1693. Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber erred by omitting to consider other variances between Witness TA's prior statement and testimony as well as internal inconsistencies within her evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack.[3917] In particular, he highlights that Witness TA's Statement reflects that Nyiramasuhuko was not with Ntahobali during the evening attack, but that the witness testified that Nyiramasuhuko was present.[3918] Concerning the internal inconsistencies within the witness's evidence, Ntahobali emphasises that Witness TA testified that: (i) 10 Interahamwe and Nyiramasuhuko were present during the attack but elsewhere testified that the reference to 10 Interahamwe included Nyiramasuhuko; and (ii) during the attack, Nyiramasuhuko immediately identified persons to be abducted who were then loaded onto the vehicle and immediately taken away, while also testifying that Ntahobali and other Interahamwe attacked persons at the prefectoral office and that he and eight Interahamwe raped the witness before the refugees were put on board the vehicle and left.[3919]

1694. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's conclusions were so unreasonable that no reasonable trier of fact could have reached them.[3920] It also argues that many of the alleged inconsistencies raised by Ntahobali were reasonably addressed in the Trial Judgement.[3921]

[3918] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 626, referring to Witness TA's Statement, Witness TA, T. 6 November 2001 pp. 60, 61. Ntahobali also submits that Witness TA's Statement did not indicate that she saw Nyiramasuhuko prior to the Mid-May Attack, whereas she testified that she had seen Nyiramasuhuko for the first time at 3.00 p.m. the day of that attack. See idem. For the same reasons as developed in Section IV.F.2(d) addressing Nyiramasuhuko's appeal, the Appeals Chamber rejects this argument.
[3919] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 626. Ntahobali's contention in paragraph 633 of his appeal brief about the improper use of Expert Witness Alison Des Forges's evidence have been addressed above in Section V.I.2(a)(v). Ntahobali also asserts that the Trial Chamber contradicted itself by finding that Tutsi refugees were forcefully undressed during the Mid-May Attack and by using it as a basis to convict him despite concluding that there was insufficient evidence to convict him for this act. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 678, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 2644, 2738, 2781(i), (iii), 5873, 6137. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali's reference to the Trial Chamber's allegedly contradictory conclusion that the Prosecution failed to adduce sufficient evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Tutsis were forced to undress concerned attacks at the EER as opposed to the prefectoral office. See Trial Judgement, paras. 6132, 6137. See also infra, para. 1846. Moreover, the Trial Chamber did not enter convictions against Ntahobali in relation to the Mid-May Attack on the basis that Tutsis were forcefully undressed. See Trial Judgement, paras. 5866-5871, 6053, 6100, 6168. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this argument.

multiple gang rapes at the hands of Interahamwe, this discrepancy is understandable and does not adversely affect the Chamber's credibility assessment of the witness."[3922] Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, a plain reading of the witness's testimony in its entirety supports the Trial Chamber's rationale that the "intensity of experiencing multiple gang rapes" could impact her recollection of the events.[3923] The Appeals Chamber sees no error in focussing on this consideration rather than on the witness's explanation when confronted with this discrepancy,[3924] as it is established practice for trial chambers to take into consideration the impact of trauma on a witness's evidence.[3925]

1696. Furthermore, while Ntahobali stresses the materiality of this variance, Witness TA's prior statement only reflects that anal penetration was perpetrated by a single individual on one occasion.[3926] By contrast, the witness's prior statement and testimony consistently reflect that she was vaginally raped by multiple people on this occasion alone. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the variance highlighted by Ntahobali was material given her consistent position that she was attacked in a manner that demonstrates that she was raped.

1697. The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered that Witness TA had reported that she had been raped by other assailants to authorities in her prefecture without mentioning Ntahobali because he had fled the country.[3927] Ntahobali contends that this evidence does not support the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness TA's explanation for not reporting Ntahobali was reasonable in light of a possible trauma and the potential shame associated with these events without demonstrating that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in so finding.[3928]

1698. Regarding Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred by omitting to consider inconsistencies between Witness TA's prior statement and testimony, the Appeals Chamber observes that, unlike her testimony, Witness TA's prior statement reflects that Nyiramasuhuko "was not with [Ntahobali] this night" of the Mid-May Attack and contains no reference to the witness seeing Nyiramasuhuko at the prefectoral office at 3.00 p.m. on the day of that attack.[3929] When challenged with these inconsistencies, the witness affirmed her testimony, suggesting that the information in her prior statement was improperly recorded or less important than her testimony.[3930]

1699. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that a trial chamber has the discretion to accept a witness's testimony, notwithstanding inconsistencies between the said testimony and the witness's previous statements,[3931] and the fact that a trial chamber does not address or mention alleged discrepancies does not necessarily mean that it did not consider them.[3932] The Appeals Chamber considers that it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to note that Witness TA's prior statement indicated that Nyiramasuhuko was not with Ntahobali during the Mid-May Attack and explain why this inconsistency did not impact the credibility of her testimony.[3933] However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in light of Witness TA's repeated affirmations of the accuracy of her testimony as well as her repeated explanations that her statement was not a full and accurate recording of the information she provided to investigators,[3934] a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that this inconsistency was not material and did not undermine the credibility of Witness TA's account.

1700. With respect to the internal inconsistencies within Witness TA's testimony, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the variance between Witness TA's initial testimony that Nyiramasuhuko was present in addition to 10 Interahamwe and subsequent account that Nyiramasuhuko was one of those 10 individuals is material.[3935]

1701. Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate any material internal inconsistency in Witness TA's testimony as to whether the Tutsi refugees were immediately removed from the prefectoral office upon being pointed out by Nyiramasuhuko or whether there was time for Ntahobali and eight [3933] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was under no obligation to consider the absence of any mention in Witness TA's prior statement that she saw Nyiramasuhuko around 3.00 p.m. on the day of the Mid-May Attack. The statement is remarkably brief when compared to the length of her testimony. The Appeals Chamber considers that this element of Witness TA's testimony was peripheral to the core features of her evidence concerning the attack, and it is reasonable that more details would arise over the course of the witness's examination in court.

Interahamwe to rape Witness TA beforehand. Ntahobali simply extracts parts of Witness TA's evidence and fails to appreciate that the substantial and detailed account provided by her after extensive questioning reveals that after Nyiramasuhuko pointed out Tutsis to be abducted, Ntahobali took the witness to the back of the prefectoral office where he and eight Interahamwe raped her.[3936] Witness TA's detailed testimony, in this context, reflects that, after raping her, the assailants left aboard the same vehicle carrying Nyiramasuhuko and the abducted Tutsis.[3937]

1702. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that, in his arguments addressed above, Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness TA's evidence pertaining to the Mid-May Attack.

(ii) Last Half of May Attacks

1703. The Trial Chamber, relying on the testimony of Witness TA, partially corroborated by that of Witness SD, concluded that around seven and 11 days after the Mid-May Attack, Ntahobali and Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office on two more occasions.[3938] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, which occurred seven days after the Mid-May Attack, Ntahobali violently raped Witness TA, hitting her on the head with a hammer.[3939] The Trial Chamber found that during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, which occurred 11 days after the Mid-May Attack, Ntahobali ordered about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.[3940] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for committing and ordering rape on this basis.[3941]

1704. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness TA's evidence with respect to the First Attack.[3942] Specifically, he submits that the witness initially testified that Ntahobali put his hammer to her forehead, before testifying that he hit her on the face with it, whereas the witness's prior statement only reflects that Ntahobali took out the hammer to deter her from resisting.[3943] He argues that the witness's explanation of blaming investigators is unbelievable and contends that no reasonable trier of fact could have found the variance to be minor as it concerned the "actus reus" and was "an integral part of the commission of the rape".[3944] Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that the witness testified that Ntahobali took her behind the prefectoral office to the same place he had raped her during the Mid-May Attack, whereas her prior statement reflects Ntahobali did not take her there on this occasion.[3945] He reiterates that the witness's explanation that her statement was not accurately recorded is implausible.[3946]

1705. Concerning the Second Attack, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess that Witness TA's testimony varied as to whether Ntahobali wore banana leaves, and was inconsistent as to whether Ntahobali left after handing Witness TA over to Interahamwe or if he remained and raped Caritas next to the witness.[3947] He observes that Witness TA also testified that she could not see while being raped.[3948] Ntahobali further contends that the Trial Chamber erred by omitting to consider that the witness testified that Interahamwe took her behind the prefectoral office and that the seven attackers undressed her, whereas her prior statement reflects that he took her behind the prefectoral office and that he lifted her skirt.[3949] He rejects the witness's explanations for these variances, respectively arguing that she implausibly asserted that her prior statement was recorded incorrectly or that her response was confusing.[3950] In addition, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering that, on two occasions, Witness TA testified that she did not see him after the First Attack and in not concluding that this raised reasonable doubt in her evidence with respect to the Second Attack.[3951]

1706. Finally, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably concluded that Witness SD corroborated Witness TA's evidence with respect to the Last Half of May Attacks.[3952] He argues that Witness SD's testimony lacked sufficient detail to meet the minimum standard required for corroboration.[3953] He stresses that the Trial Chamber elsewhere concluded that Witness SD's testimony concerning prior attacks on the prefectoral office was "devoid of any specific details" and did not appear to attach any weight to his evidence, making it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on it in this instance.[3954] He also points out that Witness SD testified that women and girls were taken away to be raped, rather than being raped at the Butare Prefecture Office.[3955] In Ntahobali's view, no reasonable trier of fact could have relied upon Witness TA's evidence absent "proper corroboration".[3956]

1708. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered the differences between Witness TA's testimony and prior statement concerning whether Ntahobali hit her with a hammer during the First Attack.[3959] The Trial Chamber acknowledged that she affirmed her testimony and accepted her explanation that the investigator may have misunderstood her as the injury she suffered was minor.[3960] While Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in reaching this conclusion, specifically because the variance concerned the "actus reus" and was an "integral part of the commission of rape", the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's contentions are irrelevant to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the elements of rape.[3961] Ntahobali simply disagrees with the Trial Chamber's reasoning without demonstrating any error in the exercise of its discretion in the assessment of the evidence. His contention is accordingly dismissed.

1709. Turning to the differences in Witness TA's testimony and prior statement as to whether Ntahobali took her behind the prefectoral office where she was raped during the Mid-May Attack, the Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Ntahobali's submission, the Trial Chamber considered that "Witness TA was confronted with a prior statement in which she said she was in view of the other refugees when she was raped on this occasion [and] […] maintained in her testimony that she was taken behind the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[3962] In so noting, the Trial Chamber referred to excerpts from the witness's testimony where she was cross-examined on this precise variance.[3963] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied upon Witness TA's evidence in light of the purported variance.[3964]

1710. As regards Ntahobali's arguments concerning the Second Attack, the Appeals Chamber finds no material variance in Witness TA's evidence as to whether or not Ntahobali wore banana leaves.[3965] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Ntahobali fails to point to any material inconsistency concerning whether he left after handing Witness TA over to Interahamwe to be raped or if he remained and raped Caritas next to the witness. Witness TA testified that Interahamwe "raped me and [Ntahobali] left, leaving behind him[…] these men who were raping me"[3966] and that she saw Ntahobali raping Caritas next to where she was when she was being attacked.[3967] During cross-examination, Witness TA testified that she was unable to see or take note of what was happening around her when she was raped but clarified that, "at the end of this – incident" she was able to see Ntahobali who was "very near" to her.[3968] The Appeals Chamber considers that the evolutions in Witness TA's testimony reflect clarifications achieved through precise questioning rather than material contradictions.

1711. The Appeals Chamber is also unpersuaded by Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness TA's testimony and prior statement varied as to whether he or Interahamwe took the witness behind the prefectoral office and undressed her. Notably, Witness TA's evidence consistently indicates that Ntahobali found her and physically delivered her to the Interahamwe during this attack,[3969] and that Ntahobali raped Caritas about five to six metres away from where the Interahamwe attacked her.[3970] In this context, even though her prior statement indicates that Ntahobali led her behind the prefectoral office[3971] whereas her testimony indicates that the Interahamwe did this,[3972] the variance is insignificant.

[3964] The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's arguments, as they relate to variances between Witness TA's prior statement and testimony, ignore that she was fundamentally consistent that during this attack only Ntahobali raped her. Compare Witness TA's Statement, p. 1712. Likewise, while Witness TA's prior statement indicates that Ntahobali "lifted [her] skirt"[3973] and her testimony reflects that the Interahamwe removed her clothes,[3974] the Appeals Chamber does not consider that any difference in this respect made it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on her testimony. Witness TA's evidence is fundamentally consistent with her prior statement that Ntahobali found her at the prefectoral office and that about seven Interahamwe raped her based on Ntahobali's prompting.[3975] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on her evidence notwithstanding this minor variance, particularly given the fact that Ntahobali was involved in attacking Witness TA on multiple occasions at the prefectoral office. As these inconsistencies were canvassed in detail through Witness TA's cross-examination, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber ignored them or was required to expressly consider them in the Trial Judgement.

1713. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering that, on two occasions, Witness TA testified that she did not see him after the First Attack. Witness TA's evidence that she "did not see [Ntahobali] again", when read in context, reveals that she did not see him again on the night of the First Attack.[3976] Upon further questioning, the witness recalled her testimony that she saw Ntahobali on more than eight occasions and proceeded to discuss the events of the Second Attack, in which Ntahobali gave the witness over to Interahamwe to be raped.[3977] Once again, the Appeals Chamber considers that the evolutions in Witness TA's evidence reflect clarifications achieved through precise questioning rather than material contradictions.

1714. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing Witness TA's evidence concerning the Last Half of May Attacks, the Trial Chamber found that "Witness SD corroborated important aspects of each of these attacks."[3978] It noted that, while Witness SD's testimony "was not specific as to what occurred during each attack, she identified the distinctive features of the vehicle, namely that it was covered in mud and contained Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and Interahamwe" and concluded that "[t]herefore, her testimony provides corroboration for Witness TA's testimony as to the attacks by Ntahobali."[3979] The Trial Chamber also stated that it was "convinced" that Witness SD was at the prefectoral office prior to the Nyange transfer in early June 1994 and observed that she testified that there were "attacks by [Ntahobali] both prior to and after the transfer to Nyange in early June 1994."[3980]

1715. With respect to Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber unreasonably concluded that Witness SD corroborated Witness TA's evidence with respect to the Last Half of May Attacks, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that two prima facie credible testimonies corroborate one another when one testimony is compatible with the other regarding the same fact or a sequence of linked facts.[3981] In the instant case, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's finding of corroboration is reasonable, reflecting the similarities in the evidence of Witnesses TA and SD concerning: (i) Ntahobali's participation in the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office prior to early June 1994; (ii) the vehicle used; (ii) the fact that Interahamwe took people; and (iv) the fact that women were identified to be raped.[3982] The Trial Chamber's analysis demonstrates that it was aware of all the differences between the testimonies of Witnesses SD and TA that Ntahobali highlights.[3983] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the differences stressed by Ntahobali do not render Witness SD's evidence incompatible with that of Witness TA. Indeed, the differences would reasonably be expected given the Trial Chamber's findings pertaining to the chaotic and precarious circumstances in which refugees lived at the prefectoral office,[3984] the fact that Witness SD provided a more general account as well as the fact that Witness TA was assaulted repeatedly by Ntahobali whereas Witness SD was not.

1716. Furthermore, although the Trial Chamber noted that Witness SD's evidence was "devoid of any specific details", it did so in relation to a prior attack on the prefectoral office when considering whether the witness's evidence provided sufficient corroboration to the testimony of Witness QY, who principally testified about that event.[3985] The Trial Chamber did not find Witness SD's evidence to be lacking credibility, but instead rejected Witness QY's evidence due to credibility issues concerning that particular witness.[3986] In contrast to its approach to Witness QY's evidence in that instance, the Trial Chamber was convinced by Witness TA's testimony concerning the Last Half of May Attacks. While it noted that Witness SD's testimony "was not specific as to what occurred during each attack" and that aspects of her evidence were hearsay, it nonetheless relied on the distinctive features of it that were consistent with Witness TA's evidence.[3987] The Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber acted within its discretion, refusing to make findings where Witness SD's general evidence only supported testimony that lacked credibility, yet relying on Witness SD's evidence to the extent that it corroborated the more detailed and credible account given by Witness TA. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's claim that no "proper corroboration" of Witness TA's evidence existed.

1717. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that, in his arguments addressed above, Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness TA's evidence pertaining to the Last Half of May Attacks.

(iii) Contradictory Findings and Evidence

1718. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber made contradictory findings and failed to consider evidence that demonstrated that no refugees were at the Butare Prefecture Office at the time when Witness TA testified that the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks occurred.[3988] Ntahobali also points out that Witness RE testified that she arrived at the prefectoral office around 15 May 1994 and asserted that there was no attack between then and her transfer to the EER the following day, that she only saw Ntahobali at the EER, and that she was transported to Nyange one day after returning to the prefectoral office from the EER.[3989]

1719. In addition, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence from Defence Witnesses WUNHE and WUNJN, who testified that Witness TA was not at the prefectoral office between April and June 1994 but was staying with her uncle.[3990] According to [3987] Trial Judgement, paras. 2650, 2651. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber also noted that Witness SD did not see Ntahobali driving the vehicle but heard that this was the case. See ibid., para. 2650.

[3988] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 618, 636, 637. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 249-251. Specifically, Ntahobali points to findings by the Trial Chamber as well as evidence, such as that of Witness RE, which, in his view, reflect that all the refugees were transferred from the prefectoral office to the EER between 15 and 20 May 1994, returning to the prefectoral office only on 31 May 1994. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 618, 633, 636, 637; Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 250, 251.
[3989] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 637. Ntahobali also argues that Witness RE testified that the first and only attack that she mentioned occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office around 10 June 1994 according to her prior statement. See idem. The Appeals Chamber addresses this challenge in Section V.I.2(d)(ii)e below. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's references to the evidence of Witnesses QBP and SD in paragraph 250 of his reply brief improperly go beyond responding to the Prosecution's contentions and seek to introduce new arguments that should have been raised in his appeal brief. The Appeals Chamber recalls that reply briefs shall be limited to arguments in reply to the response brief. See Practice Direction on Formal Requirements on Appeal, para. 6. Ntahobali was expressly made aware of this limitation in these appeal proceedings. See Decision on Motions for Extension of Time Limit and Word Limit for the Filing of Reply Briefs, 27 August 2013, para. 4. In any event, the Appeals Chamber notes that it has considered and rejected similar contentions by Nyiramasuhuko in Section IV.F.2(d) above.
[3990] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 611-614. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 247, 248; AT. 15 April 2015 p. 49.

him, this evidence raises doubts as to Witness TA's presence at the prefectoral office and the credibility of her testimony concerning the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks.[3991]

1720. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not show contradictions in the Trial Chamber's findings or the Prosecution evidence or that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in rejecting Witness WUNJN's evidence and in finding that Witness WUNHE's evidence did not undermine the credibility of Witness TA.[3992]

1721. The Appeals Chamber has already considered above in Section IV.F.2(d) similar allegations regarding the absence of refugees from the prefectoral office in May 1994 raised by Nyiramasuhuko. Based on a detailed and careful consideration of the Trial Chamber's findings, the Appeals Chamber has rejected Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber's conclusions about the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to the EER were contradictory with its findings concerning the Mid-May Attack.[3993] For the same reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber's conclusions about the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to the EER were contradictory with its findings concerning the Mid-May Attack and the Last half of May Attacks.

1722. The Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's argument that Witness RE's testimony contradicts Witness TA's testimony. While Ntahobali emphasises that Witness RE testified that she arrived at the prefectoral office around 15 May 1994, that she was transferred to the EER the next day without any attack occurring, that she only saw him once at the EER, and that she went to Nyange the day after she returned to the prefectoral office, he does not demonstrate that Witnesses TA and RE were together at the prefectoral office or at the EER in mid to late May 1994 or that their evidence is necessarily contradictory. These arguments are therefore dismissed.[3994]

1723. Turning to the assessment of the evidence of Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE, who placed Witness TA at her uncle's home rather than the prefectoral office from April to June 1994, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber determined that their evidence did not

[3993] See supra, Section IV.F.2(d).
[3994] Ntahobali also argues that when reading Witness TA's evidence as to her own presence at the EER in the context of the Trial Chamber's findings and evidence concerning the transfer of refugees to the EER, it is clear that she actually testified about attacks that occurred in "late July 1994 and even thereafter" rather than the mid and latter half of May 1994. Ntahobali argues, however, that this evidence is unbelievable as all the refugees had left the Butare Prefecture Office for Rango at this point, and that the witness's estimates that 6,000 refugees were present is inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's finding that "around 200" were there after they returned from the EER. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 618, 632, 636. In light of the analysis in Section IV.F.2(d), the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali simply offers his interpretation of Witness TA's evidence without demonstrating inconsistencies in the Trial Chamber's findings or that it was required to discuss any of the interpretations of her testimony that he now provides. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses these contentions without further consideration.

undermine the credibility of Witness TA.[3995] In reaching this conclusion, the Trial Chamber found, inter alia, that: (i) Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE "named a different person whom they said was [Witness TA's] uncle";[3996] (ii) it had doubts as to the "reliability of [Witness WUNJN's] memory concerning the crucial issue of Witness TA's location from April to July 1994" because he admitted that "he confused Witnesses QBP and TA in answering a question as to where Witness QBP had lived";[3997] and (iii) Witness WUNJN's "failure to earlier correct the inaccuracies or incomplete information on his identification sheet further undermines his credibility."[3998] It also stated that "Witness WUNHE testified that he saw Witness TA in April and towards the end of May 1994".[3999]

1724. The Appeals Chamber agrees with Ntahobali that the Trial Chamber erred in reaching each of these conclusions.[4000] First, the Trial Chamber's finding that Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE were referring to different individuals as Witness TA's uncle is unsupported by the transcripts cited by the Trial Chamber as well as other portions of their evidence.[4001] Second, although Witness WUNJN mistakenly referred to Witness TA as Witness QBP, the witness correctly acknowledged the mistake immediately as a slip of tongue as well as later in his testimony.[4002] The Trial Chamber's conclusion unreasonably ignores the witness's otherwise consistent evidence demonstrating a clear ability to distinguish between the two individuals.[4003] Third, the Appeals Chamber finds that, in this instance, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to find that Witness WUNJN's failure to correct the inaccuracies or incomplete information on his identification sheet undermined the witness's credibility as making such corrections is principally the responsibility of the counsel who files the sheet and because the witness testified that he did in fact inform the counsel of the incompleteness of his form.[4004] The Trial Chamber's analysis fails to sufficiently address these circumstances. Finally, as pointed out by Ntahobali, Witness WUNHE testified that he saw Witness TA "at least twice a week" at her uncle's home after 6 April 1994 and "up to the end of the month of May",[4005] which he confirmed during cross-examination.[4006]

[3999] Trial Judgement, para. 2641. In the Trial Chamber's summary of Witness WUNHE's testimony, the Trial Chamber stated that Witness WUNHE testified that he saw Witness TA in April 1994 when he witnessed the destruction of her home "but he did not see her after sometime towards the end of May 1994". See idem.

[4005] Witness WUNHE, T. 8 December 2005 pp. 67-69 (closed session).

1725. The Appeals Chamber does not find, however, that these errors undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's determination that the testimonies of Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE did not raise doubt with respect to Witness TA's evidence that she was at the Butare Prefecture Office when the Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks occurred in light of the other factors upon which the Trial Chamber relied.

1726. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber stated that it was "not convinced that after narrowly escap[ing] death at the home of her uncle, a fact agreed upon by Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE, Witness TA would present herself at a drinking establishment at night during the events of April to July 1994."[4007] Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber misapplied the burden of proof in using the verb "convinced", and that it incorrectly interpreted the evidence of Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE as referring to a "drinking establishment" when they described seeing Witness TA in the "sitting room" of her uncle's home.[4008] The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the use of the term "convinced" was intended to indicate that the Trial Chamber did not find the evidence of these witnesses to be prima facie credible.[4009] Moreover, a review of the evidence of Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE, as cited by the Trial Chamber and Ntahobali, supports the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness TA's uncle used parts of his residence as a "drinking establishment" that was open to the public.[4010] The Trial Chamber's determination that it did not find credible the testimonies of Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE that Witness TA, a Tutsi who had narrowly escaped death, would "present herself" at her uncle's drinking establishment to serve beverages to Hutu clients is therefore reasonable.

1727. The Trial Chamber also found "Witness WUNJN's claim that no Tutsis were killed in his secteur during the April to July 1994 events […] not believable in light of the fact that killing was widespread throughout Butare préfecture" and was contradicted by evidence from Defence Witness AND-30.[4011] Ntahobali does not substantiate his claim that the Trial Chamber erred in reaching this finding, only pointing to the evidence of Witness WUNJN to argue that the situation may have been different at the lower administrative structures of cellules.[4012] This unsubstantiated argument is dismissed without further consideration.

[4009] Notably, the Trial Chamber elsewhere recalled that "the accused has no burden to prove anything at a criminal trial" and its findings demonstrated that it was satisfied that the Prosecution had proven its case "beyond a reasonable doubt". See Trial Judgement, paras. 163, 2644.

1728. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber noted that it was not put to Witness TA that the person named by Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE was her uncle before ultimately concluding that the evidence of these two witnesses did not "undermine[] the credibility of Witness TA."[4013] Ntahobali argues that it was unfair for the Trial Chamber to consider this omission in the cross-examination of Witness TA, as he only knew of Witness TA's identity in April 2001, and because he lost his investigator in July 2001 and did not know of the existence of Witness TA's uncle when cross-examining her later that year.[4014] Ntahobali, however, does not point to any part of the record to support his position[4015] and fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in considering this omission.[4016] In any event, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that this consideration was central to the Trial Chamber's analysis of the credibility of Witnesses WUNJN and WUNHE.

1729. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber reached contradictory findings or erred in its assessment of evidence in a way that would render its conclusions on the credibility of Witness TA's testimony concerning the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks unreasonable.

(iv) Additional Credibility Challenges

1730. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently additional evidence that should have raised reasonable doubt in Witness TA's testimony generally, including the fact that: (i) Witness QBP, a relative who was allegedly present with Witness TA at the Butare Prefecture Office, did not confirm that Witness TA had been raped; (ii) Exhibit D473, which contains the transcript of an interview between Nsabimana and BBC journalist Fergal Keane, reflects that a white journalist visited the prefectoral office, in contradiction to Witness TA's account that no white people were there; (iii) Witness QBQ's testimony concerning how refugees were removed from the prefectoral office to Nyange is materially inconsistent with Witness TA's evidence; (iv) the evidence of Witnesses RE, QBP, and TK describing the circumstances under

[4014] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 613.
[4015] As a preface to this argument, Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to provide a reasoned opinion with respect to its "exclusion of Witness WUNHE's evidence" but only cites to a discussion in the Trial Judgement concerning Witness TA's ability to identify Ntahobali. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 613, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2649. Ntahobali does not develop this general contention further and the Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses it without further consideration.
[4016] See supra, Section III.F.

which refugees from the prefectoral office were transferred to Rango Forest is materially different to Witness TA's testimony; and (v) Witness TA did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks.[4017]

1731. Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably failed to address several aspects of Witness TA's testimony that he alleges are inconsistent or contradictory, and which concern: (i) her compliance with instructions to remain behind the prefectoral office; (ii) the fact that she was raped in Nkubi; (iii) the number of members of her family who were killed; (iv) when refugees from the prefectoral office were transferred to Rango Forest; and (v) her presence at the EER.[4018] He contends that the Trial Chamber also failed to assess portions of Witness TA's evidence that he deems "implausible"[4019] as well as the witness's "aggressive and arrogant demeanour".[4020]

1732. The Prosecution responds that when the Trial Chamber discussed inconsistencies in Witness TA's testimony, it did so reasonably.[4021]

1733. The Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali overstates the nature of the relationship between Witnesses QBP and TA[4022] as well as their continuous presence together at the prefectoral office and the EER.[4023] The Appeals Chamber is therefore not persuaded that the fact that Witness QBP did not testify about the rapes Witness TA suffered demonstrates that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witness TA that she was raped during the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks.[4024]

In his submissions with regard to Witness TA's demeanour, Ntahobali also points out that Judge Bossa had no opportunity to observe Witness TA's alleged "aggressive and arrogant" demeanour. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 621, referring to ibid., Ground 1.6. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Judge Bossa certified her familiarisation with the record and did not consider that there were particular issues involving witness credibility that she needed to assess in light of the witnesses' visually observable demeanour in court. See supra, Section III.C.
[4022] Ntahobali argues that Witness QBP's testimony demonstrates that they were relatives, yet her evidence reflects that she was unsure of the nature of the relationship and that they did not grow up in the same household. See Witness QBP, T. 29 October 2002 pp. 42, 43 (closed session).
[4023] Ntahobali argues that Witness QBP testified to "have always been with Witness TA" at the EER and the Butare Prefecture Office. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 634. As noted in relation to Nyiramasuhuko's appeal, the excerpts of Witness QBP's testimony do not reflect that they were continually together. See supra, fn. 2003.

1734. The Appeals Chamber also fails to see how the evidence that Nsabimana gave an interview to BBC journalist Fergal Keane at the prefectoral office should have raised doubt in Witness TA's evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks. Fergal Keane appeared as a witness and testified that he arrived in Butare Prefecture around 15 June 1994, placing his visit some time after the attacks in question.[4025] The Appeals Chamber further observes that, in response to a compound question about whether "white people" came to film her or give food to the witness at the prefectoral office, Witness TA simply testified that she "did not see them."[4026] Through his blanket reference to the recording of the interview given by Nsabimana to Fergal Keane and the Trial Chamber's consideration of this evidence concerning the number of refugees at the prefectoral office around 15 June 1994,[4027] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how this evidence contradicts Witness TA's or somehow raises doubts about her accounts concerning the Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks.

1735. Similarly, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess Witness TA's evidence concerning the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to Nyange in light of Witness QBQ's allegedly contradictory testimony. Ntahobali argues that Witness TA testified that refugees were forced onto "garbage trucks" while Witness QBQ denied this, testifying that there was only "one bus".[4028] However, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted Witness TA's evidence "that during her stay at the [Butare Prefecture Office] she and other refugees were picked up by buses and vehicles used for rubbish collection and driven to Nyange."[4029] In this regard, Witness TA's evidence is similar to that of several other witnesses, including Witness QBQ's, that refugees were removed from the prefectoral office in buses.[4030] Moreover, the reference provided by Ntahobali does not demonstrate that Witness QBQ unequivocally denied that a garbage truck was used and, contrary to Ntahobali's contention, this witness also indicated that more than one bus was involved.[4031]

1736. Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate any differences between the evidence of Witness TA and that of Witnesses RE, QBP, and TK concerning the circumstances under which refugees were transferred from the Butare Prefecture Office to Rango Forest that would have prevented the Trial Chamber from relying on Witness TA's evidence concerning the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks. Ntahobali emphasises that Witness TA testified that refugees were attacked prior to boarding vehicles and that 1,000 refugees were transported in two buses, while Witnesses RE and QBP did not confirm that violence was used at this point, and Witnesses RE and TK only testified that one bus was used and that it "may not even have been full."[4032] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that it could not rely upon Witness TA's estimates as to the number of refugees taken from the prefectoral office to Rango Forest.[4033] In so finding, it nonetheless considered Witness TA's evidence "credible with respect to the time of her arrival and her experience at the [Butare Prefecture Office]."[4034] Since the Trial Chamber had already expressed doubts as to Witness TA's estimates concerning the number of refugees transferred, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber was under no obligation to provide any further analysis as to differences between Witness TA's evidence and any other witness's concerning the number of buses used to transfer refugees to Rango Forest.

1737. Moreover, nothing in Witness TA's testimony reflects, as Ntahobali alleges,[4035] that she testified that Tutsis were being killed as they boarded the buses to Rango Forest. Rather, her testimony indicates that those Tutsis who had not already been killed at the prefectoral office were transferred to Rango Forest.[4036] In contrast to Ntahobali's assertion that the Trial Chamber failed to address the contradictions between Witness TA's evidence and Witness RE's with respect to whether the refugees were beaten, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found Witness TA's evidence largely consistent with the evidence of Witnesses SU, FAP, and Des Forges that the transfer was coercive.[4037] The Trial Chamber also addressed Witness RE's testimony in reaching this conclusion, noting that she testified that the transfer was supervised by Interahamwe.[4038] Indeed, although Witness RE stated that nobody was forced or manhandled into the buses in the excerpt of her testimony referenced by Ntahobali, the witness explained that this was because the transfer was obligatory.[4039] Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate any contradiction between Witness TA's testimony and Witness QBP's testimony that she did not see anyone being evidence and Witness QBP's concerning the transfer to Nyange. However, this aspect of Witness QBP's testimony concerns the transfer to Rango Forest.

beaten because Witness QBP emphasised that she was only speaking from her perspective and confirmed that the transfer was forced.[4040]

1738. As for Ntahobali's contention that Witness TA's failure to testify about the Night of Three Attacks despite her presence at the prefectoral office during this time-period negatively impacts her credibility, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali fails to reference anything in Witness TA's evidence in support of his argument. Ntahobali merely refers to the testimony of Witness TA reflecting that she stayed at the prefectoral office between her arrival from the EER at the end of April 1994 and her departure to Rango Forest in June 1994, but highlights nothing in her testimony indicating that she stayed at the prefectoral office at all times between these two dates, or that every refugee at the prefectoral office witnessed or would have remembered the Night of Three Attacks.[4041]

1739. Turning to Ntahobali's submissions regarding the Trial Chamber's failure to address various internal inconsistencies within Witness TA's testimony as well as variances between her evidence at trial and in her prior statement, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's argument that Witness TA contradicted herself as to whether or not she complied with instructions to remain behind the prefectoral office is without merit. Witness TA's evidence indicates that, while it was forbidden for the Tutsis to move from the back of the office, she and others did not always follow this instruction and sometimes moved to the front of the prefectoral office given the large number of people and lack of discipline.[4042]

1740. Likewise, Ntahobali fails to identify any material inconsistency in an excerpt of Witness TA's testimony that she was raped in Nkubi the day before she fled to the "préfecture office".[4043] Ntahobali simply extracts this line of Witness TA's testimony and ignores the surrounding evidence. Witness TA consistently testified that she went to the EER prior to going to the prefectoral office and was equally consistent as to the details of her rape by Interahamwe in Nkubi beforehand.[4044] When this statement of Witness TA is read in context with the entirety of her testimony, and particularly with her testimony immediately following it, which describes the roadblocks and corpses she passed on her way to Butare prefecture before reaching the EER and ultimately the prefectoral office,[4045] it is evident that Witness TA was not contradicting her testimony that she went to the EER prior to the prefectoral office but merely made a general statement in relation to her movements that subsumed her trip to the EER as part of her journey to the prefectoral office.

1741. Ntahobali also misconceives Witness TA's evidence as to the number of members of her family who were killed during the genocide to suggest it is contradictory.[4046] Witness TA testified that she thought that up to 80 members of her family were killed in Butare in 1994, in general.[4047] Ntahobali confuses this aspect of Witness TA's testimony with her prior statement in which she describes an attack she suffered at the compound of a family member in which she and 30 other victims were thrown – wounded or dead – into a latrine, and with her related cross-examination in which she corrected her prior statement by stating that 60 people died during the attack as opposed to 30.[4048] Although the witness testified that the victims of the attack included members of her family, nothing in her testimony or her prior statement reflects that all of those killed were related to her when she referred to the number of victims.[4049]

1742. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that Witness TA's prior statement was contrary to her testimony about when refugees from the prefectoral office were transferred to Rango Forest, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness TA consistently stated that this transfer took place in mid-June 1994 when testifying before the Trial Chamber.[4050] In light of the detailed evidence the witness provided as to her location between April and June 1994, and the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness TA was credible as to the timeline of the attack she witnessed at the prefectoral office, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in not expressly discussing the difference between her testimony and prior statement that the transfer occurred in May 1994.[4051]

1743. Contrary to Ntahobali's assertion, the Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted Witness TA's explanation that her prior statement did not reflect that she went to the EER prior to the prefectoral office because it was improperly recorded.[4052] The Trial Chamber also considered Witness TA's failure to mention that she was transferred to Nyange in her prior statement, noting that her testimony only "came out in response to a question posed in cross-examination by the Nyiramasuhuko Defence about Witness TA's transfer from the [prefectoral office] to Rango [Forest]".[4053] It also noted in its summary of Witness TA's evidence as to the events in Nyange that, when it was put to the witness that she had never mentioned having been sent to Nyange before Rango Forest in her prior testimony, she agreed.[4054] Witness TA explained that she had not mentioned it because she had not spent the night there as most of the refugees had been killed.[4055] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting this explanation, particularly since it is consistent with other witness evidence that there was a partial transfer of refugees to Nyange that occurred prior to the transfer to Rango Forest[4056] and that it played a comparatively minor role in her experience of the attacks at the prefectoral office.

K0043302 (Registry pagination). The Trial Chamber relied on Witness TA's evidence that the attacks she testified to at the prefectoral office occurred in mid-May 1994, the last half of May 1994, and during the first half of June 1994. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2644, 2653, 2773.

1744. The Appeals Chamber turns to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to address, or erroneously relied on, several aspects of Witness TA's evidence that are "implausible" and failed to consider Witness TA's "aggressive and arrogant demeanour".[4057]

1745. By listing numerous extracted statements in Witness TA's testimony that he considers "implausible" and alleging that no reasonable trier of fact would have relied on Witness TA's evidence, Ntahobali fails to identify any error of fact or law on the part of the Trial Chamber, let alone how the error would have impacted the Trial Chamber's conclusion. Referring to the standards of appellate review recalled at the beginning of this Judgement, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contention that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness TA's evidence in light of these alleged "implausible accounts" by Witness TA.[4058]

1746. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber failed to address the impact of Witness TA's alleged "aggressive and arrogant demeanour" on her credibility. In support of his claim, Ntahobali argues that the interpreters "toned down" Witness TA's aggressive and arrogant statements by only partially translating them, without pointing to his submissions at trial in this respect.[4059] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber previously adjudicated this issue and Ntahobali fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial

Chamber's conclusion that Witness TA's demeanour was reflected in the written transcripts.[4060] Ntahobali also relies on the fact that Witness TA likened Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko's counsel to an Interahamwe during her testimony.[4061] The Appeals Chamber considers that a trial chamber's assessment of a witness's demeanour may be implicit in its assessment of the witness's credibility.[4062] The Appeals Chamber is of the view that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that this aspect of Witness TA's demeanour in court did not undermine her credibility, particularly since the witness alluded to this in response to sensitive, and somewhat indelicate, questions posed during cross-examination as to whether she smelled when she was at the prefectoral office as well as in response to questions she feared would disclose her identity to the public.[4063]

1747. Recalling that the assessment of the demeanour of witnesses in considering their credibility is one of the fundamental functions of a trial chamber to which the Appeals Chamber must accord deference,[4064] and having reviewed the transcripts of Witness TA's testimony, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in not expressly discussing Witness TA's demeanour or in not concluding that it undermined her credibility.[4065]

1748. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber rejects these additional challenges to Witness TA's credibility as regards the Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks.

(v) Conclusion

1749. In light of the analysis above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witness TA concerning his participation in the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks.

(d) Night of Three Attacks

1750. The Trial Chamber found that, around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on board a camouflaged pickup truck three times in one night.[4066] They abducted Tutsi refugees each time, some of whom were forced to undress, and took them to other sites in Butare Prefecture to be killed.[4067] It found that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to commit these crimes, and determined that Ntahobali and the Interahamwe attacked women and children at the prefectoral office, assaulted them, and forced them onto the pickup truck.[4068] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has determined, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not convicted on the basis of his conduct during the Night of Three Attacks.[4069] However, for the reasons mentioned above, the Appeals Chamber will nonetheless address Ntahobali's challenges to the assessment of the evidence concerning these attacks.[4070]

1751. The Trial Chamber identified several victims during these attacks, including Mbasha's wife and children, who the Trial Chamber concluded were abducted by Ntahobali and the Interahamwe.[4071] Recalling its finding that the Defence did not receive notice of the identity of Mbasha's wife and children, the Trial Chamber did not convict Ntahobali for these specific incidents.[4072] Rather, the Trial Chamber used this as circumstantial evidence to support its findings on abductions and killings of other unnamed Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office.[4073]

1752. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its conclusion related to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks; (ii) its assessment of the credibility and reliability of Prosecution witnesses; (iii) failing to consider Witnesses TA's and SD's silence on the Night of Three Attacks; (iv) its assessment of the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children during these attacks; (v) its assessment of evidence relating to other abductions during the Night of Three Attacks; and (vi) its assessment of general inconsistencies.[4074] The Appeals Chamber will address Ntahobali's contentions in turn.[4075]

(i) Timing of the Night of Three Attacks

1753. The Trial Chamber, noting the "similar timeline as to the date of the attacks" provided by Witnesses TK, QJ, SU, SS, and FAP, concluded that the Night of Three Attacks occurred "around the end of May or beginning of June 1994."[4076] It also concluded that "sometime between 5 June and 15 June 1994" Nsabimana posted "gendarmes or soldiers" at the Butare Prefecture Office,[4077] that these security personnel had been "requisitioned by Nsabimana", and that the evidence did not "support an inference that Nsabimana requisitioned the soldiers and/or gendarmes to harm the refugees".[4078]

1754. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Night of Three Attacks occurred around the end of May or beginning of June 1994.[4079] Relying on the evidence of Witnesses RE, TK, SU, and QBP, he argues that "[a]ny reasonable trier of fact could only have reached the logical and reasonable finding that the alleged attacks must have taken place after 5 June 1994", which is inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's conclusions that Nsabimana deployed gendarmes and soldiers to the prefectoral office sometime between 5 and 15 June 1994 and that abductions and rapes had ceased from that time on.[4080] According to Ntahobali, this precludes any finding beyond reasonable doubt that the Night of Three Attacks occurred.[4081]

1755. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how any reasonable trier of fact could only come to the conclusion based on the evidence at trial that the Night of Three Attacks "undoubtedly occurred after 5 June 1994"[4082] and that his arguments do not undermine the Trial Chamber's finding that the Night of Three Attacks occurred in late May or early June 1994.[4083]

1756. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly considered the accounts of Witnesses TK, SU, and RE regarding the timing of the attacks relied upon by Ntahobali in support of his contention that the attack must have occurred after 5 June 1994.[4084] The Appeals Chamber [4082] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1003. The Prosecution argues that the first week of June 1994 ran from Wednesday 1 June to Saturday 4 June, that the transfer to Nyange therefore happened between this time, and that the Night of Three Attacks could have occurred during this period, as Witnesses RE and TK testified. See idem.

[4084] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness TK testified to arriving at the Butare Prefecture Office at the end of May or early June, after the attempted transfer of Tutsi refugees to Nyange, and that therefore "all of her testimony pertained to events from the beginning of June 1994." See Trial Judgement, paras. 2203, 2655, referring, inter alia, to Witness TK, T. 21 May 2002 pp. 121, 122 (closed session), T. 23 May 2002 pp. 51, 52. As for Witness SU, the Trial Chamber considered her testimony that the Night of Three Attacks occurred "on a Friday after she had arrived at the [Butare Prefecture Office]" and that "[t]his would place the date in June 1994" as the witness arrived towards the end of May 1994. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2242, 2251, 2655; Witness SU, T. 14 October 2002 p. 30. With respect to Witness RE, the Trial Chamber explicitly considered her testimony that the Night of Three Attacks occurred after the attempted transfer to Nyange and President Sindikubwabo's visit to the Butare Prefecture Office. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2276, 2277, 2657; Witness RE, T. 25 February 2003 pp. 46, 47, T. 27 February 2003 p. 5. Witness RE explicitly finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that, on the basis of this evidence, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to conclude that the Night of Three Attacks could have occurred around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994.

1757. With respect to Witness QBP, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not expressly rely on this witness when concluding that the Night of Three Attacks occurred around the end of May or beginning of June 1994.[4085] Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber stated, in the course of its analysis on this event, that it was convinced that Witness QBP was referring to the Night of Three Attacks when testifying about the only attack she described.[4086] However, a careful review of Witness QBP's testimony reveals that she did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks. Instead, as noted in another part of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QBP's testimony on an attack at the prefectoral office concerned an attack after the Night of Three Attacks in the first half of June 1994.[4087] Ntahobali's reliance on Witness QBP's testimony as it relates to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks is therefore misplaced. As to the Trial Chamber's erroneous statement about the relevance of Witness QBP's evidence to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not in fact rely on Witness QBP's evidence regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks, or Ntahobali's and Nyiramasuhuko's conduct during this particular night.[4088] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

1758. In any event, regardless of when exactly the Night of Three Attacks occurred at the end of May 1994 or at the beginning of June 1994, the Appeals Chamber sees no merit in Ntahobali's argument that the posting of security personnel at the prefectoral office is inconsistent with the finding that the attacks took place. Contrary to Ntahobali's arguments, the Trial Chamber did not find that all abductions and rapes ceased once gendarmes and/or soldiers were posted at the prefectoral office.[4089] In fact, the Trial Chamber expressly determined that additional attacks

occurred in the first half of June 1994.[4090] The lack of merit of Ntahobali's argument is further reflected by his reliance on Witness SU's evidence to submit that the Night of Three Attacks did not occur because the witness testified that abductions and rapes had ceased once Nsabimana posted gendarmes and soldiers at the prefectoral office.[4091] In fact, Witness SU gave direct evidence about the Night of Three Attacks, which the Trial Chamber relied on to find that the attacks occurred.[4092] Similarly, Witnesses RE and TK, on whom Ntahobali relies to support his theory, also testified about the Night of Three Attacks.[4093]

1759. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred as to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks.

(ii) Credibility and Reliability of Prosecution Witnesses

1760. Ntahobali challenges the Trial Chamber's reliance on the testimonies of Witnesses QY, SJ, QBQ, FAP, SS, SU, and RE about the Night of Three Attacks.[4094]

a. Witnesses QY and SJ

1761. The Trial Chamber relied, inter alia, on the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ in support of its finding that Ntahobali and the Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on three occasions in one night, abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion.[4095]

1762. Ntahobali argues that, given the Trial Chamber's findings elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ was not reliable or credible and that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on their testimonies with respect to the Night of Three Attacks.[4096]

1763. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's arguments lack merit and that he fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the testimonies of Witnesses QY and SJ where they corroborated other evidence pertaining to the Night of Three Attacks.[4097]

1764. The Appeals Chamber has previously determined that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ with respect to the presence of Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali during the Night of Three Attacks.[4098] For the reasons stated previously,[4099] the Appeals Chamber finds that it was also unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witnesses QY's and SJ's testimonies to establish that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and the Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office three times in one night, abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion.

1765. Nevertheless, as for the issue of identification of Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Witnesses QY and SJ occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[4100] Aside from the accounts of Witnesses QY and SJ, the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, SU, SS, FAP, and QBQ to establish that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe came to the prefectoral office three times in one night to abduct Tutsi refugees.[4101] The Trial Chamber also relied on the evidence of Witnesses RE, FAP, SU, and QBQ to determine that certain refugees survived the abductions and returned to the prefectoral office to inform the remaining refugees that abducted persons had been killed.[4102]

1766. The Appeals Chamber is likewise not persuaded that the evidence of Witness QY or Witness SJ was essential to the Trial Chamber's determinations that: (i) the Night of Three Attacks occurred around the end of May or beginning of June 1994;[4103] (ii) Ntahobali participated in the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children;[4104] and (iii) Ntahobali and the Interahamwe, based on Nyiramasuhuko's orders, attacked and forced women and children aboard a pickup truck, and that the women and children were taken from the prefectoral office and killed elsewhere.[4105]

1767. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ when making findings about the Night of Three Attacks.

[4101] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2703, 2704, 2706-2712, 2714, 2715. The Appeals Chamber has addressed and dismissed in the section below Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence of Witnesses TK, SU, SS, FAP, and QBQ in these respects.
[4103] See Trial Judgement, para. 2661. While the Trial Chamber referred to the evidence of Witness SJ as it related to the timing of the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber emphasised that Witness SJ's account differed from the testimonies of Witnesses TK, QJ, SU, SS, and FAP as to when the attacks occurred. See ibid., para. 2659. See also ibid., para. 2654. Noting that Witnesses TK, QJ, SU, SS, and FAP provided "a similar timeline", the Trial Chamber reached its conclusion that the Night of Three Attacks occurred around the end of May or beginning of June 1994 based on their evidence. See ibid., para. 2661.
[4104] The Trial Chamber expressly rejected Witness SJ's evidence and did not refer to Witness QY's evidence in its analysis pertaining to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2717-2727.
[4105] Trial Judgement, para. 2736. The Trial Chamber did not refer to the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ to determine that, during the Night of Three Attacks, Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe abducted refugees who were killed elsewhere. See idem. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ was material to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that refugees were abducted from the prefectoral office in order to be killed. See ibid., paras. 2743, 2746, 2747. Consequently, to the extent that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on this evidence, the Appeals Chamber does not find that it has occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice and dismisses Ntahobali's contentions in this regard.

b. Witness QBQ

1768. The Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness QBQ in support of its finding that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on three occasions in one night, abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion.[4106]

1769. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QBQ's testimony about the Night of Three Attacks.[4107] He contends that her evidence reflects that these attacks occurred in April or early May 1994,[4108] before the transfer to Nyange,[4109] therefore contradicting the Trial Chamber's findings "on all events, as well as the testimony of other witnesses that it endorsed."[4110] In this regard, he submits that the Trial Chamber "committed a serious error" in considering that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks "in June" merely because she referred to Semanyenzi's survival.[4111] In Ntahobali's view, the "inconsistencies in the dates" should have led the Trial Chamber to discard Witness QBQ's evidence as it did with Witness QY's, particularly because Witness QY had testified that she and Witness QBQ were "always together" at the prefectoral office.[4112]

1770. Ntahobali also emphasises that, in her prior statement, Witness QBQ only described one attack "on that same night" and did not mention him.[4113] He further contends that the Trial Chamber "erroneously disregarded" several inconsistencies in Witness QBQ's prior statement without noting that she consistently blamed errors on Tribunal investigators.[4114]

[4106] Trial Judgement, paras. 2663, 2664, 2686, 2693, 2699, 2703, 2714, 2715, 2738. The Trial Chamber also relied upon Witness QBQ's evidence in support of its finding that, from mid-May through June 1994, Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in the abduction of multiple truckloads of Tutsi refugees from the prefectoral office and that these refugees were killed. See ibid., paras. 2747-2749.
[4108] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 669. Specifically, Ntahobali points to Witness QBQ's testimony that she arrived at the prefectoral office in late April 1994 and that the Night of Three Attacks occurred three days after her arrival. See idem, referring to Witness QBQ, T. 3 February 2004 pp. 6-11.
[4109] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 669, referring to Witness QBQ, T. 3 February 2004 pp. 22-24. Ntahobali also notes that Witness QBQ testified that the transfer to Nyange occurred prior to the transfer to the EER and that her evidence indicates that the departure for Rango Forest occurred the "day after" the return from the EER. See idem.

1771. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks and that Ntahobali distorts her testimony and prior statement to allege inconsistencies that do not exist.[4115]

1772. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly summarised Witness QBQ's testimony with respect to her arrival at the prefectoral office, the timing of the Night of Three Attacks as well as her transfers to Nyange, the EER, and Rango Forest.[4116] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QBQ's testimony when it assessed and determined that the Night of Three Attacks occurred around the end of May or beginning of June 1994.[4117] Nevertheless, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that Witness QBQ testified about the abduction and escape of Semanyenzi and that Witnesses RE, SS, SU, and FAP also testified that "a man named Semanyenzi was abducted on the [N]ight of [T]hree [A]ttacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office] which occurred around the beginning of June 1994."[4118] It then concluded that Witness QBQ's testimony pertained "to this event at the beginning of June 1994."[4119] On this basis, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber carefully considered Witness QBQ's testimony in relation to the Night of Three Attacks and the timing of its occurrence.

1773. Bearing this analysis in mind, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's submission that the Trial Chamber determined that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks simply because she testified about Semanyenzi's survival. As discussed in detail above, the Trial Judgement shows that Witness QBQ's testimony is consistent with other evidence in relation to significant features relating to the Night of Three Attacks which do not concern Semanyenzi's survival.[4120] Ntahobali demonstrates no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the witness's testimony with respect to these other features.[4121] Given the considerable overlap between the account of Witness QBQ and that of several other witnesses in relation to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QBQ's evidence, despite any variances between her evidence and that of other witnesses regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks.

[4117] See Trial Judgement, para. 2661. The Appeals Chamber relied on the evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, SS, SU, and FAP to make determinations on the timing of the Night of Three Attacks. See idem.

[4121] See supra, para. 1681.

1774. Likewise, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that discrepancies between Witness QBQ's testimony and the Trial Chamber's findings, or other evidence on the record, relating to transfers to Nyange, the EER, or Rango Forest made it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on her otherwise credible and corroborated account of the Night of Three Attacks. The Appeals Chamber understands Ntahobali's argument to be that Witness QBQ's evidence of being transferred to Nyange before being transferred to the EER is contrary to the Trial Chamber's conclusions on the timing of these transfers from the prefectoral office.[4122] In the same vein, he argues that her testimony that the transfer to Rango Forest occurred one day after the return from the EER is also contrary to the Trial Chamber's findings.[4123] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the evidence of Witness QBQ as to the timing of the Nyange transfer or Nsabimana's orders to have refugees transferred to the EER from the prefectoral office.[4124] With respect to the timing of the transfer to Rango Forest, the Trial Chamber explicitly considered that Witness QBQ's testimony conflicted with other evidence and, accordingly, did not find her credible as to the timeframe of this transfer.[4125]

1775. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber ignored these discrepant aspects of Witness QBQ's evidence or that it was required to assess them when considering her testimony on the Night of Three Attacks. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Ntahobali's focus on details of Witness QBQ's evidence regarding the timing of events ignores the precarious circumstances upon which she sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office, as noted by the Trial Chamber.[4126] Ntahobali also ignores the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the circumstances at the prefectoral office, based on the evidence of survivors, "paint[ed] a clear picture of unfathomable depravity and sadism."[4127] Given the deference which must be accorded to a trial chamber's assessment of witness evidence, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was entitled to disregard Witness QBQ's testimony regarding the timing of certain events, while relying on her account, where it was credible and corroborated, in relation to the Night of Three Attacks.

1776. The Appeals Chamber turns to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber should have discarded Witness QBQ's evidence as it discarded that of Witness QY, particularly because

[4123] See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 669.
[4125] Trial Judgement, para. 5072. As noted previously, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on aspects of intrinsically related evidence concerning the presence of Nyiramasuhuko and Nsabimana at the prefectoral office in April 1994 precluded a reasonable trier of fact from finding that Witness QBQ testified about the Night of Three Attacks. See supra, para. 890.
[4127] Trial Judgement, para. 5866.

Witness QY had testified that she and Witness QBQ were "always together" at the prefectoral office.[4128] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the Trial Chamber was required to assess both witnesses and their evidence identically.[4129] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber unequivocally rejected Witness QY's evidence due to discrepancies in her testimony, the unreliable nature of her identification evidence, and her admission that she had lied to the Trial Chamber about whether she knew Witnesses QBQ and SJ.[4130] To the contrary, the Trial Chamber found several elements of Witness QBQ's evidence about the Night of Three Attacks credible and corroborated.[4131] Furthermore, given the Trial Chamber's determination that Witness QY lacked credibility, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in not relying on her testimony that she was "always together" with Witness QBQ at the prefectoral office to discount Witness QBQ's evidence.

1777. Further, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention about inconsistencies between Witness QBQ's testimony and her June 1999 prior statement.[4132] Having reviewed her prior statement, the Appeals Chamber observes that the witness explicitly mentioned multiple attacks in one night and Ntahobali's presence.[4133] The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's selective reference to parts of Witness QBQ's prior statement fails to demonstrate that this inconsistency could undermine the witness's credibility or her otherwise corroborated account of the Night of Three Attacks.

1778. As to Ntahobali's allegations of other discrepancies between Witness QBQ's prior statement and her testimony at trial, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali merely refers to pages of the transcript of her testimony without specifying the discrepancies or explaining how they undermine the Trial Chamber's assessment of her evidence and credibility. Given the vague and unsubstantiated nature of his submissions, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's argument in this regard.

1779. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QBQ's testimony.

A woman who resisted was clubbed to death in the presence of Pauline. PAULINE did not even flinch. We learnt later that the people were taken to a place called MUKONI where they were killed and dumped in a mass grave. Pauline paid two more visits to the [prefectoral] office to take people away in similar fashion. The people taken away were never seen again.").

1780. The Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness FAP regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks and in support of its finding that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on three occasions in one night, abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion.[4134] The Trial Chamber also relied on the evidence of Witness FAP to conclude that Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked women and children at the prefectoral office, forced them aboard the pickup truck, and that the women and children were taken away and killed elsewhere.[4135]

1781. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber unreasonably ignored numerous contradictions and inconsistencies that rendered Witness FAP's evidence incredible with respect to the Night of Three Attacks.[4136] Specifically, he contends that Witness FAP gave inconsistent evidence as to whether Hutu refugees were present during the Night of Three Attacks and submits that Witness QBP contradicted Witness FAP "on the presence of refugees that night".[4137] He also avers that Witness FAP's testimony that no "grown men" were left at the prefectoral office on the Night of Three Attacks was contradicted by "other witnesses" and a video admitted into evidence.[4138] Ntahobali argues that, in light of these errors, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to believe that Witness FAP testified about the Night of Three Attacks simply because she spoke about Semanyenzi's survival.[4139]

1782. In addition, Ntahobali points to alleged contradictions in Witness FAP's testimony that do not directly concern the Night of Three Attacks but, in his view, undermine her credibility.[4140] In particular, he highlights that Nsabimana testified that refugees transferred from the Butare University Hospital to the prefectoral office arrived on 2 May 1994 and suggests that this evidence contradicts Witness FAP's testimony that she left the hospital and arrived at the prefectoral office in the "last two weeks of May" 1994.[4141] He also argues that Witness FAP's evidence about the timing of her arrival at the prefectoral office is contradicted by the Trial Chamber's finding that refugees at the prefectoral office had already been transferred to the EER at this time.[4142] Ntahobali further

The Trial Chamber also relied upon the testimonies of Witness FAP to find that, from mid-May through June 1994, Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in the abduction of multiple Tutsi refugees from the Butare Prefecture Office, who were subsequently killed. See ibid., paras. 2746, 2747, 2749.

emphasises that Witness FAP did not testify about the transfer to the EER or Nyange, even though she remained at the prefectoral office until she left for Rango Forest.[4143]

1783. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's arguments regarding Witness FAP should be dismissed as he fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in accepting her testimony.[4144]

1784. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Ntahobali's contentions regarding inconsistencies and contradictions in Witness FAP's evidence about the Night of Three Attacks ignore the key aspects of the witness's testimony that the Trial Chamber relied upon and found corroborated by Witnesses TK, RE, QBQ, SS, and SU.[4145] In particular, the Trial Chamber noted Witness FAP's testimony that: (i) a black camouflage-coloured vehicle covered with mud arrived three times during the same evening, each time with Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali on board, and each time taking away many refugees who never returned;[4146] (ii) on the second trip, Nyiramasuhuko instructed the Interahamwe to load the Tutsi refugees into the vehicle and the Interahamwe herded young Tutsi men, women, and children into the vehicle by beating them;[4147] and (iii) on the third trip, Nyiramasuhuko instructed Ntahobali and the Interahamwe to select systematically young women and girls to rape and kill them, that the women were not raped but thrown onto the vehicle, and that the Interahamwe drove them away.[4148] Based on elements of Witness FAP's evidence and that of other witnesses, including Witnesses TK, RE, QBQ, SS, and SU, the Trial Chamber determined that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe came aboard a camouflaged pickup truck multiple times in one night, that Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup truck, and that the pickup truck left the prefectoral office abducting refugees.[4149]

1785. In this context, Ntahobali's contention about the purported inconsistency in Witness FAP's testimony as to whether Hutu refugees were still present during the Night of Three Attacks is immaterial.[4150] Likewise, Ntahobali's undeveloped contention that Witness QBP's testimony

[4150] The Appeals Chamber observes that, in any event, there is no internal inconsistency in Witness FAP's evidence regarding the presence of Hutu refugees during the Night of Three Attacks. The Trial Chamber noted her evidence that "Hutu refugees stayed in a house, prepared food and the next day were transferred to Mubumbano". See Trial Judgement, para. 2300, referring to Witness FAP, T. 11 March 2003 p. 45, T. 12 March 2003 pp. 7, 46. However, Witness FAP explicitly stated that the Hutu refugees "were not a stable group", that a group would come and stay for a few days, and that "each time there was another group that would arrive". When asked if the Hutu refugees were a constant presence at the prefectoral office, Witness FAP responded: "Yes, the [prefectoral] office was their

"contradicted Witness FAP's on the presence of refugees that night" fails to identify how the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of the latter's evidence.[4151] Regarding the absence of grown men during the Night of Three Attacks, Ntahobali simply points to an aspect of Witness FAP's testimony about the second attack on this evening, when young Tutsi men, women, and children were herded and beaten.[4152] Ntahobali's submissions fail to substantiate how this discrete aspect of Witness FAP's testimony could undermine the rest of her evidence or her credibility, particularly given the varying vantage points of all the witnesses who observed the attack as it unfolded. In this regard, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that a BBC video, which the Trial Chamber considered was only created around 15 June 1994, reflecting the presence of men at the prefectoral office is somehow incompatible with Witness FAP's evidence about what she saw during the Night of Three Attacks.[4153] Finally, Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber found that Witness FAP testified about the Night of Three Attacks simply because she spoke about Semanyenzi's survival ignores the numerous other elements of Witness FAP's testimony that were corroborated and found credible by the Trial Chamber and demonstrated that she was present during that particular night.

