party from raising an allegation of error in the Trial Judgement in response to an issue raised by the other party. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Prosecution should have requested leave to argue that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment was defective as regards the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide.

[1093] The Prosecution argues that Nyiramasuhuko was given notice that she was alleged to have conspired with members of the Interim government through: (i) paragraph 5.1 which states that "members of the government" among others "conspired among themselves" and explicitly lists Minister André Rwamakuba; (ii) paragraphs 6.13, 6.52, and 6.56, which allege that Minister Rwamakuba was one of the co-conspirators; (iii) several paragraphs pleaded in support of Count 1 which "notified Nyiramasuhuko of the conduct between herself and other government members manifesting their agreement"; and (iv) paragraph 6.10, which, although not specifically pleaded in support of Count 1, allege that numerous government members supported the plan to exterminate the Tutsis (all references are to the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment). See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 212, 232-256. See also AT. 14 April 2015 pp. 36, 37.

469. The Appeals Chamber recalls that when an accused is charged with conspiracy to commit genocide pursuant to Article 2(3)(b) of the Statute, the Prosecution must plead in the indictment: (i) an agreement between individuals aimed at the commission of genocide; and (ii) the fact that the individuals taking part in the agreement possessed the intent to destroy in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial, or religious group, as such.[1101] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that, with respect to the mens rea, an indictment may plead either: (i) the state of mind of the accused, in which case the facts by which that state of mind is to be established are matters of evidence, and need not be pleaded; or (ii) the evidentiary facts from which the state of mind is to be inferred.[1102]

470. The Trial Chamber did not find, nor does Nyiramasuhuko argue, that the Indictments were defective regarding the pleading of the co-Accused's mens rea. It is indeed specifically pleaded under the count of conspiracy to commit genocide and common paragraph 5.1 of the Indictments that the co-Accused acted with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a racial or ethnic group, the Tutsis.[1103] The Trial Chamber, however, found that the Indictments were defective in that they did not "identify the specific individuals who entered into [the] agreement" nor "when and where the agreement was executed and when the conspiracy ended."[1104]

471. The Appeals Chamber observes that, read in isolation, paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment, which alleges that "[f]rom late 1990 until July 1994, military personnel, members of the government, political leaders, civil servants and other personalities conspired among themselves and with others to work out a plan with the intent to exterminate the civilian Tutsi population", is overly broad with regard to the timeframe of Nyiramasuhuko's alleged participation in the conspiracy to commit genocide. The Appeals Chamber, however, recalls that in determining whether an accused was adequately put on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him, the indictment must be considered as a whole.[1105]

472. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraphs 6.13 and 6.14 of the Indictment, which were expressly pleaded in support of Count 1, allege that Nyiramasuhuko participated in Cabinet meetings "[b]etween 9 April and 14 July 1994", during which ministers were briefed in regard to the massacres of the civilian population, ministers demanded that weapons be distributed to be used in the massacres, and decisions were made to incite, and aid and abet the perpetration of the massacres. Other paragraphs of the Indictment pleaded in support of Count 1 specifically pointed to the participation of members of the Interim Government, including Nyiramasuhuko, in decisions and events of April 1994 aimed at inciting and encouraging the killing of Tutsis.[1106] The Appeals Chamber considers that paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment read in conjunction with these paragraphs put Nyiramasuhuko on clear notice that she was alleged to have entered into an agreement aimed at the commission of genocide on or after 9 April 1994.[1107]

473. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's determination,[1108] there is no requirement for the Prosecution to specify in the Indictment when the conspiracy ended. The crime of conspiracy to commit genocide is an inchoate offence, the actus reus of which is "a concerted agreement to act for the purpose of committing genocide",[1109] and does not require evidence of the time range and end of the conspiracy. Of significance is when the agreement was formed, not when it ended. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the Indictment was defective because it failed to specify "when the conspiracy ended".

474. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention regarding the identification of the co-conspirators in the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide as pleaded in the Indictment did not involve the Interim Government or that her alleged co-conspirators were limited to her co-accused as argued by Nyiramasuhuko. The Appeals Chamber sees merit in the Prosecution's argument that the Indictment sufficiently identified the individuals with whom Nyiramasuhuko was alleged to have agreed to commit genocide. The Trial Chamber [1106] See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, paras. 6.20, 6.22.

[1107] The Appeals Chamber notes in this regard that paragraph 6.10 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, although not specifically invoked in relation to Count 1, states that "[a]s soon as the Interim Government was formed, numerous Cabinet members supported the plan of extermination in place", thus providing further notice that the agreement took place immediately or shortly after the swearing-in of the Interim Government on 9 April 1994.
[1108] See Trial Judgement, para. 5661.

appears to have overlooked that paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment specifically alleged that Nyiramasuhuko and her co-accused conspired with, inter alios, "members of the government", including "André Rwamakuba",[1110] "to work out a plan with the intent to exterminate the civilian Tutsi population".[1111] Moreover, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion, the Appeals Chamber considers that the specific individuals with whom the accused is alleged to have reached the agreement aimed at the commission of genocide do not necessarily have to be identified by name and that identification by general category in the Indictment can be sufficient to provide adequate notice to the accused.[1112]

475. Consistent with paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment, paragraphs 6.13, 6.14, 6.20, and 6.22 of the Indictment, all pursued in support of Count 1,[1113] expressly referred to Nyiramasuhuko's contribution to the extermination of the Tutsis as a member of the Interim Government, together with other members of the Interim Government identified by name or with the Interim Government in general. These paragraphs also set forth the material facts upon which the Trial Chamber relied to convict Nyiramasuhuko of conspiracy to commit genocide, namely the decision to dismiss Prefect Habyalimana from office, the adoption of directives during Cabinet meetings inciting the population to kill Tutsis, and the endorsement of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[1114]

476. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that Nyiramasuhuko was not expressly named in paragraphs 6.10 through 6.12, 6.15 and 6.16 of the Indictment, which further describe the contribution of the Interim Government to the massacres, or that these paragraphs were not relied upon in support of Count 1 could not reasonably be understood by Nyiramasuhuko as indicating that she was not prosecuted for having conspired to commit genocide as unambiguously pleaded in paragraphs 5.1, 6.13, 6.14, 6.20, and 6.22 and the charging section of the Indictment.[1115] Having [1112] Cf. Nzabonimana Appeal Judgement, para. 400; Karemera and Ngirumpatse Appeal Judgement, para. 370. The Appeals Chamber further finds that the fact that other members of the Interim Government were not convicted for conspiracy before the Tribunal is irrelevant to the question of whether Nyiramasuhuko was put on notice of the charges against her and is not inconsistent with the fact that Nyiramasuhuko was charged with having conspired with other members of the Interim Government. Cf. Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 121.

[1114] Trial Judgement, paras. 5669-5673, 5676.

[1115] The Appeals Chamber also notes that: (i) paragraph 6.14 refers to the same allegation as the one pleaded in paragraph 6.10; (ii) paragraph 6.11 merely provides non-material background information; (iii) paragraph 6.20 contains reviewed the 31 May 2000 Prosecution Response relied upon by Nyiramasuhuko, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how it could have been interpreted by Nyiramasuhuko as limiting the scope of the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide as alleged in the Indictment, which is the primary accusatory instrument.[1116]

477. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that the Indictment was defective in relation to the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide because it failed to "identify the specific individuals who entered into [the] agreement" and that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that she was not charged with conspiring to commit genocide with the Interim Government in the Indictment.

478. As to the alleged discrepancies pointed out by Nyiramasuhuko between some of the material facts alleged in the Indictment and the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusions, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, in general, minor differences between the indictment and the evidence presented at trial are not such as to prevent the trial chamber from considering the indictment in light of the evidence presented at trial.[1117] In the present case, the Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko was briefed during numerous Cabinet meetings while the Indictment indicated that she was "regularly" briefed constitutes an insignificant variation.[1118] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber considers the difference as to the precise date of the beginning of the massacres to be minor. Also, the Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 6.21 of the Indictment makes reference to Sindikubwabo's coded language in his speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony. Nyiramasuhuko's arguments in these respects are therefore rejected.

479. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Indictment was not defective regarding the pleading of Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for conspiracy to commit genocide and that Nyiramasuhuko was put on adequate notice that she was alleged to have entered into an agreement to exterminate the Tutsi population with, inter alios, members of the Interim Government on or after 9 April 1994. The nature of the charge in this regard was further confirmed by the Prosecution in its opening statement and pre-trial brief, in which it specifically referred to a information concerning the decision to dismiss Prefect Habyalimana similar to the one contained in paragraph 6.12; (iv) the specific allegation regarding the 27 April Directive contained in paragraph 6.15 is encompassed in the broader allegation set forth in paragraph 6.14; and (v) the Trial Chamber did not rely on the allegation pleaded in paragraph 6.16 in support of the conspiracy count (all references are to the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment).

[1116] See, e.g., Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 114; Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 114. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on the indictment in the Bizimungu et al. case is similarly misplaced as she fails to demonstrate how the situation in that case is relevant to the present case.

plan to commit genocide masterminded by the Interim Government and implemented by the co-Accused, including Nyiramasuhuko.[1119]

480. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions pertaining to notice of the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide.

3. Butare Prefecture Office (Grounds 14 to 17)

481. The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 8, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 10) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsis who were abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office where they had sought refuge.[1120] The Trial Chamber also determined that Nyiramasuhuko bore superior responsibility in connection with the killings committed by Interahamwe upon her orders pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining her sentence.[1121]

482. The Trial Chamber further convicted Nyiramasuhuko of rape as a crime against humanity (Count 7) and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 11) as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for rapes committed by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1122]

483. In summarising the Prosecution case against Nyiramasuhuko with respect to these allegations, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, 6.37, and 6.53 of the Indictment.[1123] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraph 6.30 were being pursued [1119] See Prosecution Opening Statement, T. 12 June 2001 pp. 30, 31; Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, paras. 6-8. Since Nyiramasuhuko was charged with a conspiracy with the Interim Government together with her co-accused, the Appeals Chamber fails to see the relevance of Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that the Prosecution did not refer to her separately in its opening statement. Similarly, the fact that the Prosecution specifically referred to the co-Accused as members of the conspiracy in its opening statement does not indicate that the Interim Government was not part of the conspiracy. See Prosecution Opening Statement, T. 12 June 2001 pp. 30, 31, 59, 60. In addition, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the information contained in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief as to the charge of conspiracy is not inconsistent with the Prosecution's opening statement. See Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, paras. 6-8.

484. Prior to discussing Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Trial Chamber considered her assertion that she was not reasonably informed of the charges concerning these crimes.[1127] It determined that "the crimes of abduction and killing at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were clearly pleaded in the Indictment."[1128] It further found that, although the Indictment was defective with respect to the charges of rape, the defects were cured and Nyiramasuhuko did not suffer prejudice in the preparation of her defence.[1129] As regards the pleading of victims in particular, the Trial Chamber held that, "in view of the sheer scale of the attacks, rapes and killings alleged to have taken place at the [Butare Prefecture Office], it [was] impractical to require the Prosecution to name each of the alleged victims of this course of conduct" and that the Indictment was therefore not defective for failing to name each of the alleged victims at the prefectoral office.[1130] The Trial Chamber also determined that the Indictment put Nyiramasuhuko on notice that she was charged with superior responsibility for the alleged acts of the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.[1131]

485. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) concluding that her responsibility in the killing of Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office was adequately pleaded in the Indictment and that she was not prejudiced by the omission of material facts in the Indictment; (ii) convicting her in relation to rapes committed at the prefectoral office, as she was not charged on this basis and that the defect was neither curable nor cured; and (iii) finding her responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Killings

486. As discussed in detail in Section IV.F below addressing Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the assessment of the evidence and her responsibility in relation to the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to kill numerous Tutsis who were abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office where they had sought refuge during attacks conducted in mid-May 1994 and around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994. As noted above, the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko under Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings on this basis and took her superior responsibility into account in sentencing.[1132]

487. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber determined that "the crimes of abduction and killing at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were clearly pleaded in the Indictment."[1133]

488. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment was not defective concerning the crimes of abduction and killing at the prefectoral office.[1134] In particular, she argues that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment failed to plead: (i) the location of the killings, mentioning only the woods next to the EER while no witness testified to this location;[1135] (ii) the dates of the attacks;[1136] and (iii) the identity of the perpetrators of the killings, including "Kazungu", whose identity was known to the Prosecution prior to the filing of the Indictment, despite the Trial Chamber's order that the Prosecution name the unknown persons referred to in paragraph 6.30.[1137] Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the sheer scale of the attacks made it impractical to require the Prosecution to name each of the alleged [1137] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 465-470, 483; Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, paras. 79, 80. Nyiramasuhuko submits that paragraph 6.30 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment rather refers to the nicknames of two other Interahamwe who were not mentioned at trial by any Prosecution witness. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 468.

victims is unreasonable given that the Prosecution had knowledge of the identity of some specific victims but did not mention them.[1138] Nyiramasuhuko contends that she was prejudiced as a result of the omission of these material facts in the Indictment.[1139]

489. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment was not defective with respect to the allegation of abductions and killings at the prefectoral office.[1140] In particular, it contends that, given that Nyiramasuhuko was charged with and convicted for ordering the killings, and not for physically committing them, the information concerning the dates, locations, perpetrators, and victims of the killings did not constitute material facts that needed to be pleaded in the Indictment and that the sheer scale of the crimes made it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity.[1141] The Prosecution adds that, in any case, paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment sufficiently identified the location of the killings, the dates of the attacks, and the perpetrators' and victims' identities and that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show that she suffered any prejudice.[1142]

490. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the material facts must be clearly specified when the accused is charged, as in her case, with direct participation in a crime such as ordering the crime.[1143] She reiterates that the Prosecution was required to specify the information regarding the locations of the killings, the dates, and the identity of the victims and perpetrators, which was in its possession.[1144] She submits that, through its conclusions, the Trial Chamber allowed the Prosecution to mould its case to the evidence heard at trial, rendering her trial unfair.[1145]

491. Nyiramasuhuko was convicted for ordering "Interahamwe" at the prefectoral office to abduct and kill Tutsis who had sought refuge there during attacks perpetrated around mid-May and Nyiramasuhuko points out that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that those who resisted were killed outright at locations such as the EER woods unlike what is alleged in paragraph 6.30 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment that they were killed at the prefectoral office, thereby failing to differentiate the victims killed outright at the prefectoral office from the victims brought to various locations, including the woods next to the EER, to be killed. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 482, 484-486, 488, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2162.

[1139] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 468, 472, 473, 475, 487, 490. Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that it could use the evidence of the abductions and/or killings of Trifina, Mbasha's wife, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi as circumstantial evidence, although it had recognised that she would be prejudiced by the use of this evidence. See ibid., paras. 474-478. The Prosecution also responds, inter alia, that because Kazungu was not found to have committed crimes at the prefectoral office and that Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted for Kazungu's specific criminal conduct, Nyiramasuhuko does not show that she was prejudiced by the fact that his name was not mentioned in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 200.

the end of May or the beginning of June 1994.[1146] The Trial Chamber found that some refugees were killed at the prefectoral office during these attacks and that, regardless of whether the other refugees were taken to Rwabanyanga, Kabutare, Mukoni, or the IRST, the only reasonable inference is that they were abducted from the prefectoral office in order to be killed.[1147]

492. In paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, the Prosecution clearly pleaded that Nyiramasuhuko went to the prefectoral office on several occasions to abduct Tutsi refugees and that refugees who attempted to resist were "sometimes killed outright" and that the "survivors were taken to various locations in the prefecture to be executed, notably in the woods next to the [EER]." Given the nature of the Prosecution case against Nyiramasuhuko regarding the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the specific locations where the refugees were killed in Butare Prefecture after being abducted from the prefectoral office were material facts that needed to be pleaded in the Indictment. Whether or not the testimonial evidence adduced at trial supported the allegation that refugees were killed in the woods next to the EER is a matter of evidence irrelevant to the issue of notice.[1148]

493. The Prosecution alleged in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment that Nyiramasuhuko committed these crimes "[b]etween 19 April and late June 1994". In the specific circumstances of the allegation pertaining to the crimes at the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber is unconvinced by Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that this broad date range was insufficient to provide her notice. Although Nyiramasuhuko was ultimately only convicted in relation to specific attacks conducted around mid-May and the end of May or the beginning of June 1994, the Trial Judgement reflects that the evidence adduced by the Prosecution covered a longer period of time and additional attacks.[1149] Given the sheer scale of the alleged crimes spanning over a period of nearly three months, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Prosecution was in a position to provide further specificity concerning the dates of the commission of the crimes.

494. As regards the pleading of the identity of the perpetrators, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in November 2000, the Trial Chamber ordered the Prosecution "to identify the persons alleged in paragraph[…] 6.30 [of the Indictment …], if known".[1150] The Prosecution subsequently provided the names of Jumapili and Nsengiyumva as some of the Interahamwe who accompanied Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali to the prefectoral office in the Indictment.[1151] The Prosecution does not dispute that it was in possession of information regarding the involvement of one "Kazungu" when the operative indictment was issued but does not explain why it failed to specify the name of this alleged perpetrator in the Indictment, in particular after it was instructed to do so by the Trial Chamber. In light of the sheer scale of the crimes allegedly committed at the prefectoral office and the fact that paragraph 6.30 identified "Interahamwe militiamen" among the perpetrators of the crimes, and recalling that physical perpetrators of the crimes can be identified by category in relation to a particular crime site,[1152] the Appeals Chamber nevertheless finds that the identity of the perpetrators who abducted and killed Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office was sufficiently pleaded in paragraph 6.30 and that the Indictment was not defective in that regard.

495. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention regarding the identification of the victims. Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the sheer scale of the attacks made it impractical to require the Prosecution to name each of the alleged victims given that the Prosecution had knowledge of the identity of some specific victims fails to appreciate that, where the Trial Chamber considered that the identity of the victims was known to the Prosecution but not pleaded in the indictment, it decided that it would not convict Nyiramasuhuko for any crimes against these specific victims.[1153] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Prosecution was in possession of additional information regarding the names of victims which it failed to disclose.

496. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that her responsibility for the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office was clearly pleaded in the Indictment.

(b) Rapes

497. As discussed in detail in Section IV.F.1(b) below, the Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko responsible as a superior under Counts 7 and 11 pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute in connection with rapes perpetrated by Interahamwe at the Butare [1150] 1 November 2000 Nyiramasuhuko Decision, paras. 60, 64(a)(i).

[1151] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that the Prosecution and its witnesses did not eventually refer to "Jumapili" and "Nsengiyumva" at trial is not relevant to whether Nyiramasuhuko was provided with sufficient notice of the identity of the perpetrators of the crimes.

Prefecture Office around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994 as well as in the first half of June 1994.[1154]

498. The Trial Chamber made the following determinations regarding the pleading of Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's responsibility related to rapes at the prefectoral office in the Indictment:

> As to the crime of rape, Paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali indictment states that aside from the attacks on Tutsis, Ntahobali was assisted by accomplices in kidnapping and raping Tutsi women. The Chamber recalls that an indictment paragraph should be read in conjunction with the entire indictment as a whole. Read in this way, the crimes of kidnapping and rape were separately pled to the attacks occurring throughout the rest of the préfecture, including the attacks and abductions at the [Butare Prefecture Office]. Nonetheless, the information in Paragraph 6.37 lacked necessary details, including specific dates, locations and the names of victims, to put Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko on notice that they were being charged with raping women or were responsible as a superior for rapes occurring at the [Butare Prefecture Office]. The Indictment was therefore defective in this regard.[1155]

499. The Trial Chamber further determined that the defect in the Indictment was cured through the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses TA, FAP, QBP, QBQ, QZ, RE, RF, RG, RJ, and SW appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, and the Prosecution's opening statement, which clearly indicated that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in rapes at the prefectoral office.[1156]

500. However, the Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko was not given sufficient notice that rapes at the prefectoral office would be used in support of the count of genocide and decided that it will not enter a conviction for genocide against Nyiramasuhuko on the basis of any rapes that occurred there.[1157]

501. The Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko to first submit that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her of genocide on the basis of allegations of rape at the prefectoral office, in contradiction with its own determination.[1158]

[1154] The Trial Chamber noted that Nyiramasuhuko was only charged with Count 7 pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, which it "consider[ed] to be a serious omission on the part of the Prosecution". See Trial Judgement, para. 6087. See also ibid., para. 6182.

502. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that her responsibility for the rapes of Tutsis women at the prefectoral office was not pleaded in the Indictment, and that such defect was neither curable nor cured.[1159] In support of her claim that the defect in the Indictment was not curable, she argues that the allegation on the basis of which she was convicted constituted a separate charge which should have been pleaded in the Indictment.[1160] Specifically, she contends that: (i) paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment which concerns the prefectoral office does not mention any rapes and was not listed under Count 7; (ii) paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment does not mention her; (iii) paragraph 6.37 does not relate to crimes perpetrated at the prefectoral office but to the Butare University Hospital as it is clear from the relevant heading in the Indictment; and (iv) paragraphs 6.37, 6.53, and 6.56 of the Indictment – the only paragraphs pleading rapes and cited in support of Count 7 – do not refer to the prefectoral office.[1161] In her view, the Prosecution also demonstrated that it did not intend to charge her in connection with rapes at the prefectoral office by not adding the allegation when amending the indictment.[1162]

503. With respect to her alternative contention that the defect in the Indictment concerning her responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office was not cured, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief read as a whole only informed her that she was accused of participating in rapes outside the prefectoral office.[1163] She also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the summaries of the Prosecution witnesses' anticipated evidence cured the defect in the Indictment since: (i) the Trial Chamber did not differentiate between witnesses testifying to rapes being committed by Ntahobali or to rapes being ordered by Nyiramasuhuko, whereas 16 witnesses did not allege her participation in rapes; and (ii) some witnesses alleged that rapes

Nyiramasuhuko also raises an obscure and unreferenced argument in paragraph 761 of her appeal brief regarding the paragraphs cited under Counts 7 and 11, which the Appeals Chamber dismisses for lack of clarity.

Nyiramasuhuko argues that paragraph 6.53 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment did not mention any location where rapes were committed and contained only background information. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 834. In paragraph 521 of her appeal brief, Nyiramasuhuko also raises an additional obscure argument regarding the Trial Chamber's interpretation of the words "aside from his attacks" in paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, which the Appeals Chamber dismisses for lack of clarity.

To the extent that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments relate to the fact that post-indictment communications did not provide clear and consistent notice of her alleged superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for rapes at the prefectoral office, these arguments are addressed below in Section IV.B.3(c).

were committed by Ntahobali outside the prefectoral office.[1164] She adds that the fact that the post-indictment information required "interpretation" to be understood demonstrates that it was not information capable of curing the defect in the Indictment.[1165] Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the Prosecution's opening statement as curing the defect since it did not mention any location.[1166]

504. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not convict Nyiramasuhuko of genocide for rapes at the prefectoral office but only considered the evidence that she ordered rapes there as one of several factors from which to infer her genocidal intent.[1167] It further submits that, although paragraphs 6.37, 6.53, and 6.56 of the Indictment are admittedly vague, they nonetheless plead Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for rapes.[1168]

505. The Prosecution also contends that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the vagueness of the Indictment regarding Nyiramasuhuko's alleged responsibility for rapes committed by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office was cured by the information provided through its pre-trial brief, the summaries of its witnesses' anticipated evidence along with their prior statements to Tribunal investigators, and its opening statement.[1169] It submits that, in any event, Nyiramasuhuko failed to object in a timely manner to the alleged defect in the Indictment and her defence strategy shows that she was not prejudiced.[1170]

506. Nyiramasuhuko reiterates in reply that the defect in her Indictment concerning her responsibility related to rapes at the prefectoral office was not curable.[1171] She also explains that she

In particular, the Prosecution argues that paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment is not limited to the Butare University Hospital and that there is nothing to suggest that the allegations in paragraphs 6.53 and 6.56 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment could not apply to the prefectoral office. See ibid., paras. 134, 136. See also AT. 14 April 2015 pp. 39, 40.

[1171] Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, paras. 36, 44, 210-213. Nyiramasuhuko also claims that the Prosecution violated the formal requirements applicable on appeal by responding to Grounds 15 and 17 of her appeal together instead of responding to them separately. See ibid., paras. 17-24. Given the nature of Nyiramasuhuko's submissions under Grounds 15 and 17 of her appeal, in particular how closely intertwined and repetitive her arguments are under these grounds, the Appeals Chamber does not find fault in the Prosecution's decision to address Nyiramasuhuko's arguments under the same section.

"surmised" the "possibility" that the Prosecution intended to incriminate her as a superior for the rapes committed by Ntahobali and that she prepared her defence accordingly.[1172]

507. As discussed in further detail in the section addressing Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the assessment of the evidence and her responsibility in relation to the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's conclusions on Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for genocide unequivocally reflect that she was found guilty of this crime on the sole basis of the killings that she ordered during attacks at the prefectoral office.[1173] Nyiramasuhuko's contention that she was erroneously convicted for genocide on the basis of rapes is therefore without merit.

508. To the extent that the Trial Chamber relied on Nyiramasuhuko's orders to rape women as circumstantial evidence of her genocidal intent in relation to the crime of genocide committed at the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution expressly pleaded under the count of genocide that Nyiramasuhuko acted with "the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a racial or ethnic group" in relation to the crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office,[1174] thus providing clear notice to Nyiramasuhuko that she was alleged to have acted with genocidal intent. Given that the Indictment pleaded Nyiramasuhuko's specific state of mind in relation to the count of genocide, the evidentiary facts by which her mens rea was to be established did not need to be pleaded.[1175] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Nyiramasuhuko's orders to commit rape as evidence of her genocidal intent.

509. There is nonetheless no dispute that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, which set forth allegations specifically related to the prefectoral office, could not constitute the basis for Nyiramasuhuko's convictions related to rapes insofar as it does not refer to any rapes and was not relied upon in support of Count 7.

510. The Appeals Chamber recalls that in reaching its judgement, a trial chamber can only convict the accused of crimes that are charged in the indictment,[1176] and that the omission of a charge from the indictment cannot be "cured" by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information.[1177] However, the Appeals Chamber also recalls that in determining whether the accused was adequately put on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him, the indictment must be considered as a whole.[1178] In proceeding with this holistic consideration, the Trial Chamber found that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment alleged Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility related to rapes in Butare Prefecture.[1179]

511. Nyiramasuhuko correctly points out that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, which alleges the perpetration of rapes of Tutsi women by Ntahobali and unknown "accomplices", does not mention her and is excessively broad as regards the dates, locations, and the identity of Ntahobali's co-perpetrators. While this paragraph prima facie did not concern her but Ntahobali, it was nonetheless expressly relied upon in support of Counts 7 and 11 against her pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, together with paragraphs 6.53 and 6.56 of the Indictment. Paragraphs 6.53 and 6.56 also do not refer to Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility related to rapes at the prefectoral office in particular, but allege the commission of rapes against the Tutsi population perpetrated by, among others, militiamen[1180] as well as Nyiramasuhuko's participation in the atrocities set forth in the Indictment committed, notably, by her subordinates.[1181] The Appeals Chamber considers that, by reading paragraph 6.37 in light of paragraphs 6.53 and 6.56 and the charging section of the Indictment, Nyiramasuhuko was put on notice that she incurred criminal responsibility as a superior under Counts 7 and 11 on the basis of the rapes alleged in paragraph 6.37, a fact that she acknowledges in her reply brief.[1182]

512. Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contention, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment could only be understood as referring to the Butare University Hospital because it is set forth in a section of the Indictment headed "Butare University Hospital". While the heading "Butare University Hospital" on page 32 of the Indictment preceding paragraphs 6.34 to 6.39 of the Indictment is misleading as to the location of the crimes mentioned in the paragraphs following this headline, a plain and contextual reading of paragraph 6.37 nonetheless clearly reveals that the allegation set out therein was not limited to this specific location but applies to the Butare Prefecture as a whole. Considering the very contents of paragraph 6.37, it would be unreasonable to conclude that the paragraph was limited to events at the Butare University Hospital. When reading the Indictment as a whole, it is clear that the headline "Butare University Hospital" on page 32 was only relevant to paragraph 6.34.

513. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the allegation of Nyiramasuhuko's superior responsibility for rapes of Tutsi women at the prefectoral office did not constitute a new charge but fell within the broader allegation pleaded, albeit vaguely, in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, when read together with paragraphs 6.53 and 6.56 and the charging section of the Indictment.

514. As the Prosecution obtained information about Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in rapes at the prefectoral office from several witnesses between 1997 and 1999, it is incontestable that it should have pleaded this allegation with greater specificity in the Indictment. However, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Prosecution's failure to fulfil its obligation to provide clear notice to Nyiramasuhuko of the charges against her demonstrates that it did not intend to pursue her in connection with these rapes. The fact that the prior written statements of four witnesses concerning Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in rapes at the prefectoral office were disclosed to her on several occasions prior to the filing of the operative indictment[1183] as well as the addition of the count of rape against her in August 1999[1184] show that this allegation formed part of the Prosecution case at the time the Indictment was filed. Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Prosecution did not intend to charge her in connection with rape at the prefectoral office when amending the indictment is further refuted by the fact that the Prosecution supported paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Third Amended Indictment with an excerpt of Witness QZ's statement recounting Nyiramasuhuko's presence when Ntahobali and Interahamwe raped the witness and other women at the prefectoral office.[1185] The summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses FAP, QBQ, RJ, TA, and QZ appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief further reflect that it continued to be part of the Prosecution case after the operative indictment was issued.

515. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the vagueness of the Indictment concerning her responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office was not curable.

516. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the Trial Chamber's finding that the defect in the Indictment regarding this allegation was cured, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the formulations "[a]part from the préfecture office" and "[a]side from his attacks" in paragraphs 24 and 25 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief reflect that the Prosecution only accused Nyiramasuhuko of being responsible for rapes committed outside the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber observes that the phrase "[a]part from the préfecture office" relates to a separate allegation of killings and that, read in context, the import of the phrase "[a]side from his attacks" is unclear.[1186] Conversely, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in paragraph 29 of its pre-trial brief, the Prosecution made it clear that Nyiramasuhuko was alleged to have ordered and aided and abetted her subordinates and others in carrying out rapes of Tutsi women throughout Rwanda.[1187]

517. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Prosecution witnesses appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief cured the defect in the Indictment. Indeed, some of the summaries referred to by the Trial Chamber were not directly relevant to her insofar as they did not allege her participation in rapes committed at the prefectoral office.[1188] The Appeals Chamber sees

[1186] Paragraphs 24 and 25 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief read as follows:

> Apart from the préfecture office, the search and the elimination of Tutsis also took place throughout the entire préfecture between April and July 1994. During this period, Pauline Ny[i]ramasuhuko and Ars[è]ne Shalom Ntahobali used a roadblock located in front of their house to identify and kill Tutsis.
>
> Arsène Shalom Ntahobali also travelled throughout the préfecture to locate and kill Tutsis. Aside from his attacks on the Tutsi population during this period, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, assisted by unknown "accomplices," participated in the kidnapping and raping of Tutsi women.

[1187] Paragraph 29 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief reads as follows:

> During the events referred to in their indictments, rapes, sexual assaults and other crimes of a sexual nature were widely and notoriously committed throughout Rwanda. These crimes were perpetrated on the Tutsi population particularly Tutsi women and girls by among others, soldiers, militiamen and gendarmes. Military officers, members of the Interim Government and local figures of authority (such as Elie Ndayambaje, Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, André Rwamakuba, Sylvain Nsabimana, Alphonse Nteziryayo, Ladislas Ntaganzwa, Joseph Kanyabashi) and Shalom Arsène Ntahobali committed, ordered, aided and abetted their subordinates and others in the carrying out of rapes, sexual assaults and massacres of the Tutsi population.

The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that paragraph 29 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief could not be relied on.

[1188] See Trial Judgement, para. 2164, fn. 5753, referring, inter alia, to Witness QBP's Summary, Witness RE's Summary, Witness RG's Summary, Witness SW's Summary. It bears noting, however, that some of these summaries refer to Nyiramasuhuko being present at the prefectoral office and/or ordering killings and, more generally, to the fact that rapes were committed there. See Witness RE's Summary; Witness SW's Summary.

no error in this as it is not clear that the Trial Chamber intended to rely on all summaries it cited as relevant to remedy Nyiramasuhuko's lack of notice specifically since its analysis and conclusions concerned the notice provided to both Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali.

518. Nyiramasuhuko also does not show error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses FAP, QBQ, RJ, TA, and QZ as providing her timely, clear, and consistent notice of her alleged responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witnesses FAP's, QBQ's, and RJ's summaries referred to Nyiramasuhuko giving orders to Interahamwe or militiamen to rape at the prefectoral office,[1189] whereas Witnesses TA's and QZ's summaries mentioned Nyiramasuhuko witnessing the commission of rapes there and issuing orders to Interahamwe.[1190] Witness RF's Summary also reflects that Nyiramasuhuko was alleged to have given orders to Interahamwe at the prefectoral office and told them "to do as they pleased." All six summaries were marked relevant to Nyiramasuhuko and were linked to Counts 7 and 11 of her Indictment. The fact that other summaries related to the events at the prefectoral office did not mention Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in rapes at this location was not inconsistent with the clear and coherent information provided through the summaries of Witnesses FAP, QBQ, RJ, TA QZ, and, to some extent, Witness RF's Summary.

519. As for Nyiramasuhuko's argument regarding the Prosecution's opening statement, the Appeals Chamber notes that, while Nyiramasuhuko is correct in her assertion that the Prosecution failed to specify any particular incident of rape or the location where the rapes were alleged to have been committed, its emphasis on Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for rapes in its opening statement

[1189] In relevant part, Witness FAP's Summary reads as follows:

> At the Prefecture office, Nyiramasuhuko used to come driven by her son, Ntahobali, in their mud-smeared pick-up with armed militiamen. […] She ordered militiamen to kill and rape. Women who resisted rape were immediately killed. Others were rapes in front of her before being killed.

In relevant part, Witness QBQ's Summary reads as follows:

> Three days later Nyiramasuhuko came to the Prefecture office with Interahamwe and communal police. Nyiramasuhuko ordered them to kill men and rape women before killing them. Inte[rah]amwe thus killed and raped women.

In relevant part, Witness RJ's Summary reads as follows:

> RJ went to Prefecture office. […] Later, RJ heard Nyiramasuhuko order soldiers, Inte[rah]amwe, and Ntahobali to select girls and young women and rape them, and kill the older women.

[1190] In relevant part, Witness TA's Summary reads as follows:

> Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came to the Prefecture office often. They stated: "Let's get rid of this dirt." […] TA saw Nyiramasuhuko present during Ntahobali's and his men's rapes[.] Nyiramasuhuko was superior to Ntahobali. Nyiramasuhuko chose people to be killed, and issued orders.

In relevant part, Witness QZ's Summary reads as follows:

> QZ saw Ntahobali and four Interahamwe rape a girl. […] QZ was raped by Ntahobali and the Interahamwe, and Nyiramasuhuko witnessed the rape. QZ states Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to "kill all the Tutsi and to let those with ID cards, show that they are Hutu."

confirmed that it intended to prove that she was responsible on this basis and was consistent with the information provided through the Witness Summaries Grid.[1191]

520. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that she was not put on sufficient notice that she was charged under Counts 7 and 11 on the basis of rapes perpetrated at the Butare Prefecture Office.

(c) Superior Responsibility

521. As noted above, the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute under Counts 7 and 11 in connection with the rapes committed by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office that she ordered.[1192] The Trial Chamber also found that Nyiramasuhuko bore superior responsibility for the killings of Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office committed by Interahamwe upon her orders but, having found her guilty under Article 6(1) of the Statute, did not convict her of these crimes as a superior.[1193] The Trial Chamber did, however, consider her role as a superior in these killings as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[1194]

522. The Appeals Chamber recalls that when an accused is charged with superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the indictment must plead, inter alia, that the accused is the superior of sufficiently identified subordinates over whom he had effective control – in the sense of a material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct – and for whose acts he is alleged to be responsible.[1195]

523. The Trial Chamber discussed whether Nyiramasuhuko was put on sufficient notice that the Interahamwe who perpetrated killings and rapes at the prefectoral office were alleged to be her subordinates both in the "Factual Findings" and "Legal Findings" sections of the Trial Judgement.[1196] It found that, "[a]lthough the Indictment lacks any paragraph specifically detailing Nyiramasuhuko's alleged subordinates",[1197] "a holistic reading of the Indictment demonstrates that numerous paragraphs pled in support of Article 6(3) responsibility […] provide that Nyiramasuhuko is alleged to be superior to Interahamwe".[1198] The Trial Chamber further determined that, in any case, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and the summaries of anticipated evidence appended to it as well as prior witness statements confirmed that Nyiramasuhuko was alleged to be the superior of, among others, Interahamwe.[1199] The Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko received sufficient notice that she was charged with superior responsibility for the alleged acts of Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.[1200]

524. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that she was put on notice that she was alleged to be the superior of the Interahamwe who committed crimes at the prefectoral office.[1201] Specifically, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in examining whether she was put on sufficient notice of the identity of her alleged subordinates for the charge of rape before assessing separately the sufficiency of the information relating to the allegation of superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute in itself.[1202] In her view, had the Trial Chamber proceeded "logically, legally and fairly", it would have concluded that she was not alleged to be a superior and would not have deprived her of a reasoned opinion.[1203]

525. Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that a holistic reading of the Indictment provided her notice of her alleged superior authority over the Nyiramasuhuko also appears to contend that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that she received adequate notice of her alleged superior responsibility in relation to Ntahobali, soldiers, gendarmes, and the population. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 2.19-2.24; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 435, 437, 439, 452, 453. Because Nyiramasuhuko was only found responsible as a superior in connection with the criminal conduct of the Interahamwe, the Appeals Chamber will not entertain Nyiramasuhuko's arguments in this respect. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider the requests for specificity regarding her alleged superior-subordinate relationships and the identity of her subordinates that she made at trial and her request for reconsideration, causing her prejudice. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 409-415, 465, referring to T. 7 June 2000 pp. 63-66, 98, 99, 108, 109 (French), 1 November 2000 Nyiramasuhuko Decision. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in Section IV.B.1 above, it has concluded that Nyiramasuhuko failed to demonstrate through Ground 3 of her appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting her motion for specificity. Nyiramasuhuko does not develop any argument under this ground of appeal that would show error in the Trial Chamber's 1 November 2000 Nyiramasuhuko Decision or its decision to deny reconsideration. Nyiramasuhuko's claims in these respects are therefore rejected.

Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on paragraph 6.30 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment in concluding that she had notice that Interahamwe who committed rapes were alleged to be her subordinates since this paragraph did not refer to any rapes at the prefectoral office. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 2.20; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 425-428, 449. See also AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 17-19 (French).

Interahamwe.[1204] In particular, she contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the paragraphs that were relied upon in support of superior responsibility in the charging section of the Indictment informed her of the identity of her alleged subordinates.[1205] Highlighting that these paragraphs were relied upon against her under both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute, she argues that the lack of distinction amounted to an additional defect in the Indictment.[1206] She adds that it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber to find that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment gave her notice of the identity of her alleged subordinates in relation to the allegation of rapes given that there is no mention of her superior responsibility or of the involvement of Interahamwe in this paragraph.[1207] In the same vein, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on paragraph 6.53 of the Indictment as it referred to militiamen, not Interahamwe, and in considering that the term "militiamen" was to be understood as "Interahamwe" in the Indictment.[1208]

526. According to Nyiramasuhuko, the fact that paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 of the Indictment specifically pleaded Ntahobali's authority over the Interahamwe evinced the Prosecution's intention not to charge her as their superior, which the Trial Chamber failed to take into account.[1209] She points out that this is the reasoning that the Trial Chamber followed when examining whether Nsabimana received notice of his alleged superior responsibility over the Interahamwe.[1210]

527. Moreover, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, summaries of anticipated evidence, and prior witness statements provided her notice of her alleged superior responsibility over the Interahamwe who committed crimes at the prefectoral office.[1211] Specifically, she argues that: (i) the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that paragraph 21 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief specified that she was the superior of the Interahamwe; (ii) paragraphs 29 and 30 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief added allegations of rapes and responsibility pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute not pleaded in the Indictment and, like paragraph 31 of the same brief, did not contain information concerning rapes or superior responsibility; (iii) none of the summaries gave her notice of her alleged superior status over Interahamwe and the allegations that she ordered Interahamwe to commit crimes contained therein

Nyiramasuhuko also avers that the fact that paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment makes reference to "unknown accomplices", instead of Interahamwe, militiamen, or subordinates, implied a "joint participation" rather than the participation of subordinates. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 527 (emphasis omitted).

were insufficient to inform her that she was alleged to be their superior.[1212] Nyiramasuhuko adds that the Prosecution's opening statement alleged her presence and encouragement to commit rape, whereas superior responsibility concerns a failure to act.[1213]

528. The Prosecution responds that the Indictment sufficiently pleaded Nyiramasuhuko's superior responsibility and that Nyiramasuhuko's authority over the Interahamwe could be inferred from the fact that the relevant allegations of the Indictment were charged pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[1214] It adds that the post-indictment communications provided further notice to Nyiramasuhuko in this regard.[1215]

529. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber started its analysis on notice of the identity of Nyiramasuhuko's alleged subordinates by noting her claim that she was not put on notice of her alleged superior responsibility in relation to the charge of rape. However, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contention, the Trial Chamber's analysis clearly reflects that it examined whether the Indictment provided her with notice that she was alleged to be the superior of, among others, Interahamwe and militiamen within the meaning of Article 6(3) of the Statute generally, rather than in relation to any specific charge.[1216] As demonstrated by its findings summarised above, the Trial Chamber also provided reasons for its conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko received sufficient notice that she was charged with superior responsibility for the alleged acts of, inter alios, Interahamwe and militiamen. Nyiramasuhuko's contentions that the Trial Chamber did not proceed "logically, legally and fairly" and failed to provide a reasoned opinion are therefore without merit.

530. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that the Indictment sufficiently identified her alleged subordinates, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by her argument that the fact that the paragraphs of the Indictment were being pursued under the relevant counts pursuant to both Article 6(1) and Article 6(3) of the Statute was a source of confusion. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls that cumulative charging is permitted.[1217] Nyiramasuhuko also fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's determination that, given the context, it was "clear that the 'militiamen' referenced in this Indictment would have been understood as Interahamwe".[1218]

531. However, the Appeals Chamber finds merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Indictment did not put her on adequate notice that she was alleged to be the superior of the Interahamwe. As noted by the Trial Chamber, the Prosecution failed to expressly plead in the Indictment who Nyiramasuhuko's subordinates were alleged to be.[1219] A holistic reading of the paragraphs cited in support of the relevant counts against Nyiramasuhuko pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, together with the very fact that they were expressly relied upon in support of superior responsibility,[1220] indeed suggests that the perpetrators of crimes identified in these paragraphs were alleged to be Nyiramasuhuko's subordinates. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Indictment makes references to Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for aiding and abetting her "subordinates" in carrying out the massacres and not taking any measures to stop them.[1221] The Appeals Chamber nonetheless stresses that the charges against the accused and the material facts underpinning them should not be suggested in the Indictment, but clearly and unambiguously set forth. In the present case, although the Indictment put Nyiramasuhuko on notice through the charging section that she was charged as a superior for a number of incidents – including the killing of refugees abducted from the prefectoral office pleaded in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment and the rapes committed at the time in Butare Prefecture alleged in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment[1222] – it failed to properly identify the subordinates for whose acts she was alleged to be responsible as a superior.[1223]

532. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment provided adequate notice to Nyiramasuhuko that her alleged subordinates included Interahamwe.

533. The Appeals Chamber is nonetheless not convinced by Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the fact that the Prosecution specifically pleaded Ntahobali's superior authority over the Interahamwe in the Indictment, and not hers, reflected that the Prosecution did not intend to charge her as their superior. The Appeals Chamber observes that, despite its failure to clearly identify any of her

[1221] See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, paras. 6.54-6.56.
[1222] See supra, paras. 492, 513. The Appeals Chamber finds Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the phrasing of paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment implied a "joint participation" rather than the participation of subordinates unpersuasive.
[1223] The Appeals Chamber notes that, in addition to failing to identify the Interahamwe as Nyiramasuhuko's subordinates in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, the Prosecution also failed to identify that Interahamwe alleged subordinates in the Indictment, the Prosecution expressly charged Nyiramasuhuko under Article 6(3) of the Statute in relation to crimes involving Interahamwe and militiamen. On this issue, the Appeals Chamber notes that, prima facie, the Trial Chamber appears to have adopted a different approach with respect to Nsabimana's notice of his authority over the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.[1224] However, read in the context of its overall reasoning, the Trial Chamber's approach concerning Nsabimana in fact responds to the different circumstances posed in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment.[1225] Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on the Trial Chamber's conclusion with respect to Nsabimana's notice of the identity of his alleged subordinates fails to appreciate that, in her case, the disclosure the Prosecution made prior to the filing of the operative indictment and the information contained in its post-indictment communications all evinced that her superior responsibility over the Interahamwe formed part of the Prosecution case.[1226]

534. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that, in any case, she was put on adequate notice through post-indictment communications, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's argument, paragraph 21 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief on which the Trial Chamber relied is indeed indicative of her superior-subordinate relationship with the Interahamwe involved in crimes at the prefectoral office. While paragraph 31 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief does not reflect Nyiramasuhuko's authority over the Interahamwe, paragraph 29, and to a certain extent paragraph 30, provided further notice that she was charged as the superior of the Interahamwe/militiamen perpetrating killings and rapes. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has rejected in the prior section Nyiramasuhuko's submission that the allegation of her responsibility for rapes was not pleaded in the Indictment.[1227]

535. The Appeals Chamber has also concluded above that the summaries of the anticipated evidence of a number of Prosecution witnesses gave her clear and consistent notice that she was alleged to have ordered Interahamwe to commit killings and rapes at the prefectoral office.[1228] Considering that these summaries were linked to the relevant counts of the Indictment which were were alleged to be involved in the rapes with which Nyiramasuhuko was being charged through paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment.

See also Witness SU's Summary which, in relevant part, reads as follows:

pursued against her under Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the allegations that she gave orders to Interahamwe contained therein could not inform her that she was also alleged to be their superior. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the same set of facts can support responsibility pursuant to both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[1229] These summaries also clearly reflect Nyiramasuhuko's general authority and control over the Interahamwe involved in attacks at the prefectoral office.[1230]

536. Because allegations of presence at the crime scene and of encouragement to commit the crimes can also support superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Prosecution's reference to her presence and encouragement to commit rapes in its opening statement implied that she was not charged as a superior.

537. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and its summaries of anticipated evidence provided her with the requisite notice of her alleged superior responsibility over the Interahamwe who committed crimes against the Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office.

538. Based on these considerations, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, although the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment adequately identified Nyiramasuhuko's alleged subordinates, its error did not invalidate its decision to find Nyiramasuhuko responsible as a superior in connection with the killings and rapes perpetrated by Interahamwe that she ordered at the prefectoral office since the defect in the Indictment as regards the identification of these Interahamwe as her subordinates was subsequently cured by timely, clear, and consistent information.

(d) Conclusion

539. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that she lacked sufficient notice that she was alleged to be responsible pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute for ordering Interahamwe to kill Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office and pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes committed by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office following her orders.

4. Distribution of Condoms (Ground 26 in part)

540. The Trial Chamber found that, at the beginning of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko came to the Cyarwa-Sumo Sector, Ngoma Commune, and distributed condoms for the Interahamwe to be used in the raping and killing of Tutsi women in that sector.[1231] The Trial Chamber further found that Nyiramasuhuko gave the following order to the woman to whom she distributed the condoms: "[g]o and distribute these condoms to your young men, so that they use them to rape Tutsi women and to protect themselves from AIDS, and after having raped them they should kill all of them. Let no Tutsi woman survive because they take away our husbands."[1232]

541. However, the Trial Chamber held that there was not "sufficient reliable evidence to show a link between Nyiramasuhuko's actions in distributing the condoms on this occasion, in addition to her utterances evincing her clear intent to target Tutsi women, and actual rapes committed against said Tutsi women."[1233] Moreover, although the Trial Chamber determined that Nyiramasuhuko's order to the woman to whom she distributed the condoms was direct and could not be considered ambiguous in the context of the rapes and large scale massacres committed throughout Butare Prefecture at that time, it found that her statements were more akin to a "conversation" and did not satisfy the "public" element of the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[1234] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko not guilty of genocide, rape as a crime against humanity, and direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to this incident.[1235] Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber found that "this circumstantial evidence shows Nyiramasuhuko's intent to destroy, in whole or in substantial part, the Tutsi group"[1236] and relied in part on this evidence to find that Nyiramasuhuko possessed the specific intent to commit genocide in relation to other events.[1237]

542. The Trial Chamber found that the allegation concerning Nyiramasuhuko's distribution of condoms was not specifically pleaded in the Indictment and that the Indictment was therefore defective in this regard.[1238] However, the Trial Chamber found that this defect was cured through the disclosure of the summary of Witness FAE's anticipated testimony appended to the Prosecution

Pre-Trial Brief and Witness FAE's prior statement to Tribunal investigators.[1239] The Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko "was reasonably able to understand the nature of the charges against her" and that she suffered no prejudice in the preparation of her defence.[1240]

543. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her on the basis of the allegation concerning the distribution of condoms, whereas it found that the allegation was not pleaded in the Indictment.[1241] She argues that it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber to find that the defect in the Indictment was cured.[1242] In support of this contention, Nyiramasuhuko submits that Witness FAE's prior statement did not provide her notice that she was charged with physically distributing condoms to the Interahamwe in early June 1994 and with encouraging them to commit rapes.[1243]

544. The Prosecution responds that since the Trial Chamber only relied on Nyiramasuhuko's distribution of condoms as evidence of her genocidal intent, this allegation was merely evidence that did not need to be pleaded in the Indictment.[1244] It adds that, in any event, the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nyiramasuhuko had notice of the distribution of condoms and that she suffered no prejudice in the preparation of her defence.[1245]

545. Nyiramasuhuko replies that her conduct with regard to the distribution of condoms had to be specifically pleaded in the Indictment since the Trial Chamber relied upon it to convict her.[1246]

546. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to what Nyiramasuhuko appears to suggest in her submissions, she was not found guilty in relation to the distribution of condoms in June 1994, the Trial Chamber having found that there was insufficient evidence demonstrating that actual rapes were committed as a result of this distribution.[1247] As noted above, the Trial Chamber merely relied on its finding on the distribution of condoms as circumstantial evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's genocidal intent in relation to the crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1248] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that any error committed by the Trial Chamber as regards the pleading of Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility in the distribution of condoms as a separate allegation underpinning criminal charges would not have any impact on Nyiramasuhuko's conviction or sentence.

547. To the extent that the Trial Chamber relied on this event as circumstantial evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's genocidal intent for different incidents, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that, with respect to the mens rea, an indictment may plead either: (i) the state of mind of the accused, in which case the facts by which that state of mind is to be established are matters of evidence, and need not be pleaded; or (ii) the evidentiary facts from which the state of mind is to be inferred.[1249]

548. In the present case, the Indictment pleaded under the count of genocide that Nyiramasuhuko acted "with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a racial or ethnic group" in relation to the crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office,[1250] thus providing clear notice to Nyiramasuhuko that she was alleged to have acted with genocidal intent. Given that the Indictment pleaded Nyiramasuhuko's specific state of mind alleged in relation to the count of genocide, the evidentiary facts by which her mens rea was to be established did not need to be pleaded. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers it unnecessary to examine whether the defect in the Indictment concerning the allegation of distribution of condoms was curable or cured since the allegation did not need to be pleaded in the Indictment for the Trial Chamber to rely on it as it ultimately did.

549. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the relevant part of Ground 26 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

5. Cumulative Effect of the Defects (Ground 14)

550. In its preliminary considerations of notice issues in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled the Appeals Chamber's holding that, even if the Prosecution succeeded in arguing that the defects in the indictments were remedied in each individual instance, the Trial Chamber still had to consider whether the overall effect of the numerous defects rendered the trial unfair in itself.[1251] After engaging in analysis to that effect, the Trial Chamber determined that "the Accused were in a reasonable position to understand the charges against them and had the time and resources available to investigate these charges."[1252] It concluded that "the trial was not rendered unfair and the Accused did not suffer any prejudice in the preparation of their respective defences."[1253]

551. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Indictment was "inherently defective" and vitiated the entire proceedings, rendering her trial unfair.[1254] She contends that the Trial Chamber's failure to address and remedy the addition of numerous irrelevant allegations and the multiple defects in the Indictment was a serious error of law which "inexorably" prejudiced the proceedings and violated her fair trial rights.[1255] She points in particular to the Trial Chamber's findings that paragraphs 5.1, 6.30, and 6.37 of the Indictment were defective.[1256] Nyiramasuhuko submits that "the glaring determination of the Trial Chamber to find ways of curing what was basically defective bore testimony of its intention to convict [her]".[1257] In her view, the "countless fair trial violations resulting from the Chamber's successive attempts to cure all the defects in the facts supporting the charges sealed and rendered irreversible this prejudice against [her]" and "such conduct by the Chamber could not demonstrate anything other than a clear appearance of bias in favour of the Prosecutor's case and/or, consequently against [her]."[1258]

552. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's general submissions under Ground 14 of her appeal should be summarily dismissed since they fail to identify any specific error or provide supporting references to the Trial Judgement, the trial record, or her other ground of appeals.[1259]

553. In the prior sections addressing Nyiramasuhuko's specific challenges related to the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber reached conclusions reflecting that the Indictment was not [1254] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 398. See also Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 2.1, 2.11. [1255] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 2.2; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 400, 401. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in her notice of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko also argued that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to make a finding on the Prosecution's failure to inform her of her mode of participation in the crimes alleged under Article 6(1) of the Statute and in recognising the prejudice she suffered in this respect; (ii) failing to determine her mode of participation in conspiracy to commit genocide; (iii) failing to find that the Prosecution's omission to inform her of its intention to call Prosecution witnesses to support some allegations prejudiced her ability to prepare her defence; (iv) shifting the burden of proof with respect to the allegation of prejudice resulting from the vagueness of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment; (v) failing to stress that the Prosecution bore the burden to demonstrate that she did not suffer prejudice from the numerous defects in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment; and (vi) concluding that it provided additional time to the Defence to prepare its case to investigate the new allegations brought by the Prosecution. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 2.3-2.10, 2.17. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that Nyiramasuhuko failed to reiterate and develop with argument these allegations in her appeal brief. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these unsubstantiated allegations without further consideration.

[1257] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 405.
[1258] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 406, 407. The Appeals Chamber observes that some of the contentions set forth in Ground 14 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal may appear to be introductory of her specific contentions related to notice developed in Grounds 15 through 18. However, Nyiramasuhuko fails to develop any substantive argument in support of these contentions.

"inherently defective" and found that the Trial Chamber did not err in concluding that Nyiramasuhuko was put on notice of the charges on which she was convicted. Nyiramasuhuko's obscure contention that the Trial Chamber failed to address and remedy the addition of numerous irrelevant allegations and the multiple defects of the Indictment is not only unsupported by any reference, but also ignores the Trial Chamber's findings throughout the Trial Judgement.

554. As regards the overall effect of the defects in the Indictment on the preparation of her defence, Nyiramasuhuko advances allegations of "irreversible" or "irreparable" prejudice which she at no point substantiates. The Appeals Chamber does not minimise the extent of the Prosecution's failure to provide adequate notice in the Indictment with respect to the charges related to the prefectoral office. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not show any error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that she did not suffer prejudice in the preparation of her defence.

555. Apart from the fact that Nyiramasuhuko's new allegation of bias against the judges of the Trial Chamber is also wholly unsubstantiated, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how the Trial Chamber's detailed consideration of whether Nyiramasuhuko was put on sufficient notice of the charges against her and its findings that the Indictment was largely defective but, at times, cured, could lead a reasonable observer, properly informed, to apprehend bias on the part of the Trial Chamber's judges.[1260]

556. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dimisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges pertaining to the cumulative effect of the defects in the Indictment.

6. Conclusion

557. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in authorising the Prosecution to amend her indictment to add new counts and the charge of superior responsibility. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber dismisses her contentions that she was not charged with, lacked sufficient notice of, or was materially prejudiced in the preparation of her defence from the lack of notice of her alleged responsibility for conspiracy to commit genocide, the killings and rapes of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office committed following her orders, and in relation to the distribution of condoms in June 1994.

[1259] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 121.
[1260] The Appeals Chamber reiterates that a presumption of impartiality attaches to the judges of the Tribunal and that this presumption cannot be easily rebutted and that an appearance of bias exists if, notably, "the circumstances would lead a reasonable observer, properly informed, to reasonably apprehend bias." See supra, paras. 95, 273, 405.

The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's claim of prejudice resulting from the accumulation of defects in the Indictment.

558. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 3, 14 through 18, and the relevant part of Ground 26 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

C. Fabrication of Evidence and Genocide Survivor Groups (Ground 13)

559. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in failing to assess the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses FAE, QBP, and SU with great caution given their membership in associations of genocide survivors.[1261] In support of her contention, Nyiramasuhuko emphasises that Witness FAE admitted to being a member of "ARG", an association of genocide survivors, which, according to Kanyabashi Defence Expert Witness Filip Reyntjens, organised denunciations and false testimonies, and sometimes even prepared witnesses and paid them to testify for the Prosecution.[1262] She argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously excluded the testimony of Nyiramasuhuko Defence Witness WNMN, who stated that "Witness FAE was a member of Ibuka who had denounced her sister unjustly [in a separate proceeding] and collaborated with some Ibuka members in securing her arrest".[1263] Nyiramasuhuko also claims that the Trial Chamber erred in refusing to accept the testimony of Kanyabashi Defence Witness D-13-D, who testified to having learned during Gacaca proceedings that Witnesses FAE and SU were influential members of Ibuka who falsely accused many people.[1264] Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Nyiramasuhuko Defence Witness WMCZ's evidence that Witness QBP belonged to an association of genocide survivors and accused people in order to acquire property.[1265]

560. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments should be summarily dismissed as they fail to identify the challenged factual findings and merely assert that the Trial Chamber failed to interpret the evidence in a particular manner or give it sufficient weight.[1266] It submits that the Trial Chamber duly assessed the evidence upon which Nyiramasuhuko relies and that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment.[1267]

561. The Appeals Chamber considers that a witness's membership in an association of survivors alone does not imply a desire or motive to implicate the accused, nor does it render the witness's evidence tainted or his accounts unreliable or partial. The Appeals Chamber therefore sees no reason to require, as a matter of principle, a trial chamber to apply particular caution in treating the evidence of witnesses who are members of such associations. The Appeals Chamber also recalls its position that a "statement by Professor Reynt[j]ens that the Ibuka Organization paid people to give false evidence cannot, per se, constitute a sufficient ground for excluding, in a general manner, the testimony of Prosecution witnesses".[1268]

562. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber explicitly addressed the Defence's allegations of evidence fabrication in the Trial Judgement.[1269] In this context, the Trial Chamber considered arguments that the testimonies of Witnesses FAE, QBP, and SU were improperly influenced by genocide survivor associations.[1270] Having "carefully considered the totality of evidence adduced",[1271] including the evidence of Witnesses Reyntjens, WNMN, WMCZ, and D-13-D relied upon by Nyiramasuhuko,[1272] the Trial Chamber concluded that the Defence evidence on allegations of fabrication of testimony did not undermine the testimonies of Witnesses FAE, QBP, and SU.[1273]

563. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the purpose of appellate proceedings is not for the Appeals Chamber to reconsider the evidence and arguments submitted before the Trial Chamber.[1274] The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber duly considered the allegations of fabrication of evidence made by Expert Witness Reyntjens against Ibuka and the allegations of Witnesses WNMN, WMCZ, and D-13-D against Witnesses FAE, QBP, and SU. On appeal, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Judgement's rejection thereof constituted an error. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 13 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal in its entirety.

D. Conspiracy to Commit Genocide (Ground 19)

564. The Trial Chamber found that, from 9 April until 14 July 1994, and in particular between 9 April and 19 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko agreed with other members of the Interim Government to issue directives to encourage the population to hunt down and kill Tutsis in Butare Prefecture.[1275] Specifically, it found that during a Cabinet meeting of the Interim Government held on 16 or 17 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko agreed with other members of the Interim Government to remove Jean-Baptiste Habyalimana as prefect of Butare, who had posed an obstacle to the killing of Tutsis, and replace him with Nsabimana.[1276] The Trial Chamber further determined that, on 19 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko attended Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony as prefect of Butare, lending further support to the Interim Government's decision to replace Habyalimana.[1277] It considered that, by her presence and failure to dissociate herself from the content of Prime Minister Kambanda's and President Sindikubwabo's speeches during the ceremony ("Kambanda's Speech" and "Sindikubwabo's Speech", respectively), Nyiramasuhuko effectively endorsed their inflammatory statements.[1278] The Trial Chamber also held that the removal of Habyalimana, the appointment of Nsabimana as the new prefect, and Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches were "factors that coincided with the commencement of widespread killings" in Butare Prefecture.[1279] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko, as a member of the Interim Government, adopted and issued the 27 April Directive encouraging the population to mount and man roadblocks, the purpose of which was to encourage the killing of Tutsis.[1280]

565. On this basis, and considering Nyiramasuhuko's participation with the Interim Government in many of the Cabinet meetings at which the massacre of Tutsis was discussed and in decisions which triggered the onslaught of massacres in Butare Prefecture, the Trial Chamber concluded that the only reasonable conclusion was that Nyiramasuhuko entered into an agreement with members of the Interim Government on or after 9 April 1994 to kill Tutsis within Butare Prefecture with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group.[1281] Consequently, the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of conspiracy to commit genocide.[1282]

566. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her of conspiracy to commit genocide.[1283] In particular, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) exhibiting bias by adopting a differential treatment of the evidence between her and her co-accused; (ii) relying on her testimony to convict her; (iii) relying on expert evidence; (iv) its assessment of the 27 April Directive; (v) its assessment of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches; and (vi) making contradictory and inconsistent findings.[1284] The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

1. Appearance of Bias

567. The Trial Chamber found with regard to Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje that there were reasonable inferences from the evidence other than the inference that they had conspired with the Interim Government to commit genocide against the Tutsi population in Butare Prefecture.[1285] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber acquitted them of the count of conspiracy to commit genocide.[1286]

568. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the differences of treatment between the manner the Trial Chamber applied the principles of law regarding the charge of conspiracy in her regard and the manner it applied it in the case of her co-accused raise an appearance of bias against her.[1287] Specifically, she alleges that the Trial Chamber: (i) applied different standards regarding notice of the charge of conspiracy to her and to Ntahobali and Ndayambaje; (ii) relied solely on expert evidence in her case while considering that expert evidence was insufficient in relation to Nsabimana; (iii) treated her presence at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony differently from that of Nsabimana and Kanyabashi; and (iv) justified its differential treatment of her on the basis that [1284] The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko failed to repeat in her appeal brief and develop with precise arguments and supporting references a number of allegations that she had raised in her notice of appeal. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber refers to Nyiramasuhuko's allegations that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) finding the existence of a conspiracy between Nyiramasuhuko and members of the Interim Government when the Prosecution did not adduce evidence of any agreement with André Rwamakuba, Kambanda, or Sindikubwabo; (ii) relying on the interpretation of Prosecution witnesses, predominantly detainees or former detainees, of the words "enemy" and "work" and in failing to provide reasons for accepting their evidence on the meaning of certain words; (iii) failing to consider the 27 April Directive in light of Nyiramasuhuko's Defence evidence regarding the directives and statements of the Interim Government when making finding on the Interim Government's intent; (iv) failing to consider that Nyiramasuhuko's account on Prefect Habyalimana's removal was corroborated by the testimony of Expert Witness Reyntjens and Witness Karemano; and (v) refusing to recall Witness AND-44, thereby impairing her ability to prepare her defence. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 3.20, 3.42, 3.44, 3.48, 3.77. In the absence of the necessary substantiation, these allegations of errors are dismissed without further consideration.

[1287] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 588, 598, 685. she was a member of the Interim Government, thereby finding her guilty "by association" as a member of the Interim Government and not as an individual.[1288]

569. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to the allegation of bias as it pertains to Nyiramasuhuko's conviction for conspiracy to commit genocide. It nonetheless submits that Nyiramasuhuko's contention that she was convicted by association should be dismissed given that the Trial Chamber convicted her of conspiring with members of the Interim Government and not with the Interim Government as an "institution".[1289]

570. The Appeals Chamber recalls the standards applicable to the review of allegations of bias against judges of the Tribunal discussed in Section IV.A.1 above. In the present case, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko seeks to demonstrate an appearance of bias of the Trial Chamber against her, alleging a differential treatment with her co-accused, through a fragmented view and incomplete reading of the Trial Judgement, and based on the erroneous premise that her co-accused's cases were identical to hers.

571. With regard to the Trial Chamber's alleged differential treatment of Ntahobali and Ndayambaje concerning notice of the charge of conspiracy to commit genocide specifically, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko overlooks that the Prosecution case of conspiracy against her differed from that against Ntahobali and Ndayambaje.[1290] Likewise, her contention that the Trial Chamber found that expert evidence was insufficient in relation to Nsabimana fails to appreciate that, in her case, the Trial Chamber also relied on the evidence of factual witnesses and Nyiramasuhuko's own testimony and that, unlike Nsabimana, she was found to have attended Cabinet meetings where directives were discussed and issued.[1291] The Appeals Chamber also sees no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's unsubstantiated and unreferenced assertion that the Trial Chamber treated her presence at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony differently from the presence of Nsabimana and Kanyabashi.

572. The Appeals Chamber also does not accept Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that she was convicted "by association". A review of the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that she was convicted of having conspired with members of the Interim Government on the basis of her own acts and omissions.[1292] Nyiramasuhuko's contentions are therefore dismissed.

The Appeals Chamber notes that, in her notice of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise the allegation of appearance of bias in relation to her conviction for conspiracy to commit genocide. The Prosecution did not object to this allegation in its response brief on this basis, but only generally responded to Nyiramasuhuko's allegations of bias. Given the importance of the issue raised and in light of the substantiation provided by Nyiramasuhuko, the Appeals Chamber has nonetheless decided to exercise its discretion to examine Nyiramasuhuko's submissions.

573. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the circumstances would lead a reasonable observer, properly informed, to reasonably apprehend bias and dismisses her arguments in this respect.

2. Reliance on Nyiramasuhuko's Testimony

574. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber violated her right to be presumed innocent and not to be compelled to testify against herself by reaching conclusions relating to the Interim Government's directives and instructions as well as the removal of Prefect Habyalimana solely on the basis of her testimony, in the absence of any incriminatory evidence from the Prosecution.[1293] She contends that she raised the problem of self-incrimination at trial when the Trial Chamber admitted her 1994 personal diary into evidence, arguing that its admission compelled her to testify since she was the only person capable of contradicting Expert Witness Guichaoua's interpretation of her diary.[1294]

575. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments should be rejected as the Trial Chamber is entitled to consider any evidence on the record and as Nyiramasuhuko's choice to waive her right to remain silent and to testify in order to rebut Prosecution evidence was her own decision.[1295] It emphasises that the Trial Chamber did not rely exclusively on her evidence in reaching its findings on the Interim Government's directives and instructions and the prefect's removal.[1296]

576. The Appeals Chamber underlines that trial chambers are tasked with determining the guilt or innocence of the accused and must do so in light of the entirety of the evidence admitted into the record and that neither the Statute nor the Rules prevent a trial chamber from relying on the testimony of the accused to convict that accused, unless the accused's self-incriminating evidence was compelled in violation of Article 20(4)(g) of the Statute.[1297] In this instance, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko's contention of having been compelled to testify against herself is without merit. The mere fact that Nyiramasuhuko decided to testify because of the admission into evidence of her 1994 personal diary does not show any form of improper compulsion by the Prosecution which was aimed at – and able to – coercing her to testify against her free will in violation of her right not to be compelled to testify against herself.[1298] It is also noteworthy that Nyiramasuhuko testified in the presence of her counsel and was not compelled to make any incriminating statements.[1299] As such, the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Nyiramasuhuko's testimony. Additionally, the Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's ambiguous contention, her conviction is not based solely on her testimony since the Trial Chamber relied on documentary evidence, expert evidence as well as the testimonies of several other witnesses.[1300] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions in this respect.

[1294] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 684. See also ibid., para. 578. The Appeals Chamber notes that, as with her claim of appearance of bias discussed above, Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise the allegation of violation of her right to be presumed innocent and not to be compelled to testify against herself in her notice of appeal. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko's argument developed elsewhere in her appeal brief that the Trial Chamber erred in "relying exclusively on the opinion evidence" of expert witnesses regarding certain aspects of her conviction for conspiracy directly contradicts her contention that she was found responsible in relation to the same aspects on the sole basis of her testimony. See ibid., para. 634. See also Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 3.34, 3.35, 3.45; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 635, 642. While endowed with discretion not to consider allegations of error that were not raised in the notice of appeal and contradictory submissions, the Appeals Chamber, noting that the Prosecution responded to them and considering the importance of the issue raised, has decided to consider the merits of Nyiramasuhuko's submissions.

3. Expert Evidence

577. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying solely on the opinion evidence of Prosecution Expert Witnesses Des Forges, Guichaoua, Ntakirutimana, and Kanyabashi Defence Expert Witness Reyntjens in support of some of the findings underpinning her conviction for conspiracy to commit genocide.[1301] In her view, "[t]he opinion of an expert that is not confirmed

The Appeals Chamber has already dismissed Nyiramasuhuko's challenge to the admissibility of her diary which, according to Nyiramasuhuko, would compel her to testify against herself. The Appeals Chamber found that the "Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion at this stage of the proceedings, and there is thus no need for appellate intervention." See 4 October 2004 Appeal Decision, paras. 3, 6. See also supra, Section IV.A.2(a).

by concrete evidence cannot be the basis of a finding of one of the material elements of a charge against an accused."[1302] In particular, Nyiramasuhuko argues that, besides their opinion evidence, the Prosecution did not present any "concrete evidence" establishing: (i) her "awareness and intent" regarding "the implied objective to be regularly informed of the situation of the killings […], to issue directives/instructions in order to encourage the killings, to dismiss Préfet Habyalimana […], or to endorse President Sindikubwabo's speech";[1303] and (ii) what happened in the Cabinet meetings to show that she participated in these meetings in order to implement a genocidal policy.[1304] She also contends that the Trial Chamber failed to make a finding on the reliability, credibility, and probative value of the expert evidence it relied upon, despite the fact that it was not confirmed by evidence and was based on unidentified sources.[1305]

578. The Prosecution responds that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contention, the Trial Chamber did not solely rely on expert evidence when making findings on: (i) the fact that massacres of civilians were discussed during Cabinet meetings; (ii) the fact that the Cabinet met on at least 15 occasions between 6 April and 17 July 1994; (iii) the issuance of directives to encourage killings and Prefect Habyalimana's removal; and (iv) the fact that Sindikubwabo's Speech was inflammatory.[1306] The Prosecution contends that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments related to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the expert witnesses' evidence should be rejected as unsubstantiated.[1307]

579. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion, the Trial Chamber also relied on factual witnesses and concrete evidence for its findings concerning the discussion of massacres during Cabinet meetings, the issuance of directives inciting the population to kill Tutsis, the decision to replace Prefect Habyalimana, and the inflammatory nature of Sindikubwabo's Speech. More specifically, the Appeals Chamber notes that, with regard to Cabinet meetings where information on massacres was provided and the issuance of directives inciting killings, the Trial Chamber also relied on Nyiramasuhuko's testimony and her personal notes and 1994 diary.[1308] As to the decision to remove Habyalimana from office, the Trial Chamber did not refer solely to the evidence of Expert Witness Guichaoua in its deliberations but also to the

In the absence of any explanation or substantiation as to what Nyiramasuhuko refers to in this regard, the Appeals Chamber has disregarded this aspect of her submissions. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 636. Under this ground of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in allowing Expert Witness Guichaoua to tender her 1994 personal diary into evidence. See ibid., para. 637. testimony of Nyiramasuhuko.[1309] While not expressly referred to in the deliberations section, the Trial Chamber also summarised the evidence of several witnesses who provided evidence in this respect.[1310] Concerning the inflammatory nature of Sindikubwabo's Speech, the Trial Chamber relied, inter alia, on the evidence of Witnesses RV, TQ, and Charles Karemano as well as the testimony of Nsabimana.[1311]

580. In addition, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has repeatedly held that the role of expert witnesses is to assist the trial chamber in its assessment of the evidence before it, and not to testify on disputed facts as would ordinary witnesses.[1312] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's consideration of Expert Witnesses Des Forges's, Guichaoua's, Ntakirutimana's, and Reyntjens's general evidence about the removal of Prefect Habyalimana and Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony ignored the limitations imposed on expert evidence. The Trial Chamber relied on the expert witnesses' opinion on this matter in light of the evidence of factual witnesses that large scale killings did not occur in Butare Prefecture until after Prefect Habyalimana's removal.[1313]

581. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Nyiramasuhuko does not substantiate her assertion that the expert evidence was based on unidentified sources. On the contrary, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Expert Witnesses Des Forges's, Guichaoua's, Ntakirutimana's, and Reyntjens's reports, which were thoroughly substantiated and referenced.[1314] Likewise, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber properly assessed the credibility and probative value of the expert evidence it relied upon and that it acted reasonably when finding these expert witnesses credible. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber indicated that it had "closely considered the qualifications" of the expert witnesses, including their relevant experience and methods of inquiry, and that the Defence had "adequate opportunity to voir dire" these witnesses.[1315]

582. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions concerning the Trial Chamber's assessment of and reliance on the expert evidence.

4. 27 April Directive

583. The Trial Chamber found that, throughout 1994 in Rwanda, words such as "enemy", "Inyenzi", "Inkotanyi", "accomplice", and "infiltrator" were used to refer to Tutsis and that such "double-speak" was used by the Interim Government in its directives and instructions.[1316] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko, as a member of the Interim Government, adopted and issued a directive on 27 April 1994 encouraging the population into mounting and manning roadblocks, the purpose of which was to encourage the killing of Tutsis.[1317] The Trial Chamber concluded that the 27 April Directive had a double meaning and that, while its surface message was apparently to restore calm, the reference to "the restoration of security hid an underlying message", namely the elimination of Tutsis who represented a threat to security.[1318]

584. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its interpretation of the 27 April Directive, particularly in concluding that in Rwanda in 1994, the words "enemy, Inyenzi, Inkotanyi, accomplice and infiltrator" were used to refer to Tutsis.[1319] In support of her contention, she highlights that it was well known at the relevant time that these "words also referred to the real enemy, the RPF, the Inkotanyi".[1320] In her view, the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the expert witnesses' theory that the 27 April Directive contained a "double language" in the absence of any "concrete evidence" to sustain this opinion.[1321] She contends that it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber to assert that the "experts, through their opinions on the use of a double language in a document to which the witnesses of fact did not refer and in the absence of any evidence that the

The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Trial Chamber found that Expert Witnesses Guichaoua's, Des Forges's, and Reyntjens's conclusions were "reliable because the assessment of Préfet Habyalimana's historical and political role falls squarely within the experts' area of expertise and the experts also agree on this point". See ibid., para. 857.

Under this ground of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting the testimony of Kanyabashi Defence Expert Witness Reyntjens and in relying in part on the testimony of Nsabimana Defence Witness Fergal Keane on the ground that, had she been tried alone, these witnesses would not have appeared in her trial. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 3.38, 3.40. said witnesses were even aware of the instructions, 'corroborated' the factual evidence that in Rwanda, in 1994, the words 'enemy/accomplices' were used to refer to Tutsis."[1322] She also alleges that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to note that the 27 April Directive was addressed to prefects and, through them and the local authorities, to the population.[1323]

585. Nyiramasuhuko submits that another reasonable inference available from the evidence was that the Interim Government, being aware that some members of the population referred to the Tutsis in general as the enemy and accomplice, had specifically requested the prefects to inform the population that the enemy was the "RPF-Inkotanyi" in the 27 April Directive.[1324] This specific identification of the enemy as the Rwandan Patriotic Front ("RPF") in the directive, she argues, demonstrates the "incongruity" of the experts' interpretation of the word "enemy" as referring to Tutsis in the 27 April Directive.[1325] Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber failed to determine "her own intent regarding the adoption and issuance" of the 27 April Directive.[1326]

586. The Prosecution responds that the expert evidence on the meaning of the 27 April Directive was supported by "overwhelming direct evidence from native Kinyarwanda speakers".[1327] It adds that Nyiramasuhuko's argument that another reasonable inference from the evidence was that the prefects informed the population that the enemy in the 27 April Directive was the RPF-Inkotanyi should be rejected as mere speculation.[1328]

587. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber reached its findings relating to the 27 April Directive primarily based on the evidence of Expert Witnesses Guichaoua, Des Forges, and Reyntjens as well as on the evidence of Nyiramasuhuko Defence Expert Witness Eugène Shimamungu and Nyiramasuhuko's 1994 diary and personal notes.[1329] The Trial Chamber also explicitly relied on a number of factual witnesses and documentary evidence on the use of

"double-speak" in Rwanda in 1994.[1330] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that there was no "concrete" evidence to sustain the expert opinion on this issue.

588. The Appeals Chamber fails to see the pertinence of Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to note that the 27 April Directive was addressed to prefects and, through them, to the population. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing how the 27 April Directive was disseminated to the population.[1331]

589. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that another reasonable inference from the evidence was that the prefects informed the population that the enemy in the 27 April Directive was the RPF-Inkotanyi rather than the Tutsis in general, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that words such as "accomplice", "enemy", "Inkotanyi", or "Inyenzi" were used to refer to Tutsis at the time. She only suggests that another reasonable inference was available without demonstrating error in the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusion, and does not point to any evidence supporting an alternative inference. It also bears noting that the 27 April Directive, in addition to expressly identifying the enemy as the "RPF-INKOTANYI", also refers to the "enemy and his accomplices".[1332] In light of the overwhelming consistent and reliable evidence in the record that the words "accomplice", "enemy", "Inyenzi", and "Inkotanyi" were used to refer to Tutsis throughout Rwanda in 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have reached this finding.[1333]

Who did you understand the term Inkotanyi to refer to? A. We did not quite understand what that word meant at the time. But, subsequently, we were told, or it was explained to us that Inkotanyi were Tutsis."); Fergal Keane, T. 27 September 2006 p. 78 ("At the time, I understood the term Inyenzi to mean cockroach and that could be applied to RPF soldiers or to Tutsi civilians, that was my understanding."). Expert Witness Shimamungu also explained that the term "Inkotanyi" was used to refer to the Tutsis. See Eugène Shimamungu, T. 16 March 2005 p. 38.

590. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the fact that some of the factual witnesses relied upon by the Trial Chamber were not aware of the specific content of the instructions means that their evidence as to the use of double language does not corroborate the expert opinion on this issue.[1334] The Trial Chamber did not find that the factual witnesses corroborated the expert evidence on the content and meaning of the 27 April Directive but rather on the general use of double speak in Rwanda at the time of the events.[1335] The Appeals Chamber is thus satisfied that the Trial Chamber did not err in concluding that these witnesses corroborated each other.[1336]

591. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber not expressly considering Nyiramasuhuko's own intent with regard to the 27 April Directive.[1337] Indeed, the Appeals Chamber notes that, while the Trial Chamber made no express finding that Nyiramasuhuko endorsed the content of the 27 April Directive, a review of Nyiramasuhuko's testimony reflects that she did not dissociate herself from it and was actively involved in its drafting and dissemination.[1338] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Nyiramasuhuko, as a member of the Interim Government, could be held responsible for adopting directives and issuing instructions encouraging the population to kill Tutsis.

592. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its interpretation of the 27 April Directive.

5. Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony

593. The Trial Chamber found that, on 19 April 1994, Nyiramasuhuko attended Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony and that, by her presence and failure to dissociate herself from the content of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches delivered that day, she effectively endorsed their inflammatory statements.[1339] The Trial Chamber also held that the removal of Prefect Habyalimana, the appointment of Nsabimana as the new prefect, and Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches were factors that "coincided with the commencement of widespread killings" in Butare Prefecture.[1340]

[1334] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber notes that some witnesses testified as to the use of double language in Rwanda in general in 1994 and their findings were not exclusively focused on the 27 April Directive. See, e.g., Eugène Shimamungu, T. 16 March 2005 p. 38; Fergal Keane, T. 27 September 2006 p. 78.

594. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred regarding the inflammatory nature of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches and the commencement of the widespread killings in Butare Prefecture.[1341]

(a) Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches

595. The Trial Chamber concluded that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches contained inflammatory and coded language that was understood by the attendees and the public to identify and kill Tutsis and their accomplices.[1342] The Trial Chamber relied on its finding that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches shared a number of common themes which illustrated that the speeches were complementary and had a common purpose at the swearing-in ceremony, that of inciting the population to take action against Tutsis.[1343] It went on to find that the "enemy" they both described was the Tutsis and that the word "work" contained in the two speeches meant to kill Tutsis.[1344]

596. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches contained coded language and encouraged the population to kill the Tutsis.[1345] In particular, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) relying on the report of Expert Witness Ntakirutimana; (ii) relying on Expert Witnesses Des Forges's and Reyntjens's testimonies; (iii) rejecting the evidence of Expert Witness Shimamungu; (iv) its assessment of Witness RV's testimony; and (v) its interpretation of the speeches.[1346] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(i) Ntakirutimana Reports

597. On 12 January 2004, the Prosecution disclosed two reports by Expert Witness Ntakirutimana, one on the use of proverbs and phrases in Rwanda during the events of 1994 and one on the interpretation of Sindikubwabo's Speech, which were admitted into evidence as exhibits P158 and P159 during the expert's testimony on 13 September 2004 ("Ntakirutimana Reports").[1347]

598. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying solely on the "report" of Expert Witness Ntakirutimana in support of its finding that Sindikubwabo's Speech was inflammatory as this evidence was merely an opinion "not confirmed by concrete evidence".[1348] She also appears to purport that the expert "report" should not have been relied upon because it was "not confirmed by its author".[1349] Nyiramasuhuko adds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the "report" as Expert Witness Ntakirutimana was also a "witness of fact, especially as he lived in Nyanza, [….] and gave factual evidence on the beginning of the killings".[1350] She also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in comparing unconfirmed extracts of the Ntakirutimana Reports with Expert Witness Shimamungu's testimony on Kambanda's Speech whereas Expert Witness Ntakirutimana had never analysed this particular speech.[1351]

599. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not solely rely on the Ntakirutimana Report on Sindikubwabo's Speech as it also considered the evidence of Nsabimana, Witnesses Charles Karemano and Tiziano Pegoraro, and Expert Witnesses Des Forges and Reyntjens.[1352] It adds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to identify which part of the Ntakirutimana Report on Sindikubwabo's Speech was not confirmed in his in-court testimony.[1353] The Prosecution also submits that the fact that Expert Witness Ntakirutimana's presence in Nyanza during the impugned period does not affect his status as an expert witness and that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show what impact, if any, this would have on the Trial Chamber's reliance on his report.[1354]

Nyiramasuhuko generally refers to the "report of Expert Witness Ntakirutimana" without specifying to which report she refers. The Appeals Chamber understands from the references to the Trial Judgement that she provides that she is referring to both the Ntakirutimana Sociolinguistic Analysis and the Ntakirutimana Report on Sindikubwabo's Speech.

Under this ground of appeal, Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the addition of Expert Witness Ntakirutimana at the end of the Prosecution case did not prejudice her ability to prepare her defence. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 3.60; Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 170. 600. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's claim, Expert Witness Ntakirutimana authenticated his reports in court.[1355] It also notes that the Trial Chamber did not rely solely on the Ntakirutimana Reports to find that Sindikubwabo's Speech was inflammatory, but also on the transcript of the speech itself and the evidence of Nsabimana, Witness Karemano, and Expert Witnesses Des Forges and Reyntjens.[1356] The Appeals Chamber thus rejects Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that Expert Witness Ntakirutimana's evidence was not confirmed by "concrete evidence". The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the fact that Expert Witness Ntakirutimana indicated that he was living in Butare Prefecture in April 1994 and that he testified as to the timing of the beginning of the killings in Butare Prefecture has any impact on his qualification as an expert witness or on the content of his report.[1357]

601. Moreover, Nyiramasuhuko's argument regarding the erroneous reliance on the Ntakirutimana Reports when assessing Expert Witness Shimamungu's testimony on Kambanda's Speech is without merit as the part of the Trial Judgement with which she takes issue does not relate to Expert Witness Shimamungu's testimony on Kambanda's Speech but to his general interpretation of the word "gukora".[1358]

602. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions regarding the Ntakirutimana Reports.

(ii) Expert Witnesses Des Forges and Reyntjens

603. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Expert Witness Des Forges's evidence concerning the content of Sindikubwabo's Speech because the analysis of a speech in Kinyarwanda was beyond her expertise.[1359] In the same vein, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Expert Witness Reyntjens's evidence regarding Sindikubwabo's Speech as this subject was not within his area of expertise as recognised by the Trial Chamber.[1360]

[1359] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 659. Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness Des Forges's testimony on the speech "since the first opinion lies within the exclusive purview of the Chamber." See idem. The Appeals Chamber will not entertain this obscure argument. The Appeals Chamber further notes that it has found no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention regarding Expert Witness Des Forges's testimony on Nsabimana's statements in Section III.H above. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 658; Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 168.
[1360] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 660.

604. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko only objected to Expert Witnesses Des Forges's and Reyntjens's testimonies about the meaning of Sindikubwabo's Speech in her closing brief and thus waived her right to object on the present basis on appeal.[1361] In any event, the Prosecution maintains that the evidence they provided was within their areas of expertise in Rwandan history and that both expert witnesses had the ability to interpret speeches in Kinyarwanda.[1362]

605. Nyiramasuhuko replies that she objected to the testimonies of the two expert witnesses at the time of their will-say on their qualification as experts.[1363]

606. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution is mistaken when arguing that Nyiramasuhuko only objected to Expert Witnesses Des Forges's and Reyntjens's testimonies about the meaning of Sindikubwabo's Speech in her closing brief. Nyiramasuhuko expressly objected to Witness Reyntjens's testimony on Sindikubwabo's Speech and questioned Witness Des Forges's expertise to provide evidence on texts written in Kinyarwanda during the witnesses' testimonies.[1364]

607. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko fails to substantiate her generic and unreferenced contention that the Trial Chamber erred by allowing these expert witnesses to testify beyond their area of expertise.[1365] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber certified Expert Witness Des Forges as an expert in history and the human rights situation in Rwanda up to and including the events of 1994, and Expert Witness Reyntjens as an expert in history, law, and governance in Rwanda.[1366] Nyiramasuhuko also appears to ignore that expert witnesses are ordinarily afforded wide latitude to offer opinions within their expertise.[1367] expertise.[1369] The Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Expert Witnesses Des Forges and Reyntjens regarding Sindikubwabo's Speech.

(iii) Expert Witness Shimamungu

609. The Trial Chamber found that Expert Witness Shimamungu's testimony was "tainted by bias" because of his political and civic activism illustrating his opposition to the RPF, and had to be viewed with appropriate caution.[1370] The Trial Chamber did not find Expert Witness Shimamungu's opinion that it was unclear whether the refugees referred to in Sindikubwabo's Speech were Hutus or Tutsis and that the word "gukora" or "work" did not have a coded meaning to be plausible.[1371]

610. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting the testimony of Expert Witness Shimamungu on Sindikubwabo's Speech.[1372] She claims that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) considering that this witness's testimony was tainted by bias because of his political and civic activism and his views against the RPF shared also by Nyiramasuhuko;[1373] (ii) making an adverse finding against the witness on the ground that he testified that he had been called to "criticize" Expert Witness Ntakirutimana's report "whereas the role of an expert entails, among others, criticizing the publications of fellow experts";[1374] and (iii) ascribing "a derogatory meaning to the French word 'critiquer' (to criticize)".[1375]

611. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in finding that Expert Witness Shimamungu lacked the neutrality, objectivity, and impartiality required for an expert witness because of his political activism, his opposition to the RPF, and his close association with the Habyarimana family.[1376]

612. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the activism of Expert Witnesses Des Forges, Guichaoua, and Reyntjens did not lead the Trial Chamber to exclude their testimonies.[1377] In her view, the fact that the Prosecution expert witnesses shared Expert Witness Shimamungu's stance on the involvement of the RPF in the events without this prompting the Trial Chamber to question their impartiality demonstrates bias on behalf of the Trial Chamber.[1378]

613. While the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the fact that Expert Witness Shimamungu confirmed that he was asked by the Defence to "criticize" the Ntakirutimana's report evidences bias on his part,[1379] it is nevertheless satisfied that a reasonable trier of fact could have decided to treat his testimony with appropriate caution given his opposition to the RPF, his views on the 1994 genocide, and his links with the Habyarimana family, and given the fact that these positions were shared by Nyiramasuhuko.[1380] The Trial Chamber considered that, while Expert Witness Shimamungu's activism did not adversely affect his credibility "when viewed independently", this was not the case when "viewed against the background of the 1994 events".[1381] The Appeals Chamber sees no error in such reasoning. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have accepted Expert Witness Ntakirutimana's interpretation of Sindikubwabo's Speech over Expert Witness Shimamungu's interpretation. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko fails to point to any evidence indicating activism on the part of Expert Witnesses Des Forges, Guichaoua, or Reyntjens that could have impacted their objectivity.[1382]

614. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not shown any error in the assessment of Expert Witness Shimamungu's evidence.

(iv) Witness RV

615. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness RV to find that Sindikubwabo's Speech was inflammatory.[1383] In particular, she argues that Witness RV's position as a detainee who could potentially benefit from accusing her and the fact that he stated that "perhaps he did not hear" Kanyabashi's speech should have led the Trial Chamber to require [1382] The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko did not make any such submissions in her closing brief when addressing the evidence of these witnesses. See The Prosecutor v. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, Case No. ICTR-97-21-T, Closing Brief of Pauline Nyiramasuhuko with Annex, 17 February 2009 (originally filed in French, English translation filed on 1 April 2009) (confidential) ("Nyiramasuhuko Closing Brief"), paras. 367-507. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's unreferenced contention that Expert Witness Des Forges's criticism of President Habyarimana's Government's actions in 1993 displayed "potential bias". See Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 173.

[1383] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 3.61, 3.62, 3.64; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 667, 668.

corroboration.[1384] Nyiramasuhuko also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its interpretation of Witness RV's testimony regarding the meaning of the words "enemy" and "work"; (ii) stating that this witness was corroborated by Expert Witness Reyntjens as this expert was not qualified to speak on this matter and was not a factual witness; and (iii) stating that Witness RV was also corroborated by Witness Karemano as this witness testified that the speech was ambiguous.[1385]

616. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness RV's evidence.[1386]

617. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness RV unambiguously testified that he attended Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony and that he listened to Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches.[1387] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber fails to see the relevance of Nyiramasuhuko's reference to the fact that Witness RV "did not hear" Kanyabashi's speech.[1388]

618. In addition, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in evaluating the witness's evidence in relation to Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches, the Trial Chamber noted that, at the time of his testimony, Witness RV was detained in Rwanda and was serving a sentence for his involvement in the 1994 genocide.[1389] The Trial Chamber concluded that it would treat Witness RV's evidence with appropriate caution given his status as an accomplice witness.[1390] A comprehensive reading of the Trial Judgement evinces that the Trial Chamber considered in detail Witness RV's status as a detained witness and as an accomplice witness in relation to other events upon which he testified.[1391] In this context, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber properly considered Witness RV's possible motivation to implicate Nyiramasuhuko as well as other accused.

619. The Appeals Chamber further notes that, contrary to what Nyiramasuhuko seems to allege, the Trial Chamber did not base its finding as to the meaning of the words "enemy" and "work" in Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches solely on Witness RV's testimony but also considered the transcripts of the speeches themselves, the evidence of Expert Witnesses Des Forges, Ntakirutimana, and Reyntjens, and the evidence of Witnesses Karemano and TQ.[1392] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Witness RV's evidence and to require corroboration.[1393]

620. As regards the Trial Chamber's interpretation of Witness RV's testimony, the Appeals Chamber finds that the evidence of Witness RV concerning the meaning of the words "enemy" and "work", as correctly summarised by the Trial Chamber, does not differ from the Trial Chamber's findings in its deliberations.[1394]

621. The Appeals Chamber also sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Expert Witness Reyntjens to corroborate the evidence of Witness RV. As noted above, Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that Expert Witness Reyntjens was not qualified to testify on the issue.[1395] As to Witness Karemano, while it is true that the witness testified that the word "gukora" in Sindikubwabo's Speech was ambiguous, the Appeals Chamber observes that he also agreed that the speech "chang[ed] things" and that people used it to legitimise killings that were subsequently committed.[1396] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that Witness Karemano's account was consistent with the evidence of Expert Witnesses Ntakirutimana, Des Forges, and Reyntjens, and of Witnesses RV and TQ.[1397]

622. The Appeals Chamber accordingly dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the assessment of Witness RV's evidence.

(v) Interpretation of the Speeches

623. The Trial Chamber found that when Sindikubwabo took the floor and made his speech, he clearly called on the audience to take action against Tutsis, which meant to participate in the killings.[1398] It concluded that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches shared a number of common themes, in that they underlined the existence of war, urged the people of Butare to take action, and warned of traitors who underwent weapons training.[1399] The Trial Chamber further found that these common themes illustrated that the speeches were complementary and had the common purpose of inciting the population to take action against the Tutsis.[1400] It also considered that "when Kambanda talked about not tolerating those who support the enemy and the bourgmestres who he had been told went to train with the Inkotanyi, he was in effect inciting his listeners to commit killings and violence against these people."[1401]

[1392] Trial Judgement, paras. 892-897.
[1393] In any event, the Appeals Chamber recalls that nothing in the Statute or the Rules prevents a trial chamber from relying on uncorroborated evidence. A trial chamber has the discretion to decide in the circumstances of each case whether corroboration is necessary and whether to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony. See, e.g., Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 251; Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, para. 42; Milošević Appeal Judgement, para. 215. This discretion applies equally to the evidence of accomplice witnesses provided that the trier of fact applies the appropriate caution in assessing such evidence See, e.g., Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 251; Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 1 April 2011, paras. 37, 38; Renzaho Appeal Judgement, para. 263.

624. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Sindikubwabo's Speech "clearly" called on the audience to "take measures against the Tutsis" when there is no sentence in the speech that stated such a thing or could be interpreted as such.[1402] Additionally, she submits that the Trial Chamber's inference that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches were complementary and both aimed at inciting the population to kill Tutsis based on the fact that the two speeches spoke about war was unreasonable, especially as the country was at war.[1403]

625. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show that the Trial Chamber's finding that Sindikubwabo's Speech was inflammatory, used coded language, and called on the audience to kill Tutsis and their accomplices was unreasonable.[1404]

626. Although Sindikubwabo's Speech did not expressly call on the audience to "take measures against the Tutsis", the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that it contained such a message. Indeed, a review of Sindikubwabo's Speech reflects that Sindikubwabo specifically asked his audience to analyse his message to understand the terms he used.[1405] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's findings that Sindikubwabo's

It is because we are in an unusual period."). See also ibid., p. 4 ("You should not imagine that these are empty words. When I addressed Rwandan citizens recently on the 17th, I asked them to understand, to understand the full weight of the messages in question, because these were not ordinary words … we are in a period of war. […] The truth is that the words we address to you, the messages we transmit to you… the instructions we send you are taken as if these were empty words, but these are things that are quite serious, considering that we are at war.").

Speech contained coded language and that it clearly incited the population to kill Tutsis are irreconcilable or inconsistent.[1406]

627. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the fact that both Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches mentioned that the country was at war was not the only feature relied on by the Trial Chamber to reach its finding that they were complementary.[1407] Having reviewed the relevant findings of the Trial Chamber as to the common themes of the speeches, as well as its previous findings on the content, nature, and character of Sindikubwabo's Speech,[1408] the Appeals Chamber finds that, on the basis of the evidence before the Trial Chamber, a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that it was clear that "when Kambanda talked about not tolerating those who supported the enemy and the bourgmestres who he had been told went to train with the Inkotanyi, he was in effect inciting his listeners to commit killings and violence against these people."[1409] The Appeals Chamber discerns no error in the Trial Chamber's holistic review of the two speeches in reaching its finding. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions in that regard.