1786. Turning to Ntahobali's challenges concerning aspects of Witness FAP's testimony that are not directly related to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that Witness FAP's evidence concerning the timing of her arrival at the prefectoral office is necessarily inconsistent with Nsabimana's evidence,[4154] or that her presence at the prefectoral office sometime in the last two weeks of May 1994 is contradictory to the Trial Chamber's findings concerning the transfer of refugees to the EER.[4155] Moreover, Witness FAP's testimony appears to reflect that she arrived at the prefectoral office after refugees were transferred resting place before they were transferred elsewhere. Every time they came, they would rest first […] before they continued on their way." See Witness FAP, T. 12 March 2003 pp. 46, 47.

[4154] Ntahobali points to the Trial Chamber's summary of Nsabimana's testimony and related exhibits reflecting that certain persons were transferred from the Butare University Hospital to the Butare Prefecture Office on 2 May 1994. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 670, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2394, Exhibit D479B (Letter from Vice-Rector of National University of Rwanda, 25 April 1994), Exhibit D480B (Letter from Nsabimana to Deputy Vice-Chancellor, 2 May 1994). However, it is unclear to the Appeals Chamber how this aspect of Nsabimana's testimony and the relevant exhibits undermine the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness FAP was at the prefectoral office and was an eye-witness to the Night of Three Attacks. Indeed, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that Witness FAP arrived with the refugees, about which Nsabimana was testifying. Compare Trial Judgement, para. 2298 (Witness FAP) with ibid., paras. 2394, 2395 (Nsabimana).

[4155] As previously discussed, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's conclusions reflect that displaced Tutsis who sought refuge at the prefectoral office were moved to the EER between 15 and 20 May 1994 and stayed there until approximately 31 May 1994, when they returned to the prefectoral office. However, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, these findings are not categorical or inconsistent with findings and evidence that refugees remained to the EER, making it reasonable that she would not have testified about that event.[4156] Ntahobali also does not show how any omission in Witness FAP's testimony concerning the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to Nyange was material to or undermined the Trial Chamber's reliance on her corroborated evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks.

1787. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions above that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness FAP's testimony regarding the Night of Three Attacks.

d. Witnesses SS and SU

1788. The Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU regarding the timing of the Night of Three Attacks and in support of its finding that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on three occasions in one night, abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion.[4157] The Trial Chamber also relied on the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU to conclude that Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked women and children at the prefectoral office, forced them aboard the pickup truck, and that the women and children were taken away and killed elsewhere.[4158]

1789. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU.[4159] In particular, he argues that, given their familial relationship, the Trial Chamber should have exercised the same caution when considering their evidence as it did with other witnesses who had family ties with the co-Accused.[4160] Ntahobali also contends that no reasonable trier of fact would have believed that Witnesses SU and SS never discussed the events of 1994 or their respective testimonies with each other.[4161]

1790. Ntahobali further claims that, given that Witnesses SS and SU were sleeping in the same place at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber should have considered every inconsistency in their testimonies.[4162] In this respect, he submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider numerous inconsistencies between their evidence and with other Prosecution evidence,[4163] including: (i) variances in the evidence of Witnesses SU and SS about when Witness SU left the prefectoral office;[4164] (ii) the fact that only Witness SU testified about the presence of Warrant Officer Emmanuel Rekeraho, who drove a Sovu health centre ambulance, during the Night of Three Attacks;[4165] (iii) the evolving and contradictory evidence as to the timing of their arrival at the prefectoral office;[4166] (iv) Witness SU's testimony that the Interahamwe were present at the prefectoral office until "the evening of the rapes" whereas Witness SS "did not mention those rapes";[4167] (v) the fact that Witness SS "asserted that a witness who testified that refugees could go to the veranda was a liar" whereas Witness SU gave testimony to this effect;[4168] (vi) Witness SU's testimony concerning the transfer to Nyange was contradicted by Witnesses RE and SJ, and that Witness SS "never testified about Nyange";[4169] and (vii) the fact that Witnesses SS and SU contradicted each other on the circumstances under which their statements were taken and on the location of their mother's death.[4170]

[4158] Trial Judgement, para. 2736. The Trial Chamber also relied upon the testimonies of Witnesses SU and SS to find that, from mid-May through June 1994, Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in the abduction of multiple Tutsi refugees from the prefectoral office, who were subsequently killed. See ibid., paras. 2741, 2742, 2746, 2749.

1791. Ntahobali also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in "failing to make a finding" on the evidence of Witnesses D-2-11-D and D-2-21-T, who testified that Witnesses SU and SS remained in their sector and could not have been at the prefectoral office, the EER, Nyange, or Rango Forest.[4171]

1792. In addition, Ntahobali contends that it was implausible for the two witnesses to stay apart during the day in order "to avoid being abducted together" and to sleep in the same place at night when the attacks occurred.[4172] According to him, the demeanour of Witnesses SS and SU further undermined their credibility.[4173] In this regard, Ntahobali contends that Witness SU provided

According to Ntahobali, Witness SS arrived on 27 May 1994 and Witness SU on 28 May 1994. He argues that the Trial Chamber failed to explain how these witnesses could have gone to the Butare Prefecture Office when the refugees were at the EER. He further highlights Witnesses SU's and SS's confusion regarding when they were at the Butare University Hospital and their arrival at the Butare Prefecture Office. See idem.

"spurious answers when confronted with obvious contradictions" and emphasises that the witnesses repeatedly blamed investigators for omissions in their statements.[4174]

1793. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber duly considered the allegations of collusion between Witnesses SS and SU.[4175] It also argues that inconsistencies between the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU are minor or non-existent, and that Ntahobali either misstates their evidence or overstates the inconsistencies.[4176] The Prosecution additionally submits that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in preferring the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU over that of Witnesses D-2-11-D and D-2-21-T.[4177]

1794. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in support of his contention that the Trial Chamber should have treated the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU with caution because they were related, Ntahobali points to paragraphs in the Trial Judgement that assess alibi or Defence witnesses who have family ties with or were detained accomplices of the co-Accused.[4178] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the circumstances of these witnesses required similar treatment for Witnesses SS and SU, who were not accomplices, detained, or related to the defendants. In this regard, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the fact that Witnesses SS and SU are related, which the Trial Chamber duly noted,[4179] created an incentive for them to implicate Ntahobali in crimes or to lie about the events.[4180]

1795. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses SS and SU were in contact with each other and by implication could have spoken about the 1994 events and their testimonies.[4181] Noting Witness SS's testimony that she and Witness SU did not discuss Witness SU's 2002 testimony[4182] and that, "[a]t the time of her testimony, Witness SU was not living with [Witness SS], although they visited one another", the Trial Chamber accepted Witness SU's testimony that she "never discussed the events of 1994 or the events" at the Butare Prefecture Office with Witness SS.[4183] Ntahobali does not demonstrate how the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in the assessment of the evidence in reaching this conclusion. His submissions reflect mere disagreement with the Trial Chamber's determination and are therefore rejected.

Noting that Witness SU blamed inconsistencies on the investigators recording her statement and testified that "all that is indicated in this statement, I have seen that mistakes have been made", Ntahobali argues that the witness therefore recanted all her previous evidence on the record. See ibid., para. 674, referring to Witness SU, T. 21 October 2002 pp. 8-10. The Appeals Chamber fails to see how this citation confirms Ntahobali's assertion and dismisses it without further consideration.

1796. Regarding alleged discrepancies in the testimonies of Witnesses SS and SU, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is within the discretion of a trial chamber to evaluate inconsistencies in the evidence, to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible, and to accept or reject the fundamental features of the evidence,[4184] without explaining its decision in every detail.[4185]

1797. Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber explictly considered the discrepancy concerning Witness SU's departure from the Butare Prefecture Office.[4186] In any event, given the Trial Chamber's finding that Witnesses SS and SU provided consistent evidence regarding the Night of Three Attacks, Ntahobali does not demonstrate how any discrepancy on Witness SU's departure from the prefectoral office, which occurred in June 1994, after the attacks, would undermine their credibility or the Trial Chamber's assessment of their evidence. Furthermore, and contrary to Ntahobali's assertion, Witnesses SS and SU testified to the presence of an ambulance from the Sovu health centre on the Night of Three Attacks.[4187] The Appeals Chamber observes that beyond merely listing differences between the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU, including one that does not exist, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how this discrepancy would undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's reliance on the witnesses' testimonies about the Night of Three Attacks.

1798. The Trial Chamber also considered Witness SU's evidence of her arrival at the Butare Prefecture Office on or around 28 May 1994,[4188] and that Witness SS testified to arriving the second time on 27 May 1994.[4189] The Trial Chamber did not discuss as a discrepancy Witness SS's evidence on her second arrival to the prefectoral office, or that Witness SU testified to Witness SS being at the Butare University Hospital in mid-April and arriving at the prefectoral office in early May 1994.[4190] Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber perceives no discrepancy nor evolution within Witness SS's evidence that would have required express consideration by the Trial Chamber or warrant particular caution. While Witness SS testified at one point that she arrived on 27 April 1994, she subsequently corrected herself and reconfirmed her arrival date to be 27 May 1994.[4191] It is also unclear whether a discrepancy exists between the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU as claimed by Ntahobali as Witness SS testified that she arrived at the Butare University Hospital in April 1994.[4192] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's arguments regarding alleged material variances in the testimonies of Witnesses SS and SU with respect to their arrival at the prefectoral office.

1799. Having reviewed the references provided by Ntahobali in support of his submission that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the discrepancy that Witness SU testified about the Interahamwe being present at the prefectoral office until "the evening of the rapes" whereas Witness SS "did not mention those rapes",[4193] it is unclear whether these references relate to the Night of Three Attacks, or how the witnesses' credibility or the Trial Chamber's findings could be undermined. Recalling that the Appeals Chamber cannot be expected to consider a party's submissions in detail if they are obscure, vague, or suffer from other formal and obvious insufficiencies,[4194] Ntahobali's argument is dismissed without further consideration.

1800. Moreover, the testimonies of Witnesses SS and SU are not necessarily contradictory regarding the presence of Tutsi refugees on the veranda of the prefectoral office.[4195] Ntahobali's argument that Witness SS "asserted that a witness who testified that refugees could go to the veranda was a liar" is unsupported by the witness's evidence.[4196] Having reviewed the evidence [4189] See Trial Judgement, para. 2281. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness SS went to the Butare Prefecture Office on two occasions, that she could not remember the date of the first occasion, and that she went a second time on 27 May 1994. See idem. See also Witness SS, T. 3 March 2003 pp. 36, 37.

[4190] See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 673. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to explain how Witnesses SS and SU could have gone to the prefectoral office while refugees were at the EER. See idem. Given the close proximity between the Butare Prefecture Office and the EER as well as the fact that there was nothing preventing refugees from arriving on their own to the prefectoral office, Ntahobali does not demonstrate why the Trial Chamber had to explicitly consider this alleged contradiction. This argument is therefore dismissed.

[4195] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness SU stated "we were prohibited from approaching the veranda and when it rained, we were rained on in the open air." See Witness SU, T. 17 October 2002 p. 88. On the same issue, Witness SS stated "during the day, refugees could not stay on the veranda […] during the night some of the refugees could go to the veranda, but people came and moved them from there." See Witness SS, T. 4 March 2003 pp. 27, 28.

referred to by Ntahobali,[4197] the Appeals Chamber also finds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate how purported differences between the evidence of Witness SU and that of Witnesses RE and SJ on the transfer to Nyange was relevant to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness SU's testimony concerning the Night of Three Attacks.[4198] Ntahobali also does not point to excerpts of Witness SS's testimony that would demonstrate that her failure to testify "about Nyange" would be in material contradiction with Witness SU's evidence about the transfer there.

1801. As to the alleged discrepancies concerning the circumstances under which Witnesses SS's and SU's prior statements were given, it is unclear, from Ntahobali's references to Witness SS's testimony, how the testimonies of both witnesses are contradictory[4199] or how any purported inconsistency in this respect would undermine the credibility of their account concerning the Night of Three Attacks. Similarly, Ntahobali makes no demonstration as to how the discrepancy in their testimonies regarding the location of the death of their mother is material to their evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks.

1802. Turning to Ntahobali's arguments regarding the evidence of Witnesses D-2-11-D and D-2-21-T, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted Witness D-2-11-D's evidence regarding events at roadblocks and at the Hotel Ihuliro,[4200] but did not discuss or summarise his testimony that Witness SU sought refuge at his home from mid-April 1994 until July 1994 and that she was not at the Butare Prefecture Office during this time.[4201] The Trial Chamber, however, explicitly considered that it was put to Witness SU that she had not been at the prefectoral office during the time she said she was and was instead at someone's house from 27 May 1994 until the end of the war.[4202] Witness SU replied that "six people were discovered hiding and killed at his place – so, I left on that day 27th of May to Butare".[4203] The Trial Chamber concluded that, "[t]herefore, she only spent three days in [this man's] home".[4204] The Appeals Chamber recalls the Trial Chamber's discretion to evaluate inconsistencies in the evidence and decide which version it considers more credible.[4205] In light of the consistency of the account of Witness SU's evidence on the Night of Three Attacks with the accounts of other witnesses,[4206] the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have placed more weight on Witness SU's account over that of Witness D-2-11-D.

[4198] Specifically, Ntahobali submits that, "[a]ccording to Witness SU, the child who informed them about the killings in Nyange alerted them to the danger by signalling the [third] bus to stop, which explains their return to the [Butare Prefecture Office]," whereas Witnesses RE and SJ gave evidence that "it was the return of a young man to the [Butare Prefecture Office] that prompted them not to go to Nyange." Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness SU did not mention that she had gone to Nyange in her prior statement. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 673. However, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted this evidence in the Trial Judgement and her explanation that "the omission must have been the fault of the person taking her statement, since many things she said had not been included in her statement." See Trial Judgement, para. 4122. Consequently, Ntahobali's contention is without merit and the Appeals Chamber dismisses it without further consideration.

1803. With respect to Witness D-2-21-T, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber expressly assessed her evidence with respect to fabrication of evidence as well as events at the Sahera and Tumba Sectors.[4207] The Trial Chamber found Witness D-2-21-T "neither credible nor reliable" in relation to allegations of evidence fabrication.[4208] Ntahobali points to aspects of the witness's testimony that relate to Witnesses SS's and SU's participation in the Ibuka association meetings, and submits that the 1994 events recounted by Witness SU during these meetings were lies.[4209] Witness D-2-21-T also testified that Witness SU "told us that this was in July 1994 that she went to the [prefectoral] office" and that "[Witness SU] and her sister were not at the [prefectoral] office during the months of May and June."[4210] Given the hearsay nature of Witness D-2-21-T's testimony of Witnesses SU's and SS's whereabouts between May and July 1994, the Trial Chamber's determination that she lacked credibility, and the consistency of the direct evidence of Witnesses SU and SS regarding the Night of Three Attacks,[4211] the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's preference for the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU over that of Witness D-2-21-T.

1804. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's vague and unsupported contention that parts of Witnesses SS's and SU's testimonies were implausible, in particular the fact that they stayed apart during the day and slept in the same place at night, when attacks took place.[4212] The Appeals Chamber notes that beyond his argument, Ntahobali does not substantiate how their testimonies in this respect are implausible or how this would undermine their corroborated accounts regarding the Night of Three Attacks.

[4206] The Trial Chamber observed the following consistencies between Witness SU's account and that of Witnesses SS, TK, QJ, RE, QBQ, and FAP: (i) Nyiramasuhuko, her driver, and the Interahamwe come to the Butare Prefecture Office on a pickup truck covered in mud or cow dung; (ii) Nyiramasuhuko alighted from the vehicle and told the Interahamwe to load refugees onto the truck; (iii) the Interahamwe began attacking refugees and loaded them onto the vehicle; and (iv) the pickup truck departed with Nyiramasuhuko and returned the same night to abduct other refugees. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2196, 2215, 2251-2253, 2277, 2278, 2284, 2285, 2287, 2289, 2302-2304, 2307, 2308, 2330, 2662-2664, 2704, 2706-2711, 2732, 2733, 2738.

1805. Finally, upon review of the specific passages of their testimonies referred to by Ntahobali in support of his submissions,[4213] the Appeals Chamber does not find that the demeanour of Witnesses SS and SU and their explanations that it was the fault of investigators for omissions in prior statements, prevented a reasonable trier of fact from relying on their evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks.

1806. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's arguments above have not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relation to the assessment of the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU concerning the Night of Three Attacks.

1807. The Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness RE in finding that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office on three occasions in one night, abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion.[4214]

1808. Ntahobali submits that Witness RE's evidence is contradicted by other evidence and is inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's own findings.[4215] Specifically, he notes that Witness RE only testified about the Night of Three Attacks, which, according to her occurred around 26 to 27 April 1994, approximately two to three days after "the events of Nyange".[4216] Ntahobali contends that this timing contradicts the Trial Chamber's conclusion about when these attacks occurred.[4217] Ntahobali further claims that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that

Witness RE, while at the prefectoral office, did not testify about other attacks, such as the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks.[4218]

1809. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's challenges to Witness RE's credibility should be dismissed for misstating the evidence and lack of reference.[4219]

1810. The Appeals Chamber recalls the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the Night of Three Attacks occurred around the end of May or beginning of June 1994.[4220] In assessing Witness RE's testimony, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that her account was inconsistent with other evidence about the timing of the Night of Three Attacks, particularly in relation to the transfer to Nyange.[4221] Considering the similarities between the core elements of Witness RE's evidence and that of Witnesses FAP, QBQ, SS, SU, and TK, the Trial Chamber was nonetheless convinced that they were referring to the same night of three attacks.[4222] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not have reached this finding.

1811. In addition, the Appeals Chamber sees no significance in Ntahobali's contention that Witness RE only testified about the Night of Three Attacks and not, for example, about the Mid-May Attack or the Last Half of May Attacks.[4223] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber recalls its previous analysis that Ntahobali does not establish that Witness RE was necessarily at the Butare Prefecture Office during these other attacks.[4224]

1812. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's submissions regarding Witness RE's credibility.

(iii) Failure to Consider Witnesses TA's and SD's Evidence

1813. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witnesses TA and SD, who were at the Butare Prefecture Office during the relevant time, did not testify about the [4222] Trial Judgement, paras. 2656-2658. These core elements include: (i) the arrival of Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and the Interahamwe on a camouflaged pickup truck; (ii) the Interahamwe attacking and abducting refugees, including a woman and her children; (iii) the pickup truck departing with refugees and returning the same night to abduct other refugees; and (iv) the fact that the Night of Three Attacks occurred prior to the transfer of refugees from the Butare Prefecture Office to Rango Forest. See, e.g., ibid., paras. 2203, 2211-2215, 2220, 2242, 2251-2253, 2277, 2278, 2284, 2285, 2287, 2289, 2299, 2302, 2304, 2307, 2308, 2655, 2660, 2663, 2704, 2706, 2709, 2710, 2717-2719, 2731-2736, 2738.

[4223] See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 691.
[4224] See supra, paras. 870, 871, 1722. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali also argues that Witness RE and other refugees were not at the Butare Prefecture Office when the Mid-May Attack and the Last Half of May Attacks occurred. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 637. See also ibid., paras. 618, 636.

Night of Three Attacks.[4225] Ntahobali stresses the unreasonableness of this omission especially given the Trial Chamber's acceptance of Witness SS's testimony that the Interahamwe "woke up everybody" during the attacks.[4226]

1814. The Prosecution responds that Witnesses TA's and SD's silence regarding the Night of Three Attacks does not demonstrate that the event did not occur and points to elements of their evidence that offer circumstantial support for its occurrence.[4227] According to the Prosecution, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that refugees fled during the Night of Three Attacks is consistent with Witness SS's testimony that everyone was woken up as well as the fact that Witnesses TA and SD did not testify about "these attacks".[4228]

1815. The Appeals Chamber has previously determined that the fact that Witnesses TA and SD did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that these attacks occurred.[4229] Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was not required to discuss any possible difference within the Prosecution evidence where that evidence was not incompatible. In this instance, Ntahobali does not show that either Witness TA or Witness SD denied the occurrence of the Night of Three Attacks or that they provided evidence that contradicted that of Witnesses TK, RE, FAP, QBQ, SS, and SU on these attacks. While Ntahobali points out Witness SS's evidence that the Interahamwe "woke up everybody" on the third attack of the same night, suggesting that Witnesses TA and SD could not have been unaware of the attack, Ntahobali overlooks that both witnesses testified to the existence of other attacks than those they specifically described.[4230]

1816. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witnesses TA and SD did not mention the Night of Three Attacks.

[4226] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 677, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2709. [4230] See, e.g., Witness SD, T. 17 March 2003 pp. 9-11, 41, 49, 50, 65-71, T. 18 March 2003 p. 18; Witness TA, T. 1 November 2001 pp. 50, 51. Ntahobali further submits that Witnesses TA's and SD's silence regarding the Night of Three Attacks was also unreasonable, especially since the Trial Chamber accepted evidence that refugees fled the Butare Prefecture Office during the attacks in order to justify why Witnesses SU and QBQ only testified about two attacks that evening. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 677, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2660. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, it is unclear how evidence of refugees fleeing the prefectoral office would render the Trial Chamber's assessment of the Night of Three Attacks unreasonable in light of the fact that Witnesses TA and SD did not testify about it. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's argument.

(iv) Abduction of Mbasha's Wife and Children

1817. The Trial Chamber concluded that, during the Night of Three Attacks, Ntahobali and the Interahamwe abducted Mbasha's wife and children.[4231] In coming to this conclusion, the Trial Chamber relied on the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE.[4232]

1818. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to apply caution to the evidence of Witnesses TK and QJ, who are related by marriage and lied about not discussing their testimonies in this case.[4233] He avers that the Trial Chamber unreasonably determined that this "lie" did not undermine the credibility of Witnesses TK and QJ, particularly considering allegations of collusion made against them after amici curiae investigations.[4234] Ntahobali specifically notes the Trial Chamber's differential treatment between Witnesses TK and QJ and others witnesses, such as Witnesses QA, D-2-13-D, and D-2-14-D.[4235] In the same vein, Ntahobali stresses that Witnesses TK and RE are related by marriage and argues the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution when considering this familial link, especially in light of its assessment of Defence witnesses.[4236]

1819. In addition to the several alleged inconsistencies that have been addressed in the subsection addressing Ntahobali's challenge to identification evidence,[4237] Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the material inconsistencies within the evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, RE, SJ, and Witness WKKTD concerning the age and gender of Mbasha's children were insignificant and could be explained by the passage of time.[4238] Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness RE "did not mention Mbasha in her prior statement, but suddenly remembered that at trial" and that "Witness TK did not mention Mbasha or his wife but only their children in her first prior statement".[4239] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in disregarding the "threatening attitude of Witness TK when confronted with [4231] Trial Judgement, para. 2727. As noted previously, the Trial Chamber determined that it would not enter convictions on the basis of the abduction of Mbasha's wife due to insufficient notice but nonetheless considered that the credible and consistent information with regard to this event provided circumstantial support for its findings regarding the abduction of other unnamed Tutsi refugees from the Butare Prefecture Office. See supra, Sections IV.F.2(a), V.I.2(a)(ii).

[4234] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 685. [4237] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 681-684, 689-691. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 293. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber has previously assessed Ntahobali's arguments that the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, and/or SJ are, inter alia, inconsistent as to: (i) the timing of the attack; (ii) whether the abduction was forceful or not; (iii) where the victims were placed in the vehicle; (iv) whether Mbasha's wife was undressed; and (v) what Ntahobali wore. See supra, Section V.I.2(b)(iii)b. The Appeals Chamber has also addressed Ntahobali's challenges pertaining to alleged inconsistencies between the evidence of Witness TK and QJ about the vehicle used. See supra, paras. 1684, 1685.

that contradiction" and generally argues that she repeatedly provided "implausible and spurious explanations" when confronted with inconsistencies.[4240]

1820. Ntahobali submits that, in light of the inconsistent accounts on the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, no reasonable trier of fact could have dismissed Witness WKKTD's exculpatory evidence.[4241] He contends that, while Witness WKKTD's testimony was uncorroborated and hearsay, he was found to be credible and his evidence should have raised doubt about the abduction.[4242] He claims that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof in this respect.[4243]

1821. The Prosecution responds that, despite any familial relationships, the Trial Chamber correctly assessed and properly relied on the evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE in relation to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[4244] It further submits that: (i) inconsistencies regarding the age and gender of Mbasha's children are insignificant; (ii) alleged inconsistencies between witness testimonies and their prior statements as well as challenges to the credibility of Witnesses RE and TK are misstatements of the evidence; and (iii) Witness WKKTD's evidence was unreliable.[4245]

1822. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered the relationship between Witnesses TK and QJ and the possibility that they discussed their testimonies before the Tribunal.[4246] Specifically, the Trial Chamber stated:

> Witness QJ testified that he is married to Witness TK, which was confirmed by Witness TK. Both witnesses also testified that they had never discussed the events of April to July 1994 together, and did not know of each other's plans to testify before this Tribunal. The Chamber recalls its previous finding that while it does not believe that these witnesses never discussed the events at issue in this case, or their plans to testify before this Tribunal, this alone does not undermine Witness TK or Witness QJ's credibility.[4247]

1823. The Appeals Chamber has already considered and rejected the contention that it was unreasonable to rely on aspects of Witnesses QJ's and TK's evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks, notwithstanding the Trial Chamber's disbelief that they had not discussed the events and their participation in proceedings with each other.[4248] As to Ntahobali's contention that the amici curiae investigations demonstrated collusion between Witnesses TK and QJ and other witnesses, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has also previously rejected this argument.[4249]

1824. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that, in light of the distinguishable circumstances, the Trial Chamber was required to disregard the evidence of Witnesses TK and QJ as it did with Witnesses QA, D-2-13-D, and D-2-14-D.[4250] The Trial Chamber observed that Witness QA admitted that he lied to Canadian police in another proceeding, lied to the Prosecution in 1996, and admitted that most of his testimony given under oath to the Tribunal in 2004 was false.[4251] The Trial Chamber determined that Witness QA lacked credibility and did not rely on his evidence.[4252] As for Witnesses D-2-13-D and D-2-14-D, the Trial Chamber considered that they were neighbours, were imprisoned together, met and signed their statements to the Kanyabashi Defence investigator together, went to Arusha to testify together, and were detained together while waiting to give their evidence.[4253] It further noted that Witness D-2-13-D even testified that Witness D-2-14-D "helped Witness D-2-13-D draft his confession which was sent to the Gacaca courts and was given to Nkeshimana, the Kanyabashi Defence investigator."[4254] In light of their admission to interacting with the Kanyabashi Defence investigator, their close ties, as well as the numerous opportunities which they had to discuss their experiences due to their parallel participation in the case, the Trial Chamber considered that their testimonies were not reliable and their credibility undermined.[4255] By contrast, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witnesses TK and QJ were neither found to have provided false testimony nor to have colluded by helping each other prepare their testimonies or statements to investigators.

1825. Concerning Witness RE's relationship to Witness TK, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly considered that Witness RE's relative was Witness TK's sister-in-law.[4256] It also noted Witness RE's testimony that she did not inform Witness TK that she was to testify in Arusha.[4257] Having considered other allegations of evidence fabrication, the Trial Chamber did not find that Witness RE's relationship with Witness TK undermined her [4248] See supra, Section IV.F.2(b). The Appeals Chamber has also already rejected the contention that the Trial Chamber barred cross-examination on whether Witness QJ knew that Witness TK was called to testify for the Prosecution, as the references he cites reflect that the witness was asked and answered this very question. See idem.

credibility.[4258] Ntahobali simply argues that the Trial Chamber should have exercised greater caution in light of possible collusion,[4259] but fails to substantiate allegations of collusion or demonstrate an error by the Trial Chamber.[4260] Moreover, his submission regarding the Trial Chamber's observation of Defence witnesses is both vague and misguided.[4261] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber applied caution to Defence witnesses with familial ties to Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali and who may have had motivation to provide exculpatory evidence for the defendants.[4262] Ntahobali has not shown that any familial link between Witnesses RE and TK provided them with an incentive to implicate him.[4263]

1826. As to inconsistencies regarding Mbasha's children, the Trial Chamber explicitly considered variances among the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, QJ, and WKKTD, concerning the number, age, and gender of these children.[4264] It specifically noted that:

> In addition, there were some discrepancies as to the number and gender of Mbasha's children. Witness TK testified that the wife of Mbasha was accompanied by one boy and one girl. Witness WKKTD testified that Mbasha had two children aged 7 and 10 or 11, but he said they were both girls. In contrast, Witnesses RE and QJ testified that there were three children.[4265]

1827. The Trial Chamber found that the testimony of Witness WKKTD, who had known the family for six years prior to 1994 and was a close friend of the family, that Mbasha had two daughters was reliable.[4266] It considered that this evidence was not necessarily inconsistent with the testimony of Witness TK, who testified to the children being a girl and a boy,[4267] reasoning that "Witness TK said that Ntahobali asked which of the children was a girl" and since "Ntahobali was not able to identify the gender of the children, both of the children could have been girls."[4268] It also considered that, although Witnesses RE and QJ said there were three children, this discrepancy was not significant in light of the "passage of time between this event and their testimony."[4269]

1828. Ntahobali simply lists discrepancies in the witnesses' testimonies without demonstrating how the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in assessing them.[4270] Considering that Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ observed these children in the midst of an attack, Ntahobali does not show that the evidence of these witnesses, as well as that of Witness WKKTD, was incompatible despite variances as to the precise age, gender, or number of these children.

1829. Turning to Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber failed to assess purported inconsistencies between witnesses' testimonies and prior statements concerning this incident, the Appeals Chamber has concluded earlier that the omission related to the Mbasha event in Witness RE's prior statement did not make it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on her evidence.[4271] Furthermore, having reviewed Witness TK's prior statement and relevant testimony at trial, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the witness contradicted herself by not mentioning the presence of Mbasha's wife in her first statement as it is manifest that this statement did not purport to give an exhaustive list of everyone Ntahobali abducted at the prefectoral office.[4272] As noted by Ntahobali, in a subsequent statement that provided more detail, Witness TK recalled Ntahobali's conversation with Mbasha's wife and that she was among the family members abducted.[4273] During her testimony at trial, Witness TK stated that "Ms. Mbasha was present at the time; she was with her children and she was taken away; she was abducted with her children."[4274] In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that Witness TK only mentioned the Mbasha children and not their mother in her 1996 prior statement did not require the Trial Chamber to reject the witness's evidence.

1830. As to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness TK's threatening attitude when confronted with the contradiction discussed above as well as others, and that the witness only offered "implausible and spurious explanations" for inconsistencies,[4275] the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly considered omissions in Witness TK's prior statement and accepted her explanations for them.[4276] The Appeals Chamber recalls that trial chambers are best placed to assess the evidence, including the demeanour of witnesses.[4277] Ntahobali provides a list of explanations that he finds "implausible or spurious" without demonstrating that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied upon Witness TK's otherwise corroborated testimony concerning the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[4278]

1831. Ntahobali also does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing Witness WKKTD's alternative explanation for the disappearance of Mbasha's wife and her children.[4279] The Trial Chamber considered Witness WKKTD's testimony that the Mbashas were killed at a roadblock and that the eldest daughter survived the events, and determined the testimony to be uncorroborated, hearsay, and unreliable.[4280] Given the direct and corroborated evidence of Witnesses TK, QJ, and RE that Mbasha's wife and children were abducted at the prefectoral office,[4281] the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's rejection of Witness WKKTD's uncorroborated and hearsay account. Considering the Trial Chamber's discretion to assess and weigh the evidence of different witnesses against each other, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof in this instance.[4282]

1832. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali's arguments discussed above fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing the evidence related to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and her children.[4283]

(v) Other Abductions

1833. The Trial Chamber noted the evidence of Witnesses FAP, SU, and SS, who each testified about the abduction of a woman accompanied by children at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks.[4284] It stated that Witness FAP's testimony corroborated "numerous details

[4278] Ntahobali also avers that, despite finding insufficient evidence to convict Ntahobali for the undressing of refugees, the Trial Chamber erroneously believed Witness TK's testimony that Mbasha's wife was forced to undress and placed in the front cabin of the pickup truck. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 687, 690, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 6137. However, to support his contention, Ntahobali refers to a conclusion in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that concerns the events at the EER and not the Butare Prefecture Office.
[4279] See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 692.
[4280] Trial Judgement, para. 2726.
[4281] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2717-2719, 2727.
[4282] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witnesses QBQ and QBP never testified about Mbasha or any such abduction, and that the Trial Chamber's assessment was "selective and patently unreasonable". See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 701. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali's argument is a mere statement and that he provides nothing to substantiate his submission. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that Witness QBP's evidence was not relevant to the Night of Three Attacks. See supra, Section V.I.2(d)(i). Given that the Trial Chamber's determination that Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ provided corroborated evidence of the abduction of the Mbasha family, the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the Trial Chamber was required to consider that Witness QBQ never testified about the abduction of the Mbashas specifically. See also supra, Section IV.F.2(e)(iii)b. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ntahobali's submission in this regard.
[4283] Ntahobali contends that should the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children be excluded, the Night of Three Attacks "cannot stand up to scrutiny" as the Mbashas' abduction "constituted the lynchpin of the Chamber's assessment." See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 703. As Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of this event have been dismissed, this argument is moot.

of Witness TK's testimony regarding the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children",[4285] but also identified elements in Witness FAP's evidence that differed.[4286] The Trial Chamber, noting "the differences in their testimonies" concluded that it was "convinced that Witnesses SU, SS and FAP were describing attacks on different individuals among the group which was abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office] on the [N]ight of [T]hree [A]ttacks."[4287] In this regard, it concluded that "Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked many different women and children at the [Butare Prefecture Office], assaulted them and forced them aboard the pickup."[4288]

1834. Ntahobali argues that the "differences" in the evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP referenced by the Trial Chamber were actually inconsistencies about the same event; namely, the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[4289] In this regard, Ntahobali avers that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that: (i) like Witness RE, Witness FAP testified that only one woman and her children were abducted during the attack, that they sat on the veranda, and that Ntahobali told the woman she would not be killed but taken to Nyiramasuhuko to hide her; and (ii) like Witness TK, Witnesses SU and SS testified that the woman and her children, coming from the bursary, were abducted on the same day they arrived and were accompanied by a tall, balding, and fair-complexioned man.[4290] In Ntahobali's view, the evidence of Witnesses FAP, SU, and SS "about the identity of that woman and her children converged on [Mbasha's wife]" but the accounts are radically different on "almost all the material facts".[4291] He contends that, had the Trial Chamber assessed the evidence in its entirety and not just the evidence in support of its assessment, it would have found too many inconsistencies to conclude that the "Mbasha abduction was credible beyond reasonable doubt."[4292]

1835. Ntahobali further argues that, assuming that the abductions were separate, the Trial Chamber still erred in failing to consider that it was impossible that Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU neither witnessed nor heard about the event testified to by Witnesses RE, TK, and QJ and vice versa.[4293] In addition, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that none of the witnesses, who testified to the unnamed woman and her children being abducted from the veranda, mentioned this abduction in their prior statements.[4294]

[4289] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 694. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 296. Ntahobali also argues that annexes C, D, and E of his appeal brief reveal radically different accounts of almost all material facts raised and that no reasonable trier of fact could have overlooked these facts which are relevant to assessing the credibility of all those witnesses. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 697, 700. As discussed previously, because paragraph 697 of the Ntahobali Appeal Brief refers to his annexes in a general and non-particularised manner, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this aspect of his submission. See supra, fn. 3830.

1836. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in concluding that Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU were testifying about other victims, rather than Mbasha's wife and her children.[4295] It also responds that Ntahobali's assertion that none of the witnesses testifying about the unnamed woman mentioned the abduction in their prior statements should be dismissed for lack of references.[4296]

1837. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted numerous elements of the evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP that could suggest that they testified about the same abduction[4297] and, specifically, about Mbasha's wife and children.[4298] This shows that the Trial Chamber was well aware of the similarities and differences in the relevant evidence.

1838. The Appeals Chamber has already considered and rejected the argument that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP must have testified about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and chidren, especially in light of the purported parallels between the evidence of Witness FAP, on one hand, and Witnesses RE and TK, on the other hand.[4299] Again, the Appeals Chamber emphasises that Witness FAP's testimony, as noted by the Trial Chamber, reflects that the unknown woman she testified about was killed at the prefectoral office,[4300] which is distinct from evidence about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children.[4301] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found, as the Trial Chamber did, that Witness FAP was not testifying about Mbasha's wife and her children.

[4297] The Trial Chamber noted that the evidence of Witnesses FAP, SS, and SU converged on the following facts: (i) the lady came to the prefectoral office with a man and a child or children; (ii) the woman stayed on the veranda; (iii) during their abduction, the lady and/or the children cried out in protest; and (iv) the woman was hit or killed. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2250, 2252, 2285, 2304, 2305, 2732-2734.
[4298] See Trial Judgement, para. 2734. The Trial Judgement identifies several similarities within the evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, FAP, TK, RE, and QJ: (i) the woman arrived at the prefectoral with a tall, fair-complexioned man; (ii) the mother and Ntahobali had a discussion; (iii) the woman pleaded to spare her children; (iv) the woman and her children were taken from the veranda; and (v) the woman and children were eventually abducted. See ibid., paras. 2667, 2668, 2673-2675, 2717-2719, 2732-2734.

1839. Turning to the allegedly overlapping elements of Witness TK's evidence, on one hand, and that of Witnesses SU and SS, on the other hand, the Appeals Chamber observes that all the witnesses testified that the woman and her children arrived in a group that included a man,[4302] and Witnesses TK and SU consistently described one man in the group as tall and with a fair complexion.[4303] Nonetheless, Witness SU's evidence reflects that the group did not simply constitute this man and his family.[4304] Moreover, Ntahobali provides no reference to support the contention that Witness TK testified that Mbasha and his family were coming from the bursary.[4305] The evidence of Witnesses SU and SS is distinct on this element.[4306]

1840. Of greater significance, while Witness TK testified about a woman named Trifina being slit across the throat and killed before being loaded onto the vehicle,[4307] she did not suggest that anything similar occurred to Mbasha's wife prior to being placed in the cabin of the vehicle with Nyiramasuhuko.[4308] By contrast, Witness SU testified that the woman whom she observed being abducted was struck on the neck with a machete and, according to Witness SS, the woman she observed being abducted was dead when loaded onto the vehicle.[4309] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber recounted all of this evidence in detail when deliberating on the testimonies of each of these three witnesses.[4310] Under these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber was compelled to conclude that these witnesses were all testifying to the same abduction, and more specifically, that of Mbasha's wife and children.[4311]

1841. Having dismissed Ntahobali's contentions that Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP must have testified about the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, the Appeals Chamber also finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis of their evidence. Specifically, Ntahobali does not demonstrate with references that the fact that Witnesses TK, RE, and QJ did not refer to the abductions described by Witnesses SU, SS, and FAP, or vice versa, necessarily rendered their accounts incompatible. Moreover, his general argument that none of the witnesses discussed this abduction in their prior statements is unpersuasive and unsupported by any reference. Given the vague and insufficient nature of his argument as well as the fact that a trial chamber has the discretion to accept a witness's testimony notwithstanding inconsistencies between the said testimony and his previous statements,[4312] the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's undeveloped contention.

(vi) General Inconsistencies

1842. The Trial Chamber determined that, regardless of whether refugees were taken to Rwabayanga, Kabutare, Mukoni, or the IRST, the only reasonable inference is that they were abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office to be killed.[4313] In coming to this conclusion, the Trial Chamber considered the evidence of, among others, Witnesses SU, RE, FAP, and QBQ, and their hearsay accounts from survivors such as Annonciata and Semanyenzi.[4314]

1843. Ntahobali submits that no reasonable trial chamber could have resolved, as the Trial Chamber did, inconsistencies in the evidence on where abducted refugees were taken and killed.[4315] Specifically, he notes that the witnesses testified that the victims were taken to four different locations – Kabutare, Rwabayanga, Mukono, and the IRST – but argues that this information came from two survivors of the abductions, Semanyenzi and Annonciata.[4316] In his view, it was absurd for the Trial Chamber to consider that refugees were taken to four different locations.[4317] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the abducted refugees were forcefully undressed and erred in using this to convict him, particularly since it determined elsewhere that there was insufficient evidence to sustain such a conviction.[4318]

1844. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably considered divergent accounts on the locations where refugees were taken to be killed and that it properly assessed the evidence.[4319] It also submits that the Trial Chamber's finding that some refugees were forced to undress was not a basis of Ntahobali's conviction and that his argument should be summarily dismissed.[4320]

1845. The Appeals Chamber has already considered and rejected similar contentions raised by Nyiramasuhuko that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence related to the locations where abducted refugees were killed.[4321] Given that Ntahobali's submissions present no materially distinct argument and simply reflect his disagreement with the Trial Chamber's analysis without showing any error, the Appeals Chamber dismisses his contentions. Ntahobali's emphasis on the location of the killings also ignores that the evidence of principal significance – i.e. that the abducted refugees were killed – is entirely consistent.[4322] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's consideration of the evidence on the killing sites was unreasonable.[4323]

1846. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ntahobali's contention regarding the Trial Chamber's alleged contradictory findings on whether Tutsi refugees were forcefully undressed during the Night of Three Attacks. In support of his argument, Ntahobali refers to a paragraph of the Trial Judgement where the Trial Chamber concluded that the Prosecution failed to adduce sufficient evidence to prove beyond reasonable doubt that Tutsis were forced to undress during attacks at the EER, which is in no way related to the Night of Three Attacks or events at the Butare Prefecture Office.[4324] While the Trial Chamber concluded that some abducted Tutsis were forced to undress during the Night of Three Attacks,[4325] the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali participated in the Night of Three Attacks is not dependent upon this conclusion.[4326]

1847. As a result, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions in these respects.

[4323] The Appeals Chamber also finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate how Semanyenzi's survival from two different abductions is implausible or how evidence of this nature undermines the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's conclusion. See supra, Section IV.F.2(e)(vi). Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ was essential to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that refugees were abducted from the prefectoral office in order to be killed. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2743, 2746, 2747. Consequently, to the extent that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on this evidence, the Appeals Chamber does not find that it has occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

(vii) Conclusion

1848. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses QY and SJ in support of its findings regarding the Night of Three Attacks but that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Ntahobali's challenges in Ground 3.6 of his appeal as it concerns the assessment of evidence pertaining to the Night of Three Attacks.

(e) First Half of June Attacks

1849. The Trial Chamber determined that Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office in the first half of June 1994 to rape women and abduct refugees.[4327] It found in particular that during one of these attacks, Ntahobali handed Witness TA over to about seven Interahamwe to rape her.[4328] The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for aiding and abetting the rape of Witness TA during one of these attacks.[4329] The Appeals Chamber has reversed Ntahobali's convictions for committing rapes during these attacks.[4330] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has determined, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not convicted in relation to the killings that were perpetrated during the First Half of June Attacks.[4331] However, for the reasons mentioned above, the Appeals Chamber will nonetheless address Ntahobali's challenges to the assessment of the evidence concerning these attacks.[4332]

1850. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence related to the rapes of Witness TA and the abductions and killings that occurred during the First Half of June Attacks.[4333]

(i) Rapes of Witness TA

1851. When first considering evidence that attacks occurred at the prefectoral office in the first half of June 1994, the Trial Chamber observed that Witness TA testified that Immaculée Mukagatare was raped during the "fourth attack" the witness observed, which corresponded to the first or second week of June 1994.[4334] It further noted that Witness QBP testified that she also observed the rape of a woman named Immaculée Mukagatare.[4335] The Trial Chamber concluded that Witness TA's evidence "corresponds with the attack described by Witness QBP which allegedly occurred in June 1994."[4336]

1852. The Trial Chamber later recalled Witness TA's evidence that, during an attack 18 to 20 days after the "first attack", a group of eight Interahamwe, including Ntahobali, arrived at the Butare Prefecture Office.[4337] It concluded that, on this occasion, Ntahobali handed Witness TA over to the Interahamwe and told them to be quick, after which seven Interahamwe raped her.[4338] The Trial Chamber further discussed Witness TA's evidence of Ntahobali raping Immaculée Mukagatare during the same attack.[4339] However, the Trial Chamber noted that "Witness TA later testified that the rape of Immaculée [Mukagatare] occurred on the fifth occasion that Ntahobali visited the [prefectoral office], on which occasion Witness TA was not personally raped."[4340] The Trial Chamber concluded that, given the traumatic nature of this incident and the amount of time that had passed since this rape, this discrepancy was not "serious or such as to undermine Witness TA's overall credibility as to this account."[4341]

1853. The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for aiding and abetting Witness TA's rapes at the prefectoral office on this basis.[4342] It held that it would not convict Ntahobali for the crimes committed against Immaculée Mukagatare as a result of the Prosecution's late disclosure of the name of this victim.[4343]

1854. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably concluded that Witnesses QBP and TA testified to the same attack and that several errors related to the assessment of the evidence pertaining to the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare further undermine the Trial Chamber's reasoning.[4344] He contends that the Trial Chamber unreasonably failed to apply caution to the testimonies of Witnesses QBP and TA in light of their familial relationship and argues that the Trial Chamber erred in unreasonably rejecting Defence evidence raising doubt as to Witness QBP's presence at the prefectoral office.[4345] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of inconsistencies in Witness TA's evidence as to whether or not she was raped during the fourth or fifth attack she observed at the prefectoral office and whether she saw Ntahobali raping Immaculée Mukagatare on the same occasion that she was raped.[4346] Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber failed to address Witness TA's inability to identify anyone at the prefectoral office, despite Witness QBP's testimony that they were related and that they were together at the prefectoral office.[4347] He also points out that Witness QBP did not identify Witness TA as having been raped at the prefectoral office.[4348] Finally, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently contradictory evidence from Witnesses QBP, SS, SJ, RE, and FAP that no other attacks occurred after the Night of Three Attacks and the testimonies of Witnesses FAP and QBQ that they did not see Ntahobali after the Night of Three Attacks.[4349]

1855. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence relating to the First Half of June Attacks, arguing that the purported inconsistencies are addressed in the Trial Judgement or are too minor to undermine the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TA's evidence.[4350] It further responds that Ntahobali's assertion that the Trial Chamber unreasonably concluded that attacks occurred at the prefectoral office after the Night of Three Attacks is incorrect.[4351]

1856. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's findings, as summarised above, are unclear as to whether the Trial Chamber determined that Witness TA was handed over by Ntahobali to be raped on the same occasion that Immaculée Mukagatare was raped. Witness TA's evidence is unclear in this respect.[4352] However, regardless of whether Witness TA's account of being raped in the first half of June 1994 relates to the attack during which Immaculée Mukagatare was raped, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that any of the purported errors he points out regarding the assessment of the evidence related to the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare or to Witness QBP's evidence relating to this specific attack would undermine the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali aided and abetted Witness TA's rape during an attack in the first half of June 1994.

1857. Ntahobali was not held responsible for the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare and the Trial Chamber did not rely on this aspect of the evidence with respect to any of Ntahobali's convictions.

[4349] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 706, 708, 714. See also Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, para. 39. The Appeals Chamber notes that, during the appeals hearing, Ntahobali argued that the Trial Chamber's conclusion and evidence that gendarmes or soldiers were placed at the prefectoral office between 5-15 June 1994 raises the possibility that no attacks occurred after 5 June 1994, casting doubt on the Trial Chamber's findings in relation to the First Half of June Attacks. See AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 51, 52. This argument has been addressed above in Section V.I.2(d)(i). See also supra, Section IV.F.2(f).
[4350] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 982, 989, 1085, 1086. Ntahobali replies that the Prosecution erroneously refers to Witness QBQ as opposed to Witness QBP. See Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 307. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution mistakenly refers to Witness QBQ in paragraphs 1084 and 1086 of its response brief. However, its references pertain to Witness QBP and the Appeals Chamber therefore considers it a typographical error.

Although the Trial Chamber stated that it found it established beyond reasonable doubt that "Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [prefectoral office] in June 1994 to rape women and abduct refugees" based "on the testimony of Witnesses TA, QBP and TK",[4353] a close examination of the Trial Chamber's analysis reveals that Witness QBP's evidence was not used to establish Ntahobali's role in aiding and abetting the rape of Witness TA or participating in any other rape as she did not testify to Ntahobali's presence during the attack she recounted.[4354]

1858. In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds that the alleged inconsistencies within Witness TA's testimony, and between her testimony and that of Witness QBP, raised by Ntahobali concerning non-material features of Immaculée Mukagatare's rape and the attack during which it occurred[4355] are immaterial to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the evidence implicating Ntahobali in the rapes of Witness TA committed by Interahamwe during one of the attacks in the first half of June 1994.[4356] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to treat Witnesses TA's and QBP's evidence on this incident with sufficient caution given their familial links and to assess properly Defence evidence that purported to undermine Witness QBP's testimony that she was present at the prefectoral office when Immaculée Mukagatare was raped are irrelevant to Ntahobali's convictions.

1859. Turning to Ntahobali's challenges to the reliability of Witness TA's evidence related to her rape by Interahamwe during the First Half of June Attacks, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly addressed Witness TA's varying evidence as to whether she was raped during the fourth or fifth attack she observed at the prefectoral office and whether she saw Ntahobali raping Immaculée Mukagatare on the same occasion that she was raped.[4357] As noted above, given the traumatic nature of the incident and the amount of time that had passed, the Trial

[4355] Ntahobali points out that: (i) Witness TA testified during examination-in-chief that she saw Ntahobali place logs on Immaculée Mukagatare's legs after having raped her, but stated during cross-examination that she did not see Ntahobali place the logs on Immaculée Mukagatare; (ii) Witness TA testified that after handing her over to the Interahamwe to be raped, Ntahobali told them to be quick because he was going away, but subsequently testified that after her rape she saw Ntahobali nearby raping Immaculée Mukagatare; (iii) Witness QBP testified that the women, including Immaculée Mukagatare, were raped behind the prefectoral office during an attack at which Nyiramasuhuko was present whereas Witness TA testified that Immaculée Mukagatare was raped in the courtyard and did not mention Nyiramasuhuko's presence; (iv) Witness QBP testified that white people came to the prefectoral office and that Hutus were present whereas Witness TA did not mention white people and testified that there were no Hutus present; and (v) Witness TA testified that, after raping Immaculée Mukagatare, Ntahobali returned to the prefectoral office on four separate occasions, in each case after a number of days, which Ntahobali argues is implausible considering Witness QBP's testimony that the refugees left for Rango Forest a few days after the rape. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 627, 709. See also supra, Section V.I.2(c)(iv).
[4356] The same reasoning applies to Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence of Witnesses SS and SU as their evidence was not relied upon by the Trial Chamber to convict Ntahobali or corroborate the details of Witness TA's evidence concerning her rape during the First Half of June Attacks or Ntahobali's participation in any other rapes during those attacks. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 707.

Chamber did not consider the discrepancy to be serious enough to undermine Witness TA's overall credibility as to her account of the attack. Ntahobali fails to show that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the impact of trauma on Witness TA's testimony.[4358] Recalling that the presence of inconsistencies in a witness's evidence does not, per se, require a reasonable trier of fact to reject it as unreliable,[4359] the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that, given the numerous times Witness TA was attacked at the prefectoral office, any inconsistency as to whether she was raped by Interahamwe on the fourth or fifth attack she observed or whether Immaculée Mukagatare was raped on the same occasion or not prevented a reasonable trier of fact from relying on the fundamental features of Witness TA's evidence. The Appeals Chamber also reiterates that whether Interahamwe raped Witness TA during the fourth or fifth time she saw Ntahobali come to the prefectoral office or whether it occurred during the same attack during which Immaculée Mukagatare was raped is of no material importance to Ntahobali's convictions in light of the Trial Chamber's findings.

1860. With respect to the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to address the fact that Witness TA did not mention that Witness QBP, a relative, was present with her at the prefectoral office despite Witness QBP's evidence to this effect, the Appeals Chamber observes that, when Witness TA was asked if she met anyone at the prefectoral office or developed friendships with anyone, she responded that she did not.[4360] However, Witness TA was not questioned as to whether she knew Witness QBP specifically and did not deny knowing her.[4361] Moreover, Ntahobali overstates the probativeness of Witness QBP's testimony that she was with Witness TA at the prefectoral office and the EER, as it does not reflect that they were with each other at all times at each location.[4362] In addition, as observed earlier, Ntahobali exaggerates the relationship between Witnesses QBP and TA, as Witness QBP stated that she did not know their exact relationship and was unsure as to how they were related.[4363] In light of this, the fact that Witness TA did not mention in her testimony that Witness QBP was present with her at the prefectoral office did not render the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TA's evidence unreasonable nor was the Trial Chamber required to address expressly this aspect of Witness TA's testimony in its deliberations.

1861. The Appeals Chamber likewise sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TA's testimony that she was raped despite the fact that Witness QBP did not name her as a rape victim. Witness QBP expressly stated that she was unable to estimate the number of women who were taken behind the prefectoral office and raped, stressing the traumatic circumstances in which she was hiding and sought to survive.[4364] Furthermore, as discussed previously, it is not clear that Witness TA was raped on the same occasion as the attack discussed by Witness QBP, which involved the rape of Immaculée Mukagatare.[4365]

1862. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate any error on the part of the Trial Chamber regarding the assessment of the evidence of Witnesses QBP, SS, SJ, RE, and FAP that no other attacks occurred after the Night of Three Attacks or that Ntahobali was not seen at the prefectoral office after the Night of Three Attacks. The Trial Chamber assessed the evidence of Witnesses SS, SJ, RE, and FAP as it concerned the Night of Three Attacks in detail.[4366] Recalling that a trier of fact is not obliged to articulate every step of its reasoning[4367] and that it is to be presumed that it assessed and weighed the evidence presented to it, as long as there is no indication that it completely disregarded any particular piece of evidence,[4368] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that any discrepancy in their evidence was ignored.

1863. Furthermore, Ntahobali's reliance on the evidence of Witness QBP in this respect is misplaced since her testimony does not concern the Night of Three Attacks but a later attack in the first half of June 1994.[4369] Ntahobali also does not substantiate his argument that Witness SS's testimony does not support that attacks occurred at the prefectoral office subsequent to the Night of Three Attacks.[4370] As for Witnesses SJ, RE, and FAP, it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to rely on the mutually corroborative evidence of Witnesses SS, SU, and QBP and, in particular, Witnesses TA and TK, who the Trial Chamber found particularly credible and reliable,[4371] to find

[4370] The Appeals Chamber observes that, in his appeal brief, Ntahobali refers to Witness SS's testimony to support his contention that Witness SS "testified that attacks occurred only on one day" and during the Night of Three Attacks. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 707, referring to Witness SS, T. 3 March 2003 pp. 47-56, 65-71, and 72, 73 (closed session). A reading of the relevant transcripts does not demonstrate that Witness SS's testimony is inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's finding that attacks occurred after the Night of Three Attacks, including one where Witness SU showed the Interahamwe her breasts in order to dissuade them from raping her. See Trial Judgement, para. 2757, referring to Witness SS, T. 3 March 2003 p. 74 (closed session). As observed by the Trial Chamber, Witness SU testified that this incident occurred after the Night of Three Attacks. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2753-2756. See also Witness SU, T. 14 October 2002 pp. 49-52, 60, 61.
[4371] The Trial Chamber relied primarily on Witness TA to convict Ntahobali for his involvement in the Mid-May Attack and Last Half of May Attacks. See supra, Section V.I.2(c). The Trial Chamber also stated that it found Witness TK's testimony concerning the Night of Three Attacks "particularly convincing". See Trial Judgement, para. 2662.

that attacks occurred after the Night of Three Attacks. Ntahobali merely states that Witness SJ testified to only one night of attacks and references the Trial Chamber's finding that the only attacks Witnesses RE and FAP testified to occurred on the Night of Three Attacks, but fails to demonstrate or provide any indication as to why the entirety of their testimonies renders it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to have found that subsequent attacks occurred.[4372]

1864. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that, during one of the First Half of June Attacks, Ntahobali handed Witness TA to about seven Interahamwe, who then raped her.

(ii) Killings

1865. In assessing Ntahobali's participation in killings in relation to attacks at the prefectoral office during the first half of June 1994, the Trial Chamber concluded that Witness TK "corroborated Witness TA's testimony regarding additional attacks" at the prefectoral office apart from the Night of Three Attacks.[4373] The Trial Chamber accepted Witness TK's evidence that Ntahobali came to the prefectoral office "on a number of evenings, accompanied by Interahamwe or disabled soldiers", that he "committed crimes on each evening he came to the [Butare Prefecture Office]", and that, on some occasions, Ntahobali "came to determine whether there were any men left, who were then taken away to be killed".[4374] The Trial Chamber also relied on Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali "would say to the Interahamwe, '[b]e firm in your actions,' when he meant, 'kill all of them.'"[4375] The Trial Chamber similarly relied on Witness TA's evidence that "a group of eight Interahamwe, including Shalom arrived at the [Butare Prefecture Office] in the same vehicle and attacked the refugees with machetes, hammers, Rwandan clubs and sticks"[4376] and that "[t]hey killed some, wounded others and threw the dead and wounded into their vehicle".[4377]

1866. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness TK corroborated Witness TA's evidence with respect to the occurrence of additional attacks at the prefectoral office after the Night of Three Attacks.[4378] Specifically, he contends that Witness TK's testimony was [4376] Trial Judgement, para. 2770. See also ibid., para. 2184.

[4378] Ntahobali also argues that "Witness TK rebutted Witness TA's evidence on the presence of Nyiramasuhuko on several occasions", but fails to provide any references to either the Trial Judgement or the transcripts in support of this argument. In the same paragraph of his appeal brief, he also argues that Witness TA only testified to Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the Mid-May Attack. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 711. As Ntahobali has not substantiated his vague and contradictory argument with a reference, the Appeals Chamber dismisses it without further consideration.

insufficiently detailed to have any corroborative value.[4379] Moreover, he argues that, in contrast to Witness TK, Witness TA testified that Nyiramasuhuko was only present at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack, did not discuss the Night of Three Attacks, including the abduction of the Mbashas, and did not testify about the presence of wounded soldiers or that Ntahobali "made a mockery of the refugees" during any of the First Half of June Attacks.[4380]

1867. Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to address that Witness TK did not mention any attacks other than the Night of Three Attacks or any rapes committed by Ntahobali in her four prior statements.[4381] He suggests that Witness TK's response during cross-examination as to the omission of rapes from the statements was vague.[4382] In addition, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably failed to consider the contradiction between Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali came to the prefectoral office "very often" to commit crimes and the testimonies of Witnesses FAP and QBQ, who indicated that they did not see Ntahobali after the Night of Three Attacks.[4383]

1868. Finally, in his supplementary submissions, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider a BBC video admitted into evidence reflecting that there were refugees at the prefectoral office on 15 June 1994, which he claims contradicts Witness TK's testimony that he allegedly came to the prefectoral office to see whether there were any refugees left and that refugees were abducted during the first half of June 1994.[4384]

1869. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that Witness TK corroborated Witness TA as to the existence of attacks after the Night of Three Attacks, emphasising that corroboration does not require that two credible testimonies be identical.[4385] It argues that the absence of reference to attacks other than the Night of Three Attacks in Witness TA's prior statement does not undermine her testimony.[4386]

1870. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's findings do not reflect that Witnesses TA and TK necessarily observed the same attack or attacks in the first half of

June 1994.[4387] Despite this lack of clarity, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that a reasonable trier of fact could have found that the evidence of Witnesses TA and TK provided mutual circumstantial corroboration given the consistent fundamental features of their testimonies about attacks in the first half of June 1994.[4388] The parallels in their evidence must also be considered in the context of the Trial Chamber's conclusions about Ntahobali's participation in the Mid-May Attack, the Last Half of May Attacks, and the Night of Three Attacks, which reflect that multiple attacks featuring the same characteristics as those described by Witnesses TA and TK were occurring at the prefectoral office during the time period that displaced Tutsis were seeking refuge there. As mentioned above, the Appeals Chamber has affirmed the Trial Chamber's findings about Ntahobali's involvement in these attacks.[4389]

1871. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the evidence of Witness TK is too vague to corroborate Witness TA's evidence. Witness TK's testimony reflects first-hand observations of the conduct of Interahamwe and Ntahobali at a particular location – the Butare Prefecture Office[4390] – and provides an approximate timeframe for the observations; namely, between the end of May or the beginning of June 1994 and the transfer of the refugees to Rango Forest in mid-June 1994.[4391]

1872. The Appeals Chamber observes that neither Witness TA nor Witness TK implicated Nyiramasuhuko in the attacks at the prefectoral office in the first half of June 1994[4392] and recalls that it has already considered and rejected Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that Witness TA did not testify about the Night of Three Attacks, including the abduction of the Mbashas.[4393] The Appeals Chamber therefore fails to see how any discrepancy between the evidence of Witnesses TA and TK about this previous event is material to the Trial Chamber's reliance on their subsequent observations of Ntahobali's participation in one or more later attacks at the prefectoral office.

[4387] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2770, 2771, 2773, 2781(v). See also supra, Section IV.F.2(f). Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's argument, raised during the appeals hearing, that the Prosecution considered all of the witnesses who testified to the First Half of June Attacks to be testifying about one attack and that there were major contradictions between their evidence. See Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, para. 38.