(b) Commencement of the Widespread Killings in Butare Prefecture

628. The Trial Chamber noted that Nyiramasuhuko's theory at trial "that massacres already occurred in Nyakizu and Maraba before 19 April 1994 [… did] not contradict the Prosecution theory that the genocide in Butare did not commence immediately after the death of the President on 6 April 1994 and that the large-scale massacres of Tutsis began two weeks later."[1410] The Trial Chamber observed that, although there was some evidence that a few massacres and ethnic violence occurred prior to 19 April 1994 within Butare's western communes, there was "overwhelming evidence that massacres in most of the Butare communes started in the wake of the events of 19 April 1994."[1411] It concluded that widespread killings of Tutsis did not commence in Butare Prefecture prior to 18 or 19 April 1994.[1412] In reaching these findings, the Trial Chamber took into consideration the removal of Prefect Habyalimana on 16 or 17 April 1994, the appointment of Nsabimana as the new prefect of Butare as well as Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony on 19 April 1994.[1413]

629. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that widespread killings did not commence prior to 19 April 1994.[1414] She contends that the Trial Chamber contradicted itself as it found that killings had already started in some communes in Butare Prefecture prior to that date.[1415] She avers that it is clear from the evidence adduced at trial, notably the evidence of Expert Witness Des Forges and Witness TA, that widespread killings had already started before 19 April 1994.[1416] Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding on the sole basis of the evidence of expert witnesses that the removal of Prefect Habyalimana and Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches coincided with and contributed to trigger the commencement of widespread killings in Butare Prefecture.[1417]

630. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments should be rejected as: (i) the Trial Chamber clearly distinguished between widespread killings of Tutsis in Butare Prefecture after 19 April 1994 and the occurrence of a few isolated killings in its western communes between 15 and 18 April 1994; (ii) Witness TA's evidence does not undermine the Trial Chamber's finding; and (iii) Expert Witness Des Forges's reference to acts of violence in four out of 20 communes prior to 19 April 1994 does not equate to widespread attacks across Butare Prefecture.[1418] The Prosecution adds that the Trial Chamber's impugned finding was not solely based on expert evidence.[1419]

631. The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that widespread killings of Tutsis did not occur in Butare Prefecture prior to 19 April 1994. While the Trial Chamber found that a few large scale massacres occurred prior to 19 April 1994 within the prefecture's western communes, it also found that there was overwhelming evidence that massacres

The Prosecution points out that, while the Trial Chamber took note of the joint communiqué of 16 April 1994 confirming that ethnic violence had reached Butare's western communes, it did not find that there were widespread killings throughout Butare Prefecture prior to 19 April 1994. See ibid., para. 369, referring to Exhibit D240 (Communiqué sanctioning the security of the authorities of Butare and Gikongoro, 16 April 1994) ("16 April Communiqué").

in most communes of Butare Prefecture started after 19 April 1994.[1420] As such, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's distinction between a few large scale massacres prior to 19 April 1994 that took place in specific communes of Butare Prefecture and generalised widespread killings occurring throughout Butare Prefecture after 19 April 1994 was reasonable.[1421]

632. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the evidence of Expert Witness Des Forges and Witness TA contradicts the Trial Chamber's finding on that issue. Expert Witness Des Forges mentioned that killings occurred around 14 to 18 April 1994 in four western communes of Butare Prefecture.[1422] Witness TA testified that, prior to 20 April 1994, some communes had already been attacked, notably Nyaruhengeri, Ngoma, and Shyanda Communes.[1423] The Trial Chamber's finding is consistent with this evidence.

633. The Appeals Chamber further rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber made its finding on the commencement of the widespread killings in Butare Prefecture solely on expert witness evidence as the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber also relied on the evidence of numerous factual witnesses.[1424]

634. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions pertaining to the Trial Chamber's findings on the commencement of the widespread killings in Butare Prefecture.

6. Incoherent and Contradictory Findings

635. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the only reasonable inference from the evidence was that she entered into an agreement with members of the Interim Government to kill Tutsis in Butare Prefecture is based on "[e]rroneous, incoherent, inconsistent and/or irreconcilable findings".[1425] With respect to the Trial Chamber's findings on the Cabinet meetings of the Interim Government and its decisions and directives in particular, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) substituting the intent of the Interim Government for her own specific intent since it did not know what role, if any, she played during the Cabinet meetings;[1426] (ii) relying on her mere participation at the meeting where the decision was made to replace Prefect Habyalimana;[1427] (iii) rejecting as not credible her testimony explaining that Prefect Habyalimana's removal resulted from an agreement between the PSD and the Parti libéral ("PL"), while Expert Witness Des Forges accepted this explanation;[1428] and (iv) finding that she and members of the Interim Government conspired to issue directives to the population between 9 and 19 April 1994 without mentioning which directives and referring only to the 27 April Directive which was issued after the period in question.[1429]

636. With respect to Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the fact that she tacitly approved Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches, whereas it found that her presence had not significantly contributed to any crime and could not have contributed to the crime of conspiracy.[1430] According to her, the Trial Chamber further erred in finding the existence of a conspiracy which occurred in particular between 9 April and 19 April 1994 on the basis of the dismissal of Prefect Habyalimana and Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony whereas the only finding it made was that these events coincided with the start of the killings.[1431]

637. The Appeals Chamber understands Nyiramasuhuko to further argue that the Trial Judgement therefore reflects that the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusion was solely based on the 27 April Directive considered together with the "coincidence" of the dismissal of Prefect Habyalimana and Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony with the start of the killings.[1432] She contends that the finding of conspiracy between her and the Interim Government between 9 and 19 April 1994 "is irreconcilable with 'the only reasonable inference' proved mainly through the post facto directives of 27 April 1994, and is incompatible with the factual findings of the Chamber that most of the killings were committed between 17 and 19 April 1994 and the end of April 1994 in Butare préfecture."[1433] In Nyiramasuhuko's view, it was equally reasonable to infer from the evidence that the Interim Government was not able to put an end to the killings because the population no longer listened to it.[1434]

638. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the only reasonable inference was that she agreed with members of the Interim Government to commit genocide.[1435] It submits that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments related to the Cabinet meetings and the Interim Government's decisions and directives should be rejected as the Trial Chamber relied on numerous factors to infer her intent as the only reasonable inference.[1436] The Prosecution also argues that: (i) the Trial Chamber's finding that Nyiramasuhuko's role in the Cabinet meetings was not established related to another allegation for which she was not convicted and, in any event, the Trial Chamber's findings "depict Nyiramasuhuko as an active, renowned and key member of the government";[1437] (ii) Nyiramasuhuko's testimony on Prefect Habyalimana's removal was internally inconsistent and contradicted;[1438] and (iii) the Trial Chamber did not only refer to the 27 April Directive but also considered other directives.[1439]

639. Concerning Nyiramasuhuko's argument on Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Prosecution submits that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show that the Trial Chamber could only consider her tacit approval as further confirming the conspiracy unless it substantially contributed to the killings.[1440] It also argues that the "narrower time frame, 9-19 April, was not exhaustive as demonstrated by the Chamber's use of 'in particular' and its multiple references to the broader time frame, 9 April-14 July".[1441] The Prosecution contends that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's suggestion, there is no other reasonable alternative interpretation of the evidence than that of the Trial Chamber.[1442]

The Prosecution points out that contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion, Expert Witness Des Forges did not accept her explanation that Prefect Habyalimana's removal was a result of an agreement between the PSD and the PL. It adds that, while Expert Witness Des Forges noted that the political parties "could have made the initial proposal to remove [Prefect] Habyalimana", she did not contradict the Trial Chamber's finding that the decision to remove the prefect was ultimately made by the Interim Government. See ibid., paras. 312, 314.

640. Nyiramasuhuko replies, inter alia, that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Kambanda's instructions to prefects of 11 April 1994, the directives issued on 25 May 1994, her presence in Butare on several occasions between mid-April and late June 1994, or the alleged orders to Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office referred to by the Prosecution and that the directives issued on 25 May 1994 did not support the Trial Chamber's finding.[1443] She also argues that there was a protocol requiring ministers to be present at ceremonies attended by the President of Rwanda and that there was no evidence that Sindikubwabo's Speech was previously agreed upon or that she was privy to its content before it was delivered.[1444]

641. Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not exclusively rely on the 27 April Directive to convict her of conspiracy to commit genocide but also relied on a number of other elements, such as the decision to dismiss Prefect Habyalimana from office and her endorsement of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[1445]

642. As noted above, the Trial Chamber also relied on Nyiramasuhuko's participation with the Interim Government in many of the Cabinet meetings at which the massacres of Tutsis was discussed and in decisions taken during these meetings.[1446] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber observes that, when discussing Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for the crime of genocide later in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber emphasised that it had not found what role, if any, Nyiramasuhuko played at the numerous Cabinet meetings held by the Interim Government between 9 April and 14 July 1994, and that it did not establish, for instance, that Nyiramasuhuko was "assigned responsibility for 'pacification' in Butare".[1447] The Trial Chamber concluded that the [1442] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 273, 278, 286, 360. The Prosecution argues that Nyiramasuhuko's alternative interpretation that the Interim Government could not stop the killings is nonsensical as it ignores that widespread killings occurred in Rwanda as of 7 April 1994, before the government left Kigali, and is based on a decontextualised reading of the record. See ibid., paras. 274, 275. See also AT. 14 April 2015 p. 47.

Prosecution had not established that Nyiramasuhuko bore criminal responsibility pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation to these Cabinet meetings.[1448]

643. The Trial Chamber's findings as to Nyiramasuhuko's absence of role in Cabinet meetings and lack of criminal responsibility in this respect might appear contradictory with its previous finding that Nyiramasuhuko conspired to commit genocide with the Interim Government notably through her participation in Cabinet meetings and the adoption of directives and instructions during Cabinet meetings.[1449] However, reading the Trial Judgement as a whole, the Appeals Chamber understands the Trial Chamber's findings to simply reflect that, whereas Nyiramasuhuko's participation in Cabinet meetings throughout the relevant period evidenced that she had entered into an agreement with members of the Interim Government to kill Tutsis within Butare Prefecture, it was nonetheless not constitutive of the crime of genocide.

644. As regards the Trial Chamber's reliance on Nyiramasuhuko's participation in Cabinet meetings as evidence of an agreement between her and members of the Interim Government to commit genocide, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber specifically pointed to Nyiramasuhuko's presence at meetings when the ministers were briefed on the massacres of the Tutsi population, and the fact that the Interim Government, including her, did nothing to stop the massacres but, rather, adopted directives and issued instructions which were designed to encourage the killing of Tutsis.[1450] Nyiramasuhuko does not challenge that she did attend a number of these meetings and acknowledged to having been involved in the elaboration of directives and instructions.[1451] Under these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied, among other things, on Nyiramasuhuko's participation in Cabinet meetings to find that she conspired to commit genocide. Although the Trial Chamber at times used imprecise language, the Appeals Chamber is nonetheless satisfied from a holistic review of the Trial Chamber's relevant findings that it did not impose strict liability on Nyiramasuhuko but reached its finding of guilt on the basis of Nyiramasuhuko's own acts and omissions and did not substitute the intent of the Interim Government for her intent.

645. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's submissions that the Trial Chamber erred when assessing her involvement in Prefect Habyalimana's removal, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to find her explanation as to Prefect Habyalimana's removal not credible. The Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that, even if the political parties made the initial proposal to remove Prefect Habyalimana from office, the final decision fell to the Interim Government and was taken during a Cabinet meeting attended by Nyiramasuhuko.[1452] The Appeals Chamber recalls that when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to decide which version it considers more credible.[1453] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to find the explanation provided by Expert Witness Guichaoua more convincing.[1454] The Appeals Chamber also agrees with the Prosecution that Expert Witness Des Forges did not accept Nyiramasuhuko's explanation that the decision to remove Habyalimana was made as a result of an agreement between the PSD and the PL. While Expert Witness Des Forges acknowledged that the political parties could have made the initial proposal for the removal, her testimony does not contradict the Trial Chamber's finding that the Interim Government took the ultimate decision.[1455]

646. Regarding the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to mention which directives of the Interim Government it referred to aside from the 27 April Directive, the Appeals Chamber notes that, although the Trial Chamber referred at length to a number of Cabinet meetings and directives when summarising the relevant evidence, the Trial Chamber only specifically referred in its deliberations in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement to the instructions to prefects of 11 April 1994 and to the 27 April Directive.[1456] In its legal finding on conspiracy to commit genocide, the Trial Chamber did not expressly identify a specific directive besides the 27 April Directive.[1457] Nevertheless, a plain reading of the Trial Judgement and the wording used by the Trial Chamber evince that the reference to the 27 April Directive was not exhaustive and that the Trial Chamber intended to rely on the directives it mentioned when summarising the evidence.[1458]

647. As to the timeframe of the conspiracy among the Interim Government members, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that, while the Trial Chamber referred to a period of 9 to 19 April 1994, this narrow timeframe was not meant as exhaustive, as demonstrated by the term "in particular" and its multiple references to the broader timeframe of 9 April to 14 July 1994 in the [1454] See Trial Judgement, paras. 860, 861. The Appeals Chamber finds also no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on the Mugenzi and Mugiraneza Appeal Judgement, which resulted from a separate proceeding against different accused and was based on a different trial record.

Trial Judgement.[1459] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that the finding of conspiracy was irreconcilable with the Trial Chamber's reliance on the "post facto" 27 April Directive and the findings that most of the killings were committed between 17 and 19 April and the end of April 1994 in the prefecture.

648. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's contentions concerning Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that the presence of Nyiramasuhuko, Nsabimana, and Kanyabashi at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony and their failure to dissociate themselves from the statements made by Kambanda and Sindikubwabo constituted tacit approval of their inflammatory statements.[1460] However, the Trial Chamber found that there was not sufficient evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Nyiramasuhuko's and Nsabimana's conduct substantially contributed to the killings that followed.[1461]

649. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate any contradiction between the Trial Chamber's finding that she tacitly approved Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches and its finding that her conduct did not substantially contribute to the subsequent killings. She also fails to demonstrate that these findings are irreconciliable with the Trial Chamber's finding that she was responsible for having conspired to commit genocide with members of the Interim Government. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of the crime of conspiracy to commit genocide is "a concerted agreement to act for the purpose of committing genocide"[1462] and does not require evidence of implementation.[1463] The Appeals Chamber also finds that, regardless of whether or not Nyiramasuhuko had prior knowledge of the content of Sindikubwabo's Speech, a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded on the basis of the totality of the evidence that, by her presence and failure to dissociate herself from the content of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches, the only reasonable inference was that Nyiramasuhuko endorsed their inflammatory statements.

650. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber may infer the existence of a particular fact upon which the guilt of the accused depends from circumstantial evidence only if it is the only reasonable conclusion that could be drawn from the evidence presented.[1464] This also holds true for a conviction for conspiracy to commit genocide based on circumstantial evidence.[1465]

651. In the present case, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko's argument that it was equally reasonable to infer that the Interim Government was unable to put an end to the killings as its authority was undermined is unsubstantiated. The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that a reasonable trier of fact could have determined that – on the basis of its findings that Nyiramasuhuko participated in Cabinet meetings where directives encouraging killings were issued, agreed to remove Prefect Habyalimana, attended Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony, and endorsed Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches – the only reasonable inference was that Nyiramasuhuko conspired with members of the Interim Government to commit genocide against the Tutsis in Butare Prefecture.[1466]

652. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's allegations of incoherent and contradictory findings.

7. Conclusion

653. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her of conspiracy to commit genocide with members of the Interim Government and, accordingly, dismisses Ground 19 of her appeal.

E. Alibis (Grounds 20-22)

654. At trial, Nyiramasuhuko presented alibis according to which she was in Kigali until she moved to Murambi, Gitarama Prefecture, with the Interim Government on 12 April 1994 and remained there until 1 June 1994, after which she moved to Muramba, Gisenyi Prefecture, where she stayed from 2 June 1994 until she fled Rwanda.[1467] She stated that, although she was frequently moving around the country and made many trips to Butare Town to participate in meetings and visit her family, she never left Hotel Ihuliro at night when in Butare Town.[1468]

655. The Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko filed a belated notice of alibi.[1469] Furthermore, it found that, irrespective of whether Nyiramasuhuko was staying in Murambi, the short distance between Butare and Murambi would have permitted her to be present in Butare Town on the nights the attacks occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1470] The Trial Chamber also determined that it was not reasonably possibly true that Nyiramasuhuko was in Muramba from 7 to 9 June 1994, from 12 to 16 June 1994, and on 18 and 19 June 1994.[1471] It further noted that Nyiramasuhuko admitted being present in Butare on the nights of 14, 15, and 30 May, as well as 11 June 1994.[1472] The Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko came to the prefectoral office one night in mid-May 1994, one night around the end of May 1994 or the beginning of June 1994, and during the first half of June 1994 to order the killings and rapes of Tutsi refugees[1473] and convicted her on this basis.[1474]

656. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that her notice of alibi was filed late and in its assessment of the alibi evidence relating to the periods of 14 to 16 May 1994 and early to mid-June 1994. The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

1. Notice of Alibi

657. On 1 March 2005, the Trial Chamber directed Nyiramasuhuko and her co-accused to "immediately make the necessary disclosures" in accordance with Rule 67 of the Rules if they wished to raise an alibi.[1475] On 4 March 2005, Nyiramasuhuko filed a notice of alibi indicating that she was in Murambi, Gitarama Prefecture, from the end of May to approximately 3 June 1994, and later in Muramba, Gisenyi Prefecture, from about 4 June until 2 July 1994.[1476]

658. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber observed that the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi had been proffered "almost four months" after the Prosecution closed its case on 5 November 2004 and consequently found it to be belated.[1477] It further held that the will-say statements of Nyiramasuhuko's alibi witnesses disclosed to the Prosecution in January and February 2005 were no substitute for the requisite notice under Rule 67(A) of the Rules and, in any event, were also belated and did not specify that they related to Nyiramasuhuko's alibis.[1478] The Trial Chamber emphasised that a late notice of alibi may suggest that the alibi is fabricated, tailored to answer the Prosecution case, and took this into account in assessing Nyiramasuhuko's alibis.[1479]

659. Nyiramasuhuko submits that, in the circumstances of this case, the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that her notice of alibi was filed late and by using the timing of its filing as a basis for discrediting it.[1480] She argues that the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi was filed in accordance with the Alibi Decision.[1481] According to Nyiramasuhuko, the Trial Chamber failed to consider that she was not in a position to file a notice of alibi prior to the commencement of the trial since she was not notified of the dates between April and July 1994 during which she allegedly committed crimes at the prefectoral office.[1482] Nyiramasuhuko contends that she was still unable to discern these dates after the conclusion of the Prosecution case and asserts that this matter was also conceded by the Prosecution.[1483]

660. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that it was possible that her alibis were recently fabricated and hold the belated nature of her notice of alibi against her as the Prosecution was in possession of materials and information putting it on notice about her whereabouts between April and July 1994.[1484] In her view, the Trial Chamber erred

[1484] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 4.4-4.7; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 690-693. Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko argues that: (i) her pre-defence brief and the will-say statements of relevant witnesses, filed within the requisite time-limit, informed the Prosecution that she claimed to have been at the seat of the Interim Government in Gitarama or Gisenyi during the relevant period; (ii) the Prosecution was provided in a timely manner with all necessary information to interview Denise Ntahobali, who could confirm that she resided in Muramba from 1 June 1994; and (iii) the Prosecution was in possession of her 1994 personal diary since 1997, which informed it that she was residing at in failing to acknowledge that the Prosecution did not suffer prejudice from the late filing of her notice of alibi.[1485]

661. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nyiramasuhuko filed a late notice of alibi and took it into account in its findings.[1486] It argues that Nyiramasuhuko had sufficient information about the crimes charged to file a timely alibi notice and that her claim that other documents could substitute it is baseless.[1487] The Prosecution adds that it never conceded that Nyiramasuhuko had not been provided with the dates when the crimes were alleged to have occurred.[1488]

662. Rule 67(A)(ii)(a) of the Rules requires the Defence to notify the Prosecution of its intent to enter a defence of alibi "[a]s early as reasonably practicable and in any event prior to the commencement of the trial". In its Alibi Decision, the Trial Chamber did not permit Nyiramasuhuko to derogate from this provision but merely directed "the Defence to immediately make the necessary disclosures in accordance with Rule 67 [of the Rules], if it wishe[d] to rely on the defence of alibi".[1489] The Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi was filed on 4 March 2005,[1490] nearly four months after the conclusion of the Prosecution case on 5 November 2004, and after the commencement of the Defence case on 31 January 2005.[1491] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that Nyiramasuhuko's notice of alibi provided pursuant to Rule 67 of the Rules was belated.

663. Nyiramasuhuko advances a number of arguments to justify the late filing of her notice of alibi, such as not being notified of the dates on which she allegedly committed the crimes at the prefectoral office and not having an alibi for the entire period between April and July 1994.[1492] However, these arguments do not change the fact that the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi was filed after the commencement of the trial and in a manner that was inconsistent with Rule 67(A)(ii)(a) of the Rules. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber does not accept Nyiramasuhuko's argument regarding the broad timeframe of the alleged crimes, as she was only required to indicate in her notice of alibi that she was not in a position to commit the crimes with which she was charged.[1493] In this regard, it is worth noting that the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi generally indicates that she was in Murambi from the end of May to around 3 June 1994 and later in Muramba from around 4 June to 2 July 1994.[1494] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Nyiramasuhuko was able to provide at trial a very detailed account of her whereabouts from April to July 1994, including during her admitted presence in Butare.[1495] In addition, the Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's argument, the Prosecution did not concede that she lacked information regarding the dates of the crimes she allegedly committed between April and July 1994.[1496]

664. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the manner in which an alibi is presented may impact its credibility.[1497] The Appeals Chamber has also previously held that failure to raise an alibi in a timely manner may suggest fabrication of the alibi in order to respond to the Prosecution case.[1498] It was therefore correct for the Trial Chamber to note that "a late notice of alibi may suggest that the alibis are fabricated"[1499] and fully within its discretion to take into account Nyiramasuhuko's failure to provide her notice of alibi on time when assessing the alibi evidence.[1500] Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion, the Trial Chamber was not required to consider whether the Prosecution suffered prejudice from the belated disclosure.[1501]

665. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi was belated and in taking it into account in its assessment of the alibi evidence.

2. Assessment of Alibi Evidence

666. Before turning to Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the alibi evidence, the Appeals Chamber recalls that an accused does not bear the burden of proving his alibi beyond reasonable doubt.[1502] Rather, the accused must simply produce evidence tending to show that he was not present at the time of the alleged crime.[1503] If the alibi is reasonably possibly true, it must be accepted.[1504] When an alibi is properly raised, the Prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that, despite the alibi, the facts alleged are nevertheless true.[1505]

(a) Alibi for 14 to 16 May 1994

667. The Trial Chamber noted Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for the period from 12 April to 1 June 1994, according to which she moved to and stayed in Murambi with the Interim Government.[1506] It also noted the distance between Murambi and Butare Town as well as Nyiramasuhuko's acknowledgement that it was possible to make a return trip by car in a single day.[1507] The Trial Chamber stated that it was not convinced by Nyiramasuhuko's claim that she did not have access to a car until 25 May 1994.[1508] In light of the above, the Trial Chamber found that evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's stay in Murambi between 12 April and early June 1994 "in and of itself, [did] not raise a reasonable doubt" regarding her presence at the Butare Prefecture Office between mid-May and early June 1994, especially in light of Nyiramasuhuko's admission that she frequently travelled to Butare Town to visit her family.[1509]

668. The Trial Chamber further noted Nyiramasuhuko's admitted presence in Butare Town on several dates from mid-April to early July 1994 during which she claimed going directly to Hotel Ihuliro to visit her family and remaining there at night.[1510] However, it found that, irrespective of this claim, when "Nyiramasuhuko was at Hotel Ihuliro, she was in very close proximity to the [Butare Prefecture Office]".[1511] The Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko's alibi about being bed-ridden at Hotel Ihuliro from 14 to 16 May 1994 was not reasonably possibly true on the basis of: (i) the conflicting testimony of Defence witnesses;[1512] (ii) the fact that the only witnesses who testified in support of her alibi were Nyiramasuhuko's "family members who may have had a motive to exculpate her";[1513] and (iii) Nyiramasuhuko's failure to provide any notice of alibi prior to the testimony of her Defence Witness Clarisse Ntahobali in February 2005.[1514]

669. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber's finding that it was not convinced by her claim that she had no access to a car until 25 May 1994 despite Defence evidence to the contrary is speculative.[1515] She contends that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof and violated her right to be presumed innocent by requiring her to convince it that she did not have access to a car until 25 May 1994 and that she was not at the prefectoral office either at night or during the day between April and July 1994, except for one morning on 16 May 1994.[1516]

670. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that her alibi regarding her stay at Hotel Ihuliro from 14 to 16 May 1994 was not reasonably possibly true.[1517] In particular, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting her alibi for this period because the witnesses who testified in its support were her relatives.[1518] In Nyiramasuhuko's view, while a cautious approach to the testimony of her family members was warranted, the Trial Chamber could not simply reject their evidence on that basis and was required to analyse their credibility and provide concrete reasons for its adverse assessment.[1519] She adds that, because most of her relatives lived at Hotel Ihuliro, they were best situated to provide evidence of her stay there.[1520]

671. Moreover, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the testimony of Defence witnesses about her stay at Hotel Ihuliro with her family from 14 to 16 May 1994 was inconsistent.[1521] She asserts that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, she only testified about being unwell and made no assertion about being bed-ridden, and therefore no contradiction existed between her testimony and that of members of her family, who testified that she was ill without mentioning that she was bed-ridden.[1522] She also claims that the Trial Chamber erroneously considered Witness Clarisse Ntahobali to be an alibi witness and failed to provide reasons for its finding that her evidence, given prior to the filing of the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi, affected the testimony of other Defence witnesses with respect to her illness and stay at Hotel

Ihuliro from 14 to 16 May 1994.[1523] In addition, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the testimony of her Defence Witness Maurice Ntahobali about her access to his car, arguing that the witness did not specify the date he made the car available to her and therefore did not contradict, but instead corroborated, her testimony that she did not leave Hotel Ihuliro until the morning of 16 May 1994.[1524]

672. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber applied the correct burden of proof and that the Trial Chamber's reference to not being "convinced" related to its assessment of Nyiramasuhuko's credibility.[1525] The Prosecution argues that, in any event, Nyiramasuhuko's convictions were not based on the Trial Chamber being convinced of her access to a car prior to 25 May 1994 given Nyiramasuhuko's own admission of her presence in Butare in mid-May 1994, her access to her husband's car, and the prefectoral office being in close proximity to Hotel Ihuliro.[1526] It further submits that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for her visit to Butare Town from 14 to 16 May 1994 could not be reasonably possibly true.[1527] The Prosecution asserts that the Trial Chamber properly took into consideration Nyiramasuhuko's failure to file her notice of alibi prior to Clarisse Ntahobali's testimony and the totality of the evidence relevant to Nyiramasuhuko's alibi, including the testimony of witnesses not listed in the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi.[1528] The Prosecution adds that the Trial Chamber reasonably assessed the testimony of Nyiramasuhuko's family members with caution and was not required to provide the level of detail for its assessment of their credibility that Nyiramasuhuko asserts was required.[1529]

673. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's finding that it was "not convinced that Nyiramasuhuko did not have access to a car until 25 May 1994" was neither speculative nor suggestive of a shift in the burden of proof.[1530] The Trial Chamber provided a detailed analysis of the evidence adduced by Nyiramasuhuko regarding her access to transportation, such as other people's vehicles in April and May 1994 and, in the context of this analysis, considered that Nyiramasuhuko "had means of transport" to Butare despite her move to Murambi with the Interim Government in mid-April 1994.[1531] The Appeals Chamber considers that, by stating that it was "not convinced", the Trial Chamber was expressing the view that Nyiramasuhuko's evidence that she had no access to a car was not sufficiently credible and thus failed to raise a reasonable possibility that Nyiramasuhuko was without a vehicle for as long as she claimed. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show any error in this regard.

674. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's contention regarding her family members' evidence, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is settled jurisprudence that a witness's close personal relationship to an accused is one of the factors which a trial chamber may consider in assessing the witness's evidence.[1532] It was therefore within the Trial Chamber's discretion to entertain concerns about Ntahobali's as well as Nyiramasuhuko Defence Witnesses Céline Nyiraneza's, WBUC's, Clarisse Ntahobali's, and Maurice Ntahobali's possible motives to exculpate Nyiramasuhuko because of their family ties and examine their testimony with appropriate caution.[1533] Although the Trial Chamber did not explicitly assess their individual credibility, it articulated the reasons for rejecting Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for her stay at Hotel Ihuliro from 14 to 16 May 1994, which were not based solely on these witnesses' connection to Nyiramasuhuko. The Trial Chamber found that their testimonies conflicted with respect to Nyiramasuhuko's lack of mobility due to her illness and considered the absence of any notice of alibi prior to the testimony of Clarisse Ntahobali.[1534]

675. Nyiramasuhuko challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that "there was conflicting evidence as to whether Nyiramasuhuko stayed at Hotel Ihuliro during her visits to Butare."[1535] In assessing the evidence, the Trial Chamber considered that "Nyiramasuhuko claim[ed] to have been bed-ridden" during her stay in Butare from 14 to 16 May 1994.[1536] However, a review of Nyiramasuhuko's testimony reveals that she did not testify about being bed-ridden but merely about being unwell and not leaving Hotel Ihuliro during this visit.[1537] This was explicitly recalled by the Trial Chamber in the summary of her evidence.[1538] The Trial Chamber's reference to Nyiramasuhuko testifying about being bed-ridden was therefore erroneous. The Appeals Chamber nonetheless considers that this error does not affect the Trial Chamber's finding that there was conflicting evidence as to whether Nyiramasuhuko stayed at Hotel Ihuliro. Indeed, as expressly noted by the Trial Chamber, Ntahobali, as well as Witnesses Nyiraneza and WBUC, testified that

And it is on that date that I left Butare to go to Gitarama. Q. Madam, before you left on the 16th of May 1994, did you go anywhere in Butare outside of the Hotel Ihuliro? A. I did not leave the hotel over those days. I only left the hotel in the morning of the 16th.").

Nyiramasuhuko was housebound due to her illness,[1539] while Witness Maurice Ntahobali stated that, despite having malaria, Nyiramasuhuko "was moving around at one point and borrowed his service vehicle during her visit".[1540]

676. As for Nyiramasuhuko's argument regarding the assessment of Clarisse Ntahobali's testimony, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion,[1541] the Trial Chamber did not hold that Clarisse Ntahobali's testimony "affected" the remaining Defence evidence. The Trial Chamber clearly specified that it did not consider Nyiramasuhuko's alibi reasonably possibly true based, in part, on her "failure to provide any notice of alibi prior to the testimony of Clarisse Ntahobali", not on the basis of Clarisse Ntahobali's testimony.[1542] The Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have expressly taken into account Nyiramasuhuko's failure to provide notice prior to the testimony of Clarisse Ntahobali, who was the first Defence witness to give evidence regarding Nyiramasuhuko's whereabouts during the period when the alleged crimes took place.

677. Finally, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko is incorrect in her assertion that her husband, Witness Maurice Ntahobali, confirmed her testimony that she did not leave Hotel Ihuliro until the morning of 16 May 1994. While not specifying when he made his service vehicle available to Nyiramasuhuko, Maurice Ntahobali unambiguously testified that she moved around during this stay in Butare.[1543]

678. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof or erred in its assessment of the alibi evidence for the period of 14 to 16 May 1994.

(b) Alibis for Early June to 19 June 1994

679. The Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for 1 to 3 June 1994, according to which she was in Muramba was not credible.[1544] The Trial Chamber observed that the testimonies of Nyiramasuhuko and her Witness Denise Ntahobali about leaving Murambi for Muramba on 1 June 1994 were inconsistent with the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi, which specified that

Nyiramasuhuko was in Murambi from the end of May to around 3 June 1994, and after in Muramba from around 4 June until early July 1994.[1545] In addition, the Trial Chamber found Denise Ntahobali not credible for several reasons, including her close relationships with members of Nyiramasuhuko's Defence team.[1546] It also found that the testimony of Witnesses WZJM, Maurice Ntahobali, and Céline Nyiraneza was not "sufficiently specific" to corroborate Nyiramasuhuko's testimony regarding her presence in Muramba from 1 to 3 June 1994.[1547]

680. With regard to Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for 4 to 10 June 1994, the Trial Chamber concluded that, based on Nyiramasuhuko's testimony about her attendance at the Interim Government meetings in Muramba and her 1994 personal diary, Nyiramasuhuko only raised a reasonable doubt about her presence in Butare on 6 and 10 June 1994.[1548] The Trial Chamber did not accept Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for 4 and 5 June 1994 due to concerns about discrepancies in her diary entries, the credibility of the witnesses testifying in support of this alibi, and the lateness and incorrectness of the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi.[1549] The Trial Chamber similarly rejected Nyiramasuhuko's alibi regarding her attendance at Cabinet meetings in Muramba from 7 to 9 June 1994 based on the lack of support from her diary.[1550] It also took into account conflicting testimonies of Ntahobali and Denise Ntahobali placing Nyiramasuhuko in Butare Town around that time, as well as Nyiramasuhuko's and Denise Ntahobali's evidence that the trip from Butare Town to Muramba took between eight and ten hours together with Nyiramasuhuko's own admission that it was possible to travel to Butare Town and return to Muramba the very next day.[1551] The Trial Chamber further found that Nyiramasuhuko was in Butare Prefecture on 11 June 1994.[1552] It also considered that Nyiramasuhuko's alibi placing her in Muramba from 12 to 16 June and on 18 and

The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that "Nyiramasuhuko admitted that she travelled to Butare on 11 June 1994 and returned the very next day on 12 June 1994. Therefore, the fact that Nyiramasuhuko may have been in Muramba on 6 and 10 June 1994 means that she could not have been in Butare between 7 and 9 June 1994." See ibid., para. 2569 (emphasis added, internal reference omitted). However, the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusion was that Nyiramasuhuko had "not raised a doubt as to her presence in Butare between 7 and 9 June 1994." See ibid., para. 2570 (emphasis added). See also ibid., para. 2773 ("Although Nyiramasuhuko could not have been present [at the Butare Prefecture Office] on 6 and 10 June 1994, she had ample opportunity to perpetrate these crimes on 7 to 9 June and 11 to 19 June 1994."). In the view of the Appeals Chamber, a holistic reading of the Trial Chamber's findings shows that the Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko failed to raise a reasonable possibility that she was not in Butare Town between 7 and 9 June 1994. See ibid., paras. 2565-2570.

19 June 1994 was not reasonably possibly true but that there was, however, a reasonable possibility that she remained in Muramba on 17 June 1994.[1553]

681. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber: (i) reversed the burden of proof; (ii) erred in its assessment of her evidence; and (iii) erred in its assessment of other Defence evidence. The Appeals Chamber will consider Nyiramasuhuko's contentions in turn.

(i) Reversal of the Burden of Proof

682. Nyiramasuhuko contends that by requiring her to prove her presence in Muramba between 1 and 11 June 1994, the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof.[1554]

683. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber applied the correct burden of proof.[1555]

684. The Appeals Chamber recalls the legal standard applicable to the assessment of alibi evidence set out above.[1556] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber correctly articulated the relevant standard, stating that "[t]here can be no conviction for an allegation which takes place during an alibi that is reasonably possibly true", with the "onus remain[ing] on the Prosecution to prove that the accused was present and committed the crimes for which he is charged and thereby discredit the alibi defence."[1557] Based on its review of the alibi evidence, the Trial Chamber concluded that the alibi placing Nyiramasuhuko in Muramba from 7 to 9 June, from 12 to 16 June, as well as on 18 and 19 June 1994 was "not reasonably possibly true".[1558] The Appeals Chamber notes that, apart from alleging that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof, Nyiramasuhuko does not advance any argument to substantiate her assertion or point to particular language used by the Trial Chamber that evinces a misapplication of the appropriate standard. The Appeals Chamber therefore rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention in this respect.

(ii) Nyiramasuhuko's Evidence

685. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in systematically requiring that her testimony about her whereabouts between April and July 1994 be corroborated by her 1994 personal diary.[1559] In particular, she contends that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting that she attended Interim Government meetings in Muramba only when her diary contained entries to that effect.[1560] Nyiramasuhuko argues that, except for stating that she had a motive to exculpate herself, the Trial Chamber failed to assess her credibility, which, in her view, evinces bias against her.[1561]

686. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that, between 1 and 10 June 1994, she was at the Interim Government's headquarters in Murambi rather than in Muramba without explaining why it rejected her testimony that the Interim Government fled to Muramba on 1 June 1994 due the advancement of the RPF.[1562] Nyiramasuhuko posits that even the Prosecution evidence established that the flight took place in the beginning of June 1994.[1563] She adds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that the date specified in the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi as to when she left Murambi for Muramba in early June 1994 was an inadvertent error, which did not come to her attention until the issuance of the Trial Judgement.[1564] Nyiramasuhuko alleges that Witness WZJM, while unable to provide a specific date, either "supported or corroborated" her testimony and that of Denise Ntahobali about Nyiramasuhuko's presence in Muramba at the beginning of June.[1565]

687. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko contends that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to reject her claim that she attended a Cabinet meeting on 4 June 1994.[1566] She argues that the mention of "Cabinet Meeting Decisions" in her diary on the 4 June page supports her testimony that she was in Muramba attending a Cabinet meeting on 4 June 1994.[1567]

688. Nyiramasuhuko adds that when considering the meetings of 7 and 8 June 1994, the Trial Chamber erred in deeming unimportant the corresponding missing pages of the diary and in failing to construe their absence in her favour, in light of the Prosecution's failure to preserve this evidence and notice the missing pages.[1568] She argues that the Trial Chamber erred in making an adverse Nyiramasuhuko submits that the will-say statement of Denise Ntahobali filed five weeks before the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi notified the Prosecution that Denise Ntahobali left Hotel Ihuliro with Nyiramasuhuko for Murambi at the end of May and one or two days later for Muramba. She claims that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that she would deliberately contradict the testimony of her own witness by the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi, especially because Denise Ntahobali confirmed the dates specified in her will-say statement not in the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 708, 709 (French), referring to Denise Ntahobali, T. 9 June 2005 pp. 32, 50-52 (French).

finding against her, even though she opposed the introduction of the diary into evidence and raised the issue of the missing pages.[1569]

689. Nyiramasuhuko also submits that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that her testimony about returning to see her family in Butare on 11 June 1994 was inconsistent with the testimonies of Witnesses Denise, Maurice, and Clarisse Ntahobali, Nyiraneza, WBUC, WZJM, and CEM, who testified about her return to Hotel Ihuliro about a week rather than ten days after she left Butare on 31 May 1994.[1570] Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that she was able to provide exact dates because of her diary and that without such contemporaneous evidence, it was unreasonable to consider a "few days' difference as contradictions", given the time that had elapsed since the events.[1571]

690. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly evaluated the probative value of Nyiramasuhuko's diary as well as her testimony together with other evidence and reasonably rejected her alibis for various dates between 1 and 19 June 1994.[1572] It further submits that: (i) the Trial Chamber's consideration of Nyiramasuhuko's testimony implies assessment of her credibility, for which it was not required to provide detailed findings; (ii) the evidence establishing the flight of the Interim Government from Murambi to Muramba in the beginning of June 1994 was too general to corroborate Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for early June 1994; (iii) the Trial Chamber correctly took into account the inconsistencies between the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi and the testimonies of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali as to when they departed Murambi for Muramba; and (iv) the Trial Chamber reasonably found that the testimony of Witness WZJM was not sufficiently specific to corroborate Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for the impugned period.[1573]

691. Nyiramasuhuko replies, inter alia, that there is no contradiction between her notice of alibi and her testimony as to when she left for Muramba as the dates provided in the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi were only an approximation.[1574]

692. The Appeals Chamber recalls that trial chambers have full discretionary power in assessing the credibility of witnesses and in determining the weight to be accorded to their respective testimony.[1575] This assessment is based on a number of factors, including the witness's demeanour in court, his role in the events in question, the plausibility and clarity of the witness's testimony, whether there are contradictions or inconsistencies in his successive statements or between his testimony and other evidence, any prior examples of false testimony, any motivation to lie, and the witness's responses during cross-examination.[1576] Trial chambers are also endowed with the discretion to decide in the circumstances of each case whether corroboration is necessary.[1577]

693. The Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have questioned the credibility of Nyiramasuhuko's alibis in the absence of corroboration given the inherent self-interest of her testimony. In this regard, the Trial Chamber properly expressed caution in assessing Nyiramasuhuko's testimony in light of her "obvious motive to exculpate herself" and deemed "Nyiramasuhuko's diary useful in evaluating consistencies and inconsistencies in Nyiramasuhuko's testimony."[1578] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have disbelieved Nyiramasuhuko's alibi in instances where the diary entries she sought to rely on were inconsistent with and provided little support for her claims of attendance of Interim Government meetings in Muramba.[1579] Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contention, the Trial Chamber's detailed consideration of the alibi evidence pertaining to June 1994, including Nyiramasuhuko's testimony, shows that the Trial Chamber assessed her credibility to find that her testimony was not sufficiently credible to accept her alibi as reasonably possibly true in the absence of credible corroboration.[1580] The Appeals Chamber fails to see how this determination evinces bias against Nyiramasuhuko on the part of the Trial Chamber.

694. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's argument regarding the date of the Interim Government's relocation from Murambi to Muramba. The Trial Chamber did not make a specific finding that Nyiramasuhuko was at the Interim Government's headquarters in Murambi rather than Muramba between 1 and 10 June 1994 and did not reject Nyiramasuhuko's testimony in relation to the date or the circumstances of the flight of the Interim Government to Muramba in June 1994.[1581] Instead, the Trial Chamber rejected Nyiramasuhuko's claim that she was in Muramba from 1 to 5 June and from 7 to 9 June 1994 as not credible based on an inconsistency between her testimony and the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi as well as because of a lack of credibility of and corroboration from Defence evidence.[1582]

695. In relation to the discrepancy about the date of Nyiramasuhuko's departure for Muramba, the Trial Chamber noted that both Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali indicated that they left Murambi on 1 June 1994 and arrived in Muramba on that same day, their departure being prompted by the advancement of the hostile forces.[1583] It found that Nyiramasuhuko's presence in Muramba on 1 June 1994 was inconsistent with the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi, which provided that she was in Murambi "from the end of May to around 3 June 1994" and then in Muramba "from around 4 June 1994 to early July 1994."[1584] The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko's argument in reply that her notice of alibi merely approximated the date of the departure for Muramba contradicts the allegation of error and arguments that she advanced in her notice of appeal and appeal brief. While endowed with discretion not to consider contradictory submissions,[1585] the Appeals Chamber nevertheless observes that the use of the term "around" to estimate the timing of the departure for Muramba in the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi was noted by the Trial Chamber several times.[1586] Moreover, apart from alleging that the impugned date was an unintentional oversight, Nyiramasuhuko does not substantiate her claim that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider the discrepancy as to the dates in assessing the totality of the evidence she tendered.

696. The Appeals Chamber similarly discerns no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the testimony of Witness WZJM regarding Nyiramasuhuko's presence in Muramba in June 1994 "was not sufficiently specific to corroborate Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that it was on 1, 2 and 3 June 1994."[1587] Indeed, Witness WZJM merely recalled seeing Nyiramasuhuko for the first time in Muramba in early June 1994 and subsequently on a number of other occasions without specifying the dates in corroboration of Nyiramasuhuko's alibi.[1588] Nyiramasuhuko cites the passage of time as a reason for Witness WZJM's inability to provide exact dates,[1589] but fails to show how this demonstrates that the Trial Chamber's finding was unreasonable.

[1583] See Trial Judgement, para. 2552. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko is incorrect in asserting that in her will-say statement, Denise Ntahobali specified the dates on which she and Nyiramasuhuko left Butare for Murambi and subsequently for Muramba as it merely repeats that she saw her "mother again at the end of May 1994 at Hotel Ihuliro" and that "around the beginning of June" the witness travelled from Murambi to Muramba. *See The Prosecutor v. 697. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention regarding the Trial Chamber's assessment of her alibi for 4 June 1994, the Trial Chamber noted that Nyiramasuhuko sought to rely on her diary entries of 3 and 4 June 1994 in support of her attendance at a Cabinet meeting in Muramba on the latter date, yet the only dated notations that appeared on the 4 June entry were notes pertaining to a meeting on 17 June 1994.[1590] The Trial Chamber also noted Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on a series of entries following the title "Cabinet Meeting Decisions", which otherwise contained neither the date nor the location of the meeting where they were adopted.[1591] Recalling Nyiramasuhuko's own admission that the recorded events only occasionally coincided with dates of the diary entries on which the event occurred, the Trial Chamber concluded that the entry of 4 June 1994 "provid[ed] little support for Nyiramasuhuko's contention that she attended a Cabinet meeting in Muramba" on this date.[1592] The Appeals Chamber observes that the 4 June 1994 diary entry merely reflects several undated appointments of officials under the title "Council of Ministers Decisions" and notes under the title "Appointment of 17/6/94".[1593] The Appeals Chamber fails to see how this entry provides support for Nyiramasuhuko's claim that she was in Muramba on 4 June 1994 or undermines the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's rejection of this claim.

698. Regarding Nyiramasuhuko's arguments concerning her alibi for 7 and 8 June 1994, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly acknowledged that her diary pages for these dates were removed.[1594] It also expressly declined to draw an "adverse inference based upon the absence of these pages, but merely not[ed] that Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that there were meetings [on these dates] was not corroborated by her diary".[1595] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's assertions that the Trial Chamber considered the missing pages unimportant or made an adverse finding against her in this respect. The Appeals Chamber is also not convinced by Nyiramasuhuko's suggestion that the absence of the missing pages should have resulted in an inference in her favour since it would have required the Trial Chamber to speculate about the pages' content. In any event, in rejecting Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for the impugned dates, the Trial Chamber did not rely solely on the absence of support from Nyiramasuhuko's diary but also on the testimony of Ntahobali and Denise Ntahobali that placed Nyiramasuhuko in Butare around 8 June 1994.[1596]

699. Finally, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that her testimony about returning to Butare on 11 June 1994 was inconsistent with the testimonies of other Defence witnesses. The Trial Chamber correctly noted that Nyiramasuhuko testified that she was not in Butare between 31 May and 11 June 1994.[1597] The Trial Chamber further noted that, by contrast: (i) Witness Denise Ntahobali testified that she returned from Muramba to Butare with Nyiramasuhuko "seven days after 1 June, around 8 June 1994";[1598] (ii) Ntahobali testified to seeing Nyiramasuhuko at Hotel Ihuliro "three to five days" following his return to Butare around 5 June 1994;[1599] (iii) Clarisse Ntahobali testified that Nyiramasuhuko visited Butare twice after the end of May 1994, "two or three days later" and one week later;[1600] (iv) Witness WBUC testified that Nyiramasuhuko returned to Butare a week after her departure on 30 May 1994.[1601] Nyiramasuhuko only cites the passage of time as an explanation for the discrepancy between her and other witnesses' accounts and fails to show that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to find that her claim that from the time she moved to Muramba she did not return to Butare until 11 June 1994 was contradicted by the testimonies of other Defence witnesses.[1602]

700. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of her alibi evidence.

(iii) Other Defence Evidence

701. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence of Defence Witnesses Denise Ntahobali, Clarisse Ntahobali, and Edmond Babin.

a. Witness Denise Ntahobali

702. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting Denise Ntahobali's testimony about their stay in Murambi between 31 May to 1 June 1994, and in Muramba from 1 June until the beginning of July 1994 because it disbelieved other aspects of the witness's

[1602] Moreover, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's assertion, neither Witness Nyiraneza nor Witness WZJM testified about her visiting Butare in June 1994, and Witness CEM attested to not seeing Nyiramasuhuko in Butare in June 1994. See Witness WZJM, T. 21 February 2005 pp. 76, 79, 80; Céline Nyiraneza, T. 24 February 2005 pp. 46-48; Witness CEM, T. 14 February 2005 p. 60, T. 15 February 2005 p. 23. See also Trial Judgement, para. 2452-2454, 2465-2469, 2493. testimony that were irrelevant to Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for these periods.[1603] Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber failed to explain why Denise Ntahobali was not credible on this issue.[1604] In Nyiramasuhuko's view, while it was appropriate for the Trial Chamber to take into account that members of Denise Ntahobali's family were on Nyiramasuhuko's Defence team, absent any evidence of an "impact" of this kinship on her testimony, this consideration should have had no negative bearing on her credibility.[1605] To the contrary, Nyiramasuhuko points to Denise Ntahobali's honesty about her discussions with members of the Defence team and asserts that the presence of family members on it was "a matter of public knowledge at the ICTR, including the Chamber."[1606]

703. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko claims that the Trial Chamber erred in finding the evidence of Denise Ntahobali not credible based on an inconsistency between this witness's and Nyiramasuhuko's testimonies as to whether they were accompanied by a convoy when they left Murambi on 1 June 1994.[1607] She posits that since gendarmes and the Prime Minister's staff remained after the departure of other Ministers, being the last Minister to leave Murambi did not exclude the possibility of leaving in a convoy.[1608]

704. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly assessed Denise Ntahobali's evidence in relation to Nyiramasuhuko's alibi for 1 to 3 June 1994 in light of her close relationship with Nyiramasuhuko's Defence team, inconsistencies between Nyiramasuhuko's and her evidence, prior false testimony, as well as contradictory evidence from Clarisse Ntahobali.[1609] It further argues that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider the inconsistency between the accounts of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali regarding the presence of a convoy when assessing the witness's credibility.[1610]

705. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber provided a comprehensive explanation for finding that Denise Ntahobali's account of Nyiramasuhuko's presence in Muramba on 1, 2, and 3 June 1994 lacked credibility.[1611] It explicitly noted that Denise Ntahobali's testimony about her and Nyiramasuhuko's stay in Murambi on 1 June 1994 and departure for Muramba on this date was not consistent with the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi and was contradicted by

Clarisse Ntahobali's evidence.[1612] The Trial Chamber also recalled in great detail other instances where it found Denise Ntahobali's evidence not credible.[1613] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that, in this context, no reasonable trier of fact could have considered that certain aspects of Denise Ntahobali's testimony lacked credibility when assessing other aspects of her testimony. Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's claims that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on its finding that certain parts of Denise Ntahobali's testimony lacked credibility and failed to provide a reasoned opinion when finding her alibi evidence not credible. Furthermore, since the existence of ties between an accused and a witness is a factor which may be considered in assessing witnesses' credibility,[1614] it was not improper for the Trial Chamber to entertain concerns about Denise Ntahobali's "very close relationships" with and "particularly strong connection" to Nyiramasuhuko's Defence team, irrespective of her honesty on this issue.[1615]

706. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's consideration of the discrepancy between the testimonies of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali about the presence of a convoy upon their departure from Murambi. A review of Denise Ntahobali's testimony reveals that she specifically referenced a convoy of multiple vehicles and numerous gendarmes, including groups of gendarmes behind and in front of other vehicles.[1616] Although Nyiramasuhuko did mention the presence of some gendarmes and the staff of the Prime Minister's office, as well as being the last minister to leave, she made no mention of a convoy.[1617] Nyiramasuhuko's arguments aim at demonstrating that Denise Ntahobali's account was plausible and was not irreconcilable with her own testimony. However, the Trial Chamber did not conclude that this aspect of Denise Ntahobali's testimony was implausible or irreconcilable with Nyiramasuhuko's testimony but, instead, pointed out that Nyiramasuhuko did not mention the convoy when describing the circumstances of her departure from Murambi.[1618] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Nyiramasuhuko's arguments do not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have identified the impugned differences and considered them when assessing Denise Ntahobali's credibility.

707. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness Denise Ntahobali's evidence.

b. Witness Clarisse Ntahobali

708. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on the fact that Clarisse Ntahobali testified in support of her alibi for early June 1994.[1619] In her view, the Trial Chamber erred in treating Clarisse Ntahobali as an alibi witness in relation to Nyiramasuhuko's stay in Muramba between 1 and 11 June 1994, emphasising that Clarisse Ntahobali, unlike Denise Ntahobali, did not reside with Nyiramasuhuko during this period.[1620] Nyiramasuhuko further argues that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, Clarisse Ntahobali confirmed the testimonies of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali that they left Hotel Ihuliro and went directly to Murambi at the end of May 1994.[1621] Nyiramasuhuko concedes that Clarisse Ntahobali testified about her visit with family members in Butare two to three days after her visit at the end of May 1994.[1622] Nonetheless, she asserts that this was an honest mistake caused by the witness's confusion about the number of days that elapsed between 31 May 1994 and her subsequent visit and faults the Trial Chamber for making an adverse finding against her.[1623]

709. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments concerning Clarisse Ntahobali's testimony are undeveloped and meritless and should be summarily dismissed.[1624]

710. The Appeals Chamber considers Nyiramasuhuko's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in treating Clarisse Ntahobali as an alibi witness regarding her alibi for early June 1994 to be without merit. The Appeals Chamber emphasises that the Trial Chamber, as the trier of fact, was bound to make its own factual findings irrespective of any characterisation of the evidence by the parties.[1625] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Nyiramasuhuko fails to explain how the fact that Clarisse Ntahobali did not reside with her in Muramba between 1 and 11 June 1994 undermines this witness's evidence about Nyiramasuhuko's visits to and presence in Butare.

[1619] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 714, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2553.

Nyiramasuhuko further argues that Clarisse Ntahobali testified, like many other witnesses, that she had obtained the information regarding Nyiramasuhuko's whereabouts in early June 1994 from Nyiramasuhuko when Nyiramasuhuko visited Hotel Ihuliro around 10 June 1994. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 714.
[1621] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 719, referring, inter alia, to Trial Judgement, para. 2555. Nyiramasuhuko notes that, according to the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi, she was in Murambi but mostly in Muramba from 2 to 11 June, from 13 to 24 June, and from 25 June to 1 July 1994 with her daughter Denise Ntahobali and her granddaughter. See ibid., para. 720.
[1622] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 721.
[1623] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 4.20; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 721. Nyiramasuhuko alleges that Clarisse Ntahobali was the only witness who testified about one of Nyiramasuhuko's visits to Hotel Ihuliro during that time. See idem. Nyiramasuhuko adds that the Trial Chamber ignored more serious inconsistencies in the Prosecution evidence than those imputed to Clarisse Ntahobali. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 4.21 (French).
[1624] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 410-413.
[1625] See Kanyarukiga Appeal Judgement, para. 124.

711. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Nyiramasuhuko is incorrect in asserting that the Trial Chamber found that Clarisse Ntahobali contradicted the evidence of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali about leaving Hotel Ihuliro and going directly to Murambi at the end of May 1994. The Trial Chamber did not make such a finding. Rather, the Trial Chamber found that by testifying that Nyiramasuhuko had returned to Butare two to three days after 31 May 1994, "on 2 or 3 June 1994", Clarisse Ntahobali "contradicted Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali's testimony that [from Murambi] they went directly to [Muramba in] Gisenyi préfecture" and that Nyiramasuhuko was in Muramba on these dates.[1626] The Appeals Chamber observes that Clarisse Ntahobali indeed testified about seeing Nyiramasuhuko "at the end of May at Hotel Ihuliro" before she left for Murambi, then "two or three days later" as Nyiramasuhuko was "going to settle or stay at Muramba", and subsequently one week later.[1627] While Clarisse Ntahobali's testimony corroborated the accounts of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali that they went directly to Murambi when leaving Hotel Ihuliro at the end of May 1994, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how this evidence undermines the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Clarisse Ntahobali "plac[ed] Nyiramasuhuko in Butare town on 2 or 3 June 1994".[1628] Furthermore, since this witness was specific as to the timing of Nyiramasuhuko's two visits to Hotel Ihuliro after the end of May 1994, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Nyiramasuhuko's allegation of confusion about the days that elapsed between Nyiramasuhuko's visit to Hotel Ihuliro on 31 May 1994 and her next visit.

712. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the assessment of Witness Clarisse Ntahobali's evidence.

c. Witness Edmond Babin

713. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber ignored Witness Edmond Babin's testimony with respect to the duration of the trip between Muramba and Butare Town in peacetime, and erred in relying solely on the testimonies of Nyiramasuhuko and Denise Ntahobali on this point as well as in minimising the difficulties associated with the journey during wartime in June 1994.[1629] Nyiramasuhuko adds that, by not considering Witness Babin's evidence, the Trial Chamber implicitly found him not credible but failed to provide a reasoned opinion for this conclusion.[1630] Consequently, she argues that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that, in June 1994, she could have attended Interim Government meetings in Gisenyi during the day and been present at the prefectoral office at night, despite, at a minimum, a 16-hour return trip.[1631]

714. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko misrepresents the Trial Chamber's findings in relation to her presence in Butare and Muramba in June 1994.[1632]

715. The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not disregard Witness Babin's evidence; his testimony with respect to the duration of the trips between Butare, Gisenyi, and Gitarama was expressly summarised and his estimate of the time needed to travel from Murambi to Butare was considered in the Trial Chamber's deliberations.[1633] While the Trial Chamber did not expressly discuss Witness Babin's estimate of the duration of the trip between Muramba and Butare when evaluating Nyiramasuhuko's ability to travel between these locations on consecutive days, it primarily relied on the time estimate provided by Denise Ntahobali, which exceeded that of Witness Babin, stating that "[e]ven if the travel time between Muramba to Butare was between 8 and 11 hours at the beginning of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko admitted that she travelled to Butare on 11 June 1994 and returned the very next day on 12 June 1994".[1634] Nyiramasuhuko does not challenge this finding.

716. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber minimised the difficulties associated with the journey between Muramba and Butare in June 1994, the Trial Chamber explicitly acknowledged that "the RPF had captured Kabgayi along the main road from Gitarama to Butare around 2 June 1994" and considered it reasonable that "Nyiramasuhuko would have been forced to travel on secondary roads".[1635] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber did not find that Nyiramasuhuko attended meetings in Muramba during the day and returned to the prefectoral office at night. Instead, it found, in accordance with Nyiramasuhuko's own admission, that "she travelled to Butare on 11 June 1994 and returned [to Muramba] the very next day on 12 June 1994."[1636] Nyiramasuhuko fails to show that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that it was possible for Nyiramasuhuko to be in Butare at night and then in Muramba the very next day.

717. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions regarding the consideration of Witness Babin's evidence.

3. Conclusion

718. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Alibi was filed late and in its assessment of the alibi evidence relating to the time periods between 14 and 16 May 1994 and between early June and mid-June 1994. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 20 to 22 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal in their entirety.

F. Butare Prefecture Office (Grounds 23-25, 28-31)

719. The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1637] The Trial Chamber also determined that Nyiramasuhuko bore superior responsibility for killings committed by Interahamwe as a result of attacks at the prefectoral office pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining her sentence.[1638] The Trial Chamber further convicted Nyiramasuhuko of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for rapes committed by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1639]

720. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her in relation to crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1640] She contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) making imprecise and improper findings; (ii) its assessment of the evidence; (iii) finding her responsible for ordering killings at the prefectoral office; and (iv) finding her responsible as a superior for rapes committed by Interahamwe during attacks at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber will consider these contentions in turn.

1. Imprecise and Improper Findings

721. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber made imprecise and improper findings with respect to her responsibility for killings and rapes of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.

(a) Killings

722. The Trial Chamber provided its most detailed assessment of Nyiramasuhuko's criminal responsibility for the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office when evaluating

[1639] Trial Judgement, paras. 6085, 6087, 6088, 6093, 6182, 6183, 6186.
[1640] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko principally challenges her criminal responsibility for crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office by alleging errors in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the crime of genocide. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 7.1-7.6, 7.8, 7.9; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 824-827, 841, 842, 847, 849-852, 856-860, 870-873, 875, 1288-1293. However, because her challenges with respect to the crime of genocide principally relate to the sufficiency of the findings as they concern the modes of responsibility and include challenges as they pertain to the other crimes for which she was convicted, the Appeals Chamber has addressed her contentions with respect to all crimes where relevant.

the crime of genocide in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement.[1641] In particular, the Trial Chamber assessed Nyiramasuhuko's role in the attacks at the prefectoral office that occurred in mid-May 1994 ("Mid-May Attack"), around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994 when Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came to the prefectoral office three times in one night ("Night of Three Attacks"), and in the first half of June 1994 ("First Half of June Attacks").[1642] Specifically, with respect to the Mid-May Attack, the Trial Chamber found:

> Between mid-May and mid-June 1994 Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers went to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to abduct hundreds of Tutsis; the Tutsi refugees were physically assaulted and raped; and were killed in various locations throughout Butare préfecture. In mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and about 10 Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] aboard a camouflaged pickup. Nyiramasuhuko pointed out Tutsi refugees to the Interahamwe, ordering them to force the refugees onto the pickup […]. Ntahobali also gave the Interahamwe orders, telling them to stop loading the truck because it could not accept anymore dead. The refugees were taken to other locations in Butare to be killed. Therefore, both Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were responsible for ordering the killings of numerous Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup.[1643]

As regards to the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber recalled the following:

> Around the end of May to the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on board a camouflaged pickup on three occasions in one night. They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed. Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees […]. The Interahamwe beat, abused and raped many Tutsi women.[1644]

With respect to the First Half of June Attacks, the Trial Chamber found:

> In the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and as a result numerous women were raped at that location. Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees. During at least one of these attacks, Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA […].[1645]

The Trial Chamber concluded the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement by finding that Nyiramasuhuko was responsible for ordering the killing of "Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office".[1646] It further found Nyiramasuhuko responsible as a superior on the same basis, concluding that it would take this form of responsibility into account in sentencing.[1647] The Trial Chamber recalled these conclusions throughout the remainder of the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement when considering Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for other crimes based on the same conduct.[1648]

723. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to provide a reasoned opinion by not specifying the factual basis on which it relied to find her responsible under Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office.[1649] She argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to point to a factual or legal basis to support the conclusion that she issued orders to kill during the Mid-May Attack, the Night of Three Attacks, and the First Half of June Attacks and contends that no such basis exists.[1650] With respect to the Mid-May Attack in particular, she submits that the Trial Chamber only found that she ordered Tutsi refugees to be abducted without explaining how it inferred from it an order to kill.[1651]

724. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly addressed Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks.[1652] It contends that the Trial Chamber's findings that Nyiramasuhuko ordered abductions during these attacks reflect that she was found to have implicitly ordered killings given the nature of those attacks and that the abducted persons were killed.[1653] The Prosecution appears to submit that the Trial Chamber did not find that Nyiramasuhuko ordered abductions, and by implication killings, during the First Half of June Attacks but contends that this has no impact on her ordering responsibility in light of the Trial Chamber's findings with respect to the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks.[1654]

725. On 25 March 2015, the Appeals Chamber requested the Prosecution to provide supplementary submissions discussing what evidence cited in the Trial Judgement and findings of the Trial Chamber would support the conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko was convicted for ordering [1654] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 550. The Prosecution concludes that, in light of the Trial Chamber's conclusions regarding the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks, "the only reasonable inference was that the refugees abducted to be killed were killed." See idem. During the appeals hearing, the Prosecution also pointed to Witness SU's evidence related to the First Half of June Attack and referenced in paragraph 2754 of the Trial Judgement that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to load people into a vehicle to be killed as evidence supporting the conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko's orders to load Tutsis into her truck during attacks were understood by everyone to mean that these people would be killed. See AT. 14 April 2015 p. 43.

killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks.[1655] In response, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber correctly concluded that Nyiramasuhuko was convicted for ordering killings based on her conduct during the Night of Three Attacks.[1656] It contends that this conclusion is the clear and correct result of the Trial Chamber's assessment of "the evidence of the préfecture office crimes as a whole" as well as the fact that the Trial Chamber's "findings may be implied in its conclusions, rather than expressly stated."[1657] In support, the Prosecution points to evidence and findings pertaining to the Night of Three Attacks demonstrating: (i) Nyiramasuhuko's general authority; (ii) that she ordered rapes, killings, and that Tutsis be loaded onto the pickup truck and that all these orders were complied with; and (iii) that abducted Tutsis were taken away and killed.[1658]

726. Nyiramasuhuko responds that the relevant findings of the Trial Chamber do not provide a basis to conclude that it found that she ordered killings during the Night of Three Attacks and contests the Prosecution's position that the findings may be implied.[1659] She emphasises that the Trial Chamber made findings in respect of each attack and that the only finding concerning her conduct during the Night of Three Attacks was that she ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees and that Interahamwe beat, abused, and raped many Tutsi women.[1660] Nyiramasuhuko stresses that the Trial Chamber only concluded that she, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office on three occasions abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion, without finding that she ordered abductions or killings during that particular night.[1661] She further contends that, contrary to the Prosecution's position, the Trial Chamber did not consider a pattern of killings in order to establish her ordering liability for this attack.[1662]

727. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide, crimes against humanity, and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for ordering "the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office."[1663] The Trial Chamber further found that, in relation to these events, Nyiramasuhuko was responsible as a superior for killings committed by Interahamwe based on her orders and stated that it would consider this conclusion in sentencing.[1664] The Trial Chamber did not link these general findings to specific attacks at the prefectoral office in which it had concluded that Nyiramasuhuko participated.

[1662] Nyiramasuhuko Supplementary Submissions, paras. 21-24, 26, 27, 30. Nyiramasuhuko also contends that: (i) the Prosecution cannot present any evidence of a consistent pattern of conduct unless the accused receives sufficient and timely notice specifically identifying the evidence to be used in this manner; and (ii) it is improper to raise the theory of consistent pattern of conduct on appeal when it was not raised at trial. See ibid., paras. 25, 26.

728. A review of the Trial Chamber's most detailed factual and legal findings reveals that the Trial Chamber expressly concluded that Nyiramasuhuko was responsible for "ordering the killings of numerous Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup" during the Mid-May Attack.[1665] Nyiramasuhuko is correct in her submissions, however, that the Trial Chamber did not refer to any express order to kill nor did it expressly state that it inferred as the only reasonable conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the killings that resulted from that attack. Moreover, the Trial Chamber did not specify that Nyiramasuhuko's conduct of pointing out Tutsi refugees to the Interahamwe and ordering the Interahamwe to force them onto the pickup truck had a direct and substantial effect on the eventual killings of those Tutsis.[1666]

729. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules require trial chambers to give a reasoned opinion,[1667] which includes the provision of clear, reasoned findings of fact as to each element of the crime charged.[1668] A reasoned opinion in the trial judgement is essential for allowing a meaningful exercise of the right of appeal by the parties and enabling the Appeals Chamber to understand and review the trial chamber's findings.[1669] With respect to the Mid-May Attack, while it is clear that the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko was responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings during this attack and that she bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute on the same basis, the Appeals Chamber finds that the absence of clear findings as to the essential elements necessary to establish her ordering responsibility has resulted in a failure to provide a reasoned opinion and constitutes an error of law. The Appeals Chamber will consider whether this error invalidates the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Nyiramasuhuko for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack – and finding her responsible as a superior on the same basis – by examining whether the Trial Chamber's factual findings and the evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber and identified by the parties could sustain the Trial Chamber's conclusions when assessing Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for ordering.[1670]

730. Concerning the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber also made findings about Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in abductions and killings committed during this event in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, but, unlike with respect to the Mid-May Attack, it did not expressly find that Nyiramasuhuko ordered killings during this night or explain if her conduct during the Night of Three Attacks supported her convictions for ordering killings.[1671] Rather, the Trial Chamber merely concluded that "Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on board a camouflaged pickup on three occasions in one night. They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed."[1672] The Appeals Chamber finds that the absence of a clear finding in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement raises doubts as to whether her conviction for ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the prefectoral office was also based upon her conduct during the Night of Three Attacks.[1673] This ambiguity also raises doubts as to whether the Trial Chamber's findings that she bore responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute for killings committed by Interahamwe following her orders was also based upon her participation in these attacks.

731. Notwithstanding the ambiguity in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contentions, the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement contains express conclusions that, during the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko "ordered Interahamwe and soldiers to rape Tutsi women, and to kill other refugees",[1674] that she "gave orders to the Interahamwe to [attack women and children, assault them, and force them aboard the pickup]" who "were taken away from the [Butare Prefecture [1672] Trial Judgement, para. 5873 (internal reference omitted). See also ibid., paras. 2738, 2781(iii).

[1673] The confusion is compounded by the fact that the Trial Chamber expressly concluded in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that "Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees" with respect to the Night of Three Attacks. See Trial Judgement, para. 5873.
[1674] See Trial Judgement, para. 2698. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko contends that, notwithstanding the Trial Chamber's assertion in paragraph 2698 of the Trial Judgement that it was "convinced that Nyiramasuhuko […] ordered Interahamwe and soldiers to rape Tutsi women, and to kill other refugees" during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber did not conclude that Nyiramasuhuko ordered killings as such a finding is not contained in its later conclusions in paragraphs 2702, 2781, and 5873 of the Trial Judgement. See AT. 15 April 2015 p. 3; Nyiramasuhuko Supplementary Submissions, paras. 11, 12, 20. The Appeals Chamber finds that a plain reading of paragraph 2698 of the Trial Judgement in isolation and in the context of all of the Trial Chamber's findings contradicts Nyiramasuhuko's contention.

Office] and killed elsewhere",[1675] and that she "ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup" which left with the abducted Tutsi refugees.[1676] The Trial Chamber's discussion of the evidence of the witnesses that it relied upon with respect to the Night of Three Attacks also reflects that Nyiramasuhuko participated in the abductions and killings during that night, issued express orders to kill and abduct refugees who were later killed, and that she held a position of authority among the assailants during the attacks.[1677] Similarly, and contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber did not rely on a pattern of killings in relation to the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber made extensive findings that Tutsi refugees abducted from the prefectoral office during these and other attacks at the prefectoral office were killed.[1678]

732. In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's deliberations in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement demonstrate that the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko ordered killings during the Night of Three Attacks and that her conviction in this respect is incorporated in its general conclusion in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that she ordered Interahamwe to kill Tutsis taking refuge at the prefectoral office and that she was responsible as a superior on the same basis.[1679]

733. However, the analysis above demonstrates that the Trial Chamber manifestly failed to set out in a clear and articulate manner the basis for Nyiramasuhuko's criminal responsibility for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks. Instead, the parties and the Appeals Chamber have had to interpret scattered legal and factual findings as well as the evidence supporting them in order to decipher whether Nyiramasuhuko was found responsible for ordering killings committed during the Night of Three Attacks and as a superior for killings committed by Interahamwe who followed her orders. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber

[1678] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2736, 2739-2749, 2781(iv). See also ibid., paras. 2774-2779. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's apparent contention that the Prosecution cannot rely on evidence of a consistent pattern of conduct as defined in Rule 93 of the Rules without sufficient notice. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution is not seeking to introduce such evidence on appeal but is simply highlighting findings of the Trial Chamber and evidence it relied upon tending to show that there was a pattern of killings at the prefectoral office. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion in assessing evidence as it pertained to various attacks at the prefectoral office as trial chambers are tasked with determining the guilt or innocence of the accused and must do so in light of the entirety of the evidence admitted into the record. Cf. supra, para. 115.

erred in law by failing to provide a reasoned opinion in support of Nyiramasuhuko's conviction for ordering killings in relation to the Night of Three Attacks and her superior responsibility on the same basis.

734. Notwithstanding this error, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that Nyiramasuhuko has not been denied the opportunity to fully exercise her right to appeal this aspect of her ordering conviction, particularly in light of the opportunity given to her to litigate what evidence cited in the Trial Judgement and findings of the Trial Chamber would support it in relation to the Night of Three Attacks. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether this error invalidates the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Nyiramasuhuko for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks – and finding her responsible as a superior on the same basis – by examining whether the Trial Chamber's factual findings and the evidence relied upon by it and identified by the parties could sustain the Trial Chamber's conclusions when assessing Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for ordering.[1680] In so doing, the Appeals Chamber will consider Nyiramasuhuko's additional submissions that the record is insufficient to establish the elements of ordering under Article 6(1) of the Statute.

735. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's challenges concerning her responsibility for ordering killings during the First Half of June Attacks, the Appeals Chamber observes that, not only did the Trial Chamber not refer to Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in abductions or killings during the First Half of June Attacks in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement,[1681] but its conclusions in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement do not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber intended to convict her for ordering killings during these attacks. Rather, the Trial Chamber's only factual conclusion with respect to Nyiramasuhuko was that she ordered Interahamwe to commit rapes, without reference to her involvement in abductions or killings of Tutsis during these attacks, in contrast to its findings regarding Ntahobali.[1682] These omissions raise further questions as to whether the Trial Chamber's findings that Nyiramasuhuko bore superior responsibility under conduct of soldiers. A careful review of the relevant Trial Chamber's findings and other legal findings does not suggest otherwise.

[1680] See infra, Section IV.F.3.

[1681] See Trial Judgement, para. 5874.

[1682] Trial Judgement, paras. 2773 ("Therefore, the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt […] that, in addition to those attacks described above, Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] in June 1994 to rape women and abduct refugees. During one of these attacks Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA. It further finds that in June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and that as a result, numerous women were raped at that location."), 2781(v) ("In the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and that as a result numerous women were raped at that location. Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees. During at least one of these attacks Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.").

Article 6(3) of the Statute for killings committed by Interahamwe following her orders is also based on her conduct during these attacks.

736. While the Trial Chamber's discussion of the evidence it relied upon in relation to the First Half of June Attacks appears to reflect that Nyiramasuhuko participated in abductions and killings, issued orders in general, and held a position of authority among the assailants during these attacks,[1683] the Trial Chamber nowhere concluded that Nyiramasuhuko expressly ordered abductions or killings on the basis of this evidence. In this context, the Appeals Chamber cannot with any certainty conclude that the Trial Chamber relied on this evidence when generally concluding in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the prefectoral office. In the absence of any relevant factual and legal findings underlying Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for ordering killings during the First Half of June Attacks, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted in relation to the killings perpetrated as a result of these attacks. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds that her superior responsibility for killings committed by Interahamwe who followed her orders is not based on her conduct during these attacks.

737. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion with respect to Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks and, consequently, with respect to its conclusions that she bore superior responsibility for killings committed by Interahamwe who followed these orders. However, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that Nyiramasuhuko has been given the opportunity to fully litigate these conclusions on appeal. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber will consider whether the Trial Chamber's failure to make findings as to the essential elements necessary to establish her ordering responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute and, thus, with respect to its conclusion that she bore superior responsibility for killings committed by Interahamwe who followed these orders in relation to the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks invalidates its decision to hold Nyiramasuhuko responsible on these bases when assessing her responsibility for ordering killings later in this section. The Appeals Chamber determines that Nyiramasuhuko's contentions concerning her responsibility for ordering killings during the First Half of June Attacks as well as her responsibility as a superior for these killings are moot as she was not convicted on this basis.

(b) Rapes

738. The Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution provided insufficient notice of its intention to pursue rape as genocide and concluded that convicting Nyiramasuhuko on this basis would be prejudicial.[1684] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber stated that it would not enter a conviction for genocide on the basis of any rapes that occurred,[1685] but clarified that it would nonetheless consider evidence of rapes in the following manner:

> The Chamber […] will mention rapes in the course of its legal findings on genocide. This will be done to convey the entire set of facts in a coherent fashion, including that the intensity and repeated nature of the attacks provides evidence that rape was, in fact, utilised as a form of genocide. The Chamber will not take this into account in assessing genocide, but instead will consider this for the counts of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II thereto.[1686]

739. When assessing the Mid-May Attack in the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber held that Nyiramasuhuko aided and abetted rapes.[1687] In the same section, it further concluded that she ordered rapes during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[1688] The Trial Chamber nevertheless recalled that it would "not take rapes into account in assessing genocide, but instead [would] consider them for the counts of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II".[1689]

740. When discussing Nyiramasuhuko's liability for rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II, the Trial Chamber observed that Nyiramasuhuko was only charged pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and convicted her for rapes perpetrated by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office on this basis.[1690] The Trial Judgement reflects that her responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute is predicated on her having ordered rapes.[1691]

741. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred by convicting her of genocide on the basis of rapes committed at the prefectoral office.[1692] She submits that the Trial Chamber went beyond discussing rapes committed at the prefectoral office but made specific findings as to her individual criminal responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting and ordering rapes when assessing the charge of genocide.[1693] She contends that the error of this approach is evident as she was only charged under Article 6(3) of the Statute with respect to rapes.[1694]

742. Nyiramasuhuko also appears to argue that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her as a superior and pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting rapes during the Mid-May Attack.[1695] She also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to identify the rapes committed by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office of which she was found responsible as a superior.[1696]

743. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not convict Nyiramasuhuko for genocide on the basis of rapes or for aiding and abetting rapes under any of the other counts.[1697]

744. Notwithstanding its findings that Nyiramasuhuko aided and abetted and ordered rapes in the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement as well as its reliance on these conclusions when determining that she possessed the mens rea for genocide,[1698] the Trial Chamber repeatedly confirmed that it would not convict Nyiramasuhuko of genocide in relation to rapes committed at the prefectoral office.[1699] The Trial Chamber's conclusions on Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for genocide unequivocally reflect that she was found guilty of this crime on the sole basis of the killings that she ordered during attacks at the prefectoral office.[1700] Nyiramasuhuko's contention that she was convicted for genocide on the basis of rapes, thus, is without merit.

745. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding in the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement that Nyiramasuhuko aided and abetted or ordered rapes in relation to the Mid-May Attack, the Night of Three Attacks, or the First Half of June Attacks. While the Trial Chamber was not obligated to make findings on individual criminal responsibility for rapes under Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation to the crime of genocide as it determined that the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment was defective in this respect, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that it was an error for the Trial Chamber to do so where it did not enter a conviction against her on this basis.

746. Likewise, the Trial Judgement unambiguously reflects that Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II under Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting rapes during the Mid-May Attack.[1701] It is clear from the Trial Judgement that Nyiramasuhuko was convicted under these counts solely pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and only on the basis of the rapes committed by Interahamwe who were following her orders.[1702] As the Trial Chamber did not find that she ordered Interahamwe to commit rapes during the Mid-May Attack,[1703] it is clear that Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted in relation to the rapes committed during this attack.

747. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's unsupported contention that the Trial Chamber failed to factually identify acts of rape committed by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office that would support her liability. The Trial Chamber's conclusions reflect that the rapes supporting her responsibility were those committed by Interahamwe who accompanied her to the prefectoral office and followed her orders during the Night of Three Attacks and one of the First Half of June Attacks.[1704]

748. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's arguments that she was convicted of genocide on the basis of rapes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office, or that she was convicted of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for rapes that she aided and abetted during the Mid-May Attack. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently identify the rapes for which she was held criminally responsible.

[1703] Trial Judgement, para. 5869 ("There was no evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's direct involvement in ordering the rape of Witness TA or the other Tutsi women on this occasion in mid-May 1994. […] Therefore, Nyiramasuhuko, by her presence and position of authority, is guilty of aiding and abetting the rapes at the [Butare Prefecture Office].") (internal reference omitted). See also ibid., para. 5877 ("[T]he evidence establishes that […] Nyiramasuhuko aided and abetted rapes […]."). The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber relied on the fact that "Nyiramasuhuko issued instructions to rape the women" when discussing her mens rea of genocide for the Mid-May Attack. See ibid., para. 5870. Although this statement may be misleading, it is clear, when read in context, that this statement does not refer to the Mid-May Attack but to later attacks at the prefectoral office where Nyiramasuhuko was found to have ordered rapes. See ibid., paras. 5873, 5874.

(c) Conclusion

749. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Judgement reflects that Nyiramasuhuko was convicted of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks, and that Nyiramasuhuko's superior responsibility for these killings was considered as an aggravating factor in sentencing. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted in relation to any of the killings committed during the First Half of June Attacks. It also concludes that Nyiramasuhuko was convicted of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes committed by Interahamwe following her orders during the Night of Three Attacks and one of the First Half of June Attacks.

750. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in law in failing to provide a reasoned opinion with respect to Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks. The Appeals Chamber will consider whether the Trial Chamber's failure to make findings as to the essential elements necessary to establish Nyiramasuhuko's ordering responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation to these events invalidates the decision when assessing her responsibility for ordering killings later in this section. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's remaining challenges concerning the imprecision or impropriety of the Trial Chamber's findings concerning her participation in crimes during attacks at the prefectoral office.

2. Assessment of Evidence

751. With respect to the Mid-May Attack, the Trial Chamber found that, one night in mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and about 10 Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office aboard a camouflage pickup truck.[1705] The Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup truck, that Ntahobali and about eight other Interahamwe raped Witness TA, and that the pickup truck left the prefectoral office, abducting Tutsi refugees in the process.[1706] As discussed above, the Trial

Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko for ordering killings during this attack and found that she bore superior responsibility for the killings committed by Interahamwe who followed her orders.[1707]

752. As regards the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber found that, around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on board a camouflaged pickup truck three times in one night.[1708] They abducted Tutsi refugees each time and took them to other sites in Butare Prefecture to be killed.[1709] The Trial Chamber further found that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees during these attacks.[1710] The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko for ordering killings during these attacks and as a superior for ordering rapes and found that she bore superior responsibility for the killings committed by Interahamwe who followed her orders.[1711] The Trial Chamber partly relied on evidence pertaining to the abduction and/or killings of Mbasha's wife, Trifina, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi during these attacks in support of its findings.[1712]

753. Concerning the First Half of June Attacks, the Trial Chamber determined that, during one of the attacks, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the Butare Prefecture Office and as a result numerous women were raped at that location.[1713] The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko as a superior for ordering rapes on this basis.[1714]

754. Nyiramasuhuko challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence concerning these attacks. The Appeals Chamber will first examine Nyiramasuhuko's submissions regarding unpleaded and prejudicial evidence before turning to her contentions pertaining to alleged collusion, the identification evidence, the Mid-May Attack, the Night of Three Attacks, and the First Half of June Attacks.

(a) Unpleaded and Prejudicial Evidence

755. The Trial Chamber observed that the identities of Mbasha's wife, Trifina, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi did not appear in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief or its appendix, or the Prosecution's opening statement.[1715] It also noted that their identities had only been disclosed in four witness statements less than two months prior to trial,

[1711] See supra, para. 749.
[1712] Trial Judgement, paras. 2172, 2746-2749. The Trial Chamber had previously determined that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali could not be convicted on the basis of the crimes committed against these named individuals for lack of notice. See ibid., para. 2172.

[1714] See supra, para. 749.

without indication that this new information was being provided.[1716] Consequently, the Trial Chamber found that the late disclosure of these victims' names "accorded bias to the Defence in preparing its case" and concluded that it would not convict Nyiramasuhuko or Ntahobali for the alleged crimes against these victims if they were to be established.[1717] Relying on the Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004 and the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that it would nonetheless consider the evidence concerning these individuals for "other permissible purposes", including "background information, circumstantial evidence in support of other allegations, to demonstrate a special knowledge, opportunity or identification of the accused".[1718]

756. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence about Mbasha's wife and children, Trifina, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi as circumstantial evidence to support her convictions for the abductions and killings of other unnamed Tutsi refugees at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1719] She contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its application of the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement and breached Rule 93 of the Rules, as evidence of a consistent pattern of conduct must be disclosed by the Prosecution pursuant to Rule 66 of the Rules.[1720] She avers that the Prosecution did not comply with Rule 66 of the Rules as the Trial Chamber found that the victims' names were disclosed less than two months prior to the trial.[1721] Moreover, she argues that the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement also prevents the use of evidence for this purpose where it would be "critically unfair" and argues that such is the case in this instance in light of the Prosecution's "repeated violation of disclosure obligations"[1722] as well as the fact that this evidence was central to establishing her guilt in relation to attacks at the prefectoral office.[1723]

Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber rewarded the Prosecution's deliberate breach of its disclosure obligations by considering the belatedly disclosed and essentially convicting her on

757. Nyiramasuhuko alternatively submits that the Trial Chamber erred in unreasonably relying on the evidence of the named individuals "as circumstantial evidence of what happened to other Tutsi refugees who were at the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[1724] In her view, the use of the evidence in this manner went beyond the permitted uses identified by the Trial Chamber, namely to "demonstrate special knowledge, an opportunity or identification of the accused".[1725] She requests the exclusion of the evidence related to the abductions and/or killings of Mbasha's wife, Trifina, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi.[1726]

758. The Prosecution responds that nothing precluded the Trial Chamber from determining that the evidence related to Mbasha's wife and children and Trifina could be admitted as circumstantial evidence establishing Nyiramasuhuko's charged conduct in relation to crimes committed at the prefectoral office.[1727] It also responds that it was not required to plead Annonciata's and Semanyenzi's identities in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment as their identities and account of the killings were evidence and not material facts.[1728] It contends that the disclosure provisions, as interpreted in the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, do not apply in this instance as the relevant evidence was not used to establish a consistent pattern of conduct.[1729] In the alternative, the Prosecution argues that Nyiramasuhuko does not show how her convictions could not stand without the evidence concerning Mbasha's wife and her children, Trifina, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi.[1730]

759. The Appeals Chamber observes that, after considering and finding credible evidence pertaining to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children[1731] and the killing of Trifina,[1732] the Trial [1727] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 513-515, 662. The Prosecution also responds that, as Nyiramasuhuko never objected to the admission of the evidence related to Trifina at trial, she is prevented from challenging this evidence for the first time on appeal. See ibid., para. 156.

[1728] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 536.

[1729] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 536, 662. The Prosecution also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that it did not disclose Trifina's identity until two months before trial. See ibid., para. 512, fn. 1255. In this regard, it contends that it fully complied with its disclosure obligations pursuant to Rule 66(A)(ii) of the Rules. See idem. Nyiramasuhuko responds that, because the Prosecution did not appeal the Trial Chamber's finding that it violated Rule 66 of the Rules, it cannot be contested now. See Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 242. In light of the rejection of the entirety of Nyiramasuhuko's arguments under Ground 28 of her appeal, the Appeals Chamber declines to address this issue. See infra, Section IV.F.2(a).

[1730] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 536, 662.

[1731] Trial Judgement, paras. 2717-2727. Regarding the Prosecution's argument that Nyiramasuhuko did not object to the admission of the evidence related to Trifina at trial, the Appeals Chamber observes that, as noted by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali objected in his closing brief that evidence related to this event, among other evidence, constituted factual allegations that were not pleaded in the Indictment. See Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 247, referring to Ntahobali Closing Brief, para. 78. The Trial Chamber accepted that this objection was validly raised on behalf of both Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko and ruled on the issue for both of them. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2167, 2172. Accordingly, given Nyiramasuhuko's contentions on appeal that this evidence was nonetheless improperly used to convict her, the Chamber recalled that it would not enter convictions on the basis of this conduct but found that the "credible and consistent information" with regard to these events provided circumstantial support for its findings regarding the abduction of other unnamed Tutsi refugees from the Butare Prefecture Office.[1733] The Trial Chamber also relied, in part, on evidence that Semanyenzi and Annonciata had been abducted from the prefectoral office but escaped and returned to it, informing refugees that those who had been abducted were killed.[1734] The Trial Chamber considered this evidence when concluding that the refugees abducted from the prefectoral office were killed.[1735]

760. In this context, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber, through its reference to the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, improperly admitted evidence of a consistent pattern of conduct relevant to serious violations of international humanitarian law under the Statute without the notice required by Rule 93 of the Rules.[1736] Nothing in the Trial Chamber's analysis supports the contention that evidence concerning Mbasha's wife and children, Trifina, or Annonciata and Semanyenzi was admitted for the purposes set out under Rule 93 of the Rules,[1737] nor do the excerpts of the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement that the Trial Chamber relied upon suggest that this is the only purpose for which unpleaded evidence can be admitted and considered.[1738] All of Nyiramasuhuko's arguments in this regard are dismissed.

761. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on this evidence as circumstantial support for other pleaded allegations. The Trial Chamber considered that insufficient notice had been given to Nyiramasuhuko concerning the crimes against these particular individuals and that she was prejudiced in this regard.[1739] Such a conclusion, however, is not Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko is not precluded from challenging the relevant Trial Chamber's findings on appeal.

[1733] Trial Judgement, paras. 2727, 2730.

[1734] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2746, 2747.

[1735] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2746-2749. Nyiramasuhuko also argues that it was improper for the Trial Chamber to have relied on evidence concerning the unnamed woman as circumstantial evidence to convict her. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 903. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not exclude the use of such evidence for lack of notice. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2172, 2731-2738. Consequently, Nyiramasuhuko's contentions fail to explain why this evidence should have been excluded and why it was an error for the Trial Chamber to have relied upon it.

[1736] Rule 93(A) of the Rules provides that evidence of a consistent pattern of conduct relevant to serious violations of international humanitarian law under the Statute may be admissible in the interests of justice and Rule 93(B) of the Rules requires the Prosecution to disclose acts tending to show such a pattern of conduct pursuant to Rule 66 of the Rules.

[1737] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2172, 2746-2749.

[1738] See Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, paras. 321-323, 336, referred to in Trial Judgement, para. 2172, fn. 5763.

[1739] See Trial Judgement, para. 2172. Nyiramasuhuko's arguments are based on the incorrect premise that the Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution violated its disclosure obligations pursuant to Rule 66 of the Rules with respect to the identities of Mbasha's wife, Trifina, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi in paragraph 2172 of the Trial Judgement. Even if that were the case, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that any violation in this regard prevented the Trial Chamber from relying on the evidence of these individuals as circumstantial evidence to establish other allegations pleaded in the indictment.

equivalent to a finding that the evidence is inadmissible under Rule 89(C) of the Rules.[1740] The Prosecution has an obligation to state the material facts underpinning the charges in an indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven.[1741] In addition, Rule 89(C) of the Rules allows a trial chamber to admit any relevant evidence it deems to have probative value.[1742]

762. In this case, the evidence identified by Nyiramasuhuko is related in time, geographically, and thematically to the pleaded allegations of her involvement in crimes committed during attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office. While Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Prosecution violated its disclosure obligations, the findings upon which she relies to support this position only reflect the conclusion that she was not provided sufficient notice that she was charged with the crimes against these specific individuals and that convicting her on this basis would be impermissible.[1743] Nyiramasuhuko does not substantiate that the manner in which the information about these particular victims was disclosed required the Trial Chamber to exclude it. Nor does she substantiate her contention that such evidence was essential for establishing her guilt with respect to the crimes she was found to have committed in relation to attacks at the prefectoral office.[1744]

763. As to Nyiramasuhuko's alternative argument that the Trial Chamber erred in using the evidence of the named individuals in a manner that fell outside the limitations that it had imposed on the uses of this evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko misrepresents the Trial Judgement.[1745] A plain reading of the Trial Judgement shows that "special knowledge, opportunity, or identification of the accused" were not the only permitted uses identified by the Trial Chamber, which also stated that it could be used for "circumstantial evidence in support of other allegations".[1746]

764. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's arguments concerning the allegedly improper use of unpleaded and prejudicial evidence.

[1740] See Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004, paras. 14, 15.

[1743] Trial Judgement, para. 2172.
[1744] Indeed, Nyiramasuhuko's submissions as they concern Semanyenzi, Annonciata, and Fidèle ignore the fact that these persons were not killed and that there was no obligation on the Prosecution to plead their abductions from the prefectoral office in support of the charges that Nyiramasuhuko bore responsibility for the killing of refugees abducted from the prefectoral office.

(b) Collusion

765. The Trial Chamber considered and rejected Defence allegations of fabrication of testimony against, inter alios, Witnesses TK, QJ, SS, and SU.[1747] When assessing evidence about the events at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Trial Chamber explicitly evaluated the familial relationships between Witnesses TK and QJ, Witnesses TK and RE, and Witnesses SS and SU, and determined that these relationships did not leave their credibility in doubt.[1748]

766. With respect to Witnesses TK and QJ, Nyiramasuhuko notes that they are related and that the Trial Chamber considered and rejected Witness TK's testimony about never discussing with Witness QJ the 1994 events or about coming to Arusha.[1749] She argues that despite this consideration, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that this did not undermine Witness TK's credibility as a whole.[1750] She contends that she was not allowed to cross-examine Witness QJ on whether Witness TK would be testifying after him and that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently scrutinise Witness TK's statement during her subsequent testimony that she and Witness QJ did "not spend time discussing [the events of 1994]" even though they both gave interviews to Prosecution investigators on the same day.[1751] She also highlights that Witness TK testified that she did not know anyone with whom she was travelling to Arusha but admitted during cross-examination that she flew to Arusha with Witness SJ.[1752] In Nyiramasuhuko's view, these circumstances: (i) reflect that Witnesses TK and QJ sought to conceal what they had discussed between themselves and with others in their prior statements and testimonies; and (ii) should have been considered by the Trial Chamber.[1753]

767. Nyiramasuhuko also argues that it was insufficient for the Trial Chamber to acknowledge merely that Witness RE was related to Witness TK without concluding that it put Witness RE's credibility in doubt.[1754] She notes that, in her prior statement, Witness RE did not mention what happened to Mbasha's wife and children and stated that Nyiramasuhuko only came twice instead of three times in one night to the prefectoral office.[1755] She posits that Witness RE's later recollection of events, which followed more closely Witness TK's evidence, demonstrates a real possibility of collusion.[1756]

768. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko points out that Witnesses SS and SU testified that they witnessed the events from April to July 1994 together, thereafter lived with each other and maintained close ties, and gave statements to Tribunal investigators on the same day in 1996.[1757] She argues that the fact that "material information" related to the prefectoral office provided by both witnesses during their testimonies was not in their prior statements should have led the Trial Chamber to treat their evidence with caution.[1758] She also contends that the Trial Chamber never established the veracity of Witness SU's statement that she did not discuss the events with Witness SS.[1759]

769. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber's erroneous evaluation of the evidence of these witnesses in light of the circumstances described above reveals an improper appearance of bias and warrants her acquittal.[1760]

770. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed the family relationship between Witnesses TK and QJ and properly exercised its discretion in assessing their evidence.[1761] It further contends that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that any of the witnesses had a motive to lie based on their relationships with each other.[1762]

771. At the outset, the Appeals Chamber recalls its prior conclusion that, even if Nyiramasuhuko were to demonstrate errors in the Trial Chamber's analysis of the evidence in the manner she alleges, this would not be sufficient to demonstrate bias on the part of the Trial Chamber in the context of this case.[1763]

772. As noted above, the Trial Chamber expressly considered the ties between Witnesses TK and QJ, Witnesses RE and TK, and Witnesses SS and SU, and rejected Defence evidence that they fabricated evidence.[1764] The Trial Chamber provided several reasons as to why it found Witnesses TK and QJ credible, notwithstanding its disbelief that they had not discussed the events

[1757] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 295, 296.
[1758] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 295-298. Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko points out that, although not contained in their prior statements, both witnesses similarly testified that: (i) she was present and ordered Interahamwe to commit rapes at the prefectoral office; (ii) rapes occurred there; (iii) Semanyenzi and Fidèle survived and returned to the prefectoral office; and (iv) a woman and her children situated on the veranda were killed. See idem.

and their participation in proceedings with each other.[1765] In particular, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber accepted Witness TK's evidence in light of its "significantly detailed nature […] and the corroboration of numerous elements of her testimony by other witnesses".[1766] The Trial Chamber also expressly discussed Witness TK's evidence regarding her knowledge of other witnesses, in particular those who travelled with her to Arusha.[1767] There is also no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber barred cross-examination on whether Witness QJ knew that Witness TK was called to testify for the Prosecution, as the witness was asked and answered this question.[1768] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in this regard.

773. In relation to Witness RE, the Appeals Chamber considers Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on alleged inconsistencies between the witness's prior statement and testimony to establish collusion with Witness TK to be speculative. In particular, Nyiramasuhuko's submission ignores the fact that Witness RE's evidence was corroborated by witnesses other than Witness TK.[1769]

774. With respect to Witnesses SS's and SU's evidence, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that alleged inconsistencies between their prior statements and testimonies evidenced collusion between them. In particular, the Appeals Chamber observes that their evidence, which Nyiramasuhuko suspects resulted from collusion, is corroborated by other witnesses.[1770] Moreover, while Nyiramasuhuko extensively challenges the credibility of their respective testimonies based on differences between them, she fails to show that the alleged discrepancies within their evidence were so material that, by accepting their evidence, the Trial Chamber failed to exercise caution or sufficient concern for collusion.[1771] Having examined Nyiramasuhuko's arguments in detail, the Appeals Chamber concludes that they fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its broad discretion in assessing the evidence of these witnesses.

[1767] See Trial Judgement, para. 2685.
[1768] See Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 pp. 59, 60 (closed session). In particular, a review of the relevant transcripts does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's management of the examination of Witness QJ prevented sufficient interrogation on the nature of the witness's relationship with Witness TK or whether these two witnesses had discussed the events or their testimonies. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 288, 289, referring to Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 pp. 55, 56, 61 (closed session), T. 15 November 2001 pp. 61, 62, Witness TK, T. 21 May 2002 pp. 40, 41, 102, 103 (closed session), T. 23 May 2002 pp. 47-49. While the Appeals Chamber has found that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on an aspect of Witness TK's evidence when convicting Ntahobali in relation to rapes at the Butare Prefecture Office, this conclusion is unrelated to the issue of Witness TK's credibility. See infra, Section V.I.1(b).
[1769] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2686, 2687, 2695, 2698, 2703, 2707, 2729, 2738, 2747. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the variance between Witness RE's prior statement and testimony required express analysis from the Trial Chamber, or that it demonstrates that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider whether her testimony was fabricated based on unsupported allegations of collusion with Witness TK.
[1771] See infra, Section IV.F.2(e).

775. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to conclude that the credibility of Witnesses TK, QJ, RE, SS and SU was undermined by their familial relationships and suspicions of collusion.

(c) Identification Evidence

776. In concluding that Nyiramasuhuko participated in the Mid-May Attack and Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber referred to the identification evidence provided by Prosecution Witnesses SU, SD, SS, SJ, QJ, TA, TK, RE, FAP, QY, and QBQ.[1772]

777. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the credibility and reliability of the evidence relating to her identification during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks.[1773] Specifically, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) improperly relying on in-court identifications; (ii) accepting several witnesses' evidence that they had prior knowledge of her; and (iii) accepting witnesses' testimonies of having seen her at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1774] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(i) In-Court Identification

778. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on several in-court identifications in light of its position that it would not rely upon such evidence.[1775] She also argues that the in-court identifications of her had no probative value given that she was the only female defendant in a trial involving six co-accused.[1776]

779. The Prosecution rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber stated that it would not, under any circumstance, rely on in-court identifications.[1777] It further argues that the Trial Chamber took into account many factors when weighing such evidence.[1778]

[1772] Trial Judgement, paras. 2628, 2629, 2686, 2698. See also ibid., paras. 2683-2685, 2687-2702.
[1773] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 6.1, 10.15; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 772-775, 815, 816. While Nyiramasuhuko made express reference in her notice of appeal under Ground 24 to paragraphs of the Trial Judgement which relate to the Trial Chamber's general approach to identification evidence, the Night of Three Attacks, and the First Half of June Attacks, she only developed arguments supporting challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the identification evidence related to the Night of Three Attacks under Ground 24 and to the Mid-May Attack under Ground 30. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, paras. 6.1, 10.15; Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 772-817.
[1774] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 777-795, 797-802, 806-814. Nyiramasuhuko contends that these purported errors reflect that the Trial Chamber approached identification evidence presented by the Prosecution as a priori believable and credible, and that it exercised no caution when evaluating such evidence. See ibid., para. 815.

[1777] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 486.

780. In the section of the Trial Judgement concerning "Evidentiary Matters", the Trial Chamber discussed principal considerations that would guide its assessment of evidence relating to the identification of the accused.[1779] With respect to in-court identifications, the Trial Chamber stated:

> No probative weight will be assigned to an identification given for the first time by a witness while testifying, who identifies the accused while he is standing in the dock. Because all of the circumstances of a trial necessarily lead such a witness to identify the person on trial (or, where more than one person is on trial, the particular person on trial who most closely resembles the man who committed the offence charged), no positive probative weight will be given by the Chamber to these "in court" identifications.[1780]

781. The Appeals Chamber recalls that any in-court identification should be assigned "little or no credence" given the signals that can identify an accused aside from prior acquaintance.[1781]

782. Nyiramasuhuko's submissions fail to identify any error committed by the Trial Chamber with respect to in-court identifications in her case. Her contentions merely refer to the Trial Chamber's summary of identification evidence provided by each witness, without substantiating how the Trial Chamber erred in its consideration of these testimonies.[1782] A review of the Trial Chamber's analysis reveals that the Trial Chamber did not rely on in-court identifications when accepting the ability of witnesses to identify Nyiramasuhuko in connection with the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1783] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions regarding the Trial Chamber's assessment of in-court identifications.

(ii) Prior Knowledge

783. Within the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement concerning the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber discussed identification evidence relevant to Nyiramasuhuko's participation in these attacks.[1784] In particular, the Trial Chamber concluded that "several witnesses knew Nyiramasuhuko before the April to July 1994 events[,] including Witnesses SU, SD, SS and SJ", and that these witnesses "had an opportunity to identify her in the conditions of calm prior to the commencement of large-scale violence".[1785] The Trial Chamber also stated that "Nyiramasuhuko was widely known as the Minister in charge of Women's Affairs and therefore would likely be recognisable."[1786]

[1785] Trial Judgement, para. 2698.

784. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence that Witnesses SU, SD, SS, and SJ knew her prior to April 1994 was sufficiently reliable.[1787] The Appeals Chamber will assess Nyiramasuhuko's challenges as they relate to each witness in turn.

a. Witness SU

785. As noted above, the Trial Chamber determined that Witness SU was one of several witnesses who "knew Nyiramasuhuko before the April to July 1994 events" when discussing Nyiramasuhuko's participation in the Night of Three Attacks.[1788] The Trial Chamber provided further analysis regarding Witness SU's prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko when considering allegations of Nyiramasuhuko's order to rape during an attack at the Butare Prefecture Office in the first half of June 1994.[1789] In this section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber again found that Witness SU previously knew Nyiramasuhuko and specifically referred to the witness's evidence that she had "walked past Nyiramasuhuko's home" in Ndora Commune when visiting relatives.[1790]

786. Nyiramasuhuko submits that, in relying on Witness SU's testimony, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Nyiramasuhuko had not lived in Ndora Commune since 1968 and that Witness SU was unable to identify the period prior to 1994 when she knew her.[1791] Nyiramasuhuko argues that, even if Witness SU were telling the truth, the fact that she met her more than 20 years prior to 1994, coupled with the obvious lack of familiarity between the witness and her since the witness acknowledged that she never spoke with Nyiramasuhuko, rendered Witness SU's identification "unavoidably doubtful".[1792]

787. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko mischaracterises Witness SU's evidence and fails to acknowledge that the witness provided additional biographical information about Nyiramasuhuko and her family that supports the Trial Chamber's finding that the witness had prior knowledge of her.[1793]

[1787] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 778.

[1791] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 778.
[1792] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 779 (emphasis omitted).
[1793] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 479. The Prosecution contends that Witness SU's evidence reflects that she was talking about Nyiramasuhuko's "husband's home", the place where she was married. See idem, referring to Witness SU, T. 21 October 2002 p. 62 (closed session).

788. The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that Nyiramasuhuko may not have been living in Ndora Commune since 1968[1794] does not suggest that the witness lied about seeing her in front of her home in Ndora. Nyiramasuhuko also misconstrues Witness SU's evidence when arguing that the witness could not provide any indication about the period prior to 1994 she saw her.[1795] Witness SU's testimony reflects that she simply could not recall when she last saw Nyiramasuhuko before the events of April 1994.[1796] Likewise, the fact that Witness SU may have first seen Nyiramasuhuko more than 20 years prior to April 1994 and had not spoken with her does not per se demonstrate that the Trial Chamber, which took note of this, acted unreasonably in relying on this witness's identification evidence.[1797] Nyiramasuhuko's contentions ignore that Witness SU correctly identified Maurice Ntahobali as Nyiramasuhuko's husband and stated that Nyiramasuhuko had four children with him.[1798] The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Witness SU had knowledge of her prior to April 1994.

b. Witness SD

789. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness SD had prior knowledge of her given that the witness's knowledge was based on having seen a picture of Nyiramasuhuko in the Imvaho journal.[1799]

790. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to substantiate any error in the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness SD had prior knowledge of her.[1800]

791. Notwithstanding its finding of Witness SD's prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko when discussing identification evidence relevant to Nyiramasuhuko's participation in the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber did not find that Witness SD saw Nyiramasuhuko on this night[1801] and the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness SD's identification of Nyiramasuhuko at the Butare Prefecture Office.[1802] In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds it [1794] The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko's evidence in support of her contention that she did not live in Ndora Commune after 1968 is ambiguous. See Nyiramasuhuko, T. 31 August 2005 pp. 21, 22.

[1800] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 478.
[1801] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2312-2318, 2686.
[1802] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber refused to rely on Witness SD's evidence in one context and only found that Witness SD's evidence generally corroborated Witness TA's evidence as it related to the attacks that occurred seven and 11 days after the Mid-May Attack ("Last Half of May Attacks") as well as provided unnecessary to examine Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness SD's prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko.

c. Witness SS

792. Within the same section of the Trial Judgement relevant to the Night of Three Attacks where it determined that Witness SS was one of several witnesses who had prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko, the Trial Chamber expressly recalled Witness SS's evidence that she had passed the road in front of Nyiramasuhuko's house and had seen her three times prior to the genocide.[1803] It also noted Witness SS's evidence of having encountered Nyiramasuhuko at a roadblock during the genocide, in daylight and from less than three metres away.[1804] The Trial Chamber further observed that Witness SS testified that "Nyiramasuhuko was the prime minister who was in charge of gender issues".[1805] The Trial Chamber then stated that "[b]ecause of the multiple opportunities Witness SS had to observe the Accused, and the witness'[s] opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko in daylight and prior to the genocide, the Chamber finds Witness SS'[s] identification of Nyiramasuhuko to be both reliable and credible."[1806]

793. Nyiramasuhuko contends that, by crediting Witness SS's evidence of having seen her at her house on three occasions in 1990, the Trial Chamber failed to consider contradictory evidence that the building to which Witness SS referred – Hotel Ihuliro – did not exist before 1993 and did not open until December that year.[1807] Nyiramasuhuko also emphasises that simply because Witness SS knew that she was the Minister of Family and Women's Development is not a reliable basis for identifying her as this fact was widely known.[1808]

794. Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber failed to apply appropriate caution when also relying on Witness SS's account of previously having seen her at a roadblock during the genocide.[1809] Specifically, she argues that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider the circumstantial evidence of the vehicle driven by Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2620, 2650, 2651, 2663. The Appeals Chamber observes that, while Witness SD's evidence indicated that Nyiramasuhuko participated in attacks at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber did not rely on this element of the witness's testimony as it did not find that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the Last Half of May Attacks. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2653, 2781(ii).

difficult circumstances surrounding this identification.[1810] Nyiramasuhuko also highlights Witness FAP's evidence that she was stopped at the same roadblock and under the same circumstances as Witness SS, noting that Witness FAP did not identify Nyiramasuhuko as being present.[1811]

795. The Prosecution responds by stressing that Witness SS testified that she did not know of Hotel Ihuliro but of the private residence of Nyiramasuhuko's husband "at that location".[1812] It also contends that Nyiramasuhuko ignores the Trial Chamber's consideration of evidence that Witness SS also saw Nyiramasuhuko at the Huye Stadium prior to the genocide.[1813] The Prosecution adds that the Trial Chamber sufficiently considered the difficult circumstances in which Witness SS observed Nyiramasuhuko at the roadblock during the genocide and that Nyiramasuhuko does not show the relevance of Witness FAP's evidence.[1814]

796. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness SS was examined extensively as to the three occasions on which she saw Nyiramasuhuko at her home prior to 1994. Her evidence reflects that she saw Nyiramasuhuko during the day on three occasions in 1990, in front of a two storey building, which she was told belonged to Nyiramasuhuko's husband, Maurice Ntahobali.[1815] Nyiramasuhuko argues that the building Witness SS is referring to is Hotel Ihuliro.[1816] The Appeals Chamber observes that the evidence pointed out by Nyiramasuhuko indicates that Hotel Ihuliro was not operational prior to late 1993.[1817] However, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's suggestion, this evidence does not reflect that the building itself did not exist.[1818] The fact that Hotel Ihuliro did not open or receive guests until 1994 is not incompatible with Witness SS's evidence of seeing Nyiramasuhuko in 1990 in front of the two storey building owned by Maurice Ntahobali that eventually became Hotel Ihuliro.

[1810] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 784, 785. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the circumstances were extremely stressful as the witness had seen the corpse of a man whose arm was amputated lying less than three metres from the roadblock. See ibid., para. 784.

Madame, cet hôtel de votre grande sœur, est-ce que c'était un endroit qui était ouvert depuis peu de temps au mois d'avril 1994 ou cela faisait plus de temps ? R. Il y avait peu de temps que l'hôtel avait ouvert.*"); Nyiramasuhuko, T. 6 October 2005 p. 28 ("Q. Madam, did you stay in Hotel Uhiliro [sic] in 1990? A. No, in 1990, […] this hotel did not exist"). The Appeals Chamber observes that the testimony of Denise Ntahobali to which Nyiramasuhuko refers does not shed light on when Hotel Ihuliro was open. See Denise Ntahobali, T. 9 June 2005 p. 16 (French).
[1818] Nyiramasuhuko does not point to evidence in the record as to when the building was built.

797. Although not expressly referred to by the Trial Chamber in its analysis of Witness SS's prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko, the Appeals Chamber further observes that the witness also testified to having seen Nyiramasuhuko introduced as minister during a ceremony at Huye Stadium,[1819] which the Trial Chamber recalled when summarising her testimony.[1820] Nyiramasuhuko does not challenge this evidence and the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact, based on all of Witness SS's testimony, including her knowledge that Nyiramasuhuko was the "minister who was in charge of gender issues", could have determined that she knew Nyiramasuhuko prior to the genocide. That this fact might have been well known does not undermine the probative nature of Witness SS's ability to identify Nyiramasuhuko.

798. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider the difficult circumstances surrounding Witness SS's identification of her at a roadblock during the genocide. Before relying on this evidence, the Trial Chamber recalled that the identification was "[d]uring the events of April to July 1994" and assessed the circumstances surrounding this encounter, including the fact that Witness SS was less than three metres from Nyiramasuhuko and that it occurred during the day.[1821] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the identification was made under stressful circumstances as the witness saw her as well as "a corpse with its arms amputated" on the same occasion does not undermine the reliability of this identification.[1822]

799. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that Witness FAP was stopped at the same roadblock and under the same circumstances as Witness SS, but that Witness FAP did not identify Nyiramasuhuko as being present, the Appeals Chamber observes that several aspects of both witnesses' testimonies could suggest that they passed the same roadblock around the same time.[1823] Nevertheless, Nyiramasuhuko's submissions fail to demonstrate that Witness SS's evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the roadblock is incompatible with Witness FAP's evidence, particularly as Witness FAP was not questioned as to whether Nyiramasuhuko was present.[1824] Moreover, having carefully reviewed the relevant aspects of both witnesses' testimonies, the [1823] Both witnesses testified that they left Butare University Hospital with other refugees, including Burundian refugees, on foot and were escorted by four soldiers until they were stopped at a roadblock in front of Nyiramasuhuko's home. Witness SS testified that this occurred on 27 May 1994 and Witness FAP indicated that this was around the last two weeks of May 1994. See Witness SS, T. 3 March 2003 pp. 24, 26, 29, T. 4 March 2003 pp. 45, 46, 48, 49, T. 5 March 2003 pp. 19, 20, T. 10 March 2003 p. 61; Witness FAP, T. 11 March 2003 pp. 40-44, 46, T. 12 March 2003 pp. 30, 35, 37-39, 42, T. 13 March 2003 pp. 23 (closed session), 30.

Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the witnesses' observations were made at the same time or from the same perspective.[1825]

800. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness SS had prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko.

d. Witness SJ

801. The Trial Chamber stated that Witness SJ identified Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks[1826] and, as noted above, concluded that Witness SJ was one of several witnesses who knew her before the relevant events.[1827]

802. Nyiramasuhuko argues that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to have found beyond reasonable doubt that Witness SJ knew her and her family.[1828]

803. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to consider that the witness also identified her in court.[1829]

804. As submitted by both Nyiramasuhuko and the Prosecution in other parts of their submissions,[1830] a review of Witness SJ's evidence reveals that the witness did not identify Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks.[1831] The Trial Chamber therefore erred in finding that Witness SJ identified Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks and in relying on this to find that Nyiramasuhuko was present during these attacks. As developed in Section V.I.2(b)(iii)a.ii below, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber more generally erred in relying on Witness SJ's evidence related to the prefectoral [1825] For example, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness FAP testified that she was accompanied by 15 to 50 other Tutsi refugees and that Witness SS was unable to estimate the amount in the group. Compare Witness FAP, T. 11 March 2003 p. 41, T. 13 March 2003 p. 23 (closed session) with Witness SS, T. 4 March 2003 pp. 48, 49. Even assuming that Witnesses FAP and SS were part of the same group, it is not clear that they were in immediate physical proximity to each other. The Appeals Chamber also observes that both witnesses were cross-examined on the basis of whether they knew each other and denied that they did. The Appeals Chamber observes that there was no mention of Witness SJ identifying Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks in the summary of Witness SJ's testimony in the Trial Judgement and that the portions of Witness SJ's testimony referenced by the Trial Chamber in support of the statement that Witness SJ "testified that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe attacked the [Butare Prefecture Office]" during the Night of Three Attacks do not refer to Nyiramasuhuko's presence. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2225-2241, 2660, fn. 7442, referring to Witness SJ, T. 29 May 2002 pp. 55, 57, 59.

office.[1832] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to examine Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness SJ's prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko. The Appeals Chamber will discuss whether the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Witness SJ's evidence related to the prefectoral office has occasioned a miscarriage of justice after examining Nyiramasuhuko's remaining challenges to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence of other Prosecution witnesses about her presence at the prefectoral office.

(iii) Identification at the Butare Prefecture Office

805. The Trial Chamber relied on Witness TA's identification of Nyiramasuhuko during the Mid-May Attack.[1833] With respect to the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber stated that, "[i]n addition to Witnesses TK and QJ, Witnesses SS, QBQ, RE, FAP and SJ identified Nyiramasuhuko during this night of three attacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[1834] It also concluded that several witnesses had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity, including Witnesses TA, QJ, TK, RE, FAP, QY, and QBQ.[1835]

806. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting the testimonies of Witnesses TA, QJ, TK, RE, FAP, QY, and QBQ of having seen her at the prefectoral office.[1836] The Appeals Chamber will examine Nyiramasuhuko's contentions regarding each of these witnesses in turn.

a. Witness TA

807. The Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko was present and participated in the Mid-May Attack based primarily on Witness TA's evidence.[1837] As noted above, the Trial Chamber also mentioned Witness TA as one of several witnesses who had an adequate opportunity to observe [1832] See infra, para. 1657.

[1833] Trial Judgement, paras. 2628, 2629.
[1834] Trial Judgement, para. 2686. The Appeals Chamber does not exclude the possibility that the Trial Chamber may have intended to refer to Witness SU instead of Witness SJ in paragraph 2686 of the Trial Judgement in light of its discussion of Witness SU's evidence that Nyiramasuhuko was present on the Night of Three Attacks in its factual findings and the fact that Witness SJ did not in fact testify to seeing Nyiramasuhuko that night. See ibid., paras. 2251-2256, 2706, 2715, 2731, 2732, 2736, 2738. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko did not develop any argument other than those addressed in the prior sub-section on Witness SU's prior knowledge in support of her contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness SU's identification evidence in relation to the Night of Three Attacks. See supra, Section IV.F.2(c)(ii)a. Although expressly referring in her notice of appeal to paragraph 2758 of the Trial Judgement, in which the Trial Chamber discussed Witness SU's identification of Nyiramasuhuko during the First Half of June Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko also did not develop any argument challenging the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness SU's identification evidence as it relates to the First Half of June Attacks in her appeal brief. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber declines to examine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness SU's identification of Nyiramasuhuko at the Butare Prefecture Office.

Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity when discussing the Night of Three Attacks.[1838]

808. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Witness TA's identification of her reliable during the Mid-May Attack on the basis that she described how she was dressed and heard her ordering the Interahamwe to attack people.[1839] Nyiramasuhuko points out that Witness TA had no prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko, only saw her for the first time for a few minutes on an afternoon prior to the attack, and that her sighting of Nyiramasuhuko during the Mid-May Attack occurred at night in difficult conditions.[1840] As part of her challenges regarding the Trial Chamber's findings on the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness TA had an adequate opportunity to observe her from close proximity at the prefectoral office as it failed to discuss the details of how the witness observed her and the context in which the observations were made.[1841]

809. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber provided a reasoned opinion as to why it considered Witness TA's identification of Nyiramasuhuko during the Mid-May Attack reliable and argues that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that this was unreasonable.[1842] It adds that Nyiramasuhuko's contentions regarding her identification by Witness TA during the Night of Three Attacks are irrelevant as Witness TA did not testify to seeing her on the Night of Three Attacks.[1843]

810. The Trial Chamber expressly found Witness TA's identification of Nyiramasuhuko during the Mid-May Attack reliable. It stated:

> Witness TA described Nyiramasuhuko's clothing and quoted her as ordering the Interahamwe to attack certain individuals. Therefore, Witness TA was close enough to hear what Nyiramasuhuko was saying and identified her as the mother of Shalom. For these reasons, the Chamber finds this identification to be reliable.[1844]

811. The Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness TA's ability to describe Nyiramasuhuko's clothing and the fact that she could hear her

[1837] Trial Judgement, para. 2644.
[1838] Trial Judgement, para. 2698.
[1839] Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, para. 10.15. See also AT. 14 April 2015 p. 20. Nyiramasuhuko appears to argue that Witness TA's description of Nyiramasuhuko's clothing during the Mid-May Attack contradicts her prior statement in which she described Nyiramasuhuko as "dressed like an ordinary women also in [k]itenge". However, Witness TA also described Nyiramasuhuko as wearing a kitenge during the Mid-May Attack in her testimony. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's argument on the basis that she fails to identify any contradiction between the witness's prior statement and her testimony. See Nyiramasuhuko Notice of Appeal, fn. 20; Exhibit D6B (Witness TA's Statement), p. 3; Witness TA, T. 25 October 2001 p. 40.

specific orders to the Interahamwe during the Mid-May Attack as probative of the reliability of her testimony that she saw Nyiramasuhuko from close proximity. This reflects the Trial Chamber's careful consideration of Witness TA's identification of Nyiramasuhuko in light of the circumstances of the attack and the witness's lack of prior knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko before the events at the prefectoral office. Nyiramasuhuko's argument that Witness TA had no prior knowledge of her and only saw her for the first time for a few minutes on an afternoon prior to the Mid-May Attack fails to appreciate that the Trial Chamber accepted the witness's testimony that she learned of the familial relationship between Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali from other refugees at the prefectoral office and that she was able to identify Nyiramasuhuko as the Minister of Women's Affairs.[1845] Nyiramasuhuko also overlooks Witness TA's testimony, as recalled by the Trial Chamber, that there was moonlight behind the prefectoral office during several of the attacks at the prefectoral office and that there was occasionally public lighting from across the street.[1846] Nyiramasuhuko appears to merely disagree with the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness TA's identification evidence and fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting it.

812. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not conclude that Witness TA saw Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks. Rather, in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement related to those attacks it only mentioned Witness TA as a witness who had an opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1847] As discussed above, the Trial Chamber addressed the details and context of how Witness TA observed Nyiramasuhuko in its factual findings on the Mid-May Attack.[1848]

813. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TA's identification of Nyiramasuhuko during the Mid-May Attack, or in stating that Witness TA had an adequate opportunity to identify Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office.

[1845] Trial Judgement, paras. 2190, 2633.

[1848] Trial Judgement, para. 2629.

b. Witness QJ

814. The Trial Chamber found that Witness QJ identified Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and that he had an adequate opportunity to observe her at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1849]

815. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber failed to discuss and assess the relevant circumstances in which Witness QJ identified her at the prefectoral office and that it erred in concluding that the witness had an adequate opportunity to identify her.[1850] She contends that the Trial Chamber could not have reasonably relied on the identification evidence of Witness QJ, who only saw her on one occasion at the prefectoral office and provided an insufficiently detailed and generic physical description of her.[1851]

816. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to show that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QJ's identification evidence.[1852]

817. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Judgement does not set out how the Trial Chamber concluded that Witness QJ identified Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and how the witness had an adequate opportunity to observe her at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1853] The Appeals Chamber has carefully reviewed the relevant portions of Witness QJ's testimony and observes that the witness only referred to one encounter with Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and that nothing in his testimony suggests that he had met her prior to that night.[1854]

818. Witness QJ's testimony, however, reveals that the incident with Nyiramasuhuko that he recounted occurred when there was light.[1855] Witness QJ also provided evidence on the colour of the Toyota pickup truck and, although he could not describe what she was wearing, gave a physical description of Nyiramasuhuko.[1856] While the witness did not indicate at trial the distance between him and Nyiramasuhuko,[1857] it transpires from his testimony that he was close enough to describe

[1851] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 788, 789, 794.
[1852] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 484. The Prosecution emphasises that Witness QJ was close to Nyiramasuhuko when Mbasha's wife was abducted during the Night of Three Attacks and that Nyiramasuhuko ignores that, in addition to a physical description of her, Witness QJ corroborated Witness TK's account that Nyiramasuhuko arrived at the prefectoral office in a pickup with Interahamwe. See ibid., paras. 482, 484.
[1853] The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraphs 2686 and 2698 of the Trial Judgement do not refer to evidence supporting the conclusions reached in these paragraphs.

what Mbasha's wife was wearing and estimate the distance between Nyiramasuhuko and the veranda where Mbasha's wife and children were sleeping.[1858] The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber found that Witness QJ's identification of Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks was corroborated by Witnesses TK, SS, QBQ, RE, FAP, and SU.[1859] The Trial Chamber also emphasised that Witness QJ's account was similar to that of Witness TK regarding the abduction of Mbasha's wife during this particular night.[1860]

819. The Appeals Chamber considers that, as part of its reasoned opinion, the Trial Chamber should have articulated the basis on which it was satisfied that the witness was able to identify Nyiramasuhuko and that, in failing to do so, the Trial Chamber committed an error.[1861] However, in light of the details provided by Witness QJ in his testimony and the corroborative evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, including the similarity of the accounts of Witnesses TK and QJ regarding the abduction of Mbasha's wife, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QJ's identification of Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that this error has not invalidated the Trial Chamber's decision to rely on Witness QJ in support of its finding that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the Night of Three Attacks and therefore dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions in this respect.

c. Witness TK

820. The Trial Chamber found that Witness TK identified Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and that the witness had an adequate opportunity to observe her at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1862] It noted that Witness TK did not know Nyiramasuhuko's surname, but that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were identified to her as mother and son and that other women at the prefectoral office had pointed out Nyiramasuhuko to Witness TK during a daytime meeting and referred to her by the name "Pauline".[1863] It also accepted the witness's explanation as to why she had not mentioned Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the prefectoral office in her prior statement.[1864]

821. Nyiramasuhuko asserts that the Trial Chamber failed to discuss and assess the relevant circumstances in which Witness TK identified her at the prefectoral office and erred in concluding that the witness had an adequate opportunity to identify her there.[1865] She also argues that the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TK's evidence was an error given the fact that the witness had no prior knowledge of her and that the identification was based solely on unidentified refugees having stated that the woman present was "Pauline".[1866] She submits that the witness was unable to provide a sufficiently precise description of her and highlights that the only identification of her in the witness's prior statement relates to having seen her during the day in late June 1994.[1867] In addition, Nyiramasuhuko contends that, when assessing the general reliability of Witness TK's identification evidence, the Trial Chamber failed to consider that Witness TK's identification of Kanyabashi was unbelievable in light of the witness's concession in her prior statement that she would not be able to identify him.[1868]

822. The Prosecution responds that, in addition to the physical description she provided, Witness TK gave other details of Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the prefectoral office.[1869] It also points to the fact that the Trial Chamber reviewed and discussed the inconsistencies between Witness TK's testimony and her prior statements and found her explanations reasonable.[1870] The Prosecution argues that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate how Witness TK's evidence about the identification of Kanyabashi is relevant to the witness's identification of Nyiramasuhuko.[1871]

823. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber reviewed and found credible Witness TK's direct evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in several specific incidents that occurred during the Night of Three Attacks.[1872] As mentioned above, the Trial Chamber discussed in detail how Witness TK came to know who Nyiramasuhuko was. Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the witness had an adequate opportunity to observe her from close proximity, which is supported by a comprehensive reading of the witness's evidence.[1873]

824. Furthermore, while the witness's ability to identify Nyiramasuhuko was based on information provided by unidentified women she met at the prefectoral office who referred to

Nyiramasuhuko as "Pauline",[1874] the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber has the discretion to consider cautiously and rely on hearsay evidence.[1875] In this instance, not only was Nyiramasuhuko identified to Witness TK by her first name, but also as Ntahobali's mother.[1876] Moreover, having reviewed Witness TK's evidence describing Nyiramasuhuko, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the description the witness provided was so general as to cast doubt on the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TK's identification of Nyiramasuhuko.[1877] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness TK's identification of Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the Night of Three Attacks was corroborated by other evidence found credible by the Trial Chamber.[1878]

825. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber should have disregarded Witness TK's evidence in light of the witness's failure to identify Nyiramasuhuko as participating in this attack in her prior statement, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to accept a witness's testimony, notwithstanding inconsistencies between the testimony and the witness's previous statements, as it is for the trial chamber to determine whether an alleged inconsistency is sufficient to cast doubt on the witness's evidence.[1879] In this instance, the Trial Chamber considered that Witness TK did not mention Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the prefectoral office in her prior statement and accepted her explanation for the omission.[1880] Nyiramasuhuko simply repeats arguments she raised at trial without demonstrating how the Trial Chamber erred.[1881]

826. Finally, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko does not show the relevance of any purported inconsistencies between Witness TK's testimony and her previous statement concerning her identification of Kanyabashi and how it renders her identification of Nyiramasuhuko unreliable.[1882] The Appeals Chamber finds that this alleged inconsistency, which does not concern

[1878] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko was present at the Butare Prefecture Office on the Night of Three Attacks based on the testimonies of Witnesses SJ, SU, QY, QJ, TK, SS, QBQ, RE, and FAP. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2686, 2732, 2736, 2738. In other sub-sections above and below, the Appeals Chamber has found no error with respect to the assessment of the identification evidence of Witnesses SU, TK, SS, QBQ, and FAP and determined that the errors with respect to Witnesses QJ and RE have not invalidated the decision or occasioned a miscarriage of justice. See supra, Sections IV.F.2(c)(ii)a, IV.F.2(c)(ii)c, IV.F.2(c)(iii)b, infra, Sections IV.F.2(c)(iii)d, IV.F.2(c)(iii)e, IV.F.2(c)(iii)g. the identification of Nyiramasuhuko by Witness TK, is insufficient to undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's acceptance of Witness TK's identification evidence of Nyiramasuhuko.

827. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TK's identification of her on the Night of Three Attacks.

d. Witness RE

828. The Trial Chamber found that Witness RE identified Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and that she had an adequate opportunity to observe her at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1883] Specifically, the Trial Chamber recalled that, although Witness RE did not see Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks, the witness testified that Ntahobali and Interahamwe came in a vehicle and heard Ntahobali promise to protect Mbasha's wife, saying he would take her to "Pauline who was in the vehicle".[1884] On this basis, the Trial Chamber stated that "Witness RE surmised that Nyiramasuhuko was at the [prefectoral office]".[1885] It concluded that this evidence was hearsay and provided "additional support to the identification of Nyiramasuhuko" at the prefectoral office.[1886] The Trial Chamber further stated:

> Witness RE's testimony also [lends] support to Witnesses SS'[s] and QBQ's testimon[ies] that Nyiramasuhuko was giving orders to rape in this time period. She testified that Nyiramasuhuko came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] with President Sindikubwabo one day. During this visit, Nyiramasuhuko said, the people should be killed and the young girls among them raped. Although given at a different time than the [Night of Three Attacks], this evidence shows a level of planning and intent on Nyiramasuhuko's part.[1887]

829. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness RE had an adequate opportunity to identify her at the prefectoral office as it failed to discuss the details as to how Witness RE observed her and the context in which the observations were made.[1888] She emphasises that Witness RE did not know her before 1994 and testified to have seen her at the prefectoral office only on one occasion during a visit with President Sindikubwabo.[1889] Nyiramasuhuko argues that this evidence provides an insufficient basis to support the identification, given the witness's inability to describe Sindikubwabo.[1890] She also contends that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness RE's identification evidence, since she did not see her during the Night of Three Attacks and only inferred that she was present based on remarks made by Ntahobali.[1891] Furthermore, she argues that the Trial Chamber should have exercised extreme caution with respect to Witness RE's identification evidence generally, because, when identifying Ntahobali in court – a person who the witness purportedly saw on three occasions at the prefectoral office – she singled out Nteziryayo, who is nearly 25 years older than Ntahobali.[1892]

830. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed Witness RE's evidence and that the in-court identification of Ntahobali is irrelevant to the assessment of the witness's identification of Nyiramasuhuko.[1893]

831. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess how Witness RE observed her and the context in which the observations were made, the Appeals Chamber underlines that the Trial Chamber recalled and relied on Witness RE's testimony of having seen Nyiramasuhuko on another occasion when she came to the prefectoral office with Sindikubwabo.[1894] However, the Appeals Chamber notes that, elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber rejected Witness RE's evidence in this respect, finding that her testimony was not sufficient to establish, inter alia, that Nyiramasuhuko met with Sindikubwabo at the prefectoral office.[1895] The Appeals Chamber finds that these findings are irreconcilable and that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness RE's testimony was insufficient to establish that Nyiramasuhuko met with Sindikubwabo at the prefectoral office, while relying on the exact same part of her testimony to conclude that she had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1896] That being said, the Appeals Chamber considers that this error is immaterial since Witness RE testified that she did not see Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks but surmised that she was at the prefectoral office from Ntahobali's words.[1897]

832. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness RE's evidence because she did not see Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber repeats that the Trial Chamber has the discretion to consider cautiously and rely on hearsay evidence.[1898] In the present case, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber cautiously assessed Witness RE's hearsay evidence[1899] and relied on it only as corroborative of the evidence of several other witnesses who identified Nyiramasuhuko as being present during this night.[1900] Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment.

833. As for Nyiramasuhuko's contention that Witness RE's evidence is generally unreliable in light of her in-court misidentification of Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is within a trial chamber's discretion as the primary trier of fact to evaluate the credibility of separate portions of a witness's testimony differently if the circumstances of the case so require.[1901] In this instance, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness RE mistook Nteziryayo for Ntahobali, but concluded that it did not consider this misidentification to be probative when assessing evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks.[1902] Nyiramasuhuko, who simply repeats an argument she raised at trial,[1903] fails to show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that this misidentification of Ntahobali was not probative or that the Trial Chamber exercised insufficient caution in relation to the witness's identification of Nyiramasuhuko.

834. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness RE had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity, but that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice in relation to the identification of Nyiramasuhuko by Witness RE on the Night of Three Attacks. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness RE's evidence as providing additional support to identification evidence placing Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office on the Night of Three Attacks.

e. Witness FAP

835. The Trial Chamber found that Witness FAP identified Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and that she had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1904] In particular, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness FAP's evidence that, during the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko stood by the vehicle and told the Interahamwe to take the young girls and the women who were not old, and to rape and kill them because they had refused to marry Hutus.[1905] It further noted Witness FAP's evidence that she described Nyiramasuhuko as wearing a military uniform and that Witness FAP, who was lying on the ground, "could only see Nyiramasuhuko's top."[1906]

836. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness FAP had an adequate opportunity to identify her at the prefectoral office as it failed to discuss the details as to how Witness FAP observed her and the context in which the observations were made.[1907]

837. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness FAP to find that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the Night of Three Attacks.[1908] It argues that Witness FAP's testimony corroborates other evidence that Nyiramasuhuko arrived in a pickup truck with Interahamwe.[1909]

838. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber did not discuss how Witness FAP observed her and the context in which the observations were made fails to appreciate that the Trial Chamber detailed these circumstances elsewhere in the Trial Judgement,[1910] noting in particular Witness FAP's evidence that Nyiramasuhuko wore a military uniform and that the witness was lying on the ground and thus "could only see Nyiramasuhuko's top."[1911] Nyiramasuhuko does not challenge the reasonableness of these findings and ignores that the Trial Chamber found that the evidence of Witness FAP was corroborated by Witness QBQ as to Nyiramasuhuko's conduct at the prefectoral office on that evening, providing further support for Witness FAP's identification of her.[1912] The Trial Chamber also emphasised that several witnesses identified Nyiramasuhuko wearing a military shirt and kitenge cloth skirt or just a military shirt.[1913] This too is consistent with Witness FAP's testimony.[1914]

839. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber observes that, although Witness FAP testified that she did not know Nyiramasuhuko prior to this event,[1915] she also testified that she knew Nyiramasuhuko's home and the name of her husband,[1916] that she heard other refugees refer to the woman who arrived in the vehicle as "Pauline" and that she was accompanied by her son "Shalom",[1917] and that she was aware of Nyiramasuhuko's position as the Minister of Family Affairs.[1918] Witness FAP further testified that she observed Nyiramasuhuko from about 10 metres away and on three occasions that evening.[1919] Nyiramasuhuko does not discuss these aspects of Witness FAP's evidence.

840. The Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness FAP's identification evidence.

f. Witness QY

841. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement related to the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QY had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1920]

842. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in reaching this finding, as it failed to discuss the details as to how Witness QY observed her and the context in which the observations were made.[1921] Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QY's identification evidence, since Witness QY refers to her height to describe the person Witness QY saw at the prefectoral office.[1922] She contends that the Trial Chamber failed to assess the circumstances in which Witness QY identified her, since Witness QY stated that nobody could look at "the accused persons" closely.[1923]

843. The Prosecution responds that Witness QY's reference that she could not look at the accused misstates the evidence as it only refers to Kanyabashi and not Nyiramasuhuko.[1924]

844. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness QY had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity when assessing her involvement in the Night of Three Attacks is not supported by any reference to the record.[1925] Nothing in the Trial Chamber's summary of Witness QY's evidence reflects that the witness saw Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks.[1926]

[1925] See Trial Judgement, para. 2698.
[1926] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2319-2327.

845. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement related to attacks on the prefectoral office around the end of April or early May 1994, the Trial Chamber questioned Witness QY's ability to identify Nyiramasuhuko.[1927] It added that Witness QY's identification of Nyiramasuhuko on certain nights of the events could not be considered reliable given her uncertainty as to when Nyiramasuhuko was present.[1928] The Trial Chamber unequivocally rejected Witness QY's evidence implicating Nyiramasuhuko in attacks at the prefectoral office "between late April or early May 1994" due to discrepancies in her testimony, the unreliable nature of her identification evidence, and her admission that she had lied to the Trial Chamber about whether she knew Witnesses QBQ and SJ.[1929]

846. The conclusions of the Trial Chamber in these distinct sections of the Trial Judgement are irreconcilable and the Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QY's evidence to establish Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the Night of Three Attacks given the concerns related to her credibility highlighted by the Trial Chamber in relation to other attacks at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber will discuss whether this error has occasioned a miscarriage of justice in its conclusion to the present sub-section.

g. Witness QBQ

847. The Trial Chamber found that Witness QBQ identified Nyiramasuhuko on the Night of Three Attacks and that she had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office from close proximity.[1930] In particular, it concluded that Witness QBQ identified Nyiramasuhuko when she arrived aboard a white Toyota pickup truck at the prefectoral office and was about four and a half metres away from her.[1931] The Trial Chamber added that "[i]t was not so dark as to prevent Witness QBQ from seeing Nyiramasuhuko's face. Night had not yet fallen."[1932]

848. The Trial Chamber also found that Witness QBQ had an opportunity to identify Nyiramasuhuko from close proximity as she previously had seen Nyiramasuhuko arrive on foot at [1932] Trial Judgement, para. 2691 (internal references omitted). The Trial Chamber further stated that Witness QBQ corroborated Witness SS's observation that Nyiramasuhuko stood next to the vehicle and gave orders to the Interahamwe to "rape the women and the girls and kill the rest." See ibid., para. 2693. The Trial Chamber added that Witness QBQ testified that upon hearing Nyiramasuhuko's order, the Interahamwe immediately attacked the people on the veranda, that many women were raped while Nyiramasuhuko was still on the spot, and that the Interahamwe, Nyiramasuhuko, and Ntahobali subsequently loaded the Tutsi refugees onto the vehicle and took them to be killed. See ibid., para. 2699.

the prefectoral office in the morning, accompanied by Prefect Nsabimana, and that she was two and a half metres away from Nyiramasuhuko on this occasion.[1933]

849. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QBQ had an adequate opportunity to identify her at the prefectoral office as it failed to discuss the details of how she observed her and the context in which the observations were made.[1934] Nyiramasuhuko avers that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QBQ's evidence of having seen her during the day with Nsabimana prior to the attack in light of the witness's prior statement, which does not refer to this meeting and indicates that she had only seen her at night.[1935] Likewise, she highlights that Witness QBQ's evidence that other individuals had identified her lacks reliability as the sources of these identifications are unknown.[1936] Nyiramasuhuko also argues that Witness QBQ's explanation as to why she could not describe her while testifying was unbelievable in light of the fact that she allegedly saw her on four occasions, including twice during the night and while she was two and a half metres from her.[1937]

850. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber duly assessed Witness QBQ's testimony in light of her inability to identify Nyiramasuhuko in court.[1938] It adds that Witness QBQ provided other corroborative details of Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the Night of Three Attacks.[1939]

851. The Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion for its conclusion that Witness QBQ had an adequate opportunity to identify her at the prefectoral office merely refers to paragraph 2698 of the Trial Judgement and fails to appreciate that the Trial Chamber provided a more detailed discussion of Witness QBQ's identification of Nyiramasuhuko earlier in the same section of the Trial Judgement.[1940] This argument is therefore without merit.

852. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QBQ's evidence of having seen Nyiramasuhuko during the day, in light of the fact that in her prior statement she had only referred to seeing Nyiramasuhuko at night, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that it is for the trial chamber to determine whether an alleged inconsistency between a witness's testimony and prior statement is sufficient to cast doubt on the evidence of the witness concerned.[1941] In the present instance, the Trial Chamber accepted Witness QBQ's testimony that, three days after her arrival at the prefectoral office, she had seen Nyiramasuhuko arrive on foot in the morning accompanied by Prefect Nsabimana.[1942] The Trial Chamber did not address the fact that during cross-examination, Witness QBQ was asked why there was no mention of this first encounter during the day in her prior statement, to which she answered that "[q]uite probably the investigators did not correctly take note of what I stated".[1943] However, it is well-established jurisprudence that a trial chamber does not need to set out in detail why it accepted or rejected a particular testimony.[1944] In this case, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber ignored Witness QBQ's failure to mention the first encounter in her prior statement or that the inconsistency between Witness QBQ's testimony and her prior statement prevented a reasonable trier of fact from relying on this aspect of Witness QBQ's testimony.[1945]

853. Regarding Nyiramasuhuko's argument that Witness QBQ's identification evidence is unreliable because the witness did not know Nyiramasuhuko and those who identified Nyiramasuhuko to the witness were unknown,[1946] the Appeals Chamber repeats that trial chambers have the discretion to consider cautiously and rely on hearsay evidence.[1947] In summarising Witness QBQ's testimony, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that people at the prefectoral office identified Nyiramasuhuko for her.[1948] This shows that the Trial Chamber was aware of the hearsay nature of Witness QBQ's identification evidence.[1949] Moreover, in light of the Trial Chamber's finding that Nyiramasuhuko was widely known as the Minister in charge of Women's Affairs and therefore would likely be recognisable,[1950] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber exercised sufficient caution in assessing this aspect of Witness QBQ's evidence and that it was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to have relied on it.[1951]

854. Finally, Witness QBQ's testimony reflects that when asked while testifying whether she could recognise Nyiramasuhuko today, she stated that "[i]t was a very long time ago, I don't think [1945] The Appeals Chamber considers Nyiramasuhuko's argument concerning inconsistent findings made by the Trial Chamber with respect to the assessment of Witness QBQ's evidence as to the timing of the meeting between Nsabimana and Nyiramasuhuko and the timing of the Night of Three Attacks in Section IV.F.2(e)(i) below.

I will be in a position to recognise her. You can observe that I, myself, have changed from what I was in 1994."[1952] The Appeals Chamber notes that, although the Trial Chamber did not expressly address this issue when assessing the reliability of Witness QBQ's evidence, it noted in the summary of Witness QBQ's evidence that she was not in a position to identify Nyiramasuhuko since the event took place a long time ago.[1953] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Nyiramasuhuko's argument that Witness QBQ's statement that she was no longer in a position to identify Nyiramasuhuko renders her evidence on her identification of Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office unbelievable.[1954]

855. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to show any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QBQ's identification evidence related to the Night of Three Attacks.[1955]

(iv) Conclusion

856. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the testimonies of Witnesses SJ and QY to establish that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the Night of Three Attacks and in finding that Witness RE had an adequate opportunity to observe Nyiramasuhuko from close range. However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that these errors have not occasioned a miscarriage of justice in light of the direct and corroborative evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, QJ, TK, FAP, and QBQ of Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks, as well as Witness RE's indirect yet corroborative evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's presence that supports the firsthand accounts. The Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's remaining arguments regarding the assessment of the identification evidence.

857. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence established her presence during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office beyond reasonable doubt.

[1955] In reaching this finding, the Appeals Chamber has also considered its finding that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QBQ's evidence as to when she saw Nyiramasuhuko with Nsabimana during the day. See infra, Section IV.F.2.(e)(i).

(d) Mid-May Attack

858. The Trial Chamber, relying principally on the testimony of Witness TA, found that during the Mid-May Attack, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and about 10 Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office aboard a camouflage pickup truck.[1956] It concluded that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup truck and that the pickup truck left the prefectoral office, taking the Tutsi refugees forced on board the vehicle, some of whom were forced to undress, to be killed at other locations.[1957] The Trial Chamber convicted her for ordering the killing of the numerous Tutsis forced to board the pickup truck and took into account her superior responsibility for killings committed by Interahamwe based on her orders in sentencing.[1958]

859. The Trial Chamber also determined that, during the Mid-May Attack, Ntahobali and about eight other Interahamwe raped Witness TA, and that some of the Interahamwe raped two other Tutsi women.[1959] The Trial Chamber found that there was no evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's direct involvement in ordering rapes on this occasion, but held that "Nyiramasuhuko, by her presence and position of authority, [was] guilty of aiding and abetting the rapes at the [Butare Prefecture Office."[1960] However, as discussed in Section IV.F.1(b) above, the Trial Chamber did not convict Nyiramasuhuko on the basis of any of the rapes perpetrated during the Mid-May Attack and only relied on this finding as evidence of her mens rea.

860. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack.[1961] In support of her contention, she argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably placed the attack in mid-May 1994 despite Witness TA's vague recollection that it occurred in "May" and her emphasis that she could not remember months or days.[1962] Nyiramasuhuko also appears to argue that the Trial Chamber should have addressed Witness TA's prior statement that Nyiramasuhuko was not with Ntahobali on the first night when Ntahobali allegedly raped her, which was the Mid-May Attack, and that the witness omitted to mention in the same statement that she saw Nyiramasuhuko at 3.00 p.m. on the afternoon prior to the attack.[1963]

She additionally asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding without reasonable justification that the evidence of Defence Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE that Witness TA was at her uncle's house as opposed to the prefectoral office during the time of the Mid-May Attack did not undermine Witness TA's credibility.[1964]

861. In Nyiramasuhuko's view, the Trial Chamber also erred in finding that Witness SD corroborated Witnesses QY's and TA's evidence regarding her presence during attacks conducted at night.[1965] She contends that no reasonable trier of fact would have relied on Witness TA's testimony without corroboration, particularly since it was contradicted by Witnesses QBP, RE, and QBQ who testified that they were present at the prefectoral office from April 1994 but witnessed only one attack involving Nyiramasuhuko, which the Trial Chamber determined was the Night of Three Attacks,[1966] and by Witnesses SJ and SD who were also there but did not testify that Nyiramasuhuko was ever present at night.[1967]

862. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably relied on Witness TA's uncorroborated testimony to find that Nyiramasuhuko participated in the Mid-May Attack at the prefectoral office.[1968] It argues that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the attack took place in mid-May 1994 based on Witness TA's testimony and in accepting Witness TA's explanation that her prior statement was wrongly recorded.[1969] It further responds that the testimonies of Witnesses QBP, RE, QBQ, SD, and SJ were irrelevant to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness TA's evidence in relation to the Mid-May Attack because they were not at the prefectoral office during the attack and that, even if they had been there, it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to prefer Witness TA's evidence.[1970]

863. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the Trial Chamber acted outside its discretion in failing to provide a reasoned opinion as to why it preferred Witness TA's evidence over that of Witnesses QBP, RE, QBQ, SD, and SJ, particularly since Witness TA was the only witness to testify about the Mid-May Attack and her evidence should have been treated with caution.[1971]

[1970] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 630-632. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution stated during the appeals hearing that it did not think that the witnesses moved on the same day from the prefectoral office to the EER. See AT. 16 April 2015 p. 14.
[1971] Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, paras. 291, 299.

She argues that the Prosecution's assertion that Witnesses RE, SD, SJ, and QBP were not at the prefectoral office at the time is mistaken in light of their evidence,[1972] in particular Witness QBP's testimony that she was always with Witness TA at the prefectoral office and at the EER and Witness RE's testimony that she was with Witness SJ between April and July 1994.[1973] In addition, Nyiramasuhuko asserts that the Trial Chamber found that the refugees were always together at either the prefectoral office or the EER and that it was therefore not possible that Witness TA was at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack while the other refugees were at the EER.[1974] She also points out that Witness TA testified that she was first at the EER with the other refugees from the prefectoral office before being transferred to the prefectoral office where she stayed for one and a half months.[1975] In further support of her contentions, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber should have explained how it reconciled its finding that the Mid-May Attack occurred with its finding that the refugees from the prefectoral office were at the EER between 15-20 May 1994 and the end of May 1994.[1976]

864. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the relevant attack occurred in mid-May 1994 based on Witness TA's testimony that it took place "neither at the beginning nor at the end of that month".[1977] Witness TA consistently testified that she had difficulties remembering the days on which events at the prefectoral office occurred, including the date of Nyiramasuhuko's visit to the prefectoral office during the afternoon.[1978] She situated the attack in this time period when asked to clarify its date following her acknowledgement that she did not know on which specific date in May it occurred.[1979] Although Witness TA testified that "no one could remember months or days", this was in response to questions posed to her during cross-examination as to when she first saw the Prefect at the prefectoral office, after she conceded to being unable to remember in which month this happened.[1980] Given her assertion that the Mid-May Attack occurred in May, at neither the beginning nor the end of the month, the Trial Chamber's finding is therefore consistent with, and accurately reflects, Witness TA's testimony.

865. Regarding Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in omitting to consider inconsistencies between Witness TA's prior statement and testimony, the Appeals Chamber observes that, unlike her testimony, Witness TA's prior statement reflects that she stated that Nyiramasuhuko "was not with [Ntahobali] this night" of the Mid-May Attack and contains no reference to the witness seeing Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office at 3.00 p.m. on the day of that attack.[1981] When challenged with these inconsistencies, the witness affirmed her testimony, suggesting that the information in her prior statement was improperly recorded or less important than her testimony.[1982]

866. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to accept a witness's testimony, notwithstanding inconsistencies between it and the witness's previous statements,[1983] and the fact that a trial chamber does not address or mention alleged discrepancies does not necessarily mean that it did not consider them.[1984] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to note that Witness TA's prior statement indicated that Nyiramasuhuko was not with Ntahobali during the Mid-May Attack and explain why this inconsistency did not impact the credibility of her testimony. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in light of Witness TA's repeated affirmations of the accuracy of her testimony as well as her repeated explanations that her statement was not a full and accurate recording of the information she provided to investigators,[1985] it was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider that this inconsistency did not undermine the credibility of Witness TA's detailed account of Nyiramasuhuko's presence and participation in the Mid-May Attack.

867. The Appeals Chamber similarly considers that the Trial Chamber was under no obligation to expressly discuss the absence of any mention in Witness TA's prior statement that she saw Nyiramasuhuko around 3.00 p.m. on the day of the Mid-May Attack. The statement is brief when compared to her testimony. The Appeals Chamber considers that this element of Witness TA's testimony was peripheral to the core features of her evidence concerning the attack, and it is reasonable that more details would arise over the course of the witness's examination in court.

868. In its assessment of Witness TA's testimony relating to the Mid-May Attack, the Trial Chamber considered and concluded, for several reasons, that the evidence of Witnesses WUNHE and WUNJN placing Witness TA at her uncle's home rather than the Butare Prefecture Office when the Mid-May Attack occurred did not undermine her credibility.[1986] Nyiramasuhuko does not advance any argument to show that the Trial Chamber's conclusion was insufficiently reasoned or unreasonable. The Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's unsubstantiated contention without further consideration.

869. As for Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness SD corroborated Witnesses QY's and TA's testimonies that Nyiramasuhuko was present at the prefectoral office during attacks conducted at night, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness SD's evidence in reaching its findings on the Mid-May Attack or Nyiramasuhuko's involvement in attacks, but in relation to the attacks which occurred seven to 11 days after the Mid-May Attack for which Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted.[1987] Likewise, the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QY's testimony in support of its findings on the Mid-May Attack, but only considered it with respect to the Night of Three Attacks and as to attacks prior to the Mid-May Attack where it rejected her evidence implicating Nyiramasuhuko.[1988] The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's arguments as baseless.

870. The Appeals Chamber is also unconvinced that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness TA's uncorroborated testimony regarding the Mid-May Attack in light of the evidence of Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, and SJ. Nyiramasuhuko fails to identify any material contradiction between the fact that these witnesses did not specifically mention the Mid-May Attack and Witness TA's detailed account of the attack. Nyiramasuhuko refers to nothing in their testimonies reflecting that they testified that Nyiramasuhuko did not come to the prefectoral office prior to the Night of Three Attacks or the first half of June 1994 or denied that attacks other than those they specifically described also took place. Nyiramasuhuko merely refers to excerpts of Witnesses RE's and QBQ's testimonies describing the Night of Three Attacks,[1989] Witness QBP's [1987] Trial Judgement, paras. 2650, 2651. [1988] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2621-2626, 2698, 2713. The Appeals Chamber notes that it has concluded above that the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QY's evidence identifying Nyiramasuhuko as being at the prefectoral office on the Night of Three Attacks was erroneous but that this error had not occasioned a miscarriage of justice in light of corroborative evidence that she was there during this night. See supra, para. 856.

[1989] Nyiramasuhuko refers to: (i) aspects of Witness RE's testimony reflecting that she saw Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks and with President Sindikubwabo between the return of the refugees from Nyange and their transportation to Rango Forest; and (ii) Witness QBQ's testimony recounting the abduction and escape of Semanyenzi See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 969, 971, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 2657, 2658, fns. 7436, 7437, referring in turn to Witness RE, T. 24 February 2003 pp. 9, 19, 21, T. 25 February 2003 pp. 3, 4, 39, T. 27 February 2003 p. 5, Witness QBQ, T. 3 February 2004 pp. 63, 70, 71.

testimony detailing an attack in the first half of June 1994,[1990] and the Trial Chamber's acknowledgements that these were the only attacks at the prefectoral office that these witnesses testified about.[1991] Similarly, Nyiramasuhuko only cites parts of Witnesses SJ's and SD's testimonies recounting the occasions on which they saw Nyiramasuhuko during the day,[1992] which Nyiramasuhuko implies reflects that she was not present at night. A review of the testimonies of Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, and SJ reveals that they merely described the occasions they personally saw Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office. Their testimonies, and presence at the prefectoral office, do not necessarily demonstrate that they were aware of all of the attacks that occurred there or all of the occasions when Nyiramasuhuko was present.[1993] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witnesses SD and RE testified that attacks at the prefectoral office occurred in addition to those that they specifically described in their testimonies.[1994]

871. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko does not reference anything in the evidence of Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, and SJ that demonstrates that they were present at the prefectoral office with Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack,[1995] particularly in light of: (i) the Trial Chamber's findings that refugees were moved from the prefectoral office to the EER between 15 and 20 May 1994, and returned around 31 May 1994;[1996] (ii) the emphasis that Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, and SJ placed on their inability to provide specific dates as to the time period they were at the prefectoral office;[1997] and (iii) the witnesses' recollections of being at the EER around the time period of the Mid-May Attack,[1998] reflecting that their presence at the prefectoral office was not constant during the time period in question.

[1995] In support of her contention that these witnesses were present at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack, Nyiramasuhuko refers to the following in paragraph 291 of her reply brief: Witness QBP, T. 24 October 2002 pp. 79-81 (testifying about her journey to the prefectoral office, EER, and back to the prefectoral office but not referring to any dates); Witness QBQ, T. 3 February 2004 pp. 6, 7 (testifying that she went to the prefectoral office towards the end of April 1994); Witness SD, T. 17 March 2003 pp. 6-8, and 36, 37 (closed session) (testifying that, after 6 April 1994, she went to Runyinya Commune for three days, then to the Butare University Hospital for one week, then to the prefectoral office for one week, then to the EER for one week, and then back to the prefectoral office, and that she spent the whole of April and probably May at the prefectoral office); Witness SJ, T. 29 May 2002 pp. 112, 113 (testifying that she went to the prefectoral office in April 1994).

872. Nyiramasuhuko's reliance on certain aspects of these witnesses' testimonies to assert that they were definitely at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack is without merit. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber expressly found that Witness RE arrived at the EER "sometime around mid-May 1994", and that Witness SJ's testimony corresponded to the same time period implying that she too was at the EER then.[1999] It further notes that Witness SJ testified that during the two weeks she was at the prefectoral office she went to the EER on three or four non-consecutive days but could not recall the month or dates of her visits there.[2000] The Trial Chamber also found that Witness QBQ provided corroborating evidence as to the torrential rain that the refugees from the prefectoral office sheltered from on the first night of their arrival at the EER.[2001] Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate any error in the reasoning of the Trial Chamber in this regard by referring to Witness RE's testimony that she and Witness SJ were "always together", because Witness RE herself testified that this was not the case.[2002] Nyiramasuhuko also fails to demonstrate that Witness QBP was necessarily at the prefectoral office during the time of the Mid-May Attack and over-states the witness's testimony that she was with Witness TA at the prefectoral office and the EER as her testimony does not reflect that they were continuously together at each location.[2003]

873. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber's finding that the refugees were always together precludes the possibility that Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SJ, and SD were not at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack to be without merit. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not make this statement as a finding but in its summary of Witness TA's evidence.[2004] Witness TA's testimony reflects that she arrived at the EER, where there were many refugees, and then moved to the prefectoral office with these refugees. She stated that the refugees "never stayed one group at the EER and one group at the [prefectoral office]" but that "they were all together".[2005] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, and SJ were present at the prefectoral office with Witness TA in mid-May 1994 and formed part of the group of refugees to which Witness TA refers. Nor does she demonstrate that, even if the witnesses had been a part of that group, their testimonies necessarily undermined the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's conclusion, based on Witness TA's evidence, that the Mid-May Attack occurred. The Appeals Chamber therefore sees no error in the Trial Chamber's findings.

874. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[2006] The Trial Chamber carried out a detailed assessment of Witness TA's evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack[2007] and Nyiramasuhuko fails to identify any contradiction between Witness TA's evidence and that of Witnesses QBP, QBQ, RE, SD and SJ that would have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from relying on her uncorroborated evidence.

875. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber should have explained how its finding that the displaced Tutsis who sought refuge at the Butare

[2003] Nyiramasuhuko argues that "Witness QBP testified that she was always with Witness TA at the [prefectoral office] and at EER". See Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 292. However, the excerpts of Witness QBP's testimony that Nyiramasuhuko highlights do not demonstrate that they were continually together. See Witness QBP, T. 29 October 2002 p. 47 (closed session) ("A. Prefecture Office were transferred to the EER between 15 and 20 May 1994 and stayed there until approximately 31 May 1994 reconciles with its findings as to the Mid-May Attack to be without merit. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber, relying on Nsabimana's testimony which it determined was corroborated by Witnesses RE, SX, Bararwandika, and HBI6, found that the Tutsis who sought refuge at the prefectoral office were transferred to the EER between 15 and 20 May 1994 and stayed there until approximately 31 May 1994 when they returned to the prefectoral office.[2008] Several other related findings of the Trial Chamber give the impression that, at a minimum, no refugees were intended to remain at the prefectoral office once they were ordered to go to the EER.[2009] Notwithstanding these considerations, the Trial Chamber concluded that "it is not disputed that there were a large number of refugees at the [Butare Prefecture Office] compound between April and June 1994."[2010]

876. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's findings are either categorical or necessarily in conflict. It bears noting that Witness TA could only provide estimates with respect to the timing of the events at the prefectoral office.[2011] While the Trial Chamber's conclusions reflect that refugees at the prefectoral office left once Nsabimana ordered them to go to the EER, its findings are not categorical that no refugees remained or arrived at the prefectoral office between the time refugees left for the EER and returned in significant numbers to the prefectoral office at the end of May 1994.[2012] Witnesses TK, SU, SS, and FAP all testified that they arrived at the prefectoral office towards the end of May 1994, and did not testify that they were transferred to the EER,[2013] reflecting that Tutsis arrived at the prefectoral office during this time period. In addition, evidence referred to by the Trial Chamber demonstrates that the prefectoral office and EER were in the immediate proximity of each other[2014] and that refugees moved back and forth between the two locations.[2015] In this context, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's conclusions about the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to the EER are contradictory with its findings concerning the Mid-May Attack.

877. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that, in her arguments addressed above, Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness TA's evidence pertaining to the Mid-May Attack.

(e) Night of Three Attacks

878. The Trial Chamber, relying on the testimonies of multiple witnesses, found that, around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on board a camouflaged pickup truck three times in one night.[2016] It determined that they abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare Prefecture to be killed.[2017] It found that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to commit these crimes, and determined that Ntahobali and the Interahamwe attacked women and children at the prefectoral office, assaulted them, and forced them onto the pickup truck.[2018] The Trial Chamber further concluded that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe and soldiers to rape Tutsi women and to kill other refugees and that she ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees because they were Tutsis and that Interahamwe beat, abused, and raped many Tutsi women.[2019] The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko for ordering Interahamwe to kill the refugees abducted during the Night of Three Attacks and as a superior for the rapes committed by Interahamwe upon her orders during that night.[2020]

879. The Trial Chamber identified several refugees assaulted during these attacks and specifically found that: (i) Ntahobali and the Interahamwe abducted Mbasha's wife and children; (ii) the Interahamwe, on the orders of Nyiramasuhuko, assaulted and killed a woman named Trifina at the prefectoral office; and (iii) an unknown woman and her children were assaulted at the prefectoral office during the attacks.[2021] Recalling its finding that she did not receive notice of the identity of Mbasha's wife and children or of Trifina, the Trial Chamber did not convict Nyiramasuhuko for these specific abductions and killings.[2022] Rather, the Trial Chamber used this as circumstantial evidence to support its findings on abductions and killings of other unnamed Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office.[2023]

880. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber conducted a "piecemeal, questionable and erroneous assessment of the evidence" when reaching conclusions about the Night of Three Attacks, disregarding significant contradictions and erroneously finding Prosecution evidence mutually corroborative.[2024] In particular, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to sufficiently consider differences within the Prosecution evidence as to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks as well as the number of attacks that occurred; (ii) failing to consider that Witnesses TA and SD did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks; (iii) its assessment of the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children and the unnamed woman and her children; (iv) its assessment of Nyiramasuhuko's presence and conduct during the attacks as well as her orders to commit rape; (v) its assessment of the attack on a woman named Trifina; and (vi) its evaluation of evidence concerning the locations where abducted refugees were killed and the abductions of Semanyenzi in particular.[2025] The Appeals Chamber will address these challenges in turn.

(i) Timing and Number of Attacks

881. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in disregarding "significant and critical contradictions" in the evidence of Witnesses SJ, QBQ, QBP, FAP, QJ, RE, SS, SU, and TK to find that they all testified about the same event – the Night of Three Attacks – which occurred during one night "in early June 1994".[2026] Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko submits that Witness QBQ testified that she arrived at the Butare Prefecture Office in April 1994 and that the Night of Three Attacks occurred on the evening of the day she saw Nsabimana and Nyiramasuhuko together at the prefectoral office, which was the "third day following her arrival".[2027] Nyiramasuhuko stresses that the Trial Chamber, relying on Witness QBQ's evidence, elsewhere determined that this meeting between Nsabimana and Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office occurred in April 1994.[2028] Consequently, Nyiramasuhuko argues that it was unreasonable to find that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks, which the Trial Chamber found to have occurred "in early June 1994", and that this error has led to a miscarriage of justice.[2029]

882. In the same vein, Nyiramasuhuko highlights that Witness SJ testified that the Night of Three Attacks occurred within two weeks following her arrival at the prefectoral office in April 1994.[2030] She argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably relied on other elements of Witness SJ's evidence

In this context, Nyiramasuhuko contends that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on similarities between the evidence of Witness QBQ and other witnesses concerning the survival of Semanyenzi to find that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks in early June 1994. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 983, 987, 1034.

that were consistent with evidence of witnesses who testified about the Night of Three Attacks in early June 1994 to find that Witness SJ testified about that same night.[2031]

883. Nyiramasuhuko also argues that the Trial Chamber took irreconcilable and contradictory approaches with respect to the testimonies of Witnesses QBQ and SJ, on one hand, and Witness QY's evidence on the other.[2032] Specifically, she points to the Trial Chamber's acknowledgement that Witness QY's testimony contained parallels with other evidence about the Night of Three Attacks but found that the witness was testifying about another event as she described attacks that occurred in late April or early May 1994.[2033]

884. In addition to contradictions about the timing of the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber overlooked or erred in its analysis of inconsistencies within the Prosecution evidence as to the number of attacks that purportedly occurred at the prefectoral office during this evening.[2034] Specifically, she argues that the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness QBP, but that this witness only testified about one attack.[2035] Nyiramasuhuko further contends that, while the Trial Chamber acknowledged that Witnesses QBQ and SU only testified about two attacks instead of three,[2036] its explanation for this variance would not apply to these witnesses given evidence that they remained there during all three attacks.[2037] Finally, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently variances between the evidence of Witnesses QBQ and RE and their prior statements, which, respectively, reflect that only one or two attacks occurred on this evening.[2038]

885. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably found, based on corroborating and consistent evidence of Witnesses QJ, TK, RE, SU, FAP, and SS, that the Night of Three Attacks occurred in late May or the beginning of June 1994.[2039] It further submits that Witness QBQ's evidence corroborated other witnesses on specific facts during the Night of Three

In this regard, Nyiramasuhuko further argues that the Trial Chamber, in footnote 7442 of the Trial Judgement, only referred to Witness RE's evidence about three attacks and ignored evidence from the witness that she only "personally witnessed two attacks." See ibid., para. 1160, referring to Witness RE, T. 25 February 2003 p. 48.

Attacks.[2040] According to the Prosecution, given that the details provided about the attack were corroborated by other witnesses, it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Witness SJ was testifying to the Night of Three Attacks even if her evidence concerning the timing of the attack was found to be unreliable.[2041]

886. The Prosecution also contends that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions concerning inconsistencies about the number of attacks should be dismissed as the Trial Chamber directly addressed the issue of Witnesses QBQ and SU testifying to two attacks and the evidence reflects that they moved around and were not in a position to see the third attack.[2042] The Prosecution further responds that Nyiramasuhuko's argument regarding contradictions between the testimonies of Witnesses QBQ and RE and their prior statements are without merit.[2043]

887. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate with references purported contradictions among the evidence of Witnesses FAP, QJ, RE, SS, SU, and TK about the timing of the Night of Three Attacks undermining that they testified about this event.[2044] Nyiramasuhuko's contentions in this regard are therefore dismissed.

888. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's remaining submissions, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber determined that Witnesses QBQ and SJ testified about the Night of Three Attacks.[2045] In this regard, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness QBQ's evidence reflected that the attack she described occurred in the evening, about three days after she arrived at the prefectoral office around the end of April 1994.[2046] However, emphasising that the attack described by Witness QBQ involved the abduction and escape of Semanyenzi, an event that Witnesses RE, SS, SU, and FAP testified occurred during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QBQ's testimony pertained to these attacks, which occurred "at the beginning of June 1994."[2047]

889. That being said, the Appeals Chamber notes an apparent contradiction in the Trial Chamber's findings with respect to Witness QBQ. While the Trial Chamber rejected Witness QBQ's evidence about when the Night of Three Attacks occurred – i.e. around the end of April 1994 – it elsewhere relied on intrinsically related evidence from her to establish that Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana met at the prefectoral office around the end of April 1994.[2048] The Appeals Chamber nonetheless considers that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice for the reasons developed below.

890. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness QBQ estimated that she arrived at the prefectoral office "towards the end of April" 1994.[2049] She consistently asserted that she saw Nyiramasuhuko with Nsabimana three days later and that the attacks she observed occurred that evening.[2050] Insofar as the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QBQ's estimates regarding the timing of this meeting to find that Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana met at the prefectoral office one day around the end of April 1994,[2051] the reliance on this aspect of the witness's evidence was unreasonable in light of its earlier conclusion that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks as well as its express rejection of Witness QBQ's intrinsically related evidence as to the timing of the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to Rango Forest.[2052]

891. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error does not undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's determination that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks nor that it occasioned a miscarriage of justice. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered Witness QBQ's corroborated evidence that: (i) Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe came multiple times in one night to abduct Tutsi refugees;[2053] (ii) a woman, who refused to be abducted, was killed in front of the pickup truck;[2054] (iii) the pickup truck used in the attacks was "a Toyota or a Toyota Hilux" and that Ntahobali was driving it;[2055]

[2048] See Trial Judgement, para. 2900 ("Based on the evidence of Witnesses SJ and QBQ, the Chamber is satisfied that a meeting took place between Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana around the end of April 1994, at the [Butare Prefecture Office].") In both sections of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness QBQ's evidence that she arrived at the prefectoral office towards the end of April 1994 and that, three days later, she observed Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana walk to the prefectoral office. See ibid., paras. 2328, 2329, 2888. Witness QBQ's evidence about the subsequent attacks, which the Trial Chamber determined related to the Night of Three Attacks, suggests that these attacks occurred in the evening of the day she observed Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana. See ibid., paras. 2330-2333.

[2051] Trial Judgement, para. 2900. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber also relied on Witness SJ's evidence to determine that Nsabimana and Nyiramasuhuko met at the prefectoral office around the end of April 1994. See idem. However, similar to Witness QBQ, the Trial Chamber later rejected Witness SJ's estimates as to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks, further undermining the reasonableness of its reliance on this witness's evidence as to the timing of the meeting at the prefectoral office. See ibid., para. 2659.
[2052] Trial Judgement, paras. 2658, 5072.
[2053] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2330-2333, 2660, 2714, 2738. The Trial Chamber considered Witness QBQ's account in this regard consistent with that of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, SU, and FAP. See ibid., paras. 2215, 2253, 2278, 2287, 2307, 2308, 2660, 2704, 2706, 2707, 2738.
[2054] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2331, 2729. The Trial Chamber considered that Witness QBQ's evidence about the woman being killed corroborated the testimonies of Witnesses TK and RE with respect to Trifina's death. See ibid., para. 2729.

and (iv) Nyiramasuhuko ordered rapes during this night.[2056] Given the considerable overlap between Witness QBQ's evidence and other evidence relating to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber considers that it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to consider that she testified about the same attack that Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, FAP, SS, and SU testified about that occurred around the end of May or early June 1994 notwithstanding her evidence that it occurred near the end of April 1994.

892. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber's refusal to rely on Witness QY's evidence – which contained parallels with other evidence about the Night of Three Attacks but was rejected, in part, on the basis that the witness described attacks which occurred in late April or early May 1994[2057] – required the rejection of Witness QBQ's testimony. Nyiramasuhuko's contentions ignore the fact that the Trial Chamber also rejected Witness QY's evidence on the basis that it found aspects of it unreliable and because she had lied to the Trial Chamber about whether she knew Witnesses QBQ and SJ.[2058] The Trial Chamber expressed no such concerns about Witness QBQ.

893. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's submissions with respect to Witness SJ, the Trial Chamber rejected the witness's evidence about the Night of Three Attacks, and the Appeals Chamber has found that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on intrinsically related aspects of the witness's testimony to make findings concerning identification during the Night of Three Attacks.[2059] Given these conclusions, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how any inconsistencies between Witness SJ's testimony and other evidence about when the Night of Three Attacks occurred would undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings concerning this event.[2060]

894. Concerning Nyiramasuhuko's argument about inconsistencies as to the number of attacks that occurred during the Night of Three Attacks and, in particular, the fact that Witness QBP testified that only one attack occurred, the Appeals Chamber observes that, although the Trial Chamber stated that Witness QBP testified about the Night of Three Attacks,[2061] a careful review of the witness's testimony reveals that she did not testify about these attacks. Indeed, as noted in [2056] The Trial Chamber determined that Witness QBQ's testimony regarding Nyiramasuhuko's orders to rape the Tutsis was corroborated by Witness SS and that Witness RE's evidence tended to support this fact as well. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2693, 2695, 2701.

[2059] See supra, para. 804, infra, para. 1764.
[2060] In light of this analysis, the Appeals Chamber need not address whether the Trial Chamber erred in taking inconsistent approaches with respect to the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ.
[2061] Trial Judgement, para. 2657.

another part of the Trial Judgement,[2062] Witness QBP's testimony concerned an attack at the prefectoral office that occurred after the Night of Three Attacks in the first half of June 1994.[2063] This error, however, has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice as the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QBP's evidence regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks to establish Nyiramasuhuko's participation or conduct during this particular night[2064] or the crimes committed during them.[2065] The fact that Witness QBP testified about only one attack, rather than three, which occurred separately from the Night of Three Attacks fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its conclusions on the Night of Three Attacks. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contention in this respect.[2066]

895. As to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that Witnesses QBQ and SU only testified about two attacks and that the Trial Chamber's explanation for the variance – that a number of refugees had fled the immediate environs of the prefectoral office – would not apply to these witnesses given their evidence that they remained there during all three attacks, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko's references do not support her position that they necessarily would have observed all three attacks.[2067] The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Nyiramasuhuko's claim that their evidence is necessarily inconsistent with other evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks because the witnesses did not testify about a third attack.[2068]

[2063] Witness QBP, T. 24 October 2002 pp. 84-86, 88, T. 28 October 2002 pp. 71, 74.
[2064] See Trial Judgement, para. 2698. See also ibid., paras. 2683-2697, 2699-2702. Witness QBP's testimony was only relied upon as circumstantial evidence for the Night of Three Attacks in relation to the vehicle used during the attacks at the prefectoral office, and as to what Nyiramasuhuko wore in general. See ibid., paras. 2698, fn. 7559.
[2066] Given that Witness QBP did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko's other contentions that Witness QBP's evidence about the attack she observed is consistent with other evidence about the Night of Three Attacks are moot. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1025, 1066-1069, 1089, 1109-1111, 1132, 1134, 1138, 1141, 1155, 1156, 1196, 1215, 1263, 1274, 1277.

896. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber considers that the absence of any express reference to Nyiramasuhuko coming to the prefectoral office on two occasions in Witness QBQ's prior statement does not necessarily reflect a contradiction with her testimony as to the number of attacks given the brief description contained in her prior statement.[2069]

897. As for the discrepancy between Witness RE's prior statement and testimony, the Appeals Chamber notes that the witness testified about some assailants making three trips on the Night of Three Attacks,[2070] whereas she stated that the assailants came twice in her prior statement.[2071] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to accept a witness's testimony, notwithstanding inconsistencies between the said testimony and his previous statements.[2072] Given the similarities between the core elements of Witness RE's evidence and that of Witnesses FAP, SS, SU, and TK with respect to the Night of Three Attacks,[2073] the Appeals Chamber does not find that the variance required the Trial Chamber to reject Witness RE's evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks.

898. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that inconsistencies in the evidence as to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks or the number of attacks that occurred undermined the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings with respect to this event.

(ii) Failure to Consider Witness TA's and SD's Evidence

899. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witnesses TA and SD, who were at the Butare Prefecture Office during the relevant time, did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks.[2074] She contends that these omissions, which materially contradict evidence assessing the number of attacks within the Night of Three Attacks. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber does not see any contradiction in these findings.

that the Night of Three Attacks occurred, undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings.[2075]

900. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments regarding Witnesses TA and SD should be summarily dismissed for failing to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred.[2076]

901. The Appeals Chamber observes that nothing in the Trial Chamber's summary of the evidence of Witnesses TA and SD or its analysis of the Night of Three Attacks reflects that the Trial Chamber considered either witness to have testified about the Night of Three Attacks.[2077] In this context, Nyiramasuhuko does not show that either Witness TA or Witness SD provided evidence that was incompatible with the occurrence of the Night of Three Attacks, as neither denied their occurrence or provided evidence that contradicted that of Witnesses TK, RE, FAP, SS, and SU on these attacks. Accordingly, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the Night of Three Attacks occurred notwithstanding the fact that Witnesses TA and SD did not directly corroborate evidence about this attack.[2078]

902. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witnesses TA and SD did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks.

(iii) Abductions of Mbasha's Wife and Children and of Unnamed Woman and Children

903. The Trial Chamber concluded that, during the Night of Three Attacks, Ntahobali and the Interahamwe abducted Mbasha's wife and children.[2079] In coming to this conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied on the testimonies of Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE but rejected the evidence of Witness SJ who also testified about the event.[2080] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP each testified about the abduction of a woman accompanied by children at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks.[2081] It stated that Witness FAP's testimony corroborated "numerous details of Witness TK's testimony regarding the abduction of Mbasha's

[2079] Trial Judgement, para. 2727. As noted previously, the Trial Chamber determined that it would not enter convictions on the basis of the abduction of Mbasha's wife due to insufficient notice but nonetheless considered that the credible and consistent information with regard to this event provided circumstantial support for its findings regarding the abduction of other unnamed Tutsi refugees from the Butare Prefecture Office. See supra, Section IV.F.2(a).
[2080] Trial Judgement, paras. 2717-2723, 2727.

wife and children",[2082] but also identified elements in Witness FAP's evidence that differed.[2083] The Trial Chamber, noting "the differences in their testimonies" concluded that it was "convinced that Witnesses SU, SS and FAP were describing attacks on different individuals among the group which was abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office] on the night of three attacks."[2084] In this regard, it concluded that "Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked many different women and children at the [Butare Prefecture Office], assaulted them and forced them aboard the pickup."[2085]

904. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children as testified to by Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, and SJ was different from the abductions of an unnamed woman and her children described by Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU and consequently failed to consider the significant contradictions within their evidence that rendered all of it unreliable.[2086] Alternatively, she argues that the Trial Chamber erred by insufficiently assessing differing evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, and SJ about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children as well as contradictions between Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU concerning the attack on the unnamed woman and her children.[2087]

a. Same Attack

905. Nyiramasuhuko submits that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to determine that the attack on the unnamed woman and her children as described by Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU was different from the abduction of Mbasha's wife and her children described by Witnesses TK, QJ, RE, and SJ.[2088] Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko emphasises that Witnesses TK, QJ, RE, SJ, SS, and FAP all described the woman and her children as lying on the veranda during the first attack.[2089] She further contends that "[t]hese witnesses" described the woman and her children arriving during the day, that Witnesses TK and QJ identified them as the Mbasha family,[2090] that Witnesses TK, Witness FAP said Ntahobali and the Interahamwe killed the mother with knives and dumped her body in the vehicle. They also took her children who had been beaten and drove away.").

Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Prosecution, at the close of trial, argued that Witnesses FAP and SU were talking about the same event. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1020, referring to Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 294, 443 at pp. 113, 155.
[2089] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1016. Nyiramasuhuko highlights that, although Witness SU did not mention the exact location, she was "close enough to see and hear what was said." See idem.
[2090] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1017.

SU, FAP, and RE all testified that they came "from the Procure or Economat",[2091] and that Witnesses TK and SU similarly described the man accompanying them as partially or completely bald.[2092] Nyiramasuhuko stresses that Witness RE testified that the woman she described was "the only woman [she knew] who was taken away with her children."[2093]

906. In Nyiramasuhuko's view, because these circumstances demonstrate that all the witnesses testified about the same event, the Trial Chamber failed to assess material contradictions in this evidence, which substantially affect its credibility.[2094] In particular, Nyiramasuhuko highlights that: (i) while Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU all testified about hearing, for example, Nyiramasuhuko issue orders for Interahamwe to target girls, young women, and men, Witnesses TK, RE, and SJ, who were also on the veranda, did not corroborate this aspect of their evidence; (ii) Witness FAP made no reference to Ntahobali's alleged proposal to marry one of the Mbasha children; and (iii) unlike Witnesses TK, RE, SJ, and QJ, Witness FAP testified that the woman was killed.[2095]

907. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko simply disagrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion without demonstrating that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU were not testifying about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children but about a different woman and her children.[2096]

908. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted numerous elements of the evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP that could suggest that they testified about the same abduction[2097] and, specifically, about Mbasha's wife and children.[2098] This shows that the Trial Chamber was well aware of the similarities and differences in the relevant evidence.

909. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nyiramasuhuko's submissions that Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP must have testified about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children [2095] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1085, 1087-1089. Nyiramasuhuko concedes that, like Witness RE, Witness FAP testified that Ntahobali said that his mother had asked the woman to retrieve her. See ibid., para. 1086.

[2096] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 664, 665, 672, 673.
[2097] The Trial Chamber noted that the evidence of Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU converged on the following facts: (i) the lady came to the prefectoral office with a man and a child or children; (ii) the woman stayed on the veranda; (iii) during their abduction, the lady and/or the children cried out in protest; and (iv) the woman was hit or killed. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2250, 2252, 2285, 2304, 2305, 2732-2734.
[2098] See Trial Judgement, para. 2734. The Trial Judgement identifies several similarities within the evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, FAP, TK, RE, and QJ: (i) the woman arrived at the prefectoral with a tall, fair-complexioned man; (ii) the mother and Ntahobali had a discussion; (iii) the woman pleaded to spare her children; (iv) the woman and her children were taken from the veranda; and (v) the woman and children were eventually abducted. See ibid., paras. 2717-2719, 2732-2734.

and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to make such a finding. Specifically, while Nyiramasuhuko stresses that Witness RE's evidence reflects that only one woman and her children were abducted that evening, a review of the witness's testimony reflects that the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children was the only abduction of a woman and her children that she knew of.[2099]

910. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted that Witnesses RE and FAP both described Ntahobali approaching a woman and children on the veranda of the prefectoral office, and coaxing her to leave.[2100] The Trial Chamber also acknowledged that Witness FAP's evidence corroborated numerous details of Witness TK's evidence regarding the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[2101] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber ignored elements of Witness FAP's testimony that corresponded with evidence concerning the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children or that it was compelled to find that Witness FAP was referring to this specific attack. In light of Witness FAP's testimony as noted by the Trial Chamber that the unknown woman she testified about was killed at the prefectoral office,[2102] which is distinct from evidence about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children,[2103] the Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found, as the Trial Chamber did, that Witness FAP was not testifying about Mbasha's wife and her children.

911. Similarly, and considering the overlapping aspects of the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU, on one hand, and that of Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE on the other, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness SU testified that the woman whom she observed being abducted was struck on the neck with a machete and, according to Witness SS, the woman she observed being abducted was dead when loaded onto the vehicle.[2104] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber recounted all of this evidence in detail when deliberating on the relevant evidence.[2105] Under these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err when it concluded that the attacks described were different.

b. Mbasha's Wife and Children

912. Nyiramasuhuko alternatively challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence related to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children and specifically points to inconsistencies regarding the manner they were abducted, the content of the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali, the timing of the abduction, and whether Ntahobali was present.[2106] She argues that "it is impossible to reconcile" the testimonies of Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE who described different circumstances of the abduction.[2107] Nyiramasuhuko further contends that, notwithstanding the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks and her presence on the veranda, this witness provided no evidence concerning the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[2108] Finally, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the witnesses who testified to the abduction of Mbasha's wife never mentioned it in their prior statements.[2109]

913. The Prosecution responds that the testimonies of Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE are consistent with respect to the abduction of Mbasha's family.[2110] It submits that Nyiramasuhuko's focus on the timing of the abduction is misplaced and that the fact that Witness QBQ did not testify about this event does not undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings.[2111] Additionally, the Prosecution argues that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate any error regarding alleged discrepancies between the witnesses' testimonies and their prior statements.[2112]

914. Regarding the manner of the abduction, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko submits that, whereas Witness TK testified to "violent actions to force" Mbasha's wife onto the vehicle, that "her children were literally being thrown at her", that she pleaded for them to be spared, and that she was forced to undress,[2113] Witness RE testified to the contrary that Mbasha's wife was not undressed, had not been beaten, and was told that "they were going to hide her and they took her away, very nicely, with her consent."[2114]

915. The Trial Chamber, having explicitly considered this discrepancy between the accounts of Witnesses TK and RE, determined that "Witness RE partially corroborated Witness TK's account of the abduction."[2115] Recalling the Trial Chamber's discretion to evaluate inconsistencies in the evidence, to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible, and to accept or reject the fundamental features of the evidence,[2116] the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of this alleged discrepancy in their testimonies. Indeed, while Witness RE denied that Mbasha's wife was undressed, she in fact testified, similar to Witness TK, that the Interahamwe stripped people at the prefectoral office who were removed from it on that evening, an aspect of her testimony which the Trial Chamber expressly recalled in the Trial Judgement.[2117] As to whether Mbasha's wife was "assaulted" or taken away "peacefully", a review of the transcripts reveals that both witnesses provided materially consistent accounts of how Ntahobali induced Mbasha's wife to leave her position at the prefectoral office.[2118] Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife started pleading with the Interahamwe at the vehicle, and it is not clear from Witness RE's testimony that she then continued to observe the events.[2119] In addition, given that Witness TK's account of the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children was corroborated by Witness QJ,[2120] Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have considered the testimonies to be compatible or that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion by not expressly addressing the purported differences in their testimonies.

916. To substantiate discrepancies regarding the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko notes that, according to Witness TK, Ntahobali asked Mbasha's wife if she knew him, she responded in the affirmative, Ntahobali then expressed his intention to marry the girl among the two children, and Mbasha's wife said it was impossible and pleaded for her children to be spared.[2121] Nyiramasuhuko submits that Witness RE, on the other hand, did not testify about whether the lady knew Ntahobali, Ntahobali's intention to marry one of her children, the mother's plea to spare her children, but merely stated that Ntahobali told the mother: "We're not going to kill you. We rather wanted to take you to Pauline who is in the vehicle so that she can go and hide you."[2122] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that these purported inconsistencies are material or that they required express consideration by the Trial Chamber. Indeed, having reviewed the testimonies cited by the Trial Chamber,[2123] the Appeals Chamber notes that the evidence of Witnesses TK and RE is consistent as to the manner in which Ntahobali sought to induce Mbasha's wife to leave the prefectoral office,[2124] which is reflected in the Trial Chamber's summary of their accounts.[2125] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have considered the accounts of Witnesses TK and RE to be compatible and corroborative.

917. Concerning the timing of the abduction, Nyiramasuhuko argues that according to Witness QJ, it took place in broad daylight, while Witness TK and other witnesses described the event occurring at night.[2126] The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko's contention that Witnesses QJ and TK provided contradictory evidence as to whether the events occurred in broad daylight or at night is not supported by the record. The relevant portions of the witnesses' testimonies reflect that they both considered that the abduction occurred in the evening and that they could only provide estimates as to when it happened.[2127]

918. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that there is a discrepancy as Witness QJ never testified to Ntahobali's conversation with Mbasha's wife and did not identify him during the Night of Three Attacks.[2128] The Appeals Chamber observes, however, that Witness QJ's testimony reveals that he volunteered that Mbasha's wife begged for pity once she and her children were being led to the vehicle and was not questioned as to whether any conversation preceded this event or if Ntahobali was involved in the abduction.[2129] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that any omission in Witness QJ's evidence renders it incompatible with that of Witnesses TK and RE concerning this event.

919. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contention that Witness QBQ was on the veranda but did not testify about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children,[2130] the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how this omission in Witness QBQ's evidence is necessarily incompatible with or undermines the testimonies of Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ concerning this event. Given the Trial Chamber's determination that Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ provided corroborated evidence of the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the Trial Chamber was specifically required to consider that Witness QBQ never testified about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.

920. Finally, Nyiramasuhuko's general argument that none of the witnesses discussed this abduction in their prior statements is unpersuasive. First, the events concerning the Mbasha family are recorded in prior statements given by Witness TK.[2131] Second, Witnesses QJ, SJ, and RE were cross-examined extensively on the absence of any mention of the specific abduction of Mbasha's wife and her children in their prior statements.[2132] The Appeals Chamber, having reviewed this evidence and the relevant statements, is of the view that they are not necessarily inconsistent but merely contain less detail than their subsequent testimonies.[2133]

921. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate an error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence pertaining to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.

c. Unnamed Woman and Children

922. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of inconsistencies between the evidence of Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU with respect to the abduction of the unnamed woman and her children.[2134] She points to discrepancies regarding the description of the woman and her children and the circumstances of the abduction.[2135]

923. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably determined that Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU were discussing attacks on different families.[2136]

924. As to the description of the unnamed woman and children, Nyiramasuhuko notes that according to: (i) Witness FAP, the woman and her two children were on the veranda;[2137] (ii) Witness SS, the woman was on the veranda and was accompanied by a child;[2138] and (iii) Witness SU, the woman had twins, arrived "from the 'Economat' earlier that same day".[2139] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that these are material differences and observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly considered these divergent accounts.[2140] Beyond listing these inconsistencies, Nyiramasuhuko fails to show any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment.

925. Regarding the circumstances of the abduction, Nyiramasuhuko highlights a number of alleged discrepancies between the testimonies of Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU,[2141] which the Trial Chamber expressly considered.[2142] The Trial Chamber determined that, notwithstanding these discrepancies, it was "convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked many different women and children at the [Butare Prefecture Office]" and that "Nyiramasuhuko gave orders to the Interahamwe to commit these crimes."[2143] The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko's mere listing of alleged inconsistencies fails to undermine the Trial Chamber's findings.

926. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence of Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU related to the abduction of an unnamed woman and her children at the prefectoral office.

(iv) Nyiramasuhuko's Presence, Conduct, and Orders to Commit Rapes

927. Having considered the evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, SS, SU, QBQ, RE, and FAP, the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the Night of Three Attacks.[2144] It further determined, based on the testimonies of Witnesses FAP, SS, and QBQ, that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to rape refugees because they were Tutsis and that the Interahamwe beat, abused, and raped many Tutsi women during the attacks.[2145]

928. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing evidence of her presence and conduct, her alleged orders to commit rape, and the commission of rape during the Night of Three Attacks.[2146] With respect to her presence, she submits that the Trial Chamber put various witness accounts together, despite material contradictions, to find that she was present during the Night of Three Attacks.[2147] According to Nyiramasuhuko, Witnesses TK, RE, QBQ, QJ, and SU, [2141] Nyiramasuhuko refers to the following discrepancies: (i) Witness FAP testified that the children pleaded not to be raped and rather to rape their mother, that Ntahobali reassured the woman that she would not be killed as his mother had sent him for her, and that the woman was ultimately killed on the spot with her body removed in the vehicle; (ii) Witness SS testified that the woman shouted "[p]lease do not take my child, he is still young", and that it was the Interahamwe who replied, "[i]f this child is still young, then breastfeed him"; and (iii) Witness SU stated that the twins were first pulled from the woman, that the woman shouted that they were just children, that the woman was struck on the neck with a machete and that, after this, Nyiramasuhuko stated "[t]hen breastfeed your children". See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1058, 1062, 1063, 1086-1088, 1090, 1133 (emphasis omitted).

who were on or near the veranda of the prefectoral office and within metres of each other, should have witnessed the same events, seen the same people and the same perpetrators, and that her presence could not go unnoticed by these witnesses.[2148] She argues that this is however not the case as the evidence of these witnesses is inconsistent as to her presence during the attacks.[2149] Nyiramasuhuko further notes that Witness RE conceded that she did not see her that night but deduced her presence from words she heard between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali.[2150]

929. Nyiramasuhuko further submits that Witnesses SS and SU, who spent the nights together on the lawn of the prefectoral office, provided divergent accounts of Nyiramasuhuko's presence and her conduct during the Night of Three Attacks.[2151] She also points to discrepancies in their testimonies with respect to her alleged utterances during the second attack.[2152] She argues that the Trial Chamber's assessment of their evidence was unreasonable.[2153]

930. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of inconsistent accounts from Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, SS, SU, FAP, and QBQ on the presence of Kazungu, who was alleged to be present with Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks.[2154] She specifically argues that Witnesses RE, TK, and SS testified to Kazungu's presence but contradicted each other on his position as a soldier, an Interahamwe, or a body guard to her or one

[2148] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1016, 1026-1028, 1134; AT. 14 April 2014 pp. 25, 27-33. Nyiramasuhuko further argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously did not consider that Witness SJ, who was found to have testified about the Night of Three Attacks and was in a position similar to other witnesses who observed Nyiramasuhuko during this event, did not testify that Nyiramasuhuko was present and provided additional evidence contradictory to other Prosecution witnesses. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 981, 993, 997, 1031, 1032, 1071, 1112, 1113, 1130, 1139, 1189; AT. 14 April 2015 pp. 26, 28-30. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber rejected Witness SJ's evidence concerning the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children and that the Appeals Chamber has concluded that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on intrinsically related evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks. In this context, Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the failure of Witness SJ to expressly identify Nyiramasuhuko as being present during the Night of Three Attacks undermines the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings to the contrary. Nyiramasuhuko also submits that Witness QBQ placed Nyiramasuhuko's presence in April 1994, "a totally different time" as the Trial Chamber's findings with respect to the Night of Three Attacks. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1013, 1033, 1036, 1162, 1261. Nyiramasuhuko appears to contradict herself as she argues that Witness QBQ testified to Nyiramasuhuko being present and that rapes were being committed in front of her at the Butare Prefecture Office. See ibid., paras. 1105, 1140. As already discussed above, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QBQ's evidence regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks. Furthermore, given the considerable overlap between the account of Witness QBQ and that of several other witnesses in relation to these attacks, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in relying on Witness QBQ's evidence, despite any variances with respect to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's arguments pertaining to Witnesses SJ and QBQ in this respect.

of the prefects.[2155] Nyiramasuhuko also notes that Witnesses QJ, SU, FAP, and QBQ did not mention Kazungu at all.[2156] Moreover, she contends that the findings in paragraph 2702 of the Trial Judgement, which concern her presence and conduct, are vague as they simply refer to an "attack".[2157]

931. Regarding her orders to rape and the commission of rapes, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber's assessment of evidence concerning her utterances, orders, and gestures during the Night of Three Attacks is unreasonable.[2158] She argues that the accounts of Witnesses FAP and SS that she ordered rapes or Witness QBQ that rapes had been ordered and committed during that night are inconsistent with the testimonies of Witnesses TK, RE, and SU, who did not testify to rapes being ordered or committed.[2159] Nyiramasuhuko also argues that Witnesses SS and SU were together during the night and "[were] describing the same attack but referring to orders which even in their face are contradictory".[2160]

932. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko mischaracterises the relevant testimonies of the witnesses situated on the veranda and incorrectly asserts that, because Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ were on the veranda, they should have testified to the same events and seen the same persons.[2161] Regarding Witnesses SS and SU, it submits that Nyiramasuhuko alleges discrepancies that are either minor or non-existent and can be attributed to the witnesses' differing vantage points.[2162] The Prosecution further responds that there was overwhelming and consistent evidence for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women and girls during the Night of Three Attacks.[2163]

The Prosecution further submits that Witness FAP's prior statement is not inconsistent with her more detailed testimony, which adequately explained and clarified any alleged inconsistencies. See ibid., paras. 683-685. Regarding inconsistencies between Witness SS's testimony and her prior statement, the Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was entitled to rely on her testimony and that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber unreasonably exercised its discretion. See ibid., para. 681.

933. The Appeals Chamber recalls that two prima facie credible testimonies need not be identical in all respects in order to be corroborative and that corroboration may exist even when some details differ.[2164] The Appeals Chamber has carefully considered the evidence highlighted by Nyiramasuhuko concerning the size of the prefectoral office, and its veranda in particular, and the evidence from several Prosecution witnesses indicating that they were on the veranda or very near to it during the Night of Three Attacks.[2165] In addition, it has previously assessed evidence related to distinct aspects of the Night of Three Attacks from the same witnesses Nyiramasuhuko contends should have observed, heard, and testified uniformly about the attacks but purportedly provided contradictory evidence.[2166] The Appeals Chamber is of the view that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions fail to sufficiently appreciate that all but one of the witnesses she has identified as providing inconsistent evidence were Tutsis seeking refuge at the prefectoral office and were the targets of the attacks.[2167] The Appeals Chamber is also of the view that Nyiramasuhuko ignores the Trial Chamber's conclusion that "there were a large number of refugees" at the prefectoral office who were "in poor physical condition" and who "had fled other [communes] and [prefectures] to escape violence and the threat of death."[2168] The Trial Chamber further determined that the circumstances at the prefectoral office, based on the evidence of survivors, "paint[ed] a clear picture of unfathomable depravity and sadism."[2169] In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds that the differences between the testimonies of Witnesses QBQ, TK, RE, SU, FAP, QJ, and SS concerning the Night of Three Attacks as highlighted by Nyiramasuhuko do not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably in: (i) crediting aspects of their evidence; (ii) finding consistencies compelling; and (iii) determining that other inconsistencies did not raise doubt in their testimonies. More specifically, the fact that Witness RE did not see Nyiramasuhuko while Witnesses TK and QJ did does not undermine the reasonableness of the conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko was present in light of the totality of the evidence. The Appeals Chamber has already determined that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness RE's hearsay account and other direct evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks.[2170]

934. The Appeals Chamber also finds that Nyiramasuhuko's contention regarding alleged discrepancies in the testimonies of Witnesses SS and SU likewise lacks merit. Having reviewed their relevant testimonies, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness SU merely testified that she saw Nyiramasuhuko telling the Interahamwe to take Tutsi refugees and "gesticulating and showing, pointing out where they had to start",[2171] while Witness SS simply stated that Nyiramasuhuko got out of the vehicle and stood by the door while she gave instructions.[2172] The Trial Chamber expressly considered these aspects of the witnesses' testimonies, which Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate are incompatible.