[4393] See supra, Section V.I.2(d)(iii).

1873. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the evidence of Witness TK varied from Witness TA's as the former testified that wounded soldiers were present during the attacks and that Ntahobali mocked the refugees, the Appeals Chamber recalls that two prima facie credible testimonies corroborate one another when one testimony is compatible with the other regarding the same fact or a sequence of linked facts.[4394] The Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali was accompanied by Interahamwe "or disabled soldiers" and that Ntahobali "came to mock the refugees" is so distinctive that Witness TA's testimony is incompatible with Witness TK's because it does not contain such details.[4395] Ntahobali ignores that the fundamental features of the evidence of Witnesses TA and TK were consistent with the fact that Ntahobali was present and participated in attacks at the prefectoral office in the first half of June 1994, that he was accompanied by Interahamwe, and that he and Interahamwe attacked refugees at the prefectoral office as well as removed others for the purpose of killing them.[4396]

1874. Turning to Ntahobali's contention that Witness TK's evidence is not credible because none of her four prior statements to Tribunal investigators refer to attacks subsequent to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali did not raise this issue in his cross-examination of Witness TK or in his closing submissions.[4397] More importantly, having reviewed Witness TK's prior statements, the Appeals Chamber observes that three of them are not specific as to the date of the attacks she recalled and whether they occurred in one night,[4398] and the remaining statement focuses entirely on the Night of Three Attacks but does not give any indication that no attacks occurred after.[4399] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's argument.

1875. Regarding the absence of mention of rapes in Witness TK's prior statements, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness TK was questioned about these omissions and explained that her statements were based on the questions put to her during the available time.[4400] The Appeals Chamber also notes that her evidence about rapes during the First Half of June Attacks is not detailed.[4401] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that Ntahobali has demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the other aspects of Witness TK's evidence concerning the First Half of June Attacks.

1876. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion by not considering the alleged contradiction between Witness TK's testimony that Ntahobali returned to the prefectoral office "very often" after the Night of Three Attacks and Witnesses FAP's and QBQ's testimonies that they did not see Ntahobali after that night. The Trial Chamber expressly noted that Witnesses FAP and QBQ only testified about the Night of Three Attacks and no others at the prefectoral office.[4402] It bears noting that nothing in the testimonies of Witnesses FAP and QBQ referred to by Ntahobali[4403] reflects that they testified that Ntahobali did not come to the prefectoral office after the Night of Three Attacks or categorically denied that additional attacks occurred. Both witnesses merely testified that they did not see Ntahobali after that night or observed other attacks, Witness QBQ specifying that "I wasn't paying attention […] [y]ou must understand that we were afraid, we were not concentrating on what we were looking at. We just expected to die at any minute without knowing when."[4404] Given the prevailing circumstances at the prefectoral office[4405] and in light of the corroborative evidence of Witnesses TA, SS, SU, and QBP that attacks were carried out on the prefectoral office after the Night of Three Attacks as well as Witness TA's testimony that Ntahobali participated in one of these attacks, the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness TK's testimony that subsequent attacks occurred at the prefectoral office, notwithstanding the evidence of Witnesses FAP and QBQ that they did not see Ntahobali after the Night of Three Attacks.[4406]

1877. Finally, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that a BBC video reflecting the presence of refugees at the prefectoral office is incompatible with Witness TK's evidence that abductions occurred at the prefectoral office during the First Half of June Attacks, particularly because the video was created around 15 June 1994[4407] and that no evidence was provided that all refugees were abducted during these attacks.

1878. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence of Witnesses TK and TA pertaining to his involvement in the abductions and killings which occurred during the First Half of June Attacks.

(iii) Conclusion

1879. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses TA and TK concerning his participation in rapes and killings perpetrated during the attacks conducted in the first half of June 1994 at the prefectoral office.

(f) Number of Refugees Abducted and Killed

1880. The Trial Chamber noted that it was "not disputed that there were a large number of refugees at the [Butare Prefecture Office] compound between April and June 1994."[4408] In determining in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement the number of refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office and killed, the Trial Chamber also stated the following:

> The Chamber notes that it was […] difficult to estimate the number of refugees who were forced to board the pickup on each occasion when refugees were abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office]. It was clear that the vehicle was full on each occasion. […] [T]he Chamber has found that between mid-May and mid-June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] with the pickup on at least seven occasions (once in mid-May; two additional times from mid-May to the beginning of June; three attacks during one night at the end of May or beginning of June; and another attack in June). Considering the pickup was nearly full on at least seven occasions, the Chamber is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted from the [Butare Prefecture Office] and killed.[4409]

In the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled that "[b]etween mid-May and mid-June 1994 Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers went to the [prefectoral office] to abduct hundreds of Tutsis; the Tutsi refugees were physically assaulted […]; and were killed in various locations throughout Butare préfecture."[4410] However, in its conclusions, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali for ordering killings of Tutsis seeking refuge at the prefectoral office, without identifying the precise number of victims.[4411] When deliberating upon

Ntahobali's sentence, the Trial Chamber also noted, with respect to the gravity of the crimes, the "seriousness and atrocity of crimes repetitively perpetrated at the [Butare Prefecture Office], where hundreds of Tutsis were abducted, raped and killed."[4412] However, the Trial Chamber also recalled that it found Ntahobali guilty of various crimes, including "the […] killings of Tutsis at the Butare préfecture office", without providing the precise number of victims.[4413]

1881. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the fact that there was a large number of refugees at the prefectoral office between April and June 1994 was not disputed.[4414] He argues that the Prosecution's evidence concerning the number of Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office was "extremely contradictory" and that the Trial Chamber erroneously discounted Defence evidence and made unsupported and contradictory findings, particularly regarding the period after refugees returned from the EER at the end of May 1994.[4415] He submits that the Trial Chamber's findings concerning the Tutsi refugee population at the prefectoral office from the end of May to mid-June 1994 reflect that their numbers increased during this period, negating the reasonable possibility that Ntahobali committed any attacks on them during this period.[4416]

1882. Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that hundreds of refugees were abducted from the prefectoral office based on an unsupported conclusion that the pickup truck used during the seven attacks was full of Tutsis on each occasion.[4417] In his view, the Trial Chamber's estimation that hundreds of Tutsis were abducted and killed is undermined by the fact that no evidence demonstrates: (i) that the pickup truck was full on every occasion; or (ii) how many Tutsis the pickup truck could hold in addition to the Interahamwe guarding them.[4418] He argues that these errors warrant an acquittal for the events at the prefectoral office or a significant reduction in sentence.[4419]

[4416] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 650, 652. Ntahobali points to the Trial Chamber's findings that the number of refugees who returned to the Butare Prefecture Office from the EER around the end of May 1994 "well exceeded" 200 people, that in the first few days of June 1994 about 400 persons taken from the prefectoral office to Nyange were killed in attacks that Ntahobali was not involved in, and that the subsequent number of refugees who were finally sent to Rango Forest in mid-June totalled 250 to 300 people. See ibid., paras. 650, 651, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 3938, 4192, 4195, 5077, 5080, 5932. See also AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 50, 51.

1883. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that there were a large number of refugees present based on the totality of the evidence, including the credible accounts of Witnesses TQ, TA, TK, SU, RE, and Nsabimana Defence Witness Alexandre Bararwandika.[4420] The Prosecution did not specifically respond to Ntahobali's submission regarding the number of Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office.

1884. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not specify the number of victims for which Ntahobali was held responsible in relation to his convictions for ordering killings of Tutsis who sought refuge at the prefectoral office.[4421] The Appeals Chamber further considers that the Trial Chamber's determination that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in attacks that led to the abduction and killing of "hundreds of Tutsi refugees" principally relies on the Trial Chamber's conclusion that "the pickup was nearly full on at least seven occasions" during the attacks from mid-May to June 1994.[4422]

1885. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has determined, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not convicted on the basis of his conduct during the Night of Three Attacks or in relation to the killings which were perpetrated during the First Half of June Attacks.[4423] Likewise, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber made no findings that Tutsis were abducted and killed during the Last Half of May Attacks or that Ntahobali was convicted for such conduct.[4424] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that no reasonable trier of fact could have determined the number of victims abducted and killed based on the seven occasions the pickup truck left the prefectoral office, as it included the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks for which Ntahobali was not convicted as well as the Last Half of May Attacks where it made no findings that abductions occurred.[4425] Consequently, no basis exists to attribute criminal responsibility to Ntahobali for ordering killings during these attacks.

1886. As regards the remaining occasion when the pickup left the prefectoral office during the attacks for which Ntahobali was convicted for killings – namely the Mid-May Attack[4426] – the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber accepted Witness TA's evidence that Ntahobali ordered the Interahamwe to stop killing refugees because the number of dead people was "in excess as to what could be loaded in the vehicle".[4427] This finding, however, is insufficient to attribute responsibility to Ntahobali for the killings of hundreds of Tutsi refugees abducted from the prefectoral office.

1887. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber considers that, although it affirmed Ntahobali's criminal responsibility for the killings of Tutsi refugees abducted during the Mid-May Attack, it also found that the Trial Chamber's apparent attribution of responsibility to Ntahobali for the killings of hundreds of Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefectoral Office is not sustained by the record or is based on findings for which Ntahobali was not convicted by the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

3. Ordering Responsibility

1888. As recalled above, the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering killings of Tutsis seeking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.[4428] It further convicted Ntahobali for rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for, inter alia, ordering the rapes of Tutsi women seeking refuge at the prefectoral office.[4429]

1889. Specifically, the Trial Chamber found Ntahobali responsible for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack.[4430] The Trial Chamber also determined that Ntahobali was responsible for ordering the rape of six women during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, which was conducted around seven days after the Mid-May Attack, as well as the rape of Witness TA during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks, which occurred four days later.[4431] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, has concluded that Ntahobali was not convicted for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks or the First Half of June Attacks.

1890. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding him responsible for ordering killings and rapes during attacks at the prefectoral office and that he should therefore be acquitted.[4432] The Appeals Chamber will address Ntahobali's challenges pertaining to his responsibility for ordering rapes after examining his challenges concerning his responsibility for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack.

(a) Ordering Killings

1891. The Trial Chamber found that, in mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and about 10 Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office in a camouflaged pickup truck and that Nyiramasuhuko pointed out Tutsi refugees to the Interahamwe, ordering them to force the refugees onto the pickup truck.[4433] The Trial Chamber found that "Ntahobali also gave the Interahamwe orders, telling them to stop loading the truck because it could not accept anymore dead."[4434] The Trial Chamber concluded that "refugees" were taken to other locations in Butare and killed, and it found that "both Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were responsible for ordering the killings of numerous Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup."[4435]

1892. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in finding him responsible for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack at the prefectoral office.[4436] He submits that the only evidence used to support this finding was Witness TA's testimony that he told Interahamwe to stop putting refugees on a truck during this attack.[4437] In his view, such evidence is insufficient to establish that he ordered killings.[4438] Ntahobali also contends that there was no evidence to suggest that he exercised any authority over the Interahamwe who carried out the abductions, pointing out that Witness TA testified that Nyiramasuhuko was Ntahobali's superior and that Witness TA's testimony on his authority during that attack was solely based on impressions.[4439] He further stresses that when questioned who had given orders at the prefectoral office, Witness TA never mentioned him.[4440] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he told

The Appeals Chamber will not entertain Ntahobali's submissions to the extent that they challenge his liability for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks and First Half of June Attacks as it has determined, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not convicted on this basis. See supra, Sections V.I.1(a)(iii), V.I.1(c).

Interahamwe who should be forced to board the pickup truck as the evidence of Witness TA cited by the Trial Chamber does not support this finding.[4441]

1893. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's conviction for ordering killings at the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack was not based solely on Witness TA's testimony that Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe to stop loading the pickup truck.[4442] It highlights other evidence from Witness TA indicating that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko ordered killings, led the attack together, and that Interahamwe followed Ntahobali's orders to stop killing.[4443] The Prosecution also points to evidence from Witness TK which, in its view, corroborates that Ntahobali ordered killings during his visits to the prefectoral office.[4444] Furthermore, the Prosecution contends that the testimonies of these witnesses demonstrate that Ntahobali had sufficient authority over the Interahamwe to incur responsibility for ordering killings.[4445] It submits that, even if Nyiramasuhuko acted as Ntahobali's superior during the attack and issued similar orders to the Interahamwe, Ntahobali remains liable for the criminal orders that he gave.[4446]

1894. In reply, Ntahobali disputes the Prosecution's contentions that the Trial Chamber relied upon the evidence of Witness TK to reach its conclusion, that this witness's evidence is relevant to this particular attack, or that it is sufficiently reliable to prove his ordering responsibility.[4447]

1895. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a person in a position of authority may incur responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering another person to commit an offence if the order has a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act.[4448]

1896. The Appeals Chamber observes that, although the Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali ordered killings of Tutsis taken from the prefectoral office during the Mid-May Attack,[4449] it did not refer to any express order to kill, identify a particular instruction that had a direct and substantial effect on the eventual killings of Tutsis forced to board the pickup truck, or state that it inferred as the only reasonable conclusion that Ntahobali ordered the killings.[4450]

1897. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules require the Trial Chamber to give a reasoned opinion, which includes the provision of clear, reasoned findings of fact as to each element of the crime charged.[4451] With respect to this event, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber failed to make clear findings essential to establishing Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering under Article 6(1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion and thereby erred in law.

1898. However, for the reasons that follow, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, finds that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Ntahobali for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack. At the outset, the Appeals Chamber does not accept Ntahobali's contention that the only evidence supporting the Trial Chamber's conclusion that he ordered killings during this attack was Witness TA's testimony that Ntahobali directed Interahamwe to stop putting refugees on the pickup truck.[4452] While the Trial Chamber highlighted this particular instruction before concluding that Ntahobali ordered the killing of Tutsis forced to board a pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack, it also stated that Ntahobali issued "orders"[4453] and later, in relation to the same attack, recalled that "Interahamwe were acting under the orders of Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko to load the truck with people."[4454] It transpires from a comprehensive review of the Trial Judgement that these findings were based on the testimony of Witness TA.[4455]

1899. Ntahobali contends that the evidence does not support the Trial Chamber's finding that he told the Interahamwe who should be forced to board the pickup truck.[4456] The Appeals Chamber [4450] Trial Judgement, paras. 5866-5871. The Trial Chamber's analysis of Ntahobali's responsibility for extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II on the basis of this conduct provides no further information. Specifically, the Trial Judgement simply states that Ntahobali ordered the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office without specifying the precise factual basis supporting this conclusion. See ibid., paras. 6053, 6100, 6168.

(internal references omitted). See also ibid., para. 2628 ("Nyiramasuhuko and Shalom arrived together in the same Hilux pickup and told the Interahamwe who should be forced to board the bed of the pickup. observes that the transcripts cited by the Trial Chamber only refer to Witness TA expressly testifying that Nyiramasuhuko selected individuals to be placed on the vehicle.[4457] In addition, Witness TA's evidence indicates that she believed that Nyiramasuhuko was the superior of Ntahobali based on her role in selecting who should or should not be placed on the vehicle.[4458] However, the Appeals Chamber also notes that the witness's testimony indicates that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali "were in charge of [the] assailants", that they "were leading the attack together", and that she described Nyiramasuhuko as "assisting her son".[4459] Witness TA's evidence also reflects that Ntahobali ordered the Interahamwe to stop loading the vehicle once he determined that it was full and that the Interahamwe complied with his order.[4460]

1900. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, the Trial Chamber's acceptance of Witness TA's evidence concerning this attack and its findings on Ntahobali's participation in other attacks on the prefectoral office for a period of over a month provided a reasonable basis for the Trial Chamber to consider as the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali ordered the killings of Tutsis who had been forced to board the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber also noted Witness TA's testimony that, in relation to the Mid-May Attack, Ntahobali "moved through the refugees cutting and slashing people with his machete", that he removed the witness's clothes, threatened to "kill her if she refused", raped her, and then "invited some eight other Interahamwe to rape her".[4461] The Trial Chamber accepted Witness TA's evidence that Ntahobali and Interahamwe raped her,[4462] and convicted him for committing rape on this basis.[4463] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, considers that Witness TA's evidence of Ntahobali's leading role in this attack, as well as the Trial Chamber's findings concerning Ntahobali's rape of Witness TA, support the Trial Chamber's conclusion that he ordered killings during the Mid-May Attack. In particular, the findings clearly reflect that the aim of the operation was to kill, rape, and terrorise those seeking refuge, that Ntahobali was an active participant in the operation, and that he was working in coordination with the Interahamwe.

They ordered the killing of people and then they carried on board the vehicle, including those who were wounded. And when orders were issued, Nyiramasuhuko was assisting her son."). The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali argues that the English transcript incorrectly asserts that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko "ordered the killing of people" as the French version indicates "ils ont fait tuer les gens". See Ntahobali Reply Brief, paras. 384-386, referring to Witness TA, T. 29 October 2001 pp. 51, 53-56. While the translation from French to English is indeed not literal, Ntahobali does not persuade the Appeals Chamber that any differences in this regard are material and, of greater significance, he does not identify any error on the part of the Trial Chamber resulting from this variance.

1901. In addition, the Trial Chamber's analysis reveals that it considered the Mid-May Attack at the prefectoral office in the context of other attacks that led to the killing of Tutsis who took refuge there,[4464] and expressly recalled evidence of Ntahobali's leading role in other such attacks. Specifically, when assessing the elements of genocide in relation to this particular attack, the Trial Chamber recalled that Interahamwe forced Tutsis to board "a Toyota Hilux" and that those "who refused were killed on the spot", that there was a pattern of killings at the prefectoral office itself and that Ntahobali instructed Interahamwe to spare no one.[4465] A review of the Trial Judgement shows that these findings are principally supported by the evidence of Witness TK about Ntahobali's participation and leading role in separate attacks around the end of May or beginning of June 1994 at the prefectoral office.[4466] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, considers that this evidence supports the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali ordered killings specifically during the Mid-May Attack.

Considering the brutality and repetitive nature of these attacks, the vulnerable nature of the population seeking refuge at the [Butare Prefecture Office] and the fact that they were Tutsis, there can be no question that the bodily and mental harm inflicted by Ntahobali and the Interahamwe on the Tutsi women at the [Butare Prefecture Office] was of such a serious nature as to threaten the destruction in whole or in part of the Tutsi ethnic group.").
[4466] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2662 ("The Interahamwe forced refugees to board the Hilux truck and killed some of them on the spot."), 2681 ("Witness TK testified that upon arriving at the [Butare Prefecture Office], Shalom and some of the Interahamwe exclaimed that nobody should be spared or treated leniently."). The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution also argues that Witness SJ's evidence also supports Ntahobali's ordering responsibility. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1197. Ntahobali contends that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness SJ for this purpose. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 668; Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 391. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness SJ provided evidence similar to Witness TK's of Ntahobali issuing orders to Interahamwe during an attack at the Butare Prefecture Office. See Trial Judgement, para. 2705, referring to Witness SJ, T. 29 May 2002 pp. 53, 54. However, the Appeals Chamber has determined that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on the evidence of Witness SJ as it relates to the attack now referred to by the Prosecution. See supra, Sections IV.F.2(c)(ii)d, V.I.2(b)(iii)a.ii, V.I.2(d)(ii)a.

1902. The Appeals Chamber further recalls the Trial Chamber's finding that this attack was one of several where Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in the abduction of Tutsis from the prefectoral office who were then killed throughout Butare Prefecture.[4467] Although the Appeals Chamber, Judge Khan dissenting, has concluded that Ntahobali was not convicted for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks or the First Half of June Attacks, the record demonstrates that Ntahobali was involved in these attacks, which resulted in the abductions and killings of a large number of Tutsi refugees from the prefectoral office.[4468] Given the record as a whole, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Ntahobali ordered the killings of Tutsis who had been forced to board the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack.

1903. Likewise, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack under Article 6(1) of the Statute on the ground that he did not exercise sufficient authority over the assailants who participated in the attack. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber generally concluded that Ntahobali wielded effective control over the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office throughout the events on the basis, notably, that the Interahamwe complied with the orders he issued and perpetrated the acts asked of them, which included killings.[4469] As regards the Mid-May Attack, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a comprehensive reading of the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness TA's evidence as to the details of this attack before finding him responsible for ordering killings.[4470] Witness TA's testimony, as recalled by the Trial Chamber, reveals that the witness considered that both Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were exercising control over the Interahamwe and issuing orders with which the Interahamwe complied.[4471] While the witness also testified that she thought Nyiramasuhuko was Ntahobali's superior,[4472] this evidence would not prevent a reasonable trier of fact from concluding that Ntahobali exercised sufficient authority over the assailants to incur responsibility for ordering, particularly when considering the evidence of his leadership role vis-à-vis the Interahamwe during this and other attacks.[4473]

1904. Moreover, Ntahobali's argument that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness TA's "impressions" as to Ntahobali's authority ignores that the witness testified, and the Trial Chamber found, that Ntahobali issued orders during this attack, and that the Trial Chamber relied upon evidence from other attacks of Ntahobali's leading role in them.[4474] The Appeals Chamber recalls that whether an accused possesses sufficient authority to incur ordering responsibility is a question of fact[4475] and that trial chambers have full discretionary power in assessing the credibility of a witness and in determining the weight to be accorded to his testimony.[4476] Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's emphasis on the fact that Witness TA did not mention Ntahobali as an authority who issued orders to the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office is misplaced, as this evidence arose during an aspect of Witness TA's testimony that did not concern Ntahobali's involvements in attacks.[4477]

1905. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, considers that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that, on the basis of the Trial Chamber's factual findings and relevant evidence, no reasonable trier of fact could have inferred as the only reasonable conclusion that Ntahobali ordered the killings of the Tutsis forced on board the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack.[4478]

1906. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, concludes that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision, as its findings and relevant evidence sustain its conclusion that Ntahobali is responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killings of numerous Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack at the Butare Prefecture Office.

(b) Ordering Rapes

1907. The Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women during two attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office in late May 1994 based principally on Witness TA's testimony.[4479] Specifically, the Trial Chamber concluded that during the First Attack of the Last

[4478] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber was unclear as to whether he was convicted for killings that occurred at the prefectoral office or only for the killings of Tutsis removed from it during the Mid-May Attack. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 893. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's legal findings pertaining to this attack expressly limit Ntahobali's convictions to ordering the killings of the "numerous Tutsis refugees who were forced to board the pickup." See Trial Judgement, para. 5867.

Half of May Attacks, six Tutsi women were raped by Interahamwe following Ntahobali's orders, and that during the Second Attack, Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.[4480]

1908. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in convicting him of ordering Interahamwe to rape Tutsi women during the Last Half of May Attacks.[4481] In particular, Ntahobali contends that, during the First Attack, Witness TA did not testify about positive acts taken by Ntahobali that would support the conclusion that he ordered Interahamwe to rape any women.[4482] With respect to the Second Attack, Ntahobali submits that Witness TA's evidence concerning statements he made to Interahamwe fails to establish that he possessed sufficient authority over the Interahamwe, particularly in light of Witness TA's evidence that the Interahamwe were Ntahobali's "comrades" or "colleagues".[4483]

1909. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably found Ntahobali responsible for ordering rapes at the prefectoral office.[4484] It highlights Witness TA's testimony implicating Ntahobali in ordering rapes during the Last Half of May Attacks as well as in raping her and ordering eight Interahamwe to rape her during the Mid-May Attack, and in having handed her over to Interahamwe to rape her during an attack in the first half of June 1994.[4485] The Prosecution contends that this evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings demonstrate that Ntahobali possessed authority over the Interahamwe, and that it makes no difference if the Interahamwe willingly followed Ntahobali's orders to rape.[4486]

1910. Ntahobali replies that the evidence cited by the Prosecution is insufficient to conclude that he ordered rapes during attacks on the prefectoral office.[4487]

1911. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of ordering cannot be established in the absence of a positive action by the person in a position of authority.[4488] However, ordering, like any other form of responsibility, can be inferred from circumstantial evidence, provided it is the only reasonable inference.[4489]

1912. With respect to the rapes committed during the First Attack, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness TA's testimony that Ntahobali raped her and that Interahamwe raped six other women.[4490] On this basis, and without reference to any other evidence, the Trial Chamber concluded in its factual and legal findings that the six other women were raped by "Interahamwe following the orders of Ntahobali".[4491] However, the Trial Chamber's summary of Witness TA's evidence and a review of her testimony reflect that she did not expressly testify that Ntahobali ordered the Interahamwe to commit rapes.[4492] Rather, she simply testified that, while Ntahobali raped her, the Interahamwe who had accompanied him raped six Tutsi women nearby.[4493] The witness's evidence does not identify any instruction given by Ntahobali or any other positive act on his part that had a direct and substantial effect on the perpetration of these rapes. Moreover, and contrary to the Prosecution's submissions, Witness TA's evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings concerning Ntahobali's participation in other rapes at the prefectoral office do not support as the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali ordered the rapes committed by Interahamwe during the First Attack.[4494]

1913. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that no reasonable trier of fact could have found Ntahobali responsible for ordering rapes during the First Attack on the basis of Witness TA's evidence and that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ntahobali ordered rapes during this attack.

1914. In relation to the Second Attack, the Trial Chamber found, based on Witness TA's evidence, that Ntahobali ordered "about seven" Interahamwe to rape Witness TA.[4495] The Trial Chamber referred to Witness TA's testimony that Ntahobali physically delivered the witness to the [4494] The Appeals Chamber recalls that Ntahobali was not found responsible for the rapes of "at least two women" committed by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack, where, similar to this incident, the rapes were committed as Ntahobali was committing rape and where there was no evidence of Ntahobali instructing Interahamwe to commit rape. See supra, Section V.I.1(b). Moreover, even where there was credible evidence of Ntahobali prompting Interahamwe to commit rapes, the Trial Chamber did not convict him of ordering rapes. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2631 (Ntahobali raped Witness TA and then "invited eight other Interahamwe to rape [Witness TA]" during the Mid-May Attack), 5868 (convicting Ntahobali of committing rape on the basis of this evidence but making no finding as to his responsibility for the rapes committed by eight Interahamwe), 5877. See also ibid., paras. 2770 (Ntahobali "again handed Witness TA over to the Interahamwe and told them to be quick, after which seven Interahamwe raped her"), 5874, 5875 (convicting Ntahobali only of aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA on the basis of this evidence).

Interahamwe who subsequently raped her, and that Ntahobali told them "to do it quickly so that the Inkotanyi would not get to a roadblock first".[4496] Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he possessed sufficient authority over the Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office, particularly because Witness TA described the Interahamwe as Ntahobali's "colleagues" or "comrades".[4497]

1915. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of "ordering" is that a person in a position of authority instruct another person to commit an offence.[4498] No formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrator is required.[4499] It is sufficient that there is proof of some position of authority on the part of the accused that would compel another to commit a crime in following the accused's order.[4500]

1916. The Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's argument that Witness TA's testimony that the Interahamwe were Ntahobali's "colleagues" or "comrades" demonstrates that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ntahobali possessed sufficient authority over these Interahamwe to incur ordering liability. With respect to this specific attack, Witness TA testified that "Shalom dragged me and handed me over to a group of Interahamwe assailants who were his comrades, his colleagues."[4501] The Appeals Chamber fails to see how this description undermines the conclusion that Ntahobali possessed sufficient authority to compel the Interahamwe to rape Witness TA, particularly in light of the fact that they committed the rapes upon Ntahobali's prompting.

1917. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was liable for ordering Interahamwe to rape Witness TA during the Second Attack.

(c) Conclusion

1918. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him criminally responsible for ordering Interahamwe to commit killings during the Mid-May Attack. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has failed to show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him criminally responsible for ordering Interahamwe to commit rapes during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks.

1919. The Appeals Chamber nevertheless finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Ntahobali responsible for ordering rapes during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber reverses the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali is responsible for ordering rapes during the First Attack. The Appeals Chamber will discuss the impact of this conclusion, if any, in Section XII below.

4. Superior Responsibility

1920. The Trial Chamber found Ntahobali responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the acts of the Interahamwe, including their perpetration of rapes and killings, against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.[4502] Specifically, the Trial Chamber recalled its findings that "Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali issued orders to Interahamwe and the Interahamwe complied with these orders and perpetrated the acts asked of them, which included abductions, rapes and killings."[4503] On this basis, as well as "considering the evidence in its entirety", the Trial Chamber found that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were in a "superior-subordinate relationship over [the] Interahamwe at the [Butare Prefecture Office]" and wielded effective control over them.[4504] However, because the Trial Chamber had found Ntahobali criminally responsible for the rapes and killings of Tutsi refugees by Interahamwe pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, it did not enter related convictions against him pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, but stated that it would consider his superior responsibility for these actions in sentencing.[4505]

1921. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to particularise the conduct and evidence supporting his superior responsibility, violating his right to a reasoned opinion; and (ii) its assessment of the evidence.[4506] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

[4502] Trial Judgement, para. 5886. See also ibid., paras. 6056, 6086. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Judgement states that Ntahobali is responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for "abductions" in addition to rapes and killings committed by Interahamwe during attacks committed at the Butare Prefecture Office. See ibid., para. 5886. However, the Trial Chamber did not convict Ntahobali on the basis of abductions of persons seeking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office nor did it define such conduct as criminal. See ibid., paras. 5876, 5877, 6053, 6086, 6094, 6100, 6101, 6168, 6169, 6184, 6185. Read in the context of the entire Trial Judgement, the reference to "abductions" is not the identification of criminal conduct that individually supports Ntahobali's responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, but a descriptive element that relates, in particular, to the manner in which killings were routinely carried out upon those who sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office. See, e.g., ibid., paras. 2715, 2738, 2749, 2779, 2781(i), (iii), (iv), 5867, 5873, 5874.

(a) Imprecise Findings

1922. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in finding him responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for all the rapes and killings committed by Interahamwe against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office.[4507] In this regard, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber failed to explain how he exercised effective control over Interahamwe who committed rapes and killings based on Nyiramasuhuko's orders, or over Interahamwe who committed crimes in his absence.[4508] He submits that by establishing his effective control over Interahamwe based on unspecified orders as well as "the evidence in its entirety", the Trial Chamber violated his right to a reasoned opinion.[4509]

1923. The Prosecution responds that the jurisprudence allowed the Trial Chamber to consider the evidence in its entirety when making findings pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[4510] It also contends that Ntahobali incorrectly asserts that he was held responsible for all "actions by the Interahamwe" at the prefectoral office as he was instead found responsible on the basis of orders he issued that led to criminal conduct.[4511]

1924. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in determining Ntahobali's superior responsibility for the crimes committed against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber specifically referred to the orders he issued to Interahamwe and the fact that the Interahamwe complied with such orders and perpetrated the acts asked of them, including rapes and killings.[4512] This, in the view of the Appeals Chamber, indicates that Ntahobali was held responsible as a superior on the basis of the crimes perpetrated by the Interahamwe who followed his orders.[4513]

1925. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Chamber stated that it would not convict Ntahobali pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute on the basis of rapes and killings committed by

[4508] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 936, 938, 939. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to: (i) determine whether "Kazungu" was a soldier, a body guard, or an Interahamwe when engaging his responsibility for the conduct of Kazungu during the Night of Three Attacks; and (ii) sufficiently differentiate Ntahobali's responsibility for the conduct of Interahamwe or soldiers during the First Half of June Attacks, thereby failing to limit the scope of his liability. See ibid., paras. 896, 897. The Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to address these contentions as it has determined, Judge Khan dissenting, that Ntahobali was not convicted on the basis of his conduct during the Night of Three Attacks or in relation to the killings that were perpetrated during the First Half of June Attacks. See supra, Sections V.I.1(a)(iii), V.I.1(c).

[4513] The Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 6086 of the Trial Judgement, read in isolation, could suggest that Ntahobali bears superior responsibility for the rapes committed by Interahamwe that he aided and abetted. However, this paragraph provides no analysis of the elements of superior responsibility. Moreover, such a reading of paragraph 6086 would be contrary to the Trial Chamber's analysis in paragraphs 5884 through 5886 of the Trial Judgement, which limits Ntahobali's effective control over Interahamwe to those who acted upon his orders.

Interahamwe during or following attacks at the prefectoral office as it concluded that Ntahobali had already been found criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for these actions.[4514] The Trial Judgement, therefore, clearly reflects that the Trial Chamber limited Ntahobali's responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute only to conduct that supports his convictions pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for crimes committed by Interahamwe against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office, and only the conduct that resulted from Interahamwe who followed his orders.[4515] While superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute can be incurred without evidence of any orders issued by the superior, the Trial Judgement shows that, in the present case, the Trial Chamber held Ntahobali responsible as a superior only of those crimes that he ordered and for which he was convicted under Article 6(1) of the Statute.

1926. Bearing this in mind, Ntahobali's contention that he was held responsible under Article 6(3) of the Statute for all crimes committed by Interahamwe at the prefectoral office is without merit. Consequently, his arguments that the Trial Chamber failed to explain how he exercised effective control over Interahamwe who committed rapes and killings based on Nyiramasuhuko's orders or over Interahamwe who committed these crimes in his absence are moot as he was not found to have ordered them.

1927. Turning to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber violated his right to a reasoned opinion in failing to identify the orders that were essential to demonstrate his superior responsibility, the Appeals Chamber finds that, read as a whole, the Trial Judgement sufficiently identified the orders Ntahobali issued to Interahamwe during attacks at the prefectoral office that were central to the Trial Chamber's finding that he bore superior responsibility for the crimes committed by Interahamwe who followed them.[4516] The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's reliance on the Trial Chamber's statement in paragraph 5884 of the Trial Judgement that it "consider[ed] the evidence in its entirety" when assessing Ntahobali's superior responsibility, as it is clear that the Trial Chamber merely intended to indicate that it reached its findings beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of the totality of the evidence adduced. This is consistent with the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[4517] Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion is therefore dismissed.

1928. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to particularise the conduct and evidence supporting his superior responsibility in relation to the crimes committed against Tutsi refugees who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office and in violating his right to a reasoned opinion.

(b) Assessment of Evidence

1929. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found Ntahobali responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering: (i) killings of "Tutsis forced to board the pickup" truck during the Mid-May Attack; (ii) the rapes of six Tutsi women during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; and (iii) the rape of Witness TA during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks.[4518]

1930. Considering these conclusions, and recalling that Ntahobali was held responsible as a superior on the basis of the crimes perpetrated by the Interahamwe who followed his orders,[4519] the Trial Judgement reflects that Ntahobali was found to bear superior responsibility over Interahamwe who killed "Tutsis forced to board the pickup" truck during the Mid-May Attack and who raped Witness TA and six other women during the Last Half of May Attacks.

1931. Ntahobali contends that a superior's authority to issue orders does not automatically establish that superior's effective control.[4520] In this regard, he argues that the only orders the Trial Chamber could have relied upon in establishing his effective control over Interahamwe were a single order to stop loading refugees onto the pickup truck during the Mid-May Attack and his orders to rape during the Last Half of May Attacks.[4521] Furthermore, he submits that the impressions of Witness TA and other witnesses that he was the leader of the attacks do not suffice to establish his effective control over the Interahamwe.[4522]

1932. In addition, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis as it failed to consider evidence that Interahamwe were at times "under the orders" of Nteziryayo and the [4518] The Trial Chamber also found Ntahobali responsible for: (i) committing rapes during the Mid-May Attack and the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; and (ii) aiding and abetting the rape of Witness TA during one of the First Half of June Attacks. See supra, Sections V.I.1(b), V.I.1(c). Because the Trial Chamber's conclusions as to Ntahobali's participation in these attacks do not include findings that he issued "orders", the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not find him responsible under Article 6(3) of the Statute on the basis of this conduct. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, rejects the Prosecution's contention to the contrary. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1191, 1202.

[4520] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 929.
[4521] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 930, 931.
[4522] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 930, 934. Ntahobali argues that Witness TA's evidence further reflects the witness's impression that Nyiramasuhuko was his superior but that the Trial Chamber found this insufficient to establish her effective control over him. See idem.

President of the Interahamwe, Robert Kajuga, and its own findings that Nsabimana had issued orders to Interahamwe who were present at the prefectoral office, and that Kanyabashi later issued orders to the same Interahamwe at Rango Forest.[4523] He further highlights that the Prosecution alleged that Interahamwe collaborated with the Interim Government.[4524] In his view, the Trial Chamber also erred as it failed to consider that the term "Interahamwe" was used to designate any person participating in killings or looting and not the official Interahamwe of the MRND.[4525] Finally, Ntahobali contends that the fact that he issued orders is insufficient to demonstrate that he knew or had reason to know that crimes were about to be committed at the prefectoral office.[4526]

1933. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's leadership position and the fact that he issued orders which were followed by the Interahamwe are strong indicators that he exercised effective control over them.[4527] It submits that the relevant evidence does not reflect impressions of Ntahobali's authority, but direct evidence of him ordering Interahamwe to commit crimes.[4528] The Prosecution also contends that, even if the evidence and findings identified by Ntahobali were to establish that others had effective control over Interahamwe at the prefectoral office, this would not nullify Ntahobali's effective control over them.[4529] In this regard, the Prosecution submits that it was unnecessary for the Trial Chamber to determine whether the attackers were part of the official Interahamwe.[4530] It also contends that Ntahobali had the requisite knowledge to establish his superior responsibility because he ordered the specific killings and rapes.[4531]

1934. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "[i]ndicators of effective control are more a matter of evidence than of substantive law, and those indicators are limited to showing that the accused had the power to prevent [or] punish."[4532] A superior's ability to issue binding orders that are complied with by subordinates is one of the indicators of effective control generally relied upon in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[4533]

1935. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has overturned the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe to rape six women during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks.[4534] Because the Trial Chamber used this conclusion to support its findings that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility for these rapes,[4535] the Appeals Chamber reverses the Trial Chamber's findings of Ntahobali's responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute based on this conduct.

1936. However, bearing in mind the evidence and findings that support Ntahobali's convictions for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack[4536] as well as the finding that he ordered about seven Interahamwe to rape Witness TA during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks,[4537] the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, finds that it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to conclude that Ntahobali possessed effective control over the Interahamwe who committed these crimes on the basis of his orders. The temporal proximity and serial nature of these attacks, which repeatedly involved Ntahobali and Interahamwe, as well as the credible evidence of Ntahobali's leading role in them provided sufficient basis for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Ntahobali possessed the material ability to prevent the crimes and punish the Interahamwe who committed them based on his orders. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already rejected Ntahobali's contention that Witness TA simply provided impressions of Ntahobali's authority over Interahamwe, as her evidence demonstrates that he repeatedly issued orders to Interahamwe and was viewed as an authority figure by them.[4538]

1937. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider evidence that others issued orders to Interahamwe. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber does not see the material relevance of evidence that Interahamwe under the orders of Kajuga and Nteziryayo committed crimes during different time periods in other locations.[4539] Moreover, the Trial Chamber considered some of the evidence highlighted by Ntahobali on appeal and the leadership roles Kajuga and Nteziryayo held with respect to Interahamwe elsewhere in the Trial Judgement.[4540]

1938. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds no inconsistency in the Trial Chamber's analysis of evidence that Nsabimana and Kanyabashi issued orders to Interahamwe[4541] and its conclusion that

Ntahobali exercised effective control over Interahamwe to whom he issued orders to commit various crimes at the prefectoral office. The Appeals Chamber recalls that effective control need not be exclusive and can be exercised by more than one superior, whose criminal responsibility is not excluded by the coexisting responsibility of others.[4542]

1939. The Appeals Chamber also finds no relevance in Ntahobali's argument that the Prosecution alleged that the Interim Government collaborated with or had effective control over the Interahamwe, as he points to allegations rather than findings of the Trial Chamber that would be inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's conclusions that he exercised effective control over a select group of Interahamwe. Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate that it was necessary for the Trial Chamber to determine whether the Interahamwe over whom he was found to exercise superior responsibility were officially part of the MRND party.

1940. Finally, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's contentions that the orders underpinning his responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute were insufficient to establish that he knew or had reason to know that Interahamwe were about to commit crimes. As discussed above, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to the killings during the Mid-May Attack, the rapes and killings flowed directly from his orders and Ntahobali does not develop any argument to show that these crimes were committed without his knowledge or in circumstances that would have undermined his ability to know.

1941. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Ntahobali responsible under Article 6(3) of the Statute on the basis of rapes committed by Interahamwe following his orders during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, concludes that Ntahobali has not demonstrated any other error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence relevant to his responsibility as a superior for crimes committed by Interahamwe on the basis of his orders at the Butare Prefecture Office.

1942. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to particularise the conduct and evidence supporting his superior responsibility in relation to crimes committed at the Butare Prefecture Office and in violating his right to a reasoned opinion.

[4542] See Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 495. See also Nizeyimana Appeal Judgement, para. 346; Čelebići Appeal Judgement, paras. 197, 198.

1943. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Ntahobali responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute on the basis of the rapes committed by Interahamwe following his orders during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated any other error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence relevant to his responsibility as a superior for the crimes committed by Interahamwe on the basis of his orders during the Mid-May Attack and the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office. The Appeals Chamber will discuss the impact of these findings, if any, in Section XII below.

5. Conclusion

1944. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber reverses Ntahobali's convictions pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) ordering the rapes of six women during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; and (ii) committing rapes during the First Half of June Attacks. The Appeals Chamber further concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ntahobali bore superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute on the basis of the rapes of six women committed by Interahamwe following his orders during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks. The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact of these conclusions, if any, in Section XII below.

1945. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack, affirms Ntahobali's convictions pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack; (ii) committing the rape of Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack and the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; (iii) ordering the rape of Witness TA during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; and (iv) aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA during one of the First Half of June Attacks. The Appeals Chamber further concludes, Judge Liu dissenting, that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he bore superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for: (i) killings committed by Interahamwe on the basis of his orders during the Mid-May Attack; and (ii) the rapes of Witness TA committed by Interahamwe following his orders during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks.

J. École Évangeliste du Rwanda (Grounds 3.5, 4.1, 4.2, and 4.3 in part)

1946. The Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for aiding and abetting the killing of Tutsi refugees abducted from the EER between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994.[4543] The Trial Chamber also found that Ntahobali was responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings committed by the Interahamwe at or near the EER and considered this as an aggravating factor when determining Ntahobali's sentence.[4544]

1947. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) making imprecise findings in relation to the crimes committed at the EER, violating his right to a reasoned opinion; (ii) its assessment of the evidence relating to these events; (iii) its assessment of his responsibility for aiding and abetting; and (iv) finding that he was responsible as a superior for these crimes. The Appeals Chamber will assess these contentions in turn.

1. Imprecise Findings

1948. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber reached the following conclusion:

> the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt that between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994: soldiers escorted and beat the refugees on the way to the EER; Ntahobali was involved in and led Interahamwe in attacks against, and abductions of, Tutsi refugees during their stay at the EER; soldiers, both alone and accompanied by Ntahobali, came to the EER and were also involved in abductions of refugees during the same period; soldiers raped women and young girls at or near the EER school; Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers killed the abducted Tutsi refugees in the woods near the EER school complex. However, the Chamber does not find it established beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali led the soldiers to the EER.[4545]

1949. In the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber concluded as follows:

> There was no direct evidence that Ntahobali was personally responsible for killing any of the abducted refugees. The Chamber is nevertheless satisfied that his presence alongside Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER amounted to tacit approval and encouragement of the acts of Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER.
> The Chamber also recalls Ntahobali's prior conduct in working alongside Interahamwe and soldiers in abducting hundreds of refugees from the [Butare Prefecture Office] who were physically assaulted and raped and thereafter killed in various locations throughout Ngoma commune, and that he personally committed genocide at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock […]. As such, Ntahobali's presence at the EER alongside Interahamwe and soldiers, when considered together > with his prior conduct, leads the Chamber to conclude that Ntahobali's conduct at the EER amounted to his sanctioning of the acts of the Interahamwe and soldiers, and thereby substantially contributed to the commission of these crimes. […]

> Recalling that those who took refuge at the EER were predominantly Tutsis, the Chamber thus finds it proven beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali committed the actus reus of aiding and abetting genocide, through the acts of killing members of the group.
> Viewing these attacks in the context of the widespread killing of Tutsis occurring throughout Rwanda, the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the soldiers and Interahamwe who participated in various killings at or near the EER did so with the intent to destroy, in whole or in substantial part, the Tutsi group. Having regard to the events that surrounded the abductions, and the situation in Rwanda generally, the Chamber is also satisfied that Ntahobali must have known of the soldiers' and Interahamwe's intent and knew that he was substantially assisting them in the commission of their crimes.[4546]

1950. Ntahobali submits that the imprecision of the Trial Judgement regarding his convictions for the crimes committed at the EER violates his right to a reasoned opinion.[4547] Specifically, he contends that, despite convicting him for aiding and abetting the crimes at the EER through his presence, the Trial Chamber failed to indicate when he was present at the EER, which, in his view, is an essential element of the offence.[4548] According to him, because he was convicted based on his presence at the EER and the Trial Chamber found that some attacks occurred in his absence, the Trial Chamber should have specified the attacks during which he was present since they were the only attacks for which he could have been held responsible.[4549] Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber's factual findings do not allow him to understand when he was found to have been present, pointing out the discrepancies as to the timing of his presence in the witnesses' testimonies relied upon by the Trial Chamber.[4550]

1951. Ntahobali further contends that the Trial Chamber violated his right to a reasoned opinion by failing to specify when the attacks of the Interahamwe and soldiers took place or identify the evidence it relied upon for its conclusions, in particular given the inconsistent and contradictory evidence.[4551] He points to inconsistencies in the evidence as to the identity of the attackers, his presence at the EER, and the timing of the attacks that, he submits, the Trial Chamber should have expressly discussed.[4552] He also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to distinguish the attacks

[4552] In particular, Ntahobali contends that: (i) Witnesses TA and RE were imprecise about the timing of these attacks, with the latter also testifying that they occurred in Ntahobali's absence; (ii) Witnesses RE and SJ could not have been describing the same group of Interahamwe as, according to Witness RE, the Interahamwe donned banana leaves, while Witness SJ recalled them wearing the same uniforms as soldiers; and (iii) he is unable to determine whether the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness SX since the witness's testimony does not accord with the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the length of the stay of the refugees at the EER and the location they were taken to be killed as well committed by the Interahamwe from those committed by the soldiers despite finding him responsible as a superior only for the crimes committed by the Interahamwe.[4553]

1952. Ntahobali submits that the imprecision of the Trial Judgement in these respects prevented him from knowing exactly what he was found responsible for and from raising a comprehensive appeal.[4554] For these reasons, Ntahobali requests that the Appeals Chamber acquit him of all charges relating to the EER.[4555]

1953. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber provided reasons for its conclusion that Ntahobali aided and abetted killings through his tacit approval and sanctioning of the killings of the Tutsi refugees at or near the EER.[4556] It contends that the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali aided and abetted the killings at the EER through his past conduct in addition to his presence at the scene and that, in any event, presence at the crime scene need not coincide with the commission of the crimes or be continuous.[4557] The Prosecution also argues that the Trial Chamber accepted that Ntahobali was present at the EER several times during the relevant period, that the inconsistencies in the evidence highlighted by Ntahobali were minor, and that their assessment did not require detailed findings.[4558] It adds that it was unnecessary for the Trial Chamber to distinguish the crimes committed by the soldiers from those committed by the Interahamwe since Ntahobali was not held responsible for the crimes committed by the soldiers at the EER.[4559] The Prosecution further suggests that Ntahobali was not held accountable as a superior for all the crimes committed by the Interahamwe at the EER, but only for the specific crimes established by the evidence of Witnesses QY, SX, and RE.[4560]

1954. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules require trial chambers to provide a reasoned opinion,[4561] which includes the provision of clear, reasoned findings of fact as to each element of the crime charged.[4562] However, a trial chamber is

1955. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of aiding and abetting "consists of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime" and the mens rea is "the knowledge that these acts assist the commission of the offense".[4564] The Appeals Chamber has further explained that an individual can be found liable for aiding and abetting a crime when it is established that his conduct amounted to tacit approval and encouragement of the crime and that such conduct substantially contributed to the crime.[4565] When this form of aiding and abetting has been a basis for a conviction, "it has been the authority of the accused combined with his presence on (or very near to) the crime scene, especially if considered with his prior conduct, which all together allow the conclusion that the accused's conduct amounts to official sanction of the crime and thus substantially contributes to it."[4566]

1956. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's conclusion regarding Ntahobali's responsibility for the killings of Tutsi refugees at or near the EER was premised on its findings that during the refugees' stay at the EER between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994, Ntahobali was present at the EER and, together with the Interahamwe and soldiers, involved in the attacks on and the abductions of the refugees from the EER, who were subsequently killed in the woods near the EER complex.[4567] The Trial Chamber noted that "[t]here was no direct evidence that Ntahobali was personally responsible for killing any of the abducted refugees" but was "satisfied that his presence alongside Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER amounted to tacit approval and encouragement of the acts of Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER."[4568] The Trial Judgement therefore clearly shows that his conviction is predicated on the criminal conduct of Interahamwe and soldiers that took place during attacks conducted in his presence and that he was not convicted of the crimes committed in his absence. Contrary to the Prosecution's position, the Trial Judgement reflects that Ntahobali was held responsible for aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsi refugees committed by both the Interahamwe and soldiers.[4569]

1957. A holistic reading of the pertinent sections of the Trial Judgement, including the summary of testimonial evidence considered in the Trial Chamber's deliberations, shows that the Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali was present at the EER during the relevant time period. The Appeals Chamber observes that the evidence of Witnesses RE, QY and SX, deemed credible by the Trial Chamber, demonstrates, irrespective of the inconsistencies underscored by Ntahobali, that he was indeed at the EER on several occasions when the refugees were attacked and abducted by the principal perpetrators.[4570]

1958. To the extent that the Trial Judgement reflects the instances where Ntahobali's presence at the EER coincided with the attacks on and the abductions of the refugees by the principal perpetrators, the Appeals Chamber considers that, despite the discrepancies in the evidence pointed out by Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber was not required to address with greater precision the timing of every attack perpetrated by the Interahamwe and soldiers in making legal findings regarding Ntahobali's responsibility. Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the Trial Chamber expressly cited the testimonies of Witnesses RE, SJ, and TA in support of its finding that "Interahamwe committed attacks at the EER"[4571] and the testimonies of Witnesses RE, QY, SJ, and QBQ in concluding that "apart from Interahamwe, soldiers came to the EER and variously abducted and killed the refugees."[4572] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that it was incumbent on the Trial Chamber to demarcate with more precision the attacks committed by soldiers as opposed to those committed by the Interahamwe as a prerequisite for finding Ntahobali responsible as a superior for the attacks committed by the latter.[4573]

1959. The Appeals Chamber is therefore of the view that the factual findings made by the Trial Chamber and the evidence relied upon in making these findings, together with the corresponding legal findings, as set out above, establish with sufficient precision the basis of Ntahobali's conviction for aiding and abetting the killing of Tutsi refugees at or near the EER through his tacit approval and sanctioning of the acts of the principal perpetrators.

[4569] See Trial Judgement, para. 5912 (Ntahobali's "presence alongside the Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER amounted to tacit approval and encouragement of the acts of Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER.") (emphasis added). See also ibid., paras. 3965, 5913, 5915.

1960. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred by making imprecise findings with respect to his convictions for aiding and abetting the killing of Tutsi refugees at or near the EER.

2. Assessment of Evidence

> the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt that between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994: soldiers escorted and beat the refugees on the way to the EER; Ntahobali was involved in and led Interahamwe in attacks against, and abductions of, Tutsi refugees during their stay at the EER; soldiers, both alone and accompanied by Ntahobali, came to the EER and were also involved in abductions of refugees during the same period; soldiers raped women and young girls at or near the EER school; Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers killed the abducted Tutsi refugees in the woods near the EER school complex. However, the Chamber [did] not find it established beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali led the soldiers to the EER.[4574]

1962. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence relating to the events at the EER.[4575] In support of his contention, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber: (i) reversed the burden of proof and erroneously discredited or disregarded exculpatory evidence; (ii) erred in its assessment of identification evidence; (iii) erred in its assessment of Prosecution evidence concerning the attacks; and (iv) improperly relied on expert evidence. The Appeals Chamber will examine these contentions in turn.

(a) Reversal of Burden of Proof and Assessment of Exculpatory Evidence

1963. After recalling that the Prosecution evidence concerning the attacks at the EER was credible and reliable and considering that most of the Defence witnesses who testified in this respect were either relatives or friends of Ntahobali, resided in the hotel belonging to Maurice Ntahobali, and therefore may have had a motive to lie, the Trial Chamber found that the testimonies presented by Defence witnesses that no attacks occurred at the EER was not credible.[4576]

1964. The Trial Chamber also concluded that the number of refugees at the EER during late-May 1994 well exceeded 200.[4577] It based its conclusion on Nsabimana's estimate that about 200 refugees returned to the Butare Prefecture Office from the EER in the last days of May 1994, the fact that many refugees at the EER were crowded into classrooms, and the fact that the number of refugees at the prefectoral office around 15 June 1994 after they had returned from the EER may have been around 200 considered in light of its previous findings that many dozens if not hundreds of the refugees had been killed before that time.[4578]

1965. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber misapplied the burden of proof in its assessment of evidence related to the events at the EER.[4579] In support of this contention, he argues that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof by first assessing whether the Prosecution's evidence was credible and reliable before analysing the Defence evidence, notably concerning his presence at the EER and the existence of attacks at the EER, which resulted in the inevitable rejection of the latter.[4580] In his view, it was incumbent on the Trial Chamber to instead begin with the assessment of the Defence evidence, which, if believed, would have led to an acquittal or at least would have raised a reasonable doubt.[4581] Ntahobali contends that the reversal of the burden of proof invalidates the Trial Chamber's findings concerning his involvement in the events at the EER.[4582]

1966. According to Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber further erred in failing to provide a reasoned opinion for its finding that the relevant Defence evidence was not credible in its entirety, as the fact that some Defence witnesses were "relatives or friends" did not automatically indicate that their evidence was not credible or "determine the fate" of the remainder of the Defence evidence.[4583] In particular, he submits that the Trial Chamber failed to take into consideration the Defence evidence reflecting that no crimes were likely to have been committed at the EER since Defence Witnesses H1B6, NMBMP, WCNJ, WUNBJ, CEM, WBUC, Céline Nyiraneza as well as Denise and Maurice Ntahobali did not hear about or see any crime, nor heard gunshots or screams at the EER.[4584] Ntahobali also argues that in its rejection of the Defence evidence, the Trial Chamber failed to consider the contradictory accounts of the Prosecution witnesses.[4585] In this respect, he highlights that some Prosecution witnesses did not hear gunfire during the attacks at the EER and testified that the refugees were killed with traditional weapons,[4586] and others did not mention hearing screams or gunshots during the attacks at the EER.[4587] Ntahobali contends that these testimonies undermined the credibility of Prosecution Witnesses TG and QI, who respectively recounted hearing screams and gunfire as well as seeing a gun-wielding policeman, and reinforced Defence evidence regarding the absence of gunshots and screams.[4588]

1967. In addition, Ntahobali submits that in concluding that Defence witnesses attested to seeing only a small number of the refugees at the EER because they were unable to see inside the building, the Trial Chamber disregarded the testimonies of Defence Witnesses WCMNA and WCNMC, who were not his relatives or friends and testified about seeing the refugees inside the classrooms at the EER.[4589] Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably in finding that the number of the refugees "well exceeded 200" without considering the contradictory testimonies of Witnesses RE, SX, and SJ as to their number at the EER.[4590]

1968. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber assessed the totality of the evidence before making findings on Ntahobali's involvement in the attacks at the EER, which is consistent with the Tribunal's jurisprudence.[4591] It also submits that the Trial Chamber assessed the Defence evidence and that Ntahobali himself, while contesting his presence, recognised that the evidence indicated that several abductions were committed at the EER.[4592]

1969. As correctly noted by the Trial Chamber, the burden of proving each and every element of the offences charged against the accused beyond reasonable doubt rests solely on the Prosecution and never shifts to the Defence.[4593] The Appeals Chamber finds that the manner in which the Trial Chamber organised its assessment of the evidence in the Trial Judgement in no way reflects a failure to properly apply the applicable burden or proof. [4594]

1970. The Appeals Chamber is similarly not persuaded by Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber's analysis of the Prosecution evidence before finding that the Defence evidence that no attacks occurred at the EER was not credible evinces a shift in the burden of proof.

[4589] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 509.
[4590] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 509. Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness FA's testimony, who attested to the absence of the refugees from classrooms at the EER and broadly asserts that the number of refugees stationed at the EER "had an obvious impact" on the number of those killed at the Butare Prefecture Office and the EER. See idem. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber was under an obligation to discuss expressly Witness FA's vague testimony that there was no one at the EER during the war since she did not testify that she personally saw inside the EER buildings. The witness also testified that people were killed at the EER. See Witness FA, T. 1 July 2004 pp. 75, 76 (closed session).
[4591] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 958. The Prosecution adds that the Canadian jurisprudence cited by Ntahobali is not binding on the Tribunal. See idem. Ntahobali replies that even though the Tribunal is not bound by national jurisprudence, the Appeals Chamber has recognised its utility. See Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 228, referring to Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, paras. 34-41.
[4593] See Trial Judgement, para. 162.
[4594] Since pursuant to Rule 89(A) of the Rules a Trial Chamber is not bound by national rules of evidence, the Appeals Chamber does not find Ntahobali's reliance on Canadian jurisprudence persuasive. See also Simba Appeal Judgement, para. 38; Akayesu Appeal Judgement, fn. 577.

The Trial Chamber provided a detailed analysis of the evidence regarding the attacks at the EER adduced by the Prosecution and found it credible and reliable.[4595] Although the Trial Chamber did not expressly detail its assessment of individual credibility of the Defence witnesses in this respect, its conclusions indicate that it did not find their evidence that no attacks occurred at the EER credible in light of the "credible and reliable" evidence presented by the Prosecution as well as the fact that most of the Defence witnesses who testified to that effect were either relatives or friends of Ntahobali, were residing in the hotel belonging to Maurice Ntahobali, and, as a result may have had a motive to lie.[4596] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is settled jurisprudence that a witness's close personal relationship to an accused is one of the factors which a trial chamber may consider in assessing the witness's evidence.[4597] It was therefore within the Trial Chamber's discretion to take that factor into account when weighing the Defence evidence with that of the Prosecution. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this does not amount to a reversal of the burden of proof but a finding that the Prosecution proved beyond reasonable doubt that the attacks occurred at the EER.[4598] The Appeals Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Trial Chamber did not misapply the burden of proof.

1971. Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the Trial Chamber did consider the Defence evidence that no attacks occurred, noting in particular the relevant parts of the testimonies of Witnesses H1B6, NMBMP, WCNJ, WUNBJ, CEM, WBUC, Nyiraneza, as well as Denise and Maurice Ntahobali as regards their perception of the conditions at the EER, including the absence of gunshots and screams.[4599] In addition, while the Trial Judgement indicates that some Prosecution witnesses did not hear or did not mention gunshots and screams,[4600] and others did hear them or saw a gun-wielding policeman,[4601] these witnesses' evidence is consistent on the fact that attacks occurred at the EER and therefore do not support the Defence evidence to the contrary.[4602] The purported inconsistencies between the testimonies of Prosecution witnesses pointed out by Ntahobali simply reflect that different people in different vantage points saw and heard different

[4602] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3943-3963. The Appeals Chamber notes that, while the Trial Chamber's analysis of the evidence concerning the events at the EER does not reflect express consideration of the testimonies of Witnesses QBP and SD, the Trial Chamber specifically noted elsewhere in the Trial Judgement that these witnesses testified that they went to the EER. See ibid., paras. 2265, 2312. In addition, the review of Witness QBP's evidence reveals that the witness testified that people were killed at the EER. See Witness QBP, T. 28 October 2002 p. 42. As for Witness SD, she merely recounted her whereabouts during the events. See Witness SD, T. 17 March 2003 p. 8, T. 17 March 2003 p. 37 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber, therefore, is not persuaded that the testimonies of these witnesses things and are not material when viewed in the context of the fundamental consistency of the witnesses' accounts that attacks occurred at the EER. Recalling that, as a general rule, a trial chamber is not required to articulate every step of its reasoning for each finding it makes,[4603] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber was not required to discuss these alleged inconsistencies in its analysis of the evidence in relation to the EER. The Appeals Chamber also recalls that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to decide which version it considers more credible.[4604]

1972. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber disregarded the evidence of Witnesses WCNMC and WCNMA when determining the number of refugees present at the EER at the relevant time, the Appeals Chamber observes that these witnesses' evidence that they saw refugees inside the classrooms at the EER rather than from Hotel Ihuliro was duly noted by the Trial Chamber in the summary of their evidence.[4605] The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the fact that the Trial Chamber did not discuss this particular aspect of their evidence in its deliberations[4606] in light of the overwhelming evidence that the number of the refugees exceeded the Defence witnesses' estimates.[4607]

1973. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Ntahobali's assertion, the Trial Chamber carefully assessed the contradictory aspects of the Prosecution evidence regarding the number of refugees, taking into account the variances within and between the testimonies of Witnesses RE, SX, and SJ and the explanations for it.[4608] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably when it determined the number of the refugees at the EER.

1974. Accordingly, Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in its application of the burden of proof, nor did it disregard exculpatory evidence when assessing the evidence related to events at the EER.

The Appeals Chamber, however, considers that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice for the reason developed below.