935. The Trial Chamber also noted that, according to Witness SU, during the second attack, Nyiramasuhuko "repeated her instructions to the Interahamwe to start on one side and to take men and women and load them in the vehicle"[2173] and that, according to Witness SS, Nyiramasuhuko "said to bring the young boys and not leave anyone behind."[2174] Nyiramasuhuko merely repeats this evidence without demonstrating that, in the context of this attack in which the witnesses were potential victims, the differences in their evidence render their accounts incompatible or that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to find that, taken as a whole, their evidence was fundamentally consistent, credible, and reliable.

936. Turning to alleged discrepancies regarding Kazungu's presence and position as either a body guard, soldier, or Interahamwe, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber took explicit note of divergent accounts on this matter from Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, SS, SU, FAP, and QBQ.[2175] Beyond disagreeing with the Trial Chamber's assessment, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred. Furthermore, given the overwhelming evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, it is unclear how any inconsistency regarding Kazungu would undermine the Trial Chamber's finding in this regard.

937. Nyiramasuhuko's contention that paragraph 2702 of the Trial Judgement is vague as to which "attack" she was allegedly present for and participated in is similarly without merit as, read in context, there is no ambiguity that the findings in this paragraph concern her involvement in the Night of Three Attacks.

938. As to the alleged inconsistencies concerning the occurrence of rapes, the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses FAP, SS, and QBQ testified to rapes or Nyiramasuhuko's orders to commit rapes during the Night of Three Attacks, while Witnesses TK, RE, and SU did not.[2176] The Trial Chamber considered that Witnesses FAP, SS, and QBQ provided corroborative accounts that: (i) Nyiramasuhuko gave orders to the Interahamwe to rape the women and the girls;[2177] and (ii) upon hearing her orders, Tutsi women and girls were raped by the Interahamwe.[2178] Upon review of the relevant evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's conclusions that Nyiramasuhuko ordered rapes and that rapes were committed were reasonable, notwithstanding the fact that Witnesses TK, RE, and SU did not testify to orders or the commission of rapes.

939. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings of her presence and conduct, her orders to rape Tutsi women and girls, and the occurrence of rapes during the Night of Three Attacks.

(v) Trifina

940. The Trial Chamber found credible Witness TK's testimony that, on the orders of Nyiramasuhuko, Interahamwe assaulted and killed a woman named Trifina during the Night of Considering that Witness SU did not testify to Nyiramasuhuko ordering rapes or the commission of rapes during the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber finds that there is no discrepancy between the witness's testimony and prior statement.

The Appeals Chamber notes Nyiramasuhuko's submission that Witness FAP's testimony is inconsistent with her prior statements. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1120-1127. See also ibid., para. 1268. Having reviewed Witness FAP's relevant prior statement and her testimony, the Appeals Chamber observes no apparent discrepancy. In her prior statement, Witness FAP explicitly stated that Nyiramasuhuko ordered rapes during the Night of Three Attacks and that some women were raped. See Witness FAP's Statement, p. K0104986 (Registry pagination). The Appeals Chamber considers that it can be expected that Witness FAP's prior statement is less detailed than her testimony and Nyiramasuhuko has not shown material contradictions between the two. Nyiramasuhuko also submits that Witness SS did not mention rapes in her prior statement. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1151, referring to Exhibit D96 (Witness SS's Statement, dated 20 November 1996) (confidential) ("Witness SS's Statement"). The Appeals Chamber observes that, in her prior statement, Witness SS stated that Nyiramasuhuko came three times to the prefectoral office and ordered abductions but made no mention of rapes. See Witness SS's Statement, p. K0034442 (Registry pagination). The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to accept a witness's testimony, notwithstanding inconsistencies between the said testimony and his or her previous statements, as it is for the trial chamber to determine whether the alleged inconsistency is sufficient to cast doubt on the evidence of the witness concerned. See Hategekimana Appeal Judgement, paras. 190, 198; Rukundo Appeal Judgement, para. 86; Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 96. Furthermore, given that Witness SS's account of Nyiramasuhuko's orders to commit rapes were corroborated by Witnesses FAP and QBQ, and the fact that the witness does not deny the existence of the orders or the rapes, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's argument in this regard.

Three Attacks.[2179] The Trial Chamber determined that Witnesses QBQ and RE provided corroborative evidence.[2180] However, in light of its prior determination that Nyiramasuhuko was not given sufficient notice in relation to this event, the Trial Chamber limited the use of this finding as only providing "circumstantial support for [its] findings regarding the abduction and killing of other unnamed Tutsi refugees from the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[2181]

941. Nyiramasuhuko submits that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to find that the testimonies of Witnesses RE and QBQ corroborated Witness TK's account as to the killing of Trifina.[2182] She avers that, according to Witness TK, while Mbasha's wife was being abducted, Trifina started shouting and Nyiramasuhuko, who was in front of the vehicle, asked that people making noise be stopped and "set aside".[2183] Nyiramasuhuko notes that Witness TK also testified to Trifina being stabbed, having her throat slit, and being thrown into the vehicle.[2184] She argues that Witness RE, on the other hand, testified that when "they hit [Trifina] to wake up, she refused to go and one Interahamwe strangled her" and that "[Nyiramasuhuko] did not get off the vehicle and that is why I'm saying I did not hear [Nyiramasuhuko] say anything."[2185] According to Nyiramasuhuko, the testimonies of these witnesses are irreconcilable as Witness TK testified to her issuing an order concerning Trifina, while Witness RE testified to not seeing or hearing her during the entire night of attacks.[2186] Nyiramasuhuko further submits that Witness QBQ, who was on the veranda with Witnesses TK and RE, never attributed utterances to her concerning Trifina.[2187] She notes that, according to Witness QBQ, a woman was struck with a club and died near the door of the vehicle.[2188]

942. The Prosecution responds that corroborative accounts need not be identical and that the discrepancies between the testimonies were minor.[2189] It further responds that given the different vantage points, the traumatic and chaotic experiences, and the passage of time, variations are reasonable and that the Trial Chamber reasonably determined that Witnesses TK, RE, and QBQ corroborated each others' accounts of the attack against Trifina.[2190]

943. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in finding that Trifina was attacked by the Interahamwe based on Nyiramasuhuko's orders, or that it erred in concluding that Witnesses RE's and QBQ's testimonies corroborated that of Witness TK.[2191] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered the accounts of Witnesses TK, RE, and QBQ and stated that:

> Witness TK provided evidence that during the same attack by Interahamwe on Mbasha's wife [during which refugees were stripped and loaded on the truck at around 7.00 p.m. or 7.30 p.m.], a refugee girl named Trifina started shouting. Nyiramasuhuko said that noise should be stopped and those who were shouting should be set aside. Trifina was attacked with daggers and her shoulder was wounded, but she shouted even louder. Interahamwe then slit her throat, almost cutting her head off, and threw her dead body into the vehicle. When the vehicle was full of people Ntahobali drove it away with Nyiramasuhuko as a passenger.
> Witness TK's account was corroborated by Witnesses QBQ and RE. Witness QBQ said the Interahamwe heard Nyiramasuhuko give an order and immediately attacked the people on the veranda, pulling them by their noses. The Interahamwe used a club to hit one woman who refused to comply and she died in front of the vehicle. Witness RE also stated that the Interahamwe strangled to death a young woman named Trifina because she refused to go.[2192]

944. The Appeals Chamber observes that the three witnesses provided consistent accounts that: (i) a woman, which Witnesses TK and RE identified as Trifina, refused to be abducted by the Interahamwe during the Night of Three Attacks;[2193] (ii) upon her refusal, the Interahamwe attempted to strangle her;[2194] and (iii) the woman was eventually killed at the prefectoral office.[2195] While Witnesses RE and QBQ did not testify, as Witness TK did, to Nyiramasuhuko stating that the noise be stopped and that those shouting be "set aside", the Appeals Chamber reiterates that corroboration is not a requirement and a trial chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[2196] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber, having found Witness TK's account credible regarding this event, was entitled to rely on her testimony to find that "Trifina was assaulted and killed by Interahamwe based on the orders of Nyiramasuhuko" despite the fact that neither Witness QBQ nor Witness RE testified about Nyiramasuhuko issuing such instructions.[2197] As emphasised above, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's submission that witnesses, who were allegedly in the same location during the attacks, should have provided identical accounts of the attack on Trifina.

945. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence regarding the attack against Trifina.

(vi) Killing Locations and Abductions of Semanyenzi

946. The Trial Chamber determined that, regardless of whether refugees were taken to Rwabayanga, Kabutare, Mukoni, or the IRST, the only reasonable inference is that they were abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office to be killed.[2198] In coming to this conclusion, the Trial Chamber considered the evidence of, among others, Witnesses SU, RE, FAP, and QBQ, and their hearsay accounts from survivors such as Semanyenzi.[2199]

947. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on hearsay evidence that the abducted persons were killed, particularly as the sources of this information did not testify at trial and because the victims of the killings were unknown.[2200] She argues that these persons naturally would not return and that concluding that they were killed was not the only reasonable inference from the evidence.[2201] Moreover, she contends that the Trial Chamber, in relying on this hearsay evidence of killings, disregarded numerous inconsistencies in the testimonies of witnesses who testified to the survival and utterances of Semanyenzi and Annonciata.[2202] She notes the Trial Chamber's acknowledgement of contradictory evidence regarding where abducted refugees were taken,[2203] but argues that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to disregard inconsistencies on this point considering that witnesses, including Witnesses TK, RE, SS, SU, QBQ, and FAP, all testified about the same night of attacks and Semanyenzi's return.[2204] Nyiramasuhuko further submits that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to accept that Semanyenzi, abducted during the first attack, returned during the second attack and was abducted again, returned during the third attack and was abducted yet again, and finally survived and returned to the prefectoral office.[2205]

[2205] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1224. Nyiramasuhuko also notes that Semanyenzi was not called as a witness to testify about the events at the Butare Prefecture Office, or his survival. See ibid., paras. 1225-1229.

She also contends that the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU concerning Fidèle contradicts their prior statements.[2206]

948. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's submissions should be dismissed as Witnesses FAP, SS, SU, RE, TK, and QBQ corroborated each other on Semanyenzi's abduction and escape.[2207] According to it, the Trial Chamber's reference to the abduction and escape of Semanyenzi simply demonstrates that these witnesses were testifying about the same night.[2208]

949. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nyiramasuhuko does not show that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in relying on hearsay evidence concerning the killings of refugees abducted from the prefectoral office. Indeed, when evaluating the hearsay evidence whose sources were Semanyenzi, Annonciata, and Fidèle[2209] – who all saw killings of abducted persons at various locations in Butare – the Trial Chamber acknowledged that these individuals did not testify during the proceedings and that this hearsay evidence must be viewed with caution.[2210] Moreover, the Trial Chamber carefully considered the hearsay evidence along with direct evidence concerning the nature of the attacks at the prefectoral office as well as evidence that refugees who were abducted did not return.[2211]

950. The Trial Chamber also explicitly noted that the evidence relating to where the refugees were taken to be killed was "inconsistent".[2212] It acknowledged that the witnesses who learned about the killings from Semanyenzi and Annonciata might have been expected to identify the same [2206] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 503. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on: (i) Witness TA's evidence about killings that were unrelated to attacks in which she participated; (ii) Witness Ghandi Shukry's evidence that no "pit" existed at the prefectoral office; and (iii) evidence that there were corpses everywhere in Butare Town. See ibid., paras. 492, 494, 499, 500. Nyiramasuhuko's submissions, however, reflect mere disagreement with the relevance of the impugned evidence without demonstrating how the Trial Chamber erred in recalling this evidence or show that it was relevant to its determination that refugees abducted from the prefectoral office were killed. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these contentions without further consideration.

[2209] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber variously referred to Fidèle as "Fidel", "Fidelis", or "Fidele" in the Trial Judgement. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2745, 2746.

[2211] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2739-2747.

Witness SJ said the Mbashas, Annonciata and Semanyenzi were all taken to the same place and that she later learned from Annonciata and Interahamwe that the location of the killings was Kabutare. Witness QY said that she learned from Annonciata that the refugees had been taken to Rwabayanga to be killed. Witness RE also learned from Semanyenzi and Annonciata that the people were killed. She said the refugees were killed at Rwabayanga. Witness FAP did not indicate where Semanyenzi had been taken, but testified that certain soldiers warned her that Interahamwe were taking people to Rwabayanga. Finally, Witness QBQ testified that Semanyenzi had survived at Mukoni. Given that each of these witnesses had learned from Semanyenzi and Annonciata where the killings had occurred, it might be expected that each would identify the same location.") (internal references omitted).

location.[2213] However, the Trial Chamber also observed that not all the evidence about the location of killings came from these two survivors.[2214] The Trial Chamber then noted that all four locations cited "were all sites of massacres or mass graves" or behind or near such sites and accepted that different groups of refugees could have been taken to these locations on different occasions.[2215] It concluded that, "[r]egardless of whether the refugees were taken to Rwambayanga, Kabutare, Mukoni, or the IRST, the only reasonable inference is that the refugees were abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office] in order to kill them."[2216]

951. Nyiramasuhuko fails to appreciate that Semanyenzi was not the only source of information regarding the location where abducted refugees were killed and her submissions reflect mere disagreement with the Trial Chamber's analysis without substantiating an error. Her misplaced emphasis on the location of the killings also ignores that the evidence of principal significance – i.e. that abducted refugees were killed – is entirely consistent.[2217] The Appeals Chamber also finds that Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's consideration of the evidence on the killing sites was unreasonable.

952. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Nyiramasuhuko's arguments with respect to Semanyenzi's abduction, survival, and subsequent abduction. It notes that, compared to findings about Mbasha's wife and children, Trifina, and the unnamed woman and her children, the Trial Chamber made no specific conclusions as to the circumstances of Semanyenzi's abduction or survival in its analysis of events during the Night of Three Attacks.[2218] The Trial Chamber explicitly observed that witnesses provided different accounts of when and to where Semanyenzi was abducted.[2219] The Trial Chamber appears to have referenced his survival to ascertain whether witnesses were indeed testifying about the Night of Three Attacks,[2220] and to assess whether abducted Tutsi refugees were killed.[2221] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that inconsistencies related to Semanyenzi's abduction and survival are not material to the Trial

Chamber's findings that the Night of Three Attacks occurred or that abducted refugees were eventually killed. Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate an error in the Trial Chamber's assessment.

953. The Appeals Chamber likewise finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate the materiality of the purported variances between the testimonies of Witnesses SS and SU and their prior statements concerning Fidèle.

954. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the locations where persons were killed and the abductions of Semanyenzi.

(vii) Conclusion

955. For the reasons developed above, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses QBP and SJ in support of its findings regarding the Night of Three Attacks but that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the assessment of the evidence pertaining to the Night of Three Attacks.

(f) First Half of June Attacks

956. The Trial Chamber, relying on the testimonies of Witnesses QBP and SU, as partly corroborated by Witnesses SS and TA, found that during an attack on the Butare Prefecture Office conducted in the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women and that, as a result, numerous women were raped at that location.[2222] It found that, although Nyiramasuhuko could not have been present at the prefectoral office on 6 and 10 June 1994, she had ample opportunity to perpetrate these crimes between 7 and 9 June 1994, and between 11 and 19 June 1994.[2223] The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko as a superior for failing to prevent and punish the rapes perpetrated by the Interahamwe during this attack.[2224]

[2222] Trial Judgement, paras. 2752-2769, 2773. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in paragraph 2750 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that "Witness TA's evidence […] corresponds with the attack described by Witness QBP which allegedly occurred in June 1994." In the following paragraph of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber, in reference to Witnesses SU's and SS's evidence, stated that "these additional attacks occurred in the first half of June 1994", which may imply that it considered that Witnesses SS and SU testified to an attack additional to and distinct from that witnessed by Witnesses TA and QBP. However, reading the Trial Chamber's factual findings concerning attacks at the prefectoral office in June 1994 in context, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber considered aspects of the testimonies of Witnesses SS, SU, TA, and QBP to pertain to the same attack. See ibid., paras. 2752, 2753, 2765, 2770.

957. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence concerning this attack by minimising the differences between Witnesses QBP's, SU's, SS's, TA's, and TK's testimonies, and concluding that they corroborated each other.[2225] In support of her argument, Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness QBP testified that she ordered rapes during this attack directly contradicts its finding that the only attack Witness QBP described in her testimony was the Night of Three Attacks.[2226] In her view, the Trial Chamber therefore unreasonably concluded that Witness QBP corroborated Witness SU because Witness QBP testified about the Night of Three Attacks.[2227] Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that Witness SU's testimony was contradicted by Witnesses TA, TK, and SS, who did not testify that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the attack.[2228] According to Nyiramasuhuko, the Trial Chamber also unreasonably failed to address that Witnesses RE, FAP, QBQ, QY, SJ, and SD, who were present at the prefectoral office in the first half of June 1994, did not testify about additional attacks in June 1994 or the presence of Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office during this time period,[2229] particularly in light of Witness SU's testimony that none of the refugees was asleep during the attack and that Nyiramasuhuko was speaking loudly and moving around in an agitated manner.[2230] She also argues that the Trial Chamber's finding that she ordered rapes at the prefectoral office between 7 and 9 and between 11 and 19 June 1994 is incompatible with its acceptance of Witness SU's testimony that from the moment gendarmes were posted to protect the Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office between 5 and 15 June 1994, no one was raped.[2231]

958. The Prosecution responds that Witness QBP's testimony pertained to the same attack in the first half of June 1994 about which Witness SU testified and that the Trial Chamber was therefore reasonable in relying on Witnesses SU's and QBP's mutually consistent testimonies that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women during this attack.[2232] It contends that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness TK's testimony as regards this attack and that the fact that Witnesses SS and TA did not identify Nyiramasuhuko as being present does not undermine the corroboration they provided of other aspects of Witnesses SU's and QBP's evidence.[2233] It adds that

Witnesses QBP's and SU's direct and corroborated evidence is not undermined simply because Witnesses RE, FAP, QBQ, QY, SJ, and SD did not testify to seeing Nyiramasuhuko order rapes during an attack in the first half of June 1994.[2234] Finally, the Prosecution submits that there is no contradiction between the Trial Chamber's finding with respect to the gendarmes at the prefectoral office because the dates in question do not entirely overlap.[2235] In its view, Nyiramasuhuko also misstates the evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings, which reflect that the refugees were not necessarily protected by the gendarmes.[2236]

959. Nyiramasuhuko replies that no reasonable trier of fact would have concluded that Witnesses TA and SU necessarily discussed the same attack on the basis that Witnesses QBP and TA described the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare while Witness TA did not recollect Nyiramasuhuko's presence, and asserts that the Trial Chamber's findings are ultimately only reliant on the contradictory testimonies of Witnesses SU and QBP.[2237] She further replies that the Trial Chamber relied on Nsabimana's testimony that the gendarmes protected the Tutsis and that there were no further attacks, which, in her view, should have raised reasonable doubt as to her involvement in an attack during this time period.[2238]

960. As discussed above, a careful review of Witness QBP's testimony reveals that she did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks but that her testimony on an attack at the prefectoral office concerned an attack that occurred after the Night of Three Attacks in the first half of June 1994 during which Immaculée Mukagatare was raped.[2239] Nyiramasuhuko's argument, which is premised on the assumption that Witness QBP's testimony related to the Night of Three Attacks and not to a later attack in the first half of June 1994, cannot therefore succeed.[2240]

[2240] As to the Trial Chamber's erroneous statement about the relevance of Witness QBP's evidence to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QBP's evidence regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks or Ntahobali's and Nyiramasuhuko's conduct during this event. Instead, the Trial Judgement reflects that Witness QBP's testimony was only relied upon as circumstantial evidence for the Night of Three Attacks in relation to the vehicle used during the attacks at the prefectoral office and as to what

961. Concerning Nyiramasuhuko's argument that Witnesses TA and SU did not necessarily discuss the same attack, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted that Witness TA, like Witness QBP, was "also an eyewitness to the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare", which Witness QBP had recounted as occurring as part of the attack in the first half of June 1994 during which Nyiramasuhuko ordered the rape of Tutsi women.[2241] The Trial Chamber therefore considered that Witness TA's account of the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare concerned the same attack described by Witness QBP and therefore also related to Witness SU's testimony corroborating Witness QBP's recollection of Immaculée Mukagatare's rape.[2242] Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's finding in this respect was unreasonable.

962. Though Witness TA did not testify that Nyiramasuhuko was present during the attack, this was not of material importance considering the brief nature of her testimony in relation to the attacks at the prefectoral office in June 1994, the core of which was focused on her own rape by seven Interahamwe and her recollection of the violent rape of Immaculée Mukagatare.[2243] Likewise, Witness SS's testimony about this attack was limited to explaining how Witness SU attempted to dissuade the Interahamwe from raping her.[2244] Witness SS's testimony concerning this incident was very brief and the witness was not questioned during examination or cross-examination as to the context in which it occurred, or on whether Nyiramasuhuko was present.[2245]

963. In light of the detailed and mutually corroborative evidence of Witnesses SU and QBP concerning the attack at the prefectoral office in the first half of June 1994 during which Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women and the nature of Witnesses TA's and SS's testimonies on this attack, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that it was unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to not expressly address that Witnesses TA and SS did not mention Nyiramasuhuko as being present during the attack or consider their evidence to contradict that of Witness SU.

964. Nyiramasuhuko also fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion by not finding that Witness TK contradicted Witness SU's testimony that Nyiramasuhuko ordered rapes during this attack. The Trial Chamber did not find that Witness TK's testimony pertained to the same attack during the First Half of June 1994 Attacks as described by Witness SU. By contrast, it stated that Witness TK corroborated Witness TA's testimony regarding "additional attacks" at the Butare Prefecture Office during the first half of June 1994.[2246] The Trial Chamber also expressly noted that Witness TK did not see Nyiramasuhuko when rapes occurred at the prefectoral office during the first half of June 1994 and that her sightings of Nyiramasuhuko were either during the day or on the Night of Three Attacks.[2247] Nyiramasuhuko does not point to any aspect of Witness TK's testimony that would demonstrate that she and Witness SU testified to the same specific attack in the first half of June 1994 or that materially contradicts Witness SU's evidence about that specific attack that she described. Nyiramasuhuko also does not show that the Trial Chamber did not consider the aspects of Witness TK's testimony to which she points.[2248]

965. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber should have addressed that Witnesses RE, FAP, QBQ, QY, SJ, and SD did not testify that any attacks occurred or that Nyiramasuhuko was present at night in June 1994 or after the Night of Three Attacks despite being at the prefectoral office during the relevant time period is equally unpersuasive. The Appeals Chamber recalls its finding that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witnesses QY's and SJ's evidence in relation to the attacks at the prefectoral office[2249] and notes that the Trial Chamber considered in detail the evidence of Witnesses RE, FAP, QBQ, and SD in relation to the Night of Three Attacks and other attacks.[2250] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was not required to discuss any possible difference within the Prosecution evidence where that evidence was not incompatible.

966. Nyiramasuhuko fails to reference anything in the testimonies of Witnesses RE, FAP, QBQ, and SD reflecting that their evidence renders the Trial Chamber's findings on the attack described by Witnesses QBP and SU unreasonable, or that they were necessarily continuously present at the prefectoral office during the time of the attack. Nyiramasuhuko merely refers to the Trial Chamber's findings that Witnesses RE and FAP witnessed only one attack at the prefectoral office, which was the Night of Three Attacks,[2251] without showing that they denied the occurrence of later attacks or providing any support for her contention with respect to Witnesses QBQ and SD.[2252] While Nyiramasuhuko highlights Witness SU's evidence that Nyiramasuhuko shouted during the attack and that the refugees were not asleep,[2253] the Appeals Chamber is of the view that it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber not to consider this as determinative that all refugees present during the attack would necessarily recall it in their testimony, particularly if they were not a targeted victim on that occasion. Given the prevailing circumstances at the prefectoral office, which included numerous attacks against the refugees and conditions of "unfathomable depravity and sadism",[2254] and in light of Witnesses SU's and QBP's reliable and corroborated evidence as to Nyiramasuhuko's participation in the attack, further supported by Witnesses TA's and SS's evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that Nyiramasuhuko participated in an attack after the Night of Three Attacks in the first half of June 1994. The fact that Witnesses RE, FAP, QBQ, and SD did not testify to this specific attack or to Nyiramasuhuko's presence at the prefectoral office during this time period does not demonstrate the unreasonableness of the Trial Chamber's conclusion.

967. Finally, the Appeals Chamber sees no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness SU's testimony that gendarmes were posted at the Butare Prefecture Office is inconsistent with its finding on Nyiramasuhuko's participation in an attack in the first half of June 1994. Nyiramasuhuko overlooks that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness SU's direct evidence of this attack in reaching its finding that Nyiramasuhuko ordered rapes[2255] and that the Trial Chamber similarly relied on her testimony to find that Nsabimana posted gendarmes at the prefectoral office sometimes between 5 and 15 June 1994.[2256] Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's argument, there is no contradiction between these findings or within Witness SU's testimony as the Trial Chamber did not find that all abductions and rapes ceased once gendarmes or soldiers were posted at the prefectoral office.[2257] Nor did the Trial Chamber find, or Witness SU testify, that the attack occurred on a specific date. Indeed, the Trial Chamber's finding as to the timing of this attack is limited to the time period of "the first half of June 1994".[2258] [2253] See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1212-1214, referring to Witness SU, T. 14 October 2002 pp. 52-54, 57, 58, 60-64.

[2258] Trial Judgement, paras. 2751, 2773, 2781(v). Witness SU testified that she "did not know the exact date" when the gendarmes came to the prefectoral office but that it happened in June. See Witness SU, T. 21 October 2002 pp. 37, 40.

968. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses QBP and SU, as partly corroborated by Witnesses SS and TA, in finding that, in the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the Butare Prefecture Office and that, as a result, numerous women were raped at that location.

3. Ordering Responsibility

969. Notwithstanding the imprecision in the Trial Judgement, the Appeals Chamber has determined that the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings committed as a result of attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks.[2259]

970. Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her for ordering killings in the absence of any evidence that she issued orders to kill during these attacks.[2260] She submits that the Trial Chamber only found that she ordered Tutsi refugees to be abducted during the Mid-May Attack and that there is no evidence that this order significantly contributed to the killing of the refugees or that the Interahamwe who loaded the vehicle with refugees actually killed them later.[2261] Alternatively, she submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to explain how it inferred an order to kill from her alleged orders that refugees be abducted.[2262]

971. With respect to the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko emphasises that the Trial Judgement contains no express finding that she issued any order to kill during this attack and argues that it would be impermissible to infer such orders.[2263] In particular, she contends that the Trial Chamber's conclusion that she ordered rapes during this attack is insufficient to establish that she ordered killings.[2264] Furthermore, she appears to argue that the Trial Chamber did not find that she ordered Interahamwe to load the refugees onto the vehicles during the Night of Three Attacks or that such conclusion would provide an adequate basis to establish her liability for ordering.[2265]

972. Nyiramasuhuko further contends that, with respect to the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that, between mid-May and mid-June 1994, the abducted refugees were killed at different locations, as it failed to point to evidence or factual findings supporting this conclusion.[2266] She contends that the Trial Chamber made no findings as to the perpetrators of such killings, the fact that the perpetrators were acting on her orders, the means used to commit the killings, or the location and victims of these killings.[2267]

973. In addition, Nyiramasuhuko submits that, in finding her guilty of genocide under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings, the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of her mens rea.[2268] Specifically, she contends that it erred in relying on the findings that pits were dug which contained those killed at the prefectoral office, that she ordered rapes and distributed condoms on another occasion, and that she tacitly approved the inflammatory speeches at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony in order to establish her genocidal intent.[2269] She also reiterates that the Trial Chamber could not legally rely on her alleged orders or encouragements to rape refugees at the prefectoral office as it had stated that it would not take rapes into account when assessing her responsibility for genocide.[2270]

974. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber's finding that Nyiramasuhuko ordered abductions sufficiently establishes her responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute.[2271] It contends that the evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate that she issued such orders knowing the substantial likelihood that crimes would be committed in the execution of them and that her orders had a direct and substantial effect on the subsequent killings.[2272] In support of these inferences, the Prosecution, for example, points to evidence that Nyiramasuhuko issued express orders to kill refugees during the attacks, that Tutsis were killed at the prefectoral office during attacks and that their bodies were thrown into pits, and that abducted Tutsis were not seen again.[2273]

975. The Prosecution further contends that the totality of the evidence demonstrates that Nyiramasuhuko possessed genocidal intent and that her targeting of Tutsi women for rape followed the same pattern as her orders to abduct and kill Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office.[2274] It also argues that the Trial Chamber correctly considered evidence of graves at the prefectoral office, Nyiramasuhuko's role in distributing condoms and ordering rapes, and her tacit approval of inflammatory speeches given during Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony as evincing her genocidal intent.[2275]

976. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a person in a position of authority may incur responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering another person to commit an offence if the order has a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act.[2276] Responsibility is also incurred when an individual in a position of authority orders an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that order. Ordering with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime.[2277]

977. Bearing in mind the prior determination that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion with respect to Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks,[2278] the Appeals Chamber has reviewed the relevant findings and evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber and identified by the parties to determine whether they sustain its conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko is responsible for ordering killings under Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation to these attacks.

978. With respect to the Mid-May Attack, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied upon the evidence of Witness TA as it concerns Nyiramasuhuko's conduct[2279] and recalled her evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's leading role in this attack in detail:

> Nyiramasuhuko was standing in the courtyard of the [Butare Prefecture Office] pointing out Tutsi refugees to the Interahamwe, saying as she pointed, "[t]his is another one, and another one and another one, and why are you leaving that one?" Those Tutsis were refugees. Witness TA testified that those Tutsis were beaten up and forced onto the pickup. Nyiramasuhuko pointed at three refugees who had been cut up and ordered that they be loaded onto the vehicle.[2280]

979. The Trial Chamber's analysis also reveals that it considered the Mid-May Attack at the prefectoral office in the context of other attacks that led to the killing of Tutsis who took refuge there.[2281] The Trial Chamber repeatedly concluded that Nyiramasuhuko issued orders to Interahamwe in the midst of the attacks at the prefectoral office, including orders to attack, rape, kill, and abduct refugees and that these orders were followed.[2282] These findings, in the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, sustain the conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko was in a position of authority and that her orders to abduct Tutsis from the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack were made with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that killings would be committed in the execution of such orders.

980. Furthermore, and contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's challenges, the Trial Chamber identified the victims of the killings underpinning her ordering conviction during the Mid-May Attack as the numerous Tutsi refuges who were forced on board the pickup truck and abducted from the prefectoral office.[2283] It made further findings that, from mid-May through mid-June 1994, Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office were killed at several different venues in Butare Prefecture.[2284] In reaching the conclusion that abducted refugees were killed, the Trial Chamber carefully considered the evidence that refugees were attacked and killed at the prefectoral office,[2285] as well as circumstantial and hearsay evidence that those removed refugees were killed.[2286] The Appeals Chamber has determined that the Trial Chamber has not erred in the assessment of this evidence.[2287] Consequently, while the Trial Chamber did not expressly identify the specific perpetrators of the killings, the precise means used to kill the victims, or the precise locations of the killings for those abducted during the Mid-May Attack, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that these omissions constitute an error. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber's factual findings and the evidence it relied upon sustain the finding that Nyiramasuhuko's orders to Interahamwe to load the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack had a direct and substantial effect on the subsequent killing of those individuals, and that these findings and evidence demonstrate that she possessed the requisite mens rea for ordering liability.

981. With respect to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber did not expressly conclude in its legal findings that Nyiramasuhuko ordered killings during these specific attacks.[2288] However, throughout the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, it determined that Nyiramasuhuko "ordered Interahamwe and soldiers to rape Tutsi women, and to kill other refugees",[2289] that "Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked many different women and children at the [Butare Prefecture Office], assaulted them and forced them aboard the pickup", that "Nyiramasuhuko gave orders to the Interahamwe to commit these crimes", and that "[t]he women and children were taken away from the [prefectoral office] and killed elsewhere."[2290] The Trial Chamber further concluded that "Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup" during this attack and that these Tutsis were abducted.[2291] In support of its findings, the Trial Chamber relied upon ample evidence that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to abduct Tutsis during the Night of Three Attacks[2292] and upon the evidence of two witnesses that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape and kill during that night.[2293]

[2289] See Trial Judgement, para. 2698 (emphasis added). The Appeals Chamber has previously considered and dismissed Nyiramasuhuko's contention that paragraph 2698 of the Trial Judgement does not reflect a finding that Nyiramasuhuko ordered killings during the Night of Three Attacks. See supra, Section IV.F.1(a).

On a second occasion, Nyiramasuhuko arrived at the [Butare Prefecture Office] in the same Hilux vehicle. Nyiramasuhuko summoned the Interahamwe present at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and told them to load people onto the vehicle. [2293] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2693 ("[Witness QBQ] corroborated Witness SS' observation that Nyiramasuhuko stood next to the vehicle and gave orders to the Interahamwe to '[r]ape the women and girls and kill the rest.'")

982. The Appeals Chamber also observes that, in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber concluded that the "abducted Tutsi refugees" were taken to "other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed" with respect to the Night of Three Attacks.[2294] This finding is based on the Trial Chamber's prior conclusions that women and children were taken away from the prefectoral office and killed during the Night of Three Attacks as well as its general findings that, from mid-May to mid-June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko participated in the abduction of Tutsi refugees from the prefectoral office in multiple truckloads and that these refugees were killed.[2295]

983. The Trial Chamber identified the victims of the Night of Three Attacks – Tutsi refugees abducted from the prefectoral office[2296] – and made findings that, from mid-May through mid-June 1994, Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office were killed at several different venues in Butare Prefecture.[2297] While the Trial Chamber did not expressly identify the specific perpetrators of the killings, the precise means used to kill the victims, or identify all the locations of the killings for those abducted during the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that these omissions constitute an error for the same reasons discussed above.[2298] The Appeals Chamber concludes that Nyiramasuhuko's orders to rape, kill, and abduct refugees during the Night of Three Attacks had a direct and substantial effect on the subsequent killing of refugees abducted and killed elsewhere. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the relevant findings and evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber demonstrate that Nyiramasuhuko possessed the requisite mens rea to incur ordering liability.

984. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's contentions regarding the assessment of her mens rea in relation to the crime of genocide, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber stated the following:

> Moving to the mens rea of genocide, it was clear that those staying at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were Tutsis and this fact was widely known throughout the préfecture. […] Furthermore, there was a pattern of killing at the [prefectoral office] itself. There were pits dug which contained those killed at the [prefectoral office]. […] In evaluating Nyiramasuhuko's mens rea at the [Butare Prefecture Office], the Chamber also considers Nyiramasuhuko's conduct at Nsabimana's swearing-in ceremony on 19 April 1994 […], where she tacitly approved of the inflammatory speeches of President Sindikubwabo and Prime Minister Kambanda, and also her distribution of condoms in June 1994 […], where she urged Hutus to rape Tutsi women. These actions can only be understood as intending to eliminate this group of persons. By attacking this group of wounded and sick Tutsi refugees, and in light of the evidence as a whole, the only reasonable conclusion is > that […] Nyiramasuhuko […] possessed the intent to destroy, in whole or in substantial part, the Tutsi group.[2299]

985. While Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering evidence concerning the pits as it is contested and insufficient, she does not substantiate this contention.[2300] The Appeals Chamber further notes her submission that it was an error to consider her tacit approval of Sindikubwabo's and Kambanda's inflammatory speeches at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony as the Trial Chamber did not find that her presence contributed to the commission of a crime and as it did not occur simultaneously with her having ordered the killing of Tutsis seeking refuge at the prefectoral office. However, these contentions do not demonstrate that it was irrelevant to consider this finding when assessing her mens rea for the crime of genocide in relation to her participation in the killings resulting from attacks at the prefectoral office. Similarly, Nyiramasuhuko's mere disagreement with the Trial Chamber's consideration of her role in distributing condoms and ordering rapes at a time unrelated to the attacks at the prefectoral office is dismissed. Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that such conduct was irrelevant to the Trial Chamber's consideration of whether she possessed the mens rea for genocide in relation to her participation in attacks at the prefectoral office. Moreover, and of the greatest significance, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's determination that Nyiramasuhuko possessed the requisite mens rea for genocide is principally predicated upon her role in the attacks that occurred there.[2301]

986. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber improperly considered her responsibility for rapes committed at the prefectoral office when determining that she possessed genocidal intent and convicting her of genocide for ordering killings during attacks at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber observes that the relevant indictment pleads Nyiramasuhuko's genocidal intent[2302] and that, in such circumstances, the facts by which such intent is to be established are matters of evidence that need not be pleaded.[2303] Consequently, even though the Trial Chamber found that there was insufficient notice that Nyiramasuhuko was charged with rapes as a form of genocide, this conclusion did not preclude the Trial Chamber from considering evidence of her ordering rapes at the prefectoral office when assessing whether she possessed the requisite mens rea for genocide in relation to conduct that could support this charge.

987. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's factual findings and the evidence it relied upon sustain the conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko bears responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings of Tutsis abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber's failure to provide a reasoned opinion regarding Nyiramasuhuko's responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering "the killings of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office"[2304] does not invalidate its decision to convict her on this basis. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of her mens rea with respect to her responsibility for ordering the crime of genocide.

4. Superior Responsibility

988. As discussed above, the Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish the killings perpetrated by the Interahamwe that she ordered during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks as well as for failing to prevent and punish the rapes perpetrated by the Interahamwe that she ordered during the Night of Three Attacks and one of the First Half of June Attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office. Specifically, the Trial Chamber recalled its finding that "Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali issued orders to Interahamwe and the Interahamwe complied with these orders and perpetrated the acts asked of them, which included abductions, rapes and killings."[2305] On this basis, as well as the fact that she "brought" the Interahamwe to the attacks and "considering the evidence in its entirety", the Trial Chamber concluded that she was in a superior-subordinate relationship with the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office and wielded effective control over them.[2306] The Trial Chamber further concluded that Nyiramasuhuko's orders to the Interahamwe demonstrated that she knew that they were about to commit crimes and had later done so, and that she failed to prevent these crimes and punish the Interahamwe for obeying her orders.[2307]

989. Based on these findings, the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent the rapes perpetrated by the Interahamwe that she ordered on the Night of Three Attacks and during one of the First Half of June Attacks and punish the Interahamwe who committed them.[2308] Having convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of the numerous Tutsis forced to board the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack and Night of Three Attacks,[2309] the Trial Chamber did not enter related convictions pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and considered her responsibility as a superior only in relation to sentencing for these crimes.[2310]

990. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding her responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office perpetrated by the Interahamwe and in convicting her under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes they committed.[2311] In particular, she contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) finding that she had a superior-subordinate relationship with, and effective control over, the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office; and (ii) convicting her pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for her active participation in the attacks, contrary to the concept of superior responsibility.[2312] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.[2313]

(a) Superior-Subordinate Relationship and Effective Control over the Interahamwe

991. In concluding that Nyiramasuhuko had a superior-subordinate relationship with, and effective control over, the Interahamwe to whom she issued orders at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Trial Chamber relied on "the evidence in its entirety", including, specifically, their compliance with her orders to abduct, rape, and kill Tutsi refugees and the fact that she "brought" the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office.[2314]

[2313] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko makes a number of additional submissions contending that the Trial Chamber erroneously convicted her pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for aiding and abetting rapes at the prefectoral office. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 750, 751, 756-758, 764-767; Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 206. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that Nyiramasuhuko's superior responsibility for crimes perpetrated by the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office is strictly limited to those crimes that she ordered. See Trial Judgement, paras. 5884-5886, 6087, 6093, 6182; supra, paras. 727, 740. Nyiramasuhuko was therefore not found responsible, or convicted, as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes that she aided and abetted during the Mid-May Attack. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's arguments in this regard as irrelevant.
[2314] Trial Judgement, paras. 5884, 6088.

992. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that she had a superior-subordinate relationship with, and effective control over, the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.[2315] She points out that the Trial Chamber failed to discuss the origin and nature of her authority over the Interahamwe, including the existence of a prior or subsequent superior-subordinate relationship between them.[2316] She further argues that the Trial Chamber's finding that she had effective control over the Interahamwe was unreasonably based on: (i) "the evidence in its entirety", in violation of her right to a reasoned opinion;[2317] (ii) the incorrect finding that she "brought" the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office when the evidence reflects that she merely accompanied them;[2318] and (iii) the Interahamwe's compliance with her orders to rape and kill Tutsis.[2319] With respect to the latter, Nyiramasuhuko contends that evidence that orders are followed is, on its own, insufficient to prove that the person who issued the orders has effective control.[2320] In addition, she asserts that the Trial Chamber failed to properly consider Witness FAP's testimony that Interahamwe did not obey her order to rape during one of the attacks[2321] and that the Trial Chamber made no findings that, for example, the Interahamwe reported to her or that she rewarded them for anything, which, in her view, demonstrates that her effective control was not established beyond reasonable doubt.[2322]

993. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber provided a reasoned opinion properly establishing Nyiramasuhuko's effective control over the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office based on its consideration of the totality of the evidence, including: (i) Nyiramasuhuko's role in transporting the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office; (ii) the de facto authority that flowed from her position as the Minister for Family and Women's Development; (iii) her membership in the MRND National Committee as a representative of Butare Prefecture; and (iv) the Interahamwe's repeated compliance with her orders.[2323] The Prosecution disputes Nyiramasuhuko's interpretation of Witness FAP's testimony[2324] and argues that the Trial Chamber was not obliged to find proof that the Interahamwe reported to her on a daily basis or were rewarded.[2325]

The Prosecution also argues that the Trial Chamber relied on Nyiramasuhuko's diary detailing meetings with Interahamwe in Ngoma Commune in May 1994 and with the Bureau politique on 12 May 1994 as well as on evidence that she wore military attire when she addressed the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 433-437. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the Prosecution unfairly relies on Defence evidence that the Trial Chamber did not expressly refer to, or specifically declined to consider, as opposed to Prosecution evidence. See Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, paras. 217, 218. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Nyiramasuhuko's evidence as to the meetings she attended in May 1994 in concluding that she was responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.

994. Nyiramasuhuko replies that the Trial Chamber could not have relied on her status within the MRND as indicative of her effective control over the Interahamwe because the Prosecution failed to adduce evidence that those who attacked the Tutsis at the prefectoral office were members of the MRND party and instead presented testimony suggesting that, at the time, "Interahamwe" was a broad term used to refer to all those who attacked, robbed, raped, and killed.[2326]

995. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "[i]ndicators of effective control are more a matter of evidence than of substantive law, and those indicators are limited to showing that the accused had the power to prevent [or] punish."[2327] It further recalls that the material ability to prevent or punish can only amount to effective control over the perpetrators if it is premised upon a pre-existing superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrators.[2328] The concepts of subordination, hierarchy, and chains of command need not be established in the sense of formal organisational structures so long as the fundamental requirement of effective control over the subordinate, in the sense of material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct, is satisfied.[2329]

996. Contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's submissions, the Trial Chamber discussed the nature of her authority over the Interahamwe, including the superior-subordinate relationship between them.[2330] Although the Trial Chamber did not expressly set out the basis on which this superior-subordinate relationship existed prior to each attack at the prefectoral office in relation to which it found her responsible, the Appeals Chamber considers that the pre-existing and hierarchical nature of the relationship between Nyiramasuhuko and the Interahamwe is implicit in its findings as demonstrated by the Trial Chamber's reliance on Nyiramasuhuko's repeated prominent role in the attacks reflected, notably, by the fact that she "brought" the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office

---

Though it stated in its summary of Witness SS's evidence that she testified that Nyiramasuhuko wore military attire, the Prosecution fails to explain why this is probative of her effective control over the Interahamwe or to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber relied on it in reaching its findings. Since the Prosecution's suggestion that the Trial Chamber relied on this evidence is speculative, the Appeals Chamber does not consider this aspect of its response or Nyiramasuhuko's reply.

[2324] The Prosecution points out that the witness's evidence reflects that the Interahamwe followed Nyiramasuhuko's order by raping Tutsi women. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 442, 443, referring to Witness FAP, T. 11 March 2003 p. 60, T. 13 March 2003 p. 10 (French).

and issued them orders to rape, abduct, and kill Tutsi refugees, with which they complied.[2331] In addition, the Trial Chamber's findings throughout the Trial Judgement also reveal that the Interahamwe considered Nyiramasuhuko as an authority figure and the direct evidence of her central role in leading them in the attacks at the prefectoral office is further supported by the influential status in Rwandan society she held at the time through her capacity as a government minister in both the Interim Government and its predecessor and her role as the elected representative of Butare Prefecture to the MRND National Committee.[2332]

997. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber considers that it was unnecessary for the Trial Chamber to determine that the Interahamwe involved in the attacks were necessarily directly connected to the MRND party because Nyiramasuhuko's stature in Rwandan society in general, including her position within the MRND party, provided only supplemental support to the direct evidence of her superior-subordinate relationship with the Interahamwe who complied with her orders during attacks at the prefectoral office.

998. Concerning Nyiramasuhuko's challenges to the finding that she wielded effective control over these Interahamwe, the Appeals Chamber rejects the assertion that the Trial Chamber violated her right to a reasoned opinion on the basis that it relied on "the evidence in its entirety" in arriving at its conclusion. It is clear that, through its reference to its reliance on the entirety of the evidence, the Trial Chamber merely intended to indicate that it reached its findings beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of the totality of the evidence adduced in accordance with the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[2333]

999. The Trial Chamber considered that Nyiramasuhuko's effective control over the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office "was evidenced by the fact that she brought them" there.[2334] The evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber shows that Nyiramasuhuko's transportation of the Interahamwe to and from the prefectoral office was an integral part of the attacks. In particular, the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses TA, SS, FAP, SU, and QBP testified not only that Nyiramasuhuko arrived at the prefectoral office alongside the Interahamwe,[2335] but that immediately after their arrival, she issued them orders to rape, abduct, and kill with which they [2332] Trial Judgement, paras. 8, 11, 244, 5669, 5676-5678. The Trial Chamber also stated that "Nyiramasuhuko was widely known as the Minister in charge of Women's Affairs and therefore would likely be recognisable." See ibid., para. 2698.

[2333] See Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 450; Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 789; Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, paras. 172-175, 399.

[2335] The Trial Chamber expressly found that Nyiramasuhuko arrived at the prefectoral office with Interahamwe and Ntahobali during the Mid-May Attack and Night of Three Attacks. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2644, 2738, 2781(i), complied, as she supervised and directed the attacks, standing against the vehicle as Tutsis were loaded into it and pointing out individuals to abduct.[2336] Given the methodical and repeated nature of the attacks against the Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office, it is evident from a contextual reading of this evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings that Nyiramasuhuko did not merely accompany the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office, but that she brought them there with the intention of effecting the attacks, and that they did so without dissent. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber considers it immaterial whether Nyiramasuhuko was driving the vehicle.[2337]

1000. In addition to Nyiramasuhuko's transportation of the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office to carry out the attacks, the Trial Chamber also relied on their compliance with her orders to rape, abduct, and kill Tutsi refugees as demonstrative of her effective control over the Interahamwe.[2338] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a superior's ability to issue binding orders that are complied with by subordinates is one of the indicators of effective control generally relied upon in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[2339]

1001. Nyiramasuhuko does not show that, given the context of the multiple attacks at the prefectoral office, during which she was present and played a leading role, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider the Interahamwe's repeated compliance with her orders highly probative of their superior-subordinate relationship and of her effective control over them. Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Interahamwe's compliance with her orders during the attacks was, on its own, insufficient to prove that she exercised effective control ignores that this was not the only factor relied on by the Trial Chamber. As recalled above, the Trial Chamber relied on evidence that Nyiramasuhuko played a decisive and pivotal role in the attacks by bringing the Interahamwe to the prefectoral office, and by issuing them orders. In its factual findings, the Trial Chamber also highlighted evidence that Nyiramasuhuko directed and supervised the Interahamwe

[2337] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber finds that paragraph 69 of the Kamuhanda Appeal Judgement does not demand another conclusion, contrary to Nyiramasuhuko's argument that, in this paragraph, "the Appeals Chamber states the evidence that a person is a passenger in a vehicle is not evidence that that person took attackers to the crime scene." See AT. 15 April 2015 p. 8.

as they carried out her orders, sometimes providing them with specific instructions as the attacks unfolded.[2340]

1002. The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that Witness FAP testified that Interahamwe disobeyed her order to rape during one of the attacks at the prefectoral office. Witness FAP expressly testified that, during the first attack of the Night of Three Attacks, Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women and that they carried out her orders.[2341] Witness FAP testified that, during subsequent attacks that night, Nyiramasuhuko issued orders to the Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women and that the Interahamwe loaded the Tutsis onto the vehicle but did not rape them on the spot.[2342] However, this does not necessarily indicate that the Interahamwe did not follow Nyiramasuhuko's order but reflects only that the women were not raped at the prefectoral office itself on those occasions. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness FAP explained that Nyiramasuhuko's instructions to select young women and young girls and to rape them before killing them were the catalyst for the abduction of the Tutsis.[2343] Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to properly consider Witness FAP's evidence that Interahamwe disobeyed one of her orders is therefore without merit.[2344]

1003. The Appeals Chamber is also unpersuaded by Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that the Prosecution's failure to adduce evidence that the Interahamwe reported daily to Nyiramasuhuko, or that she rewarded them, raised reasonable doubt as to her effective control over them. The reporting of subordinates to a superior and rewards by a superior for doing so are indicia relevant to determining effective control but are not a necessary requirement.[2345]

1004. Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that she had a superior-subordinate relationship with, and effective control over, the Interahamwe to whom she issued orders at the prefectoral office.

[2344] See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 929, 932. Since the Appeals Chamber rejects her contention that Witness FAP's testimony reflects that the Interahamwe disobeyed Nyiramasuhuko's orders, Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that the Prosecution failed to lead evidence that Nyiramasuhuko punished the Interahamwe when they disobeyed her orders, as described by Witness FAP, is similarly dismissed. See ibid., paras. 753, 754.
[2345] The Appeals Chamber recalls that, in the Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber upheld the Trial Chamber's reliance, with respect to establishing Kajelijeli's de facto superior position over Interahamwe, on evidence that the Interahamwe reported to him the details of the massacres they participated in following his instructions to kill Tutsis and orders to dress up and start work. However, the Interahamwe's daily reporting was only considered as one of several relevant evidentiary indicia of authority in the circumstances of the case and was not considered a necessary element for the establishment of superior authority in general. See Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 90. See also Ndahimana Appeal Judgement, para. 53, referring to Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 69.

(b) Superior Responsibility for Direct Participation in a Crime

1005. Nyiramasuhuko argues that by finding her responsible for ordering rapes and killings pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber unreasonably convicted her for her direct participation in the crimes in a manner that is contrary to the concept of superior responsibility because it is intended to criminalise the failure of a person to act.[2346] Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko asserts that "[t]he Trial Chamber erred in illogically applying effective control standards in circumstances pertaining to responsibility under Article 6(1), since it is self-evident that a person cannot prevent or punish the execution of an order given by that person."[2347]

1006. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber acted in accordance with the jurisprudence by considering evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's orders to the Interahamwe as indicative of her superior responsibility, and that such evidence may be used to establish responsibility pursuant to both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2348]

1007. Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on her orders to the Interahamwe and their compliance with these orders as evidence establishing her superior responsibility for these crimes. She further does not substantiate her contention that it is improper to find an accused criminally responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute where his conduct also meets the requirements of other forms of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute and to convict an accused on this basis when a conviction under Article 6(1) of the Statute has not been entered.[2349] Nyiramasuhuko's contention in this regard is dismissed without further consideration.

(c) Conclusion

1008. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in finding her responsible as a superior for failing to prevent the killing of refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office perpetrated by Interahamwe following her orders and punish the Interahamwe who committed them and in convicting her pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute in relation to the rapes committed by the Interahamwe following her orders at the Butare Prefecture Office.

5. Conclusion

1009. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting her for ordering the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute and as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes committed by Interahamwe upon her orders during the Night of Three Attacks and one of the First Half of June Attacks. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that she bore superior responsibility for the killings perpetrated by Interahamwe upon her orders during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks and in considering her responsibility in this regard in sentencing.[2350]

1010. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 23 through 25 and 28 through 31 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

G. Distribution of Condoms (Grounds 26 in part and 27)

1011. Based on Prosecution Witness FAE's evidence, the Trial Chamber found that, at the beginning of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko came to the Cyarwa-Sumo Sector, Ngoma Commune, and distributed condoms for the Interahamwe to be used in the raping and killing of Tutsi women in that sector.[2351] The Trial Chamber further found that Nyiramasuhuko gave the following order to the woman to whom she distributed the condoms: "[g]o and distribute these condoms to your young men, so that they use them to rape Tutsi women and to protect themselves from AIDS, and after having raped them they should kill all of them. Let no Tutsi woman survive because they take away our husbands."[2352]

1012. However, the Trial Chamber held that there was not "sufficient reliable evidence to show a link between Nyiramasuhuko's actions in distributing the condoms on this occasion, in addition to her utterances evincing her clear intent to target Tutsi women, and actual rapes committed against said Tutsi women."[2353] Moreover, although the Trial Chamber determined that Nyiramasuhuko's order to the woman to whom she distributed the condoms was direct and could not be considered ambiguous in the context of the rapes and large scale massacres committed throughout Butare Prefecture at that time, it found that her statements were more akin to a "conversation" and did not satisfy the "public" element of the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[2354] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko not guilty of genocide, rape as a crime against humanity, or direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to this incident.[2355] Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber found that "this circumstantial evidence shows Nyiramasuhuko's intent to destroy, in whole or in substantial part, the Tutsi group"[2356] and relied in part on this evidence to find that Nyiramasuhuko possessed the specific intent to commit genocide in relation to other events.[2357]

1013. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in: (i) its assessment of Witness FAE's evidence and in convicting her for the distribution of condoms at the beginning of June 1994; and (ii) finding that her specific intent to commit genocide was the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the evidence relating to this distribution.[2358] In light of these alleged errors, Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Appeals Chamber should overturn the Trial Chamber's findings and acquit her of the distribution of condoms at the beginning of June 1994.[2359]

1014. At the outset, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has clarified in Section IV.B.4 above that, contrary to what Nyiramasuhuko appears to suggest, she was not found guilty in relation to the distribution of condoms. The Trial Chamber only relied on this circumstantial evidence, among other, to find that Nyiramasuhuko possessed the specific intent to commit genocide.[2360] In this section, the Appeals Chamber will therefore consider Nyiramasuhuko's submissions only to the extent that they may show error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence concerning this incident as circumstantial evidence of her genocidal intent.

1. Assessment of Evidence

1015. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding, based on Witness FAE's testimony, that she distributed condoms in Cyarwa-Sumo Sector at the beginning of June 1994 to be used by the Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women.[2361] Specifically, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber: (i) unreasonably dismissed the inconsistencies between Witness FAE's prior statement and testimony in relation to whether Nyiramasuhuko personally handed out the condoms and the content of her statements as minor when the details added by the witness at trial "impl[ied] more active participation" by Nyiramasuhuko in the incident than the witness originally recounted;[2362] (ii) erred in dismissing additional inconsistencies between Witness FAE's prior statement and testimony with respect to whether Nyiramasuhuko had a gun with her and the seating arrangements of the persons in the vehicle from which she distributed the condoms;[2363] and (iii) unreasonably accepted Witness FAE's explanation that her prior statement may contain errors because she gave it in French, a language she had not mastered, without an interpreter while the record revealed that she spoke French and that she had the opportunity to review and correct her statement and was able to do so in French.[2364] Nyiramasuhuko asserts that, in these circumstances, the Trial Chamber should not have relied on Witness FAE's testimony or, at a minimum, should have required corroboration.[2365]

1016. Nyiramasuhuko further contends that the Trial Chamber shifted the burden of proof by stating that the evidence of Defence Witnesses WZNA, WNMN, and MNW "was not convincing enough to raise a reasonable doubt that FAE had remained at home during the events".[2366] She also argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably concluded that the testimonies of these three witnesses were inconsistent because they testified to seeing Witness FAE at different times, while it simultaneously acknowledged that they testified to seeing her in "separate contexts".[2367]

1017. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness FAE's evidence or in its assessment of Witnesses WZNA's, WNMN's, and MNW's evidence.[2368]

1018. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness FAE's prior statement indicates that Nyiramasuhuko arrived in a car outside her house with a doctor named Ndindabahizi and three Interahamwe, that Ndindabahizi handed her neighbour a box of condoms, telling her to give them to their "young supporters" to be put on "before raping the Tutsi women likely to be infected with AIDS", and that Nyiramasuhuko then stated that "Tutsi women are to be killed because they are taking away our husbands".[2369] In comparison, at trial, Witness FAE testified that after Ndindabahizi gave the box of condoms to her neighbour, Nyiramasuhuko handed the woman a second box of condoms and instructed her to "[g]o and distribute these condoms to your young men […] so that they use them to rape Tutsi women and to protect themselves from [AIDS], and after having raped them they should kill all of them", before stating: "Let no Tutsi woman survive because they take away our husbands."[2370]

1019. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the impugned differences between Witness FAE's testimony and her prior statement constitute material contradictions in her evidence. Nyiramasuhuko does not identify any actual inconsistencies in

The Appeals Chamber dismisses these unsubstantiated contentions. The Appeals Chamber also notes that Nyiramasuhuko's arguments related to her alibis and to Witness FAE's membership in a genocide survivor association have been addressed and dismissed above. See supra, Sections IV.C, IV.E.2. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 895; Nyiramasuhuko Reply Brief, para. 284.

Witness FAE's evidence but merely refers to the witness's omission to mention certain details of the incident in her prior statement. The Appeals Chamber considers that these differences reflect additional details concerning the incident elicited during Witness FAE's examination in court as a consequence of more detailed questions and the presence of interpreters. Witness FAE's prior statement and testimony are consistent with respect to the fact that Nyiramasuhuko came to the Cyarwa-Sumo Sector with Ndindabahizi and three Interahamwe at the beginning of June 1994 and handed out condoms to a woman with the instructions that they be given to Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women before killing them.[2371]

1020. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in accepting Witness FAE's explanation that any errors in, or discrepancies with, her prior statement were caused by the fact that she gave it in French, a language she was not fully confident in, without the assistance of an interpreter.[2372] As noted by the Trial Chamber, Witness FAE clarified that she had some knowledge of French but made it clear that it was not her mother tongue and also acknowledged that, although she made some corrections to her prior statement, she may have overlooked others as a result of her linguistic inability.[2373] In this context, Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that Witness FAE's explanation is not credible on the basis that the information sheet of her prior statement stated that the interview was conducted in French and that she corrected some errors in her prior statement does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in its acceptance thereof.

1021. For the same reasons, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to dismiss the inconsistencies between Witness FAE's prior statement and her testimony in relation to whether she carried a gun and the seating arrangements of her companions based on her explanation that her statement was given in French.[2374] Besides being minor issues, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber also noted and accepted Witness FAE's explanation that she did not mention Nyiramasuhuko's gun in her prior statement because she only responded to the questions she was asked by the Prosecution at the time, and that the discrepancy between her original description of Nyiramasuhuko as sitting in the "front" of the vehicle and her testimony that she sat in the "back" occurred because Nyiramasuhuko was sitting in the "back seat of the front cabin of the vehicle".[2375] Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's analysis in this regard.

1022. In addition, the Appeals Chamber emphasises that the Trial Chamber recognised that Witness FAE was the only Prosecution witness to implicate Nyiramasuhuko in the events at Cyarwa-Sumo Sector.[2376] It performed an in-depth assessment of Witness FAE's evidence, which it described as "extensive", "coherent", and "detailed", and ultimately found Witness FAE to be a "reliable witness who provided credible testimony" despite the "slight inconsistencies" in her testimony based on her knowledge of Nyiramasuhuko and her "proximity to the location where the incident occurred [which] placed her in a strong position to have witnessed the distribution of condoms".[2377] Considering that a trial chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony,[2378] and that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in dismissing the inconsistencies between Witness FAE's prior statement and her testimony, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on her testimony without corroboration.

1023. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof when assessing the evidence of Witnesses WZNA, WNMN, and MNW. The Trial Chamber stated that these witnesses provided hearsay accounts as to why it was "implausible" that Nyiramasuhuko distributed condoms "without any convincing or detailed analyses."[2379] It also determined that "Witness WNMN's assertions about Witness FAE were not sufficiently credible or convincing to undermine the veracity of Witness FAE's testimony under oath."[2380] In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, a plain reading of the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber was not stating that the evidence of these witnesses did not convince it that Witness FAE's testimony was false, but that their testimonies were unconvincing in the sense of lacking plausibility.[2381]

1024. Nyiramasuhuko's assertion that the Trial Chamber unreasonably concluded that it could not rely on Witnesses WZNA, WNMN, and MNW because there were inconsistencies in their testimonies as to whether Witness FAE was at home during "the events", despite also acknowledging that they saw her in "separate contexts", is also premised on a misreading of the Trial Judgement. First, Witness FAE testified that she was in hiding between April and June 1994,[2382] which was contradicted by Witnesses WZNA and WNMN who said that they saw her at her home and a neighbour's house during that time.[2383] The Trial Chamber noted that these witnesses were inconsistent as to when and where they saw Witness FAE but acknowledged that they may have seen her at different times and on different occasions, and ultimately rejected their evidence on this issue on the basis that it was "unbelievable" that during that time Witness FAE, a Tutsi, would have been at home or visiting a Hutu neighbour's home.[2384] Second, Witness FAE testified that she returned to her home at the beginning of June 1994, after which she saw Nyiramasuhuko distribute the condoms.[2385] This was challenged by Witness MNW's testimony that she did not see Witness FAE in June 1994.[2386] However, as noted by the Trial Chamber, both Witnesses WZNA and WNMN testified to seeing Witness FAE in June 1994.[2387] The Trial Chamber took this into account in concluding that it considered it "impossible to rely on these witnesses to establish that Witness FAE was not in the area in June 1994."[2388]

1025. The Appeals Chamber considers that when the Trial Judgement is read in its context, it is evident that the excerpts of the Trial Judgement relied on by Nyiramasuhuko to substantiate her argument refer to two distinct determinations of the Trial Chamber. Nyiramasuhuko therefore conflates separate issues concerning these witnesses' testimony as to Witness FAE's presence at her home between April and June 1994 and fails to demonstrate any contradiction in the Trial Chamber's analysis of their evidence.[2389]

1026. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of, and reliance on, Witness FAE's evidence to find that she distributed condoms in Cyarwa-Sumo Sector in June 1994 to be used by the Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women before killing them.

> The Chamber notes that Defence Witnesses MNW, WZNA and WNMN all provided hearsay accounts as to why the allegation is implausible, without any convincing and detailed analyses. Indeed, among the Defence witnesses there are inconsistencies as to when they saw Witness FAE. Witness MNW testified that she did not see Witness FAE in June 1994, whereas Witnesses WZNA and WNMN both testified as to seeing Witness FAE in June 1994. The Chamber considers it impossible to rely on these witnesses to establish that Witness FAE was not in the area in June 1994 or that Nyiramasuhuko did not visit the area at that time.

[2389] Nyiramasuhuko's contentions also ignore the detailed assessment of Witnesses WZNA's, WNMN's, and MNW's evidence undertaken by the Trial Chamber before rejecting it as not credible. See Trial Judgement, paras. 4971-4977, 4979-4982.

2. Nyiramasuhuko's Genocidal Intent

1027. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that her genocidal intent was the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the evidence relating to the distribution of condoms at the beginning of June 1994.[2390] In particular, she avers that, although genocidal intent can be inferred, it cannot be split from the actus reus and must be assessed with respect to the specific alleged crime, at the alleged time, and in the circumstances alleged.[2391] Thus, in her view, the Trial Chamber erred in using the distribution of condoms at Cyarwa-Sumo Sector to prove her genocidal intent to convict her of genocide committed at the Butare Prefecture Office.[2392] Nyiramasuhuko also contends that her alleged order to rape Tutsi women "because they take away our husbands" could also be reasonably explained by a "willingness to revenge on those women" rather than by the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi group.[2393]

1028. The Prosecution responds that the only reasonable conclusion from the totality of the evidence is that Nyiramasuhuko had the specific intent to commit genocide and that Nyiramasuhuko's explicit order to rape Tutsi women before killing them during the distribution of condoms at the beginning of June 1994 unequivocally reveals her genocidal intent.[2394] It also responds that Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the distribution of condoms could not be taken into account in the assessment of her genocidal intent for the crimes committed at different locations and different times is undeveloped and unsupported, and should be summarily dismissed.[2395] The Prosecution adds that there is no evidence to support the alleged other possible inference presented by Nyiramasuhuko and that her argument is based on an isolated and discrete piece of evidence rather than on the totality of the evidence.[2396]

1029. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's argument that, although genocidal intent can be inferred, it cannot be split from the actus reus and must be assessed with respect to the specific alleged crime, at the alleged time, and in the circumstances alleged, the Appeals Chamber recalls that genocidal intent may be inferred, inter alia, from evidence of other culpable acts systematically

[2392] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 899. Nyiramasuhuko also reiterates that the Trial Chamber erred in contravening its finding that it will not enter a conviction for genocide on the basis of any rapes that occurred and will only assess the alleged order to rape Tutsi women with respect to the count of rape as a crime against humanity, and that, accordingly, she was prejudiced. See ibid., paras. 896-898. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already clarified that Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted of genocide on the basis of any rapes and that she was not convicted in relation to her distribution of condoms. See supra, Sections IV.B.4, IV.F.1(b).

directed against the same group.[2397] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide for ordering killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks.[2398] With respect to Nyiramasuhuko's mens rea in relation to the crime of genocide, the Trial Chamber stated the following:

> Moving to the mens rea of genocide, it was clear that those staying at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were Tutsis and this fact was widely known throughout the préfecture. The Interahamwe were armed and forced the defenceless Tutsi refugees to board a Toyota Hilux. Those who refused were killed on the spot. Furthermore, there was a pattern of killing at the [Butare Prefecture Office] itself. There were pits dug which contained those killed at the [Butare Prefecture Office]. The Interahamwe were armed with traditional weapons. Ntahobali instructed them to spare no one. Likewise, Nyiramasuhuko issued instructions to rape the women.
> In evaluating Nyiramasuhuko's mens rea at the [Butare Prefecture Office], the Chamber also considers Nyiramasuhuko's conduct at Nsabimana's swearing-in ceremony on 19 April 1994 […], where she tacitly approved of the inflammatory speeches of President Sindikubwabo and Prime Minister Kambanda, and also her distribution of condoms in June 1994 […], where she urged Hutus to rape Tutsi women. These actions can only be understood as intending to eliminate this group of persons. By attacking this group of wounded and sick Tutsi refugees, and in light of the evidence as a whole, the only reasonable conclusion is that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and the other Interahamwe assailants possessed the intent to destroy, in whole or in substantial part, the Tutsi group.[2399]

1030. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko's distribution of condoms and statement evincing her intent to target Tutsi women occurred in the beginning of June 1994. In light of the time elapsed between the Mid-May Attack and this incident, this incident alone could not effectively demonstrate Nyiramasuhuko's specific intent when ordering killings of Tutsis at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack.[2400] However, as highlighted previously, the Trial Judgement reflects that the finding of Nyiramasuhuko's genocidal intent when ordering killings at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack – and the Night of Three Attacks – was predicated on her role in the attack that occurred then and there.[2401] In addition, the Trial Chamber also relied on additional circumstantial evidence that Nyiramasuhuko possessed the specific intent to commit genocide from 19 April 1994, when she tacitly approved Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches during Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony. Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in this regard. To the extent that the Trial Chamber relied on Nyiramasuhuko's distribution of condoms and statement evincing her intent to target Tutsi women as additional circumstantial evidence of Nyiramasuhuko's genocidal intent, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in this approach.

[2401] See supra, para. 985.

1031. Turning to Nyiramasuhuko's submission that her order to rape Tutsi women could also be reasonably explained by a willingness to take revenge on these women rather than by the specific intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi group, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded on the basis of the totality of the circumstantial evidence that the only reasonable inference was that Nyiramasuhuko possessed genocidal intent, especially in light of the fact that, during the distribution of condoms, she also uttered that, "after having raped [the Tutsi women,] they should kill all of them" and stated "Let no Tutsi woman survive".[2402] Her submission regarding another possible inference is therefore also dismissed.

3. Conclusion

1032. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the remaining part of Ground 26 and Ground 27 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

V. APPEAL OF ARSÈNE SHALOM NTAHOBALI

1033. The Trial Chamber found Ntahobali guilty of committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation to killings perpetrated between April and June 1994 at or near the IRST and the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office and the EER as well as for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[2403] The Trial Chamber also found Ntahobali guilty of rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting the rapes of Tutsi women at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the Butare Prefecture Office.[2404]

1034. Ntahobali raises challenges related to the fairness of the proceedings, his indictment, the status of Expert Witness Guichaoua, the admission and assessment of his co-accused's evidence, and the assessment of his alibis. He also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence and his responsibility in relation to the crimes perpetrated against Tutsis at the IRST and the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, and to the crimes perpetrated against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office and the EER. Ntahobali further alleges errors regarding the Trial Chamber's findings pertaining to the nexus between the crimes and the armed conflict, the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity, and the crime of persecution as a crime against humanity. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

The Trial Chamber also determined that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the killings and rapes that he ordered at the Butare Prefecture Office as well as the killings that he aided and abetted at or near the EER and took this into account as an aggravating factor in sentencing. See Trial Judgement, paras. 5849, 5886, 5917, 5971, 6056, 6086, 6220.

A. Fairness of the Proceedings

1035. Ntahobali raises challenges related to the amendment of Rule 90(G) of the Rules, the admissibility of documentary evidence, and the suspension of his lead investigator.[2405] He also submits that the cumulative effect of the violations of his right to a fair trial irreparably undermined his ability to fully defend himself.[2406] The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

1. Amendment of the Rules (Ground 1.7)

1036. At the 13th plenary session held on 26 and 27 May 2003, Rule 90(G) of the Rules, which addresses the scope of the cross-examination of witnesses, was amended to provide as follows:

> (G) (i) Cross-examination shall be limited to the subject-matter of the evidence-in-chief and matters affecting the credibility of the witness and, where the witness is able to give evidence relevant to the case for the cross-examining party, to the subject-matter of the case.
>
> (ii) In the cross-examination of a witness who is able to give evidence relevant to the case for the cross-examining party, counsel shall put to that witness the nature of the case of the party for whom that counsel appears which is in contradiction of the evidence given by the witness.
> (iii) The Trial Chamber may, in the exercise of its discretion, permit enquiry into additional matters.[2407]

1037. On 24 November 2008, Ntahobali requested the Trial Chamber to exclude the evidence of 14 Prosecution witnesses heard before the amendment or, alternatively, to recall the said witnesses for further cross-examination on the basis, inter alia, that the amendment of Rule 90(G) of the Rules rendered his trial unfair.[2408] On 19 January 2009, the Trial Chamber denied both requests, holding that Ntahobali had not demonstrated how the amendment of Rule 90(G) of the Rules prejudiced him and how he was prevented from putting his case to Prosecution witnesses during their cross-examination.[2409] The Trial Chamber concluded that the "Defence's right to a full defence

> (G) Cross-examination shall be limited to points raised in the examination-in-chief or matters affecting the credibility of the witness. The Trial Chamber may, if it deems it advisable, permit enquiry into additional matters, as if on direct examination.

ha[d] been safeguarded throughout the proceedings in conformity with the Statute and the Rules, irrespective of amendments which may have taken place."[2410]

1038. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to acknowledge that the application of the amended version of Rule 90(G) of the Rules resulted in prejudice and erred in denying his motion to recall witnesses heard before the said amendment or to exclude their evidence.[2411] Specifically, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber violated his right to a fair trial by applying different procedural rules to the conduct of the cross-examination of witnesses in the course of the trial.[2412] He avers that, until the amendment of Rule 90(G) of the Rules, he was prevented from cross-examining two-thirds of the Prosecution witnesses in an effective and fair manner due to the deficiencies of the rule prior to its amendment.[2413] He contends that, on the other hand, the Prosecution derived a considerable advantage from the provisions of the amended Rule 90(G) of the Rules, as it was permitted under the amended rule to cross-examine fully witnesses called by the Defence.[2414]

1039. In support of his contentions, Ntahobali argues that he was prevented from confronting witnesses with the statements of other witnesses in the case, questioning certain witnesses about their family ties or knowledge of other Prosecution witnesses, and attacking the credibility of Prosecution Witness QCB.[2415] As specific examples, Ntahobali refers to three instances in which he claims the Trial Chamber prevented him from: (i) confronting Prosecution Witness RE with the account given by her sister about Ntahobali's presence at the EER and at the Butare Prefecture Office even though, eventually, the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness RE to convict him;[2416] (ii) attacking the credibility of Prosecution Witness QCB about the location of roadblocks;[2417] and (iii) cross-examining Prosecution Witness FAM about Ruvurajabo.[2418] He adds

However, the Appeals Chamber observes that at no point under these grounds does Ntahobali allege that he was prevented from cross-examining Prosecution witnesses about their knowledge of other Prosecution witnesses on the basis of the previous version of Rule 90(G) of the Rules.

that, in other instances, his counsel clearly had to confine cross-examination to abide by the boundaries set by the Trial Chamber.[2419]

1040. Ntahobali further alleges that, in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber reproached him for not confronting Prosecution witnesses with his alibi during cross-examination, whereas the limitations imposed by the Trial Chamber on cross-examinations at the time prevented him from doing so.[2420] Ntahobali submits that the appropriate remedy is a stay of the proceedings or, alternatively, the exclusion of the evidence that he was prevented from testing during cross-examination or the application of caution towards this evidence by the Appeals Chamber or, in a further alternative, a reduction of his sentence.[2421]

1041. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's arguments should be dismissed as untimely and unsupported.[2422] It argues that Ntahobali only refers to two instances where he was disallowed to put questions in cross-examination and does not demonstrate how either of these involves the application of Rule 90(G) of the Rules.[2423] The Prosecution argues that Ntahobali merely repeats on appeal arguments previously raised at trial and fails to demonstrate any discernible error in the 19 January 2009 Decision on Exclusion of Evidence and Recall of Witnesses warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[2424]

1042. Ntahobali replies that the question is not whether he could cross-examine the witnesses but whether he suffered prejudice.[2425] He contends that, contrary to the Prosecution's allegation, he listed three examples in his appeal brief, referred to other incidents developed in his motion, and specified that his counsels had to limit their cross-examinations.[2426]

1043. The Appeals Chamber observes that Rule 6(C) of the Rules provides that an amendment of the Rules shall enter into force immediately, but shall not operate to prejudice the rights of the [2422] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 748, 752. [2425] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 28. Ntahobali further takes issue with the Prosecution's contention that he failed to raise contemporaneous objections stating that, once a decision was taken by the Trial Chamber, his counsel was no longer in a position to challenge that decision and that, after having his arguments rejected by the Trial Chamber, the appropriate remedy was an appeal against judgement, given the absence of a right to interlocutory appeal at the time. See ibid., para. 29.

[2426] Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 31, 32.

accused in any pending case.[2427] Accordingly, the pertinent question to be addressed when an amended rule becomes operative in on-going proceedings is whether the amendment will operate to prejudice the rights of the accused.[2428] The Trial Chamber rejected the Ntahobali 24 November 2008 Motion to Recall Witnesses on the merits, noting that Ntahobali had failed to demonstrate how the amendment of Rule 90(G) of the Rules prejudiced him and how he was prevented from putting his case to Prosecution witnesses.[2429]

1044. Ntahobali points to three examples to show that he was prejudiced because the Trial Chamber disallowed questions in the application of Rule 90(G) of the Rules prior to its amendment. In relation to Witness RE, the Appeals Chamber notes that counsel for Ntahobali was not permitted to question the witness on a statement allegedly made by her sister-in-law to an investigator of the Tribunal.[2430] The presiding judge held that counsel could not refer to a statement of another witness not made in testimony before the Trial Chamber as such a statement was untested by cross-examination and could not be verified by the Trial Chamber.[2431] As regards Witness QCB's testimony, the presiding judge intervened in the course of cross-examination by Ntahobali's counsel to ask counsel to explain the relevance of his question suggesting to Witness QCB that he had incorrectly placed the roadblock on a sketch of Butare Town drawn up by the witness in relation to counsel's intended line of questioning, while explicitly stating that the right to cross-examine on the sketch was, as such, not in question.[2432] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, neither of these two examples is premised on an application of an earlier version of Rule 90(G) of the Rules or demonstrates that the proposed line of questioning would have been allowed under the amended version of the rule. These examples do not therefore support Ntahobali's claim that he was prejudiced by the application of the previous version of the rule.

1045. With respect to Witness FAM's testimony, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali does not put forward his argument with any specific references but merely refers to the 24 November 2008 Motion to Recall Witnesses in general terms.[2433] The Appeals Chamber recalls that an appellant is required to substantiate his arguments in his appeal brief and not by reference to submissions made elsewhere.[2434] Ntahobali also does not substantiate his argument that counsel had to restrict their cross-examination of Prosecution witnesses by virtue of the Trial Chamber's application of Rule 90(G) of the Rules prior to its amendment.

1046. The Appeals Chamber observes that under this ground of appeal, Ntahobali largely repeats the arguments he raised before the Trial Chamber in his motion of 24 November 2008.[2435] A party cannot simply repeat arguments on appeal that did not succeed at trial in the hope that the Appeals Chamber will consider them afresh.[2436] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's rejection of his arguments constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber considers that none of Ntahobali's arguments supports his claim that the Prosecution was advantaged by the amendment of Rule 90(G) of the Rules.

1047. As for Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber reproached him for not having raised his alibi with Prosecution witnesses in cross-examination, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that: "Ntahobali made no mention of [his] alibi [for the period 26 or 27 May to 5 June 1994] prior to 29 September 2005. The Ntahobali Defence did not mention the alibi in its Pre-Trial Brief, opening statement or in its cross-examination of any of the Prosecution witnesses."[2437] The Appeals Chamber considers that this evaluation by the Trial Chamber concerns Ntahobali's failure to put forth timely notice of his alibi and does not concern, as Ntahobali claims, his alleged failure to address his alibi with Prosecution witnesses as such.

1048. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in denying the Ntahobali 24 November 2008 Motion to Recall Witnesses and dismisses Ground 1.7 of Ntahobali's appeal.

2. Admissibility of Documentary Evidence (Ground 1.10)

1049. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber imposed a set of rules on the admissibility of documentary evidence which contravened the Rules and the Appeals Chamber's directions, and denied him the opportunity to produce documentary evidence in support of his defence.[2438] He further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in law in applying the rules of admissibility of documentary evidence in a manner contrary to the rules established by the Appeals Chamber, which prevented him from mounting a full defence and caused him prejudice.[2439]

1050. The Prosecution did not respond to these submissions.[2440]

1051. In the absence of identification of the specific findings challenged and considering that Ntahobali's submissions are not substantiated, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 1.10 of Ntahobali's appeal without further consideration.

3. Suspension of Lead Investigator (Ground 1.12)

1052. On 16 July 2001, the Registrar suspended Thaddée Kwitonda, Ntahobali's lead investigator, on the basis that he was under investigation by the Prosecution.[2441] On 22 October 2001, Ntahobali orally moved for an adjournment of the proceedings.[2442] His request for adjournment was denied.[2443] The same day, Ntahobali moved the Trial Chamber to reinstate Thaddée Kwitonda as investigator on his Defence team.[2444] On 14 December 2001, the Trial Chamber found that the issue of reinstatement of a suspended investigator was an administrative matter resting with the Registry and accordingly declared Ntahobali's motion inadmissible.[2445] Thereafter, Ntahobali successively presented two candidates for Thaddée Kwitonda's replacement to the Registrar.[2446] The Registrar declined to appoint either of these two candidates.[2447] On 21 October 2002, Ntahobali sought judicial review of the Registrar's decisions by the President of the Tribunal and requested the President to order the assignment of one of his proposed candidates as investigator.[2448] On 13 November 2002, the President dismissed Ntahobali's request on the merits.[2449]

1053. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in denying his oral motion for an adjournment in violation of his right to have adequate time and facilities for the preparation of his defence as enshrined in Article 20(4)(b) of the Statute and in refusing to exercise jurisdiction when he moved for the reinstatement of his investigator in October 2001.[2450] He argues that investigators play a critical role during the trial proceedings and that the Registrar's decision to suspend his lead investigator impaired his ability to conduct meaningful cross-examinations, which encroached upon his fair trial rights.[2451]

1054. Ntahobali further submits that the Registrar's subsequent refusal to appoint either of the two candidates he proposed was arbitrary, unfounded, affected the fairness of the proceedings, and caused him serious prejudice as he was left without an investigator for more than 18 months.[2452] He also contends that the President erred in refusing to review the Registrar's decisions and in failing to acknowledge the violation of his right to obtain the attendance and examination of witnesses on his behalf under the same conditions as witnesses against him as enshrined in Article 20(4)(e) of the Statute.[2453]

1056. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's request for an adjournment was not premised on the fact that his investigator had been suspended, and that Ntahobali's vague claim that the Trial Chamber's decision breached his rights under Article 20(4)(b) of the Statute does not meet the burden of demonstrating that the Trial Chamber erred.[2457] It argues that Ntahobali fails to explain how the Trial Chamber erred in the 14 December 2001 Decision and that this ground of his appeal should be summarily dismissed.[2458]

1057. Ntahobali replies that it was clear from the record that the adjournment was requested on the basis, in part, of the absence of an investigator.[2459]

1058. As Ntahobali submits, his oral request for adjournment of 22 October 2001 was partly based on the suspension of his lead investigator.[2460] The Appeals Chamber acknowledges the critical role investigators play to Defence investigations. However, it considers that Ntahobali fails to substantiate his claim that the Trial Chamber erred in denying his request. Ntahobali generally emphasises the important role played by investigators and the fact that, without an investigator at his disposal, he could not conduct meaningful cross-examinations, without showing that the Trial Chamber erred in its reasoning and addressing the particular circumstances that led to the 22 October 2001 Oral Decision. The Appeals Chamber therefore declines to consider this part of Ntahobali's challenge any further.

1059. Similarly, Ntahobali does not substantiate his contention that the Trial Chamber erred in its 14 December 2001 Decision in declining to exercise jurisdiction to review the Registrar's decision to suspend Thaddée Kwitonda. The Appeals Chamber is mindful that, pursuant to its statutory obligation to ensure the fairness of the proceedings before it, any chamber has the inherent power to review administrative decisions where such decisions are closely related to issues involving the fairness of the proceedings.[2461] Ntahobali, however, only makes general submissions with regard to the alleged resulting prejudice without developing any argument to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in declining to exercise its inherent power in this particular instance.

1060. Turning to Ntahobali's challenges against the Registrar's refusal to appoint the investigators he proposed and the President Review Decision, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali fails to specify any instance on the trial record or the efforts he made, if any, to bring the matter of the Registrar's alleged arbitrary decisions and the President's alleged erroneous decision to the attention of the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is settled jurisprudence that if a party raises no objection to a particular issue before the trial chamber, in the absence of special circumstances, the Appeals Chamber will find that the party has waived its right to adduce the issue as a valid ground of appeal.[2462]

[2460] Ntahobali requested an adjournment of the trial in order for his newly appointed counsel to prepare his defence. Counsel submitted that this fact, coupled with the suspension of Ntahobali's lead investigator, warranted an adjournment so as to enable him to familiarise himself with the trial record and prepare Ntahobali's defence. See T. 22 October 2001 pp. 20-26.

1061. Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in stating in its 14 December 2001 Decision that it could not legally be seised of the matter regarding the reinstatement of the suspended investigator,[2463] the Trial Chamber may have given Ntahobali the impression that it would not entertain a motion for the review of decisions regarding the appointment of defence investigators per se. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that these circumstances justify its examination of the merits of Ntahobali's challenges against the Registrar's decisions and the President Review Decision despite Ntahobali's failure to raise his challenges before the Trial Chamber.

1063. With respect to the Registrar's decisions, the Appeals Chamber recalls that in the absence of established unreasonableness, there can be no interference with the margin of appreciation of the facts or merits underlying the administrative decision to which the maker of such an administrative decision is entitled.[2464] The onus of persuasion rests with the party contesting the administrative decision.[2465] In the instant case, Ntahobali takes issue with the outcome of the Registrar's assessment of his candidates, but fails to identify the alleged error in the Registrar's exercise of his discretionary power to appoint investigators at the expense of the Tribunal. His claim is therefore dismissed.

1064. As Ntahobali has failed to substantiate any of his challenges under Ground 1.12 of his appeal, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this ground of his appeal in its entirety.

4. Cumulative Effect of the Violations (Ground 1.13)

1065. Ntahobali submits that the cumulative effect of the violations of his right to a fair trial irreparably undermined his ability to rebut Prosecution evidence and fully and fairly defend himself.[2466] Specifically, he argues that even if the Appeals Chamber were to consider that the violations did not individually warrant a remedy, the cumulative effect of the delays incurred, the multiple violations of the Prosecution's disclosure obligations, the impossibility of conducting effective investigations in the absence of investigators, the refusal to recall witnesses, the Prosecution's instructions to witnesses to lie, the impossibility of effectively cross-examining Prosecution witnesses in view of the strict application of Rule 90(G) of the Rules, the fact that Judge Bossa could not observe several key witnesses, and the addition of a witness at the close of the Prosecution case, warrant a stay of proceedings or a significant reduction in sentence.[2467] In the alternative, Ntahobali argues that all evidence relating to these violations should be excluded.[2468]

1066. The Prosecution responds that, as Ntahobali provides no references for most of his contentions under this ground or fails to show how his contentions are relevant and essentially repeats "the meritless fair trial allegations" discussed in his other grounds, this ground of appeal should be summarily dismissed.[2469] The Prosecution argues that Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate any error on the Trial Chamber's part that occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[2470]

1067. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found no violation of Ntahobali's fair trial rights in relation to his allegations regarding: (i) the suspension of his lead investigator and the Registrar's refusal to appoint the investigators he proposed; (ii) the refusal to recall witnesses; (iii) the scope of cross-examination under former Rule 90(G) of the Rules; (iv) the fact that Judge Bossa could not observe several key witnesses; and (v) the addition of Witness FA at the close of the Prosecution case.[2471]

[2466] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 152, 153. In his notice of appeal, Ntahobali also argued that the Trial Chamber was aware of many irregularities raised in this case but erred in failing or refusing to find that they individually or collectively prejudiced him. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 77, 78. As Ntahobali has failed to reiterate and substantiate this allegation in his appeal brief, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider it.

[2468] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 155, 156. In his notice of appeal, Ntahobali also submitted that the Appeals Chamber should award him compensation for the violation of his fair trial rights in conjunction with the other violations raised in his notice of appeal. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 81.

[2470] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 765.
[2471] See supra, Sections III.C, III.D, III.G, V.A.1, V.A.3.

1068. In addition, although the Appeals Chamber found that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to disclose the Amici Curiae Reports related to the allegations of false testimony to Ntahobali in a timely manner, the Appeals Chamber concluded that this violation did not cause him prejudice and did not find that Ntahobali's fair trial right had been violated as the result of the Prosecution's alleged "instructions to witnesses to lie."[2472] While the Appeals Chamber also found that the Trial Chamber erred in its 24 October 2001 Oral Decision which denied Ntahobali's request to postpone the cross-examination of Witness TA based on the Prosecution's failure to comply with its disclosure obligations, it concluded that Ntahobali had not demonstrated that the error resulted in any prejudice.[2473]

1069. With respect to the alleged delays incurred, the Appeals Chamber considered that a remedy for Ntahobali's violation of his right to initial appearance without delay had been granted by the Trial Chamber and that Ntahobali had not demonstrated that this remedy was not proportionate to the gravity of the harm he suffered.[2474] The Appeals Chamber will determine below in Section XII the appropriate remedy for the prejudice resulting from the violation of Ntahobali's right to be tried without undue delay.[2475]

1070. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber considers that there is no cumulative prejudice to assess as a result of Ntahobali's allegations of violation of his fair trial rights and that no further remedy is warranted. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the cumulative effect of the violations of his fair trial rights recognised by the Trial Chamber and the Appeals Chamber warrant further remedy than the remedies granted by the Trial Chamber and the Appeals Chamber. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 1.13 of Ntahobali's appeal.

B. Indictment (Grounds 2.1 to 2.7)

1071. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in authorising the Prosecution to amend his indictment to add charges of superior responsibility, that he was not charged with the criminal conduct on the basis of which he was convicted or lacked notice thereof, and that he was materially prejudiced in the preparation of his defence.[2476] Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber overturn all his convictions.[2477]

1072. The Appeals Chamber will first examine Ntahobali's contention related to the amendment of the indictment, before turning to his submissions related to notice of the allegations pertaining to the IRST, the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, the Butare Prefecture Office, the EER, and to his superior responsibility. The Appeals Chamber will conclude this section by discussing Ntahobali's allegation of prejudice resulting from the cumulative effects of the defects in the Indictment.

1. Amendment of the Indictment (Ground 2.6)

1073. As noted in relation to Ground 3 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal,[2478] the Prosecution was granted leave on 10 August 1999 to amend the indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali, which included adding six new counts, consolidating two existing ones in a single count, and adding in relevant counts the allegation that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[2479] In deciding to grant the Prosecution leave to amend the indictment as requested, the Trial Chamber held that there was no need to inquire whether or not a prima facie case had been established in support of the new counts since it had only been seised of a motion to amend the indictment pursuant to Rule 50 of the Rules.[2480] The Trial Chamber only satisfied itself that the Prosecution "provided sufficient grounds both in fact and in law".[2481]

[2476] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 82-151; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 158-356. To facilitate readibility, the Appeals Chamber will use the term "Indictment" in the body text of the present section when referring to the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment.

[2481] 10 August 1999 Oral Decision, p. 4. See also ibid., p. 3; 10 August 1999 Decision, paras. 16-18. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber reiterated that it "was not required to make a prima facie determination in considering the Prosecution's Motion to add a count of rape against Nyiramasuhuko in 1999" since this requirement was added to Rule 50 in 2004. See Trial Judgement, para. 2157.

1074. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in granting the Prosecution leave to amend the indictment to add new counts and to charge him pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[2482] Specifically, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in law in considering that there was no need to inquire whether or not a prima facie case had been established prior to authorising the addition of the charge of superior responsibility. He argues that, although at the time Rule 50 of the Rules did not textually require the verification of the existence of prima facie evidence, the Trial Chamber was nonetheless obliged to proceed with some analysis in order to authorise the addition of new charges and that, holding otherwise, would render the objective of Rule 50 of the Rules meaningless and violate the principle of presumption of innocence.[2483] He posits that, in the absence of any evidence to justify the Prosecution's request to amend the indictment, it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber to grant it.[2484]

1075. Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber violated its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion by failing to consider his arguments regarding the addition of the charge of superior responsibility and by failing to mention how the amendment sought met the relevant requirements.[2485] He argues that, by merely referring to the Prosecution's submissions, which did not provide any explanation as to the reason why the addition of superior responsibility was justified, the Trial Chamber could not have validly justified its decision.[2486] For these reasons, he requests that the findings of superior responsibility be reversed and that his sentence be revised.[2487]

1076. The Prosecution responds that, at the time the indictment was amended to include allegations of Ntahobali's superior responsibility, Rule 50 of the Rules did not require that a trial chamber make a determination whether prima facie evidence supported the requested amendment and that the Trial Chamber consequently did not err in law in following the rule as it was at that time.[2488] It contends that Ntahobali's arguments are in any event irrelevant because he does not show how he was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber observing the applicable law or by the alleged lack of reasoned opinion.[2489]

1077. In the section addressing Ground 3 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal, the Appeals Chamber has already addressed and rejected similar arguments raised by Nyiramasuhuko.[2490] There, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Liu dissenting, concluded that the allegation that the Trial Chamber erred in law by not requiring, at the time, the Prosecution to present a prima facie case in support of the new counts was without merit.[2491] Ntahobali's submissions in this regard do not raise any additional arguments in this respect and the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Liu dissenting, likewise dismissed them.

1078. As regards Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber violated its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's decision to authorise the amendment of the indictment clearly reflects consideration of Ntahobali's submissions.[2492] Recalling that, when an appellant alleges on appeal that his right to a fair trial has been infringed, he must not only prove that the trial chamber violated a provision of the Statute or the Rules but also that this violation caused prejudice,[2493] the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali also fails to show how the alleged lack of explanation of the Trial Chamber for its decision to reject his submissions has any impact on the outcome of the decision. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how any error regarding the Trial Chamber's articulation of its reasoning for concluding that it was satisfied that there was a "sufficient factual and legal basis" for granting the requested amendments[2494] would have caused prejudice to Ntahobali. In the absence of any demonstrated prejudice, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions pertaining to the violation of his right to a reasoned opinion.

1079. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Liu dissenting, dismisses Ntahobali's contention related to the amendment of the indictment.

2. Institut de Recherche Scientifique et Technique (Ground 2.1)

1080. Based on Prosecution Witness QCB's testimony, the Trial Chamber found that, on 21 April 1994, Ntahobali participated in the abduction of approximately 40 Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and ordered the Interahamwe present at the roadblock to take them to a location in Butare Town between the IRST and the Laboratory[2495] to join other Tutsis who had been arrested and transported there.[2496] The Trial Chamber found that, at that location, Ntahobali issued orders to the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis, that his orders were followed, and that approximately 200 Tutsis were killed.[2497] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 8, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 10) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering these killings.[2498]

1081. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ntahobali with respect to this allegation, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 6.15 and 6.35 of the Indictment.[2499] It found that the allegation concerning Ntahobali's responsibility for crimes committed at the IRST was not specifically pleaded in the Indictment and that the Indictment was therefore defective in this regard.[2500] However, the Trial Chamber determined that this defect was cured through post-indictment communications.[2501] It concluded that "Ntahobali was reasonably able to understand the nature of the charges against him" and that he suffered no prejudice in the preparation of his defence.[2502]

[2495] For the purposes of clarity, the Appeals Chamber will, as the Trial Chamber did in the Trial Judgement, generally refer to the location "between the IRST and the Laboratory" as the "IRST".
[2496] Trial Judgement, paras. 1475, 1480. See also ibid., para. 5782.
[2497] Trial Judgement, para. 1480. See also ibid., para. 5782.
[2498] Trial Judgement, paras. 5786, 5971, 6053-6055, 6100, 6101, 6121, 6168, 6169, 6186. During the appeals hearing, Ntahobali argued that, according to paragraph 1480 of the Trial Judgement, he was convicted of two incidents in relation to the IRST, namely: (i) his participation in the abduction of approximately 40 Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and their transfer to the IRST to be killed; and (ii) his orders to take the Tutsis stopped at the roadblock to the IRST and kill them. See AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 28-30. The Appeals Chamber finds that, read as a whole, the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that Ntahobali was convicted on the basis of the orders he gave at the IRST, which resulted in the killing of approximately 200 Tutsis and that the events at the Rugira roadblock did not serve as a separate basis for conviction.
[2499] Trial Judgement, para. 1457, fns. 3495, 3496. Paragraphs 6.15 and 6.35 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment read as follows:

> 6.15 On 27 April 1994, the Interim Government ordered roadblocks to be set up, knowing that the roadblocks were being used to identify the Tutsi and their "accomplices" for the purpose of eliminating them.
>
> 6.35 From April to July 1994, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali also travelled throughout Butare préfecture in the search for the Tutsi. When the victims were located, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali abducted them and took them to various locations, where they were executed.

[2501] Trial Judgement, paras. 1461-1464.
[2502] Trial Judgement, para. 1464. See also ibid., para. 5787.