(b) Identification Evidence

1975. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence of Witnesses RE, QY, SX, and TB identifying him at the EER was credible and reliable.[4609]

(i) Witness RE

1976. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness RE was among the several witnesses who testified about Ntahobali's presence at the EER.[4610] It recalled that the witness referred to Ntahobali as "Shalom" and observed that, although she did not know him prior to the events, others had identified him.[4611] The Trial Chamber found that this testimony, despite being hearsay evidence, was corroborative of the identification of Ntahobali.[4612] The Trial Chamber further recalled that Witness RE misidentified Ntahobali in court but did not consider that it undermined the credibility or reliability of her identification of Ntahobali as the man who attacked the refugees at the EER, given the time that had elapsed since the events and the detailed and consistent nature of her overall testimony regarding the events at the EER.[4613] The Trial Chamber concluded that the witness had adequate conditions in which to observe Ntahobali at the EER.[4614]

1977. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in crediting identification evidence of Witness RE, in particular by concluding that it was not undermined by the witness's misidentification of him.[4615] In his view, the misidentification could not have been explained by the passage of time and should have raised reasonable doubt as to whether someone other than him, such as Nteziryayo, was present at the EER.[4616]

1978. Ntahobali further submits that, since Witness RE did not identify him, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his identification by this witness was corroborated by hearsay evidence from unknown persons who informed her of Ntahobali's identity.[4617] He argues that the Trial Chamber failed to specify which identification evidence corroborate Witness RE's.[4618] He also highlights that the unknown hearsay sources who identified him for Witness RE were from a commune remote from Butare Town.[4619]

1979. In addition, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in failing to treat identification evidence of Witness RE with sufficient caution despite the difficult conditions under which she made the identification at the EER.[4620] In particular, he submits that, in concluding that Witness RE "had adequate conditions in which to observe and identify Ntahobali", the Trial Chamber failed to consider that the witness saw him at the EER only once at night, when Ntahobali was wearing a military uniform and was surrounded by soldiers while it was too dark to distinguish the uniforms, and made these observations from a distant corner in a heavy rain.[4621] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that sufficient lighting was present for Witness RE to identify him, disregarding the witness's own testimony that there was no electricity or lighting at the EER.[4622]

1980. Finally, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the detailed and consistent nature of Witness RE's as well as Witness QY's overall testimonies concerning the events at the EER to find their identification evidence credible and reliable.[4623] Ntahobali submits that the credibility of these witnesses' testimonies about the events at the EER is an issue distinct from the reliability and credibility of their identification evidence, which does not revolve around honesty.[4624] According to him, since these witnesses were unable to identify him and their testimonies were "mutually inconsistent", the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion for finding their testimonies "consistent".[4625]

1981. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably found that, in light of the detailed and consistent nature of the overall testimonies of Witnesses RE and QY, Witness RE's identification evidence was credible and that the Trial Chamber cautiously assessed her evidence.[4626]

1982. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Ntahobali's challenges regarding the general import of Witness RE misidentifying Ntahobali as Nteziryayo have already been addressed and rejected in a previous section of this Judgement.[4627] Furthermore, in assessing the witness's evidence implicating Ntahobali in the attacks at the EER, the Trial Chamber not only concluded that the misidentification did not undermine the reliability of Witness RE's identification evidence in light of the "nearly nine years" that had passed since the attacks, but also considered the circumstances of her identification of Ntahobali at the EER as well as the overall context of her testimony regarding the events, including its detailed and consistent nature.[4628] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Ntahobali, who simply repeats the arguments he raised at trial,[4629] merely disagrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion without demonstrating that the in-court misidentification could not have reasonably been attributed to the passage of time.

1983. The Appeals Chamber similarly sees no merit in Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on hearsay evidence through which he was identified to Witness RE to corroborate Ntahobali's identification at the EER. While Witness RE's ability to identify Ntahobali was based on the information provided by others who identified him as "Shalom",[4630] the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already addressed and dismissed Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's general reliance on hearsay identification evidence.[4631] Moreover, since Witness RE's evidence of Ntahobali's presence at the EER was supported by evidence of other witnesses who attested to seeing Ntahobali, albeit on separate occasions,[4632] the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Witness RE's hearsay evidence corroborated Ntahobali's identification at the EER.[4633] Finally, contrary to Ntahobali's contention, the summary of Witness RE's evidence reflects that Ntahobali was identified to her by "others from Butare".[4634]

1984. As for Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber overlooked the difficult conditions in which he was identified by Witness RE at the EER on the first night, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Ntahobali's contention, Witness RE did not testify that she saw Ntahobali at night or that it was too dark to distinguish the uniforms.[4635] Instead, Witness RE testified that Ntahobali and the accompanying soldiers came in the evening between 5:30 and 6:00 p.m., while it was still relatively bright.[4636] In recounting Witness RE's testimony about her encounter with Ntahobali on the first night, the Trial Chamber referred to this excerpt of the witness's evidence.[4637] Furthermore, having reviewed Witness RE's evidence describing the circumstances of her encounter with Ntahobali,[4638] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that other factors listed by Ntahobali, which were expressly noted by the Trial Chamber,[4639] undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's reliance on this witness's identification evidence.

1985. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the detailed and consistent nature of Witnesses RE's and QY's overall testimonies concerning the events at the EER to find their identification evidence reliable, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali's challenges related to the inconsistencies between the testimonies of Witnesses RE and QY are discussed and dismissed later in this Judgement.[4640] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that general credibility of witnesses and the reliability of witness testimonies are among the relevant factors that a trier of fact is entitled to take into account when assessing identification evidence.[4641] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no error in the Trial Chamber's consideration of these factors.

1986. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated an error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness RE's identification evidence as it relates to his presence at the EER.

(ii) Witness QY

1987. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness QY had seen Ntahobali on two occasions before the events at the EER, at the Butare University Hospital and the Butare Prefecture Office, respectively.[4642] It further recalled that Witness QY stated that she would not be able to identify Ntahobali in court but considered that it did not undermine the credibility or reliability of her

[4635] The Appeals Chamber observes that the excerpt of Witness RE's testimony relied upon by Ntahobali in support of this contention details the circumstances in which the witness encountered Ntahobali at the Butare Prefecture Office rather than at the EER. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 580, referring to Witness RE, T. 26 February 2003 pp. 24, 25 ("Q. identification of Ntahobali as the man who attacked the refugees at the EER given the time that had elapsed since the events and the detailed and consistent nature of her overall testimony regarding the events.[4643]

1988. Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in crediting Witness QY's identification evidence, which ought to have been approached with caution.[4644] In particular, he argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on the evidence of two prior sightings of him by the witness at locations other than the EER, while finding that he was not present at these locations.[4645] Specifically, he underlines that the Trial Chamber concluded that it had not been established beyond reasonable doubt that he went to the Butare University Hospital, rejecting Witness QY's identification evidence due to its hearsay nature and the witness's inability to identify Ntahobali in court.[4646] Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber failed to mention that Witness QY learned from an unknown hearsay source that the attacker's name was "Sharomo".[4647] Similarly, he emphasises that the Trial Chamber also rejected Witness QY's identification evidence of him at the prefectoral office.[4648]

1989. Ntahobali further submits that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise caution in finding Witness QY's identification evidence credible and reliable despite her failure to identify him in court, her admission that she lied to the court, and the Trial Chamber's conclusion that her sighting of him prior to her seeing him at the EER was not reliable.[4649] In his view, the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion for finding Witness QY credible and reliable despite the adverse credibility findings made by the Trial Chamber concerning this witness as regards other events.[4650]

1990. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably found that, by the time the refugees were transferred from the prefectoral office to the EER in mid-May 1994, Witness QY had seen Ntahobali on two occasions.[4651] In this context, it submits that the Trial Chamber acted within its discretion in finding that Witness QY's inability to identify Ntahobali in court did not undermine her credibility or the reliability of her identification evidence, particularly as her account was corroborated.[4652]

1991. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness QY had seen Ntahobali on two prior occasions, at the prefectoral office and the Butare University Hospital, before seeing him at the EER.[4653] However, the Appeals Chamber observes that, elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber unequivocally rejected Witness QY's evidence implicating Ntahobali in the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office in late April or early May 1994 due, in part, to the unreliable nature of her identification evidence.[4654] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber has previously determined that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witness QY with respect to the presence of Ntahobali during the attacks at the prefectoral office around the end of May or the beginning of June 1994.[4655] Similarly, regarding the events at the Butare University Hospital between April and May 1994, the Trial Chamber also concluded that Witness QY's identification evidence – the only evidence implicating Ntahobali – raised a doubt about Ntahobali's presence during the events.[4656] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QY's prior sightings of Ntahobali on two occasions in support of the witness's identification of him at the EER.[4657]

1992. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. In particular, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QY not only referred to Ntahobali as "Shalom" but also specified that he was the son of Nyiramasuhuko and that she did not know anyone else in Butare by that name, which contradicts Ntahobali's contention that the witness was referring to another person.[4658] The Appeals Chamber is therefore of the view that the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Witness QY's prior sightings of Ntahobali does not undermine its reliance on Witness QY's evidence in identifying him during the events at the EER.

1993. Turning to Witness QY's inability to identify Ntahobali in court, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the failure to identify an accused in court can be a reason for declining to rely on the evidence of an identifying witness but it does not necessarily prevent a reasonable trier of fact from relying on that witness's testimony.[4659] In the current instance, the Trial Chamber acknowledged Witness QY's admission that she would not be able to identify Ntahobali in court but considered that, in view of the consistent and detailed nature of her overall testimony and the time that elapsed since the events, it did not undermine the credibility or reliability of her identification of Ntahobali as the man who attacked the refugees at the EER.[4660] The Appeals Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Trial Chamber exercised sufficient caution when assessing this aspect of Witness QY's evidence.

1994. With respect to Ntahobali's arguments related to Witness QY lying to the Trial Chamber, the Appeals Chamber recalls that they have already been addressed and dismissed in a prior section of this Judgement.[4661] The Appeals Chamber finds Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber provided insufficient explanation for its reliance on Witness QY's identification evidence in light of its credibility findings regarding this witness in relation to other events unpersuasive. Recalling that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony,[4662] the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber not only articulated its reasons for accepting Witness QY's identification evidence with respect to the EER, including, inter alia, the detailed and consistent nature of her overall testimony, but also for its decision not to credit her evidence in relation to other events.[4663]

1995. Under these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that a reasonable trier of fact could not have relied on Witness QY's identification of him at the EER.

(iii) Witness SX

1996. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness SX learned Ntahobali's identity through a third person at the roadblock in front of Nyiramasuhuko's house.[4664] It further noted that Witness SX had several opportunities to observe Ntahobali at the EER and, recalling its findings about the lighting conditions at the EER, found Witness SX's testimony to be reliable and corroborative of Ntahobali's involvement in the attacks at the EER.[4665]

1997. Ntahobali contends that, in relying on Witness SX's testimony about the lighting conditions at the EER, the Trial Chamber failed to discuss that Witness SX initially testified that he could not recall whether there was lighting at the EER before indicating that light emanated from the lamps on the building across the road.[4666] In his view, it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness SX's evidence when considering the circumstances under which he was observed at the EER by Witness RE on the first night, since the latter testimony denotes that the veranda where Witness RE was located was not lit.[4667] Ntahobali also points out that, according to Witness RE, there was no light or electricity available at the EER.[4668]

1998. The Prosecution responds that, based on the several opportunities that he had to observe Ntahobali under adequate lighting, the Trial Chamber reasonably found that Witness SX's testimony was reliable and corroborative of Ntahobali's involvement in the EER attacks.[4669]

1999. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness SX's testimony that there was lighting at the EER school itself, but not in the classrooms.[4670] Contrary to Ntahobali's contention, Witness SX not only mentioned the lights on the building on the other side of the road that shed light onto the EER but also indicated that there were lights on the buildings of the EER school, except in the classrooms.[4671]

2000. Regarding Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence about lighting at the EER from Witness SX when finding that Witness RE was able to identify Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness RE testified that there was no electricity or lighting at the EER.[4672] However, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali places undue emphasis on this purported contradiction between the evidence of Witnesses SX and RE. While Witness SX was asked numerous questions and provided a detailed description of the positioning of lights at the EER and its surroundings, Witness RE broadly indicated that there was no lighting or electricity when discussing the overall conditions at the EER.[4673] The Appeals Chamber is of the view that any [4668] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 580. See also ibid., para. 592, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 3949. Ntahobali, repeating that the testimony of Witness SX drastically diverged from the testimonies of Witnesses RE and QY as well as the Trial Chamber's own findings, further argues that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on his identification evidence concerning the attacks at the EER in general or to corroborate the evidence of Witnesses RE and QY. See ibid., para. 594. These challenges are addressed and dismissed above and below. See supra, Section V.G.4(b); infra, Section V.J.2(c)(ii). Ntahobali also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess Witness SX's identification evidence with caution even though he did not know Ntahobali prior to the events of 1994 and that the witness's evidence that he "appear[ed]… to resemble" the attacker at the EER was insufficient to establish a positive identification beyond reasonable doubt. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 591. See also AT. 15 April 2015 p. 44. The Appeals Chamber has addressed and rejected these arguments when addressing Ntahobali's submissions pertaining to the rape and murder of a Tutsi girl at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock. See supra, Section V.G.4(b).

inconsistency between the two testimonies would not have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from relying on Witness SX's evidence about the lighting conditions at the EER. Furthermore, when reviewing the Trial Chamber's findings as to the conditions under which Witness RE observed Ntahobali at the EER, the Appeals Chamber considers that Witness SX's evidence regarding the availability of lighting at the EER was not essential to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness RE identified Ntahobali since she observed Ntahobali at the EER in the early evening while it was still relatively bright.[4674]

2001. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's submissions concerning the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness SX's identification evidence as it relates to Ntahobali's presence at the EER.

(iv) Witness TB

2002. The Trial Chamber found that the sighting of Ntahobali at the EER church compound by Witness TB, who was not at the EER, contradicted Ntahobali's testimony that he never entered the EER complex, and further corroborated the presence of Ntahobali at the EER.[4675]

2003. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness TB's evidence corroborated his presence at the EER.[4676] In particular, he argues that Witness TB's testimony that she saw a man called "Sharoumou" at a location different from the EER, at an unspecified time, does not corroborate the evidence of Witnesses RE, QY, and SX about his presence at the EER.[4677]

2004. The Prosecution responds that Witness TB identified Ntahobali in court and gave the names of Ntahobali's parents.[4678]

2005. The Appeals Chamber considers that, assuming that the recording of Witness TB's testimony would reveal that the witness referred to Ntahobali as "Sharoumou" rather than "Shalom", this would not constitute a material variance requiring express analysis by the Trial Chamber. A review of the transcripts cited by Ntahobali reflects that Witness TB referred to

Ntahobali as "Shalom"[4679] and provided biographical information about Ntahobali demonstrating her ability to identify Ntahobali and that she was referring to him and not to someone else.[4680]

2006. The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted that Witness TB was not at the EER but found that her testimony that she saw Ntahobali at the EER church compound nevertheless contradicted Ntahobali's assertion that he never entered the EER complex.[4681] Ntahobali does not challenge this finding. Recalling that corroboration may exist even when some details differ between testimonies, provided that no credible testimony describes the facts in question in a way which is not compatible with the description given in another credible testimony,[4682] the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TB's testimony to corroborate other evidence reflecting Ntahobali's presence at the EER.

(v) Conclusion

2007. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the identification evidence relating to his presence at the EER.

(c) Evidence Concerning Attacks

2008. Ntahobali challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the Prosecution evidence as it relates to: (i) the timing of the events at the EER and number of refugees; (ii) his presence and involvement in attacks at the EER; and (iii) the killings during such attacks.[4683]

(i) Timing of Events and Number of Refugees

2009. The Trial Chamber accepted Nsabimana's estimation that refugees at the Butare Prefecture Office were transferred to the EER between 15 and 20 May 1994 and stayed there [4679] See, e.g., Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 p. 42.

[4680] See Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 p. 42 (identifying Ntahobali as the son of Maurice Ntahobali and Pauline Nyiramasuhuko).
[4681] See Trial Judgement, para. 3950. See also ibid., para. 3881; Witness TB, T. 4 February 2004 p. 50. The Appeals Chamber considers that, since Witness TB was not at the EER, the fact that she did not testify about the presence of the refugees does not render her testimony incompatible with the remainder of the evidence concerning the events at the EER.

until approximately 31 May 1994 when they returned to the prefectoral office.[4684] The Trial Chamber concluded that this was corroborated by the evidence of Witnesses RE, SX, Bararwandika, and H1B6.[4685]

2010. Specifically, the Trial Chamber considered Witness RE's evidence that she was one of the refugees transferred to the EER from the prefectoral office based on Nsabimana's orders and found that she arrived there in mid-May 1994.[4686] It also concluded that Witness SJ's testimony about her visits to the EER concerned "approximately the same time period, i.e. mid-May 1994."[4687] Having regard to Witness SX's evidence, which reflected that refugees stayed at the EER for a longer period of time than that estimated by Witnesses RE and SJ, the Trial Chamber also concluded that "the refugees must have started arriving at the EER around the start or middle of May 1994."[4688] Finally, the Trial Chamber, having considered the evidence of Witnesses RE, SJ, SX, Nsabimana, and Exhibit P27, which was contrasted by several Defence witnesses, concluded that the "number of refugees at the EER during late-May 1994 well exceeded 200."[4689]

2011. Ntahobali challenges the assessment of Prosecution evidence underpinning these conclusions.[4690] Specifically, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness RE was at the EER "sometime around mid-May 1994", as the witness's evidence reflects that she was at the EER from 15 to 22 April 1994.[4691] He further submits that Witness RE's testimony that more than 300 refugees at the EER materially contradicts her prior statement that there were 4,000.[4692]

2012. Ntahobali also contends that Witness SJ's evidence that the refugees were shuttled between the prefectoral office and the EER and did not stay at the EER except for three or four non-consecutive days contradicts the evidence of other witnesses and the Trial Chamber's findings that refugees remained at the EER.[4693]

[4693] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 566, 567. Ntahobali adds that Witness SJ's evidence should have been dismissed in light of her confessed falsehood and because she was unable to recognize the "EER schools" in a photograph. See ibid., paras. 568, 569. The Appeals Chamber recalls, however, that it has already dismissed Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber should have rejected all of Witness SJ's evidence in light of her having falsely denied knowing other witnesses while testifying before the Tribunal. See supra, Section III.J.3. Likewise, Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness SJ's inability to identify a photograph of the EER school made it unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on her evidence given the short and turbulent period in which she testified she was at the complex.

2013. Finally, Ntahobali argues that Witness SX's testimony that the refugees were at the EER for approximately two months, from "a short while after" 21 April 1994 to "shortly before 20 June 1994", is materially inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's conclusions that refugees did not start arriving from the prefectoral office until between 15 and 20 May 1994 and only stayed until around 31 May 1994.[4694] In his view, this material inconsistency should have led to the rejection of Witness SX's evidence concerning the events at the EER.[4695]

2014. The Prosecution did not specifically respond to these arguments.

2015. With respect to the timing of Witness RE's arrival at the EER, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber extensively recalled her evidence as to her whereabouts, which, based on her estimation, could have placed her transfer from the prefectoral office to the EER in April 1994.[4696] However, after considering the corroborative evidence of Witnesses H1B6 and Bararwandika, the Trial Chamber determined that she was at the EER sometime around mid-May 1994.[4697] As noted above, Nsabimana testified that refugees at the prefectoral office were transferred around mid-May 1994,[4698] and Witness RE testified that she was one of those refugees.[4699]

2016. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is open for a trial chamber "to make factual findings on the date of the events by examining the evidence as a whole and, [that] indeed, this may be particularly necessary when determining dates, as often witnesses may not recall an exact date but describe the timing of the event in relation to other variable."[4700] Notably, Witness RE also emphasised that she could only provide estimates as to the dates when she was in Butare.[4701] Under these circumstances, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness RE's evidence as to the timing of her arrival at the EER was unreasonable.

2017. With respect to the alleged contradiction between Witness RE's testimony and prior statement as to the number of refugees she saw at the EER, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness RE's prior statement indicated that there were 4,000 refugees at the EER whereas her testimony reflected that there were more than 300.[4702] It further noted her explanation that she had never given a precise number but only indicated that there were many refugees.[4703] Ntahobali fails to demonstrate the materiality of this contradiction or that the explanation provided by the witness was unreasonable. He also does not show how any error in Trial Chamber's assessment of it would result in a miscarriage of justice given other evidence supporting its conclusion that the number of refugees at the EER during late-May 1994 well exceeded 200.[4704]

2018. As regards Ntahobali's contention that Witness SJ's evidence about refugees not being continuously present at the EER contradicts the evidence of Witness RE and the Trial Chamber's findings that refugees remained there, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness SJ's evidence that, during the time she was at the prefectoral office, she went to the EER on three or four non-successive days.[4705] The transcripts cited by Ntahobali reveal that Witness SJ was only testifying about her own presence at the prefectoral office and the EER rather than that of the refugees in general.[4706] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, no contradiction therefore exists.[4707]

2019. Concerning Ntahobali's challenges that Witness SX's evidence is inconsistent with the conclusion that refugees from the prefectoral office arrived in mid-May 1994 and returned at the end of the month, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness SX did not specify that the refugees he identified came from the prefectoral office.[4708] Furthermore, he explained that he could only estimate dates as to the refugees' arrival at and departure from the EER.[4709] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably in relying on Witness SX's evidence to conclude that "refugees must have started arriving at the EER around the start or middle of May 1994."[4710]

The Trial Chamber also acknowledged that, according to Witness SJ's Statement, she spent one week at the EER before soldiers took the refugees back to the Butare Prefecture Office as well as her explanation that she did not remember saying this but that the refugees stayed only a short time at the EER. See Trial Judgement, para. 3884, referring to Witness SJ, T. 30 May 2002 pp. 106, 107, T. 4 June 2002 pp. 65-68, Exhibit D61 (Witness SJ's Statement).

While Witness SJ indicated at one point that "we usually would not remain for several days", she did not specify whether she was talking about all the refugees or a few. See Witness SJ, T. 4 June 2002 p. 66.
[4707] The Appeals Chamber has previously rejected Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber's conclusions about the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to the EER were contradictory to its findings concerning the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office in May 1994 as well as his challenges to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence of Witness TA concerning the attacks at the prefectoral office. See supra, Section V.I.2(c)(iii).
[4708] See Trial Judgement, para. 3934; Witness SX, T. 30 January 2004 p. 50 (closed session).
[4709] More specifically, Witness SX testified that he could not remember precisely when the refugees started arriving, estimating that it was one or two weeks after his arrival in Butare and indicating that he was living at the EER around two weeks after the President's death. See Trial Judgement, para. 3877, referring to Witness SX, T. 27 January 2003 p. 15, T. 30 January 2004 p. 50 (closed session). Witness SX similarly testified that the date he gave for the evacuation of the refugees was an approximation, placing it towards the end of the war. See Witness SX, T. 30 January 2004 pp. 52, 55.

2020. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence regarding the timing of the refugees' arrival at the EER or their number.

(ii) Presence and Involvement of Ntahobali During Attacks

2021. The Trial Chamber, without citation to supporting evidence, concluded that "Ntahobali was involved in and led Interahamwe in attacks against, and abductions of, Tutsi refugees during their stay at the EER" and that "soldiers, both alone and accompanied by Ntahobali, came to the EER and were also involved in abductions of refugees during the same period".[4711] A comprehensive reading of the Trial Judgement, as set forth in greater detail below, reflects that these conclusions are based on direct evidence from Witnesses RE, QY, and SX of Ntahobali's presence and participation in attacks at the EER with Interahamwe and/or soldiers.[4712]

2022. Ntahobali contends that the accounts of Witnesses RE, QY, and SX – the only witnesses who testified of seeing him committing crimes at the EER – were materially inconsistent and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess these differences.[4713] In particular, Ntahobali submits that these three witnesses all described Ntahobali participating in attacks on the "first day" – i.e. the day refugees from the prefectoral office arrived at the EER – and contends that the Trial Chamber failed to draw negative inferences based on the differences among their evidence.[4714]

2023. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the evidence of Witnesses TA, SJ, QBQ, QBP, and SD, who testified about attacks at the EER, yet never mentioned Ntahobali's presence even though they implicated him in attacks at the prefectoral office.[4715] Ntahobali highlights that the evidence of Witness QY reflects that she and Witness QBQ were always together at the EER and that Witness RE similarly testified about always being together with Witness SJ.[4716]

2024. The Prosecution, emphasising aspects of the testimonies of Witnesses RE, QY, and SX that Ntahobali was present and participated in the attacks at the EER, submits that it was for the Trial Chamber to determine whether the inconsistencies in their accounts were sufficient to cast doubt on their credibility and that Ntahobali's arguments fail to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in exercising its broad discretionary power.[4717]

[4712] See Trial Judgement, para. 3946. The Appeals observes that the Trial Chamber also identified Witness TB as a witness who supported the conclusion that Ntahobali was present at the EER. See idem. However, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness TB's evidence to the limited extent that Ntahobali was present at the EER's church compound with a man named Kazungu but not to conclude that Ntahobali was present during the attacks at the EER. See ibid., para. 3950. See also ibid., para. 3881.

2025. Having reviewed the findings of the Trial Chamber, the summary of the evidence referred to by it, and the references provided by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that Witness RE testified to Ntahobali's participation in an attack on the EER the night she and other refugees arrived at the EER from the prefectoral office.[4718] While the Trial Chamber, when crediting Witness RE's evidence about this attack found that it was "variously corroborated" by evidence from Witness QY,[4719] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber found that Witness QY testified to Ntahobali's presence during an attack on the evening refugees arrived from the prefectoral office[4720] nor that her evidence dictates this conclusion.[4721] Likewise, neither the Trial Chamber's summary of, or deliberations on, Witness SX's evidence,[4722] nor a review of his evidence dictates that he testified about Ntahobali's presence specifically during an attack on the night the refugees first arrived from the prefectoral office.[4723] In light of these conclusions, the Appeals Chamber rejects as meritless Ntahobali's direct comparisons between these witnesses' evidence as to, for example, the specific identity of the perpetrators who accompanied Ntahobali or the timing of his presence.[4724]

2026. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber disregarded evidence of Witnesses TA, SJ, QBQ, QBP, and SD since the Trial Chamber set forth and considered the evidence of Witnesses TA, SJ, and QBQ in relation to the events at the [4719] Trial Judgement, para. 3943. In particular, the Trial Chamber noted that "[d]etails referring to the rain, some classroom doors being locked and seeking shelter on the veranda and the attack on the first night were variously corroborated" by, inter alios, Witness QY. See idem (internal references omitted).

[4720] In particular, in summarising Witness QY's evidence, the Trial Chamber noted that soldiers and Interahamwe came to the EER to beat refugees on the evening she and other refugees arrived there from the prefectoral office as well as that Ntahobali was not with them. See Trial Judgement, paras. 3866, 3867.
[4721] See Witness QY, T. 19 March 2003 pp. 52-59, T. 24 March 2003 pp. 35, 36.
[4722] See Trial Judgement, para. 3878. Indeed, the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness SX's evidence in relation to Witness RE's evidence of an attack on the night refugees arrived from the prefectoral office, nor do Ntahobali's references to elements in Witness SX's evidence demonstrate that his testimony concerns that attack. See Trial Judgement, para. 3943 (referring only to the testimonies of Witnesses RE, QY, SJ, and QBQ when crediting the former witness's account of an attack on the first evening).
[4723] See Witness SX, T. 30 January 2004 p. 56.
[4724] In particular, the Appeals Chamber dismisses without further consideration Ntahobali's contentions: (i) relating to Witness SX in paragraphs 515, 520 of his appeal brief; (ii) concerning the discrepant nature of the testimonies of Witnesses RE, QY, and SX as to the "'status' of the attackers", as well as the fact that Witnesses QY and SX did not testify about Presidential Guard wearing red berets and white belts in paragraph 532 of his appeal brief; and (iii) relating to the alleged general inconsistencies in the testimonies of Witnesses QY and RE as to the presence of Ntahobali, Interahamwe, and soldiers as developed in paragraph 546 of his appeal brief.

EER[4725] and, in another part of the Trial Judgement, noted the testimonies of Witnesses QBP and SD that they went to the EER.[4726]

2028. Bearing in mind the conclusion that the direct comparisons between witnesses' evidence is inapposite, as well as the fact that Ntahobali's criminal liability is linked only to attacks where he was present and not attacks at the EER in general,[4729] the Appeals Chamber will now assess the merits of his challenges as they relate, respectively, to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence of Witnesses RE, QY, and SX about Ntahobali's presence and participation in various attacks at the EER.

a. Ntahobali's Presence During the Attack Described by Witness RE

2029. Witness RE's evidence, as summarised and assessed by the Trial Chamber, reflects that she was among the refugees transferred from the Butare Prefecture Office to the EER in mid-May 1994 upon Nsabimana's orders.[4730] The Trial Chamber noted that she testified that, on the evening following this transfer, soldiers, including some from the Presidential Guard, "accompanied by an Interahamwe called Shalom" came to EER and that "[t]hey took away men and boys to a nearby forest" and that the witness believed that "they had been executed because they never came back."[4731] The Trial Chamber noted Witness RE's testimony that, during the following days, Interahamwe returned to the EER to take away people and killed them and that "Shalom" was their leader.[4732]

2030. When discussing the relevant evidence, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness RE's testimony concerning the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to the effect that an attack occurred on the evening of this transfer and found Witness RE's evidence "to be credible".[4733] The Trial Chamber found that Witness RE's evidence was "variously corroborated" by Witnesses QY, SJ, and QBQ.[4734] It also noted Witness RE's evidence "that Interahamwe, including their leader named Shalom, came to the EER, picked out young men and took them to the nearby forest to be killed"[4735] and relied on her account that Interahamwe committed attacks at the EER and that Ntahobali was present at the EER.[4736] The Trial Chamber also found that Witness RE corroborated other evidence that soldiers came to the EER to abduct and kill refugees.[4737]

2031. Ntahobali contends that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, Witness RE's evidence does not indicate that he was present at the EER with Interahamwe during attacks as the witness only testified to him being present with soldiers.[4738] He also argues that the witness's evidence is replete with material contradictions with her prior statement to Tribunal investigators in relation to the attack during which he was allegedly present and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to address them.[4739]

2032. Ntahobali also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in crediting Witness RE's evidence that he was present during an attack on the evening refugees arrived from the prefectoral office and in finding that it was "variously corroborated" by Witnesses QY, SJ, and QBQ.[4740] He contends that, aside from Witness RE, none of these witnesses testified that Ntahobali was present during such an attack.[4741] Ntahobali also asserts that Witness RE only testified about soldiers being present during this attack, whereas Witness QY testified that the attack was carried out by soldiers and Interahamwe.[4742] He points to further differences between the evidence of Witnesses RE and QY as to whether the refugees arrived at the EER in the afternoon or the evening as well as whether the refugees were confined to the verandas as the school doors were locked or whether some sought refuge in classrooms.[4743]

[4743] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 520. Ntahobali adds that Witness SJ testified that the school doors were locked on the first evening. See idem.

did not corroborate Witness RE's concerning the participation of Interahamwe as they gave conflicting descriptions of what they wore.[4745] Ntahobali also argues that Witness QBQ did not testify about an "attack on the first night" and never mentioned the presence of Interahamwe.[4746]

2034. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness RE's evidence, much of which was corroborated by other evidence.[4747]

2035. With respect to Ntahobali's contention that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, Witness RE did not testify that he was present at the EER with Interahamwe, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's statement that "Interahamwe, including their leader named Shalom, came to the EER, picked out young men and took them to the nearby forest to be killed" may give the misleading impression that Witness RE testified that Ntahobali participated in attacks at the EER with Interahamwe.[4748] Witness RE, however, only testified about seeing Ntahobali at the EER during one attack in the evening of the refugees' arrival at the EER from the prefectoral office, that he was accompanied by soldiers on this occasion, and that persons were abducted and killed during this attack.[4749]

2036. While the language employed by the Trial Chamber is confusing, a review of the Trial Chamber's summary of Witness RE's evidence and remaining discussion of her evidence nonetheless shows that the Trial Chamber did not misconstrue the witness's testimony. The Trial Chamber only relied on it to the extent that it established Ntahobali's participation in an attack at the EER with soldiers and that Interahamwe participated in subsequent attacks on the EER,[4750] corroborating Witness SJ's evidence that Interahamwe committed attacks there,[4751] and reflected the witness's understanding that Ntahobali was the leader of the Interahamwe.[4752] Witness RE's testimony on the latter issue shows that she considered Ntahobali as the leader of the Interahamwe

[4745] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 525, 526. Specifically, Ntahobali contends that Witness RE testified that the Interahamwe wore banana leaves, while Witness SJ testified that they wore civilian clothes at night and military uniforms during the day. He also argues that no reasonable trier of fact would have relied on Witness SJ's identification of Interahamwe simply because she named them, particularly because her prior statement contains no reference to Interahamwe at the EER and in light of her spurious explanation that she did not have time to mention them. See ibid., paras. 525-527. Given the Trial Chamber's acknowledgement that the Interahamwe and soldiers may have been interchangeable for Witness SJ because they both wore uniforms, the Appeals Chamber considers that the distinction concerning their attire is inapposite. See Trial Judgement, para. 3945. Likewise, apart from impugning the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness SJ's testimony that named specific Interahamwe and the witness's explanation for omissions from her prior statement, Ntahobali does not explain why it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on this aspect of the witness's testimony in support of its conclusion that the Interahamwe committed attacks at the EER.

not because she saw him participating in attacks at the EER with them but because of the subsequent observations the witness made at the prefectoral office.[4753]

2037. The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Chamber expressly referred to several inconsistencies highlighted by Ntahobali between Witness RE's prior statement and her testimony concerning the attack on the evening of her arrival from the prefectoral office as well as to the witness's explanations for them.[4754] The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness RE also provided an explanation for the variance between her prior statement and testimony, which the Trial Chamber did not expressly discuss, as to whether Ntahobali and the members of the Presidential Guard entered the building or stayed outside as it was locked.[4755] Ntahobali does not establish that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted the witness's explanations for the discrepancies. Likewise, Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in not expressly discussing other minor variances in Witness RE's evidence he points out, none of which go to the material aspects of the witness's evidence upon which the Trial Chamber relied to convict him.[4756]

2038. As regards to purported differences between the evidence of Witness RE, on one hand, and that of Witnesses QY, SJ, and QBQ, on the other hand, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber concluded as follows:

> The Chamber notes that Witness RE provided numerous details about the day the refugees arrived, including the fact that when the refugees arrived, the doors of the classroom were locked and the refugees were forced to seek shelter from a torrential rain on the veranda. Details referring to the rain, some classroom doors being locked and seeking shelter on the veranda and the attack on the first night were variously corroborated by Witnesses QY, SJ and QBQ. Based on these details and corroboration, the Chamber finds Witness RE to be credible.[4757]

Ntahobali emphasises that Witnesses QY, SJ, and QBQ did not identify him as being present during the attack that occurred on the evening of the day refugees arrived at the EER from the prefectoral office as described by Witness RE. However, the analysis above reflects that the Trial Chamber was well aware of this, as it did not find that they corroborated Witness RE on this aspect of her [4754] In particular, the Trial Chamber noted that: (i) Witness RE explained that even though her statement only referred to people being taken away the day after the rain, the abductions occurred every day, including on the day of the rain; and (ii) there was a discrepancy between Witness RE's prior statement and her testimony about the number of refugees at the EER and her explanation that, in her prior statement, she merely indicated that the refugees were many in number without giving exact figures; and (iii) Witness RE's explanation that she mentioned the presence of both Presidential Guards and ordinary soldiers but that the latter was left out of her prior statement. See Trial Judgement, paras. 3857, 3861, 3935, 3953.

[4755] Witness RE explained that the person who wrote down her statement made a mistake in writing that Ntahobali and the Presidential Guards entered the building. See Witness RE, T. 26 February 2003 p. 14. See also T. 24 February 2003 pp. 11, 12; Witness RE's Statement, p. 3.

evidence.[4758] Ntahobali does not show that this difference renders their evidence incompatible. The Appeals Chamber considers that, given the consistent evidence from Witnesses RE and QY that refugees were violently transferred to the EER from the prefectoral office[4759] as well as evidence from Witnesses RE and QY that attacks on the refugees started less than 24 hours after their arrival at the EER,[4760] it would be expected for witnesses to have different view points as well as varying recollections of events. While it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to note and expressly assess these differences as to Ntahobali's presence during an attack on the evening refugees arrived at the EER from the prefectoral office, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the absence of any discussion constitutes an error.

2039. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds that the differences between the evidence of Witnesses RE and QY identified by Ntahobali as to whether refugees arrived from the prefectoral office to the EER in the afternoon or the evening as well as whether the refugees were confined to the verandas as the school doors were locked or whether some sought refuge in classrooms are not material and did not require express consideration. Likewise, differences among the evidence of Witnesses RE, QY, and SJ as to whether the attacks involved only soldiers or soldiers and Interahamwe would not prevent a reasonable trier of fact from relying on Witness RE's evidence of Ntahobali being present during an attack that evening with soldiers.

2040. Similarly Witness SJ's evidence that an attack occurred during the day and night, as opposed to just the evening as reflected in Witness RE's evidence, is not material in this context. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that simply because Witness QBQ did not testify concerning an attack or the presence of Interahamwe or soldiers the evening that refugees arrived at the EER from the prefectoral office renders the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness RE's evidence that one occurred and that Ntahobali was present unreasonable.

2041. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witness RE about his presence and participation in an attack on the EER.

b. Ntahobali's Presence During the Attack Described by Witness QY

2042. Witness QY's evidence, as summarised and assessed by the Trial Chamber, reflects that she was among the refugees who were transferred from the Butare Prefecture Office to the EER on [4758] Indeed, the Trial Chamber's summaries of the evidence of Witnesses QY, SJ, and QBQ also reflect that they did not testify that Ntahobali was present during an attack at the EER on the night refugees arrived from the prefectoral office. See Trial Judgement, paras. 3866-3876, 3884-3891.

Nsabimana's orders.[4761] The Trial Chamber noted that she testified seeing "Shalom" on two occasions at the EER, the first being in the evening following her arrival there and that, later that night, soldiers and Interahamwe returned to the EER without "Shalom" and started beating refugees.[4762]

2044. The Trial Chamber relied on Witness QY's evidence to find that Ntahobali was present at the EER[4766] as well as on her testimony that "soldiers who were in military uniform and civilian clothes […] took the young people, but that it was Shalom who directed the attack" in concluding that the "Interahamwe were led by Ntahobali."[4767] It further noted that Witness QY's evidence corroborated other accounts that soldiers came to the EER and variously abducted and killed the refugees.[4768]

2045. In the course of its deliberations, the Trial Chamber also noted that Witness QY's evidence of women being raped was corroborated by other Prosecution evidence and found that inconsistencies in the witness's evidence and prior statements about her rape during the attack at the EER and another incident in Kibeho did not undermine the reliability of her testimony with respect to her rape at the EER.[4769] However, the Trial Chamber concluded that it would not make any findings as to Ntahobali's alleged role in the rape of Witness QY at or near the EER due to lack of notice of the allegation.[4770]

Prefecture Office, and Nyange as well as regarding her rape at Kibeho.[4771] In addition, Ntahobali submits that the antagonistic attitude exhibited by the witness during her entire testimony, which was not observed by Judge Bossa and which the Trial Chamber did not take into consideration, should have led to the same conclusion.[4772] Likewise, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber failed to address Witness QY's "spurious explanations" when confronted with inconsistencies.[4773]

2047. Concerning Witness QY's testimony about the EER generally, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that the witness was unable to provide an estimate for the duration of her stay at the EER, despite indicating in her prior statement that she was there for a month.[4774] He argues that the Trial Chamber erred in not drawing a negative inference from an implausible explanation provided by the witness for this discrepancy.[4775]

2048. As regards Witness QY's specific evidence of Ntahobali's presence and involvement in an attack at the EER, Ntahobali contends that she "seriously contradicted herself" on the timing of her second sighting of Ntahobali at the EER, highlighting that she testified that she could not recall how many days passed between her first sighting of him and the second occasion, while also testifying that both sightings occurred on the day that refugees had arrived from the prefectoral office.[4776] Ntahobali also contends that Witness QY gave contradictory evidence as to whether soldiers in military and civilian clothes came to the EER and he directed the attack or whether Interahamwe participated in the attack and he was not with them.[4777] He adds that Witness QY never mentioned the Interahamwe being present at the EER in her previous statements to Tribunal investigators.[4778] Ntahobali also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to: (i) assess inconsistencies in Witness QY's account of her rape at the EER concerning, inter alia, from where she was abducted, its exact location, the perpetrator, and the number of times it occurred;[4779] (ii) discredit the witness due to her failure to confront her rapist during his proceeding in Rwanda;[4780] and (iii) draw adverse

He also points to Witness QY's evidence that the refugees dispersed when they saw the attackers coming and questions how she was then capable of seeing him, arguing that her evidence that she was then apprehended on the veranda is doubtful. See idem.

inferences from its analysis of inconsistencies concerning this rape and Witness QY's evidence about being raped on a separate occasion in Kibeho.[4781]

2050. With respect to Ntahobali's general challenges to Witness QY's credibility, the Appeals Chamber recalls its previous determination that it was not inconsistent or unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to reject parts of Witness QY's testimony relating to the prefectoral office while accepting other aspects of her testimony relating to Ntahobali's participation in attacks at the EER.[4783] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber was precluded from relying on Witness QY's testimony about the EER because it rejected other elements of her evidence related to Ntahobali's presence at the Butare University Hospital, Kanyabashi's presence in Nyange, and the witness's alleged rape at Kibeho.[4784]

2052. Ntahobali's arguments with respect to the absence of references in the Trial Judgement to certain behaviours of witnesses, including that of Witness QY, have also already been dismissed.[4788] Finally, having reviewed the references provided by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber also finds that his contention that Witness QY provided "spurious explanations" when confronted with inconsistencies fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in its assessment of her evidence.[4789]

2054. Turning to Ntahobali's challenges as they relate to his presence and involvement in an attack at the EER, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's interpretation of the Trial Judgement and Witness QY's evidence as suggesting that the second occasion that she saw him – i.e. the time when he was present during an attack – was the evening refugees arrived at the EER from the prefectoral office. This interpretation is neither plain from a reading of the relevant aspects of the Trial Judgement, nor from Witness QY's testimony.[4791] Ntahobali does not demonstrate that Witness QY's evidence is materially inconsistent as to the timing of his presence during an attack at the EER or the identity of the assailants who accompanied him, as his arguments are based on this erroneous interpretation.

highlighted by Ntahobali does not indicate that the Trial Chamber did not properly assess the credibility and reliability of the witnesses, including Witness QY. See idem.

In this respect, Ntahobali suggests that Witness QY's evidence that she saw Ntahobali on the same day that she was raped reflects that she testified that she was raped on the day that refugees arrived at the EER from the prefectoral office. This reading of the witness's evidence is not persuasive. See Witness QY, T. 19 March 2003 pp. 53, 54, T. 24 March 2003 pp. 36, 37. Indeed, in describing the first occasion upon which she saw Ntahobali and the attack that followed that evening – both occurring the same day as the refugees' arrival from the prefectoral office – the witness repeatedly testified that Ntahobali did nothing on the occasion she first saw him and that he was not present for the attack that followed. See Witness QY, T. 19 March 2003 pp. 57-59, T. 24 March 2003 p. 35. Moreover, the witness specified that, when she first saw Ntahobali, he was alone, whereas she gave evidence to the effect that he was accompanied by soldiers on the occasion she was raped. Compare Witness QY, T. 19 March 2003, p. 60 with ibid., pp. 53, 54, T. 24 March 2003 p. 37.

[4792] See, in particular, Witness QY, T. 24 March 2003 pp. 36 ("Q. The second time that you saw the person called Shalom, how many days was that after you arrived at the EER? A. I do not know the number of days I had spent there. Q. Madam Witness, the day that you saw the person called Shalom at the EER, was it the same day – was it during the same day that you were raped? A. Yes."), 37 ("Q. Madam, at the moment when the soldier took you away to rape you, am I right to understand that the person named Shalom had left with the young people and other soldiers to take them to the woods, as you said? A. That is correct."). See also Witness QY, T. 19 March 2003 pp. 53, 54 (describing an attack conducted by Ntahobali and soldiers in military uniform and civilian clothes and specifying that she was raped on this occasion, without testifying as to when this occurred in relation to her arrival at the EER), 57 (not specifying when the second occasion upon which she saw Ntahobali was in relation to the arrival of refugees at the EER from the prefectoral office).

unreasonable in light of her testimony, as summarised by the Trial Chamber: (i) about her forcible transfer to the EER with other refugees from the prefectoral office; (ii) that refugees were attacked at the EER on the evening of their arrival; and (iii) that she was raped during the attack which occurred on the second occasion that she saw Ntahobali.[4793] Likewise, in light of the witness's description of the assailants who accompanied Ntahobali, as "soldiers who were in military uniforms and others in civilian clothes",[4794] Ntahobali does not show that Witness QY provided materially inconsistent evidence as to whether soldiers or Interahamwe accompanied him, or that any omission about Interahamwe at the EER in the witness's prior statements is inconsistent with her evidence concerning the attackers.[4795] Witness QY's evidence, as summarised in the Trial Judgement, implicated Interahamwe in the attack that occurred the evening refugees arrived at the EER when Ntahobali was not present.[4796]

c. Ntahobali's Presence During the Attacks Described by Witness SX

2058. The Trial Chamber identified Witness SX as one of several witnesses to testify that Ntahobali was present at the EER[4800] and recalled his testimony that "Ntahobali came to the EER a number of times with Interahamwe at night in a Hilux pickup truck belonging to someone else and on the first night took away five adults."[4801] The Trial Chamber concluded that Witness SX's testimony was "reliable and corroborative of Ntahobali's involvement in the EER attacks."[4802]

2060. Ntahobali further contends that the witness's testimony should have been treated with caution as he is the only witness testifying to Ntahobali's participation in crimes after the "first night".[4804] He also emphasises that only Witness SX testified that refugees were taken away in a Hilux vehicle.[4805] In his view, this testimony is unbelievable as no "motorable road" led from the EER to the woods and is inconsistent with other evidence and the Trial Chamber's findings that refugees were killed in the woods adjoining the EER.[4806]

2061. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in assessing Witness SX's evidence or credibility.[4807]

2062. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness SX testified that Ntahobali could take five or seven people and take them away.[4808] However, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on the witness's testimony to conclude that "on the first night [Ntahobali] took away five adults",[4809] since the witness specified that he was indeed "giving […] an account of what happened the first night" he saw Ntahobali and that Ntahobali "continued doing this later on."[4810]

2063. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber recalls that "the testimony of a single witness, even as to a material fact, may be accepted without the need for corroboration",[4811] and finds no merit in Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber was required to treat Witness SX's evidence with caution because he was the only witness to testify to Ntahobali's participation in multiple attacks.[4812] Ntahobali also provides no supporting reference demonstrating that there was no passable road between the EER and the adjacent woods and does not show that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the refugees abducted by him in a Hilux vehicle were taken to the woods to be killed.

2064. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness SX's evidence of Ntahobali's presence and involvement in attacks at the EER.

(iii) Killings

2065. Without citation to the record or prior findings, the Trial Chamber concluded that "Ntahobali, Interahamwe and soldiers killed the abducted Tutsi refugees in the woods near the EER school complex."[4813] Earlier in its deliberations, however, the Trial Chamber specified that Witness RE's testimony that refugees were taken to a nearby forest to be killed was corroborated by Witnesses TG, QY, and TA as well as Witness SJ's testimony that "she hid from the Interahamwe in the woods where she came across the bloated and decapitated bodies of persons who had been killed."[4814] Furthermore, in a section entitled "Killings at the EER" the Trial Chamber acknowledged that no Prosecution witness observed the killing of abducted refugees but recalled the evidence of Witnesses RE and SJ as follows:

> Witness RE believed the men and boys that the Interahamwe took to a nearby forest had been executed because they never came back. While she did not personally see any killings of abducted refugees, she learned they had been killed with bludgeons. Witness RE also testified that some people who managed to escape and returned to the EER informed the others that those taken away had been killed with clubs and machetes and that this had been done while they were naked.
> Witness SJ also testified that persons taken from the EER compound were killed in the nearby forest. While Witness SJ also did not personally see the refugees being killed, she testified that while seeking respite from the conditions at the EER in the woods, they saw skulls in addition to a hole that had been dug; in these narrow holes they sometimes saw bodies with bloated stomachs or that were decapitated.[4815]

The Trial Chamber found the evidence of Witnesses RE and SJ "to be mutually consistent" and determined "that the only reasonable conclusion available from the evidence is that the refugees abducted from the EER were killed in the nearby woods."[4816]

[4812] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3867, 3868, 3947.
[4813] Trial Judgement, para. 3965.
[4815] Trial Judgement, paras. 3956, 3957 (internal references omitted).
[4816] See Trial Judgement, para. 3958. The Trial Chamber also accepted "the hearsay evidence of Witness RE that the abducted refugees were killed with clubs and machetes while they were naked, and the direct evidence of Witness SJ that some bodies were decapitated." See idem.

2068. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not have concluded that Witness RE's evidence that the refugees were taken to the nearby forest to be killed was corroborated by that of Witness TG since the latter witness testified that he observed people taken from a certain roadblock to the primary school buildings and killed in the forest near there.[4820] Likewise, the discrepancy as to gunshots and screams of the victims merely indicates that different people in different vantage points saw and heard different things and is not material when viewed in the context of the fundamental consistency of the witnesses' accounts that refugees were killed near the EER.

2069. The Appeals Chamber further observes that a review of the relevant evidence reflects that Witness RE did not testify that the refugees could not go into the woods, but instead that the refugees did not go into the woods near the EER since going there would amount to putting their lives at risk as "[e]veryone who had to be killed was taken to that small woods."[4821] While Witness RE's testimony appears to suggest that refugees did not go into the woods adjacent to the EER as it was dangerous, in contrast with Witness SJ's claim that she hid there from Interahamwe, it is nevertheless not incompatible with Witness SJ's account of coming across corpses there.[4822] It similarly accords with the Trial Chamber's conclusion that testimonial evidence, including that of

Witness SJ, indicates that the refugees abducted from the EER were taken to these woods to be killed.[4823]

2070. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence relating to the killings of the refugees taken from the EER.

(iv) Conclusion

2071. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's arguments related to the timing of the events at the EER and the number of refugees, the presence and involvement of Ntahobali in attacks at the EER, and the killings during such attacks.

(d) Expert Evidence

2073. Ntahobali submits that portions of the testimony of Witness Des Forges fell outside the scope of her expertise as recognised by the Trial Chamber, constituting facts rather than opinion.[4826] He further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in using her testimony for proscribed purposes in order to sustain purely factual findings.[4827] In Ntahobali's view, the portions of Witness Des Forges's testimony which constituted facts rather than opinions or which went beyond the scope of her expertise should be excluded from the assessment of the evidence in relation to the EER.[4828]

2075. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the role of expert witnesses is to assist the trial chamber in its assessment of the evidence before it, and not to testify on disputed facts as would ordinary witnesses.[4830] In the present case, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber, by relying on Witness Des Forges's opinion to corroborate other evidence concerning the reason for the transfer of the refugees to the EER and occurrence of rapes therein, ignored the limitations imposed on expert evidence. In particular, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's undeveloped reference to paragraphs of the Trial Judgement does not substantiate his claim that certain aspects of Witness Des Forges's testimony constituted facts rather than opinion and exceeded the scope of her expertise.[4831] Likewise, apart from making references to paragraphs of the Trial Judgement and to jurisprudence on the scope of expert testimony, Ntahobali does not advance any argument to substantiate his assertion that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness Des Forges's evidence in support of factual findings.[4832] In any event, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali's convictions for the crimes committed at the EER do not rely on the Trial Chamber's findings he impugns.[4833]

2076. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that Witness Des Forges testified beyond the scope of her expertise or that the Trial Chamber made improper use of her testimony concerning the events at the EER.

(e) Conclusion

2077. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its overall assessment of the evidence relating to the events at the EER.

3. Aiding and Abetting Responsibility

2078. As noted above, in finding Ntahobali responsible for aiding and abetting the killing of Tutsi refugees at or near the EER, the Trial Chamber made the following findings:

> There was no direct evidence that Ntahobali was personally responsible for killing any of the abducted refugees. The Chamber is nevertheless satisfied that his presence alongside Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER amounted to tacit approval and encouragement of the acts of Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER.

> The Chamber also recalls Ntahobali's prior conduct in working alongside Interahamwe and soldiers in abducting hundreds of refugees from the [Butare Prefecture Office] who were physically assaulted and raped and thereafter killed in various locations throughout Ngoma commune, and that he personally committed genocide at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock […]. As such, Ntahobali's presence at the EER alongside Interahamwe and soldiers, when considered together with his prior conduct, leads the Chamber to conclude that Ntahobali's conduct at the EER amounted to his sanctioning of the acts of the Interahamwe and soldiers, and thereby substantially contributed to the commission of these crimes. […][4834]

2079. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his presence alongside Interahamwe and soldiers at the EER, considered together with his prior conduct, substantially contributed to the commission of the crimes perpetrated at or near the EER. In particular, Ntahobali contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) convicting him for crimes committed in his absence; (ii) relying on alleged prior criminal conduct; and (iii) failing to analyse his authority over the Interahamwe and soldiers who committed the crimes at or near the EER. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Absence from the Crime Scene

2080. Ntahobali submits that, despite correctly acknowledging that a conviction for aiding and abetting by tacit approval requires the presence of the accused at or near the crime scene, the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him of all the crimes committed at or near the EER, including those committed in his absence.[4835] He argues that it was incumbent on the Trial Chamber to enumerate the specific instances when he was present, in light of contradictory evidence that did not establish his presence at the EER for the duration of all the attacks.[4836] Ntahobali adds that, since crimes were committed in his absence, it was also unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to conclude that his presence at the EER substantially contributed to the crimes committed in his presence.[4837]

2081. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's continuous presence at the EER was not required to convict him for aiding and abetting the commission of the crimes.[4838]

[4836] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 300; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 858, referring to Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, para. 82. In particular, Ntahobali points to discrepancies in the accounts of Witnesses RE, QY, and SJ who testified about his presence at the EER as well as about soldiers and the Interahamwe, arguing that they are materially inconsistent. See Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 855-857. He also highlights the Trial Chamber's findings that he was not involved in all the attacks at the EER and that crimes were committed by soldiers in his absence. See Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 300; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 854.

convicted of the crimes committed in his absence.[4839] Ntahobali's claim that he was convicted for all the crimes committed at or near the EER, including those committed in his absence, is ill-founded.

2083. The Appeals Chamber also sees no merit in Ntahobali's argument that commission of crimes in his absence indicated that he did not substantially contribute to the crimes committed when he was present. The Appeals Chamber recalls its well-established jurisprudence "that proof of a causal relationship, in the sense of a conditio sine qua non, between the conduct of the aider and abettor and the commission of the crime, or proof that such conduct served as a condition to the commission of the crime, is not required" as long as "the support of the aider and abettor has a substantial effect upon the perpetration of the crime."[4840] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that crimes were also committed in Ntahobali's absence does not therefore impact the finding that he substantially contributed to the commission of crimes at or near the EER when he was present there.[4841]

2084. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ntahobali's arguments related to his absence from the crime scene.

(b) Reliance on Prior Conduct

2085. Ntahobali submits that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on his prior conduct relating to events at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the Butare Prefecture Office to conclude that he substantially contributed to the commission of the crimes at or near the EER.[4842] In particular, he contends that, absent any evidence that the soldiers or the Interahamwe who committed the crimes at the EER were aware that he personally committed genocide at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, his conduct at the roadblock could not be used to infer his substantial contribution to the crimes committed at the EER.[4843] He further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account the entirety of the attacks on the prefectoral office as only the attacks that preceded the events at the EER could have been relied upon as prior conduct.[4844] Ntahobali also challenges the Trial Chamber's reliance on its finding that he was working alongside "soldiers in abducting hundreds of refugees" from the prefectoral office as it did not conclude that soldiers participated in attacks at the prefectoral office before the refugees were transferred to the EER.[4845]

2086. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly used Ntahobali's prior conduct at the prefectoral office to infer the requisite intent for aiding and abetting genocide and that the remainder of Ntahobali's arguments should be dismissed as obscure and undeveloped.[4846]

2087. The Trial Chamber concluded as follows with respect to Ntahobali's prior conduct:

> The Chamber also recalls Ntahobali's prior conduct in working alongside Interahamwe and soldiers in abducting hundreds of refugees from the [Butare Prefecture Office] who were physically assaulted and raped and thereafter killed in various locations throughout Ngoma commune, and that he personally committed genocide at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock (3.6.19.4.11; 4.2.2.3.11; 4.2.2.3.13). As such, Ntahobali's presence at the EER alongside Interahamwe and soldiers, when considered together with his prior conduct, leads the Chamber to conclude that Ntahobali's conduct at the EER amounted to his sanctioning of the acts of the Interahamwe and soldiers, and thereby substantially contributed to the commission of these crimes.[4847]

[4849] The Appeals Chamber notes that elsewhere in this Judgement it rejected Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber's conclusions about the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to the EER were contradictory with its findings concerning the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office in May 1994 as well as his challenges to the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence of Witness TA concerning the attacks at the prefectoral office. See supra, Section V.I.2(c)(iii).

(c) Authority over Interahamwe and Soldiers

2094. In addition, the Trial Chamber set forth witness testimony reflecting that the soldiers were accompanied by Ntahobali on one occasion when they abducted refugees from the EER[4864] and that Ntahobali directed an attack by the soldiers against the refugees on another occasion.[4865] While the Trial Chamber concluded that it was not established beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali led the soldiers to the EER,[4866] the Appeals Chamber does not consider that this conclusion negates the evidence that Ntahobali exerted a level of influence over the soldiers.[4867]

[4867] The Trial Chamber did not make a finding with respect to Ntahobali's responsibility as a superior for the crimes committed by the soldiers at or near the EER. See Trial Judgement, para. 5917. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that the Trial Chamber concluded that there was insufficient evidence to find Ntahobali responsible as a superior for the crimes committed by the soldiers at two other locations, namely at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the Butare Prefecture Office. See ibid., paras. 5846, 5887.

2095. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to analyse his authority over the Interahamwe and soldiers who committed the crimes at or near the EER.

(d) Conclusion

2096. For the above reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Ntahobali's prior conduct at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the Butare Prefecture Office to establish his criminal responsibility for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated by Interahamwe and soldiers at or near the EER. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Ntahobali for aiding and abetting these killings in light of the Trial Chamber's factual findings and the relevant evidence it relied upon concerning his authority over the Interahamwe and soldiers during the attacks on the EER. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ntahobali has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for aiding and abetting by tacit approval and encouragement the killings of Tutsi refugees perpetrated by Interahamwe and soldiers at or near the EER during attacks conducted in his presence.

4. Superior Responsibility

2097. Recalling its finding that Ntahobali had de facto authority over Interahamwe, the Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali was also responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the same criminal acts committed at or near the EER.[4868] However, because the Trial Chamber had found Ntahobali criminally responsible for the killings of Tutsi refugees by Interahamwe pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, it did not enter related convictions against him pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, but stated that it would consider his superior responsibility for these acts in sentencing.[4869]

2098. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in holding him responsible for all the attacks committed by the Interahamwe at the EER, despite the evidence that the attacks took place in his absence.[4870] In this respect, he contends that there was no evidence that he had effective control over all the Interahamwe present in Butare Prefecture or over those involved in the attacks at the EER.[4871] He further argues that the Trial Chamber's conclusion about his de facto authority, which did not reference underlying findings, was vague and imprecise, and violated his right to a reasoned opinion.[4872] In his view, the Trial Chamber also erred in limiting its analysis to his de facto authority over the Interahamwe without considering and specifically determining whether he possessed effective control over the Interahamwe involved in the attacks at the EER.[4873]

[4871] Ntahobali Notice of Appeal, para. 312; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 915. Ntahobali also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider evidence reflecting that the Interahamwe present at the EER were not the official MRND militia, but instead an ill-defined group, opposing the RPF and participating in killings, which comprised

2099. Ntahobali also challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that "the Interahamwe were led" by him, pointing to various discrepancies in the testimonies of Witnesses RE, SX, and QY that were not considered by the Trial Chamber.[4874] In particular, he contends that the testimony of Witness QY, according to whom he directed an attack at the EER, contained discrepancies regarding whether the attack was perpetrated by soldiers alone or together with the Interahamwe as well as with respect to his presence during the attack, which were not considered by the Trial Chamber.[4875] He adds that mere assertion that he directed an attack was insufficient to establish effective control over the Interahamwe.[4876]

2100. Moreover, Ntahobali asserts that Witness SX's testimony that he was the leader of the Interahamwe, ordered them around, and was feared by them, does not establish effective control.[4877] He highlights that the Trial Chamber did not make a finding that he issued any orders to the Interahamwe at the EER.[4878] Ntahobali further posits that Witness SX's perception that he inspired fear, which was at best indicative of a degree of influence, was subjective and speculative, and was merely based on the witness's belief that he was the leader of the Interahamwe.[4879] According to Ntahobali, the latter belief was in itself subjective and speculative, given that Witness SX merely mentioned orders not proven to have been issued by him and that the Interahamwe consulted him when they had something to discuss and calling him by his first name.[4880]

[4873] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 914, 915. Ntahobali adds that the Trial Chamber could not have relied on its finding elsewhere in the Trial Judgement to conclude that he had de facto control over the Interahamwe because the Trial Chamber's findings do not reflect that the same group of Interahamwe was involved in the events at all the crime scenes. See ibid., para. 915.

Ntahobali adds that Witness QY also testified that, even though the soldiers were not led by anyone, Ntahobali directed the attack. See idem, referring to Witness QY, T. 19 March 2003 pp. 52, 53, 55-57. See also Ntahobali Reply Brief, para. 377.

[4876] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 918. Ntahobali again posits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider inconsistencies in this witness's testimony, including as to the presence of the Interahamwe during the impugned attack. See ibid., paras. 917, 918.

2101. Ntahobali further contests the Trial Chamber's reliance on the testimony of Witness RE in support of the conclusion that he led the Interahamwe since the attacks by the Interahamwe recounted by the witness took place in Ntahobali's absence.[4881] He points out that Witness RE only testified about one occasion when he saw Ntahobali at the EER when he was the only Interahamwe accompanying the soldiers, but that the witness learnt that Ntahobali was the leader of the Interahamwe on a later occasion.[4882] Ntahobali reiterates that a mere assertion that he was the leader of the Interahamwe was insufficient to establish effective control over them.[4883]

2102. Finally, Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to determine whether he had knowledge of the crimes committed during the attacks in his absence.[4884] He also avers that the Trial Chamber failed to discuss any evidence establishing his failure to prevent or punish the crimes committed by the Interahamwe at or near the EER.[4885]

2103. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Ntahobali had de facto authority and superior responsibility over the Interahamwe for the killings committed at or near the EER.[4886] It submits that Ntahobali fails to consider all the relevant parts of the Trial Judgement and that, contrary to his claims, the evidence of Witnesses QY, SX, and RE established that he had effective control over the Interahamwe and that he failed to prevent their criminal acts.[4887] The Prosecution points to their evidence that Ntahobali: (i) had influence over and was feared by the Interahamwe; (ii) was the leader of those who abducted the refugees from the EER; (iii) issued orders to arrest and abduct the refugees that were followed; and (iv) directed the attacks by the Interahamwe.[4888] It contends that a holistic reading of the Trial Judgement reflects consideration of the totality of the evidence by the Trial Chamber to determine Ntahobali's responsibility as a superior, such as its findings that Ntahobali had effective control over the Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office and Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[4889]

2104. In addition, the Prosecution argues that: (i) the attack by the soldiers in Ntahobali's absence recounted by Witness QY was not the same attack which was directed by Ntahobali, according to this witness;[4890] and (ii) it was not unreasonable for Witness RE to infer that Ntahobali was the leader of the Interahamwe on the basis of her subsequent observations of Ntahobali training the Interahamwe at other locations, where they called him their chief.[4891] The Prosecution further submits that Ntahobali had the requisite knowledge for superior responsibility by virtue of his participation in the attacks and abductions of refugees with his subordinates, as witnessed by Witnesses QY, SX, and RE.[4892]

2105. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in determining Ntahobali's superior responsibility for the crimes committed at or near the EER, the Trial Chamber specifically referred to the "same underlying acts of genocide committed at or near the EER".[4893] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, this indicates that Ntahobali was only held responsible as a superior on the basis of the killings perpetrated by the Interahamwe that he tacitly approved and encouraged by his presence alongside them.[4894] Such a consideration is supported by the fact that the Trial Chamber stated that it will not convict Ntahobali pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute on the basis of acts committed by Interahamwe at the EER as it concluded that he had already been found criminally responsible pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for these acts.[4895] The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that Ntahobali's contention that he was held responsible for all crimes committed by the Interahamwe at the EER is without merit. Accordingly, Ntahobali's arguments regarding the absence of evidence that he exercised effective control over all the Interahamwe involved in the attacks at the EER or those in the Butare Prefecture as well as the precise composition of the Interahamwe are moot.

2106. As to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber violated his right to a reasoned opinion in making a vague finding regarding his de facto authority over the Interahamwe, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Judgement read as a whole provides sufficient basis for its finding that Ntahobali had de facto authority over the Interahamwe when he was present alongside them during the attacks at the EER.[4896] Ntahobali's submissions on this issue fail to appreciate the broader context of the Trial Chamber's findings concerning his role at the EER, including extensive evidence considered by it indicating that he had a leadership role among the Interahamwe.[4897] Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion is therefore dismissed.

2108. Turning to Ntahobali's challenges to the Trial Chamber's conclusion that "the Interahamwe were led by Ntahobali" and its reliance on the relevant evidence of Witnesses QY, SX, and RE, the Appeals Chamber observes that in reaching this conclusion the Trial Chamber considered Witness QY's evidence that the soldiers in military uniform and civilian clothes took the young people, "but it was Shalom who directed the attack."[4900] The Appeals Chamber considers that while, in this particular instance, it was soldiers rather than the Interahamwe who took away the refugees, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QY's testimony to highlight Ntahobali's authoritative conduct in directing the attack. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the remainder of Ntahobali's challenges as they relate to the Trial Chamber's assessment of various discrepancies in Witness QY's account of the events at the EER, including concerning Ntahobali's presence during the attacks recounted by Witness QY, have already been addressed and rejected in another section of this Judgement.[4901] Although Ntahobali is correct in suggesting that a mere assertion that he directed an attack was insufficient to establish effective control over the Interahamwe, he overlooks that, as discussed above, this was not the only element taken into account by the Trial Chamber when reaching its conclusion about effective control.[4902]

2109. Ntahobali further fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's consideration of his leadership role and influence over the Interahamwe, as reflected in the testimony of Witness SX, in concluding that the Interahamwe were led by Ntahobali. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "[i]ndicators of effective control are more a matter of evidence than of substantive law, and those indicators are limited to showing that the accused had the power to prevent [or] punish."[4903] A superior's ability to issue binding orders that are complied with by his subordinates is but one indicator of effective control relied upon in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal.[4904] The Appeals Chamber therefore is not persuaded that a finding that Ntahobali issued binding orders was necessary for the Trial Chamber to conclude that Ntahobali exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who committed attacks at the EER.

2110. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber noted Witness SX's evidence that the Interahamwe feared and obeyed "Shalom".[4905] As acknowledged by Ntahobali, Witness SX's testimony reflects that his belief that Ntahobali was the leader of the Interahamwe was grounded in his observations that Ntahobali ordered them around, including ordering to arrest people, that he was consulted on issues that required consultation, and that the Interahamwe were fearful of Ntahobali because he was their boss.[4906] The Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on this evidence, in conjunction with other related evidence, to establish that Ntahobali exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who perpetrated attacks in his presence.[4907]

2111. The Appeals Chamber is likewise not convinced by Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness RE's testimony that he was the leader of the Interahamwe to find that the Interahamwe were led by Ntahobali. The Trial Chamber did not address all the details of Witness RE's testimony regarding how she came to learn about Ntahobali's leadership role.[4908] However, the Trial Chamber's summary of Witness RE's evidence correctly reflects the witness's testimony that when Ntahobali came to the EER on the day of the refugees' arrival he was accompanied by soldiers, that the Interahamwe came on other occasions during the days to take away the refugees, and that their leader was Ntahobali.[4909] While other parts of Witness RE's testimony suggest that the witness only later deduced that Ntahobali was the leader of the Interahamwe, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness RE's testimony, in conjunction with other evidence, to conclude that Ntahobali exercised effective control over the Interahamwe who participated in attacks in his presence.[4910]

2113. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Ntahobali was also responsible as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings committed by the Interahamwe at or near the EER.

5. Conclusion

2114. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsi refugees abducted from the EER between mid-May and the beginning of June 1994 and in concluding that he bore superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the above killings committed by the Interahamwe. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 3.5 and 4.1 as well as the relevant parts of Grounds 4.2 and 4.3 of Ntahobali's appeal.

K. Nexus Between Crimes and Armed Conflict (Ground 4.8)

2115. The Trial Chamber found a nexus between the violations of Article 4 of the Statute and the armed conflict and convicted Ntahobali of serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[4911]

2116. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that a nexus existed between the crimes and the non-international armed conflict and requests the Appeals Chamber to overturn the convictions entered against him pursuant to Article 4 of the Statute.[4912]

2117. The Prosecution did not respond to this contention.[4913]

2118. Considering that Ntahobali did not substantiate his submission, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 4.8 of his appeal without further consideration.

[4913] The Prosecution explained that it considers that, by not presenting arguments in his appeal brief, Ntahobali had abandoned Ground 4.8. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1219.

L. Crime of Extermination (Ground 4.9)

2121. The Prosecution responds that this ground should be dismissed as it is undeveloped and because merely citing case law is insufficient to establish that the Trial Chamber erred.[4919]

2122. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's ground of appeal, although not developed in his appeal brief beyond the reliance on the Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, was sufficiently substantiated in his notice of appeal to allow for appellate review.[4920] The Appeals Chamber will therefore examine Ntahobali's contention. However, because it has reversed Ntahobali's conviction for extermination as a crime against humanity based on the killing of the Rwamukwaya family,[4921] the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali's allegation of error related to this killing has become moot. While it has also reversed Ntahobali's convictions for extermination as a crime against humanity for committing killings of Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock beyond the killing of the Tutsi girl,[4922] the Appeals Chamber considers that Ground 4.9 of Ntahobali's appeal is not moot to the extent that it relates to the killing of the Tutsi girl and Ruvurajabo at the roadblock.

2124. There can be no dispute that, "taken by themselves", the individual killings of the Tutsi girl and Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994 do not meet the "large scale" requirement. The Appeals Chamber, however, is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that these two killings, taken collectively with the other killings for which Ntahobali was convicted, "occurred on a large scale".

2125. In the Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber considered that "the Trial Chamber was unreasonable to conclude that the 'large scale' requirement for extermination was satisfied based on a collective consideration of events committed in different prefectures, in different circumstances, by different perpetrators, and over a period of two months."[4928] The Appeals Chamber observes that, by contrast, the two killings perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock were perpetrated in the same commune, in similar circumstances, by the same category of perpetrators, and approximately at the same time as the numerous killings perpetrated at the locations near the IRST, at or near the EER, and the killings of Tutsis abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office.[4929] For all these events, the Trial Chamber concluded that the victims were all or predominantly of Tutsi ethnicity and were not targeted in their individual capacity but as part of a collective aim to exterminate the Tutsis.[4930]

2126. In the circumstances of this case, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's collective consideration of the events in relation of which Ntahobali was convicted to find him guilty of extermination as a crime against humanity for the killings perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and all other killings for which he remains convicted. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 4.9 of Ntahobali's appeal.

[4930] Trial Judgement, paras. 5783, 5784, 5844, 5852, 5854, 5870-5873, 5914, 5915. The Appeals Chamber is mindful that there is no genocidal intent requirement for the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's findings with respect to the perpetrators' and Ntahobali's genocidal intent are relevant in this case to establish that the killings were directed against Tutsis as a collective group rather than victims in their individual capacities.

M. Crime of Persecution (Ground 4.6)

2128. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that he and the principal perpetrators acted with discriminatory intent and that discrimination on ethnic grounds could constitute persecution as a crime against humanity pursuant to Article 3(h) of the Statute.[4936] In particular, Ntahobali contends that Article 3(h) of the Statute does not include ethnicity among the listed discriminatory grounds and that the Trial Chamber therefore violated the principle of legality and went beyond the intention of the drafters of the Statute, who limited the scope of persecution to political, racial, and religious grounds.[4937] Moreover, Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber misinterpreted the Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement which, contrary to the interpretation given in the Bagosora et al. Trial Judgement, did not include ethnicity among the listed discriminatory grounds for persecution, but simply affirmed the Nahimana et al. Trial

However, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ntahobali did not develop this allegation in his appeal brief. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ntahobali has abandoned this allegation of error.
[4937] Ntahobali Appeal Brief, paras. 973-975. Cf. AT. 16 April 2015 p. 27. Ntahobali points out that, by contrast, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court ("Rome Statute" and "ICC", respectively) lists ethnicity among the discriminatory grounds of persecution. See ibid., para. 973, referring to Rome Statute, Article 7(1)(h). Ntahobali further refers to the holding in the Semanza Trial Judgement that the "enumerated grounds of discrimination for persecution […] do not include national or ethnic grounds". See ibid., para. 978, referring to Semanza Trial Judgement, para. 350.

Judgement, which itself refers to "persecution on political grounds of an ethnic character".[4938] Ntahobali submits that, in the present case, there is no evidence to support a similar conclusion.[4939] In light of these alleged errors, Ntahobali submits that the Appeals Chamber should overturn the Trial Chamber's findings and acquit him of persecution as a crime against humanity.[4940]

2129. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali misunderstands the current state of the law on persecution as a crime against humanity and that the Trial Chamber correctly defined this crime in line with the Appeals Chamber's jurisprudence as "an act or omission which discriminates in fact and which denies or infringes upon a fundamental right laid down in international customary or treaty law, and was carried out deliberately with the intention to discriminate on one of the protected grounds."[4941] It contends that the fact that Ntahobali "acted with discriminatory intent, discriminating on ethnic grounds[,] […] constitutes the crime of persecution as a crime against humanity".[4942]

2130. At the appeals hearing, in response to the Appeals Chamber's invitation to "discuss whether the relevant factual findings of the Trial Chamber and the evidence contained in the record would support the conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje committed persecution as a crime against humanity on political or racial grounds",[4943] the Prosecution argued that Tutsis were targeted on racial and political grounds.[4944] It added that, "[t]argeting the Tutsi ethnic group means targeting a group on racial grounds, because "'racial grounds' in Article 3(h) of the [S]tatute includes ethnic grounds."[4945] It also argued that the Trial Chamber took judicial notice that Tutsis are an ethnic group, which under customary international law also made them a racial group and that, in the Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, the Appeals Chamber found that "genocidal intent to destroy the Tutsi group necessarily implies the discriminatory intent required for persecution against Tutsis".[4946]

2131. The Prosecution further argued that "Defence and Prosecution experts agreed [that] the government's policy was to commit genocide against the Tutsis" and that "[t]his genocidal policy discriminated on political grounds based on ethnicity or race".[4947] According to the Prosecution, "Nyiramasuhuko and the principal perpetrators subscribed to this policy" and "Nyiramasuhuko issued directives specifically targeting Tutsis, she agreed with calls for killing of Tutsis on the 19th of April, and then implemented this policy at the préfecture office by ordering them to be killed."[4948] With respect to Ntahobali, the Prosecution submitted that the Trial Chamber's findings support the conclusion that the "victims of Ntahobali's crimes[…] were targeted on the basis of racial and political motives".[4949]

2133. Ndayambaje similarly argued that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he possessed the requisite discriminatory intent and that there is no evidence in the record that he possessed the intent to discriminate on political or racial grounds.[4954] Ndayambaje submitted that, by listing political, religious, and racial grounds, the language of the Statute specifically excludes ethnic and national grounds and that the Trial Chamber erred in impermissibly expanding these grounds by relying on ethnicity.[4955]

enumerate or discuss any other discriminatory ground than ethnicity, it is clear that the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali of persecution as a crime against humanity on ethnic grounds.[4956]

2135. Article 3(h) of the Statute, which confers jurisdiction on the Tribunal over the crime of persecution as a crime against humanity, reads as follows:

> The International Tribunal for Rwanda shall have the power to prosecute persons responsible for the following crimes when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack against any civilian population on national, political, ethnic, racial or religious grounds: […] (h) Persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds[.]

[4955] AT. 21 April 2015 pp. 64, 65. Ndayambaje adds that the interpretation of the Statute has to be strict and cannot be expanded by relying on international conventions. See ibid., para. 65.

[4956] See Trial Judgement, paras. 6095-6097, 6100, 6101, 6121. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not expressly state on which discriminatory ground Nyiramasuhuko, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje were found to have acted when finding them guilty of persecution as a crime against humanity in paragraphs 6099, 6103, 6106, and 6108 of the Trial Judgement, respectively. However, from a reading of these paragraphs in the context of the section on persecution in the Trial Judgement, which does not enumerate or discuss any other discriminatory ground than ethnicity, it is clear that the Trial Chamber convicted them of persecution as a crime against humanity on ethnic grounds. See ibid., paras. 6095-6097, 6098, 6099, 6102, 6103, 6105-6108, 6120, 6122, 6124, 6125.

The Appeals Chamber notes that this is similar to the Statute of the ICTY. See Article 5(h) of the Statute of the ICTY. On the contrary, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Rome Statute does not limit the jurisdiction of the ICC to an exhaustive list of discriminatory grounds on which persecution as a crime against humanity must be committed. Indeed, Article 7(1)(h) of the Rome Statute contains an illustrative (open-ended) list of prohibited grounds for persecution as a crime against humanity, which reads as follows: "For the purpose of this Statute, 'crimes against humanity' means any of the following acts when committed as part of a widespread or systematic attack directed against any civilian population, with knowledge of the attack: […] (h) Persecution against any identifiable group or collectivity on political, racial, national, ethnic, cultural, religious, gender as defined in paragraph 3, or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law, in connection with any act referred to in this paragraph or any crime within the jurisdiction of the Court". The Appeals Chamber further notes that the Statute of the Special Court for Sierra Leone ("SCSL"), which was adopted after the Rome Statute, limits the jurisdiction of the SCSL over the crime of persecution as a crime against humanity to an exhaustive list of four discriminatory grounds, namely political, racial, ethnic, and religious grounds. See Article 2(h) of the Statute of the SCSL.

customary international law, the Tribunal's jurisdiction is limited to persecution on political, racial, and religious grounds.[4959]

2137. As ethnicity is not enumerated among the discriminatory grounds of persecution in Article 3(h) of the Statute, the question remains whether it is subsumed under one of the three listed discriminatory grounds, more specifically under the "racial" ground. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, while the Statute "is legally a very different instrument from an international treaty",[4960] it is to be interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms in their context and in the light of its object and purpose, within the meaning of Article 31(1) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 1969, which reflects customary international law.[4961] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber observes that the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute distinguishes "ethnicity" from "race" in the listed discriminatory grounds for the attack against a civilian population.[4962] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, considers that, according to the ordinary meaning of the terms of the provision, such distinction reflects the autonomy between the two notions. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, this conclusion is also supported by a contextual reading of Article 3 of the Statute which makes it clear that "ethnicity" cannot be encapsulated in "race". Indeed, interpreting the discriminatory ground of "race" in Article 3(h) of the Statute as including "ethnicity" would render the distinction in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute redundant, illogical, and superfluous.[4963] According to a textual [4959] Cf. Tadić Trial Judgement, para. 711 ("There are no definitive grounds in customary international law on which persecution must be based and a variety of different grounds have been listed in international instruments. The grounds in the Statute are based on the Nürnberg Charter which included race, religion and politics as the three grounds, as did Control Council Law No. 10, both of which were drafted to address the European situation. In contrast the Tokyo Charter excluded religion as a basis for persecution, given its inapplicability to the Pacific theatre of operation while, alternatively, the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide contains the additional ground of ethnicity as do the 1991 and 1996 versions of the I.L.C. Draft Code, whereas the original 1954 Draft Code included culture as a basis for persecution. The possible discriminatory bases which the International Tribunal is empowered to consider are limited by the Statute to persecutions undertaken on the basis of race, religion and politics.") (alteration in the original)).

[4963] The Appeals Chamber recalls that "it is an elementary rule of interpretation that one should not construe a provision or a part of [it] as if it were superfluous and hence pointless: the presumption is warranted that law-makers enact or agree upon rules that are well thought out and meaningful in all their elements." See Tadić Appeal Judgement, para. 284. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the distinction between "race" and "ethnicity" is also clearly and contextual interpretation of Article 3(h) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, therefore finds that "ethnicity" cannot be interpreted as being included in the list of discriminatory grounds enumerated therein.

established in the definition of genocide given in Article 2 of the Statute ("Genocide means any of the following acts committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group […].").

[4967] See Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 986. The Appeals Chamber further notes that, in the Nahimana et al. case, the convictions for persecution as a crime against humanity were based on the Trial Judgement's finding that "the discriminatory intent of the Accused falls within the scope of crime against humanity of persecution on political grounds of an ethnic character", noting that "RTLM, Kangura and CDR […] essentially merged political and ethnic identity, defining their political target on the basis of ethnicity and political positions relating to ethnicity." See Nahimana et al. Trial Judgement, para. 1071. This finding was not challenged on appeal.

against humanity on the basis that he acted with discriminatory intent on ethnic grounds.[4969] The Trial Chamber applied a similar incorrect legal standard in convicting Nyiramasuhuko, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje of persecution as a crime against humanity on the basis that they acted with discriminatory intent on ethnic grounds.[4970] Where the Appeals Chamber finds an error of law in the trial judgement arising from the application of an incorrect legal standard, the Appeals Chamber will articulate the correct legal standard and review the relevant factual findings of the trial chamber accordingly.

2140. After a careful review of the Trial Judgement, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, finds that the Trial Chamber's factual findings do not support the conclusion that Ntahobali as well as Nyiramasuhuko, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje committed persecution as a crime against humanity on one of the three discriminatory grounds enumerated in Article 3(h) of the Statute, namely on political, racial, or religious grounds. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution has failed to refer to Trial Chamber's findings or evidence to the contrary.

2141. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, grants Ground 4.6 of Ntahobali's appeal and reverses his convictions for persecution as a crime against humanity. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting, proprio motu, further reverses Nyiramasuhuko's, Nsabimana's, Kanyabashi's, and Ndayambaje's convictions for persecution as a crime against humanity. The Appeals Chamber will examine the impact of these findings, if any, in Section XII below.

VI. APPEAL OF SYLVAIN NSABIMANA

2142. The Trial Chamber found Nsabimana guilty of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission the killings of the Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during attacks committed by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe by failing to discharge his duty to provide assistance to people in danger and to protect civilians against acts of violence.[4971]

2143. Nsabimana raises challenges related to his indictment. He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he tacitly approved the inflammatory speeches given by Kambanda and Sindikubwabo at his swearing-in ceremony. He further raises challenges related to the admission of, and reliance on, alleged prejudicial evidence. Finally, Nsabimana contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was responsible for aiding and abetting by omission the killings of Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

[4971] Trial Judgement, paras. 5893, 5900, 5903, 5906, 5972, 6057-6059, 6102, 6103, 6122, 6170, 6171, 6186. The Appeals Chamber notes that, read in context, the references to Nsabimana's responsibility for aiding and abetting "the killings that occurred at the Butare préfecture office", "the killings of Tutsis at the Butare préfecture office" or "the killings at the Butare préfecture office" in paragraphs 6058, 6102, and 6170 of the Trial Judgement must be understood as referring to the killing of the Tutsi refugees who were abducted from the prefectoral office.

A. Indictment (Grounds 1, 2, and 11)

2144. The Trial Chamber found that Nsabimana, in his capacity as prefect, was under the legal duty to provide assistance to people in danger and to protect civilians against acts or threats of violence pursuant to Rwandan law and international humanitarian law.[4972] It also determined that Nsabimana was aware of the night-time attacks conducted against the Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office from mid-May to mid-June 1994 and was presented with multiple requests for assistance from refugees but refused to help.[4973] The Trial Chamber held that, "[b]y refusing to take action in the midst of the continuing attacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office], Nsabimana assisted Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and the Interahamwe in the perpetration of their attacks" and that his failure to act had a substantial effect on the realisation of their crimes.[4974] It also found that Nsabimana: (i) knew that those taking refuge at the prefectoral office were being abducted, raped, and killed; (ii) was aware of the perpetrators' genocidal intent; and (iii) knew that his failure to act assisted in the commission of the crimes.[4975]

2145. On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Nsabimana of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 7, respectively), and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 9) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission the killings of the Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during attacks committed by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe by failing to discharge his duty to protect civilians.[4976]

2146. When reaching its findings on Nsabimana's responsibility for the crimes committed at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber primarily referred to paragraphs 6.36 and 6.42 of the Indictment.[4977] The Indictment indicates in relevant parts that the allegations in paragraph 6.36 were

[4977] Trial Judgement, paras. 2783, 2785, 2789, 2790, fn. 7796. To facilitate readability, the Appeals Chamber will use the term "Indictment" in the body text of the present section when referring to the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment. Paragraphs 6.36 and 6.42 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment read as follows:

> 6.36 As early as 7 April 1994, numerous members of the Tutsi population sought refuge at the Butare town préfecture offices. As from 19 April 1994, Interahamwe militiamen and soldiers took advantage of this and repeatedly went to the préfecture offices to attack the refugees. The attacks took place while Préfet Sylvain Nsabimana was present and going about his daily business at the préfecture offices. Some of the refugees asked Préfet Sylvain Nsabimana to protect them from the violent acts of the militiamen and soldiers. Sylvain Nsabimana did nothing to put a definitive end to the attacks. Refugees were often forcibly abducted, assaulted and sometimes killed outright.
> 6.42 The entire préfecture of Butare was the scene of massacres of the Tutsi population involving Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, André Rwamakuba, Alphonse Nteziryayo, Joseph Kanyabashi, Ladislas Ntaganzwa, Elie being pursued against Nsabimana under all counts, except Count 4, pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[4978] Paragraph 6.42 was not relied upon in support of any count in the Indictment.[4979]

2148. With regard to the circumstances and timeframe of the attacks at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber found that, when read as a whole, the Indictment adequately pleaded that: (i) the attacks included the forcible abduction, assault, and killing of refugees;[4984] and (ii) the refugees' requests for assistance to Nsabimana occurred between his swearing-in as prefect on 19 April 1994 and his replacement on 17 June 1994, while he was going about his daily business at the prefectoral office.[4985] The Trial Chamber considered that details such as the prefect's "attitude and reactions" as well as the form of the requests for assistance constituted evidence which did not need to be pleaded in the Indictment.[4986]

2149. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in expanding the scope of paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment by reading it in conjunction with paragraph 6.42 of the Indictment to conclude that he was charged with responsibility for all attacks that occurred at the prefectoral office whether or not he was present.[4987] He contends that paragraph 6.36 gave him notice of his responsibility related to day-time attacks conducted in his presence and that the night-time attacks conducted in his absence were material facts which were not pleaded in the Indictment.[4988] He argues that, if anything, the fact that paragraph 6.36 was subject to two interpretations demonstrates that the paragraph was not as clear as required by the jurisprudence.[4989] According to Nsabimana, paragraph 6.42 – which he notes was not specifically pleaded in support of any charge – could not reasonably be relied upon as explaining or particularising the specific charge pleaded in paragraph 6.36 because it was too general and vague.[4990] He also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account the fact that paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment was pursued under both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute when interpreting it.[4991]

2150. Nsabimana further contends that neither paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment nor paragraph 6.42 of the Indictment contains the necessary details regarding his acts or course of conduct that formed the basis of the charges against him.[4992] He also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in convicting him based on a duty to act imposed under Article 256 of the Rwandan Penal Code and provisions of international humanitarian law, in particular Articles 7 and 13 of Additional Protocol II, because the Indictment failed to plead that he incurred criminal responsibility for failing in a duty to act under these provisions.[4993] Nsabimana argues that these legal obligations constituted material facts that should have been pleaded in the Indictment and that, by merely referring to his "omission" in the Indictment, the Prosecution failed to sufficiently inform him of the nature and cause of the charges against him.[4994]

2151. In addition, Nsabimana contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) considering that the details concerning his attitude and reactions did not need to be pleaded in the Indictment; and (ii) failing to find that the Indictment did not plead with sufficient specificity the identities of the refugees who requested assistance from him, the dates of those requests, and the time period.[4995] He also argues that it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber to rely on paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment regarding the timeframe of his alleged criminal conduct since this paragraph was not pleaded in support of any counts.[4996] In his view, the fact that the Trial Chamber needed to read several paragraphs of the Indictment together to conclude that he received notice proves that the charge in paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment was ambiguous and not properly pleaded.[4997] Nsabimana contends that the Prosecution did not cure these defects.[4998]

2153. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the Indictment, when read as whole, provided Nsabimana with adequate notice that he was being charged with attacks that occurred between 19 April and 17 June 1994 at the prefectoral office whether or not he was present.[5000] It asserts that paragraph 6.42 of the Indictment set the parameters for Nsabimana's responsibility and that paragraph 6.36 of the Indictment more precisely pleaded his responsibility for the killings that took place at the prefectoral office.[5001] It also argues that it was under no obligation to plead the legal provisions which imposed the duty to act on Nsabimana in the Indictment.[5002] The Prosecution submits that paragraphs 6.36 and 6.41 of the Indictment clearly pleaded the nature of its case and Nsabimana's role in the alleged crimes.[5003]

Under Ground 6 of his appeal, Nsabimana also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Prosecution Witness TQ's evidence that he sought Nsabimana's assistance to bury the orphans killed at the Groupe scolaire but that Nsabimana told him he was a madman as this allegation was not pleaded in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment. See Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 210, 211.

[5002] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1371-1375; AT. 16 April 2015 pp. 54, 55. At the appeals hearing, the Prosecution also argued that paragraphs 2.6 and 3.4 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment set out "the duty that Nsabimana was under" as well as the fact that the victims referred to in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment were protected persons under Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and Additional Protocol II. It added that the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment "gave comparable detail as the indictment that was 'approved' in the Mrkšić and Šljivančanin [A]ppeal [J]udgement." See AT. 16 April 2015 pp. 53, 54.

[5003] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1248, 1256, 1373; AT. 16 April 2015 pp. 53, 54. The Prosecution further responds that Nsabimana was not prejudiced in the preparation of his defence because the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, together with the annotated indictment disclosed on 25 August 1999 and prior written statements of several witnesses, provided him with further timely, clear, and consistent notice of the charges against him. It adds that Nsabimana's conduct during the proceedings reflected that he was on notice of the allegations against him, including concerning the night-time attacks. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1267, 1268, 1271-1276, 1279-1282; AT. 16 April 2015 pp. 54, 55. In reply, Nsabimana disputes that the Prosecution cured any defects in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo

Indictment and that his conduct during the proceedings reflected that he was aware of the allegations concerning the night-time attacks. See Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 22-40. See also AT. 16 April 2015 pp. 51, 52 (French).

[5004] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the allegation that the massacres of the Tutsi population occurred "while Sylvain Nsabimana was exercising his authority as Préfet of Butare" pleaded in paragraph 6.42 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment did not clarify this particular matter.

[5005] The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the allegation set forth in paragraph 6.36 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment was pursued under both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute is irrelevant to the question of whether Nsabimana was alleged to have been present during the attacks; the question is not whether Nsabimana was put on notice that he could be held liable for a failure to act – which is clear from paragraph 6.36 – but whether he was alleged to have been present or not during these specific attacks.

> 6.41 Between 19 April and late June 1994, Pauline Nyiramasuhuko and Arsène Shalom Ntahobali, accompanied by Interahamwe militiamen and soldiers, on several occasions went to the préfecture offices to abduct Tutsi refugees, whom they later killed. Those who attempted to resist were assaulted and sometimes killed outright. […].

office who he knew were subjected to various forms of abuse at any time of day, regardless of whether he was present or not.[5008]

2156. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Nsabimana's undeveloped contention that the Indictment did not contain the necessary details regarding his acts or course of conduct that formed the basis of the charge against him concerning the crimes committed as a result of the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office. Paragraphs 6.32, 6.53, and 6.59 of the Indictment expressly allege that Nsabimana "aided and abetted" the population, his subordinates, or others in massacring the Tutsis in Butare Prefecture[5009] and several other paragraphs of the Indictment repeatedly refer to Nsabimana's failure as prefect of Butare to take measures to stop the massacres of Tutsis taking place in the prefecture during his tenure as prefect, including his failure to put an end to the killing of the Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office.[5010] As noted by the Trial Chamber,[5011] the charging section of the Indictment also made it clear that Nsabimana was charged with "the acts and omissions described" in these paragraphs. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the legal provisions from which Nsabimana's duty to act arose were material facts that needed to be pleaded in the Indictment as it was clear from the Indictment that his duty arose from his position as prefect of Butare.[5012]

2157. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Nsabimana fails to show any error in the Trial Chamber's determinations that the details regarding his "attitude and reactions" did not need to be pleaded in the Indictment and that the name of a particular refugee who requested help from him and was later abducted was not a material fact but evidence relevant to the issue of Nsabimana's knowledge of the attacks at the prefectoral office.[5013] Likewise, Nsabimana does not demonstrate

[5012] The Appeals Chamber recalls that Nsabimana points out that, in the Mrkšić and Šljivančanin Appeal Judgement relied upon by the Trial Chamber with respect to the pleading of his culpable omission, the Appeals Chamber noted that the relevant indictment referred to the legal provisions imposing obligations on Veselin Šljivančanin as an army officer. See supra, fn. 4994. The Appeals Chamber notes that, when examining whether Veselin Šljivančanin was put on adequate notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting by omission, it referred, inter alia, to the fact that, in the indictment against him, Veselin Šljivančanin was alleged to be subject to specific laws and regulations as an army officer which obliged officers and their subordinates to observe the laws of war. See Mrkšić and Šljivančanin Appeal Judgement, paras. 139-141. However, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that its reference to this aspect of Veselin Šljivančanin's indictment should be interpreted as requiring the Prosecution to plead these specific facts in the indictment to provide adequate notice to the accused of the nature and cause of the charge against him.
[5013] With respect to Nsabimana's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TQ's evidence that he sought Nsabimana's assistance to bury the orphans killed at the Groupe scolaire but that Nsabimana told him he was a madman as this allegation was not pleaded in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment, the Appeals Chamber that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the information in the Indictment that the alleged requests for assistance took place between his swearing-in as prefect on 19 April 1994 and his replacement on 17 June 1994 was sufficient to give him adequate notice given the sheer scale of the crimes allegedly committed at the prefectoral office ranging over a period of nearly three months.[5014] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the indication in paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment that Nsabimana was replaced as Butare Prefect on 17 June 1994. Given that this indication provided mere contextual background and did not constitute an allegation that should have been pleaded as a charge, the fact that it was not pleaded in support of any count was therefore irrelevant. Nsabimana's argument that the fact that the Trial Chamber needed to read several paragraphs of the Indictment together demonstrates that the Indictment was ambiguous also fails to appreciate that, in determining whether an accused was adequately put on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him, the indictment must be considered as a whole.[5015] observes that the Trial Chamber relied on this evidence as indicative that Nsabimana refused to help. See Trial Judgement, para. 5900. The incident recounted by Witness TQ was therefore merely used as evidence of Nsabimana's failure to act and not treated as a separate allegation. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the evidence by which material facts are to be proven need not be pleaded in the indictment. See, e.g., Nzabonimana Appeal Judgement, para. 29; Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 21; Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 88. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber also dismisses Nsabimana's contention in this respect.

2158. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was put on adequate notice of the charge on the basis of which he was convicted. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 1, 2, and 11 of Nsabimana's appeal.

B. Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony (Ground 4)

events"[5025] and did not convict him on the basis of his conduct at the swearing-in ceremony.[5026] The Trial Chamber convicted Nsabimana solely for aiding and abetting by omission the killing of Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office.[5027]

2165. Recalling that the Appeals Chamber only reviews errors of law which have the potential to invalidate the decision of the trial chamber and errors of fact which have occasioned a miscarriage of justice and that arguments which do not have the potential to cause the impugned decision to be reversed or revised may be immediately dismissed by the Appeals Chamber and need not be considered on the merits,[5031] the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 4 of Nsabimana's appeal without further consideration.

C. Admission and Reliance on Prejudicial Evidence (Grounds 5, 6 and 13 in part)

2166. In finding Nsabimana responsible for aiding and abetting by omission the killings of the Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during attacks committed by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe, the Trial Chamber relied, in part, on the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses QBP, RE, SU, SS, TK, and TQ.[5032] Specifically, the Trial Chamber relied on their evidence to conclude that: (i) Nsabimana was aware of the night-time attacks at the prefectoral office; (ii) he was presented with multiple requests for assistance from Tutsi refugees but refused to help; (iii) his omission to act had a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crimes committed at the prefectoral office; and (iv) he knew that his failure to act assisted in the commission of the crimes.[5033] The Trial Chamber also relied, inter alia, on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FAP, QBQ, SD, and TA in finding that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe committed or participated in abductions, rapes, and killings at the prefectoral office.[5034]

2167. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting and relying on the evidence of Witnesses FAP, QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, SS, SU, TA, TK, and TQ to find him responsible for aiding and abetting by omission the killings of Tutsi refugees because he received no notice that these witnesses would testify against him.[5035] He further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting and relying on Witness TK's evidence because it concerned an allegation that was not pleaded in the Indictment.[5036] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

[5032] Trial Judgement, paras. 2803-2812, 2815, 5900, 5904-5906. The Trial Chamber also relied on Nsabimana's testimony, Expert Witness Des Forges's testimony, and Exhibits P113 and P114. See ibid., paras. 2801, 2802, 2807, 2808, 2810, 5904, 5905.

[5033] Trial Judgement, paras. 2804-2807, 5900-5906. See also ibid., para. 5972. The Trial Chamber relied on: (i) Witness TK's "credible" evidence of the abduction of a young man named Alphonse who had been forced out Nsabimana's office after calling for help; (ii) Witness TQ's description of Nsabimana's attitude regarding the witness's request to bury the bodies of orphans who had been killed at the Groupe scolaire; (iii) Witness RE's "significant[ly] detail[ed]" testimony that she saw a young man and woman leave Nsabimana's office, and that the young woman told her that they had just seen the prefect asking him for help and "that the young man was now being dragged away"; (iv) Witnesses SS's and SU's testimonies that, in a separate incident after attacks occurred at the prefectoral office, three women went to see Nsabimana on behalf of the refugees and that, although neither witness was present at the meeting, they were told that Nsabimana denied knowledge of the attacks and said he would post gendarmes to protect them; (v) Witness QBP's evidence that a woman who was attacked by an Interahamwe and wounded on her ear complained to Nsabimana but that he did nothing for her; and (vi) Witness SS's claim that Nsabimana did nothing for those who asked for help. See ibid., paras. 2804-2806, 2810, 5900.

1. Evidence of Witnesses Not Identified As Testifying Against Nsabimana

2168. When determining Nsabimana's responsibility for ordering the transfer of Tutsi refugees from the Butare Prefecture Office to Nyange Sector, the Trial Chamber addressed Nsabimana's contention that the evidence of Witnesses QBP, RE, SU, and TA should be excluded insofar as it related to him because he had no notice that these witnesses would be called to testify against him.[5037] The Trial Chamber determined that, although these witnesses were not listed as being brought to testify against him, Nsabimana did not suffer any prejudice that warranted the exclusion of their evidence, particularly because he raised no objections to their testimonies at the time they were given and had the opportunity to cross-examine them.[5038]

2169. Nsabimana argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Witnesses FAP, QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, SS, SU, TA, TK, and TQ because he received no notice that these witnesses would testify against him.[5039] He contends that his right to a fair trial was violated as a consequence and that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he suffered no prejudice from this absence of notice.[5040] In particular, Nsabimana argues that he was prejudiced by having insufficient time to prepare for his cross-examination of these witnesses because he had instead focused his efforts on challenging the evidence of the witnesses he expected to testify against him.[5041] He asserts that his cross-examination of these witnesses was therefore not meaningful and that its occurrence alone should not be considered as a waiver of his rights or as a remedy to the prejudice he suffered.[5042] Nsabimana further argues that, although the Trial Chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value pursuant to Rule 89(C) of the Rules, "evidence whose credibility cannot be challenged and rebutted by the Defence during a well-prepared cross-examination, cannot have probative value."[5043] He also appears to argue that his right to be tried in a joint trial as if tried separately was violated because, had he been tried alone, he would not have had to confront evidence of witnesses not announced against him.[5044] Nsabimana requests that the violation of his rights be remedied by excluding the relevant Prosecution witnesses' testimonies and vacating his convictions which are based upon their evidence.[5045]

2170. The Prosecution responds that Nsabimana objected to the evidence of Witnesses FAP, QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, SS, SU, TA, TK, and TQ only in his closing brief and that he cross-examined all of them, with the exception of Witness FAP, on issues directly relevant to the theory of his defence.[5046] It contends that Nsabimana fails to explain why his "comprehensive cross-examinations" of these witnesses had no meaning.[5047] It further argues that Nsabimana's contention that these witnesses would not have been called against him if he had been tried separately is speculative[5048] and that Nsabimana fails to demonstrate that he was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's reliance on the impugned evidence.[5049]

2171. Nsabimana replies that he objected to the evidence of these witnesses in his closing brief because it was only after the filing of the Prosecution Closing Brief that he became aware that the Prosecution intended to rely on their testimonies to establish his guilt.[5050] He asserts that, had he been aware that the Prosecution sought to do so earlier, through a clear indication in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, he would have objected sooner and requested additional time to prepare for his cross-examinations.[5051] He emphasises that his cross-examination of Witnesses FAP, QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, SS, SU, TA, TK, and TQ was aimed at establishing that the attacks occurred during the night in his absence or that he did not receive any complaints from the refugees.[5052]

2172. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nsabimana's assertion, he was notified by the Witness Summaries Grid appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief that Witness TQ would testify that he informed Nsabimana of attacks that took place near the prefectoral office and that Nsabimana did not react, which corresponds with the evidence the witness provided at trial and upon which the Trial Chamber relied against Nsabimana.[5053] Likewise, Nsabimana was notified that Witnesses FAP, QBQ, SD, and TA would testify that Tutsis who had sought refuge at the

In his reply brief, Nsabimana acknowledges his error and points to the relevant paragraphs of the Trial Judgement. See Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 48-50. prefectoral office were subjected to abductions, killings, and rapes during attacks conducted by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe in May and June 1994.[5054] The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber relied only on these specific aspects of Witnesses FAP's, QBQ's, SD's, and TA's testimonial evidence to establish Nsabimana's guilt.[5055] Nsabimana's contention that he was not given notice that these witnesses would provide evidence relating to him is therefore ill-founded.

2173. Turning to Nsabimana's arguments concerning the evidence of Witnesses QBP, RE, SU, SS, and TK, the Appeals Chamber notes that it is not disputed that the Prosecution did not notify Nsabimana in its pre-trial brief or any other pre-trial submissions that these witnesses would implicate him,[5056] which constitutes an infringement of Rule 67 of the Rules.[5057] Although Nsabimana argued in his closing brief that the Trial Chamber should have excluded the evidence of these witnesses for the same reasons he adduces on appeal,[5058] the Trial Chamber did not address his contention in the context of its assessment of the evidence pertaining to the attacks at the prefectoral office. As noted above, the Trial Chamber limited its consideration of Nsabimana's contention to Witnesses QBP's, SU's, and RE's evidence concerning Nsabimana's involvement in the transfer of refugees from the prefectoral office to Nyange in early June 1994,[5059] an allegation in relation to which Nsabimana was acquitted.[5060]

2174. While a trial chamber is not obliged to respond to each and every submission made at trial and has discretion to decide which argument to address,[5061] the Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that, because it deemed it necessary to address Nsabimana's contention as it related to the evidence of the transfer to Nyange, the Trial Chamber should have also discussed the merits of Nsabimana's

[5054] See Witness Summaries Grid, item 76, Witness SD, Witness TA's Summary, Witness QBQ's Summary, Witness FAP's Summary. The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the summaries of Witnesses FAP's, QBQ's, SD's, and TA's anticipated testimony were not linked to Nsabimana's indictment in the Witness Summaries Grid is relevant in the context of notice of the charges but not in the context of notice of the evidence.

The Trial Chamber did not refer to this evidence directly in assessing Nsabimana's responsibility for aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsi refugees abducted during the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office, but its analysis was dependent on its findings that these attacks occurred.
[5056] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1285-1289. See also Trial Judgement, para. 4054. The Prosecution provides no indication in its response brief that it provided any additional indication to Nsabimana prior to the commencement of trial that it intended to rely on these witnesses to establish his guilt.
[5057] Rule 67(A)(i) of the Rules states that the Prosecutor shall "[a]s early as reasonably practicable and in any event prior to the commencement of the trial […] notify the Defence of the names of the witnesses that he intends to call to establish the guilt of the accused […]." The Appeals Chamber also notes that, by failing to summarise all material facts its witnesses were expected to testify about in the Witness Summaries Grid filed as part of its pre-trial brief pursuant to Rule 73*bis*(B) of the Rules, the Prosecution did not fully comply with Rule 73*bis*(B)(iv)(b) of the Rules which provides that the Prosecution's list of witnesses should include "[a] summary of the facts on which each witness will testify".

contention in the context of Witnesses QBP's, RE's, SS's, SU's, and TK's evidence concerning the prefectoral office attacks. The Appeals Chamber finds proprio motu that the Trial Chamber's failure to fully address Nsabimana's contention infringed his right to a reasoned opinion under Article 22 of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules. Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to rely on the impugned evidence because, as discussed below, Nsabimana does not show how the Trial Chamber's reliance thereon violated his right to adequate time to prepare his defence or, if it did, caused him prejudice.

contemporaneous objection to their evidence indicates that he considered himself able to adequately cross-examine them, and that he was not prejudiced.

2177. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Nsabimana's assertion that his cross-examination of these witnesses does not mean that he waived his fair trial rights is irrelevant. Nsabimana fails to appreciate that it is not the fact that he conducted some form of cross-examination of

[5069] In particular, Nsabimana advances that, had he had more time to prepare, he would have asked different questions, without identifying what these questions might have been and why the hypothetical answers would have impacted his conviction. The Appeals Chamber also observes that Nsabimana challenged at length the testimonies of these witnesses in his closing brief. See Nsabimana Closing Brief, paras. 1449-1473 (under the heading "Allegation of a request for protection against atrocities by militiamen and soldiers addressed by some refugees to Préfet Nsabimana"). See ibid., paras. 1451-1456, 1459-1465 (challenging the evidence of Witnesses SU, SS, QBP, and RE in this regard). See also ibid., paras. 1246-1258, 1266-1270, 1276-1283, 1306-1338, 1339-1371, 1393-1405. See, in particular, ibid., paras. 1314-1316, 1335, 1338, 1393-1405 (challenging Witness TK's evidence of Alphonse's abduction and Witness RE's evidence of the abduction of the young man).

Witnesses QBP, RE, SS, SU, and TK on its own that demonstrates that he was not prejudiced. Rather, the foundation of the Appeals Chamber's determination in this instance is the cumulative effect of the nature of the evidence provided by these witnesses, the notice of the charges and underpinning material facts he was provided, his failure to object in a timely manner to their evidence when it was adduced at trial, and the pertinent and relevant cross-examinations of these witnesses he conducted, in combination with his failure to provide any arguments reflecting that he had inadequate time to prepare his defence or was prejudiced.

2178. Considering that Nsabimana fails to demonstrate that he was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's admission of, and reliance on, the inculpatory evidence of Witnesses QBP, RE, SS, SU, and TK, on the basis that he did not have time to adequately prepare for cross-examination, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nsabimana's assertion that the Trial Chamber could not have admitted their evidence because it was not "probative" within the meaning of Rule 89(C) of the Rules. The Appeals Chamber recalls that admissibility of evidence should not be confused with the assessment of the weight to be accorded to that evidence, an issue to be decided by the trial chamber after hearing the totality of the evidence.[5070] Witnesses QBP's, RE's, SS's, SU's, and TK's evidence was temporally, geographically, and thematically related to the pleaded allegation that Nsabimana had knowledge of the attacks against the Tutsis who had sought refuge at the prefectoral office and failed to take measures. The Appeals Chamber therefore sees no error in the admission of this evidence.

2179. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber rejects Nsabimana's assertion that his fair trial rights were violated because, had he been tried individually, this evidence would not have been relied upon by the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Rule 82(A) of the Rules states that "[i]n joint trials, each accused shall be accorded the same rights as if he were being tried separately." Nsabimana was tried pursuant to the charges brought against him individually and his assertion that, had he been tried individually, the Prosecution would not have brought the evidence of Witnesses QBP, RE, SS, SU, and TK against him, is speculative.

2180. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting and relying on the evidence of Witnesses FAP, QBP, QBQ, RE, SD, SS, SU, TA, TK, and TQ to establish his guilt because he received no notice that they would testify against him.

[5070] Admissibility Appeal Decision of 2 July 2004, para. 15.

2. Witness TK's Evidence of an Unpleaded Allegation

The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber appears to have confused Witness RE and Witness TK in paragraph 2797 of the Trial Judgement in stating that Witness RE testified to Alphonse's abduction. The record and the Trial Chamber's summary of the evidence reflect that the evidence regarding the abduction of Alphonse was not provided by Witness RE but by Witness TK. See ibid., paras. 2209, 2804. The Appeals Chamber considers the Trial Chamber's reference to Witness RE in paragraph 2797 to be a typographical error.

attacks.[5079] It asserts that, contrary to Nsabimana's contention, its case was never that there was a consistent pattern of conduct that should have been disclosed under Rule 93 of the Rules.[5080]

2184. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that Nsabimana's knowledge that attacks took place at any time of the day regardless of whether he was present or not was properly pleaded in the Indictment.[5081] It therefore dismisses as moot Nsabimana's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement and the Admissibility Decision of 2 July 2004 to admit Witness TK's evidence because it is premised on his incorrect assumption that his knowledge of the attacks was improperly pleaded.

2186. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nsabimana has failed to identify any error in the Trial Chamber's admission of Witness TK's evidence regarding the incident involving Alphonse at the prefectoral office in the context of determining his knowledge of the night-time attacks at the prefectoral office.

3. Conclusion

D. Butare Prefecture Office (Grounds 6 in part, 7-10, 12, 13 in part, 14)

2188. Nsabimana challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that the actus reus and mens rea necessary to establish his responsibility for aiding and abetting by omission the killings of the Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during attacks committed by Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe were proven beyond reasonable doubt. Nsabimana requests that "the impugned Judgement" be quashed.[5084] The Appeals Chamber will address Nsabimana's submissions relating to the actus reus before turning to his submissions concerning the mens rea.

1. Actus Reus (Grounds 8 to 10, and 12 in part)

2189. In finding Nsabimana responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission, the Trial Chamber found that, in his capacity as prefect, Nsabimana had the legal duty to provide assistance to people in danger, to ensure the tranquillity, public order, and security of people, and to protect civilians, including the wounded and sick, against acts or threats of violence.[5085] It further held that, by refusing to take action in the midst of the continuing attacks at the prefectoral office, Nsabimana assisted Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Interahamwe in the perpetration of their attacks, that his failure to act had a substantial effect on the realisation of their crimes,[5086] and that he had the means available to him to "forestall these harms, but he did nothing".[5087]

2190. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that he had a legal duty to act,[5088] that his omission substantially assisted the perpetration of the crimes,[5089] and that he had the ability to act.[5090] The Appeals Chamber will address these arguments in turn.

(a) Legal Duty to Act

2191. The Trial Chamber found that Nsabimana's legal duty to act as a prefect was based on: (i) Article 256 of the Rwandan Penal Code which imposed on every Rwandan citizen a duty to provide assistance to people in danger;[5091] (ii) Rwandan domestic law which imposed on the prefect an obligation to ensure the tranquillity, public order, and security of people within the prefecture;[5092] and (iii) Articles 7 and 13 of Additional Protocol II to the Geneva Conventions which imposed a legal duty on Nsabimana to protect civilians, including the wounded and sick, against acts or threats of violence.[5093]

2192. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that Article 256 of the Rwandan Penal Code and Articles 7 and 13 of Additional Protocol II imposed a legal duty upon him to act.[5094] He contends that individual responsibility by omission under Article 6(1) of the Statute can only be incurred where the alleged omission is punishable under a rule of criminal law[5095] and that the Trial Chamber failed to indicate the legal sanction provided under such texts.[5096]

2193. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that Nsabimana had a legal duty to act.[5097] In particular, it contends that Nsabimana misconstrues the law and that the jurisprudence is not settled as to whether the legal duty to act must stem from a rule of criminal law.[5098] In the alternative, the Prosecution argues that the Trial Chamber found that one of the sources of Nsabimana's duty to act was criminal law.[5099]

2194. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nsabimana seeks to substantiate his claim that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Article 256 of the Rwandan Penal Code and Articles 7 and 13 of Additional Protocol II imposed a legal duty upon him to act by arguing that criminal liability for failure to discharge a legal duty must derive from a duty imposed by criminal law and that the Trial Chamber failed to indicate the legal sanction provided under such texts.[5100] The question of whether criminal liability for failure to discharge a legal duty to act must derive from a rule entailing individual criminal responsibility has never been examined in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal and

The Prosecution asserts that the approach of the Appeals Chamber is rather that, irrespective of the source of the duty, the legal duty to act must be one whose breach gives rise to individual criminal responsibility. See ibid., paras. 1345, 1352.
[5099] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1353.
[5100] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nsabimana almost exclusively develops his contentions by arguing that he lacked the material ability to act. See, e.g., Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 311-321, 331-348. These arguments are discussed in detail below. See infra, Section VI.D.1(c).

the ICTY.[5101] Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to make a determination on this issue in the present case as the Trial Chamber found that Nsabimana's duty to act stemmed notably from Rwandan criminal law.[5102] Nsabimana fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Article 256 of the Rwandan Penal Code or that it was under the obligation to specify the criminal sanction incurred from the violation of this provision.

2195. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nsabimana's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that a legal duty existed that could sustain his criminal responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission.

(b) Substantial Assistance

[5101] See Mrkšić and Šljivančanin Appeal Judgement, para. 151 ("The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has previously recognised that the breach of a duty to act imposed by the laws and customs of war gives rise to individual criminal responsibility. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that Šljivančanin's duty to protect the prisoners of war was imposed by the laws and customs of war. Thus, the Appeals Chamber considers that Šljivančanin's breach of such duty gives rise to his individual criminal responsibility. Therefore, it is not necessary for the Appeals Chamber to further address whether the duty to act, which forms part of the basis of aiding and abetting by omission, must stem from a rule of criminal law."); Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, paras. 334, 335.
[5102] The Trial Chamber also relied on provisions of the laws and customs of war which it considered give rise to individual criminal responsibility in case of violation of such provisions. See Trial Judgement, para. 5899 ("In the Chamber's view, the criminalisation of individual conduct encompasses the Geneva Conventions in their entirety, including Articles 7 and 13 of Additional Protocol II."). The Appeals Chamber declines to consider proprio motu the correctness of this legal statement in light of the Trial Chamber's reliance on the Rwandan Penal Code.

[5104] Trial Judgement, para. 5900 (internal reference omitted).

2200. In light of Nsabimana's failure to identify any error that could invalidate the verdict or could have occasioned a miscarriage of justice, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider his contentions further.

(c) Ability to Act

2201. The Trial Chamber, relying on various sources of Rwandan law, observed that Nsabimana, in his capacity as prefect, had the power to request the intervention of the Rwandan army to restore public order and the ability to verbally request the intervention of the gendarmerie.[5112] It further found that "Nsabimana in fact requisitioned forces around 5-15 June 1994", that the placement of five to six soldiers at the prefectoral office "forestalled attacks against those taking refuge" there, and that these conclusions demonstrated that Nsabimana, as prefect, "had the ability to requisition forces that could forestall the attacks."[5113] The Trial Chamber considered that Nsabimana failed to prevent ongoing attacks at the prefectoral office "for a significant period between the end of April and mid-June 1994" even though "means were available to Nsabimana to fulfil his duty to forestall these harms".[5114]

2202. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber, in finding that he had the ability to act, failed to examine whether he had "the ability and the capacity to act in the specific circumstances of the case."[5115] He argues that no evidence was adduced to demonstrate that he had the means or capacity to discharge his obligations to protect civilians prior to June 1994.[5116] In his view, the Trial Chamber did not consider that soldiers or gendarmes from Butare Prefecture participated in the perpetration of crimes and how this impacted his ability to act and that the security personnel he eventually posted at the prefectoral office in June 1994 were not from the prefecture.[5117] In light of all these considerations, Nsabimana suggests that the existence of a prefect's "theoretically vested" powers prescribed by Rwandan law is insufficient to establish that he had the practical ability to exercise such powers from April to mid-June 1994[5118] and that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that he had the ability to act.[5119]

inadequacy of resources, to discharge his duty to protect civilians.[5122] He asserts that, in addition to getting protection for the prefectoral office, he took many other actions to save the lives of civilians, and did not hesitate to protect people when he was able to do so.[5123]

2204. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nsabimana had the material ability to act, as demonstrated by his requisition of forces to protect refugees at the prefectoral office around 5 to 15 June 1994.[5124] It submits that, contrary to Nsabimana's arguments, the Trial Chamber did enquire into the means available to Nsabimana to act.[5125] According to the Prosecution, the fact that some gendarmes and soldiers participated in the killings, or whether soldiers originated from Butare Prefecture, did not detract from his ability to act.[5126] It argues that, given that the Trial Chamber's task was to assess Nsabimana's legal power to act, the exercise of his power, and the authorities' compliance with his requests, the Trial Chamber was not required to assess whether soldiers were involved in crimes and that the issue is not whether Nsabimana's request for soldiers amounted to a "requisition" under Rwandan law.[5127]

2205. The Appeals Chamber recalls that aiding and abetting by omission necessarily requires that the accused had the ability to act, such that there were means available to the accused to fulfil his duty.[5128]

2206. In the present case, the Trial Chamber observed that, as the prefect of Butare, Nsabimana "ha[d] the power to request the intervention of the Armed Forces to restore public order" and that he could "verbally request the intervention of the National Gendarmerie pursuant to the Rwandan Law on the creation of the Gendarmerie."[5129] Nsabimana does not dispute the validity of this finding and the Appeals Chamber dismisses his argument that no evidence was adduced to demonstrate his capacity or means to discharge his obligations to protect Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office.

It further points out that when Nsabimana orally requested military personal, his request was complied with and soldiers were posted at the prefectoral office for the purpose of offering protection. See idem.

2207. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the Trial Chamber erred in simply assessing Nsabimana's "theoretically vested" powers without considering whether he had the ability and the capacity to act in the specific circumstances of the case. The Trial Chamber properly assessed whether a possibility was open to Nsabimana to call on the Rwandan army or the gendarmes to protect refugees and found that:

> Nsabimana in fact requisitioned forces around 5-15 June 1994. At that time, 5-6 soldiers were seconded to the [Butare Prefecture Office] under the command of a female lieutenant. The evidence establishes that these soldiers forestalled attacks against those taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office. This shows that Nsabimana, pursuant to his powers as préfet, had the ability to requisition forces that could forestall the attacks.[5130]

Having made this assessment, the Trial Chamber then determined that "Nsabimana failed to take any steps to prevent the ongoing attacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office] for a significant period between the end of April and mid-June 1994."[5131]

2208. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, it was open to a reasonable trier of fact to rely on the actual positioning of soldiers or gendarmes at the prefectoral office, at Nsabimana's request, in June 1994 to find that he had the ability to take steps to prevent the attacks between the end of April and mid-June 1994. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nsabimana's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider that soldiers were participating in attacks in Butare Prefecture, which, according to him, should have raised doubts about his ability to requisition them earlier than June 1994. Nsabimana ignores evidence referred to throughout the Trial Judgement indicating the Trial Chamber's awareness that soldiers and/or gendarmes participated in attacks in Butare Prefecture and at the prefectoral office specifically.[5132] Likewise, Nsabimana fails to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber was required to consider whether the security forces ultimately placed at the prefectoral office were not from Butare Prefecture.

2209. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber does not find merit in Nsabimana's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he "requisition[ed]" soldiers according to Rwandan law. Nsabimana appears to argue that his ability to obtain security forces in June 1994 resulted from the coincidental confluence of circumstances, rather than his ability to do so based on Rwandan law.[5133] However, the Trial Chamber clearly considered the evidence of Nsabimana and others as to how [5133] Nsabimana avers that, according to Article 32 of the 11 March 1975 Law, the prefect may make a verbal requisition but must confirm this in writing. See Nsabimana Appeal Brief, para. 393. Nsabimana submits, however, that his actions did not amount to a requisition because: (i) he used his own relationships, namely through Colonels Munyengango and Mugemanyi, to have soldiers from outside Butare posted at the prefectoral office; (ii) the Trial Chamber did not security forces were obtained for the purpose of protecting refugees at the prefectoral office between 5 and 15 June 1994.[5134] Nsabimana does not demonstrate on appeal that, in light of the record, no reasonable trier of fact could have found that he had the de jure authority as prefect and the actual capacity to obtain security for the refugees at the prefectoral office between the end of April and mid-June 1994.

2211. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nsabimana's arguments regarding his ability to act as it pertains to his responsibility for aiding and abetting by omission.

(d) Conclusion

2212. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he had a legal duty to act, that his failure to act had a substantial effect on the realisation of the crimes committed during attacks at the prefectoral office, and that he had the ability to act.