1082. Ntahobali submits that his responsibility for the abductions of Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and the killings perpetrated at the IRST was not pleaded in the Indictment and that such defect was neither curable nor cured.[2503] The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali had sufficient notice that he was charged with ordering the killings of Tutsis perpetrated at the IRST.[2504] 1083. As noted by the Trial Chamber, paragraph 6.15 of the Indictment was not relied upon in support of any counts in the charging section of the Indictment.[2505] Paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment, conversely, was relied upon in support of, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2506] However, in the context of the killings at the IRST, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that paragraph 6.35 is overly broad given the expansive date range and the Prosecution's failure to specify therein the location and the circumstances of this event, Ntahobali's role in the killings, and the identity of the physical perpetrators of the killings. This information was not provided anywhere else in the Indictment. While the Indictment clearly indicates that Ntahobali was alleged to have led a group of Interahamwe, exercised authority over Interahamwe militiamen in Butare Prefecture during the relevant events, and "organized, ordered, and participated" in massacres,[2507] it is vague as to which form or forms of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute Ntahobali was specifically charged with in relation to paragraph 6.35. The Appeals Chamber therefore concurs with the Trial Chamber that the Indictment was defective in relation to the allegation concerning the IRST. The question before the Appeals Chamber is whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects were curable and, if not, whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects were cured.

(a) Whether the Defects Were Curable

1084. Ntahobali submits that the defects in the Indictment in relation to the allegation concerning the IRST could not be cured as this allegation constituted a separate charge which should have been pleaded in the Indictment.[2508] In particular, he contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment as the basis of his convictions for the crimes committed at the IRST as: (i) reading the Indictment as a whole, paragraph 6.35 could only be understood as relating to the Butare University Hospital; (ii) the Trial Chamber never mentioned that the events at the IRST were related to paragraph 6.35 when denying his request for acquittal under Rule 98*bis* of the Rules but, instead, concluded that this paragraph only concerned events taking place outside Butare Town; and (iii) the Prosecution itself did not indicate that Witness QCB's evidence was related to paragraph 6.35 when responding to Ntahobali's request for acquittal.[2509] In the alternative, Ntahobali submits that the addition of an entire massacre site through material facts subsequently disclosed led to a radical transformation of the case against him which caused him prejudice.[2510] In his view, the omission of the IRST allegation from the Indictment, the body of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, and the Prosecution's opening statement demonstrates that the Prosecution never intended to charge him in relation to the crimes perpetrated at the IRST.[2511]

1085. The Prosecution responds that paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment is not limited to incidents at the Butare University Hospital but applies to locations "throughout" Butare Prefecture, which necessarily includes Butare Town.[2512] According to it, the fact that the Trial Chamber referred to an incident outside Butare Town as an example of conduct that could fall under paragraph 6.35 cannot be interpreted to mean that the paragraph only concerned events outside Butare Town.[2513] The Prosecution also emphasises that, although it did not refer to Witness QCB as supporting paragraph 6.35 in its Rule 98*bis* Response, it was clear that the list of witnesses it identified was not exhaustive.[2514]

1086. Ntahobali replies, in contrast with his contention in his appeal brief that paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment could only have been understood as referring to the Butare University Hospital, that it could also have been understood as relating to crimes committed outside Butare Town.[2515] He highlights that this was the interpretation he relied on in his Rule 98*bis* motion and contends that, if the Trial Chamber considered that paragraph 6.35 also concerned crimes committed inside Butare Town, such as at the IRST, it had the duty to alert him that his understanding that the paragraph solely related to events outside Butare Town was erroneous.[2516] In the same vein,

Ntahobali argues that, instead, the Trial Chamber only referred to a witness's evidence regarding events committed outside Butare Town in its Rule 98*bis*

Ntahobali contends that it would be unreasonable to believe that the Prosecution would not have listed Witness QCB as testifying in support of paragraph 6.35 in its Rule 98*bis* Response had it considered that the witness's evidence related to the allegations set out in this paragraph.[2517]

1087. As discussed earlier, the Appeals Chamber finds that the heading "Butare University Hospital" on page 32 of the Indictment preceding paragraphs 6.34 to 6.39 of the Indictment is misleading as to the location of the crimes mentioned in the paragraphs following this headline.[2518] However, a plain reading of paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment and the Indictment as a whole nonetheless unambiguously reveals that this heading is only relevant to paragraph 6.34 and that the allegation set out in paragraph 6.35 relates to the Butare Prefecture as a whole, including Butare Town. Considering the very contents of paragraph 6.35, it would be unreasonable to conclude that the paragraph was limited to events at the Butare University Hospital or crimes committed outside Butare town.[2519]

1088. Further, a review of the Rule 98*bis* Decision does not support Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber concluded that paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment only concerned events taking place outside Butare Town. It is apparent that, in this decision, the Trial Chamber's reference to events near the border with Burundi outside Butare Town was not aimed at limiting the geographical scope of this paragraph to events taking place outside Butare Town, but was merely used to dismiss the Defence's contention that no evidence supporting paragraph 6.35 was presented to support the allegation that Ntahobali travelled throughout Butare Prefecture in search of Tutsis.[2520] Ntahobali's Rule 98*bis* Motion appears to reflect his understanding that paragraph 6.35

Decision, failing to discuss the killing of approximately 200 victims at the IRST, in Butare Town. He also points out that the Witness Summaries Grid referred only to crimes committed outside Butare Town. See ibid., paras. 46, 47.

[2517] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 48.

[2518] See supra, para. 512. The Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 6.34 on page 32 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment is directly preceded by the heading "Butare University Hospital". Paragraphs 6.35 to 6.39 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment are not directly preceded by any heading, whereas other paragraphs in the Indictment are presented under different headings referring to specific locations.

[2520] See Rule 98*bis* Decision, para. 151 (internal references omitted), which reads as follows:

> The Chamber recalls that Paragragh 6.35 of the Amended Indictment alleges that from April to July 1994, Arsène Shalom Ntahobali travelled throughout the Butare Préfecture in search of Tutsi, abducted them and took them to various locations where they were killed. The Defence submits that the evidence adduced by the Prosecution relates to the city of Butare only and that no evidence was adduced that Arsène Shalom Ntahobali travelled throughout the Préfecture in search of Tutsi. The Chamber notes that Prosecution Witness TQ testified that Arsène Shalom Ntahobali travelled as far as the Burundian border to stop the evacuation of Tutsi children. The Chamber finds that the evidence led by this witness, if believed, could be sufficient to satisfy a reasonable trier of fact beyond reasonable doubt of Arsène Shalom Ntahobali's responsibility under this paragraph. Acquittal under Rule 98*bis* is therefore denied regarding Paragragh 6.35 of the Amended Indictment.

See also Ntahobali Rule 98*bis* Motion, paras. 82, 83.

only concerned events taking place outside Butare Town.[2521] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to clarify its understanding that the broad allegation pleaded in paragraph 6.35 was not limited to crimes committed outside Butare Town as suggested by Ntahobali. That being said, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber erred in its decision to limit its analysis to addressing Ntahobali's incorrect assertion that no evidence of his involvement in acts outside Butare Town had been presented by the Prosecution and to dismiss Ntahobali's motion for acquittal on this basis.

1089. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the fact that the Prosecution did not list Witness QCB's evidence as supporting paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment in its Rule 98*bis* Response was indicative that the witness's testimony did not fall within this paragraph. The Prosecution's use of the expression "and so on" following its enumeration of the Prosecution witnesses who gave evidence in relation to paragraph 6.35 clearly indicated that this list was not exhaustive.[2522]

1090. The Appeals Chamber finds that the allegation concerning the IRST did not constitute a new charge but fell within the broader allegation relating to the abduction and killing of Tutsis throughout Butare Prefecture pleaded in paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the material facts on which the Trial Chamber entered its conviction led to a radical transformation of the Prosecution case against Ntahobali, nor that these facts could have, on their own, supported a separate charge.[2523] As vague as the charge set out in paragraph 6.35 was, it nonetheless clearly pleaded the involvement of Ntahobali in the abduction and killings of Tutsis in Butare Prefecture from April to July 1994.

1091. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ntahobali's argument that the material facts on which the Trial Chamber entered its conviction were not part of the Prosecution case against him. It is true that, despite being in possession of information about Ntahobali's involvement in the killings at the IRST from Witness QCB since 1999, the Prosecution did not expressly refer to the killings perpetrated at the IRST in the Indictment, the text of its pre-trial brief, or its opening statement. However, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, the disclosure to Ntahobali in December 1999, and again in November 2000, prior to the filing of the operative indictment, of

[2522] Rule 98*bis* Response, para. 128.
[2523] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the possibility of curing the omission of material facts from the indictment is not unlimited. It is settled jurisprudence that the "new material facts" should not lead to a "radical transformation" of the Prosecution case against the accused. If the new material facts are such that they could, on their own, support separate charges, the Prosecution should seek leave from the trial chamber to amend the indictment and the trial chamber should only grant leave if it is satisfied that it would not lead to unfairness or prejudice to the Defence. See Bagosora et al. Appeal Decision on Exclusion of Evidence, para. 30; Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008, para. 20; Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 406.

Witness QCB's prior statement concerning Ntahobali's involvement in the events at the Rugira roadblock and the IRST on 21 April 1994 shows that the IRST killings formed part of the Prosecution case at the time the Indictment was issued.[2524] That Ntahobali's participation in the IRST killings continued to be part of the Prosecution case after the Indictment was issued is further reflected by the summary of Witness QCB's anticipated testimony appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief.[2525]

1092. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that the defects in the Indictment regarding Ntahobali's responsibility for the killings perpetrated at the IRST were curable. The Appeals Chamber now turns to consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects were cured by the provision of clear, consistent, and timely information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge.

(b) Whether the Defects Were Cured

1093. The Trial Chamber determined that the Indictment was cured through the disclosure of Witness QCB's Summary and Statement.[2526]

1094. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects in the Indictment concerning the IRST events had been cured and that he was put on notice that the Prosecution intended to prove that he was criminally responsible for ordering the killings perpetrated by Interahamwe at the IRST.[2527] In support of his claim, Ntahobali argues that neither the Indictment nor any subsequent information provided him notice that he was alleged to have "ordered" Interahamwe to kill Tutsis at the IRST or identified the perpetrators.[2528] He generally contends that the summaries of the witnesses' anticipated evidence appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief relied upon by the Trial Chamber could not put him on notice of the allegations against him as the Prosecution failed to specify to which paragraphs of the Indictment the summaries referred, in violation of Rule 73*bis*(B)(iv)(c) of the Rules.[2529] Ntahobali further points out that Witness QCB's

[2524] Statement of Witness QCB of 7 April 1999, signed on 9 October 1999, disclosed in redacted versions on 10 December 1999, 15 November 2000, and 18 September 2001. See 10 December 1999 Disclosure; 15 November 2000 Disclosure; *The Prosecutor v. The unredacted version of Witness QCB's 7 April 1999 statement was disclosed on 1 October 2001 and admitted into evidence on 27 March 2002 as Exhibit D29 (confidential) ("Witness QCB's Statement"). 1095. The Prosecution responds that Witness QCB's Summary and Statement sufficiently notified Ntahobali of his involvement in the killing of Tutsis at the IRST.[2531] It argues that its pre-trial brief complied with Rule 73*bis*(B)(iv)(c) of the Rules as it referred to the counts that each witness's anticipated testimony would support.[2532] It also highlights that paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment, which is included in all relevant charges, expressly pleaded that Ntahobali "ordered" massacres.[2533] In its view, the identity of the physical perpetrators and the information as to which roadblock Tutsis were arrested or kept at were not material facts that had to be pleaded in the Indictment.[2534] The Prosecution adds that, in any event, Witness QCB's Summary indicated that Ntahobali supervised Interahamwe and Ntahobali's claim that he was informed about the wrong roadblock has no basis.[2535] It also contends that the conduct of Ntahobali's defence shows that he fully understood the case against him with respect to the IRST events and did not suffer prejudice.[2536] In this respect, the Prosecution points out that the Trial Chamber discussed lack of notice proprio motu, that Ntahobali never claimed at trial that his ability to defend himself in relation to this event had been impaired because of lack of notice, and that Ntahobali thoroughly cross-examined Witness QCB on the matter.[2537]

1096. Ntahobali replies that paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment could not serve as a basis to put him on notice that he was charged with "ordering" killings at the IRST as this paragraph was too general

Ntahobali emphasises that the Trial Chamber accepted that Witness QCB's Statement had not been properly reported by the Prosecution investigators as, instead of saying "I continued towards Mukoni when I heard screams", the witness meant that he had left the Rugira roadblock and then had gone to the IRST where he witnessed people crying and getting killed. Ntahobali argues that this demonstrates that he could not have understood that Witness QCB was expected to testify about killings committed at the IRST. See ibid., para. 177, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 1479. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 61, 62.

[2535] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 770, 771. The Prosecution points out that Witness QCB's Summary does not state whether the gathered Tutsis came from the roadblock close to Ntahobali's parents' house or from the close-by Rugira roadblock. It also argues that the reference to Mukoni in Witness QCB's Statement did not provide inconsistent information as Mukoni is very close to the IRST. See ibid., paras. 771, 772. The Prosecution further adds that Witness QCB's Statement supplied a precise date for the incident. See AT. 15 April 2015 p. 66.

to be interpreted as comprising this form of responsibility.[2538] He also asserts that the identity of the physical perpetrators and the abduction of the Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock were material facts and emphasises that the Trial Chamber expressly concluded that Witness QCB's Summary did not give him notice that he supervised Interahamwe in relation to the events at the IRST.[2539] He maintains that Witness QCB's Summary and Statement did not give clear notice that crimes were committed at the IRST and that he was alleged to have been present.[2540]

1097. In addition, Ntahobali claims that he did not understand that he was accused of having ordered the kidnapping of 40 Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and the killing of 200 Tutsis at the IRST prior to the testimony of Witness QCB and, consequently, was seriously prejudiced in the preparation of his defence.[2541] He argues that the burden rests on the Prosecution to demonstrate on appeal that his ability to prepare a defence was not materially impaired by the lack of notice on the grounds that: (i) he had objected to the vagueness of paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment and the lack of notice concerning the modes of liability at trial, although he unfortunately omitted to list the allegation concerning the IRST among the ones falling outside the Indictment in his closing brief;[2542] and (ii) the Trial Chamber was clear that objections related to the Indictment would not be granted and should be addressed in closing briefs.[2543] According to Ntahobali, the fact that the Trial Chamber raised this issue proprio motu further demonstrates that the Prosecution bears the burden of establishing the absence of prejudice, which it fails to do.[2544] In any event, he develops his allegation of prejudice by submitting that: (i) he was not able to conduct any meaningful investigation to prepare for the cross-examination of Witness QCB; (ii) the cross-examination of Witness QCB demonstrates that he was not adequately prepared to refute the allegations made by the witness; (iii) he did not call any witness to challenge Witness QCB's evidence; (iv) his motion to recall Witness QCB reflects that he had not understood that he was alleged to have ordered the killings at the IRST; and (v) the Trial Chamber's reliance on the absence of cross-examination of

Witness QCB to deny the witness's recall demonstrates that he was not able to effectively cross-examine the witness.[2545]

1098. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's general argument that the summaries of the Prosecution witnesses' anticipated evidence appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief could not inform him of the allegations against him because they were not explicitly linked to any paragraph in the Indictment.[2546] While it would have been preferable for the Prosecution to provide greater specificity given the vagueness of the Indictment and its pre-trial brief regarding many allegations, the contents of Witness QCB's Summary[2547] and the fact that it was expressly marked relevant to Ntahobali and to the relevant counts of his Indictment[2548] – which, in turn, were linked to paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment – provided notice to Ntahobali that the Prosecution intended to rely on the evidence of Witness QCB in support of the broad allegation set forth in paragraph 6.35.

1099. Witness QCB's Summary specifically refers to Tutsis being stopped at roadblocks and led by Ntahobali to the École des sous-officiers ("ESO") roadblock and the IRST. Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, it is clear from the reading of Witness QCB's Summary that killings were committed at the IRST.[2549] The summary, however, does not mention the location "Rugira Ntahobali also refers to his submissions related to the absence of investigators for a long period of time (Ground 1.12), the limitations imposed on cross-examinations (Ground 1.7), and the Prosecution's violation of its disclosure obligations (Ground 1.5). See Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 73. He adds that it is speculative to allege that he would have presented the same defence had he been put on adequate notice of the allegation. See ibid., para. 68.

[2546] The Appeals Chamber observes that neither the Rules nor the jurisprudence require that the summaries appended to a Prosecution's pre-trial brief be linked to the relevant paragraphs of an indictment in order to provide timely, clear, and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that Rule 73*bis*(B)(iv)(c) of the Rules relied upon by Ntahobali only states that, at the pre-trial conference, the trial chamber may order the Prosecutor to file "[t]he points in the indictment on which each witness will testify". Ntahobali's reliance on a trial chamber's decision in the Bagosora et al. case also fails to appreciate that decisions of trial chambers have no binding force on each other. See Lukić and Lukić Appeal Judgement, para. 260; Rutaganda Appeal Judgement, para. 188; Aleksovski Appeal Judgement, para. 114.

[2547] In relevant part, Witness QCB's Summary reads as follows:

> QCB went to Butare with a Tutsi acquaintance. They went through two roadblocks with many people around, guarded by gendarmes, Interahamwe and civilians. Then they came to a third roadblock supervised by Ntahobali. The roadblock was opposite Ntahobali's parents' house. The Interahamwe and civilians wearing military vests were checking ID cards allowing Hutu through and segregating Tutsi and putting them by the roadside. QCB's acquaintance[] refused to join the Tutsi group and Ntahobali ordered his killing and he was immediately killed. Ntahobali led the gathered Tutsis to ESO roadblock and Institut de Recherche Scientifique et Technique. QCB saw people being struck to death.

[2548] Witness QCB's Summary was marked relevant to Ntahobali and was linked, inter alia, to Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 of his indictment.

roadblock"[2550] nor does it specify the date of the killings. It is also unclear as to the conduct of Ntahobali at the IRST and the identity of the perpetrators of the killings. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a decisive factor in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution is required to particularise the facts of its case in the indictment is the nature of the alleged criminal conduct with which the accused is charged.[2551] The Appeals Chamber considers that when the Prosecution intends to prove that an accused ordered particular crimes, it must identify in the indictment, at least by category, to whom the accused is alleged to have given orders[2552] and all detail it possesses regarding the location of the incidents.

1100. Only when Witness QCB's Summary is read together with Witness QCB's Statement it is clear that the witness was expected to testify that, on 21 April 1994, Ntahobali took Tutsis from the roadblock near Amandin Rugira's home to lead them towards the IRST and that the killings were alleged to have occurred.[2553]

1101. The Appeals Chamber finds that, by reading the Indictment in conjunction with Witness QCB's Summary and Statement, Ntahobali was put on notice that the Prosecution intended to hold him responsible for abduction of Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and killings at the IRST on 21 April 1994. Since Witness QCB's Summary contained clear allegations against Ntahobali and was expressly linked to his Indictment, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali should have been prompted to examine the contents of Witness QCB's Statement upon reading Witness QCB's Summary.

1102. Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber observes that neither Witness QCB's Summary nor Witness QCB's Statement gave clear notice to Ntahobali that he was alleged to have ordered Interahamwe to kill Tutsis at the IRST. While the summary and statement unambiguously indicate that Ntahobali was alleged to have exercised a supervisory role at the roadblocks and authority over

[2553] In relevant part, Witness QCB's Statement reads as follows:

> […] on 21 April 1994 […] [w]e encountered a second roadblock this time manned by Interahamwe and civilians with military-type vests as well as grenades and Kalashnikov rifles. It was located near the road leading to the Institut de Recherche Scientifique et Technique (IRST), near the home of the late Amandin RUGIRA. There were many people around [the roadblock]. […] SHALOM found me at the second roadblock. He was leading away the Tutsis who were gathered at the ESO roadblock. He also took the ones who were gathered at this second roadblock and led them all towards the IRST. I continued towards Mukoni when I heard the screams. I was afraid and guessed that these were screams from people who were being killed. […] I looked from the roadside and saw people being struck to death with traditional weapons. […]

the Interahamwe present at the roadblocks, the only express discussion of Ntahobali's conduct in relation to this event provided in these documents was that Ntahobali led the Tutsis away before they were killed. In this context, the Appeals Chamber notes the Trial Chamber's analysis that Witness QCB's Summary "does not provide that Ntahobali supervised Interahamwe with relation to the events at the IRST."[2554] The Appeals Chamber finds that neither Witness QCB's Summary nor Witness QCB's Statement provided sufficient information to put Ntahobali on notice that he ordered Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis he led towards the IRST. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the vagueness of the Indictment concerning the allegation related to the IRST was remedied by the disclosure of Witness QCB's Summary and Statement.

1103. The Appeals Chamber also rejects the Prosecution's argument that paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment put Ntahobali on notice that he was charged with ordering the relevant killings given the broad nature of paragraph 5.1, the fact that it is not clearly linked to paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment, and the fact that it refers to several forms of responsibility.[2555] The relevant question is not whether Ntahobali was given notice that he was charged with ordering crimes – which he clearly was – but whether he was given notice that he was charged with ordering the killings perpetrated at the IRST on 21 April 1994.

1104. The Appeals Chamber finds that it is only when Witness QCB testified at trial that Ntahobali was put on unambiguous notice that the Prosecution intended to prove that he was responsible for ordering Interahamwe to kill Tutsis at the IRST.[2556] While this information was clear and consistent with the general information concerning Ntahobali's supervisory role and authority over the Interahamwe previously disclosed, the Appeals Chamber considers that it was provided too late in the proceedings to constitute "timely" notice.

1105. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a vague or ambiguous indictment which is not cured of its defect by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information causes prejudice to the accused.[2557] The defect may only be deemed harmless through demonstrating that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[2558] When an appellant raises a defect in the indictment for the first time on appeal, the appellant bears the burden of showing that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired.[2559] When, however, an accused has previously raised the issue of lack of notice before the Trial Chamber, the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the ability of the accused to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[2560]

1106. While Ntahobali objected to the vagueness of paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment as regards the identity of the alleged victims and the location of the killings in 2000,[2561] he did not object to the vagueness of this paragraph with respect to his particular course of conduct and alleged form of responsibility. In addition, Ntahobali did not raise the vagueness of the allegations pleaded in paragraph 6.35 after he was provided with the particulars appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief filed in April 2001. The Appeals Chamber considers that the indication that Witness QCB's Summary was expressly linked to his Indictment should have prompted Ntahobali to object to the lack of information he had regarding the incidents about which the witness was expected to testify.

1107. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Ntahobali did not take issue with Witness QCB's testimony regarding his responsibility for ordering Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis he led from the Rugira roadblock to the IRST on 21 April 1994 on the ground that he lacked sufficient notice of this allegation.[2562] The Appeals Chamber finds Ntahobali's explanation for his failure to contemporaneously object to Witness QCB's testimony in this respect unpersuasive. Having reviewed the Trial Chamber's oral rulings and decisions pointed out by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber considers that none of them could have reasonably been understood as suggesting to the Defence to refrain from making objections related to the indictments because they would not be granted and had rather to be addressed in closing submissions.[2563]

[2563] The Trial Chamber's oral statements and decisions pointed out by Ntahobali informed the parties that requests to exclude evidence based on defects in the form of the indictments would be ruled upon at a later stage of the proceedings and that such requests did not necessarily preclude admission of the impugned evidence. See Witness TO, T. 6 March 2002 pp. 83, 84, 88-105, 122, 123; 25 February 2009 Decision, paras. 27-29; 1 September 2006 Decision, paras. 24, 25. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the decisions cited by Ntahobali are subsequent to the testimony of Witness QCB and that, in one of the decisions cited by Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber expressly recalled that "the appropriate time to object to the admissibility of evidence is when the evidence is introduced." See 1 September 2006 Decision, para. 22 (internal reference omitted).

1108. Finally, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali, as he acknowledges, failed to raise the defects in the Indictment regarding the killings at the IRST in his closing submissions.[2564] The matter was addressed proprio motu by the Trial Chamber in the Trial Judgement.[2565] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali is raising the defect in the Indictment concerning his responsibility for ordering the IRST killings for the first time on appeal. The burden, as a consequence, rests on Ntahobali to show that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired by the Prosecution's failure to provide him with adequate notice that he was alleged to have ordered Interahamwe to perpetrate the killings at the IRST.

1109. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to make such a demonstration. Both Witness QCB's Summary and Statement were disclosed well before the witness testified before the Trial Chamber.[2566] While Ntahobali was not put on clear notice of his specific conduct and form of responsibility as regards the IRST events until the testimony of Witness QCB at trial, he was put on notice months before the commencement of the trial that he was alleged to have exercised a supervisory role and authority over the Interahamwe present at the roadblocks and to have been responsible for the killings of Tutsis at the IRST on 21 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that this information allowed him to conduct meaningful investigations.

1110. The Appeals Chamber also considers that the cross-examination of Witness QCB by his counsel does not reflect a lack of preparation. While Ntahobali's counsel did not question Witness QCB on Ntahobali's participation in the killings perpetrated at the IRST, it is worth stressing that, in fact, his counsel did not raise a single question to the witness regarding Ntahobali's acts or conduct during the relevant events whether in respect of the supervision of roadblocks, the killing of Ruvurajabo, the stopping and abductions of Tutsis from the roadblocks, the move to the IRST, or the killings committed there, although Witness QCB was clearly expected to testify about these events and testified at length about them.[2567] Moreover, apart from questioning Witness QCB on how he was able to estimate the number of victims killed at the IRST,[2568] Ntahobali's counsel did not put any questions to the witness regarding the circumstances of the abductions and killings perpetrated on 21 April 1994. Ntahobali's counsel's cross-examination was primarily focused on the witness's knowledge of his client,[2569] the location and dates of setting up of the roadblocks,[2570] the categories of individuals manning the roadblocks,[2571] the geography of the relevant locations and roads,[2572] and the discrepancies within Witness QCB's evidence.[2573]

1111. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's decision not to call any witness to specifically counter Witness QCB's allegations does not demonstrate prejudice. Ntahobali acknowledged that he understood that he was accused of having ordered killings at the IRST when Witness QCB testified.[2574] His decision not to call witnesses to challenge Witness QCB's evidence adduced at trial was therefore an informed decision. It is also noteworthy that, in his closing brief, Ntahobali expressly challenged the credibility of Witness QCB regarding these events[2575] and that, on appeal, he explains that his failure to raise the lack of notice regarding the IRST incident in his closing submissions was "a significant and unfortunate oversight".[2576]

1112. As to the Trial Chamber's refusal to recall Witness QCB, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali's justification for requesting the recall of Witness QCB was to highlight alleged inconsistencies and contradictions between the witness's testimony before the Trial Chamber and his statements and testimony before Canadian authorities in order to challenge his credibility, and not to remedy an alleged prejudice resulting from Ntahobali's inability to effectively cross-examine the witness.[2577] Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, his motion to recall Witness QCB is not indicative of his confusion regarding whether he was alleged to have ordered the killings at the IRST.[2578] The decision denying the recall of Witness QCB also does not reflect, as alleged by Ntahobali, that he was not able to effectively cross-examine the witness.[2579] Of significance in this decision, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that Witness QCB's statement to Canadian authorities that he saw Ntahobali issuing orders to kill at the IRST was consistent with his testimony in this case.[2580]

1113. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not discharged his burden to demonstrate that his defence was materially impaired by the lack of adequate notice regarding his responsibility for ordering Interahamwe to kill Tutsis at the IRST.

(c) Conclusion

1114. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the defect in the Indictment concerning Ntahobali's responsibility for the killings perpetrated at the IRST on 21 April 1994 was cured. However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, because he did not effectively show that his defence was materially impaired by the lack of adequate notice in this respect, Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's error invalidates its decision to convict him for ordering the killing of approximately 200 Tutsis at the IRST on 21 April 1994.

3. Hotel Ihuliro Roadblock (Ground 2.2 in part)

1115. The Trial Chamber noted that it was not contested that, at the time of the relevant events, the Ntahobali family resided in Hotel Ihuliro in Butare Town.[2581] The Trial Chamber determined that a roadblock was erected near Hotel Ihuliro in late April 1994.[2582] It also determined that Ntahobali manned the roadblock in April 1994, which was used to abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population.[2583] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali ordered the killing of a man named Ruvurajabo at this roadblock on 21 April 1994 and that he raped and murdered a Tutsi girl at the same roadblock around the end of April 1994.[2584] The Trial Judgement also reflects that Ntahobali was found responsible for having physically perpetrated the killing of multiple Tutsis at the roadblock, including but not limited to the killing of the "Tutsi girl".[2585]

The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has elected to refer to the roadblock which the Trial Chamber found was located in the proximity of the EER and the garage known as the "MSM garage" and very close to Hotel Ihuliro as the "Hotel Ihuliro roadblock" throughout this Judgement. See supra, fn. 51.

The Appeals Chamber discusses Ntahobali's challenges to the imprecision of the Trial Judgement regarding his 1116. On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide (Count 2), extermination, rape, and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6, 7, and 8, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons and outrages upon personal dignity as serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Counts 10 and 11, respectively) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing rape and killings and ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[2586]

1117. These findings of guilt were entered pursuant to paragraphs 6.27, 6.37, and 6.53 of the Indictment.[2587] The Indictment indicates that the allegation in paragraph 6.27 was being pursued under Counts 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, and 10, the allegation in paragraph 6.37 under Counts 7 and 11, and the allegation in paragraph 6.53 under Counts 2, 3, and 5 through 11 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2588] Prior to discussing the evidence related to crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Trial Chamber considered Ntahobali's assertion that he was not reasonably informed of the charges concerning these crimes.[2589] It held that, although the Indictment was defective in certain respects in relation to these charges, the defects were cured and Ntahobali did not suffer prejudice in the preparation of his defence.[2590]

1118. Ntahobali submits that the Indictment was defective with respect to the allegation that he committed killings at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect was cured and that he was not prejudiced.[2591] He also contends that his responsibility for convictions for crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in detail below in Section V.G.1. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 180, 209.

[2586] Trial Judgement, paras. 5842, 5845, 5971, 6053-6055, 6077-6080, 6094, 6100, 6101, 6121, 6168, 6169, 6184-6186. The Trial Chamber considered that Ntahobali had not received sufficient notice that the charge of genocide would be supported by rapes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and, consequently, did not enter a genocide conviction on the basis of the rape of the Tutsi girl in late April 1994. See ibid., paras. 5828-5836, 5843. The Trial Chamber also found that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killing of Ruvurajabo perpetrated by Interahamwe and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining his sentence. See ibid., paras. 5847-5849, 5971, 6056, 6220. The Appeals Chamber will address Ntahobali's contentions regarding the lack of notice that he was charged as a superior for this killing in Section V.B.7 below.

[2587] Trial Judgement, paras. 2913, 2915, 2928, 2934, fns. 8076, 8082, 8083. Paragraph 6.27 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment reads as follows:

> 6.27 Between April and July 1994, a roadblock was set up near the residence of Minister Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali in Butare town. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali manned this roadblock. During this entire period, Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali made use of the roadblock, with the assistance of soldiers, identities of whom are unknown and other unknown persons, to identify, abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population.

ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo at the roadblock and raping a Tutsi girl near the roadblock was not pleaded in the Indictment and that the defects in this regard were neither curable nor cured.[2592]

(a) Committing Killings

1119. As noted above and discussed in further detail below in Section V.G.1 related to the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali physically perpetrated the killing of multiple Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in April 1994, including the killing of a "Tutsi girl" who arrived at the roadblock around the end of April 1994.[2593] In making factual findings regarding the killing of the "Tutsi girl", the Trial Chamber relied on Prosecution evidence that the victim was dragged by Ntahobali from her vehicle into the woods near the roadblock and the EER where she was raped and killed.[2594] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali under Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute on this basis.

1120. The Trial Chamber determined that paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment provided the location of the roadblock, gave an adequate description of the timeframe involved, and alleged that Ntahobali made use of the roadblock with the assistance of others to identify, abduct, and kill Tutsis and that it was therefore not defective concerning the allegation that Ntahobali made use of a roadblock near his home to identify, abduct, and kill Tutsis.[2595] It considered that it was not necessary for the Indictment to provide the exact identity of the alleged co-perpetrators.[2596]

1121. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the allegation that he committed killings at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, including the murder of a Tutsi girl, was pleaded in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment.[2597] With respect to the murder of the Tutsi girl specifically, Ntahobali contends that: (i) the dates in paragraph 6.27 were too vague to put him on adequate notice that this crime occurred "around the end of April 1994", in particular in light of the fact that the Prosecution failed to indicate the date of establishment of the roadblock;[2598] (ii) the site of the murder, namely the EER woods, was not specified in this paragraph;[2599] and (iii) the Trial Chamber erred in finding that paragraph 6.27 was not defective in failing to mention the co-perpetrators whom the Prosecution had identified, such as "Jean-Pierre", in contradiction with the order it had given to the Prosecution in 2000 to identify them in the Indictment.[2600]

1122. As regards the other killings he was found to have committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, Ntahobali reiterates that paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment was impermissibly vague concerning the dates of the killings and the identity of his accomplices as well as concerning the identity of the victims and the means by which the crimes were committed.[2601] Ntahobali contends that none of these defects was subsequently cured.[2602]

1123. The Prosecution responds that the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses TB and SX appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and their relevant prior statements cured the vagueness in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment regarding the allegation that he killed a Tutsi girl after raping her at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock as they provided the approximate date and location of the murder.[2603] The Prosecution also argues that since the Trial Chamber did not find that Jean-Pierre was involved in this murder, no notice was required in that regard.[2604] It further contends that Ntahobali was put on notice that he was charged with other abductions and killings at this roadblock through the disclosure of the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses SX, SR, and TF.[2605]

1124. Ntahobali replies that the post-indictment information provided by the Prosecution was too contradictory to be considered clear and coherent.[2606]

1125. The Appeals Chamber recalls that criminal acts that were physically committed by the accused personally must be set forth specifically in the indictment, including, where feasible, "the identity of the victim, the time and place of the events and the means by which the acts were committed."[2607]

1126. The Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment refers to "[b]etween April and July 1994" as the period of time during which Ntahobali was alleged to have used the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock to kill members of the Tutsi population. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a broad date range, in and of itself, does not invalidate a paragraph of an indictment.[2608] In the case at hand, the Indictment reflects that the Prosecution intended to prove that abductions and killings were recurring at the roadblock and spanned over several months. The Appeals Chamber considers that the sheer scale of these alleged crimes made it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in the dates for the commission of each crime.[2609] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering that the allegation concerning the killing of the "Tutsi girl" in late April 1994 was encompassed in paragraph 6.27.

1127. Nevertheless, the Prosecution does not dispute that it was in possession of information regarding the date of establishment of the roadblock in the second half of April 1994,[2610] which would have allowed it to particularise the broad date range in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment. As the Prosecution was in a position at the time to provide higher specificity regarding Ntahobali's alleged responsibility for committing abductions and killings at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that the date range "[b]etween April and July 1994" in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment gave "an adequate description of the time frame involved".[2611]

1128. The Appeals Chamber, however, is not persuaded by Ntahobali's argument that the exact location where the "Tutsi girl" was dragged from the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock to be killed was a material fact that needed to be pleaded in the Indictment. Similarly, as far as Ntahobali was alleged to have personally committed the crimes, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's

[2610] See supra, para. 1123. The Appeals Chamber also refers to its analysis of Ntahobali's argument on the information provided in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment on the date of the establishment of the roadblock in para. 1140 below, and to its discussion of the evidence in this respect in Section V.G.2 below.
[2611] Trial Judgement, para. 2928.

argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the exact identity of his co-perpetrators did not have to be provided in the Indictment.[2612] 1129. As for Ntahobali's argument regarding the identity of the victims killed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the means by which the crimes were committed, the Appeals Chamber finds that, in light of the nature of the allegation, which concerns recurring crimes and a large number of victims, often unidentified, it was impracticable or impossible for the Prosecution to identify the victims by name[2613] and to specify Ntahobali's conduct in further detail in the Indictment.

1130. Turning to whether the defect in the Indictment regarding the date range was cured, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution informed Ntahobali through Witnesses QCB's and SX's summaries and statements that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was being alleged to have been established approximately around 21 April 1994 and that killings took place there from the very same day.[2614] Ntahobali does not substantiate his argument that the information provided in the Prosecution's post-indictment submissions was contradictory on this point. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that the Prosecution's failure to particularise the broad date range pleaded in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment by not specifying the date of establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was adequately remedied.

1131. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's error in not considering that the Indictment was overly broad regarding the timeframe of the alleged abductions and killings committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock did not invalidate its decision to convict Ntahobali on this basis as the defect was subsequently cured. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in any other respect regarding notice of the allegation that he committed killings at the roadblock.

[2612] The Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber's order to the Prosecution to provide the "identity of at least some of the 'unknown persons' in paragraph 6.27 [of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment]" with whom he was alleged to have worked, if known, was related to the charges brought under Article 6(3) of the Statute and the modes of accessory liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute. See 1 November 2000 Ntahobali Decision, para. 35(a)(ii). See also ibid., para. 30.

[…] people were allowed to pass or were killed. […] SX estimates that approximately 500 Tutsi were killed at that roadblock."); Witness SX's Statement, pp. K146646, K146647 (Registry pagination) ("The barrier was erected […] approximately two weeks after I heard of the death of the President on Radio Rwanda. […] On the morning that they erected the barrier, people would be coming […]. […] the individual would be killed or let to pass. […] On this first day I estimated approximately 500 people killed at the barrier."). Witnesses QCB's and SX's summaries were marked relevant to Ntahobali and were linked to Counts 2, 3, 5, 6 and 8 through 11 of his indictment. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali should have been prompted to re-examine Witness SX's Statement upon reading Witness SX's Summary.

(b) Ordering the Killing of Léopold Ruvurajabo

1132. As noted above, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali ordered the killing of a man named Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994 and convicted him on this basis under Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

1133. The Trial Chamber held that the Prosecution was aware of the identity of the alleged victim Ruvurajabo months before the filing of the Indictment but failed to include this information in the Indictment.[2615] It found that the Indictment was thus defective with respect to this allegation.[2616] However, the Trial Chamber determined that the defect in the Indictment as to the murder of Ruvurajabo was cured through the disclosure of Witness QCB's Summary and Statement, which made clear that Ntahobali was alleged to have ordered the killing of Ruvurajabo.[2617] It concluded that the lack of notice in the Indictment did not prejudice Ntahobali in the preparation of his case with regard to this allegation.[2618]

1134. Ntahobali submits that the defect in the Indictment related to the allegation concerning the killing of Ruvurajabo could not be cured through any subsequent information as this allegation constituted a separate charge which should have been pleaded in the Indictment.[2619] In particular, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in refusing to apply a trial chamber's decision in the Kalimanzira case, in which it was held that the failure to mention particular killings capable of supporting a separate charge could not be cured.[2620] Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred by not applying the same reasoning it followed concerning the pleading of the names of victims at the Butare Prefecture Office.[2621]

1135. Ntahobali adds that, because the Prosecution did not specify that the Interahamwe were his "accomplices" in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment unlike in other paragraphs, even though it was in possession of such information and was required to provide the identity of his accomplices by the Trial Chamber, he could only understand that he was not charged with ordering Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[2622] In his view, the addition of the allegation concerning the murder of

Ruvurajabo led to a radical transformation of the case against him.[2623] Ntahobali further submits that reading paragraph 6.27 together with paragraph 6.15 of the Indictment – which refers to the Interim Government's decision of 27 April 1994 to establish roadblocks – he could only understand that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was alleged to have been established after 27 April 1994 and argues that, consequently, the murder of Ruvurajabo on 21 April 1994 fell beyond the scope of the Indictment.[2624] Finally, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QCB's Summary and Statement cured the defect in the Indictment, notably given the absence of details concerning the orders to kill Ruvurajabo he allegedly gave.[2625]

1136. The Prosecution responds that Witness QCB's Summary and Statement provided Ntahobali with the missing material facts of Ruvurajabo's murder, including that he was alleged to have ordered Interahamwe to kill Ruvurajabo, and did not create new charge or radically transform its case.[2626] It submits that the Trial Chamber's finding regarding notice of the victims' names at the Butare Prefecture Office is distinguishable and that the allegation in paragraph 6.15 of the Indictment did not preclude that roadblocks were set up prior to the Interim Government's decision, nor did it negate the information in Witness QCB's Statement that Ruvurajabo was killed on 21 April 1994.[2627]

1137. Ntahobali replies that the subsequent information provided through Witness QCB's Summary and Statement mentioned Interahamwe but also civilians wearing military vests.[2628] He also develops arguments pertaining to the prejudice he allegedly suffered from the lack of notice regarding this specific allegation.[2629]

1138. The Appeals Chamber notes that there is no dispute that the Indictment was defective with respect to the pleading of Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo, whose identity was not specified in the Indictment even though the Prosecution was in possession of the [2627] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 784, 786. The Prosecution also argues that this discrepancy of approximately six days is minor and that Ntahobali has not established how he was prejudiced by it. See ibid., para. 786.

[2628] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 80.
[2629] Ntahobali submits that: (i) because he did not know before Witness QCB's testimony at trial that this witness would allege that he ordered Interahamwe to kill Ruvurajabo, he was unable to conduct any investigation in that regard; (ii) it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to require him to cross-examine witnesses on aspects falling outside the indictment and then rely on that to establish the absence of prejudice; and (iii) the prejudice is apparent from the contradictions in Witness QCB's accounts revealed by the witness's subsequent statements given to Canadian authorities and aggravated by the Trial Chamber's refusal to recall the witness on these contradictions. See Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 81, referring, inter alia, to Ntahobali 1 October 2008 Motion to Recall Witness QCB, paras. 32-36, 48, 20 November 2008 Decision, paras. 38, 40. See also ibid., para. 82 (arguing that the Prosecution bears the burden of showing that he was not prejudiced).

information.[2630] To demonstrate that the defect could not be cured by the provision of subsequent information, Ntahobali relies on a trial chamber's decision in the Kalimanzira case and on the Trial Chamber's reasoning concerning the pleading of victims' names at the Butare Prefecture Office.[2631] Ntahobali, however, fails to appreciate that decisions of trial chambers have no binding force on each other[2632] and that the Trial Chamber did not conclude that the Prosecution's failure to identify by names victims at the Butare Prefecture Office could not be remedied by the provision of subsequent information but, instead, found that the defects were not cured.[2633]

1139. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Ntahobali's argument that the Prosecution's failure to specify in the Indictment that he was alleged to have ordered "Interahamwe" to commit crimes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock indicated that he was not charged on the basis of ordering "Interahamwe". Ntahobali is correct in his submission that the Prosecution failed to comply with the Trial Chamber's order to provide the "identity of at least some of the 'unknown persons' in paragraph 6.27 [of the Indictment]" with whom he was alleged to have worked since it knew that Interahamwe were alleged to be among them.[2634] However, the fact that the Prosecution repeatedly disclosed Witness QCB's Statement containing this allegation prior to and after the filing of the operative indictment,[2635] together with the Prosecution's express reliance on this aspect of Witness QCB's anticipated evidence in its pre-trial brief in support of its case against Ntahobali,[2636] put Ntahobali on notice that his orders to Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock formed part of the Prosecution case of Ntahobali's "use of the roadblock, with the assistance of […] unknown persons, to identify, abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population" set forth in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment.

1140. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's contention that the allegation of the killing of Ruvurajabo on 21 April 1994 fell outside the scope of the Indictment because, in paragraph 6.15 of the Indictment, it was alleged that the Interim Government ordered roadblocks to be set up on 27 April 1994. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the latter allegation does not materially contradict the former as there is no indication in the Indictment that roadblocks were only set up after the government's order and that paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment generally pleaded that the crimes at roadblocks were committed between April and July 1994.

1141. The Appeals Chamber finds that the allegation concerning the murder of Ruvurajabo fell within the broader allegation relating to Ntahobali's use of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock to identify, abduct, and kill Tutsis pleaded in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment and that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering that the defect of the Indictment in this respect was therefore curable.

1142. With respect to Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's finding that the defect in the Indictment was cured through the information provided in Witness QCB's Summary and Statement, the Appeals Chamber finds that the reference in these materials to the fact that Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe and civilians wearing military vests manning the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock to kill Ruvurajabo – who was immediately killed – provided sufficient detail to Ntahobali as to his alleged responsibility for this killing to allow him to prepare a meaningful defence. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the reference to the implication of "civilians wearing military vests" or "military-type vests" together with Interahamwe in the killing ordered by Ntahobali at the roadblock rendered unclear the information concerning the involvement of Interahamwe. Ntahobali fails to develop any other argument to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect in the Indictment concerning his responsibility in the murder of Ruvurajabo was cured and that he was on notice that he was alleged to have ordered Interahamwe to commit this crime.

1143. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the vagueness of paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment concerning the killing of Ruvurajabo by Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994 following Ntahobali's order was cured by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information. As Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate error in the conclusion that he was put on adequate notice, the Appeals Chamber considers that his submissions pertaining to the prejudice he allegedly suffered from the lack of notice are without merit and dismisses them without further consideration.

(c) Committing the Rape of a Tutsi Girl

1144. As noted above, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali under Counts 7 and 11 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for raping a Tutsi girl who arrived at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock around the end of April 1994 and whom he also killed. In reaching its factual findings, the Trial Chamber relied on Prosecution evidence that the victim was dragged by Ntahobali from her vehicle into the woods near the roadblock and the EER, where she was raped and killed.[2637]

[2636] Witness QCB's Summary was marked relevant to Ntahobali and was linked to Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 of his indictment.
[2637] Trial Judgement, para. 3133.

1145. The Trial Chamber noted that paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment did not allege that rapes were perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and that this paragraph was not listed in support of Counts 7 and 11 in the Indictment.[2638] It also found that paragraphs 6.37 and 6.53 of the Indictment, listed in support of Counts 7 and 11, were unduly vague and insufficient to put Ntahobali on notice of the Prosecution's intention to prove that Ntahobali was responsible for abducting and then raping a Tutsi girl at the roadblock.[2639] The Trial Chamber found that the Indictment was defective in this respect.[2640] However, the Trial Chamber considered that this defect was cured through the disclosure of Witnesses SX's and TB's summaries appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, together with their prior statements.[2641] The Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali was sufficiently put "on notice with respect to the allegation that [he] abducted a Tutsi girl at the roadblock and raped her near the EER" pursued under Counts 7 and 11 and that he suffered no prejudice in the preparation of his defence.[2642]

1146. Ntahobali submits that the defect in the Indictment in relation to the rape of a Tutsi girl at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock could not be cured as the Indictment was completely silent on this allegation.[2643] He argues that: (i) paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment which specifically relates to the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock does not mention any rapes and is not listed as relevant to Counts 7 and 11; (ii) paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment could only be understood as relating to the "mid-June 1994" period; and (iii) paragraph 6.53 of the Indictment does not mention him and, therefore, could not serve as the basis for his conviction.[2644] Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber should have adopted the same reasoning as that applied for the allegations of rapes at Nyange.[2645] In his view, the addition of this allegation of rape at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock led to a radical transformation of the case against him, which caused him prejudice.[2646]

By contrast, the Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali had not received sufficient notice that the charge of genocide would be supported by rapes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and did not enter a genocide conviction on the basis of the rape of the Tutsi girl in late April 1994. See ibid., paras. 5828-5837, 5843, 5971.

Ntahobali points out that the rape of which he was convicted related to a different location and a different date than the ones referred to in paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, leading to a de facto amendment of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment. See ibid., para. 185. He also argues that paragraph 6.37 could only be understood as relating to the Butare University Hospital, an argument that was addressed and dismissed in Section IV.B.3(b) above.

1147. In the alternative, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects of paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment were cured by the information provided by Witnesses SX's and TB's summaries and statements as this information was so contradictory, ambiguous, and inconsistent that it could not be considered clear and coherent.[2647] In support of this contention, Ntahobali points out inconsistencies and ambiguities in these materials with respect to the date of the rape, the arrival and presence of the victim at the roadblock, what happened to her prior to being raped, the specific words that she uttered, the time spent in the woods, the location where the victim was undressed and the persons who undressed her, and when she was buried.[2648] He argues that he was greatly prejudiced by the lack of notice regarding this allegation.[2649]

1148. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering that the vagueness of paragraphs 6.37 and 6.53 of the Indictment with regard to the impugned allegation was curable and cured.[2650] It submits that paragraph 6.53 was expressly pleaded in support of Counts 7 and 11 and that the Trial Chamber's finding with regard to the allegation concerning Nyange only relates to the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment and the Kanyabashi Indictment.[2651] The Prosecution further responds that Ntahobali's arguments regarding the lack of curing are undeveloped as well as lack references and evidential support and that: (i) the alleged discrepancy regarding the date of the rape is minor; (ii) the consistency of notice is not determined on the basis of the viva voce evidence subsequently given by the witnesses; and (iii) the purported inconsistencies are matters of evidence.[2652]

1149. Ntahobali replies that paragraph 6.53 of the Indictment relates to an indefinite period of time and to the whole territory of Rwanda and that he had repeatedly argued that this paragraph did not allege that he committed any crime.[2653] As regards the lack of curing, Ntahobali replies, inter alia, that the difference of eight days is not minor and shows that he could not understand that Witnesses SX and TB were talking about the same incident.[2654]

[2652] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 781.
[2653] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 77. Ntahobali also points out that the Trial Chamber considered that a similar paragraph in the Kanyabashi Indictment was defective. See idem, referring to The Prosecutor v. Joseph Kanyabashi, Case No. ICTR-96-15-I, Decision on Defence Preliminary Motion for Defects in the Form of the Indictment, signed 11 May 2000, dated 31 May 2000, filed 7 June 2000 (originally filed in French, English translation filed on the same day) ("31 May 2000 Decision"), paras. 5.16, 5.21(e).
[2654] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 78.

1150. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the defect of the Indictment with respect to this allegation was curable. While paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment was not relied upon in support of Counts 7 and 11 and did not refer to rapes committed at roadblocks, paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment specifically pleaded Ntahobali's participation in the kidnapping and raping of Tutsis women and was relied upon in support of the relevant counts.[2655] It is also apparent that the allegation in paragraph 6.37 was meant to relate to the period "[b]etween April and July 1994" invoked in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment and not, as argued by Ntahobali, to the period "mid-June 1994" referred to in the previous paragraph of the Indictment.

1151. In claiming that paragraph 6.53 of the Indictment could not serve as the basis for his conviction for the rape of the "Tutsi girl" because he was not mentioned in the paragraph, Ntahobali also overlooks that an indictment must be considered as a whole and that paragraph 6.53 was expressly relied upon in support of Counts 7 and 11 against him.[2656] Ntahobali's argument in reply concerning the vagueness of this paragraph regarding the timeframe and the location of the allegation of rapes perpetrated throughout Rwanda by militiamen, among others, does not demonstrate that the vagueness could not be remedied by the provision of subsequent information.[2657]

1152. The Appeals Chamber further rejects Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred by not applying the same reasoning it adopted in relation to the allegations of rapes at Nyange raised against Nsabimana and Kanyabashi. The Trial Chamber determined that the allegations of rapes at Nyange fell outside the scope of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment and the Kanyabashi Indictment as the relevant paragraphs of these indictments did not mention rape as one of the acts perpetrated against refugees at Nyange and that, consequently, "the matter of rapes [fell] outside the scope of the Indictments".[2658] The situation related to the allegation of rape committed by Ntahobali at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock is clearly distinguishable since, unlike the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment and the Kanyabashi Indictment, the Indictment against Ntahobali alleged that Ntahobali was involved in rapes and, on this basis, charged him with rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, finds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the "new material facts" concerning the specific rape of the "Tutsi girl" led to a transformation of the Prosecution case.

[2655] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, pp. 42, 45.
[2656] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, pp. 42, 45.

1153. Turning to Ntahobali's alternative challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that the defect in the Indictment regarding this allegation was cured, the Appeals Chamber observes that it is not clear from the reading of the summaries of their anticipated evidence that Witnesses TB and SX were expected to testify about the same incident of rape. However, although details differ, their accounts in their prior statements of the rape of a girl dragged from her vehicle stopped at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock to be raped and killed by Ntahobali nearby reflect that both witnesses were describing the same incident.[2659]

1154. As to the date of the incident in particular, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness TB's Summary indicates that the incident occurred "about 28 April 1994" and her prior statement "around the 28th of April, 1994",[2660] while Witness SX's Summary indicates that the rape occurred on the first day the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established, which, according to Witness SX's Statement, corresponds to "approximately two weeks" after the death of President Habyarimana was announced on the radio, that is around 21 April 1994.[2661] Given that it was clear from their statements that both witnesses gave estimates and that both witnesses approximately referred to the same period of time in April 1994, the Appeals Chamber considers that it was reasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to deem that the information that their summaries and statements provided with regard to the date of the rape was sufficiently clear and consistent.

1155. In the same vein, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the other variations in Witnesses TB's and SX's summaries and statements concerning the specifics of the victim's arrival at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, her rape, and of what happened to her corpse were such as to prevent Ntahobali from understanding that the Prosecution intended to prove that he was responsible for personally raping a Tutsi girl near the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in the second half of April 1994. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, these variations were not relevant to the material facts required to be pleaded but were matters of evidence relevant to the Prosecution's ability to prove its case.

1156. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect in the Indictment concerning his responsibility for raping a Tutsi girl near the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock around the end of April 1994 was curable and cured by timely, clear, and consistent information.

4. Killing of the Rwamukwaya Family (Ground 2.3)

1157. The Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution established beyond reasonable doubt that an individual named Rwamukwaya and his family, who were of Tutsi ethnicity, were killed on or about 29 or 30 April 1994, after Ntahobali had threatened to kill them.[2662] The Trial Chamber held that "[g]iven the narrow time frames involved between Ntahobali's threat pronounced against the Rwamukwaya family, the sighting of their bodies, and the first sightings of Ntahobali in a vehicle known to have belonged to Rwamukwaya, […] the inference drawn as to Ntahobali's responsibility in the killing of the Rwamukwaya family is the only reasonable conclusion based on the totality of the evidence."[2663] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 8, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 10) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[2664]

1158. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ntahobali for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment.[2665] When addressing Ntahobali's contention that the specific allegation concerning his responsibility in the killing of the Rwamukwaya family was not pleaded in the Indictment, the Trial Chamber considered paragraph 6.39 of the Indictment.[2666] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraphs 6.35 and 6.39 of the Indictment were being pursued under, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2667]

1159. The Trial Chamber found that the allegation relating to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family was not specifically pleaded in the Indictment.[2668] In particular, it noted that the Indictment did not provide information with respect to the identity of the victims, the place and approximate date of the alleged criminal acts, and the means by which they were committed, although the

> 6.39 The entire préfecture of Butare was the scene of massacres of the Tutsi population involving Elie Ndayambaje, André Rwamakuba, Sylvain Nsabimana, Alphonse Nteziryayo, Joseph Kanyabashi and Ladislas Ntaganzwa, as well as Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Shalom Arsène Ntahobali.

[2667] Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, pp. 39-44.

Prosecution was aware of these details well before the filing of the Indictment.[2669] The Trial Chamber held that the Indictment was therefore defective in this regard.[2670] However, the Trial Chamber determined that this defect was cured through Prosecution post-indictment disclosures and that Ntahobali suffered no prejudice in the preparation of his defence.[2671]

1160. Ntahobali submits that his responsibility in the killing of the Rwamukwaya family was not pleaded in the Indictment, and that such defect was neither curable nor cured.[2672] The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali had sufficient notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[2673]

1161. As noted by the Trial Chamber, the Indictment was impermissibly vague in relation to the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family. The date, location, name of the victims, perpetrators of the killing, and Ntahobali's specific role in the crime are not specified in paragraphs 6.35 and 6.39 of the Indictment or anywhere else in the Indictment. Whereas paragraph 6.54 of the Indictment referred to by the Prosecution pleads that Ntahobali "aided and abetted [his] subordinates and others in carrying out the massacres of the Tutsi population", which indicates that Ntahobali was charged under this form of responsibility for some of the killings alleged in the Indictment, this paragraph is not expressly linked to paragraphs 6.35 or 6.39 and did not clarify that the allegations in these paragraphs were specifically charged under this form of responsibility.[2674] The Appeals Chamber will now examine whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects were curable and, if not, whether it erred in finding that the defects were cured.

(a) Whether the Defects Were Curable

1162. Ntahobali submits that the defects in the Indictment in relation to the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family could not be cured as this allegation constituted a separate charge which should have been pleaded in the Indictment.[2675] He contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on paragraphs 6.35 and 6.39 of the Indictment as the basis of his conviction for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family on the grounds that: (i) paragraph 6.35 is totally unrelated to the allegation according to which Ntahobali announced his intention to have the Rwamukwaya family killed;[2676] and (ii) the Prosecution itself considered Prosecution Witness FA's evidence with regard to this crime as related to paragraphs 4.4 and 6.27 of the Indictment, not paragraph 6.35 or 6.39.[2677]

1163. In the alternative, Ntahobali contends that the addition of this allegation led to a radical transformation of the case against him.[2678] In his view, the omission of the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family from the Indictment, the body of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, and the Prosecution's opening statement, demonstrates that the Prosecution did not intend to charge him in relation to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[2679]

1164. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber's reliance on paragraphs 6.35 and 6.39 of the Indictment was not erroneous and that the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family did not constitute a distinct charge or radically transform the case.[2680] It adds that Ntahobali's arguments regarding Witness FA's evidence are mistaken.[2681]

1165. The Appeals Chamber accepts Ntahobali's argument that paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment is unrelated to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family; it alleges Ntahobali's responsibility for traveling throughout the prefecture in the search for Tutsis and for abducting and transporting Tutsis to locations within the prefecture where they were executed, whereas Ntahobali's

The Appeals Chamber reiterates that, while the heading "Butare University Hospital" at page 32 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment is misleading as to the location of the crimes mentioned in the paragraphs following this headline, it would be unreasonable to conclude that paragraphs 6.35 and 6.39 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment were limited to events at the Butare University Hospital given the very contents of these two paragraphs, which expressly refer to the "entire préfecture of Butare" and "various locations". See supra, paras. 512, 1087.

responsibility for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family does not imply any traveling or abduction and transporting of victims. As a result, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that Ntahobali's responsibility for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family fell within the scope of paragraph 6.35.[2682]

1166. By contrast, the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family fell within the broader allegation relating to Ntahobali being involved in massacres of Tutsis within the entire Butare Prefecture pleaded in paragraph 6.39 of the Indictment. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the fact that the Prosecution and the Trial Chamber solely referred to paragraphs 4.4 and 6.27 of the Indictment when referring to the evidence of Witness FA about the killing of the Rwamukwaya family necessarily means that the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family was not encompassed within the broad allegation set out in paragraph 6.39.[2683]

1167. The Appeals Chamber therefore does not find that the allegation constituted a new charge. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the material facts on which the Trial Chamber entered its conviction led to a radical transformation of the Prosecution case against Ntahobali, nor that these facts could have, on their own, supported a separate charge. As vague as the charge set out in paragraph 6.39 of the Indictment was, it nonetheless clearly pleaded the involvement of Ntahobali in the massacre of the Tutsi population in Butare Prefecture.

1168. The Prosecution did not expressly refer to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family and his responsibility in this crime in its pre-trial brief or opening statement. As the Prosecution obtained information about Ntahobali's involvement in the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family from a number of witnesses which it disclosed in 1998 and 1999,[2684] the Prosecution should have pleaded this allegation with greater specificity in the Indictment and expressly referred to it in the main text of its pre-trial brief. However, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ntahobali's argument that the Prosecution's failure to specifically refer to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family demonstrates that it did not intend to charge him in relation to these killings. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that the prior written statements of six witnesses concerning Ntahobali's involvement in the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family were disclosed to Ntahobali in November 1998 and March 1999, and again in November 2000,[2685] prior to the filing of the operative indictment, shows that these killings formed part of the Prosecution case at the time the Indictment was issued.

[2682] The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that Ntahobali's contention with regard to the Rule 98*bis* Decision has become moot and need not be addressed.

1169. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber considers that the defects in the Indictment regarding Ntahobali's responsibility for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family were curable. The Appeals Chamber now turns to consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects were cured.

(b) Whether the Defects Were Cured

1170. The Trial Chamber determined that the defects in the Indictment concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family were cured through the disclosure of the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses RN and TE,[2686] along with Witnesses QF's, ST's, TF's, and TG's prior statements to Tribunal investigators.[2687] The Trial Chamber also noted that the information contained in the statements of Witnesses TE and RN was consistent with the information contained in the summaries of their anticipated evidence.[2688] It further found that the information contained in the summary of Witness FA's anticipated testimony attached to the Prosecution's motion to vary its witness list of 12 January 2004 was consistent with the witness's prior statement and provided additional notice to Ntahobali concerning this allegation.[2689]

1171. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects in the Indictment had been cured by the provision of clear and consistent information and that he was put on notice that the Prosecution intended to prove that he was criminally responsible for aiding and abetting the killing of the entire Rwamukwaya family.[2690] He contends that neither the Indictment nor any subsequent information gave him notice of when the killing allegedly took place, the identity of the principal perpetrator(s), and the fact that he was alleged to have "aided and abetted" the killing of the family by announcing his intention to see this family dead.[2691] He argues that Witnesses RN's and TE's summaries, together with Witnesses QF's, ST's, TF's, and TG's statements are silent, contradictory, or ambiguous with regard to his specific conduct, the identity of the perpetrators, the dates of his announcement of his intention to kill the family, and the date of the killing itself.[2692] Ntahobali also points out inconsistencies between the statements and summaries of Prosecution witnesses as to whether only Rwamukwaya or his entire family were killed, and as to whether or not Ntahobali was alleged to have personally perpetrated the killings.[2693] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the addition of Witness FA to the Prosecution's witness list and the disclosure of Witness FA's Statement provided additional notice of this allegation.[2694]

1172. Furthermore, Ntahobali submits that the withdrawal from the Prosecution's witness list in March 2002 of Witnesses RN and TE – the only two witnesses expected to testify about this particular killing – indicates that the Prosecution no longer intended to present evidence regarding the killing of the Rwamukwaya family and that the killing was therefore no longer part of the Prosecution case.[2695]

1173. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the defects in the Indictment regarding the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family were cured.[2696] In particular, the Prosecution argues that: (i) Witnesses RN's and TE's summaries and statements informed Ntahobali of the victims' identity, the approximate date and place of the killing, and that he aided and abetted the killing; (ii) the other relevant witnesses' statements did not present significant inconsistencies; and (iii) it was clear throughout the trial that it intended to prove that Ntahobali was responsible for these killings.[2697] The Prosecution further submits that, even if the defects concerning this incident were not found to be cured, Ntahobali did not suffer prejudice as "he amply defended against these charges."[2698]

[2696] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 794-803.
[2697] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 795, 796, 800, 801. The Prosecution specifies that while the Rwamukwayas' killing was mentioned in the specific intent section, it was also mentioned as evidence for the murder charge. See ibid., para. 801, referring to Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 36, 66, 98 at pp. 168, 169, 182, 193, 194.

1174. Ntahobali replies that the Prosecution had the burden of proof to establish the absence of prejudice but failed to do so.[2699] He contends that he was prejudiced as: (i) it is speculative to assert that the cross-examination of Witness FA would have been conducted the same way had he been properly put on notice of all relevant material facts; (ii) the references to the killing of Rwamukwaya and the use of his car in his closing brief do not demonstrate that he understood the allegation; (iii) he could not cross-examine Witness FA and develop arguments in his closing submissions in relation to his responsibility for aiding and abetting as he did not know that he could be held responsible under this form of responsibility; and (iv) he was deprived of the possibility to cross-examine Witness FA in light of Witness D-2-13-O's testimony on the date of the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[2700]

1175. In relevant part, Witness RN's Summary indicates that "Ntahobali killed a certain Mr. Rwanukwaya [sic], and then confiscated his white Peugeot." Witness TE's Summary indicates that: "Ntahobali went to the Rwamukwaya house. TE heard that the dead bodies of the Rwamukwaya family were found not far from Nyiramasuhuko's house, near the laboratory. TE heard that Ntahobali drove around in Rwamukwaya's car." The Appeals Chamber considers that upon reading these summaries which were indicated as being relevant to his Indictment,[2701] Ntahobali should reasonably have understood that he was alleged to be responsible under Counts 1 through 3 and 5 through 11 for the killing of Rwamukwaya.[2702] These summaries, however, are silent as to the date, circumstances, and location of the killings and, read together, are unclear regarding Ntahobali's specific course of conduct and whether he was alleged to be responsible for the killing of the entire family or only that of Rwamukwaya himself.

1176. Information as to the approximate timeframe of the killing, that is "during the early part of the genocide in Butare" and "after 18 April 1994",[2703] was provided in Witness RN's Statement, which Ntahobali should have been prompted to examine upon reading the summary of the witness's anticipated evidence. However, Witnesses TE's and RN's statements did not provide any further information or clarity as to any other relevant material facts underpinning the allegation against Ntahobali.

[2699] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 105.
[2700] Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 100-106.
[2701] Witness RN's Summary was specifically linked to Counts 1 through 3 and 5 through 11 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, and Witness TE's Summary was linked to Counts 1 through 3.
[2702] The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that Witness TE's Summary was only linked to Counts 1 through 3 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment could not reasonably be understood as limiting the allegation to these counts in light of the fact that Witness RN's Summary referring to the same allegation was clearly linked to Counts 5 through 11 in addition to Counts 1 through 3. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's argument in this respect. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 227.
[2703] Witness RN's Statement, p. 3.

1177. In their prior statements disclosed in November 1998 and November 2000, Witnesses QF, ST, TF, and TG referred to Ntahobali driving Rwamukwaya's car and being responsible for his killing or the killing of members of his family. Even assuming that these witnesses' prior statements could be considered as providing adequate notice despite the fact that the Prosecution failed to indicate that it intended to rely on this aspect of their evidence in its Witness Summaries Grid,[2704] the Appeals Chamber observes that the statements are not consistent as to whether Ntahobali directly participated in the killing himself or instructed or encouraged the killing, whether he was present during the killing, and whether other members of Rwamukwaya's family were killed.

1178. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that Witnesses RN's and TE's summaries, along with the statements of Witnesses QF, ST, TF, and TG, provided clear and consistent information to put Ntahobali on sufficient notice of the allegation against him concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.

1179. As noted above, the Trial Chamber further relied on the summary of Witness FA's testimony attached to the Prosecution Motion to Vary Witness List as providing additional notice to Ntahobali concerning this allegation.[2705] The summary of Witness FA's evidence indicated that the witness "heard [Ntahobali] say to an Interahamwe named Kazungu, 'Get up Kazungu. Let's go. Today we will start with killing [a Tutsi named] Rwamukwaya.'"[2706] The Prosecution argued that Witness FA's evidence was material to its case.[2707] Witness FA's Statement, referred to in the Prosecution's motion, also made reference to Ntahobali driving a white van a few days later.[2708] Despite Ntahobali's objection to the addition of this witness, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution's request.[2709] At the time, Ntahobali did not object to Witness FA's evidence as falling outside the scope of the Indictment.[2710] Rather, Ntahobali argued that Witness FA would testify on facts already addressed by other witnesses.[2711]

[2704] The Appeals Chamber recalls that "mere service of witness statements is insufficient to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial". See Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 162. See also Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 139; Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 27.

1180. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution Motion to Vary Witness List, along with Witness FA's Statement as disclosed on 12 January 2004 with the motion, put Ntahobali on clear notice that he was alleged to have announced his intention to kill Rwamukwaya and confirmed the allegation that he was driving Rwamukwaya's car at one point. The summary and statement, however, did not clarify whether the Prosecution case was that Ntahobali physically participated in the killing of Rwamukwaya or was solely alleged to be responsible for instigating or encouraging the killing of Rwamukwaya and, indirectly, that of his family. These materials also cannot be said to constitute "timely" notice. The Appeals Chamber thus concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects in the Indictment concerning Ntahobali's responsibility for the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family were cured through Prosecution post-indictment disclosures.[2712]

1181. However, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that, by expressly stating in the Prosecution Motion to Vary Witness List that Witness FA's evidence relating to the killing of Rwamukwaya was "material" to its case and went "to prove counts" of the Indictment,[2713] the Prosecution made it clear that it still intended to prove Ntahobali's responsibility in respect of this killing despite the deletion of Witnesses RN and TE from its witness list ordered by the Trial Chamber in March 2002.[2714]

1182. Turning to the question whether the defects in the Indictment materially impaired Ntahobali's ability to prepare his defence in relation to the allegation concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family,[2715] the Appeals Chamber observes that, since Ntahobali raised the issue of lack of notice concerning this allegation in his closing brief and the Trial Chamber examined his claim without considering it untimely,[2716] the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove that Ntahobali's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[2717]

1183. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has met its burden, as it effectively demonstrates that the conduct of Ntahobali's defence reveals that the vagueness of the notice

Pauline Nyiramasuhuko et al.*, Case No. ICTR-98-42-T, Decision on the Prosecutor's Motion to Stay Disclosure Until Protection Measures Are Put in Place, 27 March 2002, p. 4. This decision reflects that the Prosecution intended to call Witnesses RN and TE and did not wish to withdraw them from its witness list. The deletion of these witnesses from the Prosecution's witness list was ordered by the Trial Chamber as a result of the non-disclosure of their unredacted statements. See ibid., paras. 9, 11. Ntahobali's argument that their withdrawal signaled that the Prosecution no longer intended to prove this allegation in 2002 is therefore without merit. The Appeals Chamber also considers that the fact that Witnesses QF, ST, and TF were ultimately not called to testify is irrelevant to the question of whether Ntahobali was provided sufficient notice of the allegation. See supra, fn. 2679. Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the Appeals Chamber further observes that the Prosecution Closing Brief was clear that the allegation that Ntahobali was responsible for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family formed part of the Prosecution case. See Prosecution Closing Brief, paras. 36, 66, 98, 181, 199 at pp. 169, 182, 193, 194, 220, 221, 227.

provided by the Prosecution regarding the nature of his participation in the crime and the number of victims was harmless. Specifically, a review of the transcripts of Witness FA's testimony reflects that Ntahobali was able to conduct an effective cross-examination of Witness FA on the aspects of the witness's evidence on the basis of which he was ultimately convicted.[2718] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Ntahobali did not object to Witness FA's evidence on the killing of the Rwamukwaya family during the course of the witness's testimony for lack of notice[2719] and that he had objected to the addition of this witness in 2004 on the basis that the witness would testify on facts already addressed by other witnesses.[2720] Ntahobali's closing submissions also show that he understood and defended himself against the allegations that he announced his intention to kill Rwamukwaya and participated in the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family.[2721] The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that Ntahobali challenged the allegation that he directly participated in the killing of the Rwamukwaya family did not prevent him from also defending against the allegation that he had announced his intention to kill Rwamukwaya, the primary basis on which the Trial Chamber relied to find him criminally responsible.

1184. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali himself testified as to the use of Rwamukwaya's vehicle,[2722] that he questioned one of his witnesses on the use of the vehicle,[2723] and that he called a witness to specifically rebut the allegations of his responsibility in the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family.[2724] The Appeals Chamber also observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's suggestion, his counsel's cross-examination of Witness D-2-13-O reflects that he was prepared to rebut the witness's testimony as regards his responsibility for aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family in the second half of April 1994.[2725]

[2718] See Witness FA, T. 1 July 2004 pp. 14-16 (closed session), 25, 45-49.
[2719] The Appeals Chamber reiterates that none of the Trial Chamber's oral statements and decisions pointed out by Ntahobali could have reasonably been understood as suggesting to the Defence to refrain from making objections related to the indictment because they would not be granted at this stage and had rather to be addressed in closing submissions. See supra, para. 1107.

Ntahobali indicated in the will-say statement he disclosed in November 2005 that Witness WQMJP would testify, inter alia, that Rwamukwaya was alive in May 1994 and that his son was abducted while going around Butare. See The Prosecutor v. Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, Case No. ICTR-97-21-T, Will Say Statement –Witness WQMJP, 24 November 2005 (confidential), p. 2117 (Registry pagination).
[2725] See Witness D-2-13-O, T. 7 November 2007 pp. 21-42 (closed session); T. 8 November 2007 pp. 11-72 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali did not request the recall of Witness FA on the basis that he could not cross-examine her in light of the additional evidence provided by Witness D-2-13-O during his testimony. See The Prosecutor v. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, Case No. ICTR-97-21-T, Motion by Arsène Shalom Ntahobali for Exclusion of Testimonial Evidence and for Recall of Witnesses, 8 October 2008 (originally filed in French, English translation filed on 9 March 2009) (confidential).

1185. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber is persuaded that, despite the vagueness of the Indictment and the Prosecution's failure to provide Ntahobali with clear and timely information on his responsibility for aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, Ntahobali's ability to prepare a meaningful defence against the material facts on the basis of which he was ultimately convicted was not materially impaired.

(c) Conclusion

1186. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that, although the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the defects in the Indictment concerning Ntahobali's responsibility for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family were cured, this error does not invalidate its decision to convict him for aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family as the Prosecution proved on appeal that Ntahobali's ability to prepare his defence in this respect was not materially impaired.

5. Butare Prefecture Office (Ground 2.5 in part)

1187. The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 8, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 10) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsis who were abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office where they had sought refuge.[2726] The Trial Chamber also convicted Ntahobali of committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting rapes perpetrated at the Butare Prefecture Office as a crime against humanity (Count 7) and as outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 11).[2727]

1188. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ntahobali with respect to these allegations, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 4.5, 6.30, 6.31, 6.37, and 6.53 of the Indictment.[2728]

[2726] Trial Judgement, paras. 5876, 5971, 6053-6055, 6100, 6101, 6168, 6169, 6186. The Trial Chamber also found that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility for the acts of the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office, "including their abductions, rapes, and killings" pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining his sentence. See ibid., paras. 5886, 5971. See also ibid., paras. 5652, 5884, 5885, 6056, 6086, 6220. The Appeals Chamber discusses Ntahobali's challenges to the imprecision of the Trial Judgement regarding his convictions for crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office in detail below in Section V.I.1. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 284. See also ibid., para. 289. The Appeals Chamber will address Ntahobali's contentions regarding the lack of notice that he was charged as a superior for crimes perpetrated at the prefectoral office in Section V.B.7 below.

The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraph 6.30 were being pursued against Ntahobali under Counts 2, 3, 5, 6, and 8 through 10, those in paragraph 6.31 under Counts 2, 3, 5, 6, and 8 through 11, and those in paragraph 6.37 under Counts 7 and 11, pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2729] The allegations in paragraph 6.53 were being pursued against him under Counts 2, 3, 5 through 11 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2730] Paragraph 4.5 was not specifically relied upon in support of any count.

1189. In response to Ntahobali's assertion that he was not reasonably informed of the charges concerning the crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Trial Chamber determined that "the crimes of abduction and killing at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were clearly pleaded in the Indictment."[2731] It further found that, although the Indictment was defective with respect to the charges of rape, the defects were cured and Ntahobali did not suffer prejudice in the preparation of his defence.[2732] As regards the pleading of victims in particular, the Trial Chamber held that, "in view of the sheer scale of the attacks, rapes and killings alleged to have taken place at the [Butare Prefecture Office], it [was] impractical to require the Prosecution to name each of the alleged victims of this course of conduct" and that the Indictment was therefore not defective for failing to name each of the alleged victims at the prefectoral office.[2733]

1190. Ntahobali submits that his responsibility in the abductions and killings of Tutsis at the Butare Prefecture Office was not adequately pleaded in the Indictment and that the vagueness of the Indictment was never cured.[2734] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was provided sufficient notice of the charges of rape at the prefectoral office.[2735]

(a) Killings

1191. As discussed in detail below in Section V.I addressing Ntahobali's challenges to the assessment of the evidence and his responsibility in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe to kill numerous Tutsis who were abducted from the prefectoral office where they had sought refuge during an attack conducted in

The Trial Chamber, however, found that the late disclosure of the names of specific victims "accorded bias to the Defence in preparing its case" and decided that it will not convict Ntahobali, if established by the evidence, for the alleged crimes against "Trifina, Mrs. Mbasha, Annonciata, Semanyenzi, Caritas or Immaculée". See ibid., para. 2172.

mid-May 1994. The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali under Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killing on this basis.[2736] Although the Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, has clarified that Ntahobali was ultimately only convicted in relation to one specific attack conducted in mid-May 1994, the Trial Judgement reflects that the evidence adduced by the Prosecution covered a longer period of time spanning additional attacks.[2737]

1192. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber determined that "the crimes of abduction and killing at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were clearly pleaded in the Indictment."[2738]

1193. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment was not defective concerning the crimes of abduction and killing at the prefectoral office.[2739] Specifically, he argues that the identity of his alleged accomplices was not sufficiently pleaded. He points out that, following the Trial Chamber's order in 2000 to identify his accomplices in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, the Prosecution only specified the names of two Interahamwe – who were not subsequently mentioned by the witnesses – and failed to provide the names of all the other Interahamwe it mentioned at trial.[2740] In his view, the fact that the Prosecution and its witnesses mentioned those names at trial demonstrates that the Prosecution could and should have specified them in the Indictment.[2741]

1194. Ntahobali also argues that the dates provided in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment were too vague.[2742] He contends that, in the circumstances of this case, given that the refugees were transferred from the prefectoral office to the EER from 15 to 31 May 1994 and to Nyange in the end of May or early-June 1994, and that they left for Rango in June 1994, there could have been no attacks against them during these periods.[2743] According to Ntahobali, the fact that his co-accused's indictments contain dates that were more precise with respect to the absence of refugees from the prefectoral office and the fact that the Trial Chamber split the attacks into several identified times show that the Prosecution was in a position to provide more precise dates.[2744] Ntahobali claims that he was never provided notice through the Indictment or any subsequent materials of the approximate dates of the attacks in relation of which he was convicted.[2745]

1195. Ntahobali further submits that the form of responsibility of "ordering" was not pleaded in the Indictment. In his opinion, paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment cannot be considered as including "ordering".[2746] He adds that it is of significance that the names of Jumapili and Nsengiyumva mentioned in the Indictment as his accomplices were only mentioned in the summary of Witness QBM's anticipated evidence, which clearly specified that the orders to kill at the prefectoral office were not given by him.[2747]

1196. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment pleaded Ntahobali's responsibility for abductions and killings at the prefectoral office.[2748] It contends that, by identifying that Interahamwe militiamen accompanied him to abduct Tutsi refugees, paragraph 6.30 identified his alleged accomplices, and argues that the exact names of the Interahamwe were evidence and not material facts that needed to be pleaded in the Indictment.[2749] The Prosecution also responds that the form of responsibility of "ordering" was properly pleaded through paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment, which was listed under all counts, and that the date range provided was not too vague.[2750]

1197. Ntahobali was convicted of ordering "Interahamwe" to kill Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office and were abducted during an attack perpetrated in mid-May 1994.[2751] In paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, the Prosecution clearly pleaded that Ntahobali went to the prefectoral office to abduct Tutsi refugees with "Interahamwe militiamen such as one JUMAPILI and another NSENGIYUMVA among others". The fact that the Prosecution, or the witnesses it called, referred to specific Interahamwe by names in the course of the trial other than those mentioned in the Indictment does not establish that the Prosecution was in possession of this information when the operative indictment was issued or its pre-trial brief was filed. As such, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Prosecution was in possession of additional information regarding the names of the Interahamwe who participated in abductions and killings with him at the prefectoral office. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that the Prosecution and its witnesses did not eventually mention "Jumapili" and "Nsengiyumva" at trial is not relevant to whether Ntahobali was provided sufficient notice of the identity of his alleged "accomplices".

1198. Paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment specifies the relevant date range as "[b]etween 19 April and late June 1994". In the specific circumstances of the allegation pertaining to the crimes at the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber is unconvinced by Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that this broad date range was sufficient to provide him notice. Although the Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, has clarified that Ntahobali was ultimately only convicted in relation to one specific attack conducted in mid-May 1994, the Trial Judgement reflects that the evidence adduced by the Prosecution covered a longer period of time spanning additional attacks.[2752] Ntahobali's submission that the Indictment should have pleaded the different transfers of the refugees from the prefectoral office to the EER, Nyange, or Rango – as it did in the Kanyabashi Indictment and the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment[2753] – fails to appreciate that the Prosecution case, as presented at trial, was not that crimes were not committed after or between those transfers but that attacks were ongoing at the prefectoral office from the end of April to the end of June 1994. Given the sheer scale of the alleged crimes ranging over a period of nearly three months, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Prosecution was in a position to provide further specificity as regards the dates of the commission of the crimes.[2754]

1199. With respect to the pleading of the form of responsibility, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the alleged nature of the responsibility of the accused should be stated unambiguously in the indictment and that the Prosecution should therefore indicate precisely which form of responsibility is invoked based on the facts alleged.[2755] When it is alleged that the accused planned, instigated, ordered, or aided and abetted the planning, preparation, or execution of the alleged crimes, the Prosecution is required to identify the "particular acts" or the "particular course of conduct" on the part of the accused which forms the basis for the charges in question.[2756]

1200. The Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, which refers to Ntahobali's responsibility for abductions and killings at the prefectoral office, does not specifically refer to Ntahobali giving orders to the Interahamwe who accompanied him to abduct refugees, who were later killed. Paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment which the Trial Chamber took into consideration is not relevant in this respect. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by the Prosecution's argument that paragraph 5.1 of the Indictment put Ntahobali on sufficient notice that he was charged with ordering crimes at the prefectoral office given the broad nature of the allegation set forth in this paragraph, the fact that it is not clearly linked to paragraph 6.30, and the fact that it refers to several forms of responsibility.[2757] The Appeals Chamber considers that, by failing to specify that Ntahobali was alleged to have ordered killings at the prefectoral office in particular or sufficiently specify his particular acts or course of conduct in this regard, the Indictment failed to provide adequate notice to Ntahobali that he was charged on this basis. As a result, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to conclude that the Indictment was vague as regards the pleading of the form of responsibility of ordering.

1201. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that the Trial Chamber's error does not invalidate its decision to convict Ntahobali for ordering Interahamwe to kill Tutsis who were abducted from the prefectoral office because the vagueness of the Indictment was remedied by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber notes that it is clear from the summary of Witness RJ's anticipated evidence attached to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief that the Prosecution intended to prove through this witness that Ntahobali exercised authority over the Interahamwe involved in crimes at the prefectoral office and issued instructions and orders to kill refugees.[2758] Witnesses RE's and TA's summaries also showed that these witnesses were expected to testify that Ntahobali exercised authority at the prefectoral office and issued orders and instructions to Interahamwe while there.[2759] These summaries were expressly marked relevant to Ntahobali and, inter alia, to Counts 2, 6, and 8 of his Indictment. The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that some of these summaries, together with the summaries of the anticipated evidence

[2758] In relevant part, Witness RJ's Summary reads as follows:

> Later Ntahobali came with soldiers and Interahamwe […]. Ntahobali said, "these people must be killed." Ntahobali selected young women and girls and left with them. Next day Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came in a mud-camouflaged car and took away women and girls. Girls asked for mercy but Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali refused instead they ordered beatings.

[2759] In relevant part, Witness RE's Summary reads as follows:

> During the night, RE saw Ntahobali […]. He arrived at the Prefecture office with Nyiramasuhuko and some Interahamwe. […] RE heard Ntahobali give orders to the Interahamwe to force people into cars. […] Ntahobali drove the car and returned in an empty car. RE learned from one survivor that the refugees were brought to a place called Rwabayanga to be killed.

In relevant part, Witness TA's Summary reads as follows:

> Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came to the Prefecture office often. They stated: "Let's get rid of this dirt." People were taken away. […] TA regarded Ntahobali as the leader of the attackers. He issued commands to the attackers.

of other witnesses, including Witness QBM's Summary, also referred to Nyiramasuhuko or others issuing orders and exercising authority during attacks at the prefectoral office is not inconsistent with the fact that Ntahobali was also alleged to have issued orders.

1202. The Appeals Chamber concludes that, although the Indictment was defective regarding the pleading of his responsibility for ordering killings at the prefectoral office, Ntahobali was subsequently put on adequate notice that he was charged with ordering Interahamwe to commit killings at the Butare Prefecture Office between 19 April and late June 1994.

(b) Rapes

1203. As discussed in detail below in Section V.I.1(b), the Trial Chamber found that, at the Butare Prefecture Office, Ntahobali: (i) raped Witness TA during an attack conducted in mid-May 1994; (ii) raped and ordered rapes of Witness TA and six other women during attacks that occurred in the last half of May 1994; and (iii) raped women and aided and abetted the rapes of Witness TA during attacks in the first half of June 1994.[2760] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting rapes under Counts 7 and 11 on this basis.

1204. The Trial Chamber made the following determinations regarding the pleading of Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office in the Indictment:

> As to the crime of rape, Paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali indictment states that aside from the attacks on Tutsis, Ntahobali was assisted by accomplices in kidnapping and raping Tutsi women. The Chamber recalls that an indictment paragraph should be read in conjunction with the entire indictment as a whole. Read in this way, the crimes of kidnapping and rape were separately pled to the attacks occurring throughout the rest of the préfecture, including the attacks and abductions at the [Butare Prefecture Office]. Nonetheless, the information in Paragraph 6.37 lacked necessary details, including specific dates, locations and the names of victims, to put Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko on notice that they were being charged with raping women or were responsible as a superior for rapes occurring at the [Butare Prefecture Office]. The Indictment was therefore defective in this regard.[2761]

The Trial Chamber determined that the defect in the Indictment was cured through the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses TA, FAP, QBP, QBQ, QZ, RE, RF, RG, RJ, and SW appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, which clearly indicated that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in rapes at the prefectoral office.[2762]

1205. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him on the basis of rapes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office as this allegation was not pleaded in the Indictment and its addition radically transformed the case against him.[2763] In support of his contention, he asserts that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider that the rapes pleaded in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment could relate to crime scenes discussed in other paragraphs of the Indictment, given: (i) the substitution of the phrase "as part of his attack" in paragraph 3.12 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Second Amended Indictment with the phrase "aside from his attacks" in paragraph 6.37; and (ii) the fact that none of the paragraphs of the Indictment related to the prefectoral office alleged rapes.[2764]

1206. Alternatively, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects concerning his responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office were cured.[2765] He argues that the Trial Chamber erred in not examining whether he received sufficient notice of all material facts "in respect of each rape of which he was found guilty".[2766] He also submits that the Trial Chamber could not consider the summaries which were not marked relevant to him in the Witness Summaries Grid as providing him the requisite notice.[2767] Ntahobali further posits that the ten summaries relied upon by the Trial Chamber were too ambiguous and contradictory to constitute clear and consistent notice that he participated in rapes at the prefectoral office.[2768] Specifically, he highlights that: (i) Witnesses QBP, QBQ, and RG were not expected to testify against him; (ii) the summaries of Witnesses RE, RJ, RF, and RG do not mention rapes at the prefectoral office; (iii) the summaries of Witnesses FAP, QBQ, QBP, and SW refer to rapes at the prefectoral office without implicating him; (iv) the summaries of Witnesses FAP, RJ, and QBQ mention orders to rapes which were not issued by him; and (v) Witness RF's Summary and the prior statement of Witness SW name other

Ntahobali also argues that: (i) paragraph 6.30 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment relating to the prefectoral office does not mention any rapes and is not relied upon in support of Counts 7 and 11; (ii) the allegations in paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment relate to the Butare University Hospital and the period of mid-June 1994 specifically, not the prefectoral office and the crimes committed there between April and June 1994. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 273, 274. The Appeals Chamber emphasises that the Trial Chamber did not rely on paragraph 6.30 to find Ntahobali guilty under Counts 7 and 11 for his involvement in rapes and recalls that it has already addressed and rejected Ntahobali's contention regarding the geographical and temporal scope of the allegations set forth in paragraph 6.37. See Trial Judgement, para. 2163; supra, paras. 509, 511, 1150, 1188.

It is unclear in his appeal brief whether Ntahobali refers to notice of the evidence or notice of the charges. However, read in context of the entirety of his submissions and his reply brief, the Appeals Chamber understands that Ntahobali intended to limit his contention to notice of the charges. See ibid., paras. 272, 281; Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 124, 128, 131, 134. See also Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 669.

individuals responsible for the selection of victims to rape.[2769] Ntahobali argues that, considered in light of the confusion and ambiguity of the Prosecution case as demonstrated by the above, the summaries of Witnesses TA's and QZ's anticipated evidence – the only summaries referring to his responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office – did not cure all the defects of paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[2770]

1207. With respect to the timing of the rapes, Ntahobali contends that he was never provided notice of rapes at the prefectoral office in June 1994.[2771] Moreover, he submits that the Prosecution failed to give him adequate notice of the forms of responsibility under which he was charged in relation to rapes committed there.[2772] In particular, he argues that, by generally pleading his responsibility for committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting rapes without specifying the locations, dates, co-perpetrators, or victims, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief did not provide him with sufficient information curing the defect in the Indictment.[2773] He adds that he did not receive any information regarding his alleged responsibility for aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA or ordering rapes at the prefectoral office and that he was never informed of the identity of victims, the location, and the time of the rapes.[2774] According to Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that it was impracticable for the Prosecution to name all the victims because of the sheer scale of the attacks given that he was alleged to have personally committed these rapes.[2775]

1208. Ntahobali further contends that the Prosecution demonstrated through its questions to witnesses that it knew that Interahamwe were involved in attacks at the prefectoral office and had information regarding the names of some of the individuals involved which should have been mentioned in the Indictment, but that it never cured the defect in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment concerning the identity of his alleged accomplices.[2776]

1209. The Prosecution responds that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment clearly charges rape and is applicable to the Butare Prefecture Office.[2777] It also argues that Ntahobali's contention that the Ntahobali underlines that Witness TA's Summary clearly indicated that the refugees had left the prefectoral office for Rango around the end of May 1994 and that Witnesses QBP's and TK's summaries did not implicate him in any rape at the prefectoral office. He also submits that, to the extent that the Trial Chamber convicted him in relation to the rapes of four victims designated by name by Witness QBP during attacks in the first half of June 1994, the Trial Chamber erred as these specific names were not specified in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment or in any subsequent disclosures. See ibid., paras. 291, 292. As discussed in Sections V.I.1(b), V.I.2(a)(ii) below, the Appeals Chamber understands that Ntahobali was not convicted on the basis of any of the rapes testified to by Witness QBP during attacks in the first half of June 1994. Ntahobali's contention is therefore moot.

vagueness of this paragraph was not remedied should be dismissed. It contends that: (i) given their contents and the fact that they were all listed as relevant to Nyiramasuhuko and Counts 1 through 11 of the same Indictment, the summaries of Witnesses QBQ, QBP, SS, QJ, SD, and SU provided Ntahobali notice that they would testify about his participation in crimes at the prefectoral office; (ii) the summaries of Witnesses QZ, TA, RF, and RJ implicated Ntahobali in rapes at the prefectoral office; and (iii) the differences in the summaries do not render them inconsistent.[2778] The Prosecution further responds that Ntahobali was informed that he was charged with committing, aiding and abetting, and ordering rapes at the prefectoral office through paragraph 29 of its pre-trial brief, Witnesses RF's and TA's summaries, and its opening statement and that notice of Ntahobali's accomplices in the rapes was provided through paragraph 6.53 of the Indictment.[2779]

1210. Ntahobali replies, inter alia, that he could not understand that the witnesses who were only marked relevant to Nyiramasuhuko in the Witness Summaries Grid would testify against him and that he suffered considerable prejudice from this lack of notice because he did not investigate them as a result.[2780] He also argues that Witness QZ's Summary was not useful as he was ultimately not convicted for the rape mentioned therein.[2781]

1211. The Appeals Chamber notes that there is no dispute that the Indictment was defective regarding the pleading of Ntahobali's responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office. There is no mention of any rape in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, which relates to the prefectoral office in particular, and paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, which refers to Ntahobali's participation in raping Tutsi women, is excessively broad as regards the dates, locations, identity of his accomplices, and the nature of Ntahobali's participation in the rapes.

1212. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds no merit in Ntahobali's contentions that the allegation was not pleaded in the Indictment or that the addition of material facts underpinning this allegation radically transformed the case against him. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the

The Prosecution further argues that Witnesses QBP, SS, SU, QJ, and QBQ "were all mentioned in [its pre-trial brief] as testifying against Ntahobali for killings, abductions, and rapes at the préfecture office." However, the references provided by the Prosecution do not correspond to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and the Appeals Chamber has been unable to identify the document to which the Prosecution intended to refer. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 819, fn. 2051.

[2781] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 136. Ntahobali also replies that notice of rapes not committed at the prefectoral office was not relevant as he was only convicted for crimes committed there and that paragraph 6.53 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment was too vague and did not plead that he committed any crimes. See ibid., paras. 137, 140, 145. The Appeals Chamber considers that these arguments are moot in light of the analysis developed below and the fact that the Trial Chamber did not ultimately rely on paragraph 6.53 regarding these allegations.

allegation of Ntahobali's responsibility for committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting rapes of Tutsi women at the prefectoral office is clearly encompassed in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment. Ntahobali's argument regarding the amendment of the phrasing of the allegation set out in paragraph 6.37 from "as part of his attack" to "aside from his attacks" lacks merit as the import of this change, read in context of both indictments, is not clear. More importantly, Ntahobali's interpretation of this amendment is refuted by the fact that the Prosecution supported paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Third Amendment Indictment, in which the phrasing "aside from his attacks" was first introduced, by an excerpt of Witness QZ's statement recounting how Ntahobali and Interahamwe raped her and other women at the prefectoral office.[2782]

1213. As regards Ntahobali's alternative challenges to the Trial Chamber's finding that the defects in the Indictment regarding this allegation were cured, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber should have examined whether he received sufficient notice of all material facts "in respect of each rape of which he was found guilty" at the prefectoral office. It is manifest that the Prosecution case in relation to the prefectoral office was that Ntahobali was implicated in multiple rapes spanning over a period of nearly three months. The Appeals Chamber considers that, in these circumstances, it was impractical to require a high degree of specificity from the Prosecution regarding each incident of rape given the sheer scale of the alleged rapes at the prefectoral office.[2783]

1214. The Appeals Chamber, however, accepts Ntahobali's argument that the summaries of anticipated evidence which were not marked relevant to him in the Witness Summaries Grid could not be considered as providing him notice. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber finds that, where the Prosecution indicated that specific summaries were solely relevant to Nyiramasuhuko, the fact that they were linked to Ntahobali because he and Nyiramasuhuko were charged under the same indictment is insufficient to show that Ntahobali should have understood that the Prosecution intended to rely on the information contained therein against him.[2784]

1215. A review of the Witness Summaries Grid reveals that the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses RG, QBP, and QBQ which the Trial Chamber took into consideration were

The Appeals Chamber considers that the present case differs from the circumstances considered in the Muhimana Appeal Judgement relied upon by Ntahobali, which concerned an attack occurring over the course of three days and Mikaeli Muhimana's responsibility for the killing of three specific individuals. See Muhimana Appeal Judgement, paras. 74, 78, 79.
[2784] Trial Judgement, para. 2164 ("The Appendix to the [Prosecution] Pre-Trial Brief included the summaries of numerous witnesses who were to testify as to rape allegations against Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko occurring at the not marked relevant to Ntahobali but only to Nyiramasuhuko and Kanyabashi.[2785] It is not clear, however, whether the Trial Chamber considered these summaries as relevant to remedying Ntahobali's lack of notice in particular as its analysis and conclusions concerned the notice provided to both Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali.[2786] Nevertheless, as far as the Prosecution relies on the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses QJ, SD, SS, and SU in support of its claim that Ntahobali was provided notice, its argument lacks merit because these summaries were not marked relevant to Ntahobali.[2787]

1216. Conversely, the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses TA, FAP, QZ, RE, RF, RJ, and SW which the Trial Chamber took into account were marked relevant to Ntahobali. Ntahobali is correct in his submission that Witness RE's Summary does not refer to rapes at the prefectoral office and did not provide him notice in this regard. Having reviewed Witnesses FAP's and SW's summaries, the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that they could be said to have provided notice to Ntahobali of his responsibility for rapes as found by the Trial Chamber given that they do not refer to his participation in the rapes perpetrated at the prefectoral office.

1217. Ntahobali, however, erroneously submits that Witnesses RJ's and RF's summaries do not mention rapes being committed at the prefectoral office. Witness RJ's Summary clearly refers to Nyiramasuhuko ordering Ntahobali and Interahamwe to commit rapes there[2788] and Witness RF's Summary implicates Ntahobali in selecting girls to rape at the prefectoral office.[2789] Witness TA's Summary also mentions that Ntahobali raped Witness TA and other women at the prefectoral office, that he was implicated in the rapes committed by Interahamwe who accompanied him, and that he issued commands to the attackers, who committed multiple rapes.[2790] Similarly, [2785] See Trial Judgement, para. 2164, fn. 5753; Witness Summaries Grid, items 44, 45, 67.

[2786] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution's reliance on the Ntabakuze Appeal Judgement is ill-founded and should be rejected. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 818. Indeed, in the Ntabakuze case, the Appeals Chamber found that the defect in the indictment was cured since, although the Prosecution failed to indicate that the summaries of the witnesses' anticipated evidence were cited in support of the relevant counts, the Prosecution specified in its supplement to its pre-trial brief that the evidence of these witnesses was relevant to a paragraph of the indictment that was cited in support of these counts. In the present case, no subsequent information put Ntahobali on notice that the Prosecution intended to rely on these witnesses against him. See Ntabakuze Appeal Judgement, para. 54.