2. Mens Rea (Grounds 6 in part, 7, 12 and 13 in part, 14)

2214. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he had knowledge: (i) of the night-time attacks perpetrated against the Tutsis seeking refuge at the prefectoral office; (ii) of the perpetrators' genocidal intent; and (iii) that his failure to act assisted the commission of the crimes at the prefectoral office.[5138] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Knowledge of Crimes

2215. In finding that Nsabimana knew of the night-time attacks perpetrated against the Tutsis seeking refuge at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber relied on: (i) Exhibit P113, a letter written by Nsabimana entitled "The Truth about the Massacres in Butare", which he sent to Prosecution Expert Witness Alison Des Forges after telephone conversations in 1996, and Exhibit P114, the transcript of a journalist's interview of Nsabimana taken in October 1994; (ii) Nsabimana's testimony; and (iii) the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TK, RE, SS, SU, and QBP.[5139] As to the timing of Nsabimana's knowledge, the Trial Chamber concluded that he "was aware of the night-time attacks at the [prefectoral office] and he was presented with multiple requests for assistance from Tutsi refugees starting, at least, around the end of May 1994."[5140] It further concluded that, "[b]ased upon Nsabimana's own admissions and the open and notorious nature of the attacks, […] Nsabimana was actually aware of the attacks even earlier."[5141]

2216. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding he had knowledge of the night-time attacks against the Tutsis at the prefectoral office based on its reliance on: (i) Exhibits P113 and P114;[5142] (ii) his testimony;[5143] and (iii) the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, SU, and QBP as well as the "open and notorious nature of the attacks".[5144]

(i) Exhibits P113 and P114

2217. In making its finding that Nsabimana was aware of the night-time attacks at the prefectoral office earlier than at the end of May 1994, the Trial Chamber relied on an excerpt of Exhibit P113 in which Nsabimana stated that "there were isolated cases of disappearances at night" which he attributed to unknown soldiers and hooligans, and a portion of Exhibit P114 reflecting that

Nsabimana made a list of people living at the prefectoral office so that he could check if there had been problems the night before.[5145] In the view of the Trial Chamber, Exhibits P113 and P114 contained the writings of Nsabimana and were of "significant probative weight".[5146]

2218. Nsabimana argues that the Trial Chamber's reliance on Exhibits P113 and P114 was unreasonable because: (i) the Trial Chamber decontextualised his statement in Exhibit P113 that there were "isolated cases of disappearances at night" and misrepresented it as referring to the refugees at the prefectoral office when instead it was a generic reference to the situation in Butare Prefecture as a whole;[5147] and (ii) Exhibit P114 only indicates that Nsabimana prepared a list of the refugees at the prefectoral office in case there were "problems" at night and not that abductions in fact occurred, and reflects that the refugees were not attacked or killed, and that their number increased, which reinforces that the prefectoral office was safe.[5148]

2220. The Appeals Chamber observes that when Nsabimana's statement in Exhibit P113 that there were "isolated cases of disappearances at night" is read alongside the rest of his letter, it is not clear that Nsabimana was referring specifically to the refugees at the prefectoral office. Rather, the statement appears in the context of discussing the security situation in Butare Prefecture in general and prior to describing the mobilisation of military police to apprehend looters.[5150] Notably, Exhibit P113 contains a subsequent section focused in particular on the events at the prefectoral office in which Nsabimana states that he protected the refugees and makes no mention of any abductions, disappearances, killings, or rapes.[5151] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that no

Nsabimana also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider his statements in Exhibit P113 that: (i) he attempted to move the refugees from the prefectoral office to Nyaruhengeri Commune, and that thereafter some refugees returned to the prefectoral office following threats from the local population, which indicated that there was insecurity everywhere; (ii) he was determined to protect the refugees; and (iii) the refugees considered the prefectoral office safe. See Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 190-192, referring to Exhibit P113, p. 9. In this regard, Nsabimana emphasises that the prefectoral office was an open place and that the refugees were free to move around as they wished, so the decrease in the number of refugees did not necessarily mean that they were killed. See ibid., paras. 193 (referring to Witness SU, T. 22 October 2002 pp. 60-63), 194.

reasonable trier of fact could have considered the quoted excerpt of Exhibit P113 as a basis for the finding that Nsabimana knew of the night-time attacks against the refugees at the prefectoral office.[5152]

2221. Turning to Exhibit P114, the Appeals Chamber recalls its finding that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that this purported transcript of an interview with Nsabimana reflected his own views and contained a faithful reflection of what he said during the interview, and that he had acknowledged the document as authentic.[5153] Given that there is no indication that Nsabimana acknowledged or authenticated the statement in Exhibit P114 reflecting that he had made a list of people living at the prefectoral office so that he could check if there had been problems the night before[5154] and that no evidence was led through Nsabimana's testimony to this effect,[5155] the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on this aspect of Exhibit P114 as evincing Nsabimana's knowledge of the night-time attacks at the prefectoral office prior to the end of May 1994.

2222. The Appeals Chamber will assess the impact, if any, of the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Exhibits P113 and P114 after having reviewed all of Nsabimana's challenges concerning his knowledge of the night-time attacks at the prefectoral office.

(ii) Nsabimana's Testimony

2223. The Trial Chamber relied on Nsabimana's "own admissions", in addition to the "open and notorious nature of the attacks" at the prefectoral office, to conclude that Nsabimana knew of the attacks before the end of May 1994.[5156] Specifically, the Trial Chamber noted that "Nsabimana testified that he responded to the refugees' requests for assistance by posting soldiers at the [Butare Prefecture Office] around 5 June 1994" but "admitted in his testimony that a woman came to his office seeking assistance around 15 June 1994".[5157] According to the Trial Chamber, this called into question "Nsabimana's credibility as to when he knew about the night-time attacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office] because he could not have responded to their requests before he received them".[5158] In addition, the Trial Chamber assigned importance to Nsabimana's admission "during his testimony that he was not at peace with himself when he went home from the [Butare Prefecture Office] during this period because he feared that he may not find the refugees when he returned in the morning".[5159]

[5155] The Appeals Chamber observes that his testimony concerning a list of refugees at the prefectoral office appears to be limited to one that was made in preparation for their transfer to Nyange. See Nsabimana, T. 9 October 2006 p. 84, T. 10 October 2006 p. 4.

2225. Nsabimana further contends that the Trial Chamber misstated his testimony that he was not at peace with himself when he went home from the prefectoral office during this period because he feared he may not find the refugees when he returned in the morning.[5165] He argues that his original French testimony was inaccurately translated into English and that the verb tense of the original version indicates that he knew of the attacks only after their completion, rather than at the time of their perpetration.[5166] Nsabimana adds that the allusions in his testimony to acts of violence and

The Appeals Chamber notes that in the testimony referred to by the Trial Chamber, Nsabimana does not refer to the "refugees" but to "them". However, the Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber substituted "them" with the term "refugees" as that was its interpretation of his statement and to provide clarity.

massacres relied on by the Trial Chamber were to those that had occurred throughout the prefecture and not just at the prefectoral office.[5167]

2226. The Prosecution responds that, contrary to Nsabimana's understanding, the Trial Chamber did not conclude that Nsabimana placed soldiers at the prefectoral office based on his testimony that a woman spoke with him on 15 June 1994 because it found that this incident was not the catalyst for him doing so.[5168] It argues that Nsabimana's assertion that the Trial Chamber should have accepted his evidence that no refugees informed him of the attacks fails to identify any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence.[5169] The Prosecution further responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded from his acknowledgement that he was not at peace with himself that he was aware that the refugees were being attacked during the night.[5170] It also asserts that Nsabimana's contention that his references to violence were to the entire prefecture rather than the prefectoral office specifically is speculative.[5171]

2227. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in assessing Nsabimana's testimony as to the events at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber stated that Nsabimana testified that he posted soldiers there around 5 June 1994 in response to refugees' requests for assistance.[5172] However, the excerpts of Nsabimana's testimony referred to by the Trial Chamber do not support this conclusion. Rather, Nsabimana testified that he placed the soldiers at the prefectoral office after becoming concerned about reprisals following the killing of the bishops at Kabgayi, seeing an "ill soldier" among the refugees at the prefectoral office, and meeting with Colonels Mugemanyi and Munyengango.[5173] Nsabimana also testified that, around 15 June 1994, a woman mentioned to him that there was a soldier amongst the refugees, but that by this point he had already posted the soldiers, and that he was already aware of the presence of the soldier.[5174] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the evidence called "into question Nsabimana's credibility as to when he knew about the night-time attacks at the [Butare Prefecture Office] because he could not have responded to [the refugees'] requests before he received them"[5175] as his evidence reflects that he did not post soldiers on the basis of requests from the refugees but for other reasons.[5176]

2229. The Appeals Chamber also finds that Nsabimana fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on his acknowledgement that "he was not at peace with himself when he went home from the [prefectoral office] during this period because he feared that he may not find the refugees when he returned in the morning."[5178] Nsabimana principally alleges that the Trial Chamber erred because it relied upon an erroneous translation into English of his testimony. However, he does not demonstrate that the English and French versions present materially different information as to when he became aware of the attacks at the prefectoral office.[5179] Nsabimana fails to appreciate that the significance of this comment arises from his statement that he worried about what he would find when he returned in the morning, reflecting contemporaneous knowledge of, and concerns about, the attacks at the prefectoral office.

2230. The Appeals Chamber is similarly not persuaded by Nsabimana's assertion that the Trial Chamber unreasonably read his comment as referring to the refugees at the prefectoral office when [5176] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber stated in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement entitled "Posting of Gendarmes or Soldiers" that Nsabimana admitted in Exhibit P113 that he provided gendarmes to protect the refugees, and that Witness Fergal Keane stated that Nsabimana said to him on approximately 15 June 1994 that he had posted soldiers at the prefectoral office to protect the refugees. See Trial Judgement, para. 2808, referring to Exhibit P113, p. K0016631, Fergal Keane, T. 25 September 2006 p. 47, T. 28 September 2006 p. 21. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nsabimana does not explain his motivation for originally placing the soldiers at the prefectoral office beyond protecting the refugees.

[5177] See Trial Judgement, para. 2803, referring to Nsabimana, T. 10 October 2006 pp. 16, 24.
[5179] Specifically, Nsabimana argues that his testimony was mistranslated from French into English and that the sentence "you are aware that massacres took place" in the English transcript results from an incorrect translation of his testimony, which the Trial Chamber misinterpreted as reflecting that "Nsabimana testified that after he found out that massacres were still carried out during the day and night", whereas he stated in French that "même une personne qui vous amène une information comme ça, et vous savez que les massacres ont eu lieu", which should have been translated into English as: "you know massacres have taken place". He alleges that the correct transcription of his original French testimony indicates that he knew about the attacks only after they were carried out as opposed to when they were ongoing. Nsabimana also points out that this comment formed a small part of his testimony and argues that the Trial Chamber "could not conclude, solely on the basis of [his] testimony, that [he] was aware of the attacks and that he posted soldiers because he knew about the night-time attacks at the [prefectoral] office." See Nsabimana Notice of Appeal, paras. 54-58 (emphasis in original); Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 147-153 (emphasis in original); Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 69-73. However, this contention is meritless as the Trial Chamber relied not only on Nsabimana's testimony but also on other evidence demonstrating his knowledge of the attacks.

he was in fact speaking about Butare Prefecture as a whole. The relevant transcripts show that he made the statement in response to a question specifically asking about refugees at the prefectoral office.[5180]

2231. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in its interpretation of Nsabimana's testimony as to why he placed the soldiers at the prefectoral office and that, as a result, it erred in concluding that his credibility was "call[ed] into question […] as to when he knew about the night-time attacks" at the Butare Prefecture Office. However, in light of the Trial Chamber's reliance on other aspects of Nsabimana's testimony to find that he was actually aware of night-time attacks at the prefectoral office earlier than at the end of May 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

(iii) Prosecution Evidence and Open and Notorious Nature of the Attacks

2233. Nsabimana contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying upon the testimonies of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, SU, and QBP in finding that he had knowledge of the night-time attacks.[5187] He points out that their evidence constitutes hearsay, which, in his view, should have cast doubt on its reliability.[5188] In addition, he highlights that Witnesses SD and QBQ testified that they did not inform Nsabimana about the abuses at the prefectoral office, and that Witnesses SS and SU only stated that a delegation of women went to see him and that their evidence could not demonstrate that this delegation in fact saw him.[5189]

the fact that refugees approached Nsabimana for help and were only indirectly aware of the nature and content of these discussions with Nsabimana.[5195]

2238. Nsabimana also fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that he knew of the attacks in light of Witnesses SD's and QBQ's testimonies, which in his view contradict other evidence that the attacks were reported to him. Given the "large number of refugees" at the prefectoral office between May and June 1994[5198] and the general nature of the evidence of Witnesses SD and QBQ that violence was not reported to Nsabimana,[5199] Nsabimana does not demonstrate that their testimonies undermine the Trial Chamber's reliance on the testimonies of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, QBP, and SU.

The alleged abductions you referred to yesterday, did you report them to [the] préfet or anyone from the préfectural offices on the morrow of each time it occurred? A. The events were happening in front of his offices, his préfecture. We had nothing to report to him, he knew what was going on."); Witness SD, T. 18 March 2003 p. 18 ("Q. Madam Witness, when work started in the morning, one way or another, were which "paint[ed] a clear picture of unfathomable depravity and sadism".[5200] While the Trial Chamber's conclusions reflect that Tutsi refugees were systematically abducted from the prefectoral office and killed,[5201] the Trial Chamber also credited evidence that Tutsis were physically assaulted, raped, and killed in and around the prefectoral office's premises,[5202] and that Tutsi refugees were killed and thrown into pits during attacks there.[5203] Nsabimana's unreferenced contentions as to the absence of blood stains or mass graves at the prefectoral office simply ignore the evidence the Trial Chamber accepted without demonstrating that its conclusions about the open and notorious nature of the attacks were unreasonable.[5204] Indeed, while Nsabimana emphasises that Witness QBQ testified that refugees did not inform him of the violence, the Appeals Chamber observes that the witness testified that there was nothing to report to Nsabimana because "he knew what was going on".[5205]

2240. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, QBP, and SU and "the open and notorious nature of the attacks" to infer Nsabimana's knowledge of the night-time attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office "even earlier" than "the end of May 1994".

(iv) Conclusion

2241. In light of the evidence of Witnesses TK, RE, SS, SU, and QBP and "the open and notorious nature of the attacks" at the prefectoral office relied upon by the Trial Chamber in determining Nsabimana's knowledge of the attacks at the prefectoral office prior to the end of May 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's errors in the assessment of, and reliance on, Exhibits P113 and P114 as well as parts of Nsabimana's testimony have not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The Appeals Chamber concludes that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that he had knowledge of the attacks at the prefectoral office prior to the end of May 1994.

(b) Knowledge of Genocidal Intent of the Perpetrators

2242. In the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber concluded that Nsabimana was aware of the genocidal intent of the perpetrators who killed the Tutsis abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during attacks carried out by Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe.[5206] In this regard, the Trial Chamber considered Nsabimana's: (i) knowledge that those taking refuge at the prefectoral office "were Tutsis and on multiple occasions, they asked him directly for protection from the ongoing attacks"; (ii) knowledge that Tutsi refugees "were being abducted, raped and killed"; and (iii) admission that "he was aware of a plan to kill Tutsis, that Tutsis were being killed, and that the militia had been trained for this purpose."[5207]

2243. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was aware of the perpetrators' genocidal intent in relation to the attacks at the prefectoral office.[5208] In particular, he argues that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Exhibits P113 and P114 reflect that he was aware of a plan to kill Tutsis, that Tutsis were being killed, that the militia had been trained for this purpose, and therefore that he was aware of the perpetrators' genocidal intent.[5209]

[5208] Nsabimana Notice of Appeal, paras. 105-107; Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 428-430; Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 153-178. In his reply brief, Nsabimana submits that, had he been aware of the perpetrators' genocidal intent or of a plan to kill Tutsis, he would never have let the refugees stay at the prefectoral office, allowed the refugees to return to the prefectoral office from the EER and Nyange, posted soldiers at the prefectoral office, or directly engaged in evacuating Tutsis orphans given the risks that these actions would have entailed. See Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 169-172. The Appeals Chamber finds that these arguments are speculative and demonstrate no error on the part of the Trial Chamber.
[5209] Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 401, 429, 445, 446, 450-482; Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 153-155, 176, 177. See also AT. 16 April 2015 p. 64. Nsabimana further contends that the Trial Chamber unreasonably relied on his participation in his swearing-in ceremony as prefect of Butare to find that he was aware of a plan to kill Tutsis and, as a consequence, of the genocidal intent of the perpetrators of the attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office. See Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 401-427; Nsabimana Reply Brief, paras. 156-168, 173-175. As the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber relied on Exhibits P113 and P114 to find that Nsabimana admitted that he was aware of a plan to kill Tutsis, and not on his participation in his swearing-in ceremony, the Appeals Chamber summarily dismisses his argument.

2245. As regards Exhibit P114, Nsabimana contends that the Trial Chamber's reliance on excerpts of this document was erroneous given its questionable authenticity.[5213] Alternatively, he argues that the document, created after the genocide, reflects hindsight rather than contemporaneous views, and that none of the statements reflects an admission of his awareness of a plan to exterminate Tutsis.[5214]

2247. The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Nsabimana's submissions that the Trial Chamber erred in its interpretation of Exhibit P113. The Trial Chamber cited the following excerpt from Exhibit P113 in support of its finding that "Nsabimana admitted that he was aware of a plan to kill Tutsis, that Tutsis were being killed, and that the militia had been trained for this purpose":

> In everybody's opinion the final whistle was blown by the architects of the plan… [A]mong those victimized for being Tutsi and well respected persons were the businessmen Semanzi, Rangira, Kayiranga, and Deogratias.[5217]

The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber extracted the first part of the excerpt from a section entitled "Butare was not spared", where Nsabimana discussed the assassinations of moderate politicians in Butare Prefecture, concluding that "[i]t was necessary to find a political reason to start the massacre hence the death of President [H]abyalimana."[5218] The second part of the excerpt was taken from a section entitled "What happened in reality" and from a paragraph stating that "[s]ince the MRND party was not entrenched in Butare, its leaders wanted to weaken other parties by way of intimidation and advocating regionalism, in order to perpetuate the massacres."[5219] The Appeals Chamber observes that this paragraph and the remainder of the section describe the killings of Tutsis, moderate Hutus, and those who supported the RPF.[5220] On this basis, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Exhibit P113 to find that Nsabimana "admitted" to being aware of a plan to kill Tutsis. Beyond providing different interpretations of Exhibit P113, including the unsubstantiated position that these remarks were made in hindsight and do not reflect what he knew during the genocide, Nsabimana fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis of Exhibit P113.

2250. In light of these conclusions, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that he was aware of the perpetrators' genocidal intent.

(c) Knowledge that His Failure to Act Assisted in the Commission of the Crimes

2251. In finding that Nsabimana knew that his failure to act assisted in the commission of the crimes, the Trial Chamber noted that "Nsabimana knew the attacks were occurring at night when he was not at the [prefectoral office] and when there were likely to be fewer witnesses."[5225] It further noted that he testified that after learning of the massacres, he would go home at night fearing that the refugees would not be at the prefectoral office when he returned in the morning.[5226] The Trial

Chamber stated that "the perpetrators of these attacks were given free reign to repeatedly attack the [Butare Prefecture Office] for a significant period between the end of April and mid-June 1994."[5227]

2253. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nsabimana knew that his failure to act assisted in the commission of the crimes against the refugees at the prefectoral office.[5231]

2255. As regards Nsabimana's challenge to the Trial Chamber's findings pertaining to the mental element of the crime of genocide, Nsabimana fails to appreciate that the mens rea requirements differ depending on the mode of liability. The Appeals Chamber recalls that "the required mens rea for aiding and abetting by omission is that: (1) the aider and abettor must know that his omission assists in the commission of the crime of the principal perpetrator; and (2) he must be aware of the essential elements of the crime which was ultimately committed by the principal."[5233] office.[5236] Nsabimana's responsibility for aiding and abetting genocide did not require proof that he possessed genocidal intent. Consequently, his contention in this regard is dismissed.

(d) Conclusion

2257. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nsabimana has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he possessed the requisite mens rea for the mode of liability of aiding and abetting by omission.

3. Conclusion

2258. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the relevant parts of Grounds 6 and 13 as well as Grounds 7 through 10, 12, and 14 of Nsabimana's appeal in their entirety.

VII. APPEAL OF ALPHONSE NTEZIRYAYO

2260. Nteziryayo raises challenges related to his indictment and submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence and his responsibility for the speeches he made during Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and at the meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes. He also contends that the Trial Chamber conducted a prejudicial assessment of the evidence, invalidating his convictions. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

A. Indictment (Grounds 1, 2, and 3)

2261. Nteziryayo submits that he was not charged with the criminal conduct on the basis of which he was convicted or lacked notice thereof.[5238] He further contends that the cumulative effect of the defects in the Indictment "not only rendered the totality of the trial process unfair and caused [him] substantial prejudice, but also invalidate the substantive findings of the Trial Judgment."[5239]

2262. The Appeals Chamber will examine Nteziryayo's submissions related to notice of the allegation concerning Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony before turning to his submissions related to notice of the allegations concerning the meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes.

1. Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony (Ground 1)

2264. In summarising the Prosecution case against Nteziryayo with respect to this allegation of incitement, the Trial Chamber specifically referred to paragraphs 5.8, 6.31, and 6.34 of the Indictment.[5242] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 were being pursued against Nteziryayo under all counts, including Count 4, pursuant to Article 6(1) of the [5238] Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, paras. 7-36; Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 8-95. To facilitate readability, the Appeals Chamber will use the term "Indictment" in the body text of the present section when referring to the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment.

[5242] Trial Judgement, paras. 4260, 4266-4270, fns. 11640, 11641. Paragraphs 5.8, 6.31, and 6.34 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment read as follows:

> 6.31 Between April and June 1994, Colonel Alphonse Nteziryayo, the official in charge of civil defence for Butare préfecture, incited the population to slaughter the Tutsi in Butare préfecture.
> 6.34 On 17 June 1994, Alphonse Nteziryayo was appointed Préfet of Butare by the Interim Government, replacing Sylvain Nsabimana. After the handing over of office on 21 June 1994, Préfet Alphonse Nteziryayo continued to incite the population to "finish off" the enemy and its "accomplices". He did this notably during the swearing-in ceremony of the Bourgmestre of Muganza, Elie Ndayambaje.

Statute.[5243] However, paragraph 6.34 was not being pursued under Count 4 or any other count in the Indictment.[5244]

2266. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him on the basis of his utterances at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony since this allegation was not charged as a crime in the Indictment.[5251] He contends that the Trial Chamber's statement that it could not make findings against him with respect to paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment because it was not pleaded in support of any count precluded it from basing any conviction on the contents of this paragraph.[5252] According to Nteziryayo, once it declined to rely on paragraph 6.34, the Trial Chamber could not "rely heavily on it in 'curing' paragraphs which otherwise were hopelessly defective" without running against its own conclusion in relation to paragraph 6.34 and being "in conflict with principle and fairness."[5253] He argues that the Trial Chamber's attempt to reintroduce in Count 4 through post-indictment disclosures the allegation in paragraph 6.34 – which was expressly excluded from that count – "amounted to the introduction of a separate charge."[5254] Comparing the situation addressed in the Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008 with the situation at hand, Nteziryayo submits that the defect in the Indictment was not curable through any other means than an amendment of the Indictment and that the Trial Chamber erred in finding otherwise.[5255]

In his notice of appeal, Nteziryayo also argued that, assuming arguendo that the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment was curable, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that it was cured regarding the allegation of incitement at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and in failing to assess his prejudice. See Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, paras. 8, 15, 16. However, Nteziryayo did not develop these claims in his appeal brief and it is clear from his submissions in reply that he has abandoned them. See infra, para. 2268.

[5257] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1446.
[5258] The Prosecution highlights that, in this case and contrary to the situation in the Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008, the Trial Chamber did not rely on a paragraph of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment that had not been pleaded in support of the respective count and that the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment contained a vague and curable count. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1434-1436; AT. 17 April 2015 p. 24. It also responds that Nteziryayo misrepresents the Trial Judgement when arguing that the Trial Chamber adopted inconsistent approaches to the issue of notice. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1433.

the case on appeal, which is that the defect identified by the Chamber was not curable" and are, therefore, "irrelevant […] because they do not respond to [his] appeal."[5260]

[5260] Nteziryayo Reply Brief, paras. 5, 6. See also ibid., para. 16; AT. 17 April 2015 pp. 8, 40. At the appeals hearing, Nteziryayo further submitted that it was erroneous on the part of the Trial Chamber to rely on paragraph 6.31 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment to plead crimes committed while he was prefect because that paragraph pleaded crimes committed while he was an official of the civil defence. See AT. 17 April 2015 pp. 3-5, 10, 41.
[5262] Trial Judgement, paras. 4268-4270, 4283. In light of its conclusion below regarding Nteziryayo's understanding of the charge against him, the Appeals Chamber deems it unnecessary to address Nteziryayo's new argument raised during the appeals hearing related to paragraph 6.31 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment in the context of the allegation of incitement at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. See supra, fn. 5260; infra, paras. 2273, 2274.
[5263] See Muvunyi Trial Judgement of 12 September 2006, paras. 410, 427; Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008, paras. 153, 156. Nteziryayo also fails to appreciate that, unlike in this case, the relevant count in the Muvunyi proceeding was not found to be vague but, instead, "narrowly tailored" to one specific incident. See Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008, para. 155.
[5264] The Appeals Chamber also accepts Nteziryayo's submissions that the Trial Chamber adopted different approaches in relation to paragraphs 6.34 and 6.39 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment. In another part of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that, because paragraph 6.39 was not pleaded in support of any count against Nsabimana, it "shall not consider the evidence concerning the allegation in Paragraph 6.39 of the Indictment." See Trial Judgement, para. 3840. Unlike its approach to the allegation set forth in paragraph 6.34, the Trial Chamber did not treat the allegation in paragraph 6.39 as a material fact that could underpin broader allegations of Nsabimana's responsibility in the killing of Tutsis pleaded elsewhere in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment and determined that the evidence related to this allegation shall not be considered. Compare ibid., para. 3840 with ibid., paras. 4267, 4268. However, for the reasons discussed below in paragraphs 2273 and 2274, the Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber's inconsistent approach had any impact on its decision regarding Nteziryayo's notice of the charge against him concerning Ndayambaje's Swearing-In-Ceremony.
[5265] See Ntabakuze Appeal Judgement, para. 106; Karera Appeal Judgement, para. 365; Muvunyi Appeal Judgement of 29 August 2008, para. 156.

allegation in paragraph 6.34 supported any particular count, the Prosecution may have misled him in believing that the allegation was not charged as a crime.

2271. The Appeals Chamber, however, stresses that the fundamental question when examining allegations of lack of notice is whether or not the accused was adequately informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him so as to be able to prepare a meaningful defence.[5266] The Appeals Chamber's case law on notice of the charges was developed in this spirit and was not intended to permit mere technicalities of pleading to intrude where it is clear that the accused was informed of the charges against him precisely and in a timely manner.

2272. In the present case, the phrasing of paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment made it clear that the Prosecution alleged that Nteziryayo engaged in criminal conduct at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony which could support the charge of direct and public incitement to commit genocide. Despite the fact that paragraph 6.34 was not relied upon in the charging section of the Indictment, the Prosecution, before and after the filing of the Indictment, repeatedly indicated that Nteziryayo's utterances at this ceremony were part of its case.[5267]

2273. Nteziryayo's conduct at trial also unambiguously shows that he understood that he was charged with this allegation. In his opening statement, in particular, Nteziryayo expressly referred to paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment as one of the basis of the charges against him.[5268] A review of the record also reflects that Nteziryayo was able to undertake detailed cross-examination of the Prosecution witnesses who testified about his utterances at the ceremony,[5269] that he called witnesses to refute the allegation that his words at Ndayambaje's Swearing-in Ceremony were inflammatory,[5270] and that he testified on this point.[5271] It is also significant that, in his closing brief, Nteziryayo did not refer to the allegation of incitement at the ceremony in the list of incidents which he claimed to have no notice of,[5272] and that it was only during his closing arguments that he pointed out that paragraph 6.34 was not pleaded in support of any counts.[5273]

The Appeals Chamber also observes that Nteziryayo does not argue that he objected to the evidence of these witnesses for lack of notice of the charge.

2274. Against this background, Nteziryayo cannot reasonably claim that he did not understand at trial that the Prosecution intended to prove that he was guilty of direct and public incitement to commit genocide through his conduct at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and that he was misled by the absence of reference to paragraph 6.34 in the charging section of the Indictment. Nteziryayo is correct in his submission that, given the significance of the Indictment, it shall be "presumed to be a full, accurate and true reflection of the drafter's intention and free from oversight and error."[5274] However, in the situation at hand, it is obvious that the Prosecution mistakenly omitted to refer to paragraph 6.34 in the charging section of the Indictment and that it was the Prosecution's consistent intention throughout the case to prosecute Nteziryayo for his utterances at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2275. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber ultimately erred in finding that he was put on notice that he was charged with direct and public incitement to commit genocide based on his utterances at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and that he did not suffer prejudice.[5275]

2. Muyaga and Kibayi Meetings (Grounds 2 and 3)

2276. The Trial Chamber found that, around mid-June, Nteziryayo, in his capacity as Butare Prefect, attended a public meeting in Muyaga Commune at which he made a speech inciting the population to kill Tutsis.[5276] The Trial Chamber further found that, around mid to late June 1994,

While Nteziryayo argued in his closing brief that the testimonies of Witnesses FAG, FAL, QAF, and QAL should be excluded, his request was limited to meetings and inciting speeches in Muganza between April and early June 1994. See ibid., para. 765(9).

[5274] See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 20.
[5275] As noted above, Nteziryayo made it clear in his reply brief that he no longer argued that the vagueness of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment regarding his criminal responsibility in relation to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony was not cured and did not develop any argument to demonstrate that he was not put on notice of all necessary material facts underpinning the charge under Count 4. See supra, para. 2268.
[5276] Trial Judgement, paras. 3674, 5945, 6022.

Nteziryayo, again in his capacity as Butare Prefect, attended a public meeting on a football pitch next to the Kibayi commune office in Nyabisigara Cellule, Mukindo Sector, at which he incited the population to kill the remaining Tutsi survivors in the commune.[5277] The Trial Chamber found that Nteziryayo's speeches at these meetings made to large, fully public assemblies constituted a direct appeal to kill Tutsis and, on this basis, convicted him of direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Count 4).[5278]

2277. In summarising the Prosecution case against Nteziryayo with respect to these allegations of incitement, the Trial Chamber specifically referred to paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 of the Indictment.[5279] As noted above, the allegations in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 were being pursued against Nteziryayo under Count 4 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[5280]

2278. The Trial Chamber noted that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 of the Indictment failed to specify the locations and dates at which Nteziryayo was alleged to have incited the population to kill Tutsis and found that they were therefore defective.[5281] The Trial Chamber nevertheless determined that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 were cured of their defects regarding the meetings at Muyaga and Kibayi Communes through subsequent Prosecution's disclosures and concluded that Nteziryayo did not suffer any prejudice.[5282]

2279. Nteziryayo submits that his responsibility in relation to the Muyaga and Kibayi Communes meetings was not pleaded in the Indictment and that such defect was neither curable nor cured.[5283] He argues that the material facts omitted from the Indictment could on their own support separate charges and that their addition amounted to an impermissible expansion of the charges and a radical transformation of the case.[5284] At the appeals hearing, Nteziryayo further submitted that it was

The Appeals Chamber understands that, despite its reference to these paragraphs in several instances, the Trial Chamber did not rely on paragraphs 6.32, 6.53, and 6.59 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment in support of Nteziryayo's convictions for committing direct and public incitement through his speeches at the Muyaga and Kibayi meetings. See ibid., paras. 3450, 3495 ("the Chamber considers that Paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment relating to incitement, as well as Paragraphs 6.53 and 6.59 relating to aiding and abetting were cured".) Nteziryayo argues that the situation is analogous to that of the allegation related to specific attacks at the Groupe scolaire which was excluded by the Trial Chamber based on the Prosecution's failure to plead those attacks in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 46, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 1815. Nteziryayo, however, fails to appreciate that, in contrast with the allegations of direct and public incitement erroneous on the part of the Trial Chamber to rely on paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment as giving notice of crimes committed while he was prefect because that paragraph pleaded crimes committed while he was an official of the civil defence.[5285]

2280. The Prosecution responds that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 of the Indictment pleaded Nteziryayo's incitement in Butare between April and June 1994 and that the time and place of Nteziryayo's incitements were material facts, not separate charges.[5286] It also responds that post-indictment information cured the vagueness of the Indictment and that Nteziryayo was not prejudiced.[5287]

2281. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Indictment is manifestly defective in relation to the allegations concerning Nteziryayo's speeches at the Muyaga and Kibayi meetings. The Prosecution failed to specify the means by which Nteziryayo was alleged to have incited the population as well as the occurrence of public meetings and their locations. Furthermore, the date range of "[b]etween April to June 1994" is too expansive in light of the absence of other material facts relating to the allegations. The Appeals Chamber also accepts Nteziryayo's submission that, because paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment expressly referred to his responsibility for inciting the population to slaughter the Tutsis in Butare Prefecture between April and June 1994 in his capacity as "Colonel" and while he was "the official in charge of civil defence" for the prefecture, this paragraph could not be reasonably relied upon as giving him notice of a charge related to his responsibility for crimes committed in his capacity as prefect of Butare.

2282. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that the allegations concerning Nteziryayo's speeches at the Muyaga and Kibayi meetings did not constitute new charges but fell within the broader allegation relating to Nteziryayo's public incitement to exterminate the Tutsi population in Butare Prefecture between April and July 1994 expressly pleaded in paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the material facts which the Trial Chamber took into account in convicting Nteziryayo represented a radical transformation of the Prosecution case, nor that these facts could have, on their own, supported separate charges. As vague as the charge set out in paragraph 5.8 was, the Indictment nonetheless pleaded the charge for which Nteziryayo was ultimately convicted, namely his responsibility for publicly inciting the extermination of Tutsis in Butare Prefecture from April to July 1994.

to commit genocide, the Trial Chamber concluded that his participation in attacks was not pleaded under any counts in the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Nteziryayo's argument in this respect.

2283. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that the defects in the Indictment regarding Nteziryayo's responsibility for direct and public incitement to commit genocide at meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes were curable. The Appeals Chamber will now turn to consider whether, for each meeting, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects were cured by the provision of clear, consistent, and timely information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge.

(a) Muyaga Commune Meeting

2285. In reaching its conclusion, the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries both stated that, around 5 June 1994, Nteziryayo attended a meeting in Muyaga Commune at which he made a speech asking the population to kill the Tutsis.[5290] It observed that Witness QBY's Statement indicated that, between 4 and 5 June 1994, Nteziryayo spoke at a meeting at the Muyaga commune office, while Witness FAB's Statement indicated that Nteziryayo came to Muyaga Commune between 3 and 5 June 1994 to hold a meeting and that, in his speech, he stated that "the Hutus should kill all the Tutsis and not spare anyone."[5291] Considering that Witnesses QBY and FAB first testified over three years after these disclosures, the Trial Chamber concluded that paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment was cured of its defects.[5292]

The un-highlighted copy of Witness FAB's Statement was also admitted into evidence on 29 April 2004 as Exhibit D218 (confidential) ("Witness FAB's Statement").
[5290] Trial Judgement, para. 3483.
[5291] Trial Judgement, para. 3483.
[5292] Trial Judgement, paras. 3483-3485. The Trial Chamber also referred to paragraphs 6.53 and 6.59 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment as being cured of their defects but, as noted above, the Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber intended to rely only on paragraphs 5.8 and 6.31 as regards Nteziryayo's responsibility for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide. See supra, fn. 5282. As mentioned above, the Appeals Chamber has nonetheless found that paragraph 6.31 could not be reasonably relied upon as giving him notice of a charge related to his responsibility for crimes committed in his capacity as prefect of Butare. See supra, para. 2281.

2286. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that timely, clear, and consistent information relating to Muyaga Commune cured the defects in the Indictment.[5293] In particular, he argues that because Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries and statements all make, "with relative precision", an allegation of a meeting in Muyaga Commune sometime between 3 and 5 June 1994, these documents could not put him on notice of a meeting in Muyaga Commune that occurred on or after 21 June 1994 as found by the Trial Chamber.[5294] Nteziryayo argues that, since the fact that he was sworn-in as prefect on 21 June 1994 was pleaded in the Indictment, if it was the Prosecution case that this meeting occurred after his appointment, the Prosecution should have reflected it in the Indictment.[5295] Pointing out that the Prosecution failed to provide the requisite notice in its opening statement or any other filing and that the Prosecution case remained unclear throughout trial,[5296] Nteziryayo submits that a "much more reasonable interpretation" is that the Prosecution did not know "at any time during the process" that its case was that the meeting took place on or after 21 June 1994.[5297] According to Nteziryayo, it was only in the Trial Judgement that it was made clear that the case he had to answer related to a meeting in Muyaga Commune on or after 21 June 1994.[5298]

2287. Nteziryayo further submits that, since the Trial Chamber recognised that he objected to the lack of notice relating to the Muyaga meeting and did not find his objection to be untimely, it erred in failing to require the Prosecution to discharge its burden of proving an absence of prejudice.[5299] He contends that the lack of clarity of the Prosecution case regarding this meeting deprived him of the opportunity to present a defence and caused him considerable prejudice.[5300] In this respect, Nteziryayo submits that he was deprived of the opportunity of presenting an alibi defence since he was "misled as to the date on which the alibi was to attach" and that he devoted resources to investigating and calling witnesses in respect of a meeting which was not part of the case.[5301]

2288. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nteziryayo had notice that he incited the killing of Tutsis at a meeting in Muyaga Commune held around mid-June 1994, relying in part on the reference to Nteziryayo being prefect at the time of the meeting in Witness FAB's Summary.[5302] The Prosecution also submits that, because Nteziryayo's objection based on lack of notice was untimely, he bears the burden to demonstrate that his ability to defend himself was materially impaired.[5303] According to the Prosecution, the conduct of Nteziryayo's defence – in particular his pre-defence brief, his cross-examination of Witnesses QBY and FAB, his examination of Nteziryayo Defence Witness AND-60, and his closing submissions – demonstrates that he fully understood that the meeting was alleged to have occurred in June 1994 when he was prefect and that he was not prejudiced as he claims.[5304]

2289. There appears to be no dispute that Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries, together with their prior written statements disclosed in 1999 and 2000, provided timely, clear, and consistent information regarding Nteziryayo's responsibility for direct and public incitement to kill Tutsis through his words at a public meeting held in Muyaga Commune.[5305] Nteziryayo, however, takes issue with the Trial Chamber's finding that he was provided adequate notice of the date of the meeting.

2290. As noted by the Trial Chamber, Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries and statements all indicate that the meeting took place between 3 and 5 June 1994.[5306] The Trial Chamber, nonetheless, did not discuss how this information accorded with its conclusion that the meeting occurred "around mid-June 1994",[5307] more specifically "on or after 21 June 1994" since both witnesses were adamant that Nteziryayo attended the meeting in his capacity as Butare Prefect.[5308]

[5305] The Appeals Chamber notes that Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries were marked relevant to Nteziryayo and were linked to Counts 1 through 4 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in his notice of appeal, Nteziryayo argued that the summaries appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief could not inform him of the allegations against him as the Prosecution had failed to indicate in the summaries the paragraphs of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment on which the witnesses would testify in violation of Rule 73(B)(iv)(c) of the Rules. See Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, paras. 24, 29. Nteziryayo, however, failed to reiterate this allegation in his appeal brief and instead developed different arguments. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber understands that Nteziryayo has abandoned this allegation of error. In any event, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that neither the Rules nor the jurisprudence require that the summaries appended to a Prosecution's pre-trial brief be linked to the relevant paragraphs of an indictment in order to provide timely, clear, and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge. See supra, fn. 2546. It also observes that, in the circumstances of this case, it was abundantly clear that Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries were intended to support the allegations of incitement to commit genocide made against Nteziryayo in his indictment.

[5308] Trial Judgement, para. 3672 ("The Chamber notes that Witnesses QBY and FAB are adamant that on the day of the meeting, Nteziryayo already held his position as préfet of Butare. Witness FAB even testified that the purpose of the meeting was to introduce Nteziryayo as the new préfet. Flowing from that, it appears that the meeting may have occurred on or after 21 June 1994, as Nteziryayo was appointed préfet of Butare on or around 17 June 1994, and his swearing-in ceremony took place on 21 June 1994.") (internal references omitted). In light of the Trial Chamber's statement in this paragraph, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in the Prosecution's argument that the Trial Chamber

Although it expressly relied on this particular detail in reaching its findings regarding notice of the date of the Kibayi Commune meeting,[5309] the Trial Chamber failed to address expressly the fact that Witness FAB's summary and statement both referred to Nteziryayo as being "prefect" at the time of the Muyaga Commune meeting,[5310] which provided conflicting information as to whether the meeting occurred in early June 1994 as indicated in the relevant summaries or statements, or after Nteziryayo took office as the prefect on 21 June 1994.[5311]

2291. Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witnesses QBY's and FAB's summaries and statements provided clear and consistent information curing the defect of the Indictment as far as it relates to the date of the meeting held in Muyaga Commune at which Nteziryayo would have incited the commission of genocide.

2293. That being said, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a vague or ambiguous indictment which is not cured of its defect by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information causes prejudice to the accused.[5314] The defect may only be deemed harmless through demonstrating that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[5315] When an appellant raises a defect in the indictment for the first time on appeal, the appellant bears the burden of showing that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired.[5316] When, however, an accused has previously raised the issue of lack of notice before the Trial Chamber, the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the ability of the accused to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[5317]

2294. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber examined Nteziryayo's claim of lack of notice relating to the Muyaga meeting raised at trial without considering his claim untimely.[5318] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove that Nteziryayo's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.

2295. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has met this burden as it effectively demonstrates that the conduct of Nteziryayo's defence reflects that the ambiguity in the notice provided by the Prosecution regarding the date of the Muyaga Commune meeting was harmless. Specifically, as pointed out by the Prosecution and acknowledged by Nteziryayo,[5319] Nteziryayo premised his defence on the occurrence of only one meeting in Muyaga Commune that occurred on 23 May 1994, called witnesses in support of this case,[5320] and was prepared to refute any allegation that the meeting had taken place after that date. In particular, the record shows that Nteziryayo was able to undertake a detailed cross-examination of Witnesses QBY and FAB who testified that he attended the meeting held in Muyaga Commune in his capacity as prefect, challenging specifically discrepancies between their testimonies and prior statements as to the date of the meeting in Muyaga and his position at the time of the meeting.[5321]

2296. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nteziryayo's submission that the lack of clarity in the Prosecution case prevented him from calling alibi witnesses or devoting resources to prepare his defence as the conduct of his defence shows that he was prepared to respond to the allegation that the meeting had taken place when he was prefect and that he deliberately oriented his defence to demonstrate that the meeting in Muyaga Commune could only have occurred on 23 May 1994.

2297. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that, despite the vagueness of the Indictment and the confusion in the Prosecution's post-indictment communications, Nteziryayo had understood that he had to defend against the allegation that he incited the killing of Tutsis during a meeting held in Muyaga Commune while he was prefect, that is on or after he took on his functions on 21 June 1994. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, although the Trial Chamber erred in relying on paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment and in finding that the defect in the Indictment concerning the date of the Muyaga Commune meeting was cured, these errors do not invalidate its decision to convict Nteziryayo on the basis of this meeting as the Prosecution has proven on appeal that Nteziryayo's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.

(b) Kibayi Commune Meeting

2299. In reaching its conclusion, the Trial Chamber noted that, whereas the location of the meeting was not specified in the summary of Witnesses FAK's and QBU's anticipated evidence, the omission of this detail was remedied by information contained in their prior written statements, which identified the meeting as taking place at or next to the Kibayi commune office.[5324] The Trial Chamber further observed that Witnesses FAK's and QBU's summaries and statements all placed the meeting in May 1994.[5325] The Trial Chamber nonetheless determined that, having regard to the content of Witnesses FAK's and QBU's statements which refer to Nteziryayo being present at the meeting either as prefect or "the new Préfet Nteziryayo", Nteziryayo was put on notice that the meeting about which these witnesses would testify must have taken place after 21 June 1994, the date on which he took office as prefect.[5326] It considered the discrepancy as to the date of the meeting as minor and found that Nteziryayo was put on notice that he would need to defend against the allegation that he incited the population by speeches he gave at a meeting at or near the Kibayi commune office sometime after he assumed office as prefect.[5327] The Trial Chamber concluded that paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment was "cured by the disclosure of clear, consistent and timely information" and that Nteziryayo "did not suffer any prejudice".[5328]

2300. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that the defective Indictment was cured by timely, clear, and consistent information.[5329] Nteziryayo acknowledges that the location was specified in Witnesses FAK's and QBU's statements, but argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law in relying solely on these statements as providing notice since the disclosure of previous statements cannot by itself put an accused on notice of material facts which the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.[5330] He also submits that, even if the Trial Chamber was entitled to rely on these statements, they are consistent with Witness FAK's and QBU's summaries that the meeting took place in May 1994, not mid to late June 1994 as found by the Trial Chamber.[5331] In his view, the reference to him being the prefect at the time of the meeting in Witnesses FAK's and QBU's statements cannot be said to constitute clear and consistent information of a meeting in late June 1994.[5332] Nteziryayo adds that it was only in the Trial Judgement "that the case to answer was put."[5333]

2301. Nteziryayo contends that, since the Trial Chamber recognised that he objected to the lack of notice related to the Kibayi Commune meeting, it erred in failing to require the Prosecution to discharge its burden of proving an absence of prejudice.[5334] He submits that the lack of clarity of the Prosecution case regarding the Kibayi Commune meeting deprived him of the opportunity to present a defence and caused him considerable prejudice.[5335] In particular, he argues that he was deprived of the opportunity of presenting an alibi as he was misled as to the date on which the alibi had to attach and that he devoted resources investigating and calling witnesses to a meeting which was not part of the case.[5336]

2302. The Prosecution responds that Witnesses FAK's and QBU's summaries and statements provided notice to Nteziryayo that he was alleged to have incited the killing of Tutsis at a public meeting as well as with respect to the date and location of the meeting, and that the Trial Chamber did not err in determining that the discrepancy concerning the dates was minor.[5337] The Prosecution also submits that, because Nteziryayo's objection based on lack of notice was untimely, he bears the burden to demonstrate that his ability to defend himself was materially impaired, if at all.[5338] According to the Prosecution, the conduct of Nteziryayo's defence – in particular his pre-defence brief, his cross-examination of Witnesses QBU and FAK, and his examination of Nteziryayo Defence Witnesses AND-11, AND-53, and AND-64 – demonstrates that he fully understood that the meeting was alleged to have occurred when he was prefect and did not suffer prejudice as he mounted a full defence against the allegation.[5339]

2303. There appears to be no dispute that Witnesses FAK's and QBU's summaries, together with these witnesses' prior written statements disclosed in 1999 and 2000, provided timely, clear, and consistent information regarding Nteziryayo's responsibility for direct and public incitement to kill Tutsis through the words he proffered at a public meeting.[5340] Nteziryayo, however, takes issue with the Trial Chamber's findings that he was provided adequate notice of the location and date of the meeting.

2304. As noted above, the Trial Chamber acknowledged that the location of the meeting was not specified in Witnesses FAK's and QBU's summaries but considered that this omission was remedied by the information contained in these witnesses' prior statements, which identified the meeting as taking place at, or next to, the Kibayi commune office.[5341] Nteziryayo is correct in submitting that mere service of witness statements is insufficient to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.[5342] His argument, however, fails to appreciate that the Prosecution did not merely serve Witnesses FAK's and QBU's statements on Nteziryayo. In its Witness Summaries Grid attached to its pre-trial brief, the Prosecution also summarised the information contained in the statements of Witnesses FAK and QBU that Nteziryayo incited the killing of Tutsis in a public meeting held in Kibayi Commune[5343] and expressly indicated that this evidence was relevant to its case against Nteziryayo.[5344] Upon reading Witnesses FAK's and QBU's summaries, Nteziryayo should have been prompted to read the witnesses' prior statements disclosed to him in 1999 and 2000, which provided timely, clear, and consistent information regarding the location of the alleged meeting.

2305. With regard to the date, Witnesses FAK's and QBU's summaries and statements all indicate that the meeting took place in May 1994.[5345] However, the Trial Chamber correctly noted that, despite this indication, both witnesses referred to Nteziryayo as being the prefect or the "new Préfet" at this meeting in their prior statements.[5346] The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's consideration that this reference to Nteziryayo's status as prefect at the time of the meeting in the witnesses' statements, repeated in Witness QBU's Summary, suggested that these witnesses would testify about a meeting that must have occurred after he took office as prefect on 21 June 1994.[5347] Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber considers that the express references in the Prosecution's post-indictment disclosures to the meeting taking place in "May 1994" and to Nteziryayo's attendance as the prefect cannot be said to constitute clear and consistent notice of the date of the meeting held in Kibayi Commune. It is only when Witnesses FAK and QBU took the stand that it became clearer that the Prosecution intended to prove that Nteziryayo was alleged to be responsible for inciting the population at a meeting held in Kibayi when he was prefect.[5348] The Appeals Chamber finds that this does not constitute "timely" notice.[5349]

[5349] The Appeals Chamber observes that, as pointed out by Nteziryayo, the Prosecution Closing Brief refers to the Kibayi Commune meeting under the heading "Speeches during May/early June 1994". See Prosecution Closing Brief, 2306. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect in the Indictment was cured by timely, clear, and consistent information as it relates to the date of the meeting held in Kibayi Commune at which Nteziryayo was alleged to have incited the commission of genocide.

2307. Turning to the question of whether the defect in the Indictment regarding the date of the meeting materially impaired Nteziryayo's ability to prepare his defence, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber examined Nteziryayo's claim of lack of notice relating to the Kibayi Commune meeting raised at trial without considering his claim untimely.[5350] In these circumstances, the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove that the ability of Nteziryayo to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.

2308. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has met its burden as it demonstrates that the conduct of Nteziryayo's defence reflects that the ambiguity regarding the date of the Kibayi Commune meeting was harmless. Specifically, a review of the record shows that Nteziryayo was able to mount a robust cross-examination of Witnesses FAK and QBU who testified that Nteziryayo attended the meeting held in Kibayi in his capacity as prefect. In particular, Nteziryayo challenged the discrepancy between the estimated date of the meeting in Witness FAK's Statements and his testimony[5351] and put to both Witnesses FAK and QBU evidence on the date of his appointment as prefect in support of his claim that both witnesses were incorrect in their estimate of the dates for the meeting.[5352] The Nteziryayo Pre-Defence Brief also reflects that Nteziryayo initially intended to call a witness who was expected to testify, inter alia, that she knew Nteziryayo after he was appointed prefect and that she attended a meeting in Kibayi at which Nteziryayo called for peace.[5353]

2309. Furthermore, as pointed out by the Prosecution and Nteziryayo himself, Nteziryayo was able to call three witnesses who testified to attending a meeting that took place on 24 May 1994.[5354] Contrary to Nteziryayo's submissions, not only were these Defence witnesses able to put forward

[5354] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 91, 92, referring to Witnesses AND-11, AND-53, and AND-64. The Appeals Chamber observes that Nteziryayo also cross-examined Ntahobali Defence Witness H1B6 on whether Nteziryayo was prefect when he attended a public meeting in May 1994. See Witness H1B6, T. 5 December 2005 pp. 11 (closed session), 18, 19.

Nteziryayo's defence case that the meeting occurred in May 1994, but they also testified in rebuttal of the Prosecution case that there was a meeting in June 1994 when he was prefect.[5355]

2310. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nteziryayo's contention that the lack of clarity in the Prosecution case prevented him from calling alibi witnesses or devoting resources to investigating the matter, as the conduct of his defence shows that he was prepared to respond to the allegation that the meeting had taken place when he was prefect and that he deliberately oriented his defence to demonstrate that the meeting in Kibayi could only have occurred on 24 May 1994.

2311. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber is persuaded that, despite the vagueness of the Indictment and the confusion in the Prosecution's communications, Nteziryayo had understood that he had to defend against the allegation that he incited the killing of Tutsis during a meeting held in Kibayi Commune while he was prefect, that is on or after he took his functions on 21 June 1994. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, although the Trial Chamber erred in relying on paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment and in finding that the defect in the Indictment concerning the date of the Kibayi Commune meeting was cured, these errors do not invalidate its decision to convict Nteziryayo on the basis of this meeting as the Prosecution has proven on appeal that Nteziryayo's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.

3. Conclusion

2312. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that he was put on sufficient notice that he was charged with direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and that he did not suffer prejudice.

2313. The Appeals Chamber further finds that, although the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the defects in the Indictment concerning the dates of the meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes at which Nteziryayo was alleged to have incited the commission of genocide were cured, these errors do not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Nteziryayo for direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the speeches he made at these meetings as the Prosecution has successfully demonstrated that Nteziryayo's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired by the lack of clear notice.

2314. Finally, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nteziryayo's claim of prejudice resulting from the accumulation of defects in the Indictment.[5356] The Appeals Chamber does not minimise the extent of the Prosecution's failure to provide adequate notice in the Indictment: none of the three incidents for which Nteziryayo was found guilty was adequately pleaded in the Indictment. However, Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the defects in the Indictment in this respect and their cumulative effect materially hampered the preparation of his defence.

2315. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 1 through 3 of Nteziryayo's appeal.

B. Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony (Ground 4)

2316. The Trial Chamber found that, during Ndayambaje's public swearing-in ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 22 June 1994 held in the woods near the Muganza commune office, Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje told the population to continue with their "work", urged them to "sweep the dirt outside", and instructed that those hiding Tutsis who refused to hand them over should be killed.[5357] The Trial Chamber convicted Nteziryayo pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide on the basis of his statements made during the swearing-in ceremony.[5358]

2317. Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the Prosecution and Defence evidence related to his conduct at the ceremony. The Appeals Chamber will first address Nteziryayo's challenges to the assessment of the Prosecution evidence before examining his contentions related to the assessment of the Defence evidence.

1. Assessment of Prosecution Evidence

2318. In reaching its findings regarding Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Trial Chamber considered, inter alia, the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAF, QAL, QAQ, QAR, RV, TO, and TP.[5359]

2319. Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the Prosecution evidence by: (i) erroneously using the evidence of Witnesses QAQ and QAR to corroborate other Prosecution evidence; (ii) failing to apply sufficient caution to accomplice evidence; (iii) insufficiently considering discrepancies concerning the content of the speeches, particularly his utterances, and the order in which he and Ndayambaje gave speeches; (iv) failing to sufficiently examine discrepancies as to the date of the event, the attendees, and the time it occurred; and (v) failing to consider other elements in the record and within the Prosecution evidence suggesting that the witnesses were testifying about meetings other than Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5360] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Witnesses QAQ and QAR

2320. Nteziryayo argues that, after having found that Witnesses QAQ and QAR lacked credibility, the Trial Chamber erred in using their evidence for corroboration of other Prosecution evidence.[5361] The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the evidence of these witnesses.[5362]

2321. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber declined to rely on the accounts of Witnesses QAQ and QAR about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony because it found that Witness QAR did not attend the ceremony and that any probative weight to be accorded to the testimony of Witness QAQ was minimal.[5363] In the paragraphs of the Trial Judgement pointed out by Nteziryayo, the Trial Chamber merely noted that certain aspects of their testimonies were consistent with the evidence of other Prosecution and Defence witnesses but did not rely on it to corroborate other evidence relating to the ceremony.[5364]

2322. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Nteziryayo's submission concerning the evidence of Witnesses QAQ and QAR.

(b) Insufficient Caution

2323. Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber gave no indication that it would treat Witness FAU's evidence with caution and that its "bare assertion" that it would apply caution to the evidence of Witnesses FAG, FAL, QAF, RV, and TO does not demonstrate that it did.[5365] He stresses that Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAF, and RV testified while awaiting trials or sentencing in Rwanda and that Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, and RV were detained in prison together.[5366] As further reason for the need to apply caution to these witnesses, Nteziryayo highlights that: (i) Witness RV admitted to having previously lied to improve his situation and to

[5364] See Trial Judgement, paras. 4595, 4596. After reviewing all the Prosecution evidence, the Trial Chamber concluded that it would "only consider the evidence of the remaining Prosecution witnesses, namely Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAF, QAL, RV, TO, and TP, as well as the Defence witnesses with respect to this allegation." See ibid., para. 4621.
[5365] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 154, 155; Nteziryayo Reply Brief, paras. 67, 68. The Appeals Chamber recalls its decision that paragraphs 249-252 of Nteziryayo's appeal brief, which concern allegations of collusion among Prosecution witnesses, fell outside the scope of Nteziryayo's notice of appeal and would not be considered. See Decision on Nteziryayo's Motion for Reconsideration and on Prosecution's Motion for Clarification of the 8 May 2013 Decision, 12 July 2013 ("12 July 2013 Appeal Decision"), paras. 23-25. See also 8 May 2013 Appeal Decision, paras. 51, 58 (striking paragraphs raising allegations of collusion from a previous appeal brief filed by Nteziryayo that exceeded the scope of the Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal). Although not expressly addressed in these decisions, the same reasoning applies to Nteziryayo's allegation of collusion included in paragraph 103(d) of his appeal brief and the Appeals Chamber will therefore not consider this otherwise unsubstantiated allegation.
[5366] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 103(d), 152, 247, 248, 253; Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 109. Nteziryayo argues that "special caution" should have been applied to these witnesses, particularly as witnesses who had been convicted having to denounce co-perpetrators as part of his confession procedure; (ii) Witness QAF's bail depended upon the substance of his evidence; (iii) Witness FAG lied under oath in his initial testimony to the Trial Chamber; and (iv) Witness TO had been previously imprisoned by Ndayambaje and may have had a motive to "seek revenge against [him]."[5367] In this context, Nteziryayo argues that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied upon the evidence of these witnesses in light of the largely consistent Defence evidence.[5368]

2324. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber applied the requisite level of caution and that Nteziryayo fails to demonstrate any error.[5369] It further contends that Nteziryayo misrepresents the circumstances under which Witnesses FAG, FAU, QAF, RV, and TO testified.[5370]

2325. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted Witness FAU's status as a detained witness when summarising his evidence related to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5371] The Trial Chamber also repeatedly stated in other parts of the Trial Judgement that it would treat his testimony with appropriate caution since he was a detained witness awaiting trial in Rwanda for crimes related to the 1994 genocide.[5372] Nteziryayo's contention that the Trial Chamber gave no indication of the need to treat Witness FAU's evidence with caution is therefore without merit.

2326. The Trial Judgement also reflects express consideration of the admitted involvement of Witnesses FAG, FAL, QAF, and RV in the genocide as well as the fact that Witness RV was detained and that Witnesses FAG and FAL were awaiting sentencing decisions when they testified.[5373] The Trial Chamber further recognised that the witnesses "may have had incentives to implicate either Ndayambaje or Nteziryayo in order to secure favourable or lenient treatment or to apportion blame to the authorities" and that, because Witness TO was imprisoned during Ndayambaje's tenure as bourgmestre, he may have "a motive to seek revenge against Ndayambaje".[5374] Moreover, the Trial Chamber's analysis of the evidence from these witnesses about the ceremony reflects that it undertook a cautious assessment of their credibility, including the consideration of discrepancies and inconsistencies as regards the date of the ceremony, the officials present, the order of the speakers, and the content of the speeches.[5375] Significantly, the Trial Chamber found that their testimonies as to the content and meaning of the utterances made during the ceremony were corroborated by several other witnesses.[5376] The Appeals Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Trial Chamber exercised sufficient caution when considering the possible motivations of the witnesses to implicate Nteziryayo as well as the content of their evidence concerning Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2327. Turning to Nteziryayo's contention that additional caution was warranted with respect to Witness RV as he had lied in previous statements to improve his position, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness RV acknowledged that he had not been entirely truthful during an interview with a judicial police inspector in order to avoid charges.[5377] The witness explained that, at that time in 1997, he "had not yet decided to tell the whole truth about the events that had occurred."[5378] However, the witness explained that his subsequent recorded statements, including his 2001 confession, contained the truth.[5379] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that these circumstances precluded a reasonable trier of fact from relying on Witness RV's evidence. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber does not consider Witness RV's acknowledgement that he had to denounce co-perpetrators as part of his confession as indicative of the fact that the information he provided was untruthful, particularly when testifying before the Tribunal about Nteziryayo.[5380]

2328. Concerning Nteziryayo's contention that Witness QAF's bail depended upon the substance of his evidence, the Appeals Chamber observes that nothing in Witness QAF's testimony suggests that the substance of his evidence before the Tribunal may have had an impact on his bail in Rwanda.[5381] Similarly, Nteziryayo's references do not support his argument that Witness FAG had lied in his prior testimony before the Trial Chamber.[5382] In addition, the Trial Chamber assessed variances in Witness FAG's initial and subsequent testimony as it related to crimes in which he participated in 1994.[5383] With respect to Witness TO, as mentioned above, the Trial Chamber acknowledged that the witness was imprisoned during Ndayambaje's first tenure as bourgmestre and his possible motive to seek revenge against Ndayambaje on this basis.[5384]

The Appeals Chamber considers that these factors did not require the Trial Chamber to treat this witness's evidence with additional caution as it related to Nteziryayo.

2329. Finally, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that, as a rule, no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted evidence from Prosecution witnesses notwithstanding "largely consistent" Defence evidence to the contrary. The Appeals Chamber will address Nteziryayo's specific contentions in this regard below.

2330. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Prosecution witnesses.

(c) Nteziryayo's Words and Order of Speeches

2331. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he incited the population to commit genocide at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5385] He argues that the Trial Chamber made contradictory findings concerning which statements were made by him.[5386] He contends that the Trial Chamber's uncertainty as to what he said and whether he spoke before or after Ndayambaje undermines its conclusion that he possessed the requisite mens rea and committed the actus reus of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[5387]

2332. Nteziryayo further argues that the Prosecution evidence about the speeches is so inconsistent that no reasonable trier of fact could have convicted him based on it.[5388] He submits that the evidence varied as to whether he, Ndayambaje, or both gave speeches and that "[n]one of the eight Prosecution witnesses relied upon testified that both Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo uttered all three elements of the speech (sweep the dirt, continue with work, [and] kill those hiding Tutsis)."[5389] He also points out that the witnesses' testimonies varied as to whether he used plain language, metaphors, or both, and argues that the Trial Chamber could not discount these differences based on passage of time because the witnesses did not say that they could not remember.[5390] Specifically, Nteziryayo notes that Witness RV recounted that Ndayambaje spoke about sweeping dirt and did not recall Nteziryayo inciting violence.[5391] He also highlights that the testimonies include references to "separating the wheat from the chaff", "snakes and eggs", "orders to destroy houses; rats; and lice", which vary from the Trial Chamber's conclusion.[5392] In his view, inconsistencies as to whether he or Ndayambaje spoke first reflect that the witnesses did not attend the same meeting.[5393]

2333. The Prosecution responds that Nteziryayo mistakes the Trial Chamber's summary of evidence and its findings and that the elements of direct and public incitement to commit genocide were established as the Trial Chamber found that both he and Ndayambaje participated in the material elements of the crime.[5394] It argues that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the variances in the witnesses' accounts of the ceremony.[5395]

2334. The Appeals Chamber does not find that the Trial Chamber reached contradictory findings in paragraphs 4632, 4642, and 4645 of the Trial Judgement as alleged by Nteziryayo. Paragraph 4632 presents a summary of "countervailing and consistent" Prosecution evidence as to whether Nteziryayo or Ndayambaje or both incited the population, which the Trial Chamber had set forth in detail in preceding paragraphs.[5396] On the contrary, paragraphs 4642 and 4645 reflect the Trial Chamber's factual findings "established beyond a reasonable doubt" based on its assessment of the totality of the evidence.

2335. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the Trial Judgement evinces uncertainty as to whether Nteziryayo's conduct satisfied the actus reus and mens rea for direct and public incitement to commit genocide. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber repeated its factual findings that "Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje told the population to continue with their 'work' and urged them to 'sweep the dirt outside'".[5397] It also recalled that the "audience understood the words of both Accused, namely 'to work' and 'sweeping dirt', to mean they needed to kill Tutsis."[5398] The Trial Chamber then considered these findings with respect to the mens rea and actus reus for direct and public incitement to commit genocide, determining that Nteziryayo's and Ndayambaje's words at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony "were direct incitements to commit genocide", that they

> The Chamber considers the differences in the testimony of the eight Prosecution witnesses as to the content of Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo's speeches can be explained by virtue of these variable factors and for this reasons [sic] considers that these particular discrepancies are not significant. The Chamber is strengthened i[n] its view having regard to the countervailing and consistent evidence of the Prosecution witnesses that either Nteziryayo or Ndayambaje or both incited the population by means of parables principally relating to the sweeping of dirt, as well as plain speech. […]

[5397] Trial Judgement, para. 6026.

were made "publicly", that Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje possessed genocidal intent, and that "they intended to incite the population to commit genocide."[5399]

2336. Consequently, the Trial Chamber concluded "that in urging the population 'to work' and 'to sweep dirt outside' at Ndayambaje's swearing in ceremony, Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje are criminally responsible, pursuant to Article 6 (1) of the Statute, for inciting the population to cause the death and serious bodily and mental harm of Tutsi refugees in Butare."[5400] In this regard, any ambiguity within the Trial Chamber's conclusions as to the order in which Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje made their inciting remarks is immaterial to the determination of Nteziryayo's criminal responsibility. The evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber reflects that Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje presented a uniform message of direct incitement to the population to commit genocide.[5401]

2337. Turning to Nteziryayo's contention that the Prosecution evidence varies as to whether he, Ndayambaje, or both gave speeches and that none testified that both he and Ndayambaje uttered "sweep the dirt, continue with work, [and] kill those hiding Tutsis", the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber recalled that Witnesses FAG and FAL testified that "Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje used parables concerning the need to clean the house of dirt and place it outside",[5402] and that Witness FAU gave corroborative evidence to this effect.[5403] The Trial Chamber also noted contrasting evidence from Witnesses TO and TP that only Nteziryayo used the metaphor concerning sweeping dirt,[5404] while Witnesses QAF and RV testified that only Ndayambaje used this metaphor and that Witness QAL provided hearsay corroboration of the evidence of Witnesses QAF and RV.[5405]

to continue[5407] as well as Nteziryayo threatening to kill those who were protecting and refusing to give up Tutsis.[5408]

2339. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Trial Chamber fully considered contrasting Prosecution evidence regarding who spoke and the content of the speeches given by Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo. The Appeals Chamber recalls that trial chambers enjoy broad discretion in choosing which witness testimony to prefer[5409] and that two prima facie credible testimonies need not be identical in all respects in order to be corroborative.[5410] In light of all the evidence reflecting that the purpose of the speeches was to incite the population to commit genocide, Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not have relied on the elements within the Prosecution evidence demonstrating that both he and Ndayambaje urged the population to "sweep the dirt" and to "work".[5411]

2340. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the Trial Chamber was precluded from finding that Nteziryayo also made an inciting speech given Witness RV's evidence that he could not recall what Nteziryayo said or if he was present for the entirety of Nteziryayo's speech.[5412] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that Witness RV's evidence was incompatible with other evidence reflecting that Nteziryayo made inciting remarks.

2341. With respect to Nteziryayo's submissions that the Prosecution evidence was materially inconsistent as to the content of the speeches and did not support the Trial Chamber's conclusions as to what was said, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered Witness TP's evidence that Nteziryayo spoke about the need to destroy snake's eggs, which no other witness testified about.[5413] The Trial Chamber also set forth Witness QAL's testimony regarding Ndayambaje mentioning separating the wheat from the chaff, as well as Witness TO's evidence that Nteziryayo spoke about lice growing from the dirt, and Witness FAL's testimony concerning Ndayambaje speaking about destroying the houses where Tutsis were hiding.[5414]

[5411] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nteziryayo also challenges the sufficiency of the evidence supporting the Trial Chamber's conclusion that he and Ndayambaje "instructed that those hiding Tutsis who refused to hand them over should be killed." See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 98, 99, 108. As this finding was not a basis for Nteziryayo's conviction, the Appeals Chamber does not find it necessary to assess this challenge in detail. See Trial Judgement, paras. 6026-6029. In any event, Nteziryayo has not shown that the inconsistencies as they relate to the evidence supporting this conclusion demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion.

Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not ignore the differences in the Prosecution evidence as to the content of the speeches. The Appeals Chamber also finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have determined that these differences did not preclude it from finding that these witnesses were nonetheless talking about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony where both Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje made inciting speeches by employing the metaphors concerning "sweeping the dirt" and "work".[5415]

2342. Moreover, while the Trial Chamber did not expressly recount Witness FAU's evidence related to Ndayambaje speaking about killing rats, Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that this aspect of the witness's evidence was materially inconsistent with other evidence on the record so as to preclude a reasonable trier of fact from relying on corroborated elements of Witness FAU's evidence concerning the content of the speeches.[5416]

2343. The Appeals Chamber further considers that Nteziryayo merely disagrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the variances as to the content of the speeches in the witnesses' accounts could be attributable, inter alia, to the passage of time and the deterioration of human memory without demonstrating that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to reach this conclusion.[5417] The Trial Judgement reveals that the Trial Chamber relied on other considerations to reach its conclusion, such as the level of education of the witnesses, the late arrival of certain witnesses, their position at the venue of the meeting, and the quality of the megaphone or clarity of the speakers.[5418]

2344. Finally, as regards Nteziryayo's contention that variances in the Prosecution evidence as to the order of the speeches given by him and Ndayambaje show that they did not attend the ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses TP and QAL testified that Nteziryayo took the floor after Ndayambaje, in contrast with evidence of the other witnesses.[5419] The Trial Chamber, however, did not regard the discrepancy as to the order of speakers as significant.[5420] Nteziryayo simply disagrees with this conclusion, without demonstrating how discrepancies in this respect undermined the Trial Chamber's determination that all witnesses were testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2345. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred its assessment of the content or the order of the speeches at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

(d) Date

2346. Nteziryayo argues that it was illogical for the Trial Chamber to conclude that discrepancies as to the date of Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony were "minor and understandable", yet subsequently conclude that the date was a "significant feature".[5421] He further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witnesses FAL and TP "testified to attending the meeting on or around 22 June 1994."[5422]

2347. Nteziryayo also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider evidence from Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAL, TO, and TP that suggests that they testified about different meetings which occurred before Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony on 22 June 1994.[5423] Specifically, Nteziryayo points out that: (i) Witness FAU testified that the meeting he attended occurred "in late May, early June", on the day before the killing of a Tutsi girl named Nambaje, which the witness estimated occurred around 24 May 1994 and who Defence Witness KWEPO testified was killed in May 1994; (ii) Witness FAL testified about a meeting in "May or June 1994", yet linked it to destroying houses and committing murders that, according to his testimony and prior written confession, occurred in late April and early May 1994; (iii) Witness QAL gave evidence that the meeting occurred the day prior to the morning in May 1994 in which her husband was killed; (iv) Witness FAG testified that a girl named Josepha was killed as a result of the meeting and testified that this murder occurred in May 1994; (v) Witness TP testified that the only meeting attended by Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo occurred at the end of April or early May 1994 and long before a subsequent meeting she attended around 28 June 1994; and (vi) Witness TO's prior statement to Tribunal investigators reflects that the meeting attended by Nteziryayo occurred by the beginning of May 1994.[5424]

2348. The Prosecution responds that Nteziryayo misinterprets the evidence as to the date of the meeting, which contained mere approximations.[5425]

2349. Turning first to Nteziryayo's contention that the Trial Chamber's findings about the date of the swearing-in ceremony are illogical, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found it "minor" and "understandable" that discrepancies within Prosecution evidence as to the precise date of the ceremony existed "in light of the time which had passed between the events in question and the time the witnesses testified".[5426] The Trial Chamber later considered, when examining differences between Prosecution and Defence evidence as to what time of the day the meeting occurred,[5427] that this difference was not important in light of other consistencies on "significant features" of the meeting, which included the date of 22 June 1994.[5428]

2350. The Appeals Chamber finds that, when reading the Trial Chamber's deliberations as a whole, it is apparent that the Trial Chamber accepted the consistent Defence evidence that Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony occurred on 22 June 1994.[5429] The Trial Chamber noted that the Prosecution evidence varied as to the date, but ultimately determined that other fundamental features shared among the Prosecution and Defence evidence – including that the event was the swearing-in ceremony of Ndayambaje, that the meeting was held in the woods near the Muganza commune office, and that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo spoke – indicated that all were discussing the same event.[5430] Nteziryayo disagrees with the Trial Chamber's determination, yet as discussed below, fails to demonstrate that the Prosecution evidence regarding the date of the swearing-in ceremony was incompatible with the finding that it occurred on 22 June 1994.

2351. As regards Nteziryayo's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witnesses FAL and TP testified to attending the meeting on or around 22 June 1994, the Appeals Chamber agrees that the testimonies of Witnesses FAL and TP cannot reasonably be interpreted, alongside Witness QAF's evidence, to support the conclusion that Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony occurred specifically "on or around 22 June 1994".[5431] The Trial Chamber appears to have overlooked material aspects of each witness's evidence that reveal their uncertainty as to when the meetings they described had occurred.[5432] The Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on the evidence of Witnesses FAL and TP alone to find that Ndayambaje's [5431] Indeed, the transcripts of Witness FAL's testimony referred to by the Trial Chamber only contain counsel's suggestion that the incident occurred within a two month timeframe and Witness FAL did not expressly accept this suggestion or provide any clarification. The evidence of Witness TP provides no indication as to when the meeting occurred. See Trial Judgement, paras. 4340, 4386, 4591, referring to Witness FAL, T. 9 February 2004 p. 37, Witness TP, T. 12 February 2004 p. 38. See also Witness TP, T. 12 February 2004 p. 33.

[5432] See Trial Judgement, paras. 4340 ("Witness FAL […] testified that in May or June 1994 the population was summoned to a security meeting held in a little bush near the Muganza commune office".), 4386 ("Witness TP […] testified that while she was hiding at her uncle's house, she attended a meeting at the Muganza commune office around 26 or 28 June 1994. On cross-examination, she stated she was not sure of the date because she was hiding in the bush; the meeting involving the préfet and Ndayambaje may have occurred in early May, and another meeting she referred to in her witness statement called solely by Ndayambaje may have occurred on 28 June 1994."). See also Witness FAL, T. 9 February 2004 p. 37; Witness TP, T. 11 February 2004 p. 25, T. 12 February 2004 pp. 33 and 36 (closed session).

Swearing-In Ceremony occurred specifically "on or around 22 June 1994" considering the ambiguity in their evidence as to its precise date.[5433] However, the Appeals Chamber does not find that this error has occasioned a miscarriage of justice given other features that the Trial Chamber relied upon to find that Witnesses FAL and TP were discussing this event.[5434]

2352. Concerning Nteziryayo's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to sufficiently consider evidence from Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAL, TO, and TP that suggest that they testified about a different meeting, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted aspects of these witnesses' testimonies reflecting their inability to provide a precise date of the ceremony.[5435] Even accepting that the witnesses provided evidence to suggest that the ceremony they attended could have happened as early as late April, May, or early June 1994, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the discrepancies concerning the date of the meeting rendered their evidence unreliable given other significant features within their accounts reflecting that they were discussing the same event. Specifically, as noted by the Trial Chamber, the witnesses identified this meeting as involving the installation of Ndayambaje as the bourgmestre of Muganza Commune[5436] or testified that this was the only meeting in Muganza Commune which Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje attended together.[5437]

2353. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Nteziryayo's argument that Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAL, TO, and TP were testifying about a different meeting because they associated it with particular events that, according to their evidence, occurred well before 22 June 1994. With respect to Witness FAU, who testified that Nambaje was abducted after the swearing-in ceremony, Nteziryayo's submissions ignore that the witness's testimony as to when Nambaje was taken away was only an estimate.[5438] Moreover, the Trial Chamber accepted Witness FAU's evidence that Nambaje was killed after the swearing-in ceremony and rejected Witness KWEPO's contradictory evidence.[5439] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in this regard.

[5434] In particular, both Witnesses FAL and TP observed the appointment of Ndayambaje as bourgmestre at the meeting, were consistent about the meeting taking place in the morning in the small woods near the Muganza commune office, and recounted that Prefect Nteziryayo and Bourgmestre Ndayambaje were present. See Trial Judgement, paras. 4592, 4593. See also ibid., paras. 4340, 4342, 4343, 4386-4388.

[5439] Trial Judgement, para. 4620. The Appeals Chamber finds that, beyond highlighting that Witness FAU's evidence was hearsay as well as asserting that the Trial Chamber did not accord sufficient weight to inconsistencies between his prior statement and testimony, Nteziryayo fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the witness's evidence. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses his submissions in this respect without further consideration.

2354. In addition, Nteziryayo's contention based on Witness FAL's prior statement and confession that the witness participated in looting and murders in late April and early May 1994 fails to appreciate that the witness testified that he did not participate in murders after Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5440] The witness also confirmed at trial that he participated in the destruction of houses resulting from orders that were given during that ceremony.[5441] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that this is materially inconsistent with Witness FAL's prior statement or confession.

2356. As for Witness TP, Nteziryayo only suggests a possible interpretation of the witness's evidence that the meeting she attended did not occur around 22 June 1994. As noted above, given that Witness TP could only provide estimates for the date of the meeting, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have determined that she attended Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony in light of her testimony that she observed Ndayambaje's reappointment as the bourgmestre of Muganza Commune and that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo gave speeches during the event.[5444]

2357. Regarding Witness TO, while Nteziryayo points to his prior statement – which reflects that the meeting attended by Nteziryayo occurred at the beginning of May 1994 – the Trial Chamber expressly noted this aspect of the statement and that the witness testified that Ndayambaje was reappointed bourgmestre of Muganza Commune by Prefect Nteziryayo in June 1994.[5445] It also noted that the witness explained that he was not in a position to provide exact dates, since this was of little concern to him.[5446] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not have concluded that the witness recounted Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony in light of this explanation.

[5446] See Trial Judgement, para. 4375. In light of the witness's explanation concerning his inability to provide exact dates, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo's contentions concerning the error in time as it concerns the second meeting the witness attended also do not demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not have relied on Witness TO's evidence concerning Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 132 (b).

2358. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Nteziryayo has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Prosecution evidence in light of variations as to the date of the ceremony.

(e) Attendees

2359. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the variances in the Prosecution evidence about the attendees at the ceremony were not significant.[5447] As an example, he points to evidence of Witnesses QAF and QAL that indicate that Defence Witness Constant Julius Goetschalckx a.k.a. Brother Stan ("Stan"), a "Caucasian Belgian Priest", was among the dignitaries at the ceremony and was introduced to the crowd, and notes that other Prosecution witnesses were unsure or denied that Witness Stan was present.[5448] He contends that these variances demonstrate that the witnesses lied or that their testimonies relate to a different meeting.[5449] Nteziryayo also highlights inconsistencies in the Prosecution evidence concerning the presence of Callixte Kalimanzira ("Kalimanzira"), Nyiramasuhuko, Chrysologue Bimenyimana ("Bimenyimana"), and Augustin Sebukeye ("Sebukeye") as demonstrating "further incoherency".[5450]

2360. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber considered inconsistencies as to the dignitaries present at the meeting and correctly held that they did not undermine the Prosecution evidence.[5451] It suggests that, given the size of the event, it is understandable that witnesses did not recognise or recall other individuals who may have been present.[5452]

2361. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when assessing Defence evidence, the Trial Chamber observed that "several Defence witnesses testified to the presence of Brother Stan" and noted that this "was corroborated by Prosecution Witnesses QAF, QAL and TO."[5453] The Trial Chamber not only considered the evidence of Witnesses QAF and QAL, which Nteziryayo highlights, but also that of Witness TO.[5454] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber noted the evidence of Witness FAL that

"[h]e did not know whether a white religious person was present"[5455] and of Witness TP that she did not hear a reference to "any religious person".[5456] While the Trial Chamber did not expressly summarise Witness FAG's testimony that it was possible that a white person was present but that he did not try to ascertain this fact,[5457] the Trial Chamber noted the relevant portion of Witness FAG's evidence.[5458] Having reviewed the relevant evidence,[5459] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that ambiguous Prosecution evidence as to whether Witness Stan was present at the ceremony, even in light of the evidence of Witnesses QAF and QAL that Witness Stan was referred to in speeches,[5460] prevented a reasonable trier of fact from finding that all the Prosecution witnesses recounted Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5461]

2362. Turning to Nteziryayo's argument that there was "further incoherency" about the attendance of Kalimanzira, Nyiramasuhuko, Bimenyimana, and Sebukeye, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered that Defence evidence diverged from some Prosecution evidence as to the presence of, among others, Kalimanzira and Nyiramasuhuko during the swearing-in ceremony.[5462] The Trial Chamber determined that it need not make findings as to Kalimanzira's presence and found that any discrepancy in this regard was not significant.[5463] Nteziryayo fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence on this issue was unreasonable.

2363. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness RV was the sole witness to testify to the presence of Nyiramasuhuko and that Ndayambaje, Nteziryayo, and other Defence witnesses contradicted this aspect of his evidence.[5464] However, it observed that Witness RV's evidence was consistent with Defence evidence as to the presence of certain other dignitaries and that all Defence witnesses testified to the presence of another female minister, whom the witness did not identify.[5465] In this context, the Trial Chamber rejected Witness RV's evidence as to Nyiramasuhuko's presence but found that this did "not weaken the credibility of [his] testimony with respect to more significant aspects of the swearing-in ceremony."[5466] Once again, Nteziryayo simply expresses his disagreement with this decision, ignoring that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony.[5467] Indeed, the Defence did not dispute that Witness RV was present at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

[5461] In this regard, the Appeals Chamber observes that Nteziryayo also refers to the testimony of Witness QAR, arguing that he was among the witnesses who was "confident [that Witness Stan] was not at the meeting." See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 138, fn. 164, referring to Witness QAR, T. 21 November 2001 p. 90. However, the Trial Chamber considered "that Witness QAR did not attend" Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. See Trial Judgement, para. 4603. Consequently, Witness QAR's evidence as to whether Witness Stan was at the meeting was irrelevant to the Trial Chamber's assessment.
[5462] See Trial Judgement, paras. 4610-4612.

2364. While the Trial Chamber did not expressly assess variances in the Prosecution evidence as to the presence of Bimenyimana, the bourgmestre of Muganza Commune being replaced by Ndayambaje, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Defence did not dispute that he was present at the meeting.[5468] Furthermore, three of the witnesses, whom Nteziryayo highlights, confirmed that Bimenyimana was present,[5469] while the remaining witnesses either simply recounted not knowing whether Bimenyimana was present,[5470] did not see him,[5471] or did not remember seeing him there.[5472] Likewise, while Witness FAL testified that Sebukeye was at the ceremony, Nteziryayo does not point to evidence on the record demonstrating that any variance in this regard rendered Witness FAL's testimony incompatible with the other Prosecution evidence.[5473] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that these variances precluded a reasonable trier of fact from finding that these Prosecution witnesses were testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2365. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence about the attendees of Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

(f) Time

2366. Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the discrepancy between the Prosecution evidence of the ceremony occurring in the morning and the evidence of the eight Defence witnesses that it occurred no earlier than 2.30 p.m. was insignificant.[5474] He contends that the Prosecution evidence is implausible[5475] as consistent Defence evidence reflects that he attended the swearing-in of the new bourgmestre of Ndora Commune at 11.00 a.m. before attending Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony between 2.30 and 5.00 p.m.[5476] Nteziryayo adds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the timing of the meeting was not put to the Prosecution witnesses, pointing to excerpts from the cross-examinations of Witnesses FAL and TO.[5477]

2367. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber considered the inconsistencies as to when the meeting occurred and emphasises that the Prosecution evidence was consistent that it happened in the morning.[5478]

[5475] In particular, Nteziryayo juxtaposes the testimony of Witness TP that when she arrived to the meeting at 9.30 a.m. the prefect was already present with "a compelling body of evidence" that Nteziryayo was in Ndora Commune. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 148(a). Nteziryayo also highlights the evidence of Witness FAU that, according to him, reflects that the meeting finished at 5.00 p.m. because a girl named Nambaje was abducted between 5.30 and 6.00 p.m. on the day of the meeting. See ibid., para. 149. See also Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 62.
[5476] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 140, 141. In addition, Nteziryayo highlights that the Prosecution had sought to establish his presence at a meeting in Ndora Commune on the morning of Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and that Prosecution Witness QG testified that the swearing-in ceremony in Ndora Commune occurred in the afternoon of 22 June 1994. See ibid., para. 141, referring to Prosecution Closing Brief, p. 335, Witness QG, T. 16 March 2004 pp. 75-77 (closed session). See also Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 62.

[5479] Trial Judgement, para. 4614. In this respect, the Trial Chamber cited to and summarised the evidence of the eight Defence witnesses Nteziryayo highlights in his appeal brief. Compare ibid., fn. 12283 with Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, fn. 170.
[5480] Trial Judgement, para. 4615.

22 June 1994, that it was held in the woods near the Muganza commune office, and that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo spoke at the meeting.[5482] The Trial Chamber determined that the witnesses testified to the same event, namely Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony of 22 June 1994.[5483]

2369. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nteziryayo, who largely repeats the arguments he advanced at trial,[5484] fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis. The Trial Chamber considered Nteziryayo's argument that the Prosecution evidence that the ceremony occurred in the morning was implausible because he was at a meeting in Ndora Commune.[5485] However, it recalled that Witness RV attended the Ndora Commune meeting with Nteziryayo "yet still testified that Ndayambaje was installed into office at a ceremony held at about 10.00 or 11.00 a.m."[5486] The Appeals Chamber is therefore satisfied that the Trial Chamber carefully considered the varying evidence as to the timing of the meeting and finds that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in evaluating these differences.

2370. As regards Nteziryayo's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the timing of the meeting was not put to the Prosecution witnesses, the Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Nteziryayo's contention, the references he provides reflect that, while Witnesses TO and FAL were asked when Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony started, it was not suggested to these witnesses that they may have been wrong about its timing.[5487]

[5481] Trial Judgement, para. 4615.
[5482] Trial Judgement, para. 4616.
[5483] Trial Judgement, para. 4617.
[5484] See Nteziryayo Closing Brief, para. 536.
[5485] See Trial Judgement, para. 4614. In particular, the Trial Chamber considered that "Nteziryayo was occupied with the swearing-in ceremony for the new bourgmestre of Ndora commune, Fidèle Uwizeye, on the morning of 22 June 1994." See idem. It summarised Nteziryayo's testimony that the Ndora Commune meeting occurred in the morning. See ibid., paras. 4564, 4566. Elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber also acknowledged Nteziryayo's reliance on the evidence of Witness AND-31 concerning the meeting in Ndora Commune related to the swearing-in of the new bourgmestre as well as Nsabimana's reliance on his own evidence and that of Witnesses AND-30 and AND-31 in relation to the same meeting but did not make findings on this issue. See ibid., paras. 4217-4220, 4244. The Appeals Chamber does not consider that the Trial Chamber was also required to discuss expressly these witnesses' testimonies with respect to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. Notably, Nteziryayo did not argue the clear relevance and importance of their evidence to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony in his closing submissions, relying on them instead in relation to the meeting in Ndora Commune. See Nteziryayo Closing Brief, paras. 287-293, 531-540; Nteziryayo Closing Arguments, T. 28 April 2009 pp. 5, 6. Moreover, having reviewed the relevant evidence, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that it was cumulative of Nteziryayo's as regards his attendance of the meeting in Ndora Commune in the morning of 22 June 1994. See Witness AND-30, T. 21 February 2007 pp. 16, 17, 52, 53; Witness AND-31, T. 27 February 2007 pp. 55, 56; Nsabimana, T. 16 November 2006 pp. 61, 62, 67.
[5486] Trial Judgement, para. 4614, referring to Witness RV, T. 18 February 2004 p. 43 (closed session), T. 19 February 2004 p. 34 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber further finds that Nteziryayo misrepresents Witness FAU's testimony, in light of his unequivocal response that he "[did] not know when the meeting ended", merely stating that "[i]t was about 5:30 p.m. or 6:00 p.m. when the assailants arrived to take away the person in question." See Witness FAU, T. 9 March 2004 p. 22 (closed session).
[5487] See Witness TO, T. 5 March 2002 p. 113; Witness FAL, T. 9 February 2004 pp. 55, 56.

2371. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's determination that the variance in timing was insignificant and its reliance instead on the similar features of the meeting to determine that all witnesses were referring to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably in assessing evidence as to the timing of the swearing-in ceremony.

(g) Different Meeting

2372. Nteziryayo argues that, in addition to his previous challenges, several other elements of the Prosecution evidence allow for the reasonable inference that the Prosecution witnesses were referring to a meeting other than Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and that the Trial Chamber failed to consider this.[5488] Specifically, he notes that Witness FAL testified that there were 5,000 participants and that megaphones were used, while Witness QAL only mentioned 200 participants and indicated that no megaphones were used.[5489] Nteziryayo submits that, even when allowing for variances as to the recollection of numbers, Prosecution evidence of a meeting with several thousand participants and where speakers used megaphones "suggests" that other Prosecution evidence about a meeting attended by several hundred people where speakers were "unamplified" concerns a different meeting.[5490]

2373. Nteziryayo further highlights Witness FAL's evidence that the audience expressed discontent about the dismissal of the outgoing bourgmestre and that Sebukeye ordered the destruction of houses and suggests that this witness's evidence was distinct from other Prosecution evidence concerning the ceremony.[5491] Similarly, he notes that neither Witness QAL nor Witness FAG saw Ndayambaje get sworn in and that Witness TP testified that the meeting was for the installation of Nteziryayo as the Butare Prefect.[5492] Nteziryayo also stresses that only Witness TO testified about a shooting exercise before the ceremony and that "Habiyambere" was the master of ceremonies.[5493] As a further reflection of the unreliability of the Prosecution evidence, he stresses that Witnesses TP and FAL were unable to identify him in court.[5494] Nteziryayo also points to evidence that several other meetings were held in Muganza Commune "and its [5488] See generally Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 104, 144-151. Nteziryayo concedes that the Trial Chamber concluded that Witness QAR was referring to an event other than Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. See ibid., para. 104 (iv), 144. The Appeals Chamber has considered the contentions raised in paragraphs 145(d), 148(a), (b), (d), and 149 of Nteziryayo Appeal Brief above. See supra, Sections VII.B.1(c)-(f).

[5493] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 132(c), 150. The Appeals Chamber notes that, while Nteziryayo also argued in his notice of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the discrepancy as to whether the population was armed was not significant, he did not develop this argument in his appeal brief. See Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, para. 38(c). The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that Nteziryayo has abandoned this contention.

surroundings", which, in his view, shared characteristics of Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5495] He argues that the variances in the Prosecution evidence together with the evidence that several other meetings were held demonstrate that these witnesses were not testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5496]

2374. The Prosecution, pointing to the consistent elements of the testimonial evidence, submits that the discrepancies in the witnesses' evidence were minor and that Nteziryayo's unsubstantiated assertions that the witnesses were recounting another meeting should be rejected.[5497]

2375. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber summarised the respective estimates of Witnesses FAL and QAL that "more than 5,000" or an "estimated 200" persons attended the meeting.[5498] In its deliberations, the Trial Chamber noted that "the testimony of the witnesses shows that between 1,000 and 5,000 people were present" and referred, inter alia, to Witness FAL's evidence in this regard.[5499] The Trial Chamber also summarised differing Prosecution and Defence evidence as to whether a megaphone or public address system was used during the swearing-in ceremony.[5500] The Trial Chamber found that, while the Prosecution evidence differed "in varying degrees as to the content of what was said by both Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo", the discrepancies could be attributed, in part, to "the quality of the megaphone or the clarity of the speakers."[5501] The Trial Judgement therefore shows that the Trial Chamber accepted the evidence that the number of attendees ranged from 1,000 to 5,000 persons and that amplification devices were used during the ceremony.

2376. Given the significant number of attendees, a fact uniformly testified to by all witnesses,[5502] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that, simply because Witness FAL considered that more than 5,000 people were present or that Witness QAL "estimated" that 200 people were present, a reasonable trier of fact could not have considered that they testified about the same event. Furthermore, although Witness FAL testified that speakers at the event used megaphones and Witness QAL testified that she did not see megaphones, Witness FAL was only three metres from the speakers while Witness QAL's evidence reflects that many people were between her and the speakers.[5503] It bears noting that other Prosecution and Defence evidence differed as to whether devices were used to amplify the voice of the speakers.[5504] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to rely on the fundamental features that were consistent in the evidence of Witnesses FAL and QAL, including the timing and location of the meeting, the fact that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo were present and spoke during the event, Ndayambaje's attire, and participants bringing traditional weapons to determine that they testified about the same event.[5505] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witnesses FAL and QAL were testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5506]

2377. In addition, and contrary to Nteziryayo's assertion, Witness FAL was not alone in testifying that Nteziryayo criticised the outgoing bourgmestre as Witness TO also testified to this effect.[5507] The Trial Chamber also acknowledged that their evidence differed from that of other Prosecution witnesses.[5508] Nteziryayo does not show that a reasonable trier of fact could not have found that, notwithstanding this variance, Witness FAL was testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. Likewise, Nteziryayo's reference to Witness FAL's testimony that Sebukeye told the witness to implement the orders given during the ceremony fails to demonstrate that Witness FAL's evidence is incompatible with other evidence about the swearing-in ceremony.[5509]

2378. When summarising the evidence of Witnesses QAL and FAG, the Trial Chamber also noted that these witnesses did not see Ndayambaje get sworn in.[5510] However, it further observed that Witness FAG nonetheless recounted that Ndayambaje "was the person being sworn in as [5503] Compare Witness FAL, T. 9 February 2004 p. 76 (closed session) ("Q. Can you tell us, Witness FAL, where you were seated at the time of the meeting? How far were you from the speakers? A. I was seated approximately three metres from the speakers.") with Witness QAL, T. 25 February 2004 p. 43 (closed session) ("Q. Witness QAL, this morning you testified that during the said meeting you were sitting on the lawn; is that correct? A. That is correct. Q. Were there many people in front of you? A. Yes, I was sitting more or less behind, there were many people in front of me.").

[5506] The Appeals Chamber observes that, in addition to his arguments pertaining to Witnesses QAL and FAL, Nteziryayo argues that the testimonies of Witnesses TO and TP, on one hand, and the testimonies of Witnesses FAU and FAG, on the other hand, also differ as to the number of attendees and as to whether megaphones were used. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 147. Nteziryayo did not develop this argument with reference to the record, failing to demonstrate incompatibility among this evidence which would prevent a reasonable trier of fact from concluding that all of these witnesses testified about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this argument without further consideration.

bourgmestre."[5511] It also determined that various elements of Witness QAL's testimony were corroborated by both Prosecution and Defence evidence, including the location and timing of the meeting, Ndayambaje's attire, and the attendance of Witness Stan, and concluded that Witness QAL testified about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5512] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis.

2379. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness TP, in response to a suggestion by counsel for Nteziryayo that she earlier indicated that "the purpose of the meeting was for the installation", stated that "[i]t was for the installation of Préfet Alphonse".[5513] However, the description of the purported installation Witness TP provided accorded with her earlier testimony that Nteziryayo was being introduced at the meeting rather than installed as a new prefect and that Ndayambaje was being installed as the new bourgmestre.[5514] Nteziryayo fails to demonstrate that, on this basis, no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness TP testified about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2380. As regards Witness TO's evidence, the Trial Chamber recalled the witness's testimony that, prior to the ceremony, the population practiced shooting bows and arrows.[5515] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witness FAL recounted a bow-and-arrow shooting exercise near the venue of the meeting, albeit not on the same day,[5516] and the evidence of Defence witnesses that they did not see any archery practice or did not take part in it.[5517] Nteziryayo largely repeats on appeal arguments he made at trial,[5518] without showing why this aspect of Witness TO's evidence undermined his credibility or was so distinctive as to render his testimony incompatible with other evidence about the swearing-in ceremony. Although Nteziryayo points to Witness TO's evidence that Célestin Habiyamere was the master of ceremonies to suggest that he was referring to an event other than Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that this aspect of Witness TO's evidence is almost entirely consistent with other Prosecution and Defence evidence confirming this individual's presence and role in the event.[5519]

2381. With respect to the inability of Witnesses TP and FAL to identify Nteziryayo in court, the Trial Chamber noted this aspect of their evidence.[5520] The Appeals Chamber observes, however, that Witness TP stated that she "went to the meeting and [she] witnessed the swearing in of the bourgmestre, and the préfet was introduced to us", and referred to "Préfet Alphonse"; thus indicating that Nteziryayo was the prefect.[5521] Moreover, the witness testified that Nteziryayo was the son of Ntagara, a fact that Nteziryayo confirmed.[5522] In this context, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness TP's admission that "[s]o much time has passed since [she] last saw [Nteziryayo]" and that she did not "think [she] could recognise him"[5523] prevented the Trial Chamber from concluding that she attended Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness FAL recalled that, during the swearing-in ceremony, "Alphonse Nteziryayo [the prefect] said he had come to install Elie Ndayambaje".[5524] The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that the fact that the witness was not able to identify Nteziryayo in court, whom he did not personally know or often see, unlike Ndayambaje,[5525] does not show that the witness's evidence lacked credibility or that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that he testified about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2382. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's broad and speculative contention that evidence that several other meetings were held in Muganza Commune "and its surroundings" prevented the Trial Chamber from concluding that the Prosecution witnesses were testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5526]

2383. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nteziryayo's contention that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that all the Prosecution witnesses testified about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2. Assessment of Defence Evidence

2384. When considering evidence in relation to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Trial Chamber contrasted the evidence of the Prosecution witnesses with that of Defence witnesses as it concerned the speeches of Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje and whether resulting violence

[5526] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nteziryayo also contends that the killing of Tutsis in Butare was widespread and that "evidence that Tutsi girls were killed after the meeting" does not distinguish Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony from any other meeting. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 104(c). As Nteziryayo fails to develop this occurred.[5527] In particular, it noted Nteziryayo's potential motive to reduce his "personal responsibility for the alleged incitement in question."[5528] It also recalled that Defence Witnesses AND-11 and AND-73 knew Nteziryayo from having previously served in the army together and that Witness AND-11 "knew Nteziryayo well" from his work in Kibayi Commune from 1991 and that he referred to Nteziryayo as a friend.[5529] Acknowledging "the largely consistent nature" of the Defence evidence, the Trial Chamber considered that the credibility of the Defence witnesses was undermined by their "potential motivations and personal ties of each of the Defence witnesses with Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo."[5530] The Trial Chamber concluded that Defence evidence on the whole was not sufficiently credible to raise a reasonable doubt about the nature of the utterances made by Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje at the swearing-in ceremony.[5531]

2385. Nteziryayo contends that the Trial Chamber's finding that the Defence evidence in relation to the ceremony was "largely consistent" calls into question its later conclusion that it was "on the whole not sufficiently credible" to raise reasonable doubt.[5532] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the credibility of three of the witnesses he called was diminished by personal ties, that it did not provide a reasoned opinion in this regard, and that this alone was insufficient to wholly dismiss their evidence.[5533] Nteziryayo adds that the Trial Chamber acted unfairly when determining that personal and professional ties had a greater impact on the credibility of Defence evidence than the "significant" issues that undermine the credibility of the Prosecution evidence.[5534]

2386. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the credibility of Defence witnesses was undermined by their personal ties to Nteziryayo, whose evidence also lacked reliability and credibility.[5535]

provide a reasoned opinion for its decision. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber notes that Nteziryayo has pointed to no specific error in the Trial Chamber's reflection of the evidence concerning his relationships with Defence witnesses and merely argues that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to base its rejection of Defence evidence on this factor.

2388. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to decide which version it considers more credible.[5537] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that no reasonable trier of fact could have both noted the consistent nature of Defence evidence as well as the weaknesses in the credibility of Defence witnesses and ultimately rejected such evidence in light of the virtually unanimous Prosecution evidence that inciting speeches were made during Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5538] Moreover, apart from alleging that the Trial Chamber treated the Defence and Prosecution evidence differently, Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion or substantiate with references an improper differential treatment of Defence evidence.

2389. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber acted unreasonably in discrediting Defence evidence.

3. Conclusion

2390. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has failed to demonstrate any error in relation to his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony and, accordingly, dismisses Ground 4 of Nteziryayo's appeal.

C. Muyaga Commune Meeting (Ground 5)

2391. Based on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses QBY and FAB, the Trial Chamber found that, around mid-June 1994, Nteziryayo, in his capacity as Butare Prefect, attended a public meeting in Mamba Sector, Muyaga Commune, at which he incited the population to kill Tutsis by urging the audience to "hunt down, flush out and kill Tutsis without any distinction".[5539]

2392. In reaching its findings, the Trial Chamber observed that Prosecution and Defence evidence consistently reflected that Nteziryayo spoke at a meeting in Muyaga Commune but determined that the evidence from the Defence did not concern the event discussed by the Prosecution witnesses.[5540] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found that the meeting described by Witnesses QBY and FAB took place around mid-June 1994,[5541] more specifically "on or after 21 June 1994", since both witnesses were "adamant" that Nteziryayo attended the meeting in his capacity as prefect.[5542] The Trial Chamber noted that the Defence brought evidence regarding a meeting held on 23 May 1994 that contained similarities with the one described by the Prosecution witnesses but concluded that, while it was possible that this other meeting also occurred the Defence evidence had "no bearing upon [its] assessment of the evidence related to the June 1994 meeting testified to by Witnesses QBY and FAB."[5543]

2393. The Trial Chamber determined that Nteziryayo's speech at the Muyaga Commune meeting as described by Witnesses QBY and FAB constituted a direct appeal to kill Tutsis and convicted him of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide on this basis.[5544]

2394. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that, in his capacity as prefect, he incited the commission of genocide during a meeting held in Muyaga Commune in mid-June 1994 and in convicting him of direct and public incitement to commit genocide on this basis.[5545] Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the Prosecution witnesses testified about a meeting other than the meeting on 23 May 1994 described by the [5544] Trial Judgement, paras. 6022-6025, 6036, 6186. The Trial Chamber concluded that there was insufficient evidence to establish that Nteziryayo's words at the Muyaga Commune meeting substantially contributed to any subsequent crime and accordingly found that he was not criminally responsible for genocide with respect to this allegation. See ibid., para. 5946.

[5545] Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, paras. 41-46, 59-63, 65; Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 167-212, 240, 241, 243-245, 247, 248.

Defence witnesses and, consequently, in concluding that the Defence evidence was irrelevant to the assessment of the Prosecution case.[5546]

2395. The Appeals Chamber will assess these overarching challenges when addressing Nteziryayo's specific contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to treat the Prosecution evidence with sufficient caution; (ii) evaluating the Prosecution evidence as to the timing of the meeting; (iii) assessing the Prosecution identification evidence; (iv) insufficiently considering similarities between Prosecution and Defence evidence concerning the meeting; and (v) ignoring Nteziryayo's evidence that precluded his presence at a meeting in Muyaga Commune after his appointment as Butare Prefect on 17 June 1994.[5547]

1. Insufficient Caution

2396. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the credibility of Witnesses QBY and FAB.[5548] Specifically, he contends that, although Witness FAB was released at the time of his testimony, the Trial Chamber failed to consider that he was an accomplice witness and that his evidence should be treated with requisite caution.[5549] Nteziryayo stresses that Witness FAB pleaded guilty to genocide, attended Gacaca sessions while imprisoned, and admitted that his evidence was altered as a result of his participation in these sessions.[5550] With respect to Witness QBY, Nteziryayo contends that, while the Trial Chamber acknowledged the need to treat the witness's evidence with caution,[5551] it failed to consider adequately that he was an incarcerated accomplice witness who had attended five Gacaca sessions.[5552]

2397. The Prosecution responds that Nteziryayo does not establish that Witness FAB possessed any motive to implicate him given that the witness had been released at the time of his [5546] Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, para. 43(a); Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 167(iii), 169-178, 183, 184.

[5547] Nteziryayo also challenged the Trial Chamber's assessment of the credibility of Witnesses QBY and FAB in paragraphs 249 and 251 of his appeal brief. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it struck these paragraphs from the brief, finding that they exceeded the scope of his appeal. See 12 July 2013 Appeal Decision, paras. 24, 25. Consequently, these challenges will not be addressed.
[5548] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 167(vi), (vii), 201-211. The Appeals Chamber notes that, while Nteziryayo also alleged in his notice of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the discrepancies between the testimonies of Witnesses QBY and FAB were minor and had no impact on their credibility, he did not develop and substantiate this allegation in his appeal brief. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nteziryayo has abandoned this allegation. See Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, paras. 42, 43(b). See also ibid., para. 62.
[5549] Nteziryayo Notice of Appeal, para. 63; Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 167(vi), 201, 205-207, 247, 248. Nteziryayo emphasises that the fact that Witness FAB was released at the time of his testimony is immaterial as he had already given two statements to the Prosecution while imprisoned and had an interest in ensuring that his testimony was consistent with them in order to avoid being accused of "perverting the course of justice". See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 201, 206.
[5550] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 201, 205(a)-(f).
[5551] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 209. Nteziryayo argues that the Prosecution did not seek to rely on Witness QBY's evidence. See ibid., para. 208.

testimony.[5553] It further argues that the Trial Chamber acknowledged that Witness QBY's evidence should be treated with caution and sufficiently considered the context in which his evidence was provided.[5554]

2398. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness FAB was arrested on his return to Rwanda in 1996, confessed that he killed a child, and was sentenced to 15 years in prison for his crime.[5555] However, he was released early in 2003 and was not in detention at the time of his testimony before the Tribunal in April 2004.[5556] Under the circumstances, Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber was required to treat the witness's evidence with caution,[5557] as he points to no circumstances indicating that the witness may have had motives or incentives to implicate him when testifying.[5558] Furthermore, none of the evidence Nteziryayo cites concerning the impact of Gacaca sessions on Witness FAB's evidence reflects that the witness was encouraged to implicate falsely Nteziryayo before the Tribunal.[5559]

[5555] Witness FAB, T. 5 April 2004 pp. 34, 35, and 50, 51, 55 (closed session). Witness FAB testified that he killed a child on 27 or 28 April 1994 and that this crime occurred well before the meeting held in Muyaga Commune. He also denied participating personally in any killings after the meeting. See ibid., pp. 42 and 50-52 (closed session).
[5556] Witness FAB, T. 5 April 2004 pp. 35, 37, and 55 (closed session).
[5557] The Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness FAB's criminal conduct, which was unrelated to and occurred prior to the Muyaga Commune meeting, would make him an accomplice of Nteziryayo as defined in the jurisprudence of the Tribunal. See Niyitegeka Appeal Judgement, para. 98 ("The ordinary meaning of the term 'accomplice' is 'an associate in guilt, a partner in crime.'"). See also Karemera and Ngirumpatse Appeal Judgement, para. 42; Munyakazi Appeal Judgement, para. 93; Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 203.
[5558] The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's contention that Witness FAB had an incentive to lie while testifying under oath in order to remain consistent with the prior statements he gave while imprisoned and to avoid being accused of "perverting the course of justice".
[5559] See Witness FAB, T. 5 April 2004 pp. 36, 37, 42, 43.

Appeals Chamber considers that Witness QBY's evidence concerning his participation in Gacaca sessions in no way demonstrates that he was encouraged to implicate falsely Nteziryayo.[5564]

2400. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to apply appropriate caution when assessing the evidence of Witnesses FAB and QBY.

2. Timing of the Meeting

2401. When assessing the Prosecution evidence as to the timing of the meeting, the Trial Chamber stated as follows:

> Witness QBY placed the meeting around either 5 May 1994 or 5 June 1994 whereas Witness FAB referred to mid-June 1994. The Chamber considers that these are both estimates which do not automatically cast doubt on the witnesses' credibility, given the length of time that had elapsed since the event. The Chamber notes that Witnesses QBY and FAB are adamant that on the day of the meeting, Nteziryayo already held his position as préfet of Butare. Witness FAB even testified that the purpose of the meeting was to introduce Nteziryayo as the new préfet. Flowing from that, it appears that the meeting may have occurred on or after 21 June 1994, as Nteziryayo was appointed préfet of Butare on or around 17 June 1994, and his swearing-in ceremony took place on 21 June 1994.[5565]

2402. Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Muyaga Commune meeting occurred on or after 21 June 1994 as this finding is in contradiction with the evidence provided by Witnesses QBY and FAB.[5566] Nteziryayo stresses that Witness QBY repeatedly testified that the meeting he attended during which Nteziryayo spoke in his capacity as prefect occurred sometime between 5 May and 5 June 1994.[5567] He submits that it was therefore unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness QBY and to find that the witness was "adamant" that Nteziryayo was prefect of Butare at the time.[5568] Nteziryayo points out that the witness was so certain as to the timing of the meeting that he rejected an official document indicating that Nteziryayo was not appointed prefect until 17 June 1994.[5569]

[5564] See Witness QBY, T. 19 April 2004 pp. 72, 73, 75-77.

Nteziryayo adds that Witness QBY's evidence that the meeting occurred between 5 May and 5 June 1994 corresponds to his prior statement. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 175, 182; Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 73(b).

[5569] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 181, referring to Witness QBY, T. 20 April 2004 p. 20. See also Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 75.

2403. The Appeals Chamber further understands that Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness FAB's testimony that the meeting occurred in mid-June 1994 as this contradicts the witness's prior statement that it occurred around the beginning of that month.[5570]

2404. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably assessed the evidence of Witnesses QBY and FAB and correctly concluded that Nteziryayo attended a meeting in Muyaga Commune in mid-June 1994.[5571]

2405. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that the meeting described by Witnesses QBY and FAB took place around mid-June 1994,[5572] more specifically "on or after 21 June 1994" since both witnesses were "adamant" that Nteziryayo attended the meeting in his capacity as Butare Prefect.[5573] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is open for a trial chamber to make factual findings on the date of the events by examining the evidence as a whole and that, indeed, this may be particularly necessary when determining dates, as often witnesses may not recall an exact date but describe the timing of the event in relation to other variables.[5574] The Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo places undue importance on the fact that Witness QBY repeatedly referred to the meeting occurring around 5 May or 5 June 1994, as this position ignores the clear indication throughout the witness's testimony that he could not recall the date of the meeting.[5575] On the other hand, the witness was unequivocal that Nteziryayo was introduced at the meeting as the prefect of Butare.[5576] Moreover, there is no merit in Nteziryayo's position that Witness QBY refused to recognise the accuracy of an exhibit which suggested that Nteziryayo was appointed prefect after the date of the meeting that the witness provided, as the witness merely stated that he did not recognise this document and that he could "only say that it was Alphonse Nteziryayo".[5577]

2406. With respect to Witness FAB, the Trial Chamber acknowledged that the witness testified that the meeting occurred "sometime in mid-June 1994, and not between 3 or 5 June 1994 as indicated in his previous statement".[5578] It noted the witness's explanation that he may have been mistaken about the date when he gave his prior statement but realised the mistake during Gacaca sessions.[5579] Moreover, when questioned about the influence of the Gacaca sessions on his memory, the witness replied that, while they made him realise he had made a mistake about "dates", these sessions "had not been held to remind" the participants of the events, nor did they "detract" from his evidence, as he was "speaking from what [he knew] personally."[5580] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied upon Witness FAB's evidence as to the timing of the event, notwithstanding any inconsistency with his prior statement, particularly in light of his explanation and his evidence that Nteziryayo had been installed as the prefect and was being introduced as such at the meeting.[5581]

2407. In light of Witness QBY's uncertainty about the date of the meeting, Witness FAB's credible testimony that the meeting occurred around mid-June 1994, and both witnesses' evidence that Nteziryayo was introduced as the prefect of Butare at the meeting, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that Nteziryayo has demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the meeting took place after Nteziryayo's appointment as prefect "around mid-June 1994" and more specifically "on or after 21 June 1994".[5582]

3. Identification Evidence

2408. Nteziryayo submits that Witnesses QBY's and FAB's identification evidence was unreliable, noting that neither could identify him in court and that both testified that the meeting was the first time that they had observed him.[5583] He further emphasises that Witness FAB gave no physical description of him[5584] and that Witness QBY's description did not match his but Nsabimana's physical characteristics.[5585] He contends that these circumstances render the identifications unsound and that the Trial Chamber failed to apply sufficient caution when considering them.[5586]

[5580] Witness FAB, T. 5 April 2004 p. 43. The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness FAB clarified that, although he was not sure about the exact date of the meeting, it was in the month of June 1994 since he fled between the end of June and beginning of July and that he left Rwanda ten days after the meeting in Muyaga Commune. See ibid., pp. 30, 33, 34, 42, 43 and 52 (closed session).

Nteziryayo further submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Exhibit D460A (CD-Rom Containing Nsabimana's Interview with BBC Journalists). See ibid., para. 191. See also Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 80; AT. 17 April 2015 p. 17.
[5586] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 192-194, 212(f)(ii).

2409. The Prosecution responds that, since Nteziryayo was found to be one of the speakers at the meeting based on self-identification as the newly appointed prefect, Nteziryayo's submissions on his physical description and absence of in-court identifications are irrelevant.[5587]

2410. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's arguments that it is significant that neither witness identified him in court, that neither knew him before the events, and that Witness FAB did not provide a physical description of him. All of Nteziryayo's arguments fail to acknowledge that the witnesses testified that they were able to identify him because he was introduced by name at the Muyaga Commune meeting and was identified as the prefect.[5588] In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witnesses QBY's and FAB's identification evidence despite the absence of their in-court identifications,[5589] their lack of prior knowledge of Nteziryayo,[5590] and the absence of a physical description from Witness FAB.

2411. Likewise, Nteziryayo's contention that Witness QBY's description of him as "black" and having "sideburns" suggests that the witness was describing Nsabimana is unpersuasive.[5591] Having carefully reviewed the relevant evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's argument that Witness AND-60's description of Nsabimana, even considered with Nteziryayo's evidence that he did not have facial hair at the time,[5592] prevented the Trial Chamber from accepting Witness QBY's identification evidence of Nteziryayo.[5593]

[5587] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1529; AT. 17 April 2015 pp. 32, 33.

[5593] The Trial Chamber recalled that Witness QBY testified that Nteziryayo was a tall, black man with sideburns and no spectacles. See Trial Judgement, para. 3559. While Witness AND-60's evidence reflects that, at the relevant time, Nsabimana had sideburns and a complexion "between dark and light", he also described Nsabimana as wearing spectacles and being short in stature. See Witness AND-60, T. 13 March 2007 p. 7. Witness AND-60 also confirmed Witness QBY's evidence that Nteziryayo was "tall". See idem. Of additional significance, Witness QBY further testified that Nteziryayo said he was a soldier, a position that was not held by Nsabimana. See Witness QBY, T. 20 April 2004 pp. 3, 4. Moreover, Nteziryayo did not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred by not considering Exhibit D460A (CD-Rom Containing Nsabimana's Interview with BBC Journalists).

4. Similarities Between Prosecution and Defence Evidence

2413. When assessing the Defence evidence in its deliberations, the Trial Chamber stated that:

> The Defence brought evidence regarding a meeting on 23 May 1994 in Mamba secteur, Muyaga commune, which contained similarities to the meeting testified to by Witnesses QBY and FAB. The Chamber does not exclude the possibility that this other meeting, as asserted by the Defence, actually occurred, however this evidence has no bearing upon the Chamber's assessment of the evidence related to the June 1994 meeting testified to by Witnesses QBY and FAB.[5594]

2414. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the Prosecution witnesses testified about a meeting other than the 23 May 1994 meeting described by the Defence witnesses[5595] and, consequently, in concluding that the Defence evidence was irrelevant to the assessment of the Prosecution case.[5596] Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently the following "striking similarities" which suggest that they all were testifying about the same event: (i) Witnesses QBY, FAB, and AND-60 testified that the meeting was held in Muyaga Commune and that the latter two specified that it occurred in the midst of eucalyptus bushes; (ii) Witnesses QBY, FAB, and AND-60 recalled that it occurred in the morning and that a microphone or megaphone was used; (iii) Witnesses FAB, AND-60, and Nteziryayo specified that the meeting concerned security matters; (iv) Witnesses FAB and AND-60 described the bourgmestre as introducing the new prefect; and (v) Witness QBY, FAB, and AND-60 testified to hearing gunshots, which caused panic among the audience.[5597] Nteziryayo contends that, had the Trial Chamber properly assessed these similarities, it would have found that the Defence evidence raised doubt in the Prosecution case that he incited killings during a meeting held in Muyaga Commune around mid-June 1994.[5598]

2415. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber considered similarities between the Prosecution and Defence evidence but, because it found that the Muyaga Commune meeting occurred in mid-June 1994, it correctly held that the Defence evidence regarding a meeting in Muyaga Commune on 23 May 1994 had no bearing upon the assessment of the Prosecution case and was not required to assess the credibility of the Defence evidence.[5599] The Prosecution further submits that Nteziryayo overstates the alleged similarities and minimises the differences between the two meetings.[5600]

2416. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's statement of the parallels between the Prosecution and the Defence evidence is limited to an observation that the latter brought evidence "which contained similarities to the meeting testified to by Witnesses QBY and FAB" as well as a reference to discrete aspects of Witness AND-60's evidence.[5601] The Trial Chamber provided no explanation as to why the similarities did not reasonably suggest that the Prosecution and the Defence evidence concerned the same meeting, although its summary of the evidence reflects that it did not disregard them.[5602] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's analysis falls below the requirement to provide a reasoned opinion pursuant to Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules given the number of similarities in the evidence as well as the Defence's clear position at the close of trial that all the witnesses were talking about the same meeting and that its evidence rebutted allegations that Nteziryayo made inciting statements during it.[5603]

2417. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error of law does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Prosecution and Defence witnesses were talking about two different meetings. Having reviewed the evidence cited by the Trial Chamber and the parties, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Witnesses QBY and FAB were referring to an event other than the 23 May 1994 meeting described by Witness AND-60 and Nteziryayo. The Appeals Chamber finds the parallels that the event started in the morning[5604] and that it occurred near the Mamba sector office[5605] to be insignificant in light of Witness AND-60's evidence that public meetings regularly occurred there.[5606] Likewise, overlapping evidence that voice amplification systems were used[5607] and that gunshots were fired[5608] does not necessarily establish as unreasonable, in the context of the totality of the evidence, that Witnesses QBY and FAB, on one hand, and Witness AND-60 and Nteziryayo, on the other hand, were referring to different events.[5609] Contrary to Nteziryayo's assertion, the Prosecution and Defence evidence does not consistently indicate that the bourgmestre introduced Nteziryayo,[5610] or that the meeting concerned security matters.[5611]

2418. The Appeals Chamber emphasises that Witnesses QBY and FAB were categorical that Nteziryayo was introduced as the new prefect during this meeting[5612] and recalls that it has affirmed the Trial Chamber's reliance on their ability to identify him on this basis.[5613] This evidence contrasts with Witness AND-60's testimony that Nsabimana was introduced as the new prefect[5614] and Nteziryayo's testimony that he was not prefect at the time of the only meeting he attended in Muyaga.[5615] Based on the record before it, the Appeals Chamber concludes that, notwithstanding the Trial Chamber's failure to provide a reasoned opinion, a reasonable trier of fact could have determined that the Defence evidence did not relate to the Prosecution case and concluded that Witnesses QBY and FAB testified about a later meeting that occurred "around mid-June 1994" or, more specifically, "on or after 21 June 1994".[5616]

2419. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to provide a reasoned opinion but concludes that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the Defence evidence regarding a meeting on 23 May 1994 had no bearing upon its assessment of the evidence related to the June 1994 meeting given by Witnesses FAB and QBY.

5. Nteziryayo's Presence Elsewhere From 17 June 1994 Onwards

2420. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider his testimony about his movements from 17 June 1994 onwards which, he argues, conflicts with the Trial Chamber's finding that he participated in a meeting in Muyaga Commune on or after 21 June 1994.[5617] In this respect, Nteziryayo emphasises that he gave evidence that "from at least 22 June he was fully [5609] See Witness FAB, T. 5 April 2004 p. 22; Witness QBY, T. 19 April 2004 pp. 52-54.

[5611] The Appeals Chamber does not consider that it amounts to a similarity between the testimonies of Witnesses FAB and AND-60 since Witness FAB only stated that Nteziryayo "mentioned security measures" because they were about to win the war and did not say that the purpose of the meeting was to address them. See Witness FAB, T. 5 April 2004 pp. 28, 48, 49 and compare with Witness AND-60, T. 13 March 2007 p. 10. occupied in the exercise of his function as préfet".[5618] He contends that, in addition to his busy schedule, his testimony demonstrates that he was dedicated to assisting Tutsis and Hutus alike, rendering it unlikely that he incited the population to kill Tutsis at a meeting in Muyaga Commune during this period.[5619] Nteziryayo adds that the only time he would have been able to attend a meeting in Muyaga Commune was from 28 June 1994 to 3 July 1994, but that the evidence demonstrates that there was intense fighting then and chaos as the RPF entered Butare, which undermines the position that a meeting as described by the Prosecution witnesses occurred then.[5620]

2421. The Prosecution, relying on the Ndindabahizi Appeal Judgement, responds that Nteziryayo improperly introduces a new alibi on appeal and contends that his arguments should be summarily dismissed.[5621] It submits that, even if the Appeals Chamber were to permit this alibi evidence, Nteziryayo fails to raise reasonable doubt that he was at the meeting held in Muyaga Commune around mid-June 1994.[5622]

2422. Nteziryayo replies that he is not barred from relying on alibi evidence that forms part of the trial record and that only through reading the Trial Judgement it became clear that he needed to emphasise the relevance of this evidence.[5623]

2423. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution's reliance on the Ndindabahizi Appeal Judgement is inapposite, since Nteziryayo is not presenting alibi evidence for the first time on [5618] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 196. Specifically, Nteziryayo points to the following: (i) on 17 June 1994, he was appointed prefect; (ii) on 18 June 1994, his appointment was broadcasted and he assisted in the evacuation of approximately 400 orphans to the border of Burundi; (iii) on 19 June 1994, he met the Deputy Prefect of Political and Administrative Affairs and the Deputy Prefect of Social Affairs; (iv) on 20 June 1994, his appointment as prefect was officially announced; (v) on 21 June 1994, he participated in his inauguration as prefect between approximately 11.30 a.m. and 12.00 p.m., contacted officials in the prefecture and apprised himself of the security situation; (vi) on 22 June 1994, he attended the swearing-in ceremony of Fidèle Uwizeye in Ndora Commune at 11.00 a.m., followed by the swearing-in ceremony of Ndayambaje in Muganza Commune between 2.00 and 3.00 p.m. and met with the bishop of Butare in relation to Cardinal Etchégray's visit; (vii) on 23 June 1994, his day was entirely devoted to preparation for the visit of Cardinal Etchégray; (viii) on 24 June 1994, he spent the full day with Cardinal Etchégray; (ix) on 25 June 1994 he spent the morning escorting Cardinal Etchégray to Gikongoro and the afternoon with the bishop of Butare; (x) on 26 June 1994, he met first with the bishop of Butare and also with the director of the School of Veterinary Agriculture Kabutare to discuss the evacuation of 600 students displaced from Byumba; (xi) on 27 to 28 June 1994, alerted by the violence of the fighting, he ceased all other activities to implement the evacuation plan for displaced populations and populations of the city; and (xii) on 28 June 1994, he assisted the evacuation of the Kiruhura sisters to Zaire. See idem.

appeal.[5624] Nteziryayo's testimony as to his whereabouts after he was appointed as prefect of Butare formed part of the record at trial.[5625]

2424. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber summarised Nteziryayo's testimony that he did not take part in meetings in Muyaga Commune other than the one on 23 May 1994 and that he did not go to that commune at any other time between April and July 1994.[5626] While the Trial Judgement does not reflect express consideration of all aspects of Nteziryayo's testimony about his whereabouts after 17 June 1994 as referred to on appeal, it does expressly refer to some of it.[5627] In this context, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber ignored all of this evidence. It is also not persuaded that this evidence, which does not provide a comprehensive accounting of Nteziryayo's whereabouts after 17 June 1994 and is based solely on Nteziryayo's uncorroborated testimony,[5628] demonstrates that no reasonable trier of fact could have determined that Nteziryayo participated in the meeting described by Witnesses QBY and FAB.[5629]

2425. Furthermore, Nteziryayo's contention that it is "unlikely" that he incited the killing of Tutsis at a meeting in Muyaga Commune after he was appointed as prefect of Butare in light of his "dedication to assisting Tutsis and Hutus alike" as Butare Prefect is unpersuasive.[5630] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that this testimony renders the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witnesses QBY and FAB unreasonable in light of their direct and corroborative evidence concerning the nature of his speech at the meeting they described.