[2787] See Witness Summaries Grid, items 4, 76, 84, 86.

[2788] In relevant part, Witness RJ's Summary reads as follows:

> Later, RJ heard Nyiramasuhuko order soldiers, Interahamwe, and Ntahobali to select girls and young women and rape them, and kill the older women.

[2789] In relevant part, Witness RF's Summary reads as follows:

> Ntahobali selected girls to rape, and RF learned this from girls who returned after being raped.

The Appeals Chamber considers that Witness RF's reference to the girls who "returned" did not necessarily mean that the girls were not raped at the prefectoral office as suggested by Ntahobali, but could reasonably be interpreted as referring to another location within the prefectoral office itself.

[2790] In relevant part, Witness TA's Summary reads as follows:

Witness QZ's Summary refers to Ntahobali and Interahamwe raping women at the prefectoral office.[2791] Ntahobali's argument in reply that Witness QZ's Summary could not be effectively relied upon as providing notice because he was ultimately not convicted on the basis of the evidence that the witness provided fails to appreciate that whether the testimonies adduced at trial support the allegations are matters of evidence, not notice of the charges.[2792]

1218. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali was unambiguously put on notice by those summaries that, as part of its broad allegation of his participation in the raping of Tutsi women set forth in the Indictment, the Prosecution's intention was to prove that he participated in the rape of Tutsi women at the prefectoral office specifically. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the information provided in some of these summaries,[2793] as well as others,[2794] that Nyiramasuhuko and others issued orders to rape at the prefectoral office was not inconsistent with the information that Ntahobali also issued orders.

1219. With respect to the timing of the rapes, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that it is apparent that the allegation in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment was meant to relate to the period "[b]etween 19 April and late June 1994" invoked in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment.[2795] Moreover, while Witness RF's Summary does not provide any date for the rapes committed at the prefectoral office, the witness's 1996 prior statement indicates that Ntahobali and Interahamwe raped girls at the prefectoral office from 1 June 1994.[2796] When reading Witness RF's Summary in conjunction with

[…] On a second occasion, about one week later, Ntahobali again raped TA under force and threat of force by hammer. TA witnessed six other women being raped on the same occasion by men, who accompanied Ntahobali. On a third occasion, about four days later, Ntahobali dragged TA, placed her on the ground, lifted up her[] skirt, called his friends to come over, and said: "Do it quickly." Seven men who accompanied Ntahobali raped TA. TA also witnessed Ntahobali four meters another rape. On another occasion, TA witnessed her friend being raped by Ntahobali. [2791] In relevant part, Witness QZ's Summary reads as follows:

Could any Hutu have married you in the past?" QZ was raped by Ntahobali and the Interahamwe, and Nyiramasuhuko witnessed the rape.

It was Shalom who drove the [v]an. He also selected girls to go and rape them. Some of the girls who came back came to confirm the rape. They took

Witness RF's Statement first disclosed in 1998, it should have been clear to Ntahobali that he was alleged to have been involved in rapes at the prefectoral office also in June 1994.[2797]

1220. Concerning notice of the forms of responsibility, the Appeals Chamber observes that, although the Prosecution only vaguely pleaded Ntahobali's participation in the raping of Tutsi women in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment and pursued Counts 7 and 11 under all forms of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute, Witnesses TA's, QZ's, RF's, and RJ's summaries informed Ntahobali of the particular acts and course of conduct which formed the basis for his responsibility for committing, aiding and abetting, and ordering under which he was convicted. As discussed above, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that it was impractical to require a high degree of specificity from the Prosecution regarding each incident of rape given the sheer scale of the alleged rapes at the prefectoral office.[2798]

1221. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ntahobali's contention regarding the identification of his alleged accomplices as the relevant summaries made it clear that he was alleged to have ordered and aided and abetted Interahamwe in the commission of rapes at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that the fact that the Prosecution, or the witnesses it called, referred to specific Interahamwe by names in the course of the trial does not establish that the Prosecution was in possession of this information when the operative indictment was issued or its pre-trial brief was filed.[2799]

1222. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects in the Indictment concerning his responsibility for rapes at the prefectoral office were curable and cured by timely, clear, and consistent information.

6. École Évangéliste du Rwanda (Ground 2.4 in part)

1223. The Trial Chamber found that, between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994: (i) Ntahobali led Interahamwe in carrying out attacks against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the EER; (ii) Ntahobali, soldiers, and Interahamwe abducted refugees from the EER; (iii) soldiers raped women and young girls at or near the EER; and (iv) Ntahobali, Interahamwe, and soldiers killed the away girls selected in advance by the Interahamwe who controlled the refugees at the Prefecture and went away to rape them.

[2797] The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali should have been prompted to re-examine Witness RF's Statement upon reading the summary of her anticipated evidence.
[2798] See supra, para. 1213.
[2799] See supra, para. 1197.

abducted refugees in the woods near the EER school complex.[2800] The Trial Chamber, however, stated that there was no direct evidence that Ntahobali was personally responsible for killing any of the abducted refugees.[2801] Nevertheless, it held that Ntahobali's presence alongside Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER amounted to tacit approval and encouragement of the killings perpetrated by Interahamwe and soldiers near the EER.[2802] On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 8, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 10) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting these killings.[2803]

1224. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ntahobali with respect to this allegation, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment.[2804] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraph 6.30 were being pursued under Counts 2, 3, 5, 6, and 8 through 10 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[2805] The Trial Chamber noted Ntahobali's assertion that the allegation that he abducted, raped, and killed Tutsi refugees on unspecified dates at or near the EER with soldiers and/or Interahamwe was not pleaded in the Indictment.[2806] It appears to have found that Ntahobali did not have sufficient notice that he was alleged to be responsible for rapes committed at or near the EER and did not convict Ntahobali in relation to the rapes committed at or near the EER.[2807]

1225. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in failing to address his contention at trial that his responsibility in the abductions and the killings of Tutsis at or near the EER was not

The Trial Chamber also found that Ntahobali was responsible for these killings as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and considered this as an aggravating circumstance when determining his sentence. See ibid., paras. 5917, 5971, 6056, 6220. The Appeals Chamber notes some contradiction in the Trial Chamber's analysis of the defect of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment regarding the rape allegation in the "Factual Findings" and "Legal Findings" sections of the Trial Judgement but considers it unnecessary to discuss the matter in light of the fact that Ntahobali was ultimately not convicted in relation to the rapes committed at or near the EER. Compare Trial Judgement, paras. 3842-3845 with ibid., paras. 5857-5865, 5911, 6089, 6090.

pleaded in the Indictment and in convicting him on this basis since the defect in the Indictment was neither curable nor cured.[2808]

1226. The Appeals Chamber observes that, despite expressly noting it in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber failed to address Ntahobali's contention that the allegation that he participated in the abduction and killing of Tutsi refugees on unspecified dates at or near the EER with soldiers and/or Interahamwe was not pleaded in the Indictment,[2809] limiting its examination to the question of whether Ntahobali was put on notice of his alleged responsibility for rapes at or near the EER.[2810] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber is not obliged to respond to each and every submission made at trial and has discretion to decide which argument to address.[2811] However, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber should have explained its reasons for disregarding such a serious contention and deciding to enter convictions against Ntahobali for crimes which he claimed he was not charged with. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's failure to address Ntahobali's contention regarding the pleading of his responsibility for abductions and killings at or near the EER infringed Ntahobali's right to a reasoned opinion under Article 22 of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules. The Appeals Chamber will determine whether this error of law invalidates the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Ntahobali in relation to crimes committed at or near the EER in examining whether Ntahobali was charged on this basis and, if so, whether he was provided with sufficient information on the material facts underpinning the charge against him.

(a) Whether the Indictment Was Defective

1227. Ntahobali argues that the allegation concerning the abduction of the refugees from the EER and their killing in the woods nearby was not pleaded in the Indictment.[2812] He points out that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment only refers to refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office without pleading that refugees stayed at the EER or that he was alleged to have been present during abductions from the EER.[2813] Highlighting that the Prosecution did not refer to crimes at the EER in its opening statement and that, in contrast with his Indictment, the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment specifically refers to crimes committed against refugees staying at the EER, Ntahobali submits that it was reasonable for him to understand that the Prosecution did not intend to prosecute him in relation to abductions and killings at the EER.[2814]

1228. In the alternative, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment did not contain all the required material facts for this allegation.[2815] In particular, he argues that paragraph 6.30 is too vague as regards the dates of the crimes, the location of the abductions, and the identity of the perpetrators of the crimes committed near the EER, and does not plead his alleged role in the crimes and the form of his responsibility.[2816] Ntahobali submits that the Prosecution was in possession of some of these material facts when filing the Indictment and should have specified them when the Trial Chamber ordered it to do so in 2000.[2817]

1229. The Prosecution responds that, read as a whole, the Indictment provided Ntahobali with adequate notice that he was charged with abducting and killing Tutsi refugees who had been forced away the prefectoral office and made to stay at the EER.[2818] In its view, the fact that Tutsis were forcibly transferred by Interahamwe and soldiers to the EER before being taken away to nearby woods for execution and Ntahobali's presence during abductions at the EER were not material facts but evidence which was not to be pleaded in the Indictment.[2819] The Prosecution argues that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment appropriately identified the victims, the location, and the time period of the crimes, and that paragraph 6.54 of the Indictment pleaded aiding and abetting.[2820] It also contends that the content of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment is irrelevant to the question whether Ntahobali was provided with adequate notice.[2821]

1230. Ntahobali replies that the presence of refugees at and their abduction from a crime scene distinct from the prefectoral office are material facts that should have been pleaded in the Indictment.[2822] He also argues that paragraph 6.54 of the Indictment could not serve as a basis to put him on notice that he was charged with "aiding and abetting" killings by tacit approval and encouragement.[2823]

The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution argues at length that Ntahobali had notice of rapes committed at the EER. See ibid., paras. 804, 808, 810. However, given that the Trial Chamber entered no conviction against Ntahobali for rapes committed at the EER, the Appeals Chamber disregards the Prosecution's contentions in that regard. See supra, fn. 2807.

1231. The Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's argument that the abduction of Tutsi refugees from the EER amounted to a new charge not pleaded in the Indictment. While paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment only referred to refugees abducted from the "préfecture office[]", it nonetheless unambiguously pleaded Ntahobali's criminal responsibility related to killings perpetrated next to the EER. The Appeals Chamber finds that the fact that the allegation that Tutsi refugees – regardless of where they were abducted from – were killed next to the EER put Ntahobali on notice that he was charged in relation to these killings. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that the allegation concerning the abduction of the refugees from the EER and their killing in the woods nearby was also encompassed within the broader allegation relating to the abduction and killing of Tutsis throughout Butare Prefecture pleaded in paragraph 6.35 of the Indictment. That the Prosecution provided more particulars regarding the circumstances of the crimes committed near the EER in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment is irrelevant for the interpretation of Ntahobali's Indictment.

1232. Turning to Ntahobali's alternative contention that the charge relating to the crimes committed at or near the EER was not adequately pleaded, in particular regarding the timeframe of the crimes, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a broad date range, in and of itself, does not invalidate a paragraph of an indictment.[2824] The Appeals Chamber observes that, through paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, the Prosecution appeared to have intended to prove the existence of a series of killings spanning over a certain period of time, potentially making it impracticable to provide a high degree of specificity. However, the Appeals Chamber also notes that the Prosecution was in possession of information prior to the start of the trial that indicated that the killings near the EER were committed in May and June 1994.[2825] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution was required to provide greater specificity in the Indictment regarding the date of the killings that took place in the woods near the EER. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that the date range "[b]etween 19 April and late June 1994" pleaded in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment was unreasonably broad in this context and that the Indictment was defective on this point.

The Appeals Chamber reiterates that, in certain circumstances, the sheer scale of the alleged crimes makes it impracticable to require a high degree of specificity in such matters as the dates for the commission of the crimes. See Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 150; Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008, para. 58; Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 89.

[2825] See infra, paras. 1240, 1241.

1233. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds that, since paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment only refers to abductions from the prefectoral office, the Indictment was defective as regards the pleading of the fact that refugees killed in the woods near the EER were also alleged to have been abducted from the EER.

1234. With respect to the pleading of the identity of the perpetrators, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, the Prosecution alleged that "[t]he survivors were taken to various locations in the préfecture to be executed, notably in the woods next to the [EER]" without specifying who the perpetrators of the executions were. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, reading the sentence in context, it is manifest that "Nyiramasuhuko", "Ntahobali", the "Interahamwe militiamen such as one JUMAPILI and another NSENGIYUMVA" and the "soldiers" referred to in the first sentence of paragraph 6.30 were alleged to be the perpetrators of the killings committed near the EER. In light of the identification by names of some of the perpetrators[2826] and recalling that physical perpetrators of the crimes can be identified by category in relation to a particular crime site,[2827] the Appeals Chamber finds that the identity of the perpetrators was sufficiently specified in paragraph 6.30 and that the Indictment was not defective in this respect.

1235. As for Ntahobali's submission related to the pleading of his alleged role and form of responsibility, the Appeals Chamber observes that, while the Indictment generally indicates that Ntahobali was alleged to have "organized, ordered and participated" in massacres,[2828] "aided and abetted [his] subordinates and others in carrying out" massacres,[2829] and that the "crimes were committed by [him] personally, by persons [he] assisted or by [his] subordinates",[2830] it is vague as to which form or forms of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute Ntahobali was specifically charged with in relation to paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Prosecution failed to indicate the particular acts or course of conduct on the part of Ntahobali with respect to the killings near the EER which formed the basis for the charge against him.

1236. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Indictment was defective in relation to the allegation concerning the abduction of the refugees from the EER and their killing in the woods nearby insofar as the Prosecution failed to set forth [2826] The Appeals Chamber notes that, on 1 November 2000, the Trial Chamber had ordered the Prosecution to provide the identity of at least some of the "soldiers and militiamen" mentioned in paragraph 6.30 of the first version of the indictment, which the Prosecution did on 1 March 2001. See 1 November 2000 Ntahobali Decision, para. 35(a)(ii). Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Prosecution was in a position to provide greater specificity in this regard.

therein the dates of the killings with sufficient specificity, specify that refugees killed nearby were alleged to have been abducted from the EER, and identify the specific form of responsibility and particular course of conduct of Ntahobali. Having concluded that this allegation did not constitute a separate charge and that Ntahobali was put on notice that he was charged in relation to the killings perpetrated near the EER, the Appeals Chamber will now turn to consider whether the defects in the Indictment were cured.

(b) Whether the Defects Were Cured

1237. Ntahobali contends that the defects in the Indictment relating to his responsibility in relation to the abductions and the killings of Tutsis at the EER were not cured and that he suffered prejudice from his inability to adequately prepare his defence against this allegation.[2831]

1238. The Prosecution responds that, to the extent that there was any ambiguity in the Indictment, the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Prosecution Witnesses RE, SX, and QY attached to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and these witnesses' statements "clarified any remaining ambiguity" as to Ntahobali's responsibility in the abductions and killings at the EER.[2832] The Prosecution adds that the conduct of Ntahobali's defence demonstrates that he had notice of the charges relating to the EER.[2833]

1239. Ntahobali replies that the subsequent information related to the evidence of Witnesses RE, SX, and QY was neither clear nor consistent as to whether he aided and abetted by tacit approval the killing of refugees in the woods near the EER from mid-May 1994 until the beginning of June 1994.[2834] In particular, he contends that in the material cited by the Prosecution: (i) Witness RE indicated that Ntahobali was absent during the abductions by members of the Presidential Guard; (ii) Witness SX only mentioned abductions and not killings, did not mention the woods near the EER but unknown destinations, and referred to Ntahobali's direct participation rather than to aiding and abetting by his presence; and (iii) Witness QY only mentioned Tutsis being beaten without referring to Ntahobali aiding and abetting killings in the woods by his presence.[2835] Ntahobali also replies that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that his ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired by these defects in the Indictment.[2836]

1240. The Appeals Chamber notes that the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses RE, SX, and QY referred to by the Prosecution were marked relevant to Ntahobali and were linked, inter alia, to Counts 2, 6, 8, and 10 of his Indictment. None of these summaries, however, provided clear notice to Ntahobali of the dates of the alleged killings near the EER or that he was alleged to have aided and abetted the killings by tacit approval and encouragement.[2837]

1241. When reading the summaries together with these witnesses' relevant prior statements,[2838] it nonetheless becomes manifest that the events at the EER were alleged to have taken place in May and June 1994.[2839] Given the sheer scale of the alleged crimes and the Prosecution's intention to prove the existence of a series of killings, the Appeals Chamber considers that this information regarding the timeframe was sufficient to allow Ntahobali to prepare a meaningful defence. Contrary to Ntahobali's submissions, the Appeals Chamber also considers that it was clear from the relevant summaries and statements read in context that the Prosecution intended to prove that the refugees "selected" or "taken away" from the EER were killed. The information provided therein was also consistent with the allegation in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment that the killings took place in the woods next to the EER.

1242. The Appeals Chamber further finds that, by reading the Indictment in conjunction with Witnesses RE's, SX's, and QY's summaries and statements, Ntahobali was put on notice that the Prosecution alleged that: (i) the refugees killed were taken from the EER; (ii) he aided and abetted the abductions and killings through his visits to the EER alongside Interahamwe and soldiers and the influence and authority he exercised on the soldiers and the men present with him; and (iii) crimes were committed in his absence following his visits to the EER. While the information provided through Witnesses RE's, SX's, and QY's summaries and statements also indicates that Ntahobali directly participated in, if not instigated or ordered, beatings, rapes, and abductions at or near the EER, this was not inconsistent with the fact that Ntahobali may also have been responsible [2836] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 122. In particular, Ntahobali reiterates that the fact that he did not object at trial could not be held against him as the Trial Chamber was clear that objections related to the indictments would not be granted. See ibid., paras. 115, 116, referring to ibid., para. 66. He also contends that the questions he put to the witnesses during cross-examination and his closing submissions do not demonstrate that he knew that he was charged with aiding and abetting the killings at the EER by tacit approval. He points out that he only challenged the witnesses' credibility and never addressed major contradictions as to his presence, his authority over the perpetrators, or crimes committed while he was absent. See ibid., paras. 117, 119, 120.

for aiding and abetting the crimes by providing moral support and encouragement. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the subsequent information provided to Ntahobali through Witnesses RE's, SX's, and QY's summaries and statements sufficiently informed him of the course of conduct on his part which formed the basis of the charge, thereby curing the defects in the Indictment.[2840]

1243. This conclusion is bolstered by a review of the conduct of Ntahobali's defence at trial which reflects that he was provided with sufficient information to conduct meaningful investigations and prepare an effective defence against the allegation that his presence alongside Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER encouraged the killings perpetrated near the EER. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali's counsel questioned Witnesses RE, SX, and QY at length on the events at and near the EER. Notably, Ntahobali's counsel questioned the witnesses on the Tutsi refugees at the EER, the premises of the EER, the time and weather conditions, the presence and acts of Interahamwe and soldiers at or near the EER, the abductions and killings committed at or near the EER, and Ntahobali's role in the attacks at the EER.[2841] The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to what Ntahobali asserts, his counsel specifically questioned the witnesses as to his authority over the Interahamwe[2842] and his presence at the EER.[2843] Of further significance, Ntahobali challenged the evidence led by the Prosecution that he was present at the EER in his closing brief.[2844] While Ntahobali did not challenge that his conduct at the EER met the legal requirements for a finding of responsibility for aiding and abetting by tacit approval and encouragement in his closing brief, it bears noting that Ntahobali did not in fact discuss any of the legal requirements for any of the forms of responsibility he was charged with pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

1244. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ntahobali was provided with sufficient information detailing the factual basis on which he was convicted in relation to the crimes committed near the EER to prepare a meaningful defence.

(c) Conclusion

1245. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in law by failing to address Ntahobali's contention regarding the pleading of his responsibility in relation to the crimes committed at or near the EER. However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that he lacked sufficient notice of the allegation that he aided and abetted by tacit approval and encouragement the killing of Tutsi refugees near the EER between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994 and, as a result, concludes that the Trial Chamber's error does not invalidate its decision to convict him on this basis.

7. Superior Responsibility (Grounds 2.2, 2.4 and 2.5 in part)

1246. The Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute under Counts 2, 6, and 7 of the Indictment for the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the killings and rapes that he ordered at the Butare Prefecture Office as well as the killings that he aided and abetted at or near the EER but, having found him guilty under Article 6(1) of the Statute, did not convict him of these crimes as a superior.[2845] The Trial Chamber did, however, consider his role as a superior in these crimes as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[2846]

1247. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible as a superior for these crimes as the material facts underpinning the elements of superior responsibility were insufficiently pleaded in the Indictment and that these defects were not cured.[2847] Consequently, he

[2846] Trial Judgement, para. 6220. See also ibid., paras. 5847-5849, 5886, 5917, 5971, 6056, 6086.

The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali also specifically contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for genocide under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes committed by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office whereas the Trial Chamber had acknowledged that the Indictment did not plead rapes in support of the count of genocide. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 133; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 300, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 5861-5864, 5886. See also AT. 15 April 2015 p. 34. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's submission, the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that he was not found responsible as a superior for rapes under the count of genocide. See Trial Judgement, paras. 5826-5836, 5843, 5857-5864, 5911, 5971. The Trial Chamber made it clear that it mentioned Ntahobali's responsibility for rapes in the course of its legal findings on genocide "to convey the entire set of facts in a coherent fashion". See ibid., paras. 5837, 5865. Ntahobali's contention in this respect is therefore dismissed.

requests that his responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute be reversed and his sentence reviewed.[2848]

1248. The Appeals Chamber recalls that when an accused is charged with superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the indictment must plead the following material facts:

> (i) the accused is the superior of sufficiently identified subordinates over whom he had effective control – in the sense of a material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct – and for whose acts he is alleged to be responsible;
>
> (ii) the criminal conduct of those others for whom the accused is alleged to be responsible;
>
> (iii) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have known or had reason to know that the crimes were about to be committed or had been committed by his subordinates; and
>
> (iv) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the persons who committed them.[2849]

(a) Identification of Subordinates

1249. The Trial Chamber discussed whether Ntahobali was put on sufficient notice that he was alleged to be responsible as a superior for the criminal conduct of Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Butare Prefecture Office, and the EER in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement. The Trial Chamber concluded that: (i) the defect in paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment concerning the identification of the Interahamwe involved in the crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock as Ntahobali's alleged subordinates was cured through Witness QCB's Summary and Statement;[2850] (ii) Ntahobali received notice that he was being charged as a superior of Interahamwe at the prefectoral office pursuant to paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, read along with paragraphs 6.31, 6.53, 6.55, and 6.56 of the Indictment;[2851] and (iii) Ntahobali had sufficient notice of his alleged responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute over Interahamwe for the events at the EER.[2852] As for Ntahobali's notice of the allegation of rapes at the prefectoral office in particular, the Trial Chamber held in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment lacked necessary details to put Ntahobali on notice that he was alleged to be responsible as a superior for rapes at the prefectoral office but that post-indictment communications cured the defect.[2853]

1250. Ntahobali submits that the Indictment or any subsequent information failed to provide him sufficient notice regarding the identity of his subordinates at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the prefectoral office, and the EER.[2854] First, he argues that he was not put on notice through paragraph 6.27 of the Indictment or Witness QCB's Summary and Statement that Interahamwe were alleged to be involved in killings at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[2855] In the same vein, he highlights that paragraphs 6.30 and 6.37 of the Indictment failed to specify that Interahamwe were alleged to be present at the EER or involved in crimes at the prefectoral office.[2856] Ntahobali also contends that paragraphs 6.27, 6.30, and 6.37 of the Indictment as well as paragraph 21 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief did not plead a subordinate-superior relationship with his alleged accomplices but could rather be interpreted as referring to a "horizontal" relationship.[2857]

1251. Ntahobali further argues that he never received notice that he was charged as a superior of Interahamwe in general, since paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 of the Indictment only indicated that he was the alleged superior of a group of Interahamwe from the MRND coming from Butare Prefecture, whereas there was no evidence that the Interahamwe involved in crimes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the prefectoral office, or the EER were members of the MRND and that they were from Butare Prefecture.[2858]

1252. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's submissions should be dismissed as he was not convicted under Article 6(3) of the Statute.[2859] In the alternative, it submits that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that he was not put on notice of the identity of his subordinates involved in the crimes

In addition, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Prosecution did not comply with its order to provide the identity of Ntahobali's accomplices mentioned at paragraphs 6.27 and 6.30 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 104, 141; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 213, referring to 1 November 2000 Ntahobali Decision, para. 35(a)(ii).

[2856] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 262, 305, 312; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 156. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects in paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment were cured without considering whether the defect regarding the pleading of superior responsibility was in fact cured. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 138; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 303, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 2164-2166; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 158. With regard to the Butare Prefecture Office, Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, and 6.55 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment to consider that he had sufficient notice of his responsibility as a superior for rapes committed at the prefectoral office given that these paragraphs were not pleaded under Count 7 and did not mention any rapes. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 302; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 152. The Appeals Chamber has clarified in Section V.B.5(b) above that Ntahobali was convicted under Count 7 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment for rapes at the prefectoral office pursuant to paragraph 6.37. See supra, para. 1212. Ntahobali's argument relying on paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, and 6.55 is therefore rejected as moot.

Ntahobali posits that the Interahamwe who committed crimes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock were from Kigali and were subordinated to Robert Kajuga. See ibid., para. 216. He further contends that both the Trial Chamber and the Prosecution acknowledged that Ntahobali's subordinates were only official Interahamwe from the MRND. See ibid., para. 263, referring to Rule 98*bis* Decision, para. 144, Prosecution Closing Brief, para. 1 at p. 156.

committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the prefectoral office, and at or near the EER.[2860] The Prosecution argues that the Indictment should be read as a whole with paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 of the Indictment which pleaded that Ntahobali exercised authority over Interahamwe militiamen in Butare Prefecture.[2861] In its view, where the Interahamwe came from was a matter of evidence.[2862]

1253. Ntahobali replies that the provenance of the Interahamwe is not a matter of evidence since paragraph 4.5 of the Indictment, in its French version, is clear that only the Interahamwe from Butare Prefecture were alleged to be his subordinates.[2863] With respect to the rapes committed by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office, Ntahobali replies that paragraphs 6.53 and 6.56 of the Indictment are too broad to constitute adequate notice of his responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute.[2864] He further contends that it was impossible to understand, when reading Witness TA's Summary together with paragraph 6.53 of the Indictment and paragraph 29 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, that Interahamwe were among the "unknown accomplices" mentioned in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[2865]

1254. The Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's contention that Ntahobali's submissions should be dismissed on the basis that he was not convicted pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, given that, when the accused's responsibility is pleaded under both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute for the same count and the same set of fact and the accused is found to be responsible under both, the trial chamber should enter a conviction on the basis of Article 6(1) of the Statute alone and consider the superior position of the accused as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[2866]

1255. With regard to Ntahobali's argument that the Prosecution failed to plead the involvement of Interahamwe in crimes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the prefectoral office, and the EER, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already determined in prior sections of this Judgement that while paragraphs 6.27 and 6.37 of the Indictment were defective in that respect, Ntahobali nonetheless received notice that Interahamwe were alleged to have participated in these crimes.[2867] The Appeals Chamber also finds that the identification of his subordinates by category, the [2864] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 153. Ntahobali further points out that paragraph 6.53 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment is only a "background paragraph" and that paragraph 6.56 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment only relates to the count of conspiracy. See ibid., paras. 154, 155.

[2867] See supra, Sections V.B.3, V.B.5, V.B.6. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber's examination of whether the defects in paragraph 6.37 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment were cured was conducted in relation to Article 6(1) responsibility is without merit.

"Interahamwe", was sufficient to provide him with adequate notice of the identity of his subordinates in the circumstances of this case.[2868]

1256. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's argument that paragraphs 6.27, 6.30, and 6.37 of the Indictment appeared to plead a "horizontal" relationship between him and those others involved in the crimes. The Appeals Chamber notes that these paragraphs were specifically relied upon in support of Ntahobali's superior responsibility under the relevant counts.[2869] Reading these paragraphs and the curing material in light of paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 of the Indictment which alleged that Ntahobali "led a group of MRND militiamen, the Interahamwe" and that he "exercised authority over Interahamwe militiamen in Butare préfecture",[2870] the Appeals Chamber is of the view that they informed Ntahobali of his alleged superior-subordinate relationship with the Interahamwe involved in the crimes. The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Ntahobali's argument that the fact that the Indictment mentions that Ntahobali was "accompanied" or "assisted" by his accomplices could have reasonably been interpreted as an indication of a horizontal relationship.[2871]

1257. Ntahobali's argument concerning the provenance of the Interahamwe is similarly unpersuasive as, contrary to what he contends, a plain reading of paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 of the Indictment reflects that the authority he was alleged to exercise was not limited to the militiamen who were official members of the MRND youth wing coming from Butare Prefecture, but concerned all Interahamwe militiamen present in Butare Prefecture. The pleading of Ntahobali's superior responsibility over Interahamwe in Butare Prefecture as alleged in paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 is therefore not irreconcilable with the fact that Interahamwe from Kigali Prefecture committed crimes in Butare Prefecture.[2872]

[2869] See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, pp. 39-45.

[2870] While paragraphs 4.4 and 4.5 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment were not specifically referred to in support of any count, they do not plead allegations that may be separately charged as a crime. As a result, the Appeals Chamber considers that it was not necessary to plead these paragraphs under each of the counts in the charging section of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment and they unambiguously applied to all counts charged pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.

[2871] See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, paras. 6.30, 6.37. However, the Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's argument that paragraph 5.1 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment was sufficient to put Ntahobali on notice that he was charged with ordering killings committed by his subordinates given the broad nature of this paragraph, the fact that it is not linked with paragraphs 6.30 or 6.56 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, and the fact that this paragraph was only invoked pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.

[2872] The Appeals Chamber recalls that effective control need not be exclusive and can be exercised by more than one superior, whose criminal responsibility is not excluded by the coexisting responsibility of others. See Bagosora and 1258. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that he was not put on sufficient notice of the identity of the subordinates for whose acts he was found to be responsible as a superior.

(b) Criminal Conduct of Subordinates

1259. The issue of notice of the crimes allegedly committed by Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office and the EER has been dealt with in the sections of this Judgement addressing the alleged lack of notice of the material facts underpinning each of the specific incidents. In those sections, the Appeals Chamber has found that Ntahobali was put on notice through the Indictment and other communications that Interahamwe under his control were alleged to have killed Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, killed and raped Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office in May and June 1994, and perpetrated killings at or near the EER in May and June 1994.[2873] Ntahobali's arguments alleging lack of notice of the criminal conduct of his subordinates are therefore rejected.[2874]

(c) Knowledge of the Subordinates' Criminal Conduct

1260. The Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali had actual knowledge that his subordinates had committed or were about to commit crimes, which it inferred from his presence at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock when Ruvurajabo was being killed and from his orders to Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.[2875]

1261. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he received sufficient notice of his knowledge of the crimes of his alleged subordinates at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the prefectoral office.[2876] He further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to address whether he had the requisite knowledge with respect to the events at the EER.[2877] He argues that paragraph 6.55 of the Indictment failed to set forth the criminal conduct by which he knew or had reason to know that the crimes were about to be committed.[2878]

of his knowledge that these rapes were occurring.[2879] It also contends that Ntahobali was charged with ordering massacres and thus was put on notice of his conduct as regards his knowledge of the crimes.[2880]

1263. Recalling that in determining whether an accused was adequately put on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him, the indictment must be considered as a whole,[2881] the Appeals Chamber notes that, in paragraph 6.55 of the Indictment – upon which the Trial Chamber specifically relied when making findings on Ntahobali's superior responsibility under the relevant counts[2882] – the Prosecution explicitly alleged that massacres of the civilian population were being committed with Ntahobali's knowledge.[2883] In paragraph 6.56 of the Indictment, the Prosecution further alleged that Ntahobali knew of and consented to the crimes perpetrated by his subordinates. The Appeals Chamber further notes that paragraphs 6.27 and 6.30 of the Indictment refer to the role and frequent participation of Interahamwe or militiamen in abductions and killings, in the presence of Ntahobali, at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the prefectoral office.[2884] These paragraphs were specifically relied upon in support of Ntahobali's superior responsibility under the relevant counts.[2885] In addition, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, while it found that paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment failed to plead Ntahobali's presence at the EER with Interahamwe and that the Trial Chamber erred in not conducting the required analysis, the defects were cured.[2886]

1264. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it held that Ntahobali received sufficient notice that he ordered Interahamwe to kill Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and abductions, killings, and rapes at the prefectoral office, and that he aided and abetted Interahamwe to commit killings at the EER. The Appeals Chamber considers that, as found by the Trial Chamber, this conduct implied his knowledge of the crimes perpetrated by his subordinates.

[2883] At the appeals hearing, Ntahobali pointed out that paragraph 6.55 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment was no longer relied upon in support of Count 7 in the operative indictment, which, according to him, indicated that the Prosecution had no longer the intention to charge him with superior responsibility in relation to rape. See AT. 15 April 2015 p. 33. Reading the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment as a whole and considering that paragraph 6.55 was relied upon in support of all other relevant counts and that Count 7 was expressly pursued pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Ntahobali's argument. See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, pp. 38-45.
[2884] The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's oral argument that paragraph 6.56 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment "had nothing to do with superior responsibility" because it is "a conspiracy-related paragraph". See AT. 15 April 2015 p. 33.
[2885] See Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, pp. 39-45.
[2886] See supra, Section V.B.6(b).

1265. The Appeals Chamber considers that, taken together, these paragraphs and the subsequent information provided to Ntahobali clearly pleaded that Ntahobali knew or had reason to know that his subordinates were about to and had committed the crimes alleged in the Indictment as well as the conduct by which he was found to have known of his subordinates' criminal conduct. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's arguments concerning the pleading of his knowledge of his subordinates' criminal conduct.

(d) Failure to Prevent or Punish

1266. Ntahobali generally submits that he did not receive notice in the Indictment or through subsequent information of the conduct by which he failed to take the necessary measures to prevent the crimes or to punish the perpetrators thereof.[2887] He argues that paragraph 6.55 of the Indictment could not serve for this purpose.[2888]

1267. With regard to crimes at the prefectoral office, the Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's orders to commit rapes coupled with Witness TA's Summary put Ntahobali on notice of the conduct by which he failed to prevent or punish them.[2889] It also contends that Ntahobali was charged with ordering massacres and thus was put on notice of his conduct as regards his failure to take action in this respect.[2890]

1268. The Appeals Chamber stresses that, in respect of this element of superior responsibility, in many cases it will be sufficient to plead that the accused did not take any necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish the commission of criminal acts.[2891] In this case, the Appeals Chamber notes that paragraph 6.55 of the Indictment expressly pleaded that Ntahobali "took no measures to stop" the massacres of the civilian population that he knew were being committed. Given the vagueness of the Indictment concerning the specific crimes for which Ntahobali was alleged to be responsible, the Appeals Chamber finds that this was insufficient to give Ntahobali adequate notice of the conduct by which he had allegedly failed to take the necessary measures to prevent the crimes or to punish the perpetrators thereof. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the defect of the Indictment in this respect was subsequently cured, notably through paragraph 30 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, in which the Prosecution alleged, that "[i]nstead of intervening to control and appeal to the perpetrators, [… Ntahobali] ordered, aided and abetted the acts."

[2887] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 103, 121, 136; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 270, 309. Ntahobali argues that the orders relied on by the Trial Chamber are not pleaded in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment or in subsequent materials. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 309.
[2888] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 269.
[2889] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 839.
[2890] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 841.

As regards the "acts" in question, the Appeals Chamber recalls its findings that Ntahobali had sufficient notice that he was alleged to have ordered Interahamwe to commit killings and rapes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the prefectoral office, and aided and abetted Interahamwe to commit killings at the EER.[2892]

1269. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the Indictment read as a whole and in conjunction with the subsequent information communicated to Ntahobali gave him sufficient notice of the conduct by which he was found to have failed to take the necessary measures to prevent and punish the crimes. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that he was not put on adequate notice of this element of superior responsibility.

(e) Conclusion

1270. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for crimes perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office and the EER based on lack of notice.

8. Cumulative Effect of the Defects (Ground 2.7)

1271. In its preliminary considerations of notice issues in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled the Appeals Chamber's holding that, even if the Prosecution succeeded in arguing that the defects in the indictments were remedied in each individual instance, the Trial Chamber had still to consider whether the overall effect of the numerous defects rendered the trial unfair in itself.[2893] The Trial Chamber noted that it had found specific paragraphs of the Indictment to be unduly vague but underlined that, in many cases, it had determined that these defects were cured.[2894] After noting that, throughout the course of the proceedings, it had given the Defence additional time to prepare its case where appropriate and reiterating that the new information that led to factual findings was disclosed through timely, clear, and consistent disclosures, the Trial Chamber found that "the Accused were in a reasonable position to understand the charges against them and had the time and resources available to investigate these charges."[2895] Consequently, the Trial Chamber concluded that "the trial was not rendered unfair and that the Accused did not suffer any prejudice in the preparation of their respective defences."[2896]

1272. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the cumulative effect of the defects in his Indictment by applying the wrong legal criterion as well as in holding that the numerous defects it found did not prejudice his Defence case and did not render his trial unfair.[2897] Specifically, he asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the test used for curing defects in the Indictment in order to determine whether the cumulative effect of the defects rendered the trial unfair, rendering the principle "entirely meaningless".[2898] After highlighting that the Trial Chamber found that ten of the 17 paragraphs relied upon against him in the charging section of his Indictment were defective, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that the number of times defects in an indictment can be cured is limited.[2899] He avers that the Trial Chamber further erred in considering that the additional time granted rendered his trial fair as mere allowance of time did not provide him with better knowledge as to where to direct his investigations.[2900]

1273. Ntahobali submits that it was an impossible task to defend himself given the seriousness of the defects in the Indictment and the confusion of the Prosecution case.[2901] In this respect, he contends that he did not know the allegations against which he had to defend himself and was unable to conduct any meaningful investigations before trial.[2902] He points out as well that numerous allegations advanced in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief were never addressed at trial, adding to the confusion as to what the Prosecution case was.[2903] According to Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber also created prejudicial uncertainty in deciding to admit all the evidence adduced at trial, where deemed "relevant", including the evidence on allegations not pleaded in the Indictment and for which the accused had not received sufficient notice, holding that its probative value would be determined at the end of the trial.[2904] He argues that this situation forced him to investigate and prepare for the entirety of the allegations made against him whether or not they were pleaded in the Indictment.[2905]

1274. Furthermore, Ntahobali contends that he was prevented from conducting effective investigations and cross-examinations, and that problems concerning his investigators and the Trial Chamber's refusal to recall witnesses further impacted his ability to defend himself.[2906] He argues that the Prosecution has been able to mould its case during trial and that its behaviour exacerbated the prejudice suffered,[2907] referring in particular to the Prosecution's significant modifications of its list of witnesses at trial, notably the addition of Prosecution Witness FA, and the violation of its Rule 66 disclosure obligations.[2908] In Ntahobali's view, his trial was rendered unfair as a result and a stay of proceedings or a significant reduction of his sentence should be ordered.[2909]

1275. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber adequately verified whether each defect was cured by timely, clear, and consistent post-indictment communications and did not err in finding that Ntahobali did not suffer prejudice.[2910]

1276. The Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's claim that the Trial Chamber applied the wrong legal criterion in evaluating the cumulative effect of the defects in the Indictment. Although the Trial Chamber mainly relied on its finding that the defects of the Indictment concerning allegations on which it made factual findings were cured, its analysis reflects that it did not limit its examination to this matter but, in accordance with the jurisprudence that it expressly recalled, examined whether the Defence had sufficient time and resources to investigate properly all the new material facts and that it was not prejudiced by the addition of numerous material facts. The Appeals Chamber refers in particular to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the additional time allotted to the co-Accused to prepare their case[2911] and its findings throughout the Trial Judgement that, where remedied, the original lack of notice had not caused prejudice.[2912]

instances where it is found that defective charges have not only been cured but also that the initial lack of notice did not result in prejudice, the question of the number of defects cured becomes secondary. It is clear from the Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence that the key question remains whether or not the accused was materially prejudiced in the preparation of his defence.[2913]

1278. Furthermore, Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the allowance of additional time rendered the trial fair because this did not remedy the vagueness of the Prosecution case fails to appreciate that the Trial Chamber considered this factor when determining the additional time needed to investigate all the new material facts; in other terms, to investigate the material facts that were curing the vagueness of the Prosecution case. Apart from claiming that the examples provided by the Trial Chamber are not pertinent,[2914] Ntahobali does not argue or demonstrate that he was denied additional time to conduct investigations on new material facts and that, overall, he did not have sufficient time to investigate allegations by the Prosecution. Absent such a demonstration, the Appeals Chamber cannot see any error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the fact that additional time was given to the Defence to remedy any possible prejudice.

1279. Although Ntahobali argues that he could not defend himself given the seriousness of the defects in the Indictment and the confusion in the Prosecution case, his only substantiation in his appeal submissions relates to the incidents in connection with which he was convicted. The Appeals Chamber has found above that Ntahobali failed to demonstrate that his material ability to prepare his defence regarding the allegations related to the IRST, the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the prefectoral office, or the EER had been impaired by the Prosecution's failure to provide appropriate notice in the Indictment.[2915] The Appeals Chamber has also concluded that the Prosecution successfully demonstrated that Ntahobali was not prejudiced by the lack of notice concerning his responsibility in the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[2916] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's allegation of prejudice in these respects.

> […] Further, while the addition of a few material facts may not prejudice the Defence in the preparation of its case, the addition of numerous material facts increases the risk of prejudice as the Defence may not have sufficient time and resources to investigate properly all the new material facts. Thus, where a Trial Chamber considers that a defective indictment has been subsequently cured by the Prosecution, it should further consider whether the extent of the defects in the indictment materially prejudice an accused's right to a fair trial by hindering the preparation of a proper defence.

1280. The Appeals Chamber is concerned by the practice of trial chambers in the exercise of their discretion, as in this case,[2917] to postpone consideration of Defence objections to the admission of testimonial evidence on the ground of lack of notice to the phase of their final deliberations on the case. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, leaving the issue of whether facts could be relied upon as a potential basis for liability unresolved until the end of the trial, as the Trial Chamber did, creates uncertainty which can be a source of potential prejudice to the Defence.[2918] While the Appeals Chamber considers that it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to rule on the Defence objections in a timely fashion to ensure clarity on the facts underpinning the charges on the basis of which it considered it could hold the accused responsible, it notes that Ntahobali, again, fails to substantiate his allegation of prejudice.

1281. Ntahobali also points to a number of factors in support of his contention that he suffered prejudice, such as the Prosecution's violation of its disclosure obligation, the issue of the cross-examination of Witness TA, the absence of investigator, the modification of the Prosecution's witness list, and the Trial Chamber's refusal to recall witnesses. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already addressed and rejected elsewhere in this Judgement a number of Ntahobali's allegations of prejudice, notably concerning the addition of witnesses, including Witness FA, the cross-examination of Witness TA, the refusal to recall witnesses, and the suspension of his investigator.[2919] In any event, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how these factors were pertinent to the determination of the prejudice suffered from the accumulation of the defects in the Indictment.

1282. The Appeals Chamber does not minimise the extent of the Prosecution's failure to provide adequate notice in the Indictment in respect of all of the incidents for which Ntahobali was found guilty. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that his trial had not been rendered unfair due to the number of defects in his Indictment.

9. Conclusion

1283. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in authorising the Prosecution to amend the indictment against him to add charges of superior responsibility as well as his contentions that he was not charged with, lacked sufficient notice of, or was materially prejudiced in the preparation of his defence from the lack of notice of his alleged responsibility for the killings at the IRST, the killings and rape at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, the rapes committed and the killings ordered at the Butare Prefecture Office, and the killings at or near the EER. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ntahobali's claim of prejudice resulting from the accumulation of defects in the Indictment.

1284. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 2.1 through 2.7 of Ntahobali's appeal.

C. Expert Witness Guichaoua's Status and Evidence (Ground 3.7)

1285. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in maintaining Prosecution Expert Witness Guichaoua's status as an expert and in finding him and his report credible.[2920] He argues that Witness Guichaoua's testimony reflected partiality that is incompatible with the expected neutrality of an expert.[2921] In his appeal brief, Ntahobali merely refers to "Nyiramasuhuko's arguments".[2922]

1286. The Prosecution responds that this ground should be dismissed as a party may not dispose of its burden on appeal by merely referring to another party's submission.[2923]

1287. The Appeals Chamber notes that it has addressed and dismissed in its entirety Nyiramasuhuko's arguments pertaining to Witness Guichaoua's neutrality and objectivity as an expert and the assessment of his evidence in Section IV.A.2 above. In the absence of any further substantiation in support of Ntahobali's allegations of error, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 3.7 of Ntahobali's appeal without further consideration.

D. Admission and Assessment of Co-Accused's Evidence (Ground 3.10)

1288. The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, crimes against humanity, and serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation, inter alia, to the killing of members of the Rwamukwaya family as well as crimes committed against Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office in May and June 1994.[2924] The Trial Chamber's findings were, in part, based on the evidence presented by Ntahobali's co-accused.[2925]

1289. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding him guilty in relation to these crimes based in part on its reliance upon evidence presented by his co-accused.[2926] Specifically, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) admitting the testimony of Kanyabashi Defence Witness D-2-13-O about the killing of the Rwamukwaya family; and (ii) failing to exercise the necessary caution in assessing the evidence presented by his co-accused and to provide a reasoned opinion when relying on this evidence against him in relation to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, and attacks at the prefectoral office.[2927] He contends that, had the Trial Chamber exercised due caution, it would have acquitted him.[2928] Ntahobali argues that a new assessment should lead the Appeals Chamber to exclude this evidence.[2929]

1290. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali repeats arguments concerning the admission of Witness D-2-13-O's evidence that failed at trial and that they should be summarily dismissed.[2930] It further responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber should have treated the evidence presented by his co-accused with caution or how it acted outside its discretion.[2931] It also submits that Ntahobali has not identified any error that could invalidate the verdict.[2932]

1291. The Appeals Chamber has found below in Section V.H that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ntahobali aided and abetted the killing of the Rwamukwaya family and reversed his convictions in this respect. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's submissions related to the admission and assessment of the evidence concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family under Ground 3.10 of his appeal have become moot and need not be addressed.

1292. With respect to Ntahobali's remaining submissions, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali fails to show that the Trial Chamber was required, as a matter of law, to treat all the evidence presented by his co-accused with caution. Ntahobali simply refers to paragraphs in the Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement and Krajišnik Appeal Judgement, which concern the treatment of accomplice witness evidence.[2933] However, he does not demonstrate that any witness he contends the Trial Chamber failed to treat with caution was an accomplice witness whose evidence warranted a cautious assessment.

1293. Likewise, while Ntahobali generally contends that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion when relying on evidence presented by his co-accused, his submissions fail to particularise any error.[2934] The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Trial Chamber, when reviewing the evidence of witnesses presented by Kanyabashi, expressed its concern that these witnesses may have a motive to deflect liability from Kanyabashi and decided to assess their evidence with caution.[2935] Accordingly, when assessing the testimonies from Kanyabashi Defence Witnesses D-13-D, D-2-5-I, and D-2-13-O concerning events at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber only accepted their evidence when corroborated by other evidence.[2936] The Trial Judgement also reflects that the Trial Chamber relied on the testimony of Nsabimana Defence Witnesses Bernadette Kamanzi, Charles Karemano, and Alexandre Bararwandika as corroborative of other evidence.[2937] Having failed to substantiate why the evidence of these witnesses should have been treated with particular caution, Ntahobali does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion when relying on their evidence.

1294. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 3.10 of Ntahobali's appeal.

E. Alibis (Ground 3.11)

1295. At trial, Ntahobali presented alibis according to which: (i) he had malaria and was convalescing at Hotel Ihuliro for an entire week around the end of April and the beginning of May 1994;[2938] and (ii) he was in Cyangugu Town from 26 or 27 May 1994 until 5 June 1994.[2939]

1296. The Trial Chamber noted that Ntahobali provided a notice of his alibis only eight months after the start of the presentation of the Defence evidence and considered that the circumstances of this late disclosure adversely affected the credibility of his alibis, raising the possibility that they were fabricated.[2940] The Trial Chamber ultimately concluded that Ntahobali's alibis were not reasonably possibly true[2941] and that Ntahobali participated in crimes in Butare Town during the relevant periods of time.[2942]

1297. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the alibi evidence relating to the periods between late April and early May 1994 and between 26 or 27 May and 5 June 1994,[2943]and requests that the Appeals Chamber overturn his convictions for the crimes committed during these periods of time.[2944]

[2938] Trial Judgement, para. 2580. See also ibid., paras. 2922, 3114, 3153, 3208.
[2939] Trial Judgement, para. 2584. See also ibid., paras. 2682, 3941, 4874. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali's alibi that he never left Hotel Ihuliro at night throughout the relevant events as he had the responsibility of ensuring that the generator was turned on and shut off was not believable. See ibid., paras. 2596-2599. Ntahobali does not challenge the Trial Chamber's finding on this issue.

[2942] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali: (i) utilised the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock to abduct and kill Tutsis in late April 1994 and, in particular, raped and killed a Tutsi girl at the roadblock around the end of April 1994; (ii) aided and abetted the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family around 29 or 30 April 1994; (iii) was involved in the killing and rape of Tutsis who had sought refuge in the Butare Prefecture Office from mid-May to June 1994; and (iv) aided and abetted the killings of Tutsi refugees at the EER between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2781, 3113, 3128, 3135, 3140, 3219, 3965.
[2943] See Notice of Appeal, paras. 282-288; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 796-818; Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 331-337. In his notice of appeal, Ntahobali also argued that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to conclude that the Prosecution suffered no prejudice in relation to the alibi evidence and that the Prosecution's failure to provide specific dates for its allegations had prevented him from presenting a specific alibi. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 284, 287. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali did not substantiate these allegations in his notice of appeal or develop them in his appeal brief. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that, elsewhere in this Judgement, it found that the Trial Chamber was not required to consider whether the Prosecution suffered prejudice from the belated disclosure. See supra, para. 664. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these contentions.

crime.[2946] If the alibi is reasonably possibly true, it must be accepted.[2947] When an alibi is properly raised, the Prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that, despite the alibi, the facts alleged are nevertheless true.[2948]

1. Alibi for Late April to Early May 1994

1299. The Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali's alibi that he had malaria and was convalescing at Hotel Ihuliro for an entire week around the end of April and the beginning of May 1994 was not credible and not reasonably possibly true in light of Ntahobali Defence Witness Béatrice Munyenyezi's lack of credibility, the lack of corroboration from other witnesses who should have had knowledge of Ntahobali's illness and testified about it, and the late notice of alibi.[2949]

1300. In particular, the Trial Chamber observed that, while Nyiramasuhuko Defence Witnesses Denise Ntahobali, Clarisse Ntahobali, WBUC, and Nyiramasuhuko testified that they were at Hotel Ihuliro for the birthday party of Clarisse Ntahobali's daughter on 28 April 1994, they did not corroborate Ntahobali's testimony that he had malaria from the end of April to the beginning of May and was forced to remain in bed.[2950] The Trial Chamber stated that Witness Munyenyezi was the only witness to corroborate Ntahobali's alibi that he was sick with malaria at the end of April 1994, noted aspects of her testimony that undermined her credibility, and considered that, as Ntahobali's wife, she would have a motive to exculpate him.[2951] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found not credible Witness Munyenyezi's testimony that, at the time, she was unaware of massive killings in Butare after 19 April 1994, did not see any dead bodies, and did not hear that the killings between April and July 1994 were ethnically motivated.[2952] It also observed that Witness Munyenyezi testified that Ntahobali's illness began two to three days before his niece's birthday, contrary to Ntahobali's testimony that he felt the symptoms the day of the birthday.[2953] In addition, the Trial Chamber noted that Ntahobali's aunt from whom he purportedly received treatments was not called to testify to corroborate his account.[2954]

1301. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his alibi for the period between late April and early May 1994 was not credible.[2955] He argues that, by drawing a negative inference from the lack of corroboration on the part of witnesses who "should have had knowledge of Ntahobali's illness", the Trial Chamber wrongly blamed him for not cross-examining co-accused's witnesses.[2956] He contends that the Trial Chamber also wrongly blamed him for not calling his aunt to testify, speculating that she was in a position to do so.[2957] Ntahobali posits that, by doing so, the Trial Chamber imposed a burden on him, counter to the Defence's discretion to choose its own strategy and the manner in which it mounts its case.[2958] He adds that the Trial Chamber treated Prosecution and Defence evidence differently in this regard.[2959]

1302. Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof when concluding that Witness Munyenyezi was not credible for "the sole reason" that it "believed the Prosecution evidence".[2960]

1303. Finally, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber completely disregarded Ntahobali Defence Witness NMBMP's evidence which corroborated the testimony of Witness Munyenyezi that Ntahobali was sick with malaria at the end of April 1994.[2961] He argues that, since the alleged lack of corroboration of Witness Munyenyezi's evidence was a decisive factor in the Trial Chamber's finding that the alibi was not credible, this finding cannot stand.[2962]

1304. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's argument concerning Witness NMBMP is unfounded as the Trial Chamber relied on this witness's evidence several times in the Trial

Judgement.[2963] The Prosecution also submits that Ntahobali does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the alibi evidence.[2964]

1305. Ntahobali replies that the parts of the Trial Judgement referred to by the Prosecution do not relate to Witness NMBMP's evidence on his alibi.[2965]

1306. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's submissions regarding the Trial Chamber's imposition of a burden that improperly interfered with his discretion as to the conduct of his defence.[2966] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on the fact that none of the witnesses who would have been in a position to witness Ntahobali's sickness, since they were at Hotel Ihuliro the day he allegedly fell sick, corroborated that he had malaria and was forced to remain in bed. The Appeals Chamber fails to see how this factually accurate observation could be interpreted as "blaming" Ntahobali's counsel for not cross-examining witnesses called by one of his co-accused. Similarly, observing that an eye-witness was not called to testify does not constitute "blaming" the Defence for not calling that witness; rather, it simply indicates that the Trial Chamber did not receive corroboration of Ntahobali's alibi from this particular source.[2967] Having reviewed the specific portions of the Trial Judgement cited by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by his argument that the Trial Chamber treated differently Defence and Prosecution evidence in similar situations.

1307. With respect to the assessment of Witness Munyenyezi's evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's contentions, the Trial Chamber did not conclude that the witness was not credible for "the sole reason" that it found established beyond reasonable doubt that, as alleged by the Prosecution, killings "were occurring throughout Butare préfecture, including at locations within a very short distance of the Hotel Ihuliro".[2968] As recalled above, the Trial Chamber relied on a number of other factors, including that Witness Munyenyezi contradicted Ntahobali's testimony on when his illness began, that she would have a motive to exculpate him, and that her evidence raised serious credibility issues as she testified that she did not hear that the [2963] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1138. The Prosecution also argues that Ntahobali's argument concerning Witness NMBMP should be dismissed as it was raised for the first time in his appeal brief. See ibid., para. 1133. The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to the Prosecution's claim, this allegation of error was expressly raised in Ntahobali's notice of appeal. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 285 ("The Chamber did not or refused to take into account a testimony confirming the alibis.").

[2964] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1137-1140, 1145.
[2965] Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 332.
[2966] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali's reliance on the 1 March 2005 Decision is misplaced as this decision focuses only on the requirements for the application of witnesses special protective measures. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 801; 1 March 2005 Decision, para. 23.

crimes committed between April and July 1994 were ethnically motivated or about any massive killings in Butare after 19 April 1994.[2969] Ntahobali does not demonstrate any error in this respect.

1308. Turning to the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to consider the relevant alibi evidence of Witness NMBMP, the Appeals Chamber recalls that:

> [T]he Trial Chamber is not under the obligation to justify its findings in relation to every submission made during the trial […]. With regard to the factual findings, the Trial Chamber is required only to make findings of those facts which are essential to the determination of guilt on a particular count. It is not necessary to refer to the testimony of every witness or every piece of evidence on the trial record. It is to be presumed that the Trial Chamber evaluated all the evidence presented to it, as long as there is no indication that the Trial Chamber completely disregarded any particular piece of evidence. There may be an indication of disregard when evidence which is clearly relevant to the findings is not addressed by the Trial Chamber's reasoning […]. If the Trial Chamber did not refer to the evidence given by a witness, even if it is in contradiction to the Trial Chamber's finding, it is to be presumed that the Trial Chamber assessed and weighed the evidence, but found that the evidence did not prevent it from arriving at its actual findings.[2970]

1309. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness NMBMP testified that Ntahobali had malaria for a week, between 27 or 28 April and early May 1994.[2971] According to Witness NMBMP, Ntahobali woke up and felt sick, was bed-ridden for the first three days, and could not leave the premises of Hotel Ihuliro for the rest of the week.[2972]

1310. While the Trial Chamber referred to other parts of Witness NMBMP's testimony in several sections of the Trial Judgement, at no point did it refer to the part of her testimony directly relevant to Ntahobali's alibi.[2973] The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that the Trial Chamber's statement that Witness Munyenyezi was the only witness to corroborate Ntahobali's alibi that he was sick with malaria at the end of April 1994 clearly indicates that the Trial Chamber disregarded this aspect of Witness NMBMP's testimony.[2974] Given the direct relevance of this evidence, to which Ntahobali expressly referred in his closing brief, and the indication that the Trial Chamber did not assess and weigh it as part of its examination of the alibi evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider this aspect of Witness NMBMP's evidence.[2975]

1311. The Appeals Chamber, however, is not convinced by Ntahobali's submission that the Trial Chamber's error invalidates its conclusion that the alibi was not credible. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber considered that the testimony of Witness NMBMP was to be viewed with appropriate caution given her ties with Ntahobali.[2976]

1312. Moreover, the Trial Judgement reflects that the finding that Witness Munyenyezi was the only witness to corroborate Ntahobali's alibi was not a decisive factor in the Trial Chamber's decision to reject the alibi. In finding that Ntahobali's alibi was not credible, the Trial Chamber expressly relied on the lack of credibility of Witness Munyenyezi, the late notice of alibi, and the lack of corroboration from other testifying witnesses who should have had knowledge of Ntahobali's illness.[2977] In view of the overall findings of the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the evidence of Witness NMBMP would have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from reaching the conclusion that his alibi with respect to the period between late April and early May 1994 was not credible. In sum, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber's error of law of failing to consider the totality of the evidence on the record does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision regarding Ntahobali's alibi.

1313. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his alibi relating to the period between late April and early May 1994 was not credible and reasonably possibly true.

2. Alibi for 26 or 27 May to 5 June 1994

1314. The Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali's alibi that he left for Cyangugu on 26 or 27 May 1994 and returned to Butare on 5 June 1994 was not credible and reasonably possibly true.[2978] In reaching its conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied on the late filing of his first notice of alibi, the contradictions as to Ntahobali's alleged return from Cyangugu in his notices of alibis, and the potential bias of the alibi witnesses in favour of Ntahobali.[2979] It also noted Ntahobali's failure to mention his trip to Cyangugu during an interview with a Prosecution investigator in 1997 and found unconvincing his explanation for his prior inconsistent statement.[2980] The Trial Chamber further considered that Witness WBUC directly contradicted Witnesses Munyenyezi, Denise Ntahobali, and Clarisse Ntahobali as to when Ntahobali left Butare for Cyangugu and that the alibi

[2976] Trial Judgement, paras. 3100, 3101; Witness NMBMP, T. 22 April 2008 p. 13 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber also observes that the testimony of Witness NMBMP that Ntahobali had malaria for a week was not consistent with aspects of Witness Munyenyezi's evidence since Witness Munyenyezi testified that Ntahobali felt sick two or three days before the birthday of his niece, which was on 28 April 1994, whereas Witness NMBMP clearly remembered that Ntahobali got malaria on the morning of the same day of the birthday of Ntahobali's niece. Compare Béatrice Munyenyezi, T. 27 February 2008 p. 8 with Witness NMBMP, T. 22 April 2008 pp. 33-35 (closed session). See also Witness NMBMP, T. 23 April 2008 pp. 25, 26 (closed session). witnesses disagreed as to when he returned to Butare.[2981] Moreover, it found that Ntahobali Defence Witness WDUSA was not credible in light of the "ambiguity in the dates given", the fact that he was a friend of Ntahobali, and the contradictions in the name of the hotel where he allegedly met with Ntahobali and Béatrice Munyenyezi.[2982]

1315. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness WBUC contradicted the other alibi witnesses on the timing of the alibi as a result of an error in the interpretation into French and English of the witness's testimony.[2983] Ntahobali asserts that a review of Witness WBUC's original testimony in Kinyarwanda reveals that the witness testified that Ntahobali left four or five days before her birthday on 30 May 1994, rather than four or five days after her birthday as interpreted in English and French and reflected in the official transcripts.[2984] Thus, he contends that Witness WBUC corroborated rather than contradicted the evidence of the other alibi witnesses.[2985] Ntahobali argues that the purported contradiction was critical to the Trial Chamber's decision to reject his alibi, which should therefore be overturned on appeal.[2986]

1316. Furthermore, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness WDUSA was not credible.[2987] In his view, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Witness WDUSA and Ntahobali were friends on the basis that the witness "lived with him in Nairobi" since the witness was very clear that they only lived in the same complex, in different apartments.[2988] He also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness WDUSA was imprecise regarding the dates of Ntahobali's stay in Cyangugu as the witness explained that more than ten years had elapsed.[2989]

1317. Finally, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in completely disregarding the aspect of Witness NMBMP's testimony which corroborated the other alibi witnesses regarding his whereabouts between the end of May and early June 1994, invalidating the Trial Chamber's decision to reject his alibi for this period.[2990]

1318. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's conclusion on Witness WDUSA's credibility was unreasonable or that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness NMBMP's testimony.[2991] It also argues that the alleged error in the interpretation of the testimony of Witness WBUC is unfounded and that, if there was such a problem, Ntahobali should have raised it before the Trial Chamber.[2992] It adds that Ntahobali never gave any reasonable explanation to justify his inconsistent statements concerning his trip to Cyangugu.[2993]

1319. Ntahobali replies that he did not realise that there was an interpretation error of Witness WBUC's testimony until the delivery of the Trial Judgement.[2994] He also submits that the Prosecution does not provide any argument to justify the Trial Chamber's omission of Witness NMBMP's evidence.[2995]

1320. Upon careful review of the audio recording of Witness WBUC's original testimony in Kinyarwanda, the Tribunal's language section confirmed that the official French and English transcripts of the witness's testimony of 2 June 2005[2996] do not accurately reflect the witness's testimony.[2997] It is unclear from the corrected interpretation read in isolation whether Witness WBUC testified that the departure for Cyangugu took place four or five days before or after her birthday on 30 May 1994.[2998] However, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that, considering Witness WBUC's testimony in the context of her statement in examination-in-chief that Béatrice Munyenyezi was not in Butare during her birthday,[2999] no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the witness meant that her birthday took place about four to five days after Béatrice Munyenyezi left Butare for Cyangugu. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that the Trial Chamber erred in interpreting the witness's testimony to mean otherwise.

[2991] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1142, 1147. The Prosecution also submits that Ntahobali's arguments concerning the assessment of Witnesses WDUSA's and NMBMP's evidence should be dismissed as they were raised for the first time in his appeal brief and that Ntahobali failed to identify in his notice of appeal the witness whose testimony was erroneously interpreted. See ibid., para. 1133. The Appeals Chamber rejects these arguments as ill-founded since Ntahobali did raise the relevant allegations of error and identify the witness in his notice of appeal. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 283, 285, 286.

It was about four or five days later, but I would like you to… I do not remember very clearly, but it was days later."). Compare with Witness WBUC, T. 2 June 2005 p. 44 (closed session) ("My birthday was on the 30th. [2999] Witness WBUC, T. 1 June 2005 pp. 68, 69, 73 (closed session).

1321. In any event, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber's reliance on the erroneous interpretation of Witness WBUC's testimony has occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber indeed observes that the purported contradiction between the evidence of Witness WBUC – a relative of Ntahobali[3000] – and the other alibi witnesses regarding the timing of Ntahobali's departure from Butare was not critical to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the alibi, but was only one of its considerations. As recalled above, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali's alibi for this period was not credible based on the contradiction between Witness WBUC and other witnesses, "viewed in conjunction with the late, and incorrect, notice of alibi, and the potential bias of the witnesses in favour of Ntahobali".[3001] The Trial Chamber also referred to Ntahobali's prior inconsistent statement and emphasised that his alibi witnesses disagreed as to when he returned from Cyangugu.[3002] The Appeals Chamber considers that the absence of contradiction between Witness WBUC and the other alibi witnesses does not undermine the rest of the considerations upon which the Trial Chamber relied to conclude that Ntahobali's alibi was not reasonably possibly true.[3003]

1322. With respect to Ntahobali's arguments concerning the assessment of Witness WDUSA's evidence, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber's statement that "Witness WDUSA was a friend of Ntahobali, having lived with him in Nairobi when both were in exile" does not indicate that the Trial Chamber understood that they both lived in the same apartment.[3004] In summarising the relevant evidence, the Trial Chamber accurately reflected Ntahobali's testimony that, after their meetings in Cyangugu, he and Witness WDUSA met again in Nairobi between 1994 and 1997, where Ntahobali was in exile and where they lived in the same complex.[3005] Witness WDUSA's evidence further reflects that he was present during Ntahobali's engagement ceremony, that he knew his wife since 1992, that he met several times with Ntahobali and his wife in June 1994 in Cyangugu, and that he was in contact with Ntahobali between 1994 and 1996 while in Nairobi.[3006] Ntahobali also testified that Witness WDUSA was a friend of his wife's older sister's family.[3007] Considering Witness WDUSA's evidence that he lived in the same complex as Ntahobali in Nairobi together with the totality of his evidence, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber did not err in concluding that, in light of his relationship with

Ntahobali, Witness WDUSA "may have had an incentive to absolve Ntahobali of responsibility."[3008]

1323. As for Ntahobali's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness WDUSA was "imprecise as to the exact dates" when he met with him in Cyangugu, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber relied on "the ambiguity in the dates given" by Witness WDUSA when finding that he was not credible.[3009] The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness WDUSA testified that he saw Ntahobali three times over the course of one week around 27 May 1994 and the end of the first week of June 1994.[3010] In light of the fact that the witness provided multiple temporal references, the short timeframe of the meetings, and the passage of time between the events and his testimony, the Appeals Chamber considers that no reasonable trier of fact could have drawn a negative inference from Witness WDUSA's inability to provide "the exact dates" of his meetings with Ntahobali in May and June 1994.[3011] Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the Trial Chamber's determination that Witness WDUSA gave ambiguous dates was decisive for the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the witness was not credible. Considering that the Trial Chamber further relied on his relationship with Ntahobali and the contradictions in the name of the hotel where the witness allegedly met Ntahobali on multiple occasions,[3012] the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's improper reliance on Witness WDUSA's inability to provide exact dates has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

1324. Regarding the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to consider the relevant alibi evidence of Witness NMBMP, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness NMBMP testified that Ntahobali came to Cyangugu at the end of May 1994 in the evening of the day when she moved there with her family and Béatrice Munyenyezi and that Ntahobali remained with them for a week, until 5 June 1994.[3013] This aspect of Witness NMBMP's testimony is not discussed or referred to in any section of the Trial Judgement. The Appeals Chambers considers that the lack of any reference to Witness NMBMP's directly relevant evidence, viewed in light of the Trial Chamber's complete disregard of the part of her testimony on Ntahobali's alibi for late April to early May 1994,[3014] indicates that the Trial Chamber also disregarded this particular aspect of Witness NMBMP's evidence. Given the direct relevance of this evidence, to which Ntahobali expressly referred in his closing brief, and the absence of any indication in the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber [3011] The Appeals Chamber considers that, in light of this finding, Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber applied different standards in its treatment of Prosecution and Defence evidence as to the passage of time need not be discussed.

assessed and weighed Witness NMBMP's testimony on Ntahobali's alibi between 26 or 27 May and 5 June 1994, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider this evidence.[3015]

1325. However, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that this error invalidates the Trial Chamber's finding that the alibi was not credible. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness NMBMP's relevant evidence, which was to be viewed with caution,[3016] is repetitive of other Defence evidence discussed at length by the Trial Chamber.[3017] It also notes that aspects of Witness NMBMP's testimony contradict Ntahobali's own testimony.[3018] Upon careful review of the relevant evidence and the Trial Chamber's pertinent findings, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the evidence of Witness NMBMP, when considered with the rest of the Trial Chamber's findings on the late filing of his first notice of alibi, the contradictions in his notices of alibis regarding the time period when he was in Cyangugu, his prior inconsistent statement, the potential bias of the witnesses in his favour, and the contradictions on the date of his return to Butare and his meetings with Witness WDUSA,[3019] would have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from reaching the conclusion that Ntahobali's alibi for the period between 26 or 27 May and 5 June 1994 was not credible.

1326. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his alibi relating to the period between 26 or 27 May and 5 June 1994 was not credible and reasonably possibly true.

3. Conclusion

1327. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting his alibis and, accordingly, dismisses Ground 3.11 of Ntahobali's appeal in its entirety.

F. Institut de Recherche Scientifique et Technique (Grounds 3.1 and 4.5)

1328. The Trial Chamber found that, on 21 April 1994, Ntahobali participated in the abduction of approximately 40 Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and ordered the Interahamwe present at the roadblock to take them to a location in Butare Town between the IRST and the Laboratory to join other Tutsis who had been arrested and transported there.[3020] The Trial Chamber found that, at that location, Ntahobali issued orders to the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis, that his orders were followed, and that approximately 200 Tutsis were killed.[3021] On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of approximately 200 Tutsis near the IRST on 21 April 1994.[3022]

1329. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in its assessment of the evidence. He further argues that the Trial Chamber's findings fail to support his liability for ordering the killings under Article 6(1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1. Assessment of Evidence

1330. The Trial Chamber relied exclusively on the evidence of Prosecution Witness QCB to conclude that Ntahobali participated in the abduction of 40 Tutsis at the Rugira roadblock and that he subsequently ordered Interahamwe to kill these and other Tutsis at the IRST.[3023] Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber: (i) failed to consider or properly assess inconsistencies in Witness QCB's evidence and failed to exercise sufficient caution; (ii) erred in assessing Witness QCB's identification evidence; and (iii) failed to consider or properly assess exculpatory evidence. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1331. As a preliminary remark, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, on 14 April 2015, it admitted as additional evidence on appeal a confidential statement given by Witness QCB on 27 May 2004 and a second confidential statement that he gave on 2 June 2004 to Canadian investigators during investigations in Canadian criminal proceedings for the purpose of assessing limited aspects of these materials as they concerned Witness QCB's testimony.[3024] In accordance with the relevant standard, if the Appeals Chamber determines that a reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of the trial record alone, the Appeals Chamber will then determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the finding of guilt.[3025]

(a) Inconsistencies and Insufficient Caution

1332. Ntahobali argues that, given the inconsistent nature of Witness QCB's evidence and his incarceration at the time of his testimony, the Trial Chamber did not exercise sufficient caution when evaluating his evidence.[3026] In support of his contention, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting unreasonable explanations for, or failed to address, material contradictions between Witness QCB's testimony and his prior statement to Tribunal investigators that concerned the killings at the IRST.[3027]

1333. Specifically, Ntahobali argues that, in his prior statement, Witness QCB: (i) stated that, upon leaving the Rugira roadblock on 21 April 1994, he went towards Mukoni rather than approaching the killings at the IRST;[3028] (ii) failed to explicitly mention Ntahobali's participation in the killings at the IRST and to name two other perpetrators whom he later named in his testimony;[3029] (iii) indicated that he never returned to Butare after he left on 21 April 1994 whereas he later testified that he returned and witnessed Ntahobali abduct Tutsis from the Butare Prefecture Office on 28 April 1994;[3030] (iv) indicated that he left the scene of the IRST killings because he was afraid, yet testified that he participated in the killings at Kabakobwa the next day;[3031] and (v) stated that "he had never seen that before" in relation to the killings at the IRST – implying he had never seen a killing before – despite testifying to having seen the killings of a woman, Ruvurajabo, and three others in his sector previously.[3032]

1334. Ntahobali further submits that, given the confusing and inconsistent nature of Witness QCB's evidence as well as the Trial Chamber's conclusion that he may have a motive to implicate him, the Trial Chamber should have rejected Witness QCB's uncorroborated evidence.[3033] He highlights that the Trial Chamber found Witness QCB's uncorroborated evidence concerning crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office in late April 1994 insufficiently reliable and contends that his evidence concerning the IRST killings should not be treated any differently.[3034]

1335. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber acted within its discretion in relying on Witness QCB's evidence, which it found reliable and credible.[3035] It argues that the Trial Chamber was not obliged to find corroboration for Witness QCB's testimony and that it was not unreasonable to accept the witness's testimony about the IRST killings and reject it in relation to crimes committed at the prefectoral office.[3036]

1336. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QCB testified that, after leaving the Rugira roadblock, he went to the IRST and observed the killings.[3037] Witness QCB also testified to Ntahobali's participation in the killings as the leader of the assailants, which included Désiré and Pierre Claver.[3038] In summarising his evidence, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness QCB's Statement read that, after leaving the Rugira roadblock on 21 April 1994, the witness "continued towards Mukoni when [he] heard screams."[3039] The witness affirmed in his testimony that he saw the killings at the IRST before he went towards Mukoni.[3040] When confronted with this inconsistency, Witness QCB testified that the Prosecution investigator failed to properly record his statement.[3041] Witness QCB also added that, during his interview, he did not fully understand what was being read to him as there were several documents and the investigator appeared to be in a hurry.[3042] When assessing Witness QCB's evidence, the Trial Chamber accepted the witness's explanation for this variance between his prior statement and his testimony.[3043] Ntahobali merely asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting the witness's "unreasonable" explanation without demonstrating that doing so was unreasonable.

1337. The Appeals Chamber further finds that none of the other alleged inconsistencies between Witness QCB's prior statement and testimony pointed out by Ntahobali were material contradictions that required the Trial Chamber to make adverse findings as to the witness's credibility. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that Witness QCB's Statement does not expressly include reference to Ntahobali's participation in these killings or identify two individuals as co-perpetrators the witness named while testifying does not render the statement inconsistent with Witness QCB's testimony given the brevity of the statement.[3044] It is reasonable that Witness QCB's testimony, given in response to the specific questions arising during his examination, would contain more nuance and detail than Witness QCB's Statement.[3045]

1338. Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber should have rejected Witness QCB's testimony given that his prior statement indicated that he never returned to Butare after 21 April 1994, but that he later testified that he returned and witnessed Ntahobali abduct Tutsis from the prefectoral office on 28 April 1994 is equally unpersuasive. Ntahobali fails to demonstrate the clear relevance of this alleged inconsistency – which pertains to a separate event – to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QCB's evidence about the killings at the IRST. Moreover, the Trial Chamber did assess Witness QCB's evidence concerning Ntahobali's role in the abductions of Tutsis at the prefectoral office on 28 April 1994 elsewhere in the Trial Judgement and rejected it.[3046] Recalling that it is open to a trial chamber to accept some parts of a witness's testimony and reject others,[3047] the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's evaluation of Witness QCB's evidence about the IRST killings.

1339. The Appeals Chamber also considers that the Trial Chamber was under no obligation to expressly assess every conceivable dissonance between Witness QCB's Statement that he left the IRST out of fear after having observed killings there and his testimony that he perpetrated killings at Kabakobwa.[3048] Furthermore, while Ntahobali points to Witness QCB's evidence that he had previously observed the killing of a woman, Ruvurajabo, and three others in his sector as contradicting the witness's statement that he "never witnessed that before" in relation to the IRST killings, the Appeals Chamber does not see any material contradiction that the Trial Chamber reasonably should have addressed in the Trial Judgement. Witness QCB's evidence of having observed prior killings concerns the murders of a limited number of individuals rather than the slaughter of approximately 200 persons killed at the IRST.[3049]

1340. As for Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber should have rejected Witness QCB's uncorroborated evidence because of its confusing and inconsistent nature as well as the Trial Chamber's conclusion that this detained witness may have motive to implicate Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber recalls that nothing in the Statute or the Rules prevents a trial chamber from relying on uncorroborated evidence. A trial chamber has the discretion to decide in the circumstances of each case whether corroboration is necessary and whether to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[3050] This discretion applies equally to the evidence of accomplice witnesses provided that the trier of fact applies the appropriate caution in assessing such evidence.[3051]

1341. The Appeals Chamber has already determined that Ntahobali has not demonstrated any error as it relates to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QCB's evidence in light of the alleged inconsistencies.[3052] In addition, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in evaluating the witness's evidence in relation to the killings at the IRST, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that, at the time of his testimony, Witness QCB had confessed to participating in killings of certain persons, was detained in Rwanda, and was awaiting sentencing.[3053] The Trial Chamber concluded that it would treat Witness QCB's evidence with appropriate caution as he may have had an incentive to implicate Ntahobali in order to avoid a severe sentence.[3054]

1342. The Trial Chamber's approach demonstrates that it was apprised of the fact that it may be necessary to employ a cautious approach towards witnesses who are charged with crimes of a similar nature to that of an accused.[3055] Indeed, a comprehensive reading of the Trial Judgement reveals that the Trial Chamber considered in detail Witness QCB's status as a detained witness and as an accomplice witness in relation to other events upon which he testified.[3056] In this context, the Trial Chamber properly considered Witness QCB's possible motivation to implicate Ntahobali as well as other accused.[3057]

However, these allegations pertained to evidence implicating Kanyabashi. The Trial Chamber, mindful that the Defence only need to cast reasonable doubt on the Prosecution case, concluded that the Defence evidence did not undermine the evidence of Witness QCB. See ibid., para. 383. The Appeals Chamber also discusses Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber took contradictory positions as to the need to apply caution to Witness QCB's evidence when assessing Ntahobali's challenges concerning 1343. The Trial Chamber's analysis of Witness QCB's evidence concerning the killings at the IRST also reflects that it considered several factors relevant to a cautious assessment of this witness's credibility. Specifically, the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber was cognisant of and explicitly considered discrepancies within Witness QCB's testimony, possible inconsistencies with his prior statement as well as inconsistencies between his evidence and other evidence on the record before finding "Witness QCB's detailed evidence to be credible" with respect to this event.[3058] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Witness QCB's evidence and erred in not requiring corroboration.

the killing of Ruvurajabo. See infra, paras. 1434, 1435. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Ntahobali's contentions that, because the Trial Chamber identified circumstances which could suggest that Witness QCB "may have had an incentive to implicate Ntahobali in order to avoid a severe sentence", it was required to rely on Witness QCB's evidence only where corroborated. See Trial Judgement, para. 1474; AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 53, 54, referring to Muvunyi Appeal Judgement, para. 131, Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, para. 44.

[3064] Trial Judgement, para. 2611. The Appeals Chamber notes that, Witness QCB's Statement contains no reference to the abductions of Tutsis from the Butare Prefecture Office on 28 April 1994 – unlike the killings at the IRST and the killing of Ruvurajabo – and, as noted by Ntahobali, gives the impression that he was not in Butare Town at this time. See Witness QCB's Statement, p. 3.

1345. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Witness QCB's testimony in light of inconsistencies or that it failed to exercise sufficient caution when relying on his uncorroborated evidence in relation to the killings at the IRST.

(b) Identification Evidence

1346. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to properly analyse Witness QCB's identification evidence.[3065] Ntahobali contends that, when relying on the witness's evidence that the witness knew Ntahobali for years prior to 1994, the Trial Chamber unreasonably accepted the witness's explanation that due to fears for his safety, the witness initially testified in his open session examination-in-chief that he first saw Ntahobali on 21 April 1994.[3066] Ntahobali argues that such an explanation is patently unbelievable as the witness later explained his prior knowledge of Ntahobali in open session during his cross-examination.[3067] Ntahobali also contends that, while Witness QCB testified that he met Ntahobali at Maurice Ntahobali's house in 1989 when Ntahobali was studying at the National University of Rwanda in Butare,[3068] the evidence shows that Ntahobali was in Kigali (and not Butare) in 1989 and that he attended the National University of Rwanda in Butare only in 1992.[3069] Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the audio recording of Witness QCB's testimony reflects that he referred to him as "Shaloumou",[3070] and that the witness showed a propensity for misidentification because he had previously confused Ntahobali's counsel for someone who visited him in prison in Rwanda.[3071] Finally, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred by according weight to Witness QCB's in-court identification of him, particularly since the presiding judge had previously identified his counsel in court.[3072]

1347. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali exaggerates and manipulates the inconsistencies in Witness QCB's identification evidence.[3073] It disputes that Witness QCB testified that he knew Ntahobali when Ntahobali was at the National University of Rwanda in Butare and submits that the witness said he did not know if Ntahobali was a university student when he first met him.[3074]

It further points out that the Trial Chamber explicitly recognised that it must consider in-court identification evidence with caution.[3075]

1348. Ntahobali replies that the French transcripts of Witness QCB's testimony indicate that Witness QCB stated that he knew Ntahobali when Ntahobali was at the National University of Rwanda in Butare.[3076] In Ntahobali's view, Witness QCB's response that he did not know if Ntahobali was a university student when he first met him is insufficient to counter his initial testimony and this modification demonstrates Witness QCB's inability to provide consistent evidence as it relates to his ability to identify Ntahobali.[3077]

1349. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly addressed the credibility of Witness QCB's identification evidence. The Trial Chamber noted that, during his open session examination-in-chief, the witness testified that he first saw Ntahobali on 21 April 1994 but during his cross-examination stated that he knew Ntahobali for a while before 1994.[3078] It accepted Witness QCB's explanation that he feared for his safety and that is why he had stated that he only first saw Ntahobali on 21 April 1994 in open session.[3079] In this context, the Trial Chamber appears to have accepted Witness QCB's ability to identify Ntahobali from his testimony that he had in fact known Ntahobali since 1989 when Witness QCB worked at the National University of Rwanda in Butare.[3080]

1350. Ntahobali does not show that Witness QCB's explanation as to the reason why he initially said that he first saw Ntahobali on 21 April 1994 was so unbelievable that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted it.[3081] While Witness QCB provided general evidence of his prior knowledge of Ntahobali during his open session cross-examination,[3082] he refused to go into detail before going into closed session.[3083] Only then did Witness QCB provide additional information as to how he knew Ntahobali,[3084] confirming that, contrary to Ntahobali's assertion, the witness did not want to discuss his knowledge of Ntahobali in open session.

1351. Likewise, Ntahobali's submission that Witness QCB testified that he knew Ntahobali when Ntahobali was a student at the National University of Rwanda in Butare in 1989 misinterprets the witness's testimony.[3085] Read in context, it is clear from both the English and French transcripts that Witness QCB did not testify that he knew Ntahobali in 1989 when Ntahobali was a student at the National University of Rwanda. Rather, Witness QCB testified that he was working at the university at that time and that he first met Ntahobali at his father's home during that year.[3086] Witness QCB unambiguously testified that he did not know whether Ntahobali was a university student when he first met him in 1989.[3087] Thus, Ntahobali's citation to Witness QCB's evidence that he knew Ntahobali when he was studying "at the university" clearly concerns a different period during which the witness also had contact with Ntahobali.[3088] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali testified that his parents returned to Butare in 1988 or 1989 and that, although he was living in Gitarama, he would return to Butare to visit them.[3089]

1352. Further, the Appeals Chamber considers that to the extent the audio recording of Witness QCB's testimony would reveal that the witness referred to Ntahobali as "Shaloumou" rather than "Shalom", this would not constitute a material variance requiring express analysis by the Trial Chamber. A review of the transcripts cited by Ntahobali reflects that Witness QCB referred to Ntahobali as "Shalom".[3090] Of greater significance, moments after Ntahobali alleges that Witness QCB identified Ntahobali as "Shaloumou", the witness provided biographical information about Ntahobali demonstrating his ability to identify Ntahobali and that he was referring to him.[3091] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that Witness QCB's misidentification of Ntahobali's counsel is immaterial to his ability to identify Ntahobali.[3092]

in court.[3093] However, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that these circumstances necessarily made Witness QCB's in-court confirmation that Ntahobali was the person he was referring to in his testimony unreliable.[3094] The Trial Chamber's analysis reflects that it found Witness QCB's identification of Ntahobali reliable in light of the witness's testimony that he had known him since 1989 and not because he identified him in court.[3095]

1354. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error on the part of the Trial Chamber in accepting Witness QCB's identification evidence.

(c) Exculpatory Evidence

1355. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider or properly assess evidence that contradicted Witness QCB's testimony of Ntahobali's participation in the killings at the IRST on 21 April 1994, and its negative impact on Witness QCB's credibility.[3096] Specifically, he points to his own evidence and that of Witness D-2-13-O, arguing that it materially contradicts Witness QCB's testimony that a Daihatsu carrying Tutsis could go to the IRST without first stopping at the Rugira roadblock.[3097] Ntahobali also argues that Witness QCB's evidence reflects that the Daihatsu avoided the roadblock by taking a route which, in light of the evidence of Ntahobali and Witness D-2-13-O, did not exist.[3098]

Ntahobali also asserts that the Trial Chamber failed to address the contradiction between Witness QCB's testimony that Ntahobali was driving a Peugeot and Witness TN's evidence that Ntahobali was in a Toyota on 21 April 1994.[3103]

1357. The Prosecution did not respond to these submissions.

1358. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber made no findings as to the route taken by the Daihatsu and only summarised Witness QCB's evidence that the Daihatsu was moving from the EER to the IRST followed by a Peugeot driven by Ntahobali and that the Peugeot stopped at the Rugira roadblock while the Daihatsu continued its journey.[3104] Having reviewed all of the relevant aspects of Witness QCB's evidence[3105] as well as the allegedly contradictory evidence identified by Ntahobali,[3106] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that Ntahobali has identified a material contradiction in the record that the Trial Chamber unreasonably disregarded.[3107] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, of principal significance was the existence of the Rugira roadblock as identified by Witness QCB, which is not disputed by this evidence.

1359. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber shifted the burden of proof when stating that Witness TN's evidence "does not exclude the possibility that Ntahobali may have participated in the [IRST] killings", the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber ultimately concluded that the evidence provided by Witness TN did "not cast a doubt on the Prosecution's case"[3108] and that the Prosecution had "proven beyond a reasonable doubt" the facts relevant to Ntahobali's liability for the IRST killings.[3109] The Trial Chamber had also recalled earlier that the accused are presumed innocent and that it is the Prosecution's burden to prove every element of the offence charged beyond reasonable doubt.[3110] While the Appeals Chamber considers that the specific language identified by Ntahobali may suggest a misapplication of the burden of proof, read in this context, these statements underscore the Trial Chamber's determination that the evidence of Witness TN did not provide another reasonable possibility that was inconsistent with Witness QCB's evidence of Ntahobali's involvement in the killings at the IRST.

1360. Regarding the assessment of Witness TN's evidence, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness TN testified that Ntahobali killed Rwabugiri and Philippe behind the Tumba sector office between 9.00 and 10.00 a.m. on 21 April 1994 and that "[t]his would account for a portion of the timeframe during which Witness QCB submits that the killings of Tutsis at the IRST occurred, i.e. between 9.00 and 9.30 a.m."[3111] While Ntahobali contests that Witness TN's evidence could be interpreted as reflecting that the killings of Rwabugiri and Philippe lasted from 9.00 to 10.00 a.m., he does not demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not interpret Witness TN's evidence as only referring to a segment of time during the relevant period.[3112]

1362. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber ultimately found that Witness TN's evidence in relation to Ntahobali's participation in killings in the Tumba Sector on the morning of 21 April 1994 was insufficient to prove the allegation beyond reasonable doubt.[3115] Having rejected this particular aspect of Witness TN's evidence,[3116] the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have decided not to expressly consider the differences between the testimonies of Witnesses QCB and TN as to the vehicle Ntahobali was driving on 21 April 1994.

1363. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the alleged exculpatory evidence relied upon by Ntahobali in relation to the IRST killings on 21 April 1994.

(d) Additional Evidence Admitted on Appeal

1364. On the basis of the trial record alone, the Appeals Chamber has found that the Trial Chamber did not err in: (i) assessing Witness QCB's testimony in light of inconsistencies;

[3111] Trial Judgement, para. 1478, referring to Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 pp. 78, 95, T. 26 March 2002 p. 39.

[3113] See Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 p. 95 ("Q. Let me go back and ask you to estimate the time at which you left the approximate area of IRST? A. It was approximately at 9:30.").
[3114] See Trial Judgement, para. 1478.
[3115] Trial Judgement, para. 1486.
[3116] The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Chamber only relied on Witness QCB's evidence in finding that Ntahobali was in possession of a vehicle on 21 April 1994. See Trial Judgement, para. 1478, referring to Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 p. 85.

(ii) failing to exercise sufficient caution when relying on Witness QCB's uncorroborated evidence in relation to the killings at the IRST; (iii) accepting Witness QCB's identification evidence; or (iv) assessing the alleged exculpatory evidence relied upon by Ntahobali. In accordance with the relevant standard, the Appeals Chamber will therefore determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the finding of guilt.

1365. The Appeals Chamber finds Witness QCB's testimony pertaining to the killings at the IRST detailed and coherent.[3117] His explanations given in cross-examination as they concern alleged inconsistencies about this event are clear and convincing.[3118] His evidence is first-hand[3119] and his identification of Ntahobali is compelling.[3120]

1366. The Appeals Chamber admitted as additional evidence on appeal Witness QCB's statement given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police ("RCMP") on 27 May 2004 and excerpts of Witness QCB's statement given to the RCMP on 2 June 2004 (collectively "Witness QCB's RCMP Statements"), both of which were given confidentially during investigations in Canadian criminal proceedings.[3121] When admitting these statements as additional evidence on appeal, the Appeals Chamber stated:

> [T]he Appeals Chamber observes that the information that Witness QCB provided in relation to the abduction of the children in [Witness QCB's May 2004 Statement] indicates that he observed the event with his "own eyes" and provides details and commentary that would seem to affirm this statement as well as that he also saw the abduction of the pastor. This account of the abductions is inconsistent with Witness QCB's assertions in [Witness QCB's June 2004 Statement], provided less than a week later, that he did not see the abductions but learned about them from another source.[3122]

1367. Ntahobali submits that, given the Trial Chamber's stated concerns that Witness QCB may have an incentive to lie, the additional evidence admitted on appeal shows that Witness "QCB is, in fact, a liar."[3123] He contends that Witness QCB's evidence cannot be accepted beyond reasonable doubt without corroboration.[3124]

1368. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QCB provided contradictory statements to the RCMP as to whether he observed first-hand or learned from another source about abductions that occurred during the genocide in which Ntahobali was implicated as a co-perpetrator.[3125] However, the Appeals Chamber has considered and accepts the witness's explanation for the inconsistency.[3126] Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that the contradictory information arose during statements which were not given as testimonies under oath or under penalty of perjury.[3127] Moreover, the abductions recounted in Witness QCB's RCMP Statements were not incidents for which Ntahobali was charged nor has Ntahobali argued that the statements contradict the testimony Witness QCB gave before the Tribunal.[3128] Considering that a reasonable trier of fact has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony from an accomplice witness provided that appropriate caution is applied in assessing such evidence,[3129] the Appeals Chamber considers that the additional evidence admitted on appeal does not undermine the credibility of Witness QCB. The Appeals Chamber makes this determination in light of the evidence in the trial record, including Witness TN's evidence highlighted by Ntahobali at trial and on appeal,[3130] Witness D-2-13-O's evidence,[3131] and the evidence related to the alleged fabrication of evidence by Witness QCB.[3132]

1369. In light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, and considering its analysis on Ntahobali's responsibility conducted below, the Appeals Chamber is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt of Ntahobali's guilt concerning the killing of approximately 200 refugees at the IRST on 21 April 1994.

(e) Conclusion

1370. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's submissions as they relate to the assessment of the evidence pertaining to the killings perpetrated at the IRST on 21 April 1994.

2. Ordering Responsibility

1371. As noted above, the Trial Chamber found Ntahobali responsible for ordering the killing of approximately 200 Tutsis near the IRST on 21 April 1994.[3133] The Trial Chamber determined that "Ntahobali issued orders to the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis that had been arrested"[3134] and that his "instructions in this regard were clear."[3135] The Trial Chamber further found that Ntahobali's orders to kill were followed by the Interahamwe and that approximately 200 Tutsis were killed as a result.[3136] The Trial Chamber inferred as the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali possessed authority over the Interahamwe.[3137]

1372. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for ordering these killings on the basis of Witness QCB's evidence.[3138] In particular, he argues that Witness QCB did not specify the nature or content of the orders he allegedly gave and that his evidence could not reasonably be relied upon to establish that he ordered the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis at the IRST.[3139] Ntahobali also submits that Witness QCB's general testimony about the orders he issued could reasonably relate to instructions he gave before his arrival at the IRST and therefore have no link to the killings that occurred at the IRST.[3140] He contends that evidence of his mere presence and possible authority over the Interahamwe is insufficient to establish that he ordered the killings.[3141] Moreover, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he possessed sufficient authority over the Interahamwe required for ordering liability pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, as such a conclusion relied upon the erroneous finding that he ordered the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis.[3142]

1373. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber acted reasonably in inferring that Ntahobali ordered the killing of the 200 Tutsis at the IRST.[3143] It submits that Ntahobali's emphasis on the absence of evidence of a verbatim order to kill is misguided and ignores the relevant factual basis supporting this conclusion.[3144]

1374. The Trial Chamber found that, while at the massacre site at the IRST, "Ntahobali issued orders to the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis."[3145] Witness QCB was the only person to testify about this event and the Trial Chamber's factual conclusions rest solely on his testimony.[3146] A review of the Trial Chamber's summary of his evidence does not, however, reflect that Witness QCB testified that he overheard Ntahobali issue express instructions to the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis at the IRST.[3147] Rather, the Trial Chamber noted that the witness identified Ntahobali as one of the assailants at the IRST and as "the leader of the killers" because he witnessed Ntahobali "issuing orders".[3148]

1375. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that Ntahobali's submissions fail to appreciate the broader context of Witness QCB's evidence and do not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Ntahobali ordered the killing of approximately 200 Tutsis at the IRST. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in reaching its conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied upon and accepted Witness QCB's evidence that: (i) Ntahobali participated in the abduction of approximately 40 Tutsis from the Rugira roadblock, where he ordered the Interahamwe present to take the Tutsis who had been arrested to the IRST where they were ultimately killed;[3149] (ii) the witness went to this particular location and saw about 200 people being stripped naked before being killed with clubs and knives;[3150] and (iii) he observed Ntahobali among the assailants and identified Ntahobali as the leader of the killers, issuing orders.[3151] The Appeals Chamber notes that all of Witness QCB's observations fell within a time span of approximately 20 minutes.[3152] Given the organised nature of the event, the limited timeframe in which it occurred, and Ntahobali's leadership role during it, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that the only reasonable conclusion from the evidence was that Ntahobali ordered the killings at the IRST.

The Appeals Chamber has reviewed the relevant aspects of Witness QCB's testimony and found no express statement that he heard Ntahobali order Interahamwe to kill. See Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 pp. 86-93, T. 26 March 2002 p. 39. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Prosecution does not cite to any testimony from Witness QCB stating that Ntahobali gave explicit orders to Interahamwe to kill. See Prosecution Response, paras. 1207-1215.
[3149] Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 pp. 86-91. See also Trial Judgement, paras. 1470, 1480.
[3150] Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 p. 89. See also Trial Judgement, paras. 1470, 1477, 1480.

1376. Ntahobali also does not demonstrate that Witness QCB's evidence could reasonably relate to instructions that have no link to the killings at the IRST. The Trial Chamber understood Witness QCB's evidence as referring to orders he heard while observing the killings at the IRST.[3153] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have come to this conclusion, as Witness QCB's testimony that Ntahobali issued orders was provided while describing the killings at the IRST and in direct response to a question as to why he had previously testified that Ntahobali was the leader of the killers.[3154]

1377. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali's remaining arguments rely solely on the contention that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he possessed sufficient authority because it relied on the allegedly erroneous finding that Ntahobali ordered the Interahamwe to kill the Tutsis at the IRST.[3155] Since the Appeals Chamber has found no error in this conclusion, it dismisses the remainder of Ntahobali's arguments as moot.

1378. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for ordering the killings perpetrated at the IRST on the basis of Witness QCB's evidence.

3. Conclusion

1379. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's finding that he was responsible for ordering the killing of approximately 200 Tutsis at the IRST on 21 April 1994. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 3.1 and 4.5 of Ntahobali's appeal in their entirety.

G. Hotel Ihuliro Roadblock (Grounds 3.2, 3.3, and 4.2, 4.3 in part)

1380. The Trial Chamber noted that it was not contested that, at the time of the relevant events, the Ntahobali family resided in Hotel Ihuliro in Butare Town, which was owned by Maurice Ntahobali.[3156] The Trial Chamber found that a roadblock was erected near Hotel Ihuliro in late April 1994.[3157] It also determined that Ntahobali manned the roadblock, which was used to abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population.[3158] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali ordered the killing of Ruvurajabo at this roadblock on 21 April 1994 and that he raped and murdered a Tutsi girl at the same roadblock around the end of April 1994.[3159] The Trial Judgement also reflects that Ntahobali was found responsible for having physically perpetrated the killing of multiple Tutsis at the roadblock, including but not limited to the killing of the "Tutsi girl".[3160]

1381. On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, extermination, rape, and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons and outrages upon personal dignity as serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for committing rape and killings and ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[3161] The Trial Chamber also found that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killing of Ruvurajabo perpetrated by Interahamwe and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining his sentence.[3162]

1382. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to provide sufficiently clear findings with respect to the extent of his liability for crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock; (ii) finding that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994; (iii) its assessment of the evidence about the killing of Ruvurajabo as well as in its determination that he was responsible as a superior for this crime; and (iv) its assessment of the evidence relating to the rape and murder of a Tutsi girl at the roadblock. The Appeals Chamber will consider these challenges in turn.

[3157] Trial Judgement, para. 3113. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has decided to refer to the roadblock which the Trial Chamber found was located in the proximity of the EER and the garage known as the "MSM garage" and very close to Hotel Ihuliro as the "Hotel Ihuliro roadblock" throughout this Judgement. See supra, fn. 51.

1. Imprecise and Unsupported Findings

1383. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement concerning Ntahobali's role at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Trial Chamber recalled the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FA, QCB, SX, TB, TG, and TQ.[3163] The Trial Chamber considered the ability of Witnesses QCB, SX, TB, TG, and TQ to identify Ntahobali as well as the corroborative nature of their testimonies.[3164] The Trial Chamber found "their accounts credible"[3165] and subsequently concluded as follows:

> Having considered all the evidence before it, the Chamber finds the Prosecution has established beyond a reasonable doubt that during the relevant time period, Ntahobali manned the roadblock in front of his parents' residence and utilised the roadblock with the assistance of soldiers and other unknown persons to abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population.[3166]

> In April 1994 Ntahobali manned the roadblock near Hotel Ihuliro. With the assistance of soldiers and other unknown persons he utilised the roadblock to abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population. Towards the end of April 1994, Ntahobali personally raped and murdered one Tutsi girl, and instructed the Interahamwe to kill Léopold Ruvurajabo, who was subsequently killed, at the roadblock near Hotel Ihuliro. It was established that various crimes, in particular beatings, rapes and killings, were carried out mostly against Tutsis at this roadblock during the relevant time period […].[3168]
>
> […]
> Ntahobali killed Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock […]. The Chamber therefore finds Ntahobali guilty of genocide, pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute. […][3169]

1385. The Trial Chamber repeated the conclusion that Ntahobali killed "Tutsis" at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, "including a Tutsi girl", when finding him responsible for committing extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[3170]

1386. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Judgement is unacceptably imprecise regarding his convictions for the killings he allegedly committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, which violates his right to a reasoned opinion provided for under Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules.[3171] Specifically, he contends that, save for the killing of the "Tutsi girl", the Trial Chamber failed to indicate what other killings of Tutsis he was found to have personally committed.[3172] He argues that the Trial Chamber could not have found him liable based on the extended form of committing as it did not make the conclusions that would have been essential to support this mode of responsibility.[3173] Ntahobali submits that the imprecision of the Trial Judgement concerning his responsibility for the killing of multiple Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock prevented him from knowing exactly what he was found responsible for and from mounting an effective appeal.[3174]

1387. In addition, Ntahobali argues that the finding that he committed killings at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock beyond the killing of the Tutsi girl is not supported by the evidence.[3175] He points out that, except for Witness FA, none of the witnesses found credible by the Trial Chamber testified to having seen him directly perpetrating such killings at this roadblock.[3176] For these reasons, Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber acquit him of all crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock other than the killing of Ruvurajabo and the "Tutsi girl".[3177]

1388. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's criminal responsibility for committing killings at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock is based solely on him having raped and murdered a Tutsi girl.[3178] It contends that the Trial Chamber did not convict Ntahobali under Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing other crimes at the roadblock but "merely found that [other crimes] occurred".[3179]

1389. Ntahobali replies that the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that he was convicted for having committed killings other than that of the Tutsi girl at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and reiterates that he should be acquitted of these crimes.[3180]

1390. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to the Prosecution's position, the Trial Judgement indicates that Ntahobali's responsibility for committing under Article 6(1) of the Statute is based on him having killed "Tutsis" at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, "including a Tutsi girl".[3181] By using the plural "Tutsis", the Trial Chamber's legal findings clearly reflect responsibility for multiple deaths. Furthermore, by utilising the term "killed" or phrase "having killed" when identifying Ntahobali's conduct in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber made it clear that Ntahobali's responsibility was based on his physical perpetration of killings[3182] and not on the extended form of commission.[3183] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ntahobali was convicted for having physically perpetrated the killing of multiple Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, including but not limited to the killing of the "Tutsi girl".

1392. Furthermore, the only evidence referred to by the Trial Chamber that Ntahobali personally killed persons at the roadblock in addition to the "Tutsi girl" was Witness FA's "eyewitness testimony that Ntahobali used an axe to kill a girl with long hair" and Witnesses QCB's and SX's testimonies that Ntahobali "participated in the killing of people at this roadblock."[3186] However, Witness FA's account of the incidents at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was not found credible by the Trial Chamber.[3187] As for Witness QCB's evidence, the excerpts of the testimony cited by the Trial Chamber relate to Ntahobali ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo[3188] rather than committing that crime.[3189] The relevant excerpts of Witness SX's testimony referred to by the Trial Chamber generally reflect the witness stating that "Shalom was one of the killers" of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock without referring to any particular killing and with no further detail.[3190] The evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber therefore does not support the conclusion that Ntahobali physically killed more than one individual at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.

1394. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Ntahobali criminally responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing killings of Tutsis other than the "Tutsi girl" at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in April 1994. The Appeals Chamber grants Ground 4.2 of Ntahobali's appeal to the extent that it relates to the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock events and, as a result, reverses Ntahobali's convictions for committing killings of Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in addition to the "Tutsi girl".

1395. As a result, the Appeals Chamber need not consider Ntahobali's remaining arguments developed under Ground 3.3 of his appeal relating to the assessment of the evidence concerning these crimes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock. The Appeals Chamber will nevertheless examine Ntahobali's arguments developed under Ground 3.3 which relate to when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in light of their relevance to Ntahobali's challenges of the evidence with respect to the crimes committed against Ruvurajabo and the "Tutsi girl".

2. Date of Establishment of the Roadblock

1396. The Trial Chamber, referring to the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses FA, QCB, SX, TB, TG, TQ, Nsabimana Defence Witnesses Karemano and Bararwandika as well as Kanyabashi Defence Witnesses D-2-YYYY, D-2-13-D, D-2-5-I, and D-13-D, noted that "a considerable amount of consistent evidence indicat[ed] that the [Hotel Ihuliro] roadblock was mounted towards the end of April 1994."[3191] It further recalled that Ntahobali Defence Witnesses Maurice Ntahobali, Clarisse Ntahobali, Denise Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko Defence Witnesses WBNC, WMKL, H1B6, WUNBJ, WCNMC, WBUC, WCUJM as well as Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko provided contradictory evidence, suggesting that the roadblock was not established prior to May 1994.[3192] However, the Trial Chamber, noting the family ties between Ntahobali and a number of the Defence witnesses[3193] as well as the considerable amount of evidence that the roadblock was mounted at the end of April 1994,[3194] concluded that the testimonies of these Defence witnesses failed to raise a reasonable doubt as to the allegation that the "roadblock near Hotel Ihuliro was in existence by the end of April 1994."[3195]

1398. Finally, elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber concluded, relying solely on the testimony of Witness QCB, that Ntahobali ordered the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994.[3199] Based on the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB, it also found that Ntahobali raped and murdered a Tutsi girl who arrived at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock "around the end of April 1994".[3200] Relying on, inter alia, the testimony of Witness FA that she heard Ntahobali making threats to kill the Rwamukwaya family at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock towards the end of April 1994, the Trial Chamber further found that Ntahobali was responsible for killing members of the Rwamukwaya family on or about 29 or 30 April 1994.[3201]

1399. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established around late April 1994, and not at the end of May or early June 1994. In particular, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing Prosecution evidence indicating that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994; (ii) failing to consider Defence evidence contradicting the finding that the roadblock was established in late April 1994; (iii) concluding that evidence of the roadblock's establishment after the departure of UNAMIR soldiers supported the conclusion that the roadblock was set up in late April 1994; and (iv) failing to give sufficient weight to Defence evidence and reversing the burden of proof. The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

(a) Evidence Relied Upon by the Trial Chamber

1400. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on Witnesses FA, QCB, SX, TB, TG, TQ, and QI to conclude that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994 given that their evidence on this point was inconsistent and contradictory,[3202] and erred in law in failing to address the inconsistencies and contradictions.[3203] Ntahobali further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to exercise caution when relying on the evidence of witnesses presented by Kanyabashi and Nsabimana, who were co-accused in his proceedings, despite doing so with respect to other crime scenes.[3204]

1401. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate how any error by the Trial Chamber about when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established would invalidate the Trial Judgement or result in a miscarriage of justice.[3205] Nevertheless, it highlights the evidence of several witnesses supporting the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the roadblock was established in [3201] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3210, 3219. See also ibid., paras. 3209, 3212.

[3202] Specifically, Ntahobali highlights that the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock occurred: (i) between 7 and 14 April 1994 according to Witness FA; (ii) on 21 April 1994 at 8.30 a.m. according to Witness QCB; (iii) about two weeks after the death of Habyarimana according to Witness SX; (iv) on 25 or 28 April 1994 according to Witness TB; (v) after the departure of UNAMIR soldiers according to Witness QI, which necessarily occurred after 25 April 1994 as Witness QI was in Matyazo until that date; (vi) after 26 April 1994 according to Witness TG, who later conceded he did not attend the establishment of the roadblock, while he stated the opposite in his statement; and (vii) after 12 April 1994, then between 19 and 21 April 1994, but then after 21 April 1994 according to Witness TQ. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 409. See also ibid., para. 380; Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 186, 187, 191; AT. 16 April 2015 p. 29. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider grave credibility or reliability issues related to the Prosecution witnesses it relied upon. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 411. However, Ntahobali fails to identify in this specific instance the credibility issues the Trial Chamber was required to address with respect to the Prosecution witnesses. The Appeals Chamber dismisses this unsubstantiated contention without further consideration.

late April 1994 and submits that the Trial Chamber exercised caution when assessing the evidence.[3206]

1402. Ntahobali replies that by providing only a vague conclusion that the roadblock was established in late April 1994, the Trial Chamber ignored that Witnesses FA, QCB, SX, and TB contradicted, rather than corroborated, each other, which would have led to the rejection of some of their evidence which supports his convictions.[3207] He submits that this error caused a miscarriage of justice and invalidates the verdict.[3208]

1403. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali's submissions seek to demonstrate error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Prosecution evidence concerning the timing of the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock by suggesting that witnesses offered precise, yet inconsistent and contradictory dates as to when this occurred and that the Trial Chamber erred in not addressing these differences. However, the Appeals Chamber observes that, while Witness QCB specifically testified that he saw the roadblock on 21 April 1994,[3209] Witnesses FA, SX, TB, and TG emphasised that they could only provide estimates as to when they first saw the roadblock or when it was established[3210] and that some of them refused to confirm specific dates that were suggested to them during their examinations.[3211] Contrary to Ntahobali's submissions,[3212] Witness TQ did not discuss when the roadblock was established but only testified to an incident occurring there after 21 April 1994,[3213] and Witness QI's testimony was ambiguous as to whether the roadblock was [3206] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 884-887. The Prosecution also highlights that witnesses frequently cannot recall exact dates and that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to determine the date by examining the evidence as a whole. See ibid., para. 889, referring to Ndindabahizi Appeal Judgement, para. 29.

[3207] Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 186-188, 191. Ntahobali posits, as an example, that if the Trial Chamber believed Witnesses SX and TB, whose evidence reflects that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established after 21 April 1994, it should have acquitted Ntahobali of the crimes alleged by Witness QCB, who testified that it was established on 21 April 1994 around 8.00 a.m. and that Ntahobali committed crimes there on that day. See ibid., para. 187.

[3211] Indeed, contrary to Ntahobali's submissions that Witness FA testified that the roadblock was established between 7 and 14 April 1994, the witness refused to confirm this aspect of her prior statement when questioned. See Witness FA, T. 1 July 2004 pp. 37, 38. Likewise, Witness TB did not testify that the roadblock was established on 28 April 1994 and refused to confirm that this was the precise date upon which an incident she observed at the roadblock occurred because she "did not count the days". See Witness TB, T. 5 February 2004 p. 13 (closed session).
[3212] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 409.
[3213] The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness TQ provided reasonable explanations for his prior references to the dates of 12 and 19 April 1994. See Witness TQ, T. 7 September 2004 pp. 10 (closed session), 61-63.

established before or after 25 April 1994.[3214] Furthermore, a review of the witnesses' testimonies reflects that the dates they provided related to several different events at the roadblock.[3215]

1404. Consequently, Ntahobali's submissions that the Prosecution witnesses' testimonies were contradictory and that the Trial Chamber was required to expressly resolve these inconsistencies are not persuasive. Bearing in mind that witnesses often may not recall exact date of events[3216] and that corroboration may exist even when some details differ between testimonies,[3217] the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on the evidence of Witnesses FA, QCB, SX, TB, TG, TQ, and QI to conclude that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994.

1405. With respect to Ntahobali's argument regarding the lack of caution exercised by the Trial Chamber in assessing his co-accused's evidence, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber was required, as a matter of law, to treat all the evidence presented by his co-accused with caution[3218] or that the evidence of the Defence witnesses the Trial Chamber relied upon to establish that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994 warranted a cautious assessment.[3219] Ntahobali does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of their evidence, and the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's argument without further consideration.

(b) Failure to Consider Defence Evidence

1406. Ntahobali submits that, in its deliberations concerning the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Trial Chamber failed to discuss the testimonies of 13 Defence witnesses – Witnesses WCMD, WQMJP, WCKJ, WCMNA, WCNJ, WBTT, CEM, WZNA, WKNKI, WFGS, [3218] Ntahobali again simply refers to a paragraph in the Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, which concerns the treatment of accomplice witness evidence. However, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that any witness he contends the Trial Chamber failed to treat with caution was an accomplice witness whose evidence required a cautious assessment. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 412, referring to Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, para. 46.

[3219] The Appeals Chamber observes that the paragraphs of the Trial Judgement to which Ntahobali refers in support of his claim that caution was exercised as regards other crimes scenes: (i) do not concern the witnesses the Trial Chamber relied upon in relation to the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock; or (ii) refer to the personal or professional ties of Kanyabashi Witnesses D-13-D, D-2-5-I, and D-2-YYYY with Kanyabashi and the caution to be exercised as a result in assessing their evidence exculpating Kanyabashi. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 412, fn. 646, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 366, 2008, 3216, 3661, 3793, 3810.

WKNNCI, NMBMP, and Béatrice Munyenyezi – who testified that the roadblock was set up in late May or early June 1994.[3220] Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber ignored the evidence of four of these 13 witnesses, namely Witnesses WCMD, WQMJP, WFGS, and WKNNCI, to which there is no reference anywhere in the Trial Judgement.[3221] In his view, fair consideration of this evidence would have necessarily raised reasonable doubt that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994.[3222]

1407. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably excluded the Defence evidence cited, which failed to raise a reasonable doubt as to the date of establishment of the roadblock.[3223]

1408. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly referred to the evidence of Defence witnesses as well as the accounts of Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko, as contradicting other evidence that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994.[3224] Contrary to Ntahobali's claim that the Trial Chamber did not discuss their evidence, the Trial Chamber explicitly rejected the testimonies of Witnesses WCKJ and WCNJ that there was no roadblock in this area at the time.[3225] While the Trial Chamber did not expressly refer to the evidence of Witnesses WCMD, WQMJP, WCMNA, WBTT, CEM, WZNA, WKNKI, WFGS, WKNNCI, NMBMP, and Munyenyezi in its deliberations on the date of the establishment of the roadblock, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber mentioned the evidence of Witnesses WCMNA and WBTT concerning the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock elsewhere in its deliberations.[3226] In addition, the Trial Chamber referred to the relevant parts of the testimonies of Witnesses CEM, WZNA, and WKNKI concerning the mounting of the roadblock in the summary of the evidence concerning the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[3227] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber considered and assessed the evidence of Witnesses WCMNA, WBTT, CEM, WZNA, and WKNKI and rejects Ntahobali's assertion.

1409. The Trial Chamber did not mention the relevant evidence of Witnesses NMBMP and Munyenyezi in relation to the mounting of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock when summarising their testimonies even though both witnesses testified that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock did not exist at the end of April 1994.[3228] However, given the fact that Witnesses NMBMP and Munyenyezi were mentioned in the Trial Judgement's section concerning the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock,[3229] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber failed to consider their evidence.

1410. With regard to Witness WQMJP's evidence, the Appeals Chamber notes that, while the Trial Judgement does not reflect express consideration of the relevant aspects of the witness's testimony concerning the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber did not disregard his testimony, as it expressly referred to and assessed it with respect to another event in the Trial Judgement.[3230] The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali is correct in asserting that the Trial Judgement does not refer to the evidence of Witnesses WFGS,[3231] WKNNCI, and WCMD. Having reviewed their evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witnesses WCMD, WQMJP, WFGS, and WKNNCI testified that there was no roadblock established in front of Hotel Ihuliro in April 1994 or during the first two weeks of May 1994.[3232] The Appeals Chamber notes that this evidence is repetitive of the Defence evidence expressly considered by the Trial Chamber that no "roadblock" existed near Hotel Ihuliro in April 1994 and that it does not contain any fundamental features that would provide additional probative weight to this account.[3233] The Appeals Chamber recalls that if a trial chamber did not refer to the evidence given by a witness, it is to be presumed that the trial chamber assessed and weighed the evidence, but found that the evidence did not prevent it from arriving at its findings.[3234] In the present instance, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber disregarded the evidence of Witnesses WCMD, WQMJP ,WFGS, and WKNNCI but considers that, given its nature, the Trial Chamber found that this evidence did not prevent it from reaching the conclusion it reached. While it would have been more appropriate for the Trial Chamber to expressly discuss the relevant evidence of these witnesses,[3235] the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in not doing so.

1411. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions concerning the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to consider Defence evidence that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established after late April 1994.

(c) Evidence on UNAMIR's Departure

1412. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence of Witnesses WBTT, WBUC, NMBMP, Munyenyezi, Denise Ntahobali, and Clarisse Ntahobali as well as Nyiramasuhuko and his, taken together with Witness QI's evidence, could support the conclusion that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994 after the departure of UNAMIR soldiers from Hotel Ihuliro.[3236] He emphasises that, although Witness QI testified that the roadblock was established after UNAMIR's departure, the witness did not specify how long after.[3237] In any event, Ntahobali submits that these Defence witnesses as well as Nyiramasuhuko and he testified that the roadblock was established at the end of May or in early June 1994.[3238]

1413. The Prosecution responds that Witnesses WBUC, NMBMP, Munyenyezi, Denise Ntahobali, Clarisse Ntahobali, and Ntahobali testified that the UNAMIR soldiers left Hotel Ihuliro by the end of April 1994, and that Witness QI testified that after the soldiers left, a roadblock was set up.[3239]

1414. Ntahobali replies that the Trial Chamber ignored that Witnesses QI and FA provided contradictory accounts as to whether the UNAMIR soldiers had left prior to or after the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[3240]

1415. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's finding that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established after the departure of UNAMIR soldiers from Hotel Ihuliro took into account the evidence of Ntahobali and several Defence witnesses, whose evidence reflects that these soldiers left Butare prior to 21 April 1994.[3241] While Witness QI did not expressly testify as to how long after their departure the roadblock was mounted, a reasonable trier of fact could have interpreted the witness's testimony as indicative that the timing of the establishment of the roadblock was tied to the soldiers' departure.[3242]

1416. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered that Witnesses WBUC, Denise Ntahobali, Clarisse Ntahobali, and Ntahobali testified that the roadblock was not established in late April 1994.[3243] Bearing in mind that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony,[3244] the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on the testimonies of Defence witnesses to establish that UNAMIR soldiers left Hotel Ihuliro in late April 1994 – an uncontested fact – but nonetheless reject their evidence concerning the highly contested fact of when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established given the Trial Chamber's doubts about their credibility and the considerable contradictory evidence.[3245]

1417. As for Ntahobali's contention that the evidence of Witnesses QI and FA was inconsistent as to whether UNAMIR soldiers were present when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness FA, unlike Witness QI, testified that the soldiers were present when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was set up.[3246] Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber retained the prerogative to rely on the testimonies of Witnesses QI, WBUC, NMBMP, Munyenyezi, Denise Ntahobali, and Clarisse Ntahobali as well as Ntahobali, who all provided evidence that no UNAMIR soldiers were present at Hotel Ihuliro when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established, and that the Trial Chamber was not required to explicitly address the aspect of Witness FA's evidence in conflict with this when doing so.

1418. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's submissions regarding the assessment of the evidence on the UNAMIR's departure.

(d) Defence Evidence and Reversal of Burden of Proof

1419. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion when rejecting the totality of the Defence evidence contradicting the Prosecution evidence.[3247] He contends that, while the Trial Chamber was entitled to treat five Defence witnesses with caution because of their ties with the Accused, this was not the case for the remaining 20 witnesses who testified that no roadblock had been established before late May or early June 1994.[3248] In light of the abundant Defence evidence reflecting that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was not established prior to the end of May or early June 1994, Ntahobali argues that any reasonable trier of fact would have concluded that reasonable doubt existed as to the date of the establishment of the roadblock in April 1994.[3249] He submits that the Trial Chamber misapplied the burden of proof in preferring the Prosecution evidence to the Defence evidence and requests that he be acquitted of all crimes committed at the roadblock prior to the end of May or the beginning of June 1994.[3250]

1420. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably excluded the Defence evidence relied upon by Ntahobali because some of the witnesses were Ntahobali's relatives.[3251]

1421. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber provided reasons as to why it did not rely on a number of Defence witnesses,[3252] including that some of those mentioned by Ntahobali were his relatives.[3253] The Appeals Chamber also observes that some of the witnesses were his childhood friends.[3254] As such, a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that these witnesses might have had an incentive to minimise Ntahobali's responsibility for crimes committed at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and assess their evidence with caution.[3255] In addition, the Trial Chamber addressed the fact that Witnesses WCNJ's and WCKJ's evidence that they had never seen a roadblock in the area could not raise a reasonable doubt as to whether such roadblock existed.[3256] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the evidence of these two witnesses did not raise doubt in light of consistent Prosecution evidence, supported by a number of Defence witnesses, reflecting the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994.

1422. Furthermore, a review of the evidence of Witnesses WBTT and WCUJM reveals that their testimonies are of limited probative value as to whether the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994. The Appeals Chamber notes that as Witness WBTT left Butare on 20 April 1994, she could not testify as to the existence of a roadblock in late April 1994.[3257] Likewise, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness WCUJM testified to having made three trips to Butare Town, the first on 7 April 1994, the second one week after, and the third between May and June 1994. While the witness testified to having seen a roadblock near Hotel Ihuliro during his third trip, his evidence reflects that he did not pass by the road in late April 1994.[3258] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that this evidence did not raise a reasonable doubt as it is not incompatible with the finding that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994.

1423. Having reviewed Witness H1B6's testimony, the Appeals Chamber is also of the view that a reasonable trier of fact could have decided not to credit this witness in light of the likelihood that he did not use the road between Hotel Ihuliro and the EER during the relevant time period and that, as a result, he would have been unable to provide direct evidence as to the date when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established.[3259] With respect to Witness WMKL, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber concluded elsewhere in the Trial Judgement that the witness's account concerning the security of persons seeking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office was not plausible and did not rely on his account about Ruvurajabo's death.[3260] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Prosecution and Defence evidence reflecting the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994 notwithstanding the evidence of Witnesses H1B6 and WMKL to the contrary. Recalling that a trial chamber does not need to set out in detail why it accepted or rejected a particular testimony,[3261] the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not fail to provide a reasoned opinion in not articulating every step of its reasoning for not relying on Witnesses WBTT, WCUJM, H1B6, and WMKL.

1424. The Appeals Chamber further finds that, while Witnesses WBNC, WUNBJ, WCNMC, WBUC, WCMNA, CEM, WZNA, WKNKI, WFGS, WKNNCI, WCMD, and WQMJP provided evidence contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding,[3262] a reasonable trier of fact could have nevertheless relied on the direct and consistent evidence of Witnesses FA, QCB, SX, TB, TG, TQ, Karemano, Bararwandika, D-2-Y-Y-Y, D-2-13-D, D-2-5-I, and D-13-D in finding that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established towards the end of April 1994.[3263] Of particular significance, the Appeals Chamber has affirmed the Trial Chamber's assessment of Prosecution evidence that implicates Ntahobali in criminal conduct at this roadblock in late April 1994.[3264] While it would have been more appropriate for the Trial Chamber to expressly refer to all of the relevant evidence when reaching its conclusion on whether Ntahobali's and Nyiramasuhuko's evidence raised a reasonable doubt as to the allegation that the roadblock was in existence by the end of April 1994,[3265] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion, as it was presented with two competing accounts, to grant more probative weight to one account and to prefer it over the other.

1425. With regard to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber misapplied the burden of proof, the Appeals Chamber first recalls that the Prosecution bears the burden of establishing facts material to the guilt of an accused beyond reasonable doubt, and suggesting that the Defence should present evidence proving the contrary would be an impermissible shift of such burden.[3266] In this case, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber took the view that the Defence evidence concerning the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in May or June 1994 did not raise a reasonable doubt as to the existence of this roadblock by the end of April 1994.[3267] The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's preference for the account presented by the Prosecution and supported by co-accused evidence. In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Judgement does not reflect that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof but that the Prosecution demonstrated beyond a reasonable doubt that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994 notwithstanding other evidence to the contrary. The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber properly applied the burden of proof and the presumption of innocence.

1426. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's arguments regarding the weight granted to the exculpatory evidence and the application of the burden of proof.

(e) Conclusion

1427. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded based on the totality of the evidence before it that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994.

3. Killing of Léopold Ruvurajabo

1428. The Trial Chamber relied exclusively on the evidence of Witness QCB in finding that Ntahobali ordered the killing of Ruvurajabo, a Tutsi, at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994.[3268]

1429. Ntahobali submits that, in assessing the relevant evidence, the Trial Chamber: (i) failed to exercise sufficient caution in assessing Witness QCB's evidence; (ii) erred in assessing Witness QCB's prior inconsistent statement; (iii) erred in assessing Witness QCB's identification evidence; (iv) failed to assess evidence; and (v) made contradictory findings. Ntahobali further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killing of Ruvurajabo. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1430. As noted previously, on 14 April 2015, the Appeals Chamber admitted as additional evidence on appeal a confidential statement given by Witness QCB on 27 May 2004 and a second confidential statement that he gave on 2 June 2004 to Canadian investigators during investigations in Canadian criminal proceedings for the purpose of assessing limited aspects of these materials as they concerned Witness QCB's testimony.[3269] In accordance with the relevant standard, if the Appeals Chamber determines that a reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of the trial record alone, the Appeals Chamber will then determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the finding of guilt.[3270]

(a) Assessment of Evidence

(i) Insufficient Caution

1431. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to the uncorroborated evidence of Witness QCB, who was detained in Rwanda and awaiting sentencing at the time of his testimony.[3271] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that, because the witness had no role in the killing of Ruvurajabo, he did not have an interest in inculpating Ntahobali in this incident.[3272] Ntahobali argues that this conclusion is in direct contradiction with the Trial Chamber's position elsewhere in the Trial Judgement that Witness QCB, who had no role in the IRST killings, had an incentive to implicate Ntahobali with respect to those killings in order to avoid a severe sentence.[3273] He also contends that this position contradicts the Trial Chamber's reasoning concerning Prosecution Witness FAC.[3274] He argues that no reasonable trier of fact could have made such diametrically opposed conclusions.[3275]

[3268] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3136-3140. See also ibid., paras. 2957-2959.

1432. Moreover, Ntahobali highlights that the Trial Chamber rejected Witness QCB's evidence concerning crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office simply because he was found insufficiently reliable given his status as a detainee and because his evidence was uncorroborated.[3276] He submits that the same conclusion should have been reached with respect to Witness QCB's evidence concerning Ruvurajabo's killing.[3277] Ntahobali argues that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied upon the uncorroborated evidence of Witness QCB.[3278]

1433. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber lacked caution in assessing Witness QCB's evidence regarding the killing of Ruvurajabo.[3279] It submits that the Trial Chamber exercised the same caution when evaluating Witness QCB's testimony with respect to the killing of Ruvurajabo as it did when assessing his testimony concerning the killings near the IRST.[3280] The Prosecution also rejects Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to apply caution to Witness QCB's evidence concerning the killing of Ruvurajabo simply because the Trial Chamber required corroboration of Witness QCB's evidence in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office and exercised its discretion not to rely on it in that instance.[3281]

1434. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when considering Witness QCB's evidence in relation to the IRST killings, the Trial Chamber noted that, at the time of his testimony, Witness QCB had confessed to participating in unrelated killings, was detained in Rwanda, and was awaiting sentencing.[3282] The Trial Chamber was of the view that Witness QCB's evidence had to be approached with appropriate caution as he may have had an incentive to implicate Ntahobali in order to avoid a severe sentence.[3283] In assessing Witness QCB's evidence concerning Ruvurajabo's killing, the Trial Chamber recalled that, at the time of his testimony, Witness QCB was a detained witness and that his testimony must be treated with appropriate caution.[3284] The Trial Chamber concluded, however, that because Witness QCB "played no role in the present incident [and] his evidence [was] that of an eyewitness", it did not consider him to have "any personal interest in lying about the facts or inculpating Ntahobali."[3285]

1435. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber reached conflicting conclusions as to whether Witness QCB had an interest in implicating Ntahobali. Notwithstanding these contradictions, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's analysis of Witness QCB's evidence in either instance reflects insufficient caution given the circumstances surrounding his testimony. As discussed in detail elsewhere in this Judgement, the Trial Chamber exercised sufficient caution in light of Witness QCB's circumstances at the time of his testimony when assessing his evidence about the IRST killings.[3286] The Trial Chamber's analysis of Witness QCB's evidence concerning the killing of Ruvurajabo also reflects that it took into account various factors relevant to a cautious assessment of his credibility. The Trial Chamber recalled that Witness QCB was a detained witness and that it was required to treat his evidence with appropriate caution.[3287] It considered discrepancies within Witness QCB's testimony[3288] and inconsistencies with his prior statement to Tribunal investigators.[3289] In this context, the Trial Chamber concluded that "Witness QCB's testimony was detailed" and that he was "credible with respect to this incident."[3290] Bearing in mind that a trial chamber enjoys broad discretion in assessing the credibility of witnesses and in determining the weight to be accorded to each testimony,[3291] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber, notwithstanding its statement that Witness QCB did not have an incentive to lie or implicate Ntahobali, assessed Witness QCB's evidence with sufficient caution.

1436. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber took inconsistent approaches with respect to the assessment of Witnesses QCB and FAC lacks merit. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber concluded that Witness FAC may have had an incentive to implicate Kanyabashi in certain crimes in order to exonerate himself.[3292] In making this finding, the Trial Chamber not only considered that Witness FAC was "a detained accomplice witness" at the time of his testimony but also specific circumstances pointing to his "willingness to tailor his evidence to serve his interests", including his own acknowledgement that he confessed to certain crimes expecting consideration in return.[3293] Ntahobali neither challenges this finding nor suggests that similar factors existed in relation to Witness QCB.

1437. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting Witness QCB's uncorroborated evidence concerning an event at the prefectoral office in late April 1994 while accepting his uncorroborated testimony about killings at the IRST and the killing of Ruvurajabo.[3294] Contrary to what Ntahobali suggests, the Trial Chamber's refusal to rely on Witness QCB's evidence concerning the event at the prefectoral office does not reflect a finding that the witness was not credible or reliable in general and was not an impediment to the Trial Chamber's reliance on his testimony concerning Ruvurajabo's killing.[3295]

1438. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution when assessing Witness QCB's testimony concerning the killing of Ruvurajabo.

(ii) Prior Inconsistent Statement

1439. In summarising Witness QCB's evidence in relation to the killing of Ruvurajabo, the Trial Chamber understood the witness to have testified in cross-examination that "he met Ruvurajabo at the roadblock".[3296] The Trial Chamber also noted that this was contradicted by the witness's prior statement to Tribunal investigators, which it summarised as stating that "[Witness QCB] had left his home together with Ruvurajabo."[3297] When assessing Witness QCB's evidence, the Trial Chamber [3294] See supra, paras. 1344, 1345.

[3295] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony. See, e.g., Nizeyimana Appeal Judgement, para. 108; Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 243; Ntawukulilyayo Appeal Judgement, para. 155; Munyakazi Appeal Judgement, para. 103.

concluded that the variance between Witness QCB's Statement and his testimony was minor and did not relate to a material fact.[3298]

1440. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred by unreasonably concluding that the inconsistency between Witness QCB's Statement and his testimony concerning the place he met Ruvurajabo was minor or inconsequential.[3299] Ntahobali submits that the witness's explanation for the contradiction was incoherent and vague and that, during his re-examination, the witness confirmed the accuracy of his prior statement, thereby contradicting himself again.[3300] According to Ntahobali, this contradiction was relevant to Witness QCB's entire account of Ruvurajabo's murder and, because the witness's testimony was uncorroborated, the Trial Chamber was required to assess that witness's evidence cautiously.[3301]

1441. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the contradictions in Witness QCB's evidence were minor.[3302]

1442. Having reviewed the relevant transcripts, including the portions referred to by the Trial Chamber and Ntahobali, as well as Witness QCB's Statement,[3303] the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the variance was minor. Notably, Witness QCB repeatedly confirmed that he met Ruvurajabo at the roadblock near President Sindikubwabo's home and his testimony on this point is consistent in all material respects.[3304] To the extent his testimony differed from his prior statement, which reflects that the witness left Nkubi Sector with Ruvurajabo,[3305] any incoherence in Witness QCB's explanation stemmed from an absence of questioning.[3306]

1443. Furthermore, while Witness QCB confirmed the content of his prior statement during his re-examination,[3307] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ntahobali's contention that this reflects a further material discrepancy and that the Trial Chamber did not exercise the necessary caution when assessing it. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the variance between Witness QCB's Statement and his testimony as to the exact location where he met Ruvurajabo was minor.[3308]

1444. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QCB's evidence in light of his prior statement.

(iii) Identification Evidence

1445. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness QCB knew Ntahobali "a long time before the alleged crimes occurred", referring to his challenges raised in relation to Witness QCB's evidence about the IRST killings.[3309] Ntahobali repeats that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Witness QCB's identification evidence credible.[3310]

1446. In response, the Prosecution refers to its arguments made in relation to the IRST killings that the Trial Chamber acted within its discretion in accepting Witness QCB's identification evidence.[3311]

1447. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber concluded that since "Witness QCB already knew Ntahobali, a long time before the alleged crimes occurred", his identification of Ntahobali as the person that he saw at the roadblock where Ruvurajabo was killed was reliable.[3312] The Appeals Chamber notes that this conclusion was based on the evidence of Witness QCB's prior knowledge of Ntahobali, the adequacy of which had been evaluated by the Trial Chamber elsewhere in the Trial Judgement.[3313] The Appeals Chamber recalls that Ntahobali's challenges of Witness QCB's identification evidence, including the basis for his prior knowledge, have already been addressed and dismissed in a prior section of this Judgement.[3314]

1448. Ntahobali's present submissions do not identify a new error in support of his position that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QCB's identification evidence and the Appeals Chamber therefore rejects them.

(iv) Failure to Consider Evidence

1449. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber ignored exculpatory evidence from Defence Witness WMKL that Ruvurajabo was alive until mid-May 1994 and that he was killed later that month, thereby undermining Witness QCB's evidence that Ruvurajabo was killed on 21 April 1994.[3315] Ntahobali emphasises that the Trial Chamber accepted other aspects of Witness WMKL's evidence and that it failed to provide a reasoned opinion by not assessing Witness WMKL's testimony that was in direct contradiction with Witness QCB's evidence.[3316] In his view, no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QCB's evidence concerning Ruvurajabo's murder in light of Witness WMKL's testimony to the contrary.[3317]

1450. The Prosecution responds that Witness WMKL did not testify that Ruvurajabo was still alive in May 1994 but that he only thought he saw Ruvurajabo that month.[3318] It further contends that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to accept some but not all of Witness WMKL's evidence and that it was not obliged to discuss his testimony when considering Ruvurajabo's killing.[3319]

1451. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness WMKL testified that he saw Ruvurajabo around what he "believe[d]" was mid-May 1994.[3320] He further testified that he learned of Ruvurajabo's death towards the end of May, when he overheard someone boasting about having killed him.[3321] The Trial Judgement does not reflect express consideration of these aspects of Witness WMKL's testimony. However, the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber did not ignore Witness WMKL's testimony, as it expressly assessed his evidence with respect to several other events in the Trial Judgement.[3322]

1452. The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness WMKL's testimony only approximated that mid-May 1994 was the last time the witness saw Ruvurajabo.[3323] Notably, the Trial Chamber elsewhere rejected Witness WMKL's evidence as it related to the timing of when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established, an event that occurred around the time of Ruvurajabo's killing.[3324] The Appeals Chamber further observes that Witness WMKL's evidence about Ruvurajabo's killing was indirect.[3325] In light of the fact that Witness WMKL could only estimate when he last saw Ruvurajabo, the Trial Chamber's doubts about Witness WMKL's evidence as it related to his ability to recall the timing of another event, and the limited probative value of Witness WMKL's testimony when compared to Witness QCB's direct evidence of Ruvurajabo's killing, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have preferred Witness QCB's evidence over Witness WMKL's and not expressly discuss this aspect of Witness WMKL's testimony in the Trial Judgement.[3326]

1453. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber's approval of an isolated aspect of Witness WMKL's testimony reflected an overall endorsement of this witness's evidence.[3327] To the contrary, the Trial Chamber found the witness's testimony concerning the timing of the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock unpersuasive,[3328] and also concluded that Witness WMKL's account concerning the security of persons seeking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office was not plausible.[3329] Bearing in mind that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony,[3330] the Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Ntahobali's suggestion that the Trial Chamber's acceptance of an isolated aspect of Witness WMKL's testimony rendered its decision to rely on Witness QCB's account of Ruvurajabo's death unreasonable.

1454. Accordingly, Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness WMKL's evidence regarding Ruvurajabo and that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QCB's evidence regarding the killing of Ruvurajabo in light of the testimony of Witness WMKL.

(v) Contradictory Findings

1455. Ntahobali highlights that the Trial Chamber, relying in part on the testimony of Witness QI, found that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, where Ruvurajabo was killed, was established "during the last days of April 1994."[3331] He contends that this finding is inconsistent with Witness QCB's [3326] With respect to Ntahobali's submission that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion when not discussing Witness WMKL's evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that nowhere in his closing submissions did Ntahobali argue the clear relevance and importance of it to the killing of Ruvurajabo. See Ntahobali Closing Brief, paras. 6, 139, 142, 159, 276, 423 and Appendix 1, para. 6; Ntahobali Closing Arguments, T. 23 April 2009 pp. 7, 8. See also T. 23 April 2009 pp. 4, 5, 23, 24, 34-36 (generally discussing Witness QCB's evidence and credibility).

[3327] The Trial Chamber stated that it "believe[d] the testimonies of Witnesses QY and WMKL to the extent that what was made public to the eyes of the international community was that the refugees would be transferred [to Rango Forest] for their own safety", even though it was of the view that "this might have been part of the strategy to improve the international community's perception of the authorities in Rwanda and hide their true intentions, which were to get rid of the Tutsi refugees." See Trial Judgement, para. 5101. See also ibid., paras. 5099, 5100.

[3331] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 380 (emphasis omitted), referring to Trial Judgement, para. 3112. Ntahobali develops this argument in the context of whether the Rugira roadblock existed as early as 21 April 1994. However, since evidence that Ruvurajabo was killed at that roadblock on 21 April 1994, as Witness QI testified that the roadblock had not been established until after the departure of UNAMIR soldiers, which necessarily occurred after 25 April 1994 as Witness QI was in Matyazo until that date.[3332] According to Ntahobali, this contradiction affected Witness QCB's credibility and should have been addressed by the Trial Chamber.[3333]

1456. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in accepting Witness QCB's evidence concerning when the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established.[3334]

1457. The Appeals Chamber has already addressed and rejected Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's finding, based in part on Witnesses QCB's and QI's testimonies,[3335] that the roadblock was established in late April 1994.[3336]

1458. Ntahobali suggests that the Trial Judgement elsewhere reflects that Witness QI was at Matyazo Clinic until 25 April 1994 and that his evidence regarding the departure of the UNAMIR soldiers reflects that the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock occurred after that date.[3337] Ntahobali's argument relies on the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness QI's testimony placed the attack at Matyazo Clinic, during which he was present, "around 25 April 1994."[3338] Having reviewed the relevant finding and evidence, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that Witness QI's evidence is equivocal as to the timing of his observations of the UNAMIR soldiers and the establishment of the roadblock following their departure.[3339] In particular, Witness QI merely testified that there were UNAMIR soldiers "at Ntahobali's house during the war" and that "after UNAMIR's departure" a roadblock was set up.[3340] The witness confirmed that he made these observations from his employer's house, located nearby, without specifying whether the observations were made before or after his temporary absence from this home, during which he observed that attack at Matyazo Clinic.[3341] Ntahobali's interpretation of the evidence is not persuasive.

Ntahobali's citations are to evidence and findings by the Trial Chamber that relate to the existence of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock where Ruvurajabo was found to have been killed, the Appeals Chamber assesses these arguments here.

1459. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber's finding that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established "in late April 1994"[3342] and after the departure of the UNAMIR soldiers,[3343] took into account the evidence of Ntahobali and several Defence witnesses, who testified that the UNAMIR soldiers left Butare prior to 21 April 1994.[3344] Ntahobali therefore fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's findings that the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established in late April 1994, relying in part on the testimony of Witness QI, is inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QCB's evidence that Ruvurajabo was killed at that roadblock on 21 April 1994.

1460. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber made contradictory findings regarding the date on which the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was established.

(vi) Additional Evidence Admitted on Appeal

1461. On the basis of the trial record alone, the Appeals Chamber has found that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence concerning the killing of Ruvurajabo. In accordance with the relevant standard, the Appeals Chamber will now determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the finding of guilt.

1462. The Appeals Chamber finds Witness QCB's testimony pertaining to the killing of Ruvurajabo detailed and coherent.[3345] His explanations given in cross-examination as they concern alleged inconsistencies about this event are clear and convincing.[3346] His evidence is first-hand[3347] and his identification of Ntahobali is compelling.[3348]

1463. As noted in Section V.F.1(d) above, the Appeals Chamber admitted as additional evidence on appeal Witness QCB's RCMP Statements which reveal that the witness provided contradictory statements to the RCMP as to whether he observed first-hand or learned from another source about abductions that occurred during the genocide in which Ntahobali was implicated as a co-perpetrator. concerning the killings at the IRST, the Appeals Chamber finds that the additional evidence admitted on appeal does not undermine the credibility of Witness QCB.[3349] The Appeals Chamber makes this determination in light of the evidence in the trial record, including potentially conflicting evidence as to Ntahobali's whereabouts on the morning of 21 April 1994, evidence about the date of establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, Witness WMKL's evidence about when Ruvurujabo was killed as well as evidence related to the alleged fabrication of evidence by Witness QCB.[3350]

1464. In light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, and considering its analysis of Ntahobali's responsibility conducted below, the Appeals Chamber is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt of Ntahobali's guilt relating to the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.

(vii) Conclusion

1465. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's submissions as they relate to the assessment of the evidence pertaining to the killing of Ruvurajabo.

(b) Superior Responsibility

1466. The Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the conduct of the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo and considered this as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[3351] In particular, it recalled that Ntahobali instructed Interahamwe to kill Ruvurajabo and that they followed his order.[3352] On this basis, the Trial Chamber found as the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali exercised effective control over these Interahamwe and that he "was in a superior-subordinate relationship to them, on an ad hoc or temporary basis, when they killed Ruvurajabo."[3353]

1467. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo solely on the evidence that they followed Ntahobali's alleged order to kill him.[3354] He points to case law reflecting that, while a superior's ability to issue orders may be indicative of effective control, it does not automatically establish it.[3355]

1468. In addition, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness QCB's evidence that the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo were from Kigali and under Robert Kajuga's ("Kajuga") control, or other evidence that Kajuga or Nteziryayo exercised effective control over them.[3356] In Ntahobali's view, the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion by not addressing this evidence and no reasonable trier of fact could have found beyond reasonable doubt that Ntahobali had effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo.[3357]

1469. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Ntahobali exercised effective control over the Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock based on the evidence that the Interahamwe complied with Ntahobali's instructions to kill Ruvurajabo as well as other evidence of Ntahobali's role at that roadblock,[3358] which includes Ntahobali ordering Interahamwe to commit other crimes.[3359] The Prosecution contends that the Trial Chamber was not required to ascertain whether other individuals had similar control over the group in question and that, in any event, Ntahobali has not demonstrated that Kajuga or Nteziryayo had effective control over the Interahamwe to the extent that it negated Ntahobali's effective control.[3360] It notes that, although Witness QCB referred to the group of Interahamwe as Kajuga's Interahamwe, the witness maintained that Ntahobali was the head of the group.[3361]

1470. Ntahobali replies that, contrary to the Prosecution's contention, the Trial Chamber did not rely on evidence of his general role at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, such as alleged orders to commit other crimes there, when finding that he exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo.[3362] He points out that the only crime the Trial Chamber found that he had ordered at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was Ruvurajabo's murder and that the Trial Chamber only concluded that he manned the roadblock, not that he controlled it.[3363] Ntahobali argues that the evidence referred to by the Prosecution as reflecting Ntahobali's control over Interahamwe does not necessarily concern those who killed Ruvurajabo or events at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[3364] Finally, Ntahobali submits that the Prosecution ignores that Witness QCB's evidence suggests that Kajuga controlled the Interahamwe as well as his testimony that the Interahamwe at the roadblock could have been soldiers.[3365]

1471. The Appeals Chamber first turns to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo solely on the basis of the evidence that they followed his alleged order. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "[i]ndicators of effective control are 'more a matter of evidence than of substantive law, and those indicators are limited to showing that the accused had the power to prevent [or] punish'."[3366] A superior's ability to issue binding orders that are complied with by subordinates is one of the indicators of effective control generally relied upon in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[3367]

1472. The Trial Judgement reflects that, in finding that Ntahobali had effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo, the Trial Chamber expressly relied on Ntahobali's issuance of an instruction to the Interahamwe to kill Ruvurajabo with which they complied.[3368] In summarising Witness QCB's evidence concerning Ruvurajabo's killing, the Trial Chamber noted that Interahamwe sought instructions from Ntahobali in relation to Ruvurajabo upon his refusal to produce identification at the roadblock.[3369] Given the Trial Chamber's acceptance of Witness QCB's evidence as it relates to this event, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the Trial Chamber relied solely upon Ntahobali ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo as the indicator of his effective control over the Interahamwe that killed Ruvurajabo, but also on Witness QCB's evidence that the Interahamwe sought instructions from him.

1473. The Appeals Chamber also considers that Ntahobali's submissions fail to appreciate the broader context of the Trial Chamber's findings concerning his role at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock. In particular, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber also considered extensive evidence pointing to Ntahobali's leadership position and authoritative conduct at that roadblock.[3370] This evidence led the Trial Chamber to conclude that "Ntahobali manned [Hotel Ihuliro roadblock] and utilised [it] with the assistance of soldiers and other unknown persons to abduct and kill members of the Tutsi population."[3371] While Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber did not find that he ordered the commission of other crimes at the roadblock or that he "controlled" it, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the evidence accepted by the Trial Chamber concerning Ntahobali's general role at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock reasonably supports the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo when he issued that order.

1474. The Appeals Chamber next turns to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred by not considering evidence from Witness QCB and other witnesses that the Interahamwe in question were from Kigali and under the control of Kajuga or Nteziryayo, and did not provide a reasoned opinion when omitting to address this evidence. The Appeals Chamber recalls that effective control need not be exclusive and can be exercised by more than one superior, whose criminal responsibility is not excluded by coexisting responsibility of others.[3372] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QCB testified that Ruvurajabo was apprehended and attacked by "Interahamwes [sic] from Kajuga […] it is the Robert Kajuga's Interahamwe",[3373] an assertion that is not reflected in the Trial Chamber's summary of his evidence. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber considers that Witness QCB's designation of "Kajuga's Interahamwe" did not require express analysis, as it was generic and was not inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali exercised effective control over these Interahamwe when he ordered them to kill Ruvurajabo. Notably, there is no evidence suggesting that the Interahamwe responsible for Ruvurajabo's murder sought confirmation of Ntahobali's order to kill Ruvurajabo from any other alleged superior, including Kajuga.[3374]

1475. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's references to other evidence that Interahamwe led by Kajuga and Nteziryayo committed crimes fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber was required to expressly assess this evidence in evaluating Ntahobali's superior responsibility for Ruvurajabo's killing.[3375] Notably, the Trial Chamber considered some of the evidence now highlighted by Ntahobali and the leadership roles Kajuga and Nteziryayo held with respect to Interahamwe elsewhere in the Trial Judgement.[3376] While the Trial Judgement does not reflect express consideration of the part of Witness FAM's testimony invoked by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber fails to see the material relevance of evidence that Interahamwe led by Kajuga and Nteziryayo committed crimes during different time periods in other locations.[3377] Ntahobali does not show that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion in this regard. Similarly, he does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding as the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo.[3378] 1476. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Ntahobali bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the conduct of the Interahamwe who killed Ruvurajabo.

[3374] Cf. Halilović Appeal Judgement, para. 206. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QCB testified that, at another roadblock, Interahamwe who came from Kigali were, nonetheless, "headed by" Ntahobali. Witness QCB, T. 25 March 2002 p. 156. The Appeals Chamber observes that both Ntahobali and the Prosecution confuse this reference to Interahamwe at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock. However, read in the context of Witness QCB's entire testimony, this reference is to Interahamwe at another, nearby roadblock, which he described as roadblock number "five". The roadblock at which Ruvurajabo was killed was designated by Witness QCB as number "six". See Witness QCB, T. 20 March 2002 pp. 56-61, T. 25 March 2002 pp. 100, 112 (closed session).

(c) Conclusion

1477. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's finding that he was responsible for ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994 and that he also bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute.

4. Rape and Murder of a Tutsi Girl

1478. Based on the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali raped and murdered a Tutsi girl who arrived at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in a yellow Daihatsu around the end of April 1994.[3379]

1479. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence relating to this incident, contending that it failed to properly assess material inconsistencies within the prior statements and testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB, and that it erred in its assessment of their identification evidence. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

[3376] Specifically, when considering Nteziryayo's responsibility for the abductions and killings of Tutsis at Hotel Ibis committed by the Interahamwe between May and June 1994, the Trial Chamber referred to the excerpt of Witness QJ's testimony cited by Ntahobali, noting his testimony that "the Interahamwe were under the orders of their leaders, Robert Kajuga, who was their president, and Nteziryayo, who lived with [Kajuga at Hotel Ibis] and was deputy to Kajuga." See Trial Judgement, para. 3995, fn. 10878. See also ibid., paras. 3982-3985, 399, 3994, 3996, 3997. (a) Inconsistencies

1480. The Trial Chamber found that the testimony of Witness SX with regard to the rape and murder of a Tutsi girl at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was detailed and believable, and that it was corroborated by Witness TB's equally detailed testimony.[3380] It noted that both witnesses testified that the victim arrived in a yellow Daihatsu, that a certain Jean-Pierre was with Ntahobali at the time of the incident, that the car was stopped at the roadblock, and that the people inside the car were asked to show their identity cards.[3381] The Trial Chamber recalled that Witness TB testified to seeing Ntahobali dragging a girl with braids into the woods and to subsequently seeing her dead body with vaginal injuries in the woods, and that Witness SX observed the rape from a hiding place about 20 metres away from Ntahobali and the victim.[3382] In addition, it considered that the witnesses' descriptions regarding the subsequent burial of the body were consistent.[3383] The Trial Chamber further observed that Witnesses SX and TB placed the occurrence of the crime a few days after the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock was erected, and recalled its previous finding that the roadblock was mounted at the end of April 1994.[3384] The Trial Chamber concluded that both witnesses were credible with respect to this allegation and that it was established beyond reasonable doubt that Ntahobali raped and murdered the Tutsi girl who arrived at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in a yellow Daihatsu around the end of April 1994.[3385]

1481. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses SX and TB relating to the rape and murder of the Tutsi girl.[3386] In particular, he contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the accounts of Witnesses SX and TB conflicted in material respects.[3387] Specifically, he submits that: (i) Witness SX testified that the crime occurred on 21 April 1994 while Witness TB initially testified that it occurred on 25 April 1994 and stated that it happened on 28 April 1994 during cross-examination; (ii) Witness TB never mentioned any other crime at the roadblock that day, while Witness SX mentioned around 500 killings having occurred there; (iii) Witness SX indicated that the four other occupants of the Daihatsu were killed instantly whereas Witness TB testified that three of them were allowed to leave while another girl was also kept along with the Tutsi girl; (iv) Witness SX testified that the Tutsi girl was detained for two to three hours and forced to walk in a gutter before being taken to be raped, while Witness TB testified that she was immediately taken to be raped by soldiers and then by Ntahobali and never made any reference to an incident involving a gutter; and (v) Witness SX testified that Ntahobali had a hatchet, while Witness TB testified that Ntahobali only carried a pistol.[3388] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber disregarded numerous and "major" contradictions between Witnesses SX's and TB's respective testimonies and their prior statements to Tribunal investigators.[3389] Ntahobali submits that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on the evidence of Witnesses SX and TB or found that they corroborated each other in light of these contradictions and inconsistencies.[3390]

1482. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB were credible, consistent, and that they corroborated each other.[3391] It contends that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to evaluate any inconsistencies and that any inconsistencies were minor and did not undermine the credibility of the witnesses.[3392]

1483. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Judgement does not reflect express consideration of the purported inconsistencies raised by Ntahobali, many of which were covered during the examination of the witnesses[3393] and raised in Ntahobali's closing brief.[3394] However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is within the discretion of a trial chamber to evaluate inconsistencies in the evidence, to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible, and to accept or reject the fundamental features of the evidence,[3395] without explaining its [3388] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 423. See also AT. 16 April 2015 p. 31. Ntahobali also contends that Witness SX testified that he had arrived around 1.00 p.m. on the day the Tutsi girl was killed, while Witness TB testified to having seen Witness SX days before. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 423.

[3389] Specifically, Ntahobali argues that, in his prior statement, Witness SX: (i) never mentioned the residence of Mujeri, while he later testified that he witnessed the killings of nearly 500 persons and the beginning of the incident involving the Tutsi girl from Mujeri's home; (ii) indicated that Ntahobali had only a club whereas he later testified that Ntahobali was carrying a small axe, a knife, and a pistol; (iii) stated that he watched the rape and murder of the victim in the company of Witness TB, while subsequently testifying that Witness TB was not with him; and (iv) indicated that the victim was wearing a skirt, while his testimony reflected that she wore trousers. With regard to Witness TB, Ntahobali submits that her prior statements reflect that: (i) she witnessed the crime in the same building and in the company of Witness SX, while she later testified that it was only the same compound; (ii) four persons stopped with the victim were allowed to leave, while she testified that only three persons were allowed to leave and that another young woman was forced to stay with the victim; (iii) when Ntahobali took the victim, she was nude, having already been undressed by soldiers, whereas she later testified that the victim was wearing a shirt and trousers; and (iv) the soldiers took the victim towards the woods, while she testified that the victim was brought to a sorghum field. Ntahobali also notes that Witness TB's statement failed to mention the existence of a roadblock near Ntahobali's residence whereas she testified about one established about four days after 21 April 1994. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 423, 424, referring to Witness SX's Statement, Witness TB's Statement.
[3390] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 426. In particular, Ntahobali points out that no reasonable trier of fact would have disregarded Witness TB's incredible explanations as to the inconsistencies between her prior statement and her testimony at trial. See ibid., para. 425. See also AT. 16 April 2015 p. 31.

decision in every detail.[3396] Corroboration may exist even when some details differ between testimonies, provided that no credible testimony describes the facts in question in a way which is not compatible with the description given in another credible testimony.[3397]

1484. Having carefully reviewed the evidence of Witnesses SX and TB, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the fundamental features of their testimonies were compatible and compelling. As emphasised by the Trial Chamber,[3398] the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB are indeed materially consistent concerning the location of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock,[3399] the arrival of the victim at the roadblock in a yellow Daihatsu with other persons,[3400] the presence of Ntahobali, Jean-Pierre, Lambert, and Kazungu at the roadblock,[3401] the checking of identity cards at the roadblock,[3402] the rape and the murder of the victim by Ntahobali in the woods,[3403] the injuries suffered by the victim,[3404] and the involvement of Witness SX in her burial.[3405] In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that both witnesses confirmed seeing each other at the EER that specific day.[3406]

1485. The Appeals Chamber also finds that the purported inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB highlighted by Ntahobali are not material when viewed in context and in light of the fundamental consistency of their accounts and that it was therefore not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber not to discuss them expressly in the Trial Judgement.

1486. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber acted reasonably when finding that Witnesses SX and TB corroborated each other as to the timing of the crimes given that the witnesses themselves insisted that they only provided estimates.[3407] In this regard, the Appeals

Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber did not conclude that the crimes took place on a specific date but found that they occurred around the end of April 1994.[3408]

1487. With respect to whether other killings occurred at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock that day, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness SX observed the events from a different location than Witness TB, and that Witness SX's testimony reflects that he was not categorical as to the number of persons killed that day.[3409] The Appeals Chamber further notes that Witness TB's testimony indicated that the roadblock was used for the purpose of killing and that killings were taking place during this period.[3410] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that Witness TB did not specifically mention any other crime at the roadblock that day, while Witness SX mentioned that other killings occurred, did not prevent a reasonable trier of fact from finding that Witnesses SX's and TB's evidence concerning the killing of the Tutsi girl was corroborative.

1488. As to the alleged contradiction regarding the weapons Ntahobali carried during this event, the Appeals Chamber notes that both witnesses indicated that he carried a firearm and Witness TB testified that this was the only weapon that she "could see".[3411] Given the fact that Witness SX observed Ntahobali use a hatchet to kill the victim – an event that Witness TB did not witness – the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the witnesses' testimonies as to the weapons Ntahobali carried are not incompatible.[3412]

1489. With respect to the alleged differences between the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB as to the fate of the other occupants of the Daihatsu, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness SX testified that they were killed immediately, while Witness TB testified that they were allowed to leave.[3413] Although the witnesses seem to contradict each other on this point, the Appeals Chamber finds that this issue appears to be of peripheral relevance in light of the core evidence concerning the rape and murder of the victim. The Appeals Chamber further notes that Witnesses SX and TB were not extensively questioned about this issue and that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the differences in the witnesses' testimonies in this regard render their otherwise consistent testimonies about the killing of the Tutsi girl incompatible.[3414] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber not to address this contradiction in the Trial Judgement and that it did not undermine the credibility and corroborative nature of Witnesses SX's and TB's accounts.

1490. The Appeals Chamber also finds that Ntahobali's submission that Witness SX's testimony that the victim was detained for two to three hours and forced to walk in a gutter contradicts Witness TB's evidence that soldiers immediately led her away to rape her is without merit. Witness SX did not testify that the victim was detained for two to three hours before being raped, but only that he was at Mujeri's residence and watched the roadblock for that amount of time.[3415] Moreover, it is not clear from Witness TB's evidence that the initial removal of the victim by the soldiers, who did not rape her, was so long that it would have been noticed by Witness SX or incompatible with that witness's evidence.[3416] In addition, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the fact that Witness TB did not testify to the victim being forced to walk through a gutter was material given that the two witnesses observed the events from different locations.

1491. Finally, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's argument that inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses SX and TB and their prior statements raise serious doubts about the reliability of their evidence. The Appeals Chamber considers that many of the identified inconsistencies are minor and that Witnesses SX and TB provided reasonable explanations for them.[3417]

1492. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Ntahobali has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence of Witnesses SX and TB as to the rape and murder of a Tutsi girl in late April 1994.

[3415] See Witness SX, T. 27 January 2004 pp. 17, 21, T. 30 January 2004 pp. 33, 36, 69, 70.

[3417] In particular, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness SX: (i) explained in cross-examination that he had told the investigators about the residence of Mujeri and later stated that if he forgot to mention it, it was because he only stayed at this specific location for a few hours; (ii) conceded in cross-examination that he was mistaken about Ntahobali wearing a club and that he did not mention the gun since he was only asked about the weapons that were used by Ntahobali; (iii) explained that, to the extent that his prior statement indicates that Witness TB was with him while watching the rape and murder of the Tutsi girl, it was because his observation reflected who else was in the entire EER compound at the time, not only the people who watched the incident with the witness; and (iv) explained that there were two girls following one another, and that it was the girl dragged by Ntahobali that was wearing trousers, while the second one was wearing a skirt. See Witness SX, T. 30 January 2004 pp. 26, 35, 36, and 72, 73, 80, 82, 83 (closed session). As for Witness TB, the Appeals Chamber notes that she: (i) explained that, while she learned from Witness SX that he observed the event from nearby, they did not watch it from the same room; (ii) explained that, in Rwanda, the meaning of the word "naked" could describe someone, like the victim, whose chest had been exposed by the time she was in Ntahobali's custody; and (iii) testified that it was implied that an obstacle was in a road when she told investigators that people were arrested (in her statement, Witness TB indicates that the yellow Daihatsu was stopped by Ntahobali and some soldiers in front of the EER, where identity cards were being checked, that soldiers were guarding the road, and that persons were being filtered – details which are materially consistent with her testimony about a roadblock). See Witness TB's Statement, pp. 3, 4; Witness TB, T. 5 February 2004 pp. 12, 13 (closed session), 24, 27, 29, 30. The Appeals Chamber finds that the remaining differences between Witness TB's Statement and her testimony identified by Ntahobali are so minor that they do not undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings and do not warrant express consideration. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 424(c), 424(e).

(b) Identification Evidence

1493. The Trial Chamber found that Witness SX identified Ntahobali in court, recalling that he had testified to having seen him often in Butare near the EER.[3418] It further found that Witness TB knew Ntahobali well, noting that she also identified him in court.[3419]

1494. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in crediting the identification evidence of Witnesses SX and TB.[3420] With respect to Witness SX, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to consider the witness's reluctance to answer questions with regard to the first name of the person who informed him of Ntahobali's identity;[3421] (ii) failing to assess this hearsay identification evidence with caution;[3422] and (iii) according weight to Witness SX's in-court identification.[3423]

1495. With respect to Witness TB, Ntahobali highlights that unknown individuals informed her that the appellant was called "Shalom" and submits that the Trial Chamber failed to assess this hearsay evidence with appropriate caution.[3424] He contends that, while her description of Ntahobali was so vague that it could encapsulate most Rwandan men, it was nevertheless inconsistent with Witness TQ's evidence that Ntahobali had a large beard.[3425] He also argues that the Trial Chamber further erred by relying on Witness TB's in-court identification of Ntahobali since the presiding judge had previously identified his counsel in court in the witness's presence.[3426]

1496. The Prosecution responds that Witness SX identified Ntahobali in court.[3427] It further disputes that Witness TB learned Ntahobali's identity from hearsay and submits that the witness knew Ntahobali and his parents well and met him on several occasions in 1994.[3428] The Prosecution also points out that Witness TB was able to identify positively Ntahobali in court, although she had not seen him since 1994.[3429]

The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution erroneously inverted the names of Witnesses SX and TB and references to the transcripts, resulting in unsupported assertions concerning Witness SX's prior knowledge of Ntahobali. See ibid., paras. 920, 921, fns. 2290, 2291.

1497. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when considering Witness SX's identification evidence, the Trial Chamber explicitly noted that Witness SX did not know Ntahobali or his family prior to the events of 1994 and learned Ntahobali's identity from a third person.[3430] However, while caution is warranted for conviction based on hearsay evidence,[3431] the Appeals Chamber recalls that neither the Rules nor the jurisprudence of the Tribunal oblige a trial chamber to require a particular type of identification evidence.[3432] Given that Witness SX's evidence implicating Ntahobali in the rape and murder of the Tutsi girl was corroborated by the testimony of Witness TB, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber acted reasonably when accepting Witness SX's identification evidence. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber notes that despite Witness SX's initial reluctance to identify its source, he cooperated after further questioning and even volunteered to facilitate contact with his source.[3433] The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber did not exercise the appropriate caution in assessing Witness SX's identification evidence.

1498. With respect to Ntahobali's arguments regarding Witness SX's in-court identification, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber stated that:

> No probative weight will be assigned to an identification given for the first time by a witness while testifying, who identifies the accused while he is standing in the dock. Because all of the circumstances of a trial necessarily lead such a witness to identify the person on trial (or, where more than one person is on trial, the particular person on trial who most closely resembles the man who committed the offence charged), no positive probative weight will be given by the Chamber to these "in court" identifications.[3434]

The Appeals Chamber recalls that any in-court identification should be assigned "little or no credence" given the signals that can identify an accused aside from prior acquaintance.[3435] In the present instance, while the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness SX, who did not know Ntahobali

prior to the events of 1994,[3436] identified Ntahobali in-court, it relied on Witness SX's testimony that he was an eye-witness to Ntahobali's presence at the roadblock and often saw Ntahobali in Butare near the EER.[3437] Likewise, Witness SX's evidence reflects that a third party identified Ntahobali to him at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[3438] Therefore, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber reasonably relied upon Witness SX's evidence to find that he identified Ntahobali during the events.

1499. Turning to Witness TB's identification evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds that, contrary to Ntahobali's assertion, it was not based on hearsay.[3439] As the Trial Chamber noted, Witness TB testified that she knew Ntahobali and had met him on several occasions in 1994.[3440] Furthermore, while Witness TB's evidence is not consistent with Witness TQ's description that Ntahobali had a beard, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that this undermines the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's acceptance of Witness TB's identification evidence. The Appeals Chamber observes that both Witnesses SX and TB provided consistent evidence that Ntahobali did not have a beard during the relevant period.[3441] The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in relying on Witness TB's identification evidence based on her knowledge of him in 1994.

1500. As for Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TB's in-court identification, the Appeals Chamber observes that, while the Trial Chamber noted that the witness identified Ntahobali in court, it recalled that Witness TB knew Ntahobali well in 1994.[3442] Ntahobali has not demonstrated any error in this conclusion. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's observation that the witness recognised Ntahobali in-court.[3443]

[3436] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2962, 2963.
[3437] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3118, 3122.
[3438] Trial Judgement, para. 2962.
[3439] The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali also argues that the audio recording of Witness TB's evidence reveals that she referred to Ntahobali as "Charoumou" rather than "Shalom". See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 452. Ntahobali provides no specific reference supporting this contention and a review of the transcripts cited by Ntahobali reflects that Witness TB referred to Ntahobali as "Shalom". The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this contention.
[3440] See Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 p. 42. See also Trial Judgement, para. 2972. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Witness TB correctly identified Ntahobali's parents by name. See Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 p. 42.
[3441] See Witness SX, T. 27 January 2004 p. 37; Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 p. 42.

With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the in-court identification of him by Witness TB was improper given the presiding judge's identification of Ntahobali's counsel prior to that exercise, the Appeals Chamber observes that extensive questioning continued before Witness TB was asked to identify Ntahobali in court. Ntahobali did not object to the in-court identification on this basis at that time, or uncover, through cross-examination, that Witness TB's in-court identification of Ntahobali was influenced by the presiding judge's identification of his counsel. See Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 pp. 38-54, 58-62, 1501. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error on the part of the Trial Chamber in accepting Witnesses SX's and TB's identification evidence.

(c) Conclusion

1502. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence relating to the rape and murder of a Tutsi girl who arrived at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock around the end of April 1994.

5. Conclusion

1503. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Ntahobali criminally responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing killings of Tutsis in addition to the Tutsi girl at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in April 1994. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber grants Ground 4.2 of Ntahobali's appeal to the extent that it relates to the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock events and, as a result, reverses Ntahobali's convictions for committing killings of Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock other than the "Tutsi girl". The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact, if any, of this finding on Ntahobali's sentence in the appropriate section below.

1504. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's conclusions on the date of the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, his responsibility for the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994, and his responsibility for the rape and murder of a Tutsi girl at the same roadblock around the end of April 1994. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 3.2 and 3.3, the remainder of Ground 4.2, and the relevant part of Ground 4.3 of Ntahobali's appeal.

and 63-98 (closed session), T. 5 February 2004 pp. 8-15 (closed session), 18-42. Under the circumstances, Ntahobali's contention that Witness TB's identification was influenced by this identification is speculative.

H. Killing of the Rwamukwaya Family (Grounds 3.4 and 4.7)

1505. The Trial Chamber found that an individual named Rwamukwaya and his family, who were of Tutsi ethnicity, were killed on or about 29 or 30 April 1994, after Ntahobali had threatened to kill them.[3444] The Trial Chamber held that "[g]iven the narrow time frames involved between Ntahobali's threat pronounced against the Rwamukwaya family, the sighting of their bodies, and the first sightings of Ntahobali in a vehicle known to have belonged to Rwamukwaya, […] the inference drawn as to Ntahobali's responsibility in the killing of the Rwamukwaya family is the only reasonable conclusion based on the totality of the evidence."[3445] The Trial Chamber further found that Ntahobali was aware that the principal perpetrators killed the Rwamukwaya family with genocidal intent[3446] and that "Ntahobali's announcement of his intention to have the Rwamukwaya family killed […] substantially contributed to the commission of the Rwamukwayas' death."[3447]

1506. Consequently, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for aiding and abetting the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[3448]

1507. Ntahobali submits that no reasonable trier of fact could have convicted him for the killing of the Rwamukwaya family based on the evidence on the record.[3449] In particular, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the only reasonable inference available from the circumstantial evidence was that he aided and abetted the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[3450] Pointing out that the principal perpetrators are unknown, he argues that the conclusions that the perpetrators had genocidal intent and that he was aware of it were not the only reasonable conclusions open to the Trial Chamber.[3451] Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber erred

[3451] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, paras. 330-332 (French). Ntahobali explained that he could not develop in his appeal brief Ground 4.7 of his appeal where he made this allegation of error due to the imposed word limit. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 980. Based on the language used in his appeal brief, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali has not abandoned this ground of appeal. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the arguments he developed in his notice of appeal in support of the allegation of error should be addressed as a matter of fairness.

in its overall assessment of the evidence concerning the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[3452] He requests that the impugned conclusions be set aside and that he be acquitted of this crime.[3453]

1508. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate any unreasonableness in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the totality of the evidence in relation to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family.[3454] In its view, the fact that Ntahobali was seen "gallivanting around Butare in the dead family's car shortly after threatening their murder leads to the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali was responsible for their deaths."[3455] It argues that Ntahobali failed to present any other reasonable conclusion based on the available evidence.[3456]

1509. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber may infer the existence of a particular fact upon which the guilt of the accused depends from circumstantial evidence only if it is the only reasonable conclusion that could be drawn from the evidence presented.[3457] If there is another conclusion which is also reasonably open from the evidence, and which is consistent with the non-existence of that fact, the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt cannot be drawn.[3458]

1510. The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber was cognisant of this standard.[3459] The Appeals Chamber considers, however, that in finding that Ntahobali aided and abetted the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, the Trial Chamber failed to explain how this was the only reasonable inference that could be drawn from the evidence. When considering the circumstantial evidence on the record, the Trial Chamber expressly took into account the narrow timeframes between the threat uttered by Ntahobali against the Rwamukwaya family, the sighting of their dead bodies, and the first sighting of the vehicle purportedly belonging to Rwamukwaya being driven by Ntahobali.[3460] In particular, the Trial Chamber considered that "the proximity between the killing of the Rwamukwaya family and the sightings of Ntahobali in Rwamukwaya's vehicle establishes a link between the killing and the circumstances in which Ntahobali came into possession of the vehicle."[3461] However, the Trial Chamber did not elaborate how the combination of these factors necessarily led to the conclusion that Ntahobali's threat substantially contributed to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family. Even if Ntahobali's threat against the family, their death, and his coming into possession of their vehicle were temporally proximate and occurred in that order, the Appeals Chamber finds that this is an insufficient basis to infer as the only reasonable conclusion that Ntahobali's conduct had a substantial effect on the commission of the killing of the Rwamukwaya family by the principal perpetrators.

Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) finding that Prosecution Witness FA's evidence that Ntahobali pronounced a threat against the Rwamukwaya family was credible; (ii) concluding that the alleged threat was related to the killing; (iii) assessing the evidence as to when the corpses of the family were seen and evidence that Rwamukwaya may have been alive in May 1994; and (iv) ignoring evidence that Ntahobali was seen in Rwamukwaya's car prior to 25 April 1994 as well as inconsistencies within the evidence as to the description of the car. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 217, 218, 224-226; AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 41, 42.

1511. Indeed, the Trial Chamber made no findings about the circumstances of the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, its principal perpetrators, including whether they acted pursuant to Ntahobali's threat to kill the Rwamukwaya family, or the circumstances in which Ntahobali came into possession of Rwamukwaya's vehicle. Nor did the Trial Chamber refer to any evidence in these respects.[3462] Likewise, while the Trial Chamber concluded that unidentified principal perpetrators committed the killing with the requisite genocidal intent and that Ntahobali was aware of this intent,[3463] it did not refer to any of its factual findings or evidence on the record to substantiate this conclusion.[3464]

1512. The Appeals Chamber finds that, in the absence of any evidence that Ntahobali's threat contributed to the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, following which he acquired their vehicle, the "narrow time frames involved between Ntahobali's threat pronounced against the Rwamukwaya family, the sighting of their bodies, and the first sightings of Ntahobali in Rwamukwaya's vehicle"[3465] could not lead a reasonable trier of fact to find that the only reasonable inference was that Ntahobali substantially contributed to the crime and was aware of the principal perpetrators' genocidal intent.

1513. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ntahobali aided and abetted the killing of the Rwamukwaya family on or about 29 or 30 April 1994.

1514. The Appeals Chamber therefore grants Grounds 3.4, in part, and 4.7 of Ntahobali's appeal and reverses his conviction for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for aiding

I. Butare Prefecture Office (Grounds 3.6, 3.9 in part, 4.2-4.4)

1515. The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.[3466] The Trial Chamber also convicted Ntahobali of committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting rapes perpetrated at the Butare Prefecture Office as a crime against humanity and as outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[3467] The Trial Chamber further found that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility for the acts of the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office, "including their abductions, rapes, and killings" pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining his sentence.[3468]

1516. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him in relation to crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office. He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) making imprecise or unsupported findings; (ii) its assessment of the evidence; (iii) convicting him for ordering killings and rapes committed during attacks at the prefectoral office; and (iv) finding that he bore superior responsibility for the killings and rapes committed by Interahamwe during attacks at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber will consider these contentions in turn.

1. Imprecise and Unsupported Findings

1517. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement concerning attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Trial Chamber found that:

> between mid-May and mid-June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] with the pickup on at least seven occasions (once in mid-May; two additional times from mid-May to the beginning of June; three attacks during one night at the end of May or beginning of June; and another attack in June). Considering the pickup was nearly full on at least seven occasions, the Chamber is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office] and killed.[3469]

The Trial Chamber further provided the following summary of its factual findings concerning Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's involvement in crimes committed at the prefectoral office:

[3467] Trial Judgement, paras. 6085, 6086, 6094, 6184-6186. While the Trial Chamber considered that the rapes that occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office could establish Ntahobali's responsibility for genocide, it concluded that Ntahobali was not given sufficient notice that rapes there would be used in support of this count and did not convict him of genocide on this basis. See ibid., paras. 5857-5865, 5868, 5872, 5874, 5875, 5877.

> The Chamber finds the Prosecution has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that: between 19 April and late June 1994 Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers went to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to abduct hundreds of Tutsis; the Tutsi refugees were physically assaulted and raped; and the Tutsi refugees were killed in various locations throughout Ngoma commune, including the following specific incidents:
>
> > i. In mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and about 10 Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] aboard a camouflaged pickup. Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup. Ntahobali and about eight other Interahamwe raped Witness TA. Some of the Interahamwe raped two other Tutsi women. The pickup left the [Butare Prefecture Office], abducting Tutsi refugees in the process, some of whom were forced to undress.
> >
> > ii. During the last half of May 1994, Ntahobali and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on two more occasions. Ntahobali violently raped Witness TA, hitting her on the head. Interahamwe following the orders of Ntahobali raped six other women. In a subsequent attack during this same time period, Ntahobali ordered about seven other Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.
> >
> > iii. Around the end of May to the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on board a camouflaged pickup three times in one night. They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, taking them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed. Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees because they were Tutsi. The Interahamwe beat, abused and raped many Tutsi women.
> >
> > iv. Throughout these attacks from 19 April to the end of June 1994, regardless of whether the refugees were taken to Rwabayanga, Kabutare, Mukoni or the IRST, hundreds of refugees were abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office] and never seen again, including Mbasha's wife and children, Trifina and other women and children. The only reasonable inference is that these refugees were killed.
> >
> > v. In the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and that as a result numerous women were raped at that location. Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees. During at least one of these attacks Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.[3470]

1518. The Trial Chamber provided its most detailed legal analysis of the facts relevant to the crimes committed at the prefectoral office in the "Genocide" section of the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement,[3471] where it concluded that Ntahobali was responsible for ordering the killing of "Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office".[3472] The Trial Chamber also concluded that Ntahobali committed, ordered, and aided and abetted rapes at the prefectoral office but did not convict him of genocide on this basis as it found that insufficient notice had been given that this conduct would support the charge of genocide.[3473] The Trial Chamber recalled its findings on killings and rapes made in the "Genocide" section in more condensed summaries throughout the remainder of the "Legal Findings" section when considering Ntahobali's responsibility for other crimes based on the same conduct.[3474]

1519. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Judgement violated his right to a reasoned opinion and prevented him from effectively exercising his right of appeal by entering imprecise and unsupported findings with respect to his convictions for killings and rapes during attacks at the prefectoral office.[3475]

(a) Killings

1520. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion with respect to his convictions relating to the killings committed during: (i) attacks from 19 April to mid-May 1994; (ii) the attacks which occurred seven to 11 days after the attack in mid-May 1994 ("Last Half of May Attacks"); (iii) the Night of Three Attacks; and (iv) the First Half of June Attacks.[3476]

(i) 19 April to Mid-May Attacks

1521. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Judgement implies that he was convicted for killings during attacks occurring between 19 April and mid-May 1994.[3477] In this respect, he points out that the Trial Chamber concluded in paragraph 2781 of the Trial Judgement that he had participated in attacks "between 19 April and late June 1994".[3478] However, he argues that the first of the several attacks upon which the Trial Chamber made findings of his involvement occurred in mid-May 1994 and that the Trial Chamber expressly rejected the evidence of his role in attacks at the prefectoral office prior to mid-May 1994.[3479] Ntahobali also emphasises that the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement only discusses his liability for attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office from mid-May 1994 and beyond.[3480] Consequently, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber provided no reasoned opinion for convicting him for the crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office from 19 April to mid-May 1994 and requests that he be acquitted of any responsibility for them.[3481]

1522. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali was not convicted for the attacks prior to mid-May 1994 "but that the attacks beginning on 19 April [1994] were only mentioned [in the Trial Judgement] to describe the entirety of the genocidal events".[3482]

1523. The Appeals Chamber observes that the statement in paragraph 2781 of the Trial Judgement that "the Prosecution has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that: between 19 April and late June 1994 Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers went to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to abduct hundreds of Tutsis" does give the impression that Ntahobali was found to have participated in attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office prior to mid-May 1994. However, the Trial Chamber's factual findings reflect that Ntahobali's participation in crimes at the prefectoral office started in mid-May 1994 and was limited to the events specifically identified in paragraphs 2779 and 2781 of the Trial Judgement.[3483] This is consistent with the Trial Chamber's findings that, while the Prosecution had established that attacks occurred at the prefectoral office by the end of April 1994, Ntahobali's involvement in the attacks which occurred between late April and early May 1994 had not been established beyond reasonable doubt.[3484] Furthermore, there is no discussion of Ntahobali's criminal responsibility for any attacks occurring between 19 April and mid-May 1994 in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement. Consequently, it is evident from a reading of the Trial Judgement as a whole that Ntahobali was not convicted for attacks occurring before mid-May 1994.

1524. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contention as moot since the Trial Chamber did not convict him for crimes at the Butare Prefecture Office prior to the attack conducted in mid-May 1994.

(ii) Last Half of May Attacks

1525. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated as follows concerning Ntahobali's involvement in crimes committed during the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office which occurred "around seven and 11 days after the first attack in mid-May 1994":

[3481] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 886, 887; Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 357, 360. See also AT. 15 April 2015 p. 49.

[3483] Trial Judgement, paras. 2644, 2653, 2738, 2749, 2773.
[3484] Trial Judgement, para. 2611, 2626.

> The Chamber finds the Prosecution has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that around 7 and 11 days after the first attack in mid-May 1994, Ntahobali and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on two more occasions. Ntahobali violently raped Witness TA, hitting her on the head with a hammer. Interahamwe, following the orders of Ntahobali, raped six other women. In a subsequent attack during this same time period, Ntahobali ordered about seven other Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.[3485]

The Trial Chamber recalled these conclusions when summarising all of its factual findings related to Ntahobali's involvement in crimes committed at the prefectoral office.[3486] The Trial Chamber further repeated these conclusions in discussing Ntahobali's responsibility with respect to the Last Half of May Attacks in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, finding that Ntahobali ordered and committed rape during these attacks.[3487] The Trial Chamber did not discuss in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement any abductions and killings which occurred during the Last Half of May Attacks.

1526. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber never concluded that abductions and killings occurred during the Last Half of May Attacks despite stating that the pickup truck was full on these occasions.[3488] Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber therefore failed to provide a reasoned opinion when convicting him of such conduct and requests that he be acquitted for these murders.[3489]

1527. The Prosecution contends that Ntahobali misstates the evidence, arguing that Witness SD testified that Ntahobali and Interahamwe arrived in the same vehicle and would "come and fetch people" some of whom "were taken away and never seen again".[3490]

1528. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraph 2779 of the Trial Judgement appears to imply that the vehicle Ntahobali used to come to the prefectoral office during the Last Half of May Attacks was used to abduct Tutsis. However, a review of the Trial Chamber's detailed factual findings on these attacks, namely paragraphs 2653 and 2781(ii) of the Trial Judgement, reflects that the Trial Chamber made no findings that abductions and killings occurred during these particular attacks. The Trial Chamber's conclusions in the "Legal Findings" section similarly do not mention abductions and killings occurring during the Last Half of May Attacks.[3491] In this context, the Appeals Chamber concludes that a plain reading of the Trial Chamber's detailed factual and legal conclusions concerning the Last Half of May Attacks reveals that Ntahobali was only convicted based on rapes.

1529. In this regard, the Prosecution's contention that the evidence of Witness SD, as summarised in paragraph 2650 of the Trial Judgement, demonstrates that Ntahobali was convicted for abductions during these attacks is unpersuasive. While Witness SD testified about abductions,[3492] the Trial Chamber expressly considered that this evidence "corroborated important aspects" of the attacks described by Witness TA[3493] without concluding that such abductions occurred during the attacks Witness TA described.[3494] Moreover, the absence of any mention of abductions and killings occurring during these attacks in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement further reflects that the Trial Chamber did not enter convictions on this basis.[3495]

1530. In conclusion, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's argument as moot as the Trial Chamber did not convict him on the basis of killings perpetrated during the Last Half of May Attacks.

(iii) Night of Three Attacks and First Half of June Attacks

1531. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated as follows concerning Ntahobali's involvement in crimes which occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks:

> the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] three times abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion on this night.[3496]
>
>
> the Chamber is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked many different women and children at the [Butare Prefecture Office], assaulted them and forced them aboard the pickup. It further finds that Nyiramasuhuko gave orders to the Interahamwe to commit these crimes. The women and children were taken away from the [Butare Prefecture Office] and killed elsewhere.[3497]
>
>
> Therefore, based upon the evidence of Witnesses TK, QBQ, RE, SS, SU and FAP, including the specific evidence as to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, the assault of a woman named Trifina and the assault of an unnamed woman and her children, the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt that at the end of May or beginning of June 1994, [3494] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2653, 2781(ii).

[3495] The Appeals Chamber observes that, as noted by the Prosecution, paragraphs 2645 and 2648 of the Trial Judgement include reference to Witness TA's evidence of Ntahobali and Interahamwe beating, cutting, and killing people during the Last Half of May Attacks. However, the Trial Chamber did not make factual or legal findings to support the conclusion that Ntahobali was convicted on the basis of this specific conduct.

> Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and about 10 Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] aboard a camouflaged pickup. Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup. The pickup left the [Butare Prefecture Office], abducting Tutsi refugees in the process, some of whom were forced to undress.[3498]

1532. In the same section, the Trial Chamber found the following regarding Ntahobali's involvement in crimes which occurred at the prefectoral office during the First Half of June Attacks:[3499]

> the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt, based on the testimony of Witnesses TA, QBP and TK that, in addition to those attacks described above, Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] in June 1994 to rape women and abduct refugees. During one of these attacks Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA. It further finds that in June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and that as a result, numerous women were raped at that location.[3500]

1533. The Trial Chamber recalled its conclusions concerning the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks in paragraph 2781(iii)-(v) of the Trial Judgement when summarising its factual findings related to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's involvement in the crimes committed at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks. In relevant respects, the Trial Chamber concluded as follows in the "Genocide" section of the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement:

> Around the end of May to the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on board a camouflaged pickup on three occasions in one night. They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed. Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees […]. The Interahamwe beat, abused and raped many Tutsi women. […] In the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and as a result numerous women were raped at that location. Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees. During at least one of these attacks, Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA […].[3501]

1534. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to explain what evidence supported his responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings during these attacks.[3502] He points to the absence of express findings that he ordered killings or issued any other orders during these attacks and contrasts these omissions with references to specific findings that Nyiramasuhuko issued orders during these attacks.[3503] Ntahobali adds that he is unable to discern the factual basis that would support his criminal responsibility for the killings relating to the findings under the "First Half of June 1994" heading in the Trial Judgement[3504] and points to imprecision in the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the attacks during this period.[3505] He argues that the imprecision has prevented him from mounting an effective appeal and that he should therefore be acquitted of all convictions related to these attacks.[3506]

1535. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali erroneously alleges that he cannot understand which killings he is guilty of despite simultaneously contesting his guilt for the seven attacks of which he was convicted.[3507]

1536. On 25 March 2015, the Appeals Chamber requested the Prosecution to provide supplementary submissions as to what evidence cited in the Trial Judgement and findings of the Trial Chamber would support the conclusion that Ntahobali was convicted for ordering killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[3508] In response, the Prosecution points to evidence cited in the Trial Judgement and submits that the Trial Chamber correctly concluded that Ntahobali was convicted for ordering killings of Tutsis during the Night of Three Attacks and was held "responsible for ordering, while at the préfecture office during the first half of June 1994, additional killings of Tutsi refugees."[3509]

1537. Regarding the Night of Three Attacks, the Prosecution points to the Trial Chamber's findings that, during this night, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe abducted refugees and took them to other sites in Butare prefecture to be killed, and that abducted refugees during these and other attacks were killed.[3510] It also relies on the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali issued orders, including to abduct and kill Tutsis, to Interahamwe, who complied with these orders.[3511] The Prosecution contends that these findings and the evidence credited by the Trial

[3504] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 889.
[3505] Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber's finding in paragraph 2773 of the Trial Judgement that "Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees" coupled with its use of the phrase that "[d]uring one of these attacks" and the phrase "in addition to those attacks described above" raise questions as to which attacks the Trial Chamber was referring and for which of them he was convicted. He also argues that he cannot understand whether: (i) he was convicted for attacks that occurred during daylight at the prefectoral office based on the evidence of Witnesses TA and TK, which is in contradiction to its findings that the attacks occurred at night; (ii) the Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko and him were together during all the attacks in June 1994 at the prefectoral office; and (iii) he was convicted for ordering killings that occurred at the prefectoral office or killings that occurred elsewhere after refugees were abducted. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 889-893. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 364, 365.

Chamber[3512] establish that Ntahobali was convicted for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks.[3513]

1539. In response, Ntahobali contends that, while the Trial Chamber's findings reveal that he was convicted for all murders committed during the entire period of attacks at the prefectoral office, this conclusion is unsupported and unreasonable, particularly in relation to the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[3517] He disputes the Prosecution's position that the Trial Chamber's findings as to the elements of the offence may be implied.[3518] Ntahobali further rejects the Prosecution's submission that the evidence cited by the Trial Chamber supports his responsibility for ordering killings under Article 6(1) of the Statute.[3519]

1540. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, crimes against humanity, and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for "ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office".[3520] The Trial Chamber did not find Ntahobali responsible under any other form of liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute with respect to the killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office.

[3512] In particular, the Prosecution highlights, inter alia: (i) the evidence of Witnesses TK and SJ that Interahamwe referred to Ntahobali as "chef" or "chief", respectively, and that Ntahobali issued orders to Interahamwe during the Night of Three Attacks; (ii) Witness TK's testimony that Interahamwe attacked refugees upon Ntahobali's instructions; and (iii) Witnesses TK's and RE's evidence concerning Ntahobali's authority over Interahamwe during these attacks. See Prosecution Supplementary Submissions, paras. 23, 24, 26, 29, 30, referring to, inter alia, Trial Judgement, paras. 2212, 2231, 2278, 2662, 2668, 2681, 2707. The Prosecution also points to evidence from Witness TA concerning the Mid-May Attack which, in its view, demonstrates that Ntahobali, in conjunction with Nyiramasuhuko, were in charge of the Interahamwe and led them in attacks at the prefectoral office. See ibid., para. 25, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 2178, 2189.

[3515] The Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber credited Witness TK's evidence that Ntahobali came to determine whether there were any men left, who were then taken away to be killed, and that he instructed Interahamwe to "[b]e firm in [their] actions", meaning to "kill all of them." See Prosecution Supplementary Submissions, paras. 37-39, quoting Trial Judgement, para. 2771.

1541. A review of the Trial Chamber's most detailed factual and legal findings reveals that the Trial Chamber expressly found that Ntahobali ordered killings during attacks committed at the prefectoral office only with respect to the attack conducted in mid-May 1994 ("Mid-May Attack").[3521] The Trial Chamber also made findings about Ntahobali's involvement in abductions and killings committed at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks but did not expressly find that Ntahobali ordered killings during these attacks or explain if these findings supported his ultimate convictions for ordering killings.[3522] The absence of specific findings that Ntahobali ordered killings during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks raises the question as to whether Ntahobali's conviction for "ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office" was also based upon those attacks.[3523]

1542. Given that the Trial Chamber did not provide any further characterisation of Ntahobali's responsibility for the abductions and killings perpetrated during these attacks, Ntahobali's criminal liability for the Night of Three Attacks would be limited to the Trial Chamber's following conclusion: "Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on board a camouflaged pickup on three occasions in one night. They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed."[3524] Similarly, Ntahobali's criminal responsibility for ordering killings during the First Half of June Attacks would be limited to the Trial Chamber's statement that "Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees".[3525]

1543. In this context, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, is of the view that the Trial Chamber's conclusions relating to the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks do not support Ntahobali's conviction for ordering killings. Indeed, the findings do not refer to an express order given by Ntahobali to kill or a particular instruction that had a direct and substantial effect on the relevant killings. Nor do the conclusions specify the category of assailants to whom Ntahobali gave an order. The Appeals Chamber observes that, by contrast, the Trial Chamber expressly concluded in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that Nyiramasuhuko issued orders during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[3526]

1544. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted that its conclusions on these attacks were based upon the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TK, QBQ, RE, SS, SU, FAP, and TA.[3527] While the evidence of these witnesses, as summarised and discussed by the Trial Chamber, appears to reflect that Ntahobali participated in abductions and killings, issued orders, and held a position of authority among the assailants during these events,[3528] the Trial Chamber's discussion of this evidence does not allow the Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, to conclude that the Trial Chamber relied on this evidence when finding Ntahobali responsible for ordering killings at the prefectoral office.

1545. In the absence of any relevant factual and legal findings underlying Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering killings which occurred during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks as well as of any clear indication that the Trial Chamber intended to convict Ntahobali on this basis, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, concludes that Ntahobali was not convicted in relation to the killings perpetrated during these attacks. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's arguments regarding the imprecision of the Trial Chamber's findings as regards these attacks are moot and need not be discussed.

(b) Rapes

1546. As noted above, the Trial Chamber provided its most detailed legal analysis of the facts relevant to crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office and Ntahobali's responsibility for such crimes in the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement.[3529] This section of the Trial Judgement states as follows concerning Ntahobali's involvement in rapes committed at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack, the Last Half of May Attacks, the Night of Three Attacks, and the First Half of June Attacks:

> Furthermore, Witness TA and two other women were raped during this mid-May attack. […] Witness TA was brutally raped by a gang of about eight Interahamwe in addition to Ntahobali. At least two other Tutsi women were raped on this occasion by the Interahamwe. […][3530]

>
> During the last half of May 1994, Ntahobali and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on two more occasions. Ntahobali violently raped Witness TA, hitting her on the head. Interahamwe following the orders of Ntahobali raped six other women. In a subsequent attack during this same time period, Ntahobali ordered about seven other Interahamwe to rape Witness TA […].[3531]
> Around the end of May to the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] on board a camouflaged pickup on three [3527] Trial Judgement, paras. 2738, 2773. The Trial Chamber also referred to the evidence of Witness QBP with respect to the First Half of June Attacks in paragraph 2773 of the Trial Judgement. However, this witness's evidence is only relevant to the Trial Chamber's additional conclusion in paragraph 2773 of the Trial Judgement that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the Butare Prefecture Office and not to the finding supporting Ntahobali's criminal liability. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2763-2769, 2773; infra, paras. 1857, 1858.

> occasions in one night. They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed. Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape refugees […]. The Interahamwe beat, abused and raped many Tutsi women.[3532]
> In the first half of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and as a result numerous women were raped at that location. Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees. During at least one of these attacks, Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA […]. Each of these attacks constitutes the actus reus of genocide. Likewise, as discussed above, the Chamber finds Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali possessed genocidal intent.[3533]

1547. Having found that Ntahobali could not be convicted of genocide on the basis of rapes that occurred at the prefectoral office due to lack of notice,[3534] the Trial Chamber assessed Ntahobali's criminal responsibility for rapes as a crime against humanity and as outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[3535] In its discussion of these crimes, the Trial Chamber stated in relevant respects:

> The Chamber is satisfied that the rapes of Witness TA and many other unnamed Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] were conducted on ethnic grounds. The Chamber finds that Ntahobali bears responsibility as a principal perpetrator for committing these acts, for ordering Interahamwe to commit rapes, and also for aiding and abetting rapes. Similarly, the Chamber considers that Ntahobali bears superior responsibility for the rapes committed by the Interahamwe, and will take this into account in sentencing.[3536]
>
> Ntahobali […] raped Tutsi women at the Butare préfecture office, ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsis, and aided and abetted the rapes of a Tutsi. For these acts, the Chamber finds Ntahobali guilty of committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting rape as a crime against humanity, pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute.[3537]
>
> Ntahobali […] also raped Tutsi women at the Butare préfecture office, ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsis there, and aided and abetted the rapes of a Tutsi there. […] the Chamber finds Ntahobali guilty of committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[3538]

1548. Ntahobali submits that the language used by the Trial Chamber throughout the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement is ambiguous, preventing him from effectively exercising his right of appeal.[3539] He contends that this ambiguity requires that he be acquitted for all the rapes

It is clear from the Trial Judgement that Ntahobali's convictions for rapes as a crime against humanity and as outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute are predicated on the more detailed analysis provided in the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement. See idem.

not specifically identified by the Trial Chamber.[3540] Concerning the Mid-May Attack in particular, he argues that the Trial Chamber's conclusion in paragraph 5868 of the Trial Judgement that "at least two other Tutsi women were raped" in addition to Witness TA fails to limit the scope of his liability for rapes during this attack.[3541] He also points out that the Trial Chamber is silent as to what form of responsibility was imposed on him in relation to the rapes committed by Interahamwe during this attack.[3542]

1549. Concerning the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks, Ntahobali contends that paragraphs 5873 and 5874 of the Trial Judgement are silent as to his form of responsibility in relation to the rapes ordered by Nyiramasuhuko.[3543]

1550. With regard to the First Half of June Attacks, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber's statements that "Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees" and "[d]uring at least one of these attacks, Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA" in paragraph 5874 of the Trial Judgement are vague and fail to inform him of what rapes committed by Interahamwe and soldiers support his conviction.[3544] He adds that, while the Trial Chamber indicated in paragraph 5874 of the Trial Judgement that soldiers committed rapes at the prefectoral office, it failed to clarify whether he was held responsible for these rapes.[3545]

1551. With respect to his convictions for committing rapes, Ntahobali contends that paragraphs 6086 and 6184 of the Trial Judgement are ambiguous because they give the impression that he was not only convicted for having committed the rapes of Witness TA but also of other Tutsi women during attacks at the prefectoral office.[3546] However, Ntahobali argues that the only conduct supporting his conviction for committing rapes under Article 6(1) of the Statute could be the Trial Chamber's conclusion that he raped Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack and seven days later, as the Trial Chamber stated that he would not be held criminally responsible for having raped Immaculée Mukagatare and Caritas.[3547]

1552. As regards his convictions for ordering rape, Ntahobali argues that the only rapes for which he clearly incurred ordering responsibility were those that occurred during the Last Half of May

Attacks. He argues that, in the absence of proper findings, he cannot be held liable under this mode of responsibility for any other rapes.[3548]

1553. Finally, in relation to his conviction for aiding and abetting rapes, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Judgement is vague as to whether he was convicted of aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA only during one of the First Half of June Attacks or for all occasions on which the Interahamwe raped her at the prefectoral office between mid-May and the first half of June 1994.[3549] He requests that the Appeals Chamber find that the Trial Chamber convicted him only for aiding and abetting Witness TA's rapes during the First Half of June Attacks based on its failure to provide a clear and reasoned opinion.[3550]

1554. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali misstates the Trial Chamber's findings and fails to demonstrate any error by the Trial Chamber.[3551] It contends that the Trial Chamber found Ntahobali guilty of committing the rape of Witness TA, ordering the rapes of Witness TA "and others", and aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA "and others".[3552]

1555. The Appeals Chamber considers that the totality of Ntahobali's criminal responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute based on rapes committed during attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office is based on the Trial Chamber's conclusions in paragraphs 2644, 2653, 2773, 2781(i), (ii), and (v) in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement where his conduct is particularised,[3553] as further reflected in paragraphs 5868, 5872, 5874, 5875, 5877, 6086, 6094, 6184, and 6185 of the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement.

1556. In this context, the Appeals Chamber does not agree that the language identified in paragraphs 5868, 5873, or 5874 of the Trial Judgement is ambiguous when considered in the Ntahobali violently raped Witness TA, hitting her on the head with a hammer. Interahamwe, following the orders of Ntahobali, raped six other women. In a subsequent attack during this same time period, Ntahobali ordered about seven other Interahamwe to rape Witness TA"), 2781(v) ("Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to rape women and abduct refugees. During at least one of these attacks Ntahobali again handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.").

context of the entire Trial Judgement. Paragraph 5868 reflects Ntahobali's criminal liability for having raped Witness TA and not for any other rapes committed by anyone else during the Mid-May Attack.[3554] The Trial Chamber provides no analysis identifying any conduct and does not reach any conclusion as to what Ntahobali's responsibility would be for the rapes of "at least two other women" who were also raped on this occasion. The Trial Chamber also made findings that sufficiently identified what mode of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute applied to Ntahobali's conduct for rapes during each attack.[3555]

1557. Furthermore, while Ntahobali questions whether he was convicted in relation to the rapes ordered by Nyiramasuhuko during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks, the Appeals Chamber considers that a plain reading of the relevant factual and legal findings in the Trial Judgement indicates that the Trial Chamber did not hold him responsible for the rapes ordered by Nyiramasuhuko during these attacks.[3556]

1558. With respect to the First Half of June Attacks, while the Trial Chamber indicated in paragraph 5874 of the Trial Judgement that Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to rape women at the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber considers that this statement was not meant to broaden Ntahobali's criminal responsibility to include rapes committed by soldiers or Interahamwe generally. It is apparent that the Trial Chamber did not impose criminal liability upon Ntahobali for rapes committed by soldiers during this period.[3557] Furthermore, a contextual reading of the Trial Chamber's statement in this paragraph of the Trial Judgement as well as the fact that the Trial Chamber made no findings as to the modes of responsibility that would support Ntahobali's liability for the rapes of women other than Witness TA committed by Interahamwe also evinces that he was not convicted for such rapes. Rather, the Trial Judgement reflects that Ntahobali's responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for the rapes committed during the First Half of June Attacks is based on the Trial Chamber's conclusions that Ntahobali went to the prefectoral office

[3554] The Appeals Chamber understands from a reading of the Trial Judgement as a whole that Ntahobali was only held responsible as a superior on the basis of the crimes perpetrated by the Interahamwe following his orders. See infra, Section V.I.4. Given that Ntahobali did not issue orders to the gang of about eight Interahamwe who brutally raped Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack, the Appeals Chamber understands that he was not found responsible as a superior for their crimes.
[3555] See, e.g., Trial Judgement, paras. 5868 (finding that Ntahobali raped Witness TA), 5872 (finding that Ntahobali committed rape and ordered rapes), 5875 (finding that Ntahobali aided and abetted rape).
[3556] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2654-2738, 2750-2773, 2781, 5873, 5874.
[3557] Specifically, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that, although soldiers played a role in events at the Butare Prefecture Office, "no evidence has been led to establish any relationship between the soldiers and […] Ntahobali". See Trial Judgement., para. 5887. Although this conclusion was made in the context of evaluating Ntahobali's responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute, it suggests that no finding of any liability was imposed on Ntahobali for the conduct of soldiers.

"to rape women" and for having "handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape [her]".[3558]

1559. Turning to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber's findings as to his conviction for committing rapes at the prefectoral office are impermissibly vague, the Appeals Chamber recalls that paragraphs 6094 and 6184 in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement state that Ntahobali "raped Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office]" and serve as the basis for his responsibility under Article 6(1) for committing rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II at the prefectoral office.[3559]

1560. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali raped one woman – Witness TA – during the Mid-May Attack and the attack seven days later.[3560] The only other finding that could support Ntahobali's conviction for committing rapes of women other than Witness TA is found in paragraphs 2773 and 2781(v) of the Trial Judgement, which is repeated in paragraph 5874 of the "Genocide" section of the Trial Judgement.[3561] These paragraphs indicate that, in the first half of June 1994, Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office "to rape women".[3562] This conclusion is based on the evidence of Witness TK.[3563]

1561. In the relevant section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness TK's evidence that Ntahobali came to the prefectoral office "on a number of evenings" accompanied by Interahamwe and disabled soldiers and that, on some occasions, Ntahobali "abducted women who were then raped".[3564] Having reviewed the evidence, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Witness TK's evidence is broad and general, providing no context as to whether the witness observed Ntahobali abduct and rape women, or if in fact Ntahobali perpetrated the rapes referred to [3558] See Trial Judgement, para. 5874. See also ibid., para. 5875 (finding Ntahobali responsible for aiding and abetting Witness TA's rape).

[3559] See also Trial Judgement, para. 6185.
[3560] Trial Judgement, paras. 5868, 5872.
[3561] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali raped a woman named Caritas during the Mid-May Attack and that he raped a woman named Immaculée Mukagatare during an attack among the First Half of June Attacks. However, the Trial Chamber, finding that insufficient notice had been provided, refused to enter convictions on the basis of this conduct. See infra, V.I.2(a)(ii).
[3562] The Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 2773 of the Trial Judgement only refers to "in June 1994", while paragraph 2781(v) of the Trial Judgement specifies "[i]n the first half of June 1994". However, read in the context of paragraph 5874, which also refers to "the first half of June 1994", the omission in paragraph 2773 appears to be a typographical oversight. Cf. Trial Judgement, paras. 2750, 2751.
[3563] See Trial Judgement, para. 2773. In this paragraph of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber also referred to the evidence of Witnesses TA and QBP. However, Witness TA's evidence related to the First Half of June Attacks is only relevant to Ntahobali's conviction for aiding and abetting rapes and Witness QBP's evidence is only relevant to the Trial Chamber's additional conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women at the Butare Prefecture Office and not to any finding supporting Ntahobali's criminal liability for committing rapes. See ibid., paras. 2763-2769, 2773; infra, paras. 1857, 1858, Section V.I.2(e)(i).
[3564] See Trial Judgement, para. 2771, referring to Witness TK, T. 20 May 2002 p. 100, T. 23 May 2002 p. 126.

by the witness. Given the minimal probative value of this evidence, the Appeals Chamber concludes that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on this evidence to find that Ntahobali raped women at the Butare Prefecture Office other than Witness TA.

1563. With respect to Ntahobali's convictions for aiding and abetting rapes, the Appeals Chamber observes that the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement contains no express or implicit finding that Ntahobali aided and abetted the rape of Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack, noting only that Ntahobali and eight Interahamwe raped the witness and that Interahamwe raped two other women.[3566] Likewise, there is no reference to Ntahobali aiding and abetting Witness TA's rapes committed by Interahamwe during the Last Half of May Attacks. Instead, the Trial Chamber explicitly found that Ntahobali's conduct during the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks supports the conclusion that he committed and ordered rapes.[3567]

1564. By contrast, paragraphs 5874 and 5875 of the Trial Judgement, which pertain to the First Half of June Attacks, describe Ntahobali's action during one such attack as having "handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA"[3568] and expressly conclude that "Ntahobali aided and abetted the rapes of Witness TA."[3569] The Trial Chamber reiterated later in the "Legal Findings" section that Ntahobali aided and abetted the "rapes of a Tutsi."[3570]

1565. Against this background, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Judgement reflects that Ntahobali was not convicted for aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks, but for aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA by Interahamwe during the First Half of June Attacks.

1566. Finally, the Appeals Chamber rejects the Prosecution's contention that the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of aiding and abetting the rape of Witness TA "and others". Paragraph 6086 of the Trial Judgement to which the Prosecution refers does not support this position. Rather, it states

[3565] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2653, 2781(ii), 5872, 6086, 6184.
[3566] Trial Judgement, para. 5868. By contrast, the Trial Chamber expressly found that Nyiramasuhuko aided and abetted these rapes by virtue of her presence and authority. See ibid., para. 5869.
[3567] Trial Judgement, paras. 5868, 5872.
[3568] Trial Judgement, para. 5874.

that Ntahobali aided and abetted "rapes", which, when read in light of the entire Trial Judgement, reflects Ntahobali's responsibility for the multiple rapes of Witness TA by about seven Interahamwe during one of the First Half of June Attacks.[3571]

1567. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have found, based on the evidence of Witness TK, that Ntahobali committed rapes of Tutsi women at the Butare Prefecture Office other than Witness TA. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Ntahobali raped Tutsi "women" when convicting him of committing rape as a crime against humanity and as outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Ntahobali's challenges that the Trial Chamber erred by making imprecise and unsupported findings with respect to Ntahobali's convictions for rapes at the prefectoral office.

(c) Conclusion

1568. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber prevented him from fully exercising his right to appeal by failing to provide a reasoned opinion regarding his convictions for crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[3572] The Trial Judgement reflects that Ntahobali was convicted pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office for: (i) ordering killings and committing the rape of Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack; (ii) ordering the rapes of six women and committing the rape of Witness TA during an attack seven days after the Mid-May Attack; (iii) ordering the rapes of Witness TA during an attack 11 days after the Mid-May Attack; and (iv) aiding and abetting Witness TA's rape during one of the First Half of June Attacks.[3573] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, finds that the Trial Judgement does not reflect that Ntahobali was convicted for ordering killings during attacks other than the Mid-May Attack.

1569. For the reasons set out above, the Appeals Chamber reverses the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali is responsible for committing the rape of any Tutsi woman other than Witness TA at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber will discuss the impact of this finding, if any, in Section XII below.

2. Assessment of the Evidence

1570. With respect to the Mid-May Attack, the Trial Chamber found that one night in mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and about 10 Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office aboard a camouflage pickup truck.[3574] The Trial Chamber concluded that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup truck, that Ntahobali and about eight other Interahamwe raped Witness TA, and that the pickup truck left the prefectoral office with the abducted Tutsi refugees.[3575] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for ordering killings and committing the rape of Witness TA during this attack.[3576]

1571. Concerning the Last Half of May Attacks, the Trial Chamber concluded that around seven and 11 days after the Mid-May Attack, Ntahobali and Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office on two more occasions.[3577] In particular, the Trial Chamber determined that during the first attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, which occurred seven days after the Mid-May Attack ("First Attack"), Ntahobali ordered the rapes of six women and raped Witness TA.[3578] The Trial Chamber determined that during the second attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, which occurred 11 days after the Mid-May Attack ("Second Attack"), Ntahobali ordered about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.[3579] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for committing and ordering rape on this basis.[3580] It further found that Ntahobali raped a woman named Caritas during the Second Attack but did not convict Ntahobali on this basis due to insufficient notice.[3581]

1572. As regards the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber found that, around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office on board a camouflaged pickup truck three times in one night, and that they abducted Tutsi refugees each time and took them to other sites in Butare Prefecture to be killed.[3582] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has concluded, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not [3578] Trial Judgement, para. 2653. The Trial Chamber's finding that Interahamwe, following the orders of Ntahobali, raped six other women during the First Attack is, however, reversed by the Appeals Chamber below. See infra, Sections V.I.3(b), V.I.3(c). The Appeals Chamber deems it unnecessary as a result to examine Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence for his conviction for ordering the rapes of six women during the First Attack.

[3580] See Trial Judgement, paras. 6085, 6086, 6094, 6184, 6185. See also supra, Sections V.I.1(b), V.I.1(c).

[3582] Trial Judgement, paras. 2661, 2715, 2736, 2738, 2748, 2749, 2781(iii). In order to conclude that the refugees abducted from the prefectoral office were killed, the Trial Chamber also relied, in part, on evidence that two refugees named Semanyenzi and Annonciata had been abducted from the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks but escaped and returned to it, informing refugees that those who had been abducted were killed. See ibid., paras. 2746-2749. The Trial Chamber had previously determined that the co-Accused could not be convicted on the basis of the crimes committed against Semanyenzi and Annonciata. See ibid., para. 2172.

convicted for ordering killings during these attacks.[3583] The Trial Chamber further found that Ntahobali participated in the abduction of "Mbasha's wife and children" from the prefectoral office during these attacks but did not convict him on the basis of this conduct due to insufficient notice.[3584]

1573. Concerning the First Half of June Attacks, the Trial Chamber determined that Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office in the first half of June 1994 to rape women and abduct refugees.[3585] It also found that, during one of these attacks, Ntahobali handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape her.[3586] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for aiding and abetting the rape of Witness TA during one of these attacks.[3587]

1574. Ntahobali challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence concerning all of these attacks. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has determined, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not convicted on the basis of his conduct during the Night of Three Attacks or in relation to the killings that were perpetrated during the First Half of June Attacks.[3588] However, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's factual findings with respect to these attacks were relevant to the Trial Chamber's analysis of Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering the killings and rapes for which he was convicted as well as for the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility for the acts of the Interahamwe.[3589] In this context, the Appeals Chamber will address Ntahobali's challenges to the assessment of the evidence concerning these attacks as a demonstration of error could have the potential to invalidate the verdict or occasion a miscarriage of justice. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber will first examine Ntahobali's general challenges before turning to his submissions pertaining to the identification evidence, the Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks, the Night of Three Attacks, the First Half of June Attacks, and the number of refugees abducted and killed.

[3588] See supra, Sections V.I.1(a)(iii), V.I.1(c).
[3589] See infra, Sections V.I.3, V.I.4. In particular, the Appeals Chamber stresses that, as indicated below, the Trial Chamber relied on Ntahobali's participation in these attacks to support its conclusion that Ntahobali ordered killings during the Mid-May Attack. See infra, paras. 1901, 1902. The Appeals Chamber further stresses that the Trial Chamber "consider[ed] the evidence in its entirety" when making findings on Ntahobali's responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute. See infra, para. 1920, quoting Trial Judgement, para. 5884. See also infra, para. 1927.

(a) General Challenges

1575. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) reversing the burden of proof; (ii) admitting and making findings on unpleaded and prejudicial evidence; (iii) rejecting admissible evidence; (iv) inferring trauma to justify inconsistencies in the Prosecution evidence; (v) improperly assessing expert testimony; and (vi) failing to consider exculpatory evidence.

(i) Reversal of the Burden of Proof

1576. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in assessing the evidence related to the attacks committed at the Butare Prefecture Office based on a "chronological framework".[3590] In his view, the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof by "accepting the veracity" of the Prosecution evidence before considering the Defence evidence.[3591] He claims that, by doing so, the Trial Chamber foreclosed the possibility that Defence evidence could raise reasonable doubt.[3592]

1577. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's contentions are "pure speculation" and that he does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion or erred in the manner in which it assessed the Prosecution and Defence evidence.[3593]

1578. The Appeals Chamber finds that the manner in which the Trial Chamber organised its assessment of the evidence in the Trial Judgement in no way reflects a failure to properly apply the burden of proof.[3594] Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber evaluated Ntahobali's alibi evidence before addressing the reliability and credibility of the Prosecution evidence related to attacks committed at the prefectoral office.[3595] It also bears noting that the Trial Chamber made all the factual findings concerning Ntahobali's participation in the crimes related to [3590] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 603.

[3591] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 604-606. Ntahobali highlights in particular the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness TA's evidence was credible and reliable before assessing the Defence evidence. See ibid., para. 605, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 2629, 2630, 2633, 2635-2638.
[3592] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 242; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 606; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 245. Ntahobali argues that the manner in which the Trial Chamber evaluated the Prosecution evidence before the Defence evidence was contrary to governing and relevant case law. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 606, referring to R v. Geddes (Canada, 2011), para. 16, R v. W (D.) (Canada, 1991), R v. C.L.Y. (Canada, 2008) paras. 24-30; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 245, referring to Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, paras. 171-174.
[3593] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 982, 983. The Prosecution also contends that Ntahobali failed to raise the argument that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof in his notice of appeal and that his contention should accordingly be summarily dismissed. See ibid., para. 982. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali alleged in his notice of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in the "application of the concept of the burden of proof" in assessing the evidence related to the Butare Prefecture Office. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 242. The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that Ntahobali's allegation of error was properly raised and will examine it.

[3595] See, in particular, Trial Judgement, para. 2600 ("Having examined the alibis relevant to the events at the [Butare Prefecture Office], the Chamber now evaluates the Prosecution case bearing in mind those aspects of the alibis that were deemed reasonably possibly true."). See also ibid., paras. 2577-2599.

the attacks at the prefectoral office or the occurrence of the crimes during those attacks[3596] after it assessed the relevant Defence evidence.[3597]

1579. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's allegation that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof.

(ii) Unpleaded and Prejudicial Evidence

1580. The Trial Chamber observed that the names of Caritas, "Mrs. Mbasha", Trifina, Immaculée Mukagatare, Annonciata, and Semanyenzi did not appear in the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief or its appendix, or the Prosecution's opening statement.[3598] It also noted that their identities had only been disclosed in four witness statements less than two months prior to trial without any further indication that this new information was being provided.[3599] Consequently, the Trial Chamber found that the late disclosure of these victims' names "accorded bias to the Defence in preparing its case" and concluded that it would not convict the co-Accused for the alleged crimes against these victims if they would be established.[3600] Relying on the Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004 and the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that it would nonetheless consider the evidence concerning these individuals for "other permissible purposes", including "background information, circumstantial evidence in support of other allegations, to demonstrate a special knowledge, opportunity or identification of the accused".[3601]

1581. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of: (i) the rape of Caritas as circumstantial evidence that he and Interahamwe raped several unknown women, including Witness TA, at the Butare Prefecture Office;[3602] and (ii) the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children and the killing of Trifina to support his convictions for the abduction and killings of other unnamed Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks.[3603] He submits that the Trial Chamber's reasoning for not allowing him to be convicted for these crimes – because the tardy disclosure of the victims' identities prejudiced him in the preparation of his defence – prevented the Trial Chamber from considering this evidence with respect to evidence of rapes, abductions, and killings of unknown victims.[3604] Ntahobali generally argues that the Trial Chamber erred in using evidence concerning the abductions of Annonciata and Semanyenzi as well.[3605] Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber fundamentally misinterpreted the Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004 to support its position that it could consider this evidence.[3606]

1582. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in using evidence pertaining to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children for the purpose of establishing Ntahobali's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, as the probative value of the hearsay identification evidence was outweighed by the prejudicial effect.[3607] He submits that the same reasoning applies to the reliance on evidence of the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare.[3608]

1583. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was entitled to admit any evidence that it deemed to have probative value, even when lack of notice prevented any conviction on the basis of it.[3609] It contends that Ntahobali does not show how the Trial Chamber misinterpreted the Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004.[3610]

1584. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing evidence concerning the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, during which the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali ordered about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA,[3611] the Trial Chamber also recalled Witness TA's evidence of Ntahobali raping a girl named Caritas during the same attack.[3612] Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber did not convict Ntahobali for the rape of Caritas but concluded that [3604] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 762, 764. In this regard, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber's logic would allow the Prosecution to conceal the identities of known victims, knowing that evidence of such rapes and killings could serve as a basis to enter a conviction against an accused. See idem.

[3606] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 761, 762, 764. Ntahobali argues that, in the Renzaho Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber specified that evidence in support of material facts not pleaded in an indictment can be admitted "to the extent that it is relevant to proof of other allegations pleaded in the indictment." See ibid., para. 762 (emphasis in original), referring to Renzaho Appeal Judgement, paras. 71, 90.

Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber misapplied the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement and, consequently, Rule 93 of the Rules in justifying the use of this evidence because it could not have been admitted through this rule without prior notice from the Prosecution. He alternatively submits that the Trial Chamber improperly used this evidence as prior criminal conduct for the purpose of demonstrating a general propensity or disposition to commit crimes charged. He argues that the evidence should be excluded and that he should be acquitted of the crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 272; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 766-769. The Prosecution responds that the disclosure provisions, as interpreted in the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, do not apply in this instance as the relevant evidence was not used to establish a pattern of conduct. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1125. The Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's argument on the same basis as it did for Nyiramasuhuko's identical submission. See supra, Section IV.F.2(a). In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali does not show how any of the disputed evidence constituted "prior criminal conduct" and was used for the purpose of demonstrating a general propensity or disposition of Ntahobali to commit crimes.

"the details of this rape provide circumstantial evidence to support the fact that Interahamwe and Ntahobali raped many women, including Witness TA at the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[3613] Similarly, when assessing evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks – for which Ntahobali was not convicted – the Trial Chamber accepted the evidence pertaining to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children and the killing of Trifina.[3614] However, it recalled that it would not enter convictions on the basis of this conduct but found that the "credible and consistent information" with regard to these events provided circumstantial support for its findings regarding the abduction of other unnamed Tutsi refugees from the prefectoral office.[3615] The Trial Chamber also relied, in part, on evidence that Semanyenzi and Annonciata had been abducted from the prefectoral office but escaped and returned to it, informing refugees that those who had been abducted were killed, to conclude that the refugees abducted from that office were killed.[3616]

1585. The Appeals Chamber sees no error in this approach. The Trial Chamber considered that insufficient notice had been given to Ntahobali concerning the crimes against these particular individuals and that he was prejudiced in this regard, which is not equivalent to a finding that the evidence is inadmissible under Rule 89(C) of the Rules.[3617] The Prosecution has an obligation to state the material facts underpinning the charges in an indictment, but not the evidence by which such material facts are to be proven.[3618] Furthermore, Rule 89(C) of the Rules allows a trial chamber to admit any relevant evidence it deems to have probative value.[3619] In this case, the evidence identified by Ntahobali is related temporally, geographically, and thematically to the pleaded allegations of Ntahobali's responsibility for rapes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office as well as the pleaded allegations of his involvement in abductions and killings of those seeking refuge there.[3620] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its consideration of this evidence or in its interpretation of the Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004 when doing so.[3621]

[3619] Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004, para. 15.
[3620] The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention that if trial chambers were allowed to consider the evidence in this manner, it would, inter alia, induce the Prosecution to deliberately conceal identities of victims. The Tribunal's jurisprudence on the pleading of the identities of victims renders this argument meritless as it dictates that the Prosecution name the victims if it is in a position to do so, even in cases where a high degree of specificity is impractical, since the identity of the victim is information that is valuable to the preparation of the Defence case. See, e.g., Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 132; Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 25; Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 90.
[3621] Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has overturned Ntahobali's convictions for committing rapes of women other than Witness TA and that it found below that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Ntahobali for 1586. Moreover, as discussed in Section V.I.2(d)(iv) below, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's contentions concerning the credibility and probative value of the evidence surrounding the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[3622] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the prejudicial effect of this evidence outweighs its relevance. Indeed, considering that Ntahobali's defence to his participation in attacks committed at the prefectoral office relies in part on a defence of alibi,[3623] evidence concerning Ntahobali's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, as reflected in part through his participation in the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, is highly relevant to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the pleaded criminal conduct. In light of this analysis, Ntahobali likewise fails to substantiate his position that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the evidence concerning the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare.

1587. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's arguments concerning the allegedly improper use of unpleaded and prejudicial evidence.

(iii) Rejection of Admissible Evidence

1588. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber impermissibly denied the admission of judgements from Rwandan proceedings demonstrating that Prosecution Witness TQ was convicted of crimes committed during the genocide.[3624] Ntahobali argues that this evidence should have led the Trial Chamber to treat the witness's evidence with caution and that it erred in not doing so.[3625] Ntahobali submits that the Appeals Chamber should disregard Witness TQ's evidence for its analysis on the alleged crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office.[3626]

1589. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in rejecting the admission of these documents and that the Trial Chamber properly assessed the evidence of Witness TQ.[3627] ordering the rapes of six other women at the Butare Prefecture Office. See supra, Sections V.I.1(b), V.I.1(c); infra, Section V.I.3(b). Consequently, his individual responsibility for committing, ordering, and aiding and abetting the rapes as well as his superior responsibility for rapes committed by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office is limited to the rapes of Witness TA. See supra, Section V.I.1(c); infra, Section V.I.4(b). In this regard, Ntahobali's contention that this evidence was unreasonably used to prove that he and Interahamwe raped several other unknown women is now moot. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's reliance on the Renzaho Appeal Judgement as he fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's analysis of unpleaded evidence in this proceeding is inconsistent with the findings of the Appeals Chamber in that case.

[3622] See also infra, Sections V.I.2(b)(i)a, V.I.2(b)(iii)b.

other witnesses in this regard.[3628] With respect to the attacks at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber further considered that Witness TQ's evidence of Ntahobali driving a Peugeot pickup truck formed part of the "substantial evidence rebut[ting] Ntahobali's claim that he did not know how to drive and that it could not have been him driving the pickup to the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[3629] In addition to Witness TQ's testimony, the Trial Chamber also considered the evidence of several witnesses who testified that Ntahobali drove a vehicle to the prefectoral office as well as the evidence of Witnesses TG, FA, D-2-13-O, and D-13-D to find that Ntahobali had been seen driving generally.[3630]

1591. In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Witness TQ's evidence due to its prior erroneous decision denying the admission of judgements from Rwandan proceedings fails to identify an error that would invalidate the decision to rely on Witness TQ's evidence or lead to a miscarriage of justice. His argument that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Witness TQ's evidence is indeed belied by the fact that the Trial Chamber only relied on Witness TQ's evidence when it was extensively corroborated. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's contention.

(iv) Inference of Trauma

1592. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber acted ultra vires by drawing inferences of trauma to justify discrepancies, inconsistencies, and implausibilities in Witness TA's testimony.[3631] He contends that trauma cannot be automatically inferred and argues that the Trial Chamber points to no evidence demonstrating that Witness TA was traumatised and that it impacted her evidence.[3632] He argues that, because of this error in the analysis of Witness TA's otherwise incredible evidence, the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him on the basis of her testimony.[3633]

1593. The Prosecution responds that, given the nature of Witness TA's experience at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber did not require an expert to attest to her trauma and its impact on her testimony.[3634] It contends that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in considering the effects of trauma on Witness TA's evidence.[3635]

1594. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered the impact of trauma on Witness TA's testimony in finding that the following aspects of her evidence did not undermine her credibility: (i) the variance between her prior statement, which indicated that she was anally raped during the Mid-May Attack, and her testimony that she was not; (ii) her failure to report to the local authorities that Ntahobali had raped her, even though she had reported being raped by other assailants; and (iii) the confusion in her testimony as to whether she was raped on the fourth or fifth occasion Ntahobali visited the prefectoral office and whether she was raped on the same occasion that Immaculée Mukagatare was raped.[3636]

1595. It is established practice for trial chambers to take into consideration the impact of trauma on a witness's evidence.[3637] The Trial Chamber found that Witness TA was raped by Ntahobali and about eight other Interahamwe during the Mid-May Attack,[3638] "violently raped" by Ntahobali during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks,[3639] raped by about seven Interahamwe during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks,[3640] and raped by about seven Interahamwe during one of the First Half of June Attacks.[3641] These rapes occurred against a backdrop of violence at the prefectoral office witnessed by Witness TA, the evidence of which the Trial Chamber described as "among the worst encountered" and which, in its view, portrayed "a clear picture of unfathomable depravity and sadism".[3642] The Appeals Chamber finds that, in light of the record before the Trial Chamber, a reasonable trier of fact could have considered the fact that Witness TA suffered considerable trauma as it related to the events at the prefectoral office and that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in considering this trauma when assessing the witness's evidence.[3643]

However, the Appeals Chamber does not otherwise find that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence as it concerns the fact that Witness TA was raped during this event. See infra, Section V.I.2(c)(ii).

1596. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's contention in this respect.

(v) Expert Evidence

1597. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Prosecution Expert Witnesses Guichaoua and Des Forges to corroborate witnesses' testimonies regarding factual evidence of crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office, thereby exceeding the limitations imposed on expert evidence.[3644] In particular, Ntahobali asserts that the Trial Chamber erred by using Expert Witness Des Forges's testimony concerning the phone conversations she had with Nsabimana in 1996 to prove Ntahobali's acts and conduct at the prefectoral office notwithstanding the limitations imposed on expert evidence.[3645] He contends that Expert Witnesses Guichaoua's and Des Forges's evidence should be excluded and that he should be acquitted of crimes allegedly committed at the prefectoral office.[3646]

1598. The Prosecution argues that Ntahobali's arguments are meritless and should be summarily dismissed.[3647]

1599. The Appeals Chamber observes that, with respect to the Trial Chamber's allegedly erroneous use of Expert Witness Guichaoua's evidence, Ntahobali simply refers to paragraphs 2560, 2561, and 2575 of the Trial Judgement, which discuss the witness's evidence concerning Nyiramasuhuko's diary.[3648] However, his blanket assertion that the witness's statements referred "to facts rather than opinions" fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the consideration of Expert Witness Guichaoua's interpretations of Nyiramasuhuko's diary and that this evidence exceeded the scope of his area of expertise.[3649]

1600. As for the purported improper use of Expert Witness Des Forges's evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing Witness TA's evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack, the Trial Chamber noted that the statement Nsabimana gave to Expert Witness Des Forges during a telephone conversation in 1996 that "soldiers and others were coming to take away women to rape them and other people were being selected to be killed" was "consistent" with the testimony of [3647] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1122. See also ibid., para. 949.

[3648] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 759. In his notice of appeal, Ntahobali refers to paragraphs 2338-2342, 2405, 2605, 3174, 3205-3207, and 3213 of the Trial Judgement. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 270. As he has not repeated the references to these paragraphs in this portion of his appeal brief, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has abandoned his contentions with respect to these paragraphs, some of which are not directly related to the Butare Prefecture Office.

Witness TA.[3650] When considering the number of refugees abducted and killed from the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber noted that "Des Forges testified that Nsabimana told her he did not know how many refugees were taken away from the [Butare Prefecture Office], but that he did know that this was happening."[3651]

1601. The Appeals Chamber has repeatedly held that the role of expert witnesses is to assist the trial chamber in its assessment of the evidence before it, and not to testify on disputed facts as would ordinary witnesses.[3652] In the case at hand, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's consideration of Expert Witness Des Forges's general evidence about the rapes, killings, and abductions committed at the prefectoral office ignored the limitations imposed on expert evidence. In particular, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how Expert Witness Des Forges's general testimony about rapes and killings concerned the acts and conduct of Ntahobali or disputed facts. To the extent the Trial Chamber required corroboration of Witness TA's evidence to find that Ntahobali committed crimes at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack, it relied on factual witnesses who implicated him in crimes there.[3653] Likewise, the Trial Chamber relied on factual witnesses to determine how many refugees were abducted from the prefectoral office and killed.[3654]

1602. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its use of expert witness testimony in reaching conclusions concerning attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office.

(vi) Exculpatory Evidence

1603. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber ignored evidence from his Witnesses WCNJ and WUNBJ that attacks did not occur at the Butare Prefecture Office and that the Trial Chamber violated its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion by not expressly assessing this evidence.[3655] Specifically, Ntahobali points to Witness WCNJ's testimony that the witness spoke with the Tutsi refugees present at the prefectoral office who never mentioned that they faced security problems, but instead spoke of difficulties in finding food and having to sleep on the veranda.[3656] Ntahobali also highlights Witness WUNBJ's testimony that he was present at the prefectoral office during all working days and sometimes on weekends and that: (i) he never saw or heard of any rapes or abductions, or that Ntahobali was involved in criminal activities there; (ii) no mass grave could have been dug without his knowledge, and he did not see corpses at the Butare Prefecture Office; (iii) the night watchman did not inform him that any crimes were committed during the night; and (iv) the number of refugees hardly changed.[3657] Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber could not have found that there was a mass grave at the prefectoral office, that there was a visible reduction in the number of refugees, or that there were attacks at night "without dealing with [this] highly relevant and exculpatory piece of evidence."[3658]

1604. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in rejecting the evidence of Witnesses WUNBJ and WCNJ because their testimonies were contradicted by, inter alios, Witnesses TK, SU, RE, SS, FAP, QBQ, and SJ, who provided credible evidence about the rapes, abductions, and killings that occurred at the prefectoral office and of Ntahobali's involvement.[3659]

1605. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber neither summarised nor expressly assessed the evidence of Witnesses WUNBJ and WCNJ referred to by Ntahobali as relevant to whether attacks occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office. The Trial Judgement nonetheless shows that the Trial Chamber did not disregard their testimonies, as it expressly referred to and evaluated them elsewhere in the Trial Judgement in relation to the establishment of the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and Ntahobali's role in its operation, the number of refugees at the EER, the training of civilians, the distributions of weapons, and the purpose of roadblocks in Butare Town.[3660]

1606. The Appeals Chamber recalls that if a trial chamber did not refer to the evidence given by a witness, it is to be presumed that the trial chamber assessed and weighed the evidence, but found that the evidence did not prevent it from arriving at its findings.[3661] In the instant case, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber disregarded the evidence of these two witnesses as it relates to the prefectoral office but considers that, given its limited probative value, the Trial Chamber found that the evidence did not prevent it from reaching the conclusion that Ntahobali perpetrated attacks against the Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office.

1607. The Appeals Chamber observes that the evidence of Witness WCNJ to which Ntahobali refers is brief and indirect[3662] as well as of questionable credibility in light of mutually corroborating direct and indirect evidence provided by numerous Prosecution witnesses that attacks occurred at the prefectoral office.[3663] As for Witness WUNBJ's evidence, while Ntahobali stresses that the witness testified that he went to work at the prefectoral office on all working days and some weekends, a comprehensive reading of the witness's evidence reflects that he was engaged in one to two weeks of training elsewhere in Butare in the time period between the middle and the end of May 1994 and was manning roadblocks following the training.[3664] As this contradicts the witness's testimony that he went to work at the prefectoral office on all working days, the probative value of the witness's daytime observations of the prefectoral office is diminished. His contradictory evidence also undermines the credibility of his assertion that the number of refugees at the prefectoral office did not change, particularly when considered against the contradictory evidence of multiple Prosecution and Defence witnesses.[3665] Witness WUNBJ's testimony also reflects that he was not one of the displaced persons at the prefectoral office,[3666] was not present there during the evenings[3667] – when the Trial Chamber found that attacks had occurred[3668] – and that his own characterisation of his conversation with those who sought refuge there was nothing more than greeting them.[3669] Witness WUNBJ's statement during cross-examination that he would have known if violence had occurred at night was merely based on his assumption that the night watchman would have informed him.[3670] The Appeals Chamber further notes that, while the witness testified that he saw no mass grave at the prefectoral office and that he would have seen it if one [3663] For example, Prosecution Witnesses TA, QJ, TK, SU, RE, SS, FAP, SD, QBP, and QBQ all testified that attacks were perpetrated against the displaced Tutsis seeking refuge at the prefectoral office some time between April and mid-June 1994. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2174-2197, 2201-2224, 2242-2318, 2328-2334.

[3668] Trial Judgement, paras. 2644, 2653, 2738, 2773, 2781. Ntahobali argues that Witness WUNBJ's testimony contradicts that of Witnesses TA and TK that daytime attacks occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 608, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 2188, 2218, 2630, 2638, 2771. The Appeals Chamber observes that all but one of the paragraphs referred to by Ntahobali reflect the Trial Chamber's consideration of the evidence of these witnesses that they had observed Ntahobali during the day, not that attacks occurred then. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2218, 2630, 2638, 2771. Moreover, while paragraph 2188 of the Trial Judgement recalls Witness TA's testimony that Ntahobali came during the day and took people away to be killed, the Trial Chamber did not expressly accept this evidence, and a comprehensive reading of Witness WUNBJ's testimony reflects that his presence at the prefectoral office was not daily and not necessarily in contradiction with this evidence. The Appeals Chamber dismisses this contention.

existed,[3671] he also testified that he did not know what a mass grave was and did not know if he could recognise one.[3672]

1608. The Appeals Chamber considers that, in light of the numerous accounts from the relevant Prosecution witnesses that contradict Witness WUNBJ's testimony, a reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness WUNBJ's indirect evidence that no violence occurred at the prefectoral office and that there were no signs of violence there lacked credibility.[3673]

1609. While it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to discuss expressly the relevant aspects of the evidence of Witnesses WUNBJ and WCNJ to which Ntahobali refers, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider them.

(b) Identification Evidence

1610. In concluding that Ntahobali participated in the Mid-May Attack, the Last Half of May Attacks, the Night of Three Attacks, and the First Half of June Attacks that led to the abduction, killing, and rape of displaced Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office,[3674] the Trial Chamber relied on identification evidence provided by Prosecution Witnesses TA, TK, QJ, SJ, RE, QBQ, QBP, QY, SD, FAP, SU, and SS, who testified about Ntahobali's presence at the prefectoral office.[3675]

1611. Ntahobali submits that the evidence of these witnesses was not sufficient to establish his involvement in the attacks at the prefectoral office beyond reasonable doubt.[3676] In particular, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its evaluation of the identification evidence by: (i) improperly relying on hearsay evidence from witnesses with no prior knowledge of him; and (ii) failing to address the Prosecution's failure to conduct an identification parade and ask certain witnesses to identify him in court as well as by not sufficiently considering the inability of several witnesses to identify him in court.[3677] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting the evidence of Prosecution witnesses with respect to the Mid-May Attack, the Last Half [3672] Witness WUNBJ, T. 5 April 2006 p. 59 (closed session). of May Attacks, and the Night of Three Attacks.[3678] The Appeals Chamber will address Ntahobali's general challenges prior to examining his contentions related to the specific attacks.

(i) General Challenges

a. Hearsay Evidence

1612. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to apply sufficient caution when assessing identification evidence, because it consisted solely of hearsay evidence from witnesses who had no prior knowledge of him.[3679] He notes that the witnesses' testimonies reflect that he was not known by them, but identified by Interahamwe[3680] or unidentified refugees.[3681] He argues that Interahamwe may have "falsely used the name Shalom to fool the victims" or that refugees may have misheard the name uttered, as the record reflects that a name similar to his – Salum – was commonly used.[3682] In support of his contention, Ntahobali submits that a review of the transcripts and audio recordings reveals that Witnesses QA, TA, SU, SS, and QBQ mispronounced his name.[3683] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber's emphasis that some refugees specified that he was the son of Nyiramasuhuko is misplaced given the possibility that the unknown persons who identified him at the Butare Prefecture Office could have been mistaken in their identification.[3684]

1613. In addition, Ntahobali argues that it was inappropriate for the Trial Chamber to rely on jurisprudence affirming the use of hearsay identification evidence, given the material differences between the evidence used to identify him and the convicted persons in the other cases.[3685] According to Ntahobali, no reasonable trier of fact could have convicted him for crimes committed at the prefectoral office in the absence of corroborating "firsthand identification evidence".[3686]

1614. The Prosecution responds that the law allows reliance on hearsay identification evidence without corroboration by firsthand evidence and that the Trial Chamber exercised sufficient caution when assessing this evidence.[3687] It contends that Ntahobali's submission that Interahamwe would refer to someone other than him by his name is unsupported.[3688] The Prosecution also argues that Ntahobali's contention that he might have been misidentified at the prefectoral office based on someone else having a name similar to his is without merit, noting that the evidence reflects that his name – Shalom – is Hebrew and unique.[3689] Likewise, it contends that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the fact that multiple witnesses also referred to him as Nyiramasuhuko's son does not bolster his identification.[3690] It adds that Ntahobali has not drawn any relevant distinction between the Trial Chamber's reliance on hearsay identification evidence and the Tribunal's jurisprudence that has affirmed the use of such identification in other cases.[3691]

1615. Ntahobali replies that the name "Shalom" is not, as the Prosecution contends, unique.[3692]

1616. The Appeals Chamber recalls that neither the Rules nor the jurisprudence of the Tribunal oblige a trial chamber to require a particular type of identification evidence[3693] and that trial chambers have the discretion to consider cautiously and rely on hearsay evidence.[3694] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that a witness's prior knowledge of, or level of familiarity with, an accused is a relevant factor in the assessment of identification evidence; however, contrary to what Ntahobali suggests, the fact that a witness did not personally know an accused prior to the events does not necessarily undermine the reliability of his identification evidence.[3695] In the present case, the Trial Chamber correctly recalled generally the law concerning reliance on hearsay evidence in an introductory section of the Trial Judgement and specifically when considering such evidence with respect to Ntahobali's identification at the prefectoral office.[3696] The Trial Chamber considered the hearsay nature of various witnesses' identifications of Ntahobali at the prefectoral office and concluded that they were reliable for a variety of reasons.[3697] Ntahobali's general contentions concerning the Trial Chamber's use of hearsay, which do not discuss this analysis,[3698] fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in this regard.

1617. Turning to Ntahobali's contention that Interahamwe may have falsely used the name "Shalom" to fool the victims, the Appeals Chamber understands that Ntahobali raises this contention to demonstrate error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TK's evidence, who heard Interahamwe who had surrounded Ntahobali refer to him as "Shalom, chef."[3699] The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's unsupported contention fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TK's evidence, which it found to be "significantly detailed" and corroborated by other witnesses.[3700] Likewise, Ntahobali's argument that he might have been misidentified by refugees because another name similar to his – "Salum" – was common in Butare is as speculative as it is misleading, as the evidence of Witness QA that he cites in support of this submission reflects that this name was only common among Muslims in Butare rather than all men.[3701] Similarly, he does not show that the various pronunciations of his name by witnesses who testified before the Tribunal varied materially from "Shalom" so as to make it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on hearsay identifications of him.[3702] Indeed, the transcripts from the witnesses pointed out by Ntahobali reflect the name being recorded as "Shalom".[3703] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber finds that, contrary to Ntahobali's assertions, the fact that Ntahobali was identified repeatedly as Nyiramasuhuko's son provided further support to the reliability of the identifications.[3704] Ntahobali does not show that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in relying on the impugned hearsay evidence.[3705]

[3700] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2668-2677. Witness TA's evidence reflects that, on another occasion, she heard Interahamwe refer to Ntahobali as Shalom as well. See Witness TA, T. 25 October 2001 p. 60. The Appeals Chamber disagrees with Ntahobali's contention that Witness TK's evidence required corroboration or his implicit assertion that the witness's evidence of Interahamwe referring to him as "Shalom, chef" is somehow incompatible with other evidence on the record. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 728; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 319.

Notably, while Witness TA wrote "Chaloum", the interpreter heard the witness say the name "Shalom." See Witness TA, T. 25 October 2001 pp. 31, 32, 35, 36. Furthermore, the interpreter noted that words written with "L" can be pronounced as "R". See Witness TA, T. 25 October 2001 p. 31 ("THE INTERPRETER: She couldn't pronounce the 'R'. [3704] Trial Judgement, paras. 2633, 2668.

[3705] Ntahobali argues that, given the nature of the identification evidence, it is impossible to establish the declarants' reliability and that he was prevented from verifying their information through investigation or cross-examination. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 730. However, Ntahobali's contention is unsupported by any reference and thereby fails to meet the standard required for appellate review. See supra, para. 35. Similarly, Ntahobali argues that four witnesses never testified to Ntahobali's presence at the Butare Prefecture Office and that the Trial Chamber failed to assess this omission, particularly because, in Ntahobali's words, "people apparently exclaimed saying 'this is Shalom' or something to that effect". See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 744. See also ibid., para. 717. The Prosecution rejects this contention as unsupported and unpersuasive. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1094, 1111. Ntahobali does not point to a particular finding of the Trial Chamber nor demonstrate with references to the record how evidence of witnesses hearing Ntahobali's name at the Butare Prefecture Office is necessarily incompatible with witnesses who did not hear people state his name. The Appeals Chamber dismisses this contention without further consideration.

1618. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on inapplicable jurisprudence, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber cited to excerpts of the Kamuhanda Appeal Judgement and Rukundo Appeal Judgement as supporting the proposition that identification of an accused at the scene of a crime may be based on hearsay evidence.[3706] Ntahobali argues that unlike the accused in the Rukundo and Kamuhanda cases, he was not a figure of authority and that, unlike those cases, hearsay evidence used against him was not corroborated by identification evidence from witnesses who knew him.[3707] While hearsay identification evidence from witnesses who had no prior knowledge of Kamuhanda was used to corroborate more direct identification evidence in that case,[3708] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate material differences between the nature of the identification of Rukundo by witnesses who had no prior knowledge of him and the identification of Ntahobali by witnesses in a similar position with respect to him.[3709] Ntahobali also does not show that being a figure of authority is a necessary ingredient when relying on hearsay identification evidence.

1619. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated any error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on hearsay identification evidence.

b. Identification Parade and In-Court Identification

1620. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber failed to rule on his motion of 30 May 2001 requesting the Prosecution to conduct an identification parade; a request that was repeated in his closing brief and similarly ignored.[3710] He further emphasises that, of the 12 witnesses who identified him as being present at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Prosecution failed to ask five of them to identify him in court,[3711] three testified that they would be unable to identify him in court,[3712] one was not found credible by the Trial Chamber for this event,[3713] and one misidentified

Ntahobali as Nteziryayo.[3714] Ntahobali argues that, consequently, only Witnesses TK and TA, whose reliability and credibility he argues are questionable for other reasons, were able to identify him in court.[3715]

1621. The Prosecution responds that in-court identifications are afforded little to no credence and that, accordingly, the Trial Chamber did not rely on them when assessing evidence of Ntahobali's presence at the Butare Prefecture Office.[3716] It adds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on witnesses who did not identify him in court or in relying on Witness RE's identification evidence notwithstanding the witness's misidentification of Ntahobali in court.[3717]

1622. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the Trial Chamber expressly denied his 30 May 2001 Motion requesting that the Prosecution conduct an identification parade.[3718] Ntahobali does not argue that the Trial Chamber erred in its decision and fails to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber should have reconsidered its position based on submissions in the Ntahobali Closing Brief nearly eight years later.[3719] His submissions in this respect are therefore dismissed.

1623. Turning to Ntahobali's contentions that Witnesses QBP, QJ, SD, SU, and SS were not asked to identify Ntahobali in court and that Witnesses FAP, QBQ, and QY testified that they would not be able to do so, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witnesses FAP, QBP, QBQ, QY, SD, SS, and SU were principally used to corroborate the evidence of Witness TK – who identified Ntahobali in court – about the vehicle used by attackers or the fact that it was driven by Ntahobali.[3720] Their prior knowledge of Ntahobali and ability to identify him in the courtroom were therefore of limited to no relevance. Given these circumstances, which were considered by the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the fact that in court identifications of Ntahobali were not requested or that certain witnesses testified that they would be unable to identify him in court prevented the Trial Chamber from relying on their evidence.[3721]

1624. With respect to Witness RE's misidentification in court of Ntahobali as Nteziryayo, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered this when assessing the witness's evidence implicating Ntahobali in attacks at the EER.[3722] It found that the misidentification did not undermine the reliability of her identification evidence in light of the "nearly nine years" that had passed since the attacks.[3723] The Trial Chamber also found that Witness RE's evidence concerning the circumstances of her identification of Ntahobali on the Night of Three Attacks was corroborated by other witnesses[3724] and the witness's ability to describe Ntahobali's familial link with Nyiramasuhuko.[3725] Although a witness's failure to identify an accused in court can be a reason for declining to rely on the identification evidence of that witness,[3726] the Appeals Chamber recalls that the failure of courtroom identification does not necessarily destroy any case which might have been otherwise established in evidence.[3727] The Appeals Chamber considers that, in the present instance, Ntahobali fails to show that Witness RE's in-court misidentification of Ntahobali prevented the Trial Chamber from relying on the witness's otherwise credible and corroborated identification evidence of Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks.

1625. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error concerning the absence of an identification parade, the absence of in-court identifications, or an incorrect in-court identification.

(ii) Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks

1626. The Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali was present and participated in the Mid-May Attack based on Witness TA's identification evidence.[3728] When considering the basis of Witness TA's knowledge of Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber noted that she was not acquainted with Ntahobali prior to encountering him during the Mid-May Attack and only knew him by his given [3721] The Appeals Chamber assesses in greater detail below Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on identification evidence from Witnesses QBP, TA, and SD in relation to the Night of Three Attacks as they did not testify about this event. See infra, Section V.I.2(b)(iii)c.

name, "Shalom".[3729] However, it observed that she learned he was "the son of Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, who was the Minister of Women's Affairs."[3730] Consequently, the Trial Chamber was convinced that Witness TA was referring to Ntahobali throughout her testimony when she referred to "Shalom".[3731]

1627. The Trial Chamber also considered the following circumstances as demonstrating the reliability of Witness TA's identification of Ntahobali during this specific event:

> (1) at times, there was some public lighting from lamp posts that reached the area from the other side of the road; (2) there was moonlight behind the [Butare Prefecture Office] where Witness TA said she was raped by Ntahobali; (3) Interahamwe used torches to search through the refugees; and (4) Witness TA provided significant details as to what Ntahobali was carrying, stated what he was wearing, and Ntahobali was in close proximity to Witness TA when he grabbed her hand and raped her. Further, she had also previously seen him in daylight.[3732]

1628. As regard the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, during which the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali raped Witness TA, the Trial Chamber recalled that, by then, Witness TA had already seen Ntahobali and concluded that she was close enough to identify him because they were in "direct contact".[3733] When assessing Witness TA's evidence about the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, the Trial Chamber similarly found her identification of Ntahobali reliable because, at that point, "Witness TA had already suffered the same treatment at the hands of Ntahobali" and was again in contact with him because he handed her over to a group of Interahamwe.[3734]

1629. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness TA's identification evidence, partly because it relied on her in-court identification of Ntahobali after the Presiding Judge had identified him.[3735] Ntahobali further submits that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness TA's identification evidence, because she could not provide a credible physical

Further, she stated that Shalom raped her on two occasions and took her by the arm to Interahamwe in order to be raped on multiple occasions. Therefore, Witness TA had numerous opportunities to view Shalom up close. Although the attacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office] occurred at night, Witness TA stated there was moonlight behind the [Butare Prefecture Office] on several of those occasions. In addition, there was occasionally some public lighting from the lamp posts that reached the area from the other side of the road near Chez Venant. description of him and because she conceded that she did not dare to look at anyone in the face.[3736] He also contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider evidence from Witness TA and several other witnesses, which demonstrated that there was little or no lighting at the prefectoral office[3737] and very little moonlight at the time when the attacks occurred.[3738] He points to the evidence from Witness RE suggesting that, under these circumstances, it was even difficult to identify the uniforms of assailants, and argues that it would have been harder to recognise faces.[3739] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber misstated Witness TA's testimony in paragraph 2628 of the Trial Judgement that the "truck's lights were illuminated" as the witness testified that the vehicle lights were switched off when it was parked.[3740]

1630. Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness TA observed Ntahobali during the day prior to the Mid-May Attack, as her evidence reflects that she saw Ntahobali training Interahamwe during the day in June 1994, while the latter were singing.[3741] He also argues that this evidence is uncorroborated and contradicted by Witnesses FAP and RE who testified to having heard no singing throughout their stay at the prefectoral office, and should not have been used to bolster Witness TA's identifications of him during the attacks, which occurred in May 1994.[3742] Ntahobali concludes that, in light of the Trial Chamber's failure to consider the arguments above, the hearsay nature of Witness TA's uncorroborated identification, and the Trial Chamber's failure to consider the difficult circumstances in which she identified him, no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness TA's testimony.[3743]

1631. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness TA's in-court identification of Ntahobali, that Ntahobali misrepresents Witness TA's testimony, and that he otherwise fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of her identification evidence.[3744]

Ntahobali also raises arguments that Witness TA's evidence is contradicted by that of Witnesses RE and QBP. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 740. These arguments, which pertain to the merits of Witness TA's testimony implicating Ntahobali in crimes at the Butare Prefecture Office rather than the witness's ability to identify Ntahobali are discussed below. See infra, Sections V.I.2(c)(iii), V.I.2(c)(iv).
[3744] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1112. See also AT. 16 April 2015 pp. 10, 11.

1632. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's submission that the Presiding Judge identified Ntahobali in court prior to Witness TA's identification, the Presiding Judge simply identified counsel for Ntahobali.[3745] Furthermore, Witness TA was asked to identify Ntahobali in court four days after this incident.[3746] Ntahobali does not demonstrate how the conduct of the Presiding Judge corrupted the subsequent in-court identification process, to which Ntahobali did not object when it occurred. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber simply recalled that Witness TA identified Ntahobali in court but that this aspect of her evidence was not material to its assessment of the witness's identification evidence.[3747]

1633. The Appeals Chamber also finds that Ntahobali's undeveloped contention that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness TA's identification evidence because she could not provide a credible physical description of him ignores that Witness TA described Ntahobali when asked to do so.[3748] Witness TA also described what he wore and carried, which the Trial Chamber referred to and found reliable.[3749] While Ntahobali points to an excerpt of Witness TA's testimony that she could not look at anyone in the face, this portion of her evidence arose when she was being asked if she knew who the prefect of Butare was at the end of April 1994.[3750] This statement does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TA's identification of Ntahobali was unreasonable given that it was elicited for purposes other than establishing how she was able to identify Ntahobali.

1634. With respect to Ntahobali's claim that the Trial Chamber failed to consider evidence that there was insufficient lighting at the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber again recalls that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness TA's ability to identify Ntahobali based, in part, on Witness TA's evidence that "at times, there was some public lighting from lamp posts that reached the area from the other side of the road", "there was moonlight behind the [Butare Prefecture Office]", and "Interahamwe used torches to search through the refugees".[3751]

1635. Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering other evidence that there was no lighting at the prefectoral office fails to undermine the Trial Chamber's finding that "at times, there was some public lighting from lamp posts that reached the area from the other side of the road".[3752] Ntahobali simply refers to disparate observations from witnesses at the prefectoral office that do not demonstrate that their observations coincide with times when Witness TA was raped by Ntahobali or handed over by him to be raped by others,[3753] and which are not necessarily incompatible with Witness TA's own evidence that no light came from the prefectoral office[3754] but that there was some public lighting that came from the direction of the town.[3755]

1636. Similarly, Ntahobali's references to evidence that the attacks on Witness TA occurred during the rainy season[3756] is not incompatible with the Trial Chamber's conclusion that there was moonlight behind the prefectoral office when Witness TA said she was raped by Ntahobali.[3757] Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate how Witness RE's evidence is incompatible with Witness TA's evidence that she could identify Ntahobali. Indeed, the evidence of Witness RE reflects that torchlight enabled her to identify Ntahobali and allowed her to specify that the uniforms used were military uniforms,[3758] undermining Ntahobali's assertion that "if it was hard to make out uniforms, it was obviously even harder to make out faces."[3759]

[3752] Trial Judgement, para. 2638. Ntahobali challenges the Trial Chamber's use of the phrase "at times" with respect to the lighting, arguing that the Kinyarwanda recording of Witness TA's testimony reflects that she only saw lighting on one occasion and did not link it to the night she was attacked and argues that this differs from the transcripts. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 740, referring to Witness TA, T. 8 November 2001 pp. 23, 24. Ntahobali's contentions ignore that the question concerning the lighting was asked in the context of the first time the witness saw Ntahobali. See Witness TA, T. 8 November 2001 p. 23. The Appeals Chamber considers that it was therefore reasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider this evidence in the context of this attack and finds no material significance in the purported distinction raised by Ntahobali.

[3754] Witness TA, T. 30 October 2001 pp. 110-113. Ntahobali also appears to argue that the Trial Chamber failed to acknowledge that Witness TA testified that there was no light at the Butare Prefecture Office. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 740. However, the Trial Chamber's conclusions accurately reflect Witness TA's evidence that light came from sources other than the Butare Prefecture Office. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2630, 2638. Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis and the Appeals Chamber dismisses this contention without further consideration.

[3757] See Trial Judgement, para. 2638. See also Witness TA, T. 30 October 2001 pp. 107, 109. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali also points to an annex of his appeal brief that contains a lunar calendar, which was part of his closing brief at trial and indicates that only nine to 24 percent of the moon was visible in Rwanda in mid-May 1994. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 740, referring to Annex F. The Prosecution responds that Annex F is not part of the record. See Prosecution Response Brief, fn. 2880. Ntahobali appears to suggest that, because Annex F contains facts of common knowledge, its contents are judicially noticed. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 740, referring to Annex F. However, Ntahobali makes no showing that what is contained in Annex F meets the requirements for judicial notice under Rule 94 of the Rules. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Rule 94 of the Rules is not a mechanism that may be employed to circumvent the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence. See Prosecutor v. Blagoje Simić, Case No. IT-95-9-A, Decision on Blagoje Simić's Motion for Admission of Additional Evidence, Alternatively for Taking of Judicial Notice, 1 June 2006, para. 26. Annex F does not constitute evidence in the trial record and Ntahobali has not sought to admit it under Rule 115 of the Rules as additional evidence on appeal. This contention is therefore dismissed.

1637. As to Ntahobali's contentions concerning the Trial Chamber's statement that Witness TA testified that the "truck's lights were illuminated" during the Mid-May Attack, the Appeals Chamber observes that the reference to the witness's testimony provided by the Trial Chamber does not support this statement.[3760] Witness TA testified that the vehicle's lights were switched off when it was parked at the prefectoral office and turned on only when it was moving.[3761] However, the Trial Chamber did not determine that Witness TA was capable of identifying Ntahobali based on lighting from this truck.[3762] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

1638. The Appeals Chamber observes that all of Ntahobali's arguments concerning the Trial Chamber's failure to consider evidence demonstrating the absence of lighting at the Butare Prefecture Office ignore the central aspects of Witness TA's evidence, which gave credence to her identification of Ntahobali and which the Trial Chamber accepted. As recalled above, the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TA's identification evidence was, in part, based on the witness's extended and direct physical contact with Ntahobali when he raped her and when he handed her over to be raped by others.[3763] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali raped Witness TA behind the prefectoral office buildings in the direction of the ORINFOR.[3764] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the evidence he points to concerning the absence of light on the premises of the prefectoral office would have made it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness TA's evidence identifying him.

1639. With respect to Ntahobali's submission that the Trial Chamber erroneously found that Witness TA had seen Ntahobali during the day prior to seeing him during the Mid-May Attack,[3765] the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness TA's testimony, as cited by the Trial Chamber, reflects that the Mid-May Attack was the first occasion on which she saw Ntahobali.[3766] The only reference provided by the Trial Chamber of Witness TA seeing Ntahobali during the day is when she observed Ntahobali leading an Interahamwe training exercise one morning in June 1994.[3767] Consequently, the Trial Chamber erred in paragraph 2638 of the Trial Judgement when stating that she had "seen him in daylight" prior to the Mid-May Attack as there is no evidence supporting this conclusion.[3768] Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that this error renders the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TA's identification of Ntahobali unreasonable given the other factors that the Trial Chamber relied on to bolster the credibility and reliability of Witness TA's identification of Ntahobali, including that "Ntahobali was in close proximity to Witness TA when he grabbed her hand and raped her."[3769]

1640. The Appeals Chamber is equally unconvinced by Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TA's evidence that she saw Ntahobali leading an Interahamwe training exercise one morning in June 1994 because it was uncorroborated and contradicted.[3770] The Appeals Chamber recalls that corroboration is not a requirement and that a trial chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[3771] Having reviewed the evidence of Witnesses RE and FAP pointed out by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that it is necessarily incompatible with Witness TA's evidence, as the excerpts cited fail to show that either Witness RE or Witness FAP were in a similar position as Witness TA when she testified to having observed this event.[3772]

1641. Finally, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness TA's identification evidence despite the fact that her knowledge of Ntahobali was hearsay and uncorroborated.[3773] The Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness TA's testimony reflects that the Trial Chamber was fully apprised of and carefully considered the circumstances in which Witness TA identified Ntahobali.[3774] Ntahobali's unsupported argument that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution does not demonstrate that it erred in its approach.[3775]

1642. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness TA testified that the "truck's lights were illuminated" in paragraph 2628 of the Trial Judgement and in stating that Witness TA had observed Ntahobali during the day prior to the Mid-May Attack. However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that these errors have not occasioned a

[3775] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber unreasonably failed to address the generic nature of the Prosecution witnesses' description of him, which he argues is similar to that of thousands of Rwandan men. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 748. This general contention is unsupported and fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Prosecution identification evidence. Indeed, as noted by the Trial Chamber, the Defence evidence miscarriage of justice given the other factors relied upon by the Trial Chamber to find that Witness TA's identification of Ntahobali was credible and reliable. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was present at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks based on Witness TA's identification evidence.

(iii) Night of Three Attacks

1643. When assessing whether Ntahobali was present and involved in the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber found Witness TK's testimony "particularly convincing" as to the events of that evening.[3776] It further considered Witness TK's evidence, in conjunction with the testimonies of Witnesses TA, QJ, QBQ, QBP, RE, FAP, SD, SJ, SS, and QY, that Ntahobali arrived at the Butare Prefecture Office in a pickup truck and that several of these witnesses described Ntahobali as driving it.[3777]

1644. The Trial Chamber also found that Witness TK, who did not know Ntahobali prior to this evening, was able to identify him based on overhearing a conversation Ntahobali had with Mbasha's wife, which was followed by Ntahobali abducting her and her children.[3778] The Trial Chamber considered that Witnesses QJ, SJ, RE, and WKKTD corroborated some of the "details of the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali".[3779] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found that Witnesses SJ and RE "corroborated the occurrence of the conversation between Ntahobali and a woman who was seated on the veranda."[3780] It further found that Witness QJ "corroborated the occurrence of the abduction"[3781] and that this witness and Witness WKKTD testified that Mbasha's wife worked at a pharmacy, "lending credence to the veracity of Witness TK's account that Mbasha's wife said she knew Ntahobali because he was sent to the pharmacy to buy drugs."[3782] The Trial Chamber concluded that, "based upon the consistency and corroboration of the substantive evidence, […] Ntahobali was in fact present at the [Butare Prefecture Office] during the [Night of Three Attacks]."[3783]

1645. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness TK's identification evidence generally and in relying on Witness SJ in light of its conclusion that it would not rely on that witness's testimony in relation to the abduction of Mbasha's wife.[3784] He further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting the evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, RE, and SJ concerning the conversation between Ntahobali and Mbasha's wife and the ensuing abduction of her and her children during the Night of Three Attacks.[3785] Ntahobali similarly argues that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting the identification evidence of Witnesses QY, TA, SD, FAP, and QBQ, who the Trial Chamber found corroborated Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali drove the pickup truck used during the Night of Three Attacks.[3786] The Appeals Chamber will address these arguments in turn.

a. Witnesses TK and SJ

i. Witness TK

1646. As noted above, the Trial Chamber found Witness TK's evidence "particularly convincing" as to the events of the Night of Three Attacks.[3787] Its deliberations on the evidence concerning Ntahobali's presence at the Butare Prefecture Office demonstrate the witness's central importance to its conclusion that Ntahobali was present during these attacks.[3788]

1647. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in according weight to Witness TK's in-court identification of him.[3789] Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber also erred in relying on the fact that Witness TK identified him on the basis of a conversation with Mbasha's wife during which he acknowledged his identity to Mbasha's wife, given that Witness TK did not provide evidence to this effect.[3790] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness TK: (i) admitted that she "was not really looking at" him but "only darted glances at him" and that he was surrounded by people; (ii) testified that she covered herself with "some clothing" on the Night of Three Attacks so as not to expose herself, which explained why she could not provide a "detailed description" of him; (iii) refused to say whether she needed glasses or not; and (iv) testified to having seen him during the day on one occasion only and without paying attention if he was in fact there that day.[3791] According to Ntahobali, Witness TK's evidence should have been treated with caution under the particular circumstances of her identification.[3792]

1648. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's assertion that Witness TK did not testify that Ntahobali acknowledged his identity to Mbasha's wife is based on a misstatement of the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali "acknowledged his own identity" during the conversation.[3793] It further argues that the Trial Chamber reasonably relied on Witness TK's identification evidence despite her near-sightedness and highlights that the witness clarified that at the time she could in fact see Ntahobali.[3794]

1649. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in support of his contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TK's in-court identification of him, Ntahobali only cites to the Trial Chamber's summary of this aspect of the witness's evidence.[3795] However, the Trial Chamber's express assessment of Witness TK's evidence placing Ntahobali at the prefectoral office on the Night of Three Attacks in fact contains no reference to the witness's in-court identification of Ntahobali.[3796] Ntahobali's contention in this respect is therefore dismissed.

1650. As suggested by Ntahobali, the Trial Judgement could give the impression that Witness TK testified that Ntahobali expressly acknowledged Mbasha's wife's identification of him.[3797] However, the Appeals Chamber notes that such a conclusion is not supported by the Trial Chamber's prior summaries of Witness TK's testimony or a review of the evidence cited by it.[3798] Witness TK's evidence, as summarised by the Trial Chamber, nonetheless reflects that when Ntahobali asked Mbasha's wife if she knew him and she responded that he was "Shalom" whose mother was "Pauline", he did not reject her response and continued to speak with her.[3799] Her evidence does not reflect that Ntahobali rejected this identification of him – suggesting that he tacitly acknowledged it – and the Appeals Chamber considers that, in any event, any error in the Trial Chamber's reflection of her evidence would not result in a miscarriage of justice.

[3791] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 737, referring to Witness TK, T. 22 May 2002 pp. 51, 52, T. 23 May 2002 pp. 88, 89, 91-97, T. 27 May 2002 pp. 40-42.
[3792] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 737. Ntahobali further contends that Witness TK's account of him as a killer trying to convince Mbasha's wife to leave with him, his subsequent assault of her, and that she was undressed and seated in the front cabin of the vehicle is implausible. See ibid., para. 722. The Appeals Chamber dismisses this contention, which only reflects Ntahobali's unsubstantiated opinion.

1651. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider the specific excerpts of Witness TK's testimony concerning the circumstances under which she saw Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks or during the day. As evinced by the Prosecution's response, Ntahobali takes aspects of Witness TK's evidence out of context and ignores that the witness maintained that she looked at Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks and provided a physical description of him.[3800] The Appeals Chamber considers that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to rely on Witness TK's identification evidence, notwithstanding her concessions that she did not stare at him.[3801] Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Trial Chamber cautiously considered the circumstances concerning Witness TK's ability to observe Ntahobali on this evening. Specifically, it concluded that she was close enough to identify Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks without glasses on the basis of her testimony that her near-sightedness was not so bad that she could not identify people in the courtroom without glasses, and her explanation that she was at the front of the prefectoral office and could see everything the Interahamwe were doing.[3802]

1652. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred when considering that Witness TK testified that she saw Ntahobali "during the day on a few occasions",[3803] the Appeals Chamber observes that, in contrast with Ntahobali's assertions, a review of Witness TK's testimony indicates that she testified that Ntahobali "could occasionally be seen" at the prefectoral office during the day in addition to during the evenings when the attacks occurred.[3804] Ntahobali's argument that Witness TK did not pay attention if Ntahobali was at the prefectoral office stems from a reading of the witness's testimony taken out of context and is without merit.[3805]

1653. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's arguments in these respects.

ii. Witness SJ

1654. When assessing evidence of Ntahobali's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber considered that Witness SJ's evidence corroborated "some of the details" of Witness TK's evidence concerning the "occurrence" of the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali.[3806] In a later section of the Trial Judgement specifically concerning the abduction of Mbasha's wife, the Trial Chamber further found that "Witness SJ corroborated Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali took the woman and her children in the vehicle and drove away with them."[3807] However, the Trial Chamber, observing that Witness SJ admitted during her recall testimony in 2009 that she "had not told the truth in her original testimony" when denying knowing Witnesses TK, TA, and QJ upon the instructions of a Prosecution translator, did "not accept Witness SJ's testimony as to this event."[3808]

1655. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably relied on Witness SJ's testimony to corroborate the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali to establish that he was at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three attacks when it subsequently rejected the witness's inextricably linked testimony concerning Mbasha's wife's abduction.[3809]

1656. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness SJ's evidence to corroborate the "occurrence" of the conversation between Ntahobali and Mbasha's wife was unreasonable when the Trial Chamber only held that it did "not accept" Witness SJ's testimony with respect to proving the abduction of Mbasha's wife, for which it relied on Witnesses TK and QJ.[3810]

1657. The Appeals Chamber recalls its settled jurisprudence that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony.[3811] However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber rejected Witness SJ's evidence "as to this event", i.e. with respect to the abduction of the Mbasha family, because she had falsely denied knowing Witnesses TK, TA, and QJ.[3812] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have, on the ground articulated by the Trial Chamber, on one hand, rejected Witness SJ's evidence as to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, which corroborated that of Witnesses TK and QJ,[3813] but, on the other hand, relied on the witness's evidence concerning the conversation between Ntahobali and Mbasha's wife that immediately preceded the abduction as corroborative of Witness TK's evidence. Witness SJ's evidence concerning the conversation between Ntahobali and Mbasha's wife was inextricably linked to her evidence about the abduction and also corroborated the same witness that Witness SJ had denied knowing. Accordingly, the [3813] The Appeals Chamber observes that all three witnesses – Witnesses TA, TK, and QJ – testified about attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office and two of them – Witnesses TK and QJ – were relied upon by the Trial Chamber to find that Ntahobali abducted Mbasha's wife and children. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2717-2727.

Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness SJ's evidence to corroborate Witness TK's evidence identifying Ntahobali as speaking with and abducting Mbasha's wife during the Night of Three Attacks.[3814] The Appeals Chamber will assess the impact of this error, if any, after having reviewed all of Ntahobali's challenges concerning the evidence identifying him in relation to the conversation with and the abduction of Mbasha's wife.

b. Abduction of Mbasha's Wife and Children

1658. When assessing evidence identifying Ntahobali as being present during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber detailed Witness TK's account of a conversation between Ntahobali and Mbasha's wife, where Mbasha's wife identified Ntahobali as Nyiramasuhuko's son, who, in the past, had been sent to the pharmacy by his mother.[3815] The Trial Chamber subsequently relied on this aspect of the witness's testimony when finding that Ntahobali was present during the Night of Three Attacks.[3816] In so doing, the Trial Chamber considered that Witnesses SJ and RE "corroborated the occurrence of the conversation between Ntahobali and a woman who was seated on the veranda."[3817] The Trial Chamber further found that Witness QJ "corroborated the occurrence of the abduction" of Mbasha's wife,[3818] and that this witness and Defence Witness WKKTD testified that Mbasha's wife worked at a pharmacy, "lending credence to the veracity of Witness TK's account that Mbasha's wife said she knew Ntahobali because he was sent to the pharmacy to buy drugs."[3819]

1659. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred as it failed to consider the following inconsistencies among the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, and SJ concerning Ntahobali's conversation with Mbasha's wife and her subsequent abduction:[3820] (i) Witnesses TK and RE were close enough to hear the conversation between Mbasha's wife yet, unlike Witness TK, Witness RE did not testify that Ntahobali asked Mbasha's wife if she knew him, or that the conversation included reference to the family connection between Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko;[3821] (ii) Witness QJ did not testify about a conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali or about [3814] The Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to consider the remainder of Ntahobali's challenges as they relate to the reliability and credibility of Witness SJ's evidence identifying him during the Night of Three Attacks. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 725, 736.

Ntahobali's presence during the event, even though the Trial Chamber found that he was on the veranda with them when this conversation occurred;[3822] (iii) Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife was assaulted and was stripped before being taken away, whereas Witnesses QJ and RE said she was not undressed and Witness RE testified that she was taken away peacefully;[3823] (iv) Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife was taken away in the front cabin of the vehicle whereas Witness QJ testified that Mbasha's wife and her children boarded the back of the vehicle;[3824] (v) Witness RE testified that she assumed Nyiramasuhuko was sitting in the vehicle, whereas Witness TK testified that Nyiramasuhuko was near the vehicle;[3825] (vi) Witness QJ testified that the event occurred in broad daylight where Witness TK specified that it occurred at night;[3826] and (vii) Witness TK described Ntahobali as wearing a long black coat and carrying a sword, whereas Witnesses RE and SJ referred to military fatigues and a gun.[3827] Ntahobali further contends that it is implausible for Witnesses QJ, SJ, and RE "to testify about this event" when none of them mentioned it in their prior statements.[3828]

1660. The Prosecution responds that the inconsistencies identified by Ntahobali are misstatements of the relevant evidence or immaterial to the Trial Chamber's analysis.[3829] It submits that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence, which the Trial Chamber found to be corroborative.[3830]

Without support, Ntahobali contends that Witness RE testified that Mbasha's wife was taken away in the "front cabin" of the vehicle. See ibid., para. 724. However, in Annex C to his appeal brief, he points to evidence demonstrating that Witness RE did not know where Mbasha's wife and her children were placed on the vehicle. See ibid., Annex C, No. 11, referring to Witness RE, T. 26 February 2003 p. 34 (French). The Appeals Chamber will not consider Ntahobali's contradictory submissions further.

Ntahobali appears to argue that the Trial Chamber also failed to consider that Witness TK's evidence was internally inconsistent as well because the witness's prior statement indicates that Nyiramasuhuko walked around the refugees. See ibid., para. 724, referring to Exhibit D44 (Witness TK's November 1996 Statement). Ntahobali does not identify any material difference and this contention is dismissed without further consideration.

Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber's failure to address contradictory evidence about whether the event occurred during the night or day is critical as this would impact the witnesses' abilities to see Ntahobali. See ibid., paras. 724, 738.

[3830] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1103, 1104, 1107. The Prosecution argues that Ntahobali's uncited contentions in paragraph 724 of his appeal brief as well as his blanket references to the annexes referred to in paragraphs 723 and 727 of his appeal brief should be summarily dismissed as they, inter alia, fail to provide exact references to the parts of the trial record supporting the argument. See ibid., paras. 1101, 1104. Ntahobali replies that the uncited contentions found in paragraph 724 of his appeal brief are supported with references in Annexes C, D, and E attached to it. See Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 314. The Appeals Chamber will consider the references provided in the annexes to the extent they support precise arguments fully articulated in the Ntahobali Appeal Brief. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the non-particularised arguments in paragraphs 723 and 727 of the Ntahobali Appeal Brief. However, as paragraph 724 identifies arguments as well as their significance, the Appeals Chamber will refer to the relevant annexes, which provide supporting references to the record.

1661. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Judgement does not reflect express consideration of the purported inconsistencies raised by Ntahobali, some of which were covered during the examination of the witnesses.[3831] However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is within the discretion of a trial chamber to evaluate inconsistencies in the evidence, to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible, and to accept or reject the fundamental features of the evidence,[3832] without explaining its decision in every detail.[3833] Corroboration may exist even when some details differ between testimonies, provided that no credible testimony describes the facts in question in a way which is not compatible with the description given in another credible testimony.[3834]

1662. As regards purported inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ concerning the substance and occurrence of a conversation between Ntahobali and Mbasha's wife, the Appeals Chamber finds that the differences identified by Ntahobali are not material and did not require express consideration by the Trial Chamber. Specifically, while Ntahobali emphasises that Witness RE, unlike Witness TK, did not testify to hearing Mbasha's wife identify Ntahobali or make any familial connection between him and Nyiramasuhuko as testified to by Witness TK, the Appeals Chamber, having reviewed the testimonies cited by Ntahobali and the Trial Chamber,[3835] recalls its previous determination that the evidence of Witnesses TK and RE is consistent as to the manner in which Ntahobali sought to induce Mbasha's wife to leave the Butare Prefecture Office and that the Trial Chamber's summary of their accounts reflects this consistency.[3836] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has also addressed and dismissed challenges that the evidence of Witness QJ was incompatible with that of Witnesses TK and RE concerning this event because Witness QJ did not testify about the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali or identify Ntahobali as present during the Night of Three Attacks.[3837] Ntahobali

[3837] See supra, Section IV.F.2(e)(iii)b. Ntahobali further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in stating in paragraphs 2672 and 2680 of the Trial Judgement, respectively, that Witness QJ "corroborated some of the details of the conversation between Mbasha's wife and Ntahobali" and that the witness had "an adequate basis upon which to identify Ntahobali". See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 738. These uncited statements give the impression that the Trial Chamber considered that Witness QJ expressly testified about Ntahobali's presence during the conversation with and abduction of Mbasha's wife. However, a review of the Trial Chamber's detailed analysis of Witness QJ's evidence, supported by citations, reveals that the Trial Chamber considered that the witness corroborated the identification of Mbasha's wife, her profession, and the occurrence of the abduction of Mbasha's wife and her children. See Trial fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could consider the testimonies of Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ to be compatible or that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion by not expressly addressing the purported differences in their testimonies pointed out by Ntahobali.

1663. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife was assaulted and stripped before being taken away, whereas Witnesses QJ and RE said she was not undressed and Witness RE testified that she was taken away peacefully.[3838] The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife was stripped by Interahamwe once she arrived at the vehicle, and not by Ntahobali.[3839] While Witness RE denied that Mbasha's wife was undressed, she was not able to discuss where Mbasha's wife was placed in the vehicle.[3840] Her evidence suggests that she did not necessarily follow what occurred once Mbasha's wife arrived at the vehicle and that she speculated that Mbasha's wife was not undressed on the basis that she was told by Ntahobali that she would not be killed at the prefectoral office.[3841] Moreover, Witness RE, similarly to Witness TK, testified that Interahamwe stripped people at the prefectoral office who were removed from it on that evening,[3842] an aspect of her testimony which the Trial Chamber expressly recalled in the Trial Judgement.[3843] The evidence of Witness QJ is ambiguous on this point as he was not questioned about whether Mbasha's wife was undressed when being loaded on the vehicle.[3844]

1664. In addition, Ntahobali does not substantiate that Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife was "assaulted" or that this witness's description of the removal of Mbasha's wife was materially inconsistent with Witness RE's testimony that Mbasha's wife was taken away "peacefully." A review of the transcripts reveals that both witnesses provided materially consistent accounts of how Ntahobali induced Mbasha's wife to leave her position at the prefectoral office.[3845] Witness TK

Judgement, para. 2675. See also ibid., paras. 2196, 2197 (summarising Witness QJ's evidence), 2718. The Appeals Chamber finds that, while the Trial Judgement is unclear, Ntahobali has not identified an error that has occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

testified that Mbasha's wife started pleading with the Interahamwe at the vehicle[3846] and, as noted above, it is not clear from Witness RE's testimony that she then continued to observe the events.[3847] Against this background, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have considered the testimonies to be compatible or that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion by not expressly addressing the purported differences in their testimonies.[3848]

1665. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali correctly points out that Witness TK testified that Mbasha's wife was taken away in the front cabin of the vehicle whereas Witness QJ testified that Mbasha's wife and her children boarded the back of the vehicle.[3849] The Trial Chamber expressly recalled Witness QJ's testimony on this point and noted Witness SJ's testimony that Mbasha's wife was placed in the front of the vehicle.[3850] The Trial Chamber did not expressly set forth Witness TK's testimony as to where Mbasha's wife and her children were placed in the vehicle.[3851] Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the variance between the evidence of Witness TK and that of Witness QJ was material to Witness TK's ability to identify Ntahobali on that evening or so material to the witnesses' evidence concerning the abduction of Mbasha's wife that the Trial Chamber was required to expressly assess this difference.[3852]

1666. Furthermore, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness RE testified that she "assumed" Nyiramasuhuko was sitting in the vehicle, whereas Witness TK testified that Nyiramasuhuko was near the vehicle. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in this contention. Witness RE's evidence shows that she did not see Nyiramasuhuko and that

Without support, Ntahobali contends that Witness RE testified that Mbasha's wife was taken away in the "front cabin" of the vehicle. See ibid., para. 724. However, in Annex C to his appeal brief, he points to evidence demonstrating that Witness RE did not know where Mbasha's wife and her children were placed on the vehicle. See ibid., Annex C, No. 11, referring to Witness RE, T. 26 February 2003 p. 34 (French). Given the contradictory nature of Ntahobali's submissions, the Appeals Chamber will not consider them further.

she determined that the minister was present based on Ntahobali's comments.[3853] Witness TK's evidence, however, reveals that she saw Nyiramasuhuko when Mbasha's wife was at the vehicle.[3854] The Trial Chamber's summary of the witnesses' evidence reflects their differing perspectives.[3855] Considering the different perspectives of the witnesses, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that no reasonable trier of fact could have considered the testimonies to be compatible or that the Trial Chamber was required to assess any possible differences between them. Indeed, Witness QJ, who also saw Nyiramasuhuko when Mbasha's wife and her children were placed on the vehicle confirmed Witness TK's testimony that Nyiramasuhuko was near the vehicle.[3856]

1667. Ntahobali's contention that Witnesses QJ and TK provided contradictory evidence as to whether the events occurred in broad daylight or at night is not supported by the record. As previously noted, the relevant portions of the witnesses' testimonies reflect that they both considered that the abduction occurred in the evening and that they could only provide estimates as to when it happened.[3857]

1668. Turning next to Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that Witness TK described Ntahobali as wearing a long black coat and carrying a sword, whereas Witnesses RE and SJ referred to military fatigues and a gun, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali only refers to an excerpt of Witness TK's testimony wherein counsel is reading a prior statement given by the witness.[3858] Witness TK was not asked to confirm the accuracy of the statement as it related to the description of what Ntahobali was wearing or what weapon he possessed.[3859] The Appeals Chamber recalls that prior statements of a witness who provides live testimony are primarily relevant to a trial chamber in its assessment of the witness's credibility, and it is not necessarily the case that they should or could generally in and of themselves constitute evidence that the content thereof is truthful.[3860] Under the circumstances, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Trial Chamber was required to discuss any possible variances between Witness TK's prior statement, on one hand, and the testimonies of Witnesses RE and SJ, on the other, as to what Ntahobali was wearing or what weapon he carried.

1669. As for Ntahobali's contention that it is implausible for Witnesses QJ, SJ, and RE "to testify about this event" when none of them mentioned it in their prior statements, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already considered and rejected similar arguments raised in Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.[3861] The Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's arguments for the same reasons and does not find that the Trial Chamber was required to discuss any purported variances or that any omissions in the prior statements of these witnesses rendered their evidence unreliable.

1670. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider purported inconsistencies between the evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, RE, and SJ concerning Ntahobali's conversation with Mbasha's wife and her subsequent abduction when determining whether he was present during the Night of Three Attacks.

1671. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness SJ's evidence to corroborate other evidence identifying Ntahobali as speaking with and abducting Mbasha's wife during the Night of Three Attacks. However, because Witness SJ's evidence was used to corroborate the testimony of Witness TK – who the Trial Chamber found "particularly convincing" as to the events of this evening – and the Trial Chamber considered that Witness TK's accounts were corroborated by Witnesses RE and QJ with respect to the conversation with and/or the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, the Appeals Chamber finds that the error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

c. The Vehicle

1672. When assessing evidence of Ntahobali's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness TK testified that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came to the Butare Prefecture Office on three occasions "aboard a camouflaged Toyota Hilux with an open back."[3862] It further observed that Witnesses TA, QJ, QBQ, QBP, and RE "described the pickup as a Toyota or a Toyota Hilux" and that, in addition to Witness TK, Witnesses QBP, FAP, and SD "corroborated the accounts that the vehicle was a pickup with an open back and was camouflaged."[3863] The Trial Chamber found that the description of the vehicle as a camouflaged pickup truck was "largely consistent"[3864] and observed that Witnesses TK, RE, SS, FAP, SD, QY, and QBQ testified that Ntahobali was "driving the vehicle."[3865]

1673. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to apply sufficient caution in assessing the identification evidence of Witnesses QY, SD, FAP, and QBQ.[3866] In particular, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably relied on Witness QY's testimony despite finding her identification evidence not credible as it pertained to attacks at the prefectoral office at the end of April or early May 1994.[3867] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in assigning weight to Witness SD's identification evidence despite characterising it as "devoid of any specific details" and because Witness SD did not actually see Ntahobali but was only told that he drove the vehicle.[3868]

1674. Ntahobali further contends that the Trial Chamber unreasonably relied on Witness FAP's testimony because her identification of Ntahobali was based on hearsay from persons unknown to her and was made under stressful circumstances.[3869] He also points out that the witness was unable to identify Ntahobali in court and that she did not see Ntahobali again at the prefectoral office after the Night of Three Attacks.[3870] He also takes issue with the fact that the Trial Chamber failed to note that Witness QBQ testified that she only saw Ntahobali once at the prefectoral office in late April 1994, at night and under stressful circumstances, and that she never saw him again.[3871] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber failed to address Witness QBQ's mental health issues and points out that the witness only gave a brief and general description of Ntahobali.[3872]

1675. In addition, Ntahobali argues that, since Witnesses TA and SD did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider their testimonies corroborative of other witness evidence on the vehicle used and Ntahobali's presence during the event.[3873] Finally, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erroneously assessed inconsistencies concerning the make and colour of the vehicle used during the Night of Three Attacks.[3874]

1676. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed the identification evidence from Witnesses QY, SD, and FAP and underlines that the Trial Chamber only used their evidence to corroborate Witness TK's evidence that Ntahobali drove the vehicle to the prefectoral office and that the vehicle used during the attacks was an open-backed pickup truck.[3875] It further responds that Ntahobali's submissions concerning inconsistencies about the pickup truck used during the Night of Three Attacks do not cast doubt on the Trial Chamber's findings and ignore fundamentally consistent evidence regarding the vehicle used.[3876]

1677. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing evidence regarding Ntahobali's presence at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber listed Witness QY as one of several witnesses who "testified that Ntahobali was driving the vehicle."[3877] However, the Trial Chamber unequivocally rejected Witness QY's evidence implicating Ntahobali in attacks at the prefectoral office at that time, due to discrepancies in her testimony, the unreliable nature of her identification evidence, and her admission that she had lied to the Trial Chamber about whether she knew Witnesses QBQ and SJ.[3878]

1678. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the conclusions of the Trial Chamber in these distinct sections of the Trial Judgement are irreconcilable and no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QY's evidence in this respect.[3879] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QY's testimony that Ntahobali drove a vehicle to the prefectoral office when assessing evidence of Ntahobali's involvement in the Night of Three Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how any omission in a Prosecution's submission about Witness QBQ's anticipated testimony is relevant to the assessment of that testimony. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this contention.

[3879] In so finding, the Appeals Chamber is mindful that the Trial Chamber found that Witness QY's evidence demonstrated her ability to identify Ntahobali at the EER. See Trial Judgement, para. 3948. Contrary to Witness QY's evidence concerning the attack at the Butare Prefecture Office around the end of April or early May 1994, the Trial Chamber determined that Witness QY's testimony about Ntahobali's presence at the EER was sufficiently corroborated. See ibid., paras. 3946-3950.

Attacks.[3880] The Appeals Chamber will discuss whether this error has occasioned a miscarriage of justice in its conclusion to the present sub-section.

1680. With respect to Witness FAP's evidence, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber considered that the witness's testimony corroborated Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali drove a pickup truck used in the attacks, a fact which was also corroborated by multiple other witnesses.[3883] The Appeals Chamber also observes that, when assessing Witness FAP's evidence, the Trial Chamber expressly considered that the witness first saw Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks, that she learned the identity of Ntahobali from other people, and that she said she was unable to identify Ntahobali in court.[3884] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably or explain why the absence of any prior knowledge of Ntahobali or the circumstances necessarily rendered Witness FAP's identification evidence unreliable.[3885] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber recalls that hearsay from persons unknown to the witness and a witness's inability to identify an accused in court does not render his identification evidence inadmissible.[3886] The Appeals Chamber also finds that Ntahobali fails to explain the relevance of Witness FAP's testimony that she did not see Ntahobali again after the Night of Three Attacks to the Trial Chamber's consideration of her testimony that he drove the vehicle during these attacks.

1681. Turning to Ntahobali's argument related to Witness QBQ's evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly acknowledged that the witness testified that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko arrived at the prefectoral office in a white-coloured Toyota pickup truck covered in mud around the end of April 1994.[3887] However, based on the witness's recollection of the abduction and escape of a man named Semanyenzi, which was recalled by Witnesses RE, SS, SU, and FAP with respect to the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber concluded that Witness QBQ was in fact testifying to events at the beginning of June 1994.[3888] As discussed below, other consistencies between Witness QBQ's evidence and that of witnesses testifying about the Night of Three Attacks rendered this determination reasonable.[3889] The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in its assessment of Witness QBQ's evidence in light of the entire record. Ntahobali also fails to point to any error or substantiate his argument that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in failing to address Witness QBQ's mental health issues or that her description of Ntahobali was "rather brief and general". He does not demonstrate that these factors necessarily impacted the reliability of her evidence.

1682. In assessing the evidence related to Ntahobali's presence and the appearance of the pickup truck during the Night of Three Attacks,[3890] the Trial Chamber determined that the description of the vehicle as a camouflaged pickup truck was "largely consistent."[3891] In coming to this conclusion, it observed that Witness TA, among several other witnesses, described "the pickup as a Toyota or a Toyota Hilux" and that Witness SD, among others, "corroborated the accounts that the vehicle was a pickup with an open back and was camouflaged."[3892] The Trial Chamber also observed that Witness SD was one of several witnesses who testified that Ntahobali was "driving the vehicle."[3893]

1683. The Trial Chamber's analysis may suggest that it considered Witnesses TA and SD to have provided direct evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks when discussing the vehicle used by Ntahobali, although there is no dispute that neither witness provided evidence about these particular attacks.[3894] However, read in the context of all the attacks at the prefectoral office, it appears that the Trial Chamber considered that Witnesses TA and SD, who testified about Ntahobali's use of a similar vehicle in other attacks, offered circumstantial evidence supporting the account of witnesses who testified about the appearance of the pickup truck as well as Ntahobali's presence specifically during the Night of Three Attacks. While it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to distinguish the direct evidence on the Night of Three Attack from the circumstantial evidence, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the accounts of Witnesses TA and SD were "irrelevant" or that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on their testimonies in this manner.

1684. As to Ntahobali's argument regarding alleged inconsistencies related to the make and colour of the vehicle, the Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing evidence of Ntahobali's presence during the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness TK testified to Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali coming "aboard a camouflaged Toyota Hilux with an open back."[3895] The Trial Chamber further noted that Witnesses TA, QJ, QBQ, QBP, and RE "described the pickup as a Toyota or a Toyota Hilux" and that, in addition to Witness TK, Witnesses QBP, FAP, and SD "corroborated the accounts that the vehicle was a pickup with an open back and was camouflaged."[3896] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witnesses SJ and SS "described a Peugeot pickup" and that Witnesses SS and SU testified that the pickup truck belonged to "Rwamukwaya",[3897] which was described by Witness SU as "a camouflaged dark-coloured Toyota Hilux".[3898] The Trial Chamber found that the description of the vehicle as a camouflaged pickup truck was "largely consistent".[3899]

1685. In this context, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber assessed inconsistencies with respect to the pickup truck in the Prosecution evidence.[3900] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Ntahobali simply extracts and lists the various witnesses' testimonies in the annexes to his appeal brief.[3901] He does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber's analysis is unreasonable or how any error would have occasioned a miscarriage of justice, particularly since other evidence demonstrated Ntahobali's presence and participation in the Night of Three Attacks.[3902] His argument in this regard is therefore dismissed.

1686. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QY's testimony that Ntahobali drove a vehicle to the Butare Prefecture Office when assessing identification evidence of Ntahobali's involvement in the Night of Three Attacks.[3903] However, given that Witness QY's evidence was used to corroborate the accounts of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, FAP, SD, and QBQ on this point, and that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of their evidence, the Appeals Chamber concludes that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

(iv) Conclusion

1687. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in its acceptance of the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ in relation to the Butare Prefecture Office, which was used to identify Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks, as well as limited aspects of Witness TA's evidence relevant to identifying Ntahobali during the Mid-May Attack. However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that these errors have not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated any other errors concerning evidence identifying him at the Butare Prefecture Office.

1688. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence established his presence during attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office beyond reasonable doubt.

(c) Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks

1689. The Trial Chamber relied principally on the evidence of Witness TA to find that Ntahobali ordered killings and raped Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack, and raped Witness TA and ordered her rape during the Last Half of May Attacks.[3904] On the basis of these findings, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for ordering killings and committing the rape of Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack as well as committing the rape and ordering the rapes of Witness TA during the Last Half of May Attacks.[3905]

1690. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in its assessment of the evidence pertaining to his participation in these attacks. In particular, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its assessment of Witness TA's evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack; (ii) its assessment of Witness TA's evidence relating to the Last Half of May Attacks; (iii) making contradictory findings and in its assessment of Defence evidence undermining Witness TA's accounts of the Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks; and (iv) its assessment of evidence that generally undermined Witness TA's credibility.[3906] The Appeals Chamber will address these arguments in turn.

[3904] Trial Judgement, paras. 2644, 2653, 2781(i), (ii), 5867. The Appeals Chamber observes that with respect to the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks, the Trial Chamber found that other witnesses provided evidence that offered circumstantial support to Witness TA's evidence implicating Ntahobali in the attacks. See ibid., paras. 2632, 2634, 2650, 2651. The Trial Chamber also found that Interahamwe, following the orders of Ntahobali, raped six other women during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks. See supra, para. 1562. The Appeals Chamber, however, has reversed Ntahobali's convictions in this respect below and will therefore not examine Ntahobali's challenges to the assessment of the evidence solely relevant to this incident. See infra, paras. 1912, 1913.

(i) Mid-May Attack

1691. The Trial Chamber, relying principally on the testimony of Witness TA, found that, one night in mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and about 10 Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office aboard a camouflage pickup truck.[3907] It concluded that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup truck, that Ntahobali and about eight other Interahamwe raped Witness TA, and that "[s]ome of the Interahamwe raped two other Tutsi women."[3908] The Trial Chamber further found that the pickup truck left the prefectoral office with the abducted Tutsi refugees, some of whom were forced to undress.[3909] It convicted Ntahobali for ordering killings and committing the rape of Witness TA during this attack on this basis.[3910]

1692. Ntahobali challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness TA's evidence pertaining to the Mid-May Attack.[3911] Specifically, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its evaluation of Witness TA's testimony that she was not anally raped when her prior statement reflects that she was raped vaginally and anally.[3912] Ntahobali submits that this variance is material as it concerns the actus reus of the crime of rape and because the witness's statement mentions anal intercourse on two occasions, specifying that it did not happen during a subsequent attack.[3913] He contends that the Trial Chamber's reasoning that the variance was not material in light of the trauma the witness had suffered is unsupported by the witness's testimony and contrary to her own explanation that the variance reflected an incorrect recording of her statement.[3914] Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness TA had never reported to Rwandan authorities that he raped her for reasons of trauma and shame.[3915] He contends that this reasoning is unsupported by the