2426. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider his testimony about his whereabouts from 17 June 1994 onwards.

[5629] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nteziryayo did not call any witnesses at trial to confirm that he could not have been present at a meeting in Muyaga Commune on or after 21 June 1994 and that he did not specifically point to the evidence now referred to on appeal as being relevant to this allegation in his closing brief or during closing arguments. See Nteziryayo Closing Brief, paras. 181-221; Nteziryayo Closing Arguments, T. 27 April 2009, T. 28 April 2009. While Nteziryayo stresses that he did not rely on evidence of his specific activities after he was appointed prefect at trial when attempting to refute his participation in the meeting at Muyaga Commune because he only became aware of the date from the Trial Judgement, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in this position. Nteziryayo's defence at trial demonstrates that he was prepared to respond to the allegation that the meeting had taken place when he was prefect and deliberately oriented it to prove that the meeting in Muyaga Commune actually took place on 23 May 1994 when he was not prefect. In this context, he could have equally emphasised what would have prevented him from attending a meeting there after his appointment. See supra, paras. 2295-2297.

6. Conclusion

2427. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he incited the commission of genocide during a meeting held in Muyaga Commune around mid-June 1994 and, on this basis, in convicting him of direct and public incitement to commit genocide. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 5 of Nteziryayo's appeal.

D. Kibayi Commune Meeting (Ground 6)

2428. Based on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FAK and QBU, the Trial Chamber found that, around mid to late June 1994, Nteziryayo, in his capacity as Butare Prefect, attended a public meeting on a football pitch next to the Kibayi commune office in Nyabisigara Cellule, Mukindo Sector, at which he incited the population to "flush out and kill the remaining Tutsis survivors in the commune".[5631]

2429. The Trial Chamber observed that, while Prosecution and Defence witnesses all testified to attending public meetings on a football pitch next to the Kibayi commune office,[5632] Nteziryayo and the Defence witnesses were referring to a meeting which occurred on 24 May 1994, while Witnesses FAK and QBU were referring to a later meeting which must have taken place after Nteziryayo assumed office as prefect, that is after 17 June 1994.[5633] The Trial Chamber determined that the similarities between the Defence and the Prosecution evidence were "fortuitous" [5634] and noted that there were "patent differences between the opposing parties' evidence", notably concerning whether Nteziryayo was prefect of Butare at the time of the meeting.[5635] It concluded that the evidence led by the parties concerned two different meetings,[5636] and that the evidence led by the Defence regarding a meeting that took place on 24 May 1994 was therefore "not relevant"[5637] and did not rebut the Prosecution evidence with respect to the subsequent meeting at the Kibayi commune office when Nteziryayo was prefect.[5638]

2430. The Trial Chamber found that Nteziryayo's speech at the Kibayi Commune meeting held around mid to late June 1994 constituted a direct appeal to kill Tutsis and convicted Nteziryayo of direct and public incitement to commit genocide on this basis.[5639]

The Trial Chamber concluded that there was insufficient evidence to establish that Nteziryayo's words at the meeting substantially contributed to any subsequent crime and accordingly found that he was not criminally responsible for genocide with respect to this allegation. See ibid., para. 5946.

He argues that the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the Prosecution witnesses testified about a meeting other than that described by the Defence witnesses and in dismissing the Defence evidence as irrelevant.[5641]

1. Insufficient Caution

[5642] Nteziryayo also refers to prior arguments raised under Ground 5 of his appeal concerning the Trial Chamber's failure to consider his evidence showing that he could not have attended a meeting such as the one held in Kibayi Commune after he assumed the position as Butare Prefect on 21 June 1994. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 218(vi), 232; Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 103. For the reasons previously articulated under Section VII.C.5, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider his testimony about his whereabouts from 21 June 1994 onwards in the Trial Judgement.

events in Kibayi Commune.[5648] Finally, he points to Witness FAK's concession that his prior statements did not entirely contain "true reflections".[5649]

2435. The Prosecution responds that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber exercised insufficient caution with respect to the evidence of Witnesses FAK and QBU.[5650]

2436. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's general contention that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution simply because the finding of his criminal responsibility stemming from the Kibayi Commune meeting relies on two accomplice witnesses.[5651] As to Nteziryayo's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witnesses FAK and QBU did not discuss their experiences, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness QBU testified that he never took part in Gacaca sessions with Witness FAK.[5652] While the testimony of Witness FAK indicates that he and Witness QBU were from the same commune and that it was possible that they participated in meetings, Witness FAK does not state that he attended the same Gacaca sessions as Witness QBU or that they discussed their experiences with each other.[5653] Likewise, Nteziryayo does not substantiate his contention that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the "substantial risk of contamination" from these witnesses participating in "open discussions" about the events in Kibayi Commune. Nteziryayo's arguments in this regard are therefore dismissed.

2437. The Appeals Chamber notes that, as mentioned by Nteziryayo, Witness FAK appears to have suggested that not all of his prior statements were "true reflections".[5654] However, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that this aspect of Witness FAK's testimony precluded a reasonable trier of fact from relying on his evidence as it concerned the Kibayi Commune meeting, as this aspect of the witness's testimony fails to demonstrate that the witness possessed any incentive to perjure himself before the Tribunal in this respect. Indeed, and of particular significance, the Trial Chamber

The Appeals Chamber observes that, while allegations of collusion as it relates to several Prosecution witnesses fell outside the scope of Nteziryayo's notice of appeal, it concluded that these particular arguments related to Witnesses FAK and QBU did not. See 8 May 2013 Appeal Decision, para. 63. However, it determined that paragraphs 249 through 252 of the Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, which, in part, raised arguments relating to Witness FAK, exceeded the scope of the appeal and would not be considered. See 12 July 2013 Appeal Decision, paras. 23-25.

expressly noted the differences between Witness FAK's prior statement and his testimony concerning the date of the meeting, but considered the difference to be minor.[5655]

2438. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to the evidence of Witnesses FAK and QBU.

2. Identification Evidence

2439. The Trial Chamber relied on the identification evidence of Witnesses FAK and QBU and determined that their testimonies that Nteziryayo was the prefect of Butare at the time of the Kibayi Commune meeting reflected "[t]he most salient difference between the Prosecution and Defence evidence".[5656] The Trial Chamber noted that both Witnesses FAK and QBU knew Nteziryayo during 1994 and positively identified him in court.[5657]

2440. Nteziryayo contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witnesses FAK's and QBU's identifications of him as prefect at the time of the meeting about which they testified.[5658] In this regard, he submits that the Trial Chamber: (i) erred in relying on the witnesses' in-court identification;[5659] (ii) failed to consider that the description of the prefect given by Witnesses FAK and QBU most closely matched that of Nsabimana;[5660] and (iii) ignored the reasonable possibility that Witnesses FAK's and QBU's error regarding the date of Nteziryayo's appointment as prefect suggested that they were not wrong about the dates but about the identity of the prefect they saw at the meeting.[5661] Nteziryayo argues that the Trial Chamber's error is significant given its conclusion that the identification of Nteziryayo as the prefect was the "most salient difference" between Prosecution and Defence evidence.[5662]

[5660] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 221(b). Nteziryayo argues that Witnesses FAK and QBU both described the prefect at the meeting as having sideburns, which Nsabimana had but not Nteziryayo, and that Witness FAK described the prefect as beginning to bald, whereas Witness AND-11 testified that Nteziryayo had lots of hair. See idem.

[5661] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 221(a). See also Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 96. Nteziryayo emphasises that Witness QBU testified that he had replaced Jean-Baptiste Habyalimana as prefect when Nsabimana had, and that Witnesses FAK and QBU both firmly believed that Nteziryayo was appointed prefect much earlier than he in fact was. See Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 221(c); Nteziryayo Reply Brief, paras. 93, 94.

[5662] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 223, 229 (emphasis omitted).

2441. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber held that no positive probative weight would be given to in-court identification[5663] and argues that it was reasonable to determine that the meeting described by Witnesses FAK and QBU took place after Nteziryayo's 17 June 1994 appointment based on: (i) the fact that Nteziryayo identified himself as the new prefect; (ii) Witness FAK's suggestion that, although he was not sure of the date, the meeting occurred on 18 or 19 June 1994; and (iii) Witness QBU's belief that the meeting was in June.[5664] The Prosecution adds that both Prosecution witnesses had seen Nteziryayo before.[5665]

2442. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witnesses FAK's and QBU's identification of Nteziryayo as the prefect at the time of the meeting was the principal basis upon which the Trial Chamber concluded that they testified about a meeting occurring after Nteziryayo's appointment as Butare Prefect on 17 June 1994.[5666] In this respect, the Trial Chamber held that the Prosecution witnesses' identification of Nteziryayo as prefect could not be a case of misidentification as Witnesses FAK and QBU both "knew Nteziryayo during 1994" and positively identified him in court.[5667]

2443. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's submissions regarding the Trial Chamber's reliance on in-court identification[5668] and the Prosecution witnesses' description of the prefect they saw.[5669] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted in its summary of their evidence that both Witnesses FAK and QBU stated that the individual they identified as Nteziryayo introduced himself at the meeting as the prefect.[5670] When discussing their identification of Nteziryayo as the prefect, the Trial Chamber also referred to their conflicting evidence as regards the date of the meeting, noting that: (i) in a prior statement, Witness FAK said the meeting occurred in May 1994; (ii) Witness FAK testified in court that "it actually took place in early June and [5665] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1543; AT. 17 April 2015 p. 34. The Prosecution argues that Nteziryayo's attempt to impeach their evidence on the basis of their description of him neither discredits their testimonies nor establishes that the Trial Chamber's finding was unreasonable. It submits that Nteziryayo merely repeats his unsuccessful "sideburn defence" from trial and that, as the identification was not made under difficult circumstances, there was no need for the Trial Chamber to consider the issues of sideburns and receding hair. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1543.

[5666] See Trial Judgement, para. 3681.
[5667] Trial Judgement, para. 3681.
[5668] The Appeals Chamber recalls that any in-court identification should be assigned "little or no credence" given the signals that can identify an accused aside from prior acquaintance. See Gatete Appeal Judgement, para. 193; Kalimanzira Appeal Judgement, para. 96. See also Kunarac et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 320. In the present case, in addition to noting Witnesses FAK's and QBU's positive in-court identification, the Trial Chamber relied on the fact that they knew Nteziryayo in 1994, a conclusion that Nteziryayo did not challenge. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the witnesses' identification of Nteziryayo in-court.
[5669] Having carefully reviewed the relevant parts of their evidence, the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Nteziryayo's arguments that the description of the prefect given by Witnesses FAK and QBU most closely matched that of Nsabimana and, consequently, that this part of the evidence required express consideration by the Trial Chamber.
[5670] Trial Judgement, paras. 3587, 3594; Witness FAK, T. 14 April 2004 p. 19, T. 15 April 2004 pp. 24, 29, 30 (closed session); Witness QBU, T. 13 April 2004 p. 9.

estimated around 18 or 19 June 1994"; and (iii) Witness QBU testified that the meeting "occurred around the end of May or early June 1994."[5671]

2444. A careful review of the witnesses' testimonies indicates, as pointed out by Nteziryayo, that both Prosecution witnesses estimated that the meeting occurred "between May and June 1994" or in "late May, early June".[5672] As observed by the Trial Chamber, when it was put to each Prosecution witness that the meeting to which they testified must have been in June 1994 since Nteziryayo took up duties as Butare Prefect after 21 June 1994, Witness FAK maintained that Nteziryayo was a prefect when he came in May 1994, while Witness QBU contested the validity of Nteziryayo's letter of appointment, stating that it misstated the date of appointment "as much later than the actual appointment."[5673] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness QBU testified that Nteziryayo replaced Jean-Baptiste Habyalimana as the prefect of Butare,[5674] although there is no dispute that Habyalimana was replaced as prefect of Butare by Nsabimana around 19 April 1994, who was later replaced by Nteziryayo on 17 June 1994.[5675]

2445. However, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber fully considered these particular aspects of Witnesses FAK's and QBU's evidence.[5676] Based on the unrefuted evidence that Nteziryayo was appointed prefect on 17 June 1994 and the fact that Witnesses FAK and QBU consistently asserted that Nteziryayo introduced himself as prefect at the meeting, the Trial Chamber concluded that "the meeting about which Witnesses FAK and QBU testified must have taken place after Nteziryayo assumed office as préfet".[5677] In this context, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the Trial Chamber carefully considered the identification evidence of Witnesses FAK and QBU, including elements within their testimonies that suggest that it occurred prior to the period when Nteziryayo was appointed as Butare Prefect, and did not ignore the possibility that Witnesses FAK and QBU may have been wrong about the identity of the prefect they saw at the meeting. The Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witnesses FAK's and QBU's identification of him as

The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness FAK did not estimate the date to be "around 18 or 19 June 1994" as suggested by the Trial Chamber but merely stated that he could be wrong and that the date could "either be either the 18th or 19th of June 1994" since Nteziryayo told them he was the new prefect at the time when specifically questioned about whether Nteziryayo was then the prefect. Witness FAK, T. 15 April 2004 p. 24 (closed session) ("At that time he told us that he was the new préfet. So it was not in May exactly, but between May and June. I may be mistaken, but the exact date could be either the 18th or 19th of June. That is my recollection.").

prefect to find that they were talking about a meeting other than the one described by the Defence witnesses.

2446. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witnesses FAK's and QBU's identification evidence.

3. Similarities and Differences Between Prosecution and Defence Evidence

2447. In assessing the evidence relevant to a meeting in Kibayi Commune, the Trial Chamber acknowledged that Prosecution and Defence evidence shared similarities regarding: (i) the venue of the meeting; (ii) the fact that the meeting took place in the morning; (iii) the presence of the Kibayi Bourgmestre; (iv) the fact that Muvunyi made a speech; and (v) the firing of gunshots as a test for the population.[5678] The Trial Chamber considered, however, that the similarities were "fortuitous".[5679]

2448. Nteziryayo submits that a "proper reflection of the evidence" reveals "a strong suggestion that all the Defence and Prosecution witnesses were referring to the same meeting"[5680] and contends that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing the similarities between the Prosecution and Defence evidence as fortuitous.[5681] In particular, he argues that "the firing of shots into the air, on the orders of Muvunyi, […] cannot be taken to be a common feature of meetings in the area without evidence supporting that conclusion."[5682] Nteziryayo adds that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that Witness FAK and four Defence witnesses testified that a metaphor about dogs drinking blood was told at the meeting[5683] as well as the broadly consistent evidence on the order of the speakers.[5684]

2449. Nteziryayo further contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously used Witness FAK's testimony that a series of meetings occurred to rebut Witnesses AND-11's and AND-53's testimonies that only one meeting was held in Kibayi Commune.[5685]

In his reply brief, Nteziryayo points out that the Trial Chamber merely referred to the witnesses' evidence on the metaphor of dogs drinking blood in summarising their testimonies, without any indication that this was considered in its deliberations. See Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 101.
[5684] Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, para. 226(b). Nteziryayo argues that all the witnesses were broadly consistent on the following order of speakers: (i) the Kibayi Bourgmestre; (ii) the prefect; and (iii) Muvunyi. See idem. See also Nteziryayo Reply Brief, para. 102, fn. 122, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 3586-3588, 3594, 3597, 3679.

2450. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably found that the meeting described by Witnesses FAK and QBU was different from the 24 May 1994 meeting described by the Defence witnesses, and that the Defence evidence was therefore irrelevant.[5686] It submits that Nteziryayo fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's assessment of the similarities between the two meetings was unreasonable.[5687] In this regard, it argues that: (i) Muvunyi made a similar firearm demonstration during a meeting in Muyaga Commune on 23 May 1994;[5688] (ii) the Trial Chamber did refer to the metaphor of dogs drinking blood; and (iii) the purported similarity regarding the order of speakers is irrelevant if the speakers, particularly the "préfet", are different people.[5689]

2451. Finally, the Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed Witness FAK's testimony that other meetings occurred in Kibayi notwithstanding Defence evidence that only one meeting occurred, highlighting Nsabimana's testimony that he visited Kibayi with Nteziryayo after mid-May 1994.[5690]

2452. Recalling the broad discretion that trial chambers have in assessing evidence,[5691] the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion relating to the assessment of the similarities within the evidence warranting its intervention. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered in detail similarities about the venue and timing of the meeting and the presence of the Kibayi Bourgmestre and finds that Nteziryayo fails to show that no reasonable trier of fact could have regarded these similarities as "fortuitous".[5692] The Trial Chamber also expressly discussed that the majority of witnesses testified about Muvunyi's speech and the firing of gunshots.[5693] Contrary to Nteziryayo's submissions, the record, as reflected in the Trial Judgement, reveals that the firing of gunshots while Muvunyi addressed public gatherings was not unique to a single meeting in Kibayi Commune,[5694] nor were Muvunyi's comments.[5695] In light of these factors, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have determined that these similarities were "fortuitous".

2454. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the Prosecution and the Defence witnesses were referring to different meetings notwithstanding the broadly consistent evidence as to the order of speakers.[5699] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Defence evidence differed from the [5699] With the exception of Nsabimana and Witness AND-64, all the witnesses testified that the Kibayi Bourgmestre spoke first, followed by the prefect, whose identity is disputed. Five of the eight witnesses testified that Muvunyi was next to speak. See Witness FAK, T. 14 April 2004 pp. 14 (closed session), 19-22, 24-26, 33-35, T. 15 April 2004 pp. 23, 24, 29, 34 (closed session); Witness QBU, T. 13 April 2004 pp. 9, 10, 64, 72, 73 (closed session), T. 14 April 2004 p. 7; Nteziryayo, T. 23 May 2007 pp. 39, 40, T. 5 June 2007 p. 18; Witness AND-11, T. 1 February 2007 pp. 17, 19, 23, 28-30, 35, 41, 42 (closed session), T. 5 February 2007 pp. 53-55, T. 7 February 2007 pp. 11, 29, 39, 40, 44 (closed session); Witness AND-53, T. 14 February 2007 pp. 62, 69-72, T. 15 February 2007 pp. 8, 52-54, 59, 72, T. 19 February 2007 pp. 7, 8; Witness AND-64, T. 8 March 2007 pp. 28-35, T. 12 March 2007 pp. 12, 15-17, 19, 49; Witness H1B6, T. 5 December 2005 pp. 15 (closed session) and 18-21, T. 6 December 2005 p. 15. See also Trial Judgement, paras. 3587, 3588 (Witness FAK), 3594, 3597 (Witness QBU), 3608 (Nteziryayo), 3622-

Prosecution evidence as only Defence witnesses indicated that Nsabimana chaired the meeting in his capacity as Prefect and that Nteziryayo attended in his capacity as a colonel.[5700]

2455. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness FAK's evidence that several meetings occurred in Kibayi Commune was inconsistent with Defence evidence that only one public meeting was held.[5701] The Trial Chamber failed to recognise that Witness FAK's evidence of "a series of meetings" held at the Kibayi commune office between April and July 1994, "only one of which Witness FAK attended since the others were only for authorities, and not the general population"[5702] was consistent with the Defence evidence that the 24 May 1994 meeting was the only public meeting that took place in Kibayi Commune at the time.[5703] The Appeals Chamber is nonetheless not convinced that this error occasioned a miscarriage of justice in light of the Trial Chamber's proper assessment of the limited significance of the similarities between the Prosecution and the Defence evidence and Nsabimana's testimony, as noted by the Trial Chamber, that he attended a meeting in Kibayi Commune another time together with Nteziryayo.[5704]

2456. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has failed to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Prosecution and Defence witnesses were testifying about two different meetings and that, consequently, the Defence evidence was not relevant to and did not rebut the Prosecution case.

4. Conclusion

The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to the Prosecution's submission, Witness FAK's testimony was not speculative, but affirmative. See Witness FAK, T. 14 April 2004 p. 66. The Prosecution's argument that "[a]lternatively, if a 24 May meeting occurred, FAK may not have known about it or he may have believed that it was one of those not open to the public" is purely speculative and not substantiated by the witness's testimony. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1546.

[5704] Trial Judgement, para. 3684, referring to Nsabimana, T. 20 September 2006 p. 64. The Appeals Chamber notes that the reference to "Kabgaye" and not "Kibayi" in the English transcripts of Nsabimana's testimony referred to by the Trial Chamber is erroneous. A review of the original audio-recording of Nsabimana's testimony reveals that he referred to "Kibayi" as noted by the Trial Chamber in paragraph 3684 of the Trial Judgement and not "Kabgaye". See audio-recording of Nsabimana's testimony of 20 September 2006, at 01:59:07-02:01:00. See also Nsabimana, T. 20 September 2006 pp. 68, 69 (French).

during a meeting held in Kibayi Commune around mid to late June 1994 and, on this basis, in convicting him of direct and public incitement to commit genocide. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 6 of Nteziryayo's appeal.

E. Prejudicial Assessment of Evidence (Grounds 7 and 8)

2458. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in applying different standards in assessing Prosecution and Defence evidence, which, in his view, invalidates all of his convictions.[5705] In support of this claim, he reiterates his contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting the Defence evidence regarding Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5706] He further contends that the Trial Chamber did not discredit the Defence evidence concerning the meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes but erreoneously determined that it was not relevant and further erred by failing to consider Defence evidence regarding his movements from 21 June 1994 onwards.[5707] Nteziryayo also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to properly assess the credibility of ten Prosecution witnesses who were accomplices or had been arrested for their participation in the genocide, and many of whom remained detained together and were awaiting sentencing at the time of their testimony.[5708] He contends that the Prosecution exploited the circumstances surrounding these witnesses, which facilitated "a deliberate, calculated and Machiavellian scheme" to obtain evidence to inculpate him, and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to acknowledge this "plain reality".[5709]

2459. The Prosecution responds that Nteziryayo does not substantiate his claim that the Trial Chamber erred in applying different standards when assessing Prosecution and Defence evidence.[5710] It contends that the argument that there was a scheme to obtain inculpatory evidence is unsupported.[5711]

2460. The Appeals Chamber has previously dismissed Nteziryayo's contentions that the Trial Chamber employed differing and prejudicial standards when assessing Defence evidence in relation to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[5712] It has further concluded that the Trial Chamber did not err in its assessment of the evidence about the meetings in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes, including evidence concerning Nteziryayo's movements from 21 June 1994 onwards.[5713] Nteziryayo's general contention that the Trial Chamber applied differing and prejudicial standards in assessing the Defence evidence is unsubstantiated and, as a result, is rejected without further consideration.

2461. Turning to the Trial Chamber's alleged failure to exercise sufficient caution with respect to the Prosecution evidence, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has considered and rejected Nteziryayo's arguments that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution in light of the specific circumstances relating to the testimonies of the ten witnesses with which Nteziryayo takes issue.[5714] The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the fact that ten out of the 12 Prosecution witnesses relied upon by the Trial Chamber had been charged in Rwanda for genocide-related crimes demonstrates the existence of a "scheme" to obtain evidence to inculpate Nteziryayo or any resulting error on the part of the Trial Chamber in failing to recognise this.

2462. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 7 and 8 of Nteziryayo's appeal.

VIII. APPEAL OF JOSEPH KANYABASHI

2463. The Trial Chamber found Kanyabashi guilty of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish the killings of Tutsis committed by members of the Ngoma commune police at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and those perpetrated by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994.[5715] The Trial Chamber also found Kanyabashi guilty of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute based on two megaphone announcements he made in Butare Town in May and June 1994.[5716]

2464. Kanyabashi raises challenges related to the Trial Chamber's denial of his applications to vary his witness list and reopen his case and related to his indictment. He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence and his responsibility in relation to the killings committed at Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic as well as with respect to his incitement by megaphone in May and June 1994.

A. Variation of Witness List and Reopening of Case (Grounds 1.7, 3.9, and 3.10)

2465. During the course of the trial, Kanyabashi submitted a number of motions requesting leave to vary his witness list and the reopening of his Defence case. In particular, during the presentation of his defence in December 2007, Kanyabashi requested leave to vary his witness list to remove or replace 12 witnesses and call 12 new witnesses to testify on a number of allegations, including regarding the killings committed at Kabakobwa Hill and the acts of incitement to commit genocide by megaphone.[5717] The Trial Chamber partly dismissed his request on 15 February 2008.[5718] In June 2008, Kanyabashi requested the reopening of his case to call Witness D-2-23-C, which was denied by the Trial Chamber on 2 July 2008.[5719] Likewise, on 19 January 2009, the Trial Chamber denied Kanyabashi's request for reconsideration of the decision denying his request to reopen his case to call Witness D-2-23-C and his additional request to reopen his case to allow Witness D-11-AB to testify.[5720]

2466. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its decisions of 15 February 2008, 2 July 2008, and 19 January 2009 by not allowing him to vary his witness list as requested or to reopen his case to hear the proposed witnesses concerning the Kabakobwa Hill killings and the megaphone announcements.

2467. Before turning to Kanyabashi's specific challenges against the above-mentioned decisions, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that, like all decisions relating to the conduct of proceedings, decisions on requests for leave to vary a party's witness list or to reopen a case to allow for the admission of new evidence are among the discretionary decisions of a trial chamber to which the

In particular, the Trial Chamber granted Kanyabashi's requests to remove 10 witnesses from his witness list, to substitute one witness, and to call six witnesses to testify about specific elements of his case. The Trial Chamber dismissed the remainder of Kanyabashi's motion, denying his requests for the substitution of Witness D-8-N with Witness D-9-GG and of Witness D-2-13-K with Witness D-2-19-F. It further denied his requests to call Witnesses D-2-10-Y and D-2-16-L to testify about certain additional elements and to add Witnesses D-2-15-V, D-2-17-K, and D-2-17-M to his witness list. See ibid., paras. 39, 44, 51, 54, 56, 58, pp. 17, 18.

Appeals Chamber must accord deference.[5721] In order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, a party must demonstrate that the trial chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party.[5722]

1. 15 February 2008 Decision

2468. On 11 December 2007, Kanyabashi moved the Trial Chamber for leave to replace or remove 12 witnesses on his witness list and call 12 new witnesses pursuant to Rule 73*ter*(E) of the Rules.[5723] The Trial Chamber considered that Kanyabashi's motion sought a "massive" variation of his witness list at a very advanced stage of the proceedings and that there was no adequate explanation for this belated request.[5724] It held that, at this stage of the proceedings, a variation may only be justified if good cause was shown and if there was no material prejudice to the other parties.[5725] It also recalled its prior finding that calling numerous witnesses to testify on the same allegations was unnecessary.[5726] The Trial Chamber partly dismissed Kanyabashi's motion.[5727]

2469. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its 15 February 2008 Decision by denying his requests to: (i) substitute Witness D-2-13-K with Witness D-2-19-F and to add Witness D-2-15-V to testify on incidents at Kabakobwa Hill; and (ii) add Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, and D-2-17-M to testify in relation to the allegations of incitement by megaphone and by limiting the scope of Witnesses D-2-17-A's and D-2-17-I's testimonies in this respect.[5728] The Appeals Chamber will consider these contentions in turn.

(a) Variation of the Witness List in Relation to Kabakobwa Hill

2470. The Trial Chamber denied Kanyabashi's requests to substitute Witness D-2-13-K with Witness D-2-19-F to testify about the Kabakobwa Hill events and to add Witness D-2-15-V to his witness list to testify about the alleged role played by the Interahamwe in Butare Town and the alleged threats against him.[5729] With regard to Witness D-2-19-F, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness D-2-13-K appeared to be willing to testify and that Kanyabashi had not explained why he requested the substitution at such a late stage of the proceedings and that it had "already heard evidence on the elements listed in D-2-19-F's will-say."[5730] It concluded that Kanyabashi had not shown good cause for the substitution of Witness D-2-13-K with Witness D-2-19-F at this stage of the proceedings.[5731] Similarly, the Trial Chamber denied the addition of Witness D-2-15-V on the ground that it had already heard evidence on the elements listed in the witness's will-say statement.[5732]

2471. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in denying his requests to substitute Witness D-2-13-K with Witness D-2-19-F and to add Witness D-2-15-V to his witness list.[5733] He contends that Witnesses D-2-19-F and D-2-15-V would have provided evidence relevant to the accounts of Prosecution Witnesses QCB and FAM regarding his presence at Rango Market and the presence of policemen at Kabakobwa Hill, and that the Trial Chamber's refusal to grant leave to hear their evidence was an abuse of its discretionary powers and limited his right to a full answer in defence.[5734] According to Kanyabashi, the prejudice to the parties that would have resulted from granting leave to call these witnesses "was difficult to see" as he had already tried to add these two witnesses prior to the start of his case, the parties were informed of their will-say statements, and the Prosecution did not object.[5735] Kanyabashi adds that the requested substitution complied with the limit of 30 witnesses imposed by the Trial Chamber, and would not have prolonged the proceedings or prejudiced the other parties.[5736] Kanyabashi argues that Witnesses D-2-19-F and D-2-15-V were material witnesses who were in a position to testify to a wide range of events and whose testimonies could have had a decisive effect on the Trial Chamber's guilty verdict.[5737]

2472. The Prosecution responds that Kanyabashi does not demonstrate how Witnesses D-2-19-F and D-2-15-V were an essential component of his defence or provide supporting arguments as to how they could have provided any more relevant evidence on Rango Market and the presence of policemen at Kabakobwa Hill than the witnesses who were called.[5738] The Prosecution adds that nothing indicates that the testimony of these two witnesses could have had any impact on the verdict as Witness D-2-19-F could only testify to what he heard other people say at Gacaca sessions and Witness D-2-15-V could only give cumulative evidence.[5739]

2473. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not deny Kanyabashi's request to call Witnesses D-2-19-F and D-2-15-V because their expected evidence was not relevant or because of the prejudice their addition to the witness list would have caused to the other parties. Rather, it primarily relied on the fact that it had already heard evidence on the issues about which the two witnesses were expected to testify.[5740] Kanyabashi's arguments fail to address the primary reason for which his request was denied. The Appeals Chamber stresses that a trial chamber's decision that the accused's case does not necessitate calling numerous witnesses to testify to the same factual allegations is well within the trial chamber's exercise of its discretion in the management of the trial proceedings.[5741] Because Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence would have been repetitive of evidence already heard, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's submissions regarding the variation of his witness list in relation to Kabakobwa Hill.

(b) Variation of the Witness List in Relation to the Incitement by Megaphone

2474. The Trial Chamber denied Kanyabashi's requests to substitute Witness D-8-N with Witness D-9-GG and to add Witnesses D-2-17-K and D-2-17-M.[5742] The Trial Chamber granted the request to drop Witness D-8-N, who refused to testify, but denied the request to substitute Witness D-9-GG in his place,[5743] noting that it had already heard evidence and was expected to hear further evidence on some of the elements listed in Witness D-9-GG's will-say statement, including on the megaphone incidents.[5744] The Trial Chamber found that it would not be in the interests of justice to hear another witness on these elements.[5745] Similarly, it denied the addition of Witnesses D-2-17-K and D-2-17-M on the grounds that it had already heard several witnesses on the elements listed in their will-say statements.[5746]

[5744] 15 February 2008 Decision, para. 38, fn. 34.
[5745] 15 February 2008 Decision, para. 38. The Trial Chamber was also not convinced that Kanyabashi had demonstrated that the new elements in Witness D-9-GG's expected testimony "may be essential to Kanyabashi's case" and considered that the introduction of these elements at that stage of the trial was belated and may be prejudicial to the other parties. See ibid., para. 39.
[5746] 15 February 2008 Decision, paras. 57, 58.

2475. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber granted Kanyabashi's request to call Witnesses D-2-17-A and D-2-17-I but limited the scope of their testimonies to specific issues of fact, denying Kanyabashi's request to call them to testify on the megaphone incidents, for instance.[5747] The Trial Chamber reasoned that it had already heard several witnesses on the elements on which Kanyabashi would not be authorised to question these witnesses, and that it was not in the interests of justice to hear other witnesses on these elements.[5748]

2476. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in dismissing his requests to call Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I to testify on the megaphone incidents on the grounds of prejudice and the interests of justice.[5749] He points out that the Prosecution did not oppose the requests and contends that there was no prejudice to the other parties resulting from the belated nature of the motion as they had already received all necessary information regarding four of these witnesses.[5750] Kanyabashi further contends that it was not demonstrated that the requested variation in his witness list would have generated delays that would have caused prejudice.[5751]

2477. In addition, Kanyabashi submits that the principle of equality of arms was undermined as the Trial Chamber applied different standards to the Prosecution.[5752] He emphasises that the Trial Chamber allowed the Prosecution to vary its witness list until three weeks before the close of its case and argues that, had the Trial Chamber applied "the best evidence" standard that it applied in authorising the addition of Prosecution witnesses, it would have agreed to hear Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I on the megaphone incidents.[5753] Emphasising that the Prosecution presented several witnesses for the same incidents, he adds that the repetitive nature of the evidence does not seem to have always been a decisive factor for the Trial Chamber.[5754]

[5751] Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-para. 3.10.1; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 345. who were at the same locations and dates and, as a result, were in a position to provide unique evidence.[5755] In Kanyabashi's view, the Trial Chamber's refusal to hear the material evidence of Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I on the factual allegations regarding the megaphone incidents constituted an error which caused him serious prejudice.[5756]

2479. The Prosecution responds that Kanyabashi fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in denying his request to call Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I or that this ruling had any impact on the final verdict.[5757] In particular, it submits that the will-say statements of Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, and D-2-17-M do not demonstrate that their testimonies were material to Kanyabashi's defence.[5758] It also highlights that Witness D-2-17-I ultimately testified on all elements relevant to impeaching Prosecution Witness TK about the megaphone announcement she heard,[5759] and that Kanyabashi ultimately chose not to call Witness D-2-17-A to testify.[5760]

2480. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to Kanyabashi's contention, the Trial Chamber did not rely on prejudice to dismiss his request to call Witnesses D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I to testify on the megaphone incidents. It instead relied on the fact that it had already heard evidence on the elements on which these witnesses were expected to testify.[5761] Kanyabashi's argument regarding prejudice therefore lacks merit.

2481. The Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi's argument concerning a violation of the principle of equality of arms is similarly ill-founded. Notably, Kanyabashi did not argue in his motion at trial that the evidence of Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I was the "best available evidence" on the issue of the megaphone incidents.[5762] More importantly, a review of the decisions on the variation of the Prosecution's witness list pointed out by Kanyabashi reflects that the Trial Chamber applied a similar standard to that applied in the 15 February 2008 Decision. Although the Trial Chamber did not use the terminology "best available evidence" in the impugned decision, a careful reading of the decision reveals that, as done in relation to the Prosecution's requests to vary its witness list, the Trial Chamber examined

whether the addition of witnesses was in the interests of justice in light of the evidence already heard and the evidence it was scheduled to hear.[5763]

2482. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber notes that Kanyabashi points to specific aspects of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I that allegedly distinguish their evidence from the evidence already heard or expected to be heard on the megaphone incidents. Having reviewed Kanyabashi's submissions at trial, the relevant witnesses' written and will-say statements[5764] as well as the testimonial evidence already heard and referred to by the Trial Chamber,[5765] and recalling the discretion accorded to trial chambers in relation to the variation of a party's witness list, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in concluding that the proposed evidence of Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, and D-2-17-I on the megaphone announcements would have been repetitive. The written and will-say statements of these witnesses do not indicate that the witnesses were in the position to provide unique evidence in this regard.[5766]

2483. By contrast, the written and will-say statements of Witness D-2-17-A reflect that the witness was hiding at the same place as Prosecution Witness QI,[5767] a witness the Trial Chamber relied on to find that Kanyabashi made megaphone announcements in June 1994.[5768] As such, Witness D-2-17-A appears to have been in a position to provide evidence relevant to the credibility of Witness QI's account, which had not been provided yet. This, however, was acknowledged by the Trial Chamber, which granted leave to Kanyabashi to call Witness D-2-17-A to contradict Witness QI about where he was hiding during the relevant events.[5769] Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that the scope of Witness D-2-17-A's recall testimony as authorised by the Trial Chamber deprived him of a reasonable opportunity to refute the allegations made by Witness QI regarding the megaphone announcements, an opportunity that Kanyabashi could not avail himself of due to his inability "to get this witness to testify".[5770]

2484. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in the exercise of its discretion in dismissing Kanyabashi's requests to call Witnesses D-9-GG, D-2-17-K, D-2-17-M, D-2-17-A, and D-2-17-I to testify on the megaphone incidents in its 15 February 2008 Decision.[5771]

2. 2 July 2008 Decision

2485. On 20 May 2008, the Trial Chamber declared Kanyabashi's defence case closed but for the testimony of Witnesses D-2-17-A and D-2-21-T.[5772] On 2 June 2008, Kanyabashi requested the Trial Chamber to reopen his case to add Witness D-2-23-C to his witness list to testify on, inter alia, the allegations of his presence at Rango Market and the fabrication of evidence against him.[5773] The Trial Chamber denied Kanyabashi's request on 2 July 2008 on the ground that Kanyabashi "failed to exercise due diligence in obtaining the evidence in a timely manner and that the probative value of the evidence [did] not outweigh the prejudice caused by delaying the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings."[5774]

2486. In particular, the Trial Chamber found that: (i) Kanyabashi had failed to provide reasons for having identified Witness D-2-23-C at such a late stage of the trial; (ii) the reluctance of the witness to testify during the presentation of Kanyabashi's case did not in itself justify the reopening of the case; and (iii) Kanyabashi had "sufficient opportunities to review [his] case in [his] many requests to vary [his] witness list since the filing of [his] Pre-Defence Brief."[5775] The Trial Chamber also considered that it expected to hear one witness and had already heard many witnesses on the matters about which Witness D-2-23-C was expected to testify and found that the reopening of Kanyabashi's case would further delay the trial proceedings thereby causing prejudice to the other parties.[5776]

2487. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in denying his request to reopen his case to add Witness D-2-23-C, violating his "right to make full answer and defence".[5777] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he did not exercise due diligence, pointing out that the Trial Chamber acknowledged how difficult it was to obtain the collaboration of witnesses fearing for their lives.[5778] He argues that the Trial Chamber should have "softened" the diligence requirement in order to avoid a miscarriage of justice.[5779] Kanyabashi also submits that the Trial Chamber "disregarded the specificities of [Witness] D-2-23-C's [expected] testimony" concerning Rango Market, which partly corroborated Witness D-2-21-T's evidence and was distinct from the testimonies of Witnesses D-2-18-O and D-13-D.[5780] Kanyabashi adds that granting his request would not have prolonged the trial proceedings and that, had the Trial Chamber properly weighed the factors, it would have allowed the reopening of his case.[5781] According to him, the interests that were dispositive in the Trial Chamber's reasoning did not outweigh his right to a fair trial.[5782]

2488. The Prosecution responds that Kanyabashi fails to demonstrate any error in the 2 July 2008 Decision.[5783] It argues that Kanyabashi does not explain why he was not able to identify Witness D-2-23-C before February 2008 and makes general arguments about the difficulty in obtaining the cooperation of individuals like Witness D-2-23-C without describing the steps he took in attempting to call the witness at an earlier stage.[5784] The Prosecution also submits that Kanyabashi does not identify why Witness D-2-23-C's evidence would have been more convincing or corroborative than any of the other evidence heard.[5785]

2490. Kanyabashi does not dispute that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to consider whether he exercised due diligence in identifying and presenting Witness D-2-23-C but challenges the Trial Chamber's conclusion that he failed to do so. However, like at trial, Kanyabashi fails on appeal to explain the reasons why he only sought leave to call Witness D-2-23-C at such a late stage. His general claim that it was difficult to obtain the cooperation of witnesses fearing for their lives and his undeveloped argument that the Trial Chamber should have "softened" the diligence requirement in order to avoid a miscarriage of justice falls short of demonstrating an error in the Trial Chamber's determination that he failed to exercise due diligence in obtaining the evidence in a timely manner.

2491. Kanyabashi's general and unsubstantiated argument that the Trial Chamber disregarded the specificities of Witness D-2-23-C's proposed testimony also fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the evidence of this witness would have been repetitive of the evidence of the witness it expected to hear and the many witnesses already heard on the question of Kanyabashi's absence from Rango Market and the issue of fabrication of evidence.[5789] Likewise, Kanyabashi does not adduce any convincing argument to show that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the reopening of his case would have further delayed the proceedings and that the probative value of the evidence did not outweigh the prejudice caused by delaying the fair and expeditious conduct of the proceedings.[5790]

2492. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in its 2 July 2008 Decision by denying his request to reopen his case to add Witness D-2-23-C.

3. 19 January 2009 Decision

2493. On 18 November 2008, Kanyabashi requested the Trial Chamber to reconsider its decision to deny the addition of Witness D-2-23-C to his witness list. He submitted that the testimonies of Prosecution Witness QA and Defence Witness D-2-21-T about the fabrication of false accusations against him and the Appeals Chamber's decision of 8 October 2008 in the Munyakazi case constituted new elements justifying reconsideration of the 2 July 2008 Decision.[5791] Kanyabashi further requested the Trial Chamber to reopen his case in order for Witness D-11-AB to provide evidence on the fabrication of evidence against him.[5792]

2494. The Trial Chamber denied both requests on 19 January 2009.[5793] The Trial Chamber found that Kanyabashi had failed to show that the evidence of Witnesses QA and D-2-21-T or the Munyakazi appeal decision constituted new facts or material changes in circumstances warranting reconsideration of the 2 July 2008 Decision and the reopening of the Defence case to hear Witness D-2-23-C.[5794] As regards the addition of Witness D-11-AB, the Trial Chamber found that Kanyabashi had failed to demonstrate that with reasonable diligence, the evidence could not have been identified and presented during his case-in-chief.[5795] It further stated that it was not convinced that the probative value of Witness D-11-AB's expected testimony would outweigh the prejudice caused by delaying the conduct of the proceedings, noting that it had already heard several witnesses on the alleged fabrication of evidence and that further delay in the proceedings would cause prejudice to the other parties.[5796] The Trial Chamber concluded that none of the alleged new elements advanced by Kanyabashi constituted exceptional circumstances warranting the reopening of his case and the addition of Witness D-11-AB to his witness list.[5797]

[5798] Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-paras. 1.7.3-1.7.3.2, 3.9; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 144-146, 339. The Appeals Chamber notes that Kanyabashi did not reiterate or substantiate in his appeal brief the allegation in his notice of appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in its 19 January 2009 Decision in denying his alternative request for separate trials, which the Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses without further consideration. See Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-para. 1.7.3.3.

[5800] Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-para. 1.7.3.1; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 145.

2496. With respect to his request to add Witness D-11-AB to his witness list, Kanyabashi submits that he exercised diligence as the witness was difficult to locate and that the Trial Chamber placed an "excessively heavy burden" on him.[5801] He adds that the evidence of Witness D-11-AB was not repetitive and could have corroborated the allegations of fabrication of evidence by Prosecution Witnesses QP and QAM,[5802] and that Witnesses "D-13-D and D-2-18-O did not testify about the same meetings."[5803] Kanyabashi further asserts that the probative value of the expected testimony of Witness D-11-AB "far outweighed the prejudice" caused by delaying the trial proceedings.[5804]

2497. The Prosecution responds that Kanyabashi fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion in denying reconsideration of its earlier ruling on Witness D-2-23-C and Kanyabashi's request to reopen his case to call Witness D-11-AB.[5805]

2498. The Appeals Chamber observes that Kanyabashi merely repeats the arguments he made at trial in support of his request for the reconsideration of the 2 July 2008 Decision without demonstrating that their rejection by the Trial Chamber constituted an error warranting the intervention of the Appeals Chamber. His arguments in this respect are therefore rejected.

2500. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's challenges against the 19 January 2009 Decision.

4. Conclusion

2501. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate any discernible error in the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion with respect to its 15 February 2008, 2 July 2008, and 19 January 2009 decisions. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 1.7, 3.9, and 3.10 of Kanyabashi's appeal.

B. Indictment (Grounds 1.1, 2.1, 2.2, 2.7 in part, 3.1)

2502. Kanyabashi submits that he was not charged with the criminal conduct on the basis of which he was convicted or lacked notice thereof, and that he was materially prejudiced in the preparation of his defence.[5808] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess the cumulative effect of the numerous defects of the Indictment on his fair trial rights.[5809] Kanyabashi requests that the Appeals Chamber quash the Trial Judgement and acquit him on all counts.[5810]

2503. The Appeals Chamber will examine in turn Kanyabashi's contentions related to notice of the allegations concerning Kabakobwa Hill, Matyazo Clinic, and the acts of incitement by megaphone.

1. Kabakobwa Hill (Ground 1.1)

2504. The Trial Chamber found that at least hundreds, if not thousands, of Tutsi refugees were killed at Kabakobwa Hill as a result of an attack conducted by soldiers, civilians, and members of the Ngoma commune police on 22 April 1994.[5811] While the Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution did not establish that Kanyabashi either ordered or was present during the attack, it concluded that Kanyabashi, as bourgmestre of Ngoma Commune, exercised effective control over the members of the Ngoma commune police, knew or had reason to know that they participated in the attack, and took no steps to prevent the attack or punish any Ngoma commune policeman for participating in it.[5812] The Trial Chamber inferred Kanyabashi's knowledge from his awareness of the Tutsi refugees' presence at Kabakobwa, the fact that he should have been able to hear the gunshots from the Ngoma commune office during the attack, the relatively small number of Ngoma policemen, the control he exercised over them, and his regular contact with them as well as from his public condemnation of the killings perpetrated at Kabakobwa Hill during a meeting at Huye Stadium around 25 or 26 April 1994.[5813]

2505. Based on these findings, the Trial Chamber convicted Kanyabashi of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 7, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 9) as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent the crimes committed by members of the Ngoma commune police at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and for failing to punish them.[5814]

2506. In summarising the Prosecution case against Kanyabashi with respect to the massacre at Kabakobwa Hill, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 4.2, 4.3, 6.29, 6.32, 6.33, 6.45, and 6.65 of the Indictment.[5815] The Indictment indicates that the allegations related to Kabakobwa Hill in paragraphs 6.32, 6.33, and 6.65 were being pursued under, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[5816]

2507. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him in relation to the killings committed at Kabakobwa Hill on the basis of conduct with which he was not charged.[5817] He argues that the Prosecution alleged in the Indictment that he was responsible as a superior based on his presence at the crime scene and the orders he gave, not based on his mere knowledge and failure to act.[5818] Kanyabashi contends that he never received notice of the conduct on the basis of which he

> 6.33 On 22 April 1994, at around 4:00pm the communal policemen and conseillers de secteur, assisted by Hutu peasant farmers and by militiamen, attacked the refugees. Subsequently, Joseph Kanyabashi called in reinforcements from the Presidential Guard. On their arrival, they took part in the attacks.
> 6.45 Furthermore, on several occasions between 20 April and June 1994, Joseph Kanyabashi encouraged and instructed the soldiers and militiamen, and certain members of the civilian population, to search for the Tutsis who had escaped the massacres, in order to exterminate them. These instructions were given notably on 21 April in Butare, in late April in Save, and in June 1994 near Butare.
> 6.65 Knowing that massacres of the civilian population were being committed, political and military authorities, including Joseph Kanyabashi, took no measures to stop them. On the contrary, they refused to intervene to control and appeal to the population as long as a cease-fire had not been declared. This categorical refusal was communicated to the Special Rapporteur via the Chief of Staff of Rwandan Army, Major-General Augustin Bizimungu.

At the appeals hearing, Kanyabashi argued that the Prosecution "never envisaged that [he] did not take part in the massacre" and that "[t]he case is that he was aware of the crimes because he ordered them." See ibid., p. 6. He also emphasised that the Prosecution did not bring any evidence about the meeting the Trial Chamber found that he attended on 22 April 1994 or about any other relevant meeting. See ibid., p. 7.

was ultimately found to have the requisite knowledge and to have failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent or punish.[5819] He argues that the prejudice he suffered in this respect is "irreparable" as his defence focused on showing that he did not give any orders and that the communal police did not take part in the attack.[5820] Kanyabashi requests that his convictions in relation to the killings committed at Kabakobwa Hill be vacated and that he be acquitted of all counts in this respect.[5821]

prejudice from the alleged lack of notice concerning the source of his knowledge of the crimes committed by the communal police at Kabakobwa Hill.[5827]

2510. Kanyabashi replies that: (i) the Prosecution case throughout trial was that he ordered the attack; (ii) the Indictment failed to plead the conduct for which he was ultimately convicted; and (iii) paragraph 6.65 of the Indictment is overly vague and did not provide notice regarding his conduct vis-à-vis his subordinates concerning Kabakobwa Hill.[5828] Kanyabashi also submits that the Prosecution's reliance on the Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement and Ntabakuze Appeal Judgement is inapposite since, in those cases, the Appeals Chamber seems to have recommended a case-by-case examination of the indictment as a whole, rather than establishing a general principle.[5829]

2511. The Appeals Chamber recalls that when an accused is charged with superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the indictment must plead the following material facts:

> (i) the accused is the superior of sufficiently identified subordinates over whom he had effective control – in the sense of a material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct – and for whose acts he is alleged to be responsible;
> (ii) the criminal conduct of those others for whom the accused is alleged to be responsible;
>
> (iii) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have known or had reason to know that the crimes were about to be committed or had been committed by his subordinates; and
> (iv) the conduct of the accused by which he may be found to have failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the persons who committed them.[5830]

2512. The Appeals Chamber observes that, read in isolation, paragraphs 6.32 and 6.33 of the Indictment do not prima facie appear to allege Kanyabashi's superior responsibility for the killings perpetrated at Kabakobwa Hill but, rather, his responsibility for ordering the killings pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute. The Appeals Chamber recalls, however, that in determining whether an accused was adequately put on notice of the nature and cause of the charges against him, the indictment must be considered as a whole.[5831] When reading paragraphs 6.32 and 6.33 together with the charging section of the Indictment, it becomes clear that Kanyabashi was charged under Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 in relation to the Kabakobwa Hill massacre pursuant to superior responsibility since paragraphs 6.32 and 6.33 were indicated as being pursued under these counts solely under Article 6(3) of the Statute.[5832]

[5827] Specifically, the Prosecution argued that Kanyabashi: (i) was given notice by the Kanyabashi Indictment that the Tutsi refugees were at Kabakobwa Hill and defended against this allegation; (ii) received notice from the Kanyabashi Indictment that, as a superior, he would receive reports from his subordinates and the fact that he claimed at trial that he urged the communal policemen not to commit crimes shows that he defended against "this source of knowledge"; (iii) had notice that he was alleged to know that the attack at Kabakobwa Hill was conducted on a large-scale; and (iv) was informed by the summary of Witness QAM's anticipated evidence and the witness's prior statement that he was alleged to have received a report on the day of the attack from the Interahamwe, an allegation he defended against. See AT. 20 April 2015 pp. 26, 27.

2513. Considering the Indictment as a whole, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that it was neither vague nor ambiguous regarding Kanyabashi's alleged superior responsibility in relation to the killings perpetrated at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994. Paragraphs 6.32 and 6.33 of the Indictment, read together with paragraphs 4.2, 4.3 and 6.65, plead with precision all relevant material facts supporting the charge against Kanyabashi regarding the Kabakobwa Hill massacre. Paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment, in particular, expressly identifies the source of Kanyabashi's criminal responsibility in the orders that he gave to the members of the Ngoma commune police to eliminate the Tutsi refugees at Kabakobwa Hill.[5833] Paragraph 6.65 of the Indictment sets out that Kanyabashi knew that massacres of the civilian population were being committed and took no measures to stop them.

2514. The Prosecution reiterated its case as set forth in paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment in its pre-trial brief,[5834] presented evidence supporting this particular case throughout the trial,[5835] relied on Kanyabashi ordering and supervising the killings perpetrated at Kabakobwa Hill in its closing

The Appeals Chamber notes that, while originally charging Kanyabashi under Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 in relation to the Kabakobwa Hill massacre pursuant to both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute, the Prosecution amended the indictment on 2 November 2000 to charge Kanyabashi solely pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute in this respect. *Compare The Prosecutor v. The Prosecution's amendment resulted from the Trial Chamber's order that the Prosecution clearly distinguish the acts for which Kanyabashi incurred criminal responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute from those for which he incurred criminal responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute since, in the view of the Trial Chamber, "the same facts cannot simultaneously give rise to the two types of responsibility". See 31 May 2000 Decision, paras. 5.9, 5.11, p. 8. brief,[5836] and reiterated in its oral closing arguments that its case was that Kanyabashi was an active participant and organiser in the genocide and ordered the killings at Kabakobwa Hill.[5837] The Prosecution does not point to any other material facts pleaded at trial which would have provided an alternative basis for Kanyabashi's superior responsibility in relation to the Kabakobwa Hill massacre. In fact, the Prosecution specifically disputed Kanyabashi's alibi evidence that, at the time of the killings of Kabakobwa Hill, he was in his office chairing a meeting.[5838]

2515. Yet, the Trial Chamber, concluding that it was not proven that Kanyabashi either ordered or was present during the attack at Kabakobwa, found him responsible as a superior on the basis of the following material facts: (i) his awareness of the Tutsi refugees' presence at Kabakobwa; (ii) the fact that, on 22 April 1994, Interahamwe went to report to him upon seeing the number of refugees at Kabakobwa Hill, before returning to commence the attack; (iii) the fact that he should have been able to hear the gunshots from the Ngoma commune office during the attack; (iv) the relatively small number of Ngoma commune policemen, his control over them as well as the fact that he was in regular contact with these policemen and that several of them were stationed at his house on the weekend of the attack at Kabakobwa Hill; (v) the systematic and large-scale nature of the attack; (vi) his public condemnation of the killings during a meeting at Huye Stadium; and (vii) the fact that he took no steps to prevent the attack or punish any policeman involved in the attack.[5839]

2516. Although Kanyabashi's awareness of the Tutsi refugees' presence at Kabakobwa Hill and the allegation that he took no measures to stop the massacres of the civilian population were pleaded in the Indictment,[5840] it is apparent that the key source of Kanyabashi's knowledge and the conduct by which he was alleged to have failed to prevent or punish the crimes on the basis of which he was convicted was materially different from the acts expressly pleaded in the Indictment. As such, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's findings were based upon a set of material facts different from those that were specifically pleaded in the Indictment, set forth in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, and pursued throughout the trial. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Kanyabashi based on material facts that were not pleaded by the Prosecution in the Indictment and at trial.

2517. The Prosecution's argument that, by pleading that Kanyabashi ordered and supervised the killings, the Indictment necessarily implied his knowledge and provided notice of his failure to prevent and punish the crimes fails to appreciate Kanyabashi's contention. Kanyabashi does not contend that he lacked notice that he was alleged to have known that his subordinates were about to or had committed crimes and to have failed to prevent such acts or punish his culpable subordinates, but that he was convicted on the basis of different material facts than those specifically set forth in the Indictment and against which he defended at trial.

2518. The Prosecution does not show that, at any point in the Indictment, notice was provided to Kanyabashi that he could be held responsible as a superior in relation to the Kabakobwa Hill massacre on the basis of a conduct other than his ordering or encouraging the killings. While paragraph 6.65 of the Indictment referred to by the Prosecution generally alleges that Kanyabashi had knowledge that massacres were carried out and failed to take measures to stop them, it does not identify any source for such knowledge. Reading the Indictment as a whole, and given the phrasing of paragraph 6.65, it would not be reasonable to consider that this general paragraph provided Kanyabashi with notice of the material facts which ultimately underpinned his conviction on the basis of superior responsibility in relation to Kabakobwa Hill. The Appeals Chamber also observes that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief mirrors paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment regarding the material facts relied upon for the allegation related to Kabakobwa Hill[5841] and that neither the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief nor any other information from the Prosecution provided Kanyabashi with timely, clear, and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge for which he was ultimately convicted.[5842]

[5841] See Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, para. 20.
[5842] The Appeals Chamber further notes that the summaries of the Prosecution witnesses' anticipated testimonies appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief did not provide any notice of a possible alternative basis for Kanyabashi's 2520. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi lacked notice of the material facts upon which the Trial Chamber convicted him as a superior in relation to the killings of Tutsi refugees committed at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and, accordingly, that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him based on these killings.

2. Matyazo Clinic (Grounds 2.1, 2.2, and 2.7 in part)

2521. The Trial Chamber, Judge Ramaroson dissenting, found that in late April 1994, following an initial attack by soldiers, Kanyabashi went to Matyazo Clinic, addressed the Tutsi refugees sheltering there, and thereafter ordered soldiers to open fire on the Tutsis, resulting in many deaths.[5844] Noting that the Prosecution only charged him under Article 6(3) of the Statute in relation to this event,[5845] the Trial Chamber, Judge Ramaroson dissenting, convicted Kanyabashi of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 7, respectively) as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 9) pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent the soldiers from committing these killings and punish them.[5846]

2522. In summarising the Prosecution case against Kanyabashi with respect to this allegation, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 4.3, 6.32, 6.34, and 6.65 of the Indictment.[5847] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraphs 6.32 and 6.34 were being pursued under, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, while the allegations in paragraph 6.65 were being pursued under, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 pursuant to both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[5848]

2523. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him as a superior in relation to the killings perpetrated at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994 because: (i) he understood from the > 6.34 In late April 1994, Tutsi who were fleeing the massacres found refuge at the Matyazo clinic in Ngoma commune. Following an initial attack by soldiers and militiamen, Joseph Kanyabashi went to the clinic and asked the Tutsi refugees to remain there for their own safety. Indictment that he had to defend against allegations relating to a different attack that occurred on 22 April 1994; and (ii) the Indictment did not properly plead his superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute.[5849] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Dates of the Attack

2525. Kanyabashi submits that he believed that he had to defend against the allegation of an attack that occurred on 22 April 1994 but that the Trial Chamber convicted him for a different attack that took place at the end of April 1994.[5854] In support of his contention, Kanyabashi: (i) points out that the Prosecution did not cross-examine Defence witnesses on an attack that would have occurred later than the one on 22 April 1994 about which they testified; (ii) relies on the Prosecution's reference in its closing submissions to 22 April 1994 as the date of the massacre; and (iii) asserts that the evidence does not support the conclusion that a second attack occurred in late April 1994.[5855]

2526. Kanyabashi also contends that the Prosecution case, as understood by him, never included the allegation that there had been two attacks on different days at Matyazo Clinic.[5856] According to him, paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment, "correctly interpreted", pleaded that the "initial attack" and the attack for which he was charged took place on the same day, which supported his understanding that the attack with which he was charged occurred on 22 April 1994.[5857] In this regard, Kanyabashi highlights that the prior statement of Witness QI relied upon by the Prosecution as supporting material for paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment mentions that the attacks occurred on the same day.[5858] In his view, he was "misled" as to the date of the attack and suffered prejudice as a result, noting, in particular, that he presented an alibi only for the period between 21 and 24 April 1994.[5859]

2528. Kanyabashi replies that, contrary to the Prosecution's suggestion, the Indictment and the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief do not specify the date and the time of the attack, and that the disclosure of Witnesses QI's and RL's statements are irrelevant for the purposes of notice.[5865] He argues that these witnesses' statements could in any event be interpreted as placing the attack on Matyazo Clinic on 22 April 1994.[5866]

2529. The Appeals Chamber understands Kanyabashi to claim that he received notice that the events invoked in paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment were alleged to have occurred on 22 April 1994, not that the Indictment was vague in respect of the date of the killings allegedly perpetrated at Matyazo Clinic by soldiers acting under his orders. However, in support of his contention that he was misled into believing that he was charged for an attack that occurred on 22 April 1994, Kanyabashi relies on the evidence adduced at trial and the Prosecution's conduct of its case, without pointing to any part of the Indictment or post-indictment communications which would have provided him notice of this specific date.[5867]

2530. The Appeals Chamber observes that paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment, which sets out the charge relating to Matyazo Clinic, does not refer to 22 April 1994 but to "late April 1994" and that nothing in the Indictment suggests that the latter reference should have been interpreted as referring to 22 April 1994 in particular. There is also no reference to any particular date or information from which to infer the date of 22 April 1994 in the excerpt of Witness QI's statement provided as supporting material by the Prosecution and relied upon by Kanyabashi, in the statement from which the excerpt was extracted, or in the summary of Witness QI's anticipated evidence appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief.[5868] In fact, the only specific date provided prior to the trial is that of "28 April 1994" referred to in the summary of Witness RL's anticipated testimony, as well as in Witness RL's prior statements of 11 July 1996 and 16 January 1997 disclosed in April 1997.[5869] As to Kanyabashi's argument that the Prosecution referred to 22 April 1994 in its closing submissions as the date of the attack on Matyazo Clinic, the Appeals Chamber observes that it is in fact unclear as to which massacre the Prosecution was referring in its oral submissions and [5867] To the extent that Kanyabashi's arguments challenge the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence, these arguments are addressed below in Section VIII.D.

Joseph Kanyabashi*, Case No. ICTR-96-15-I, Statements of Witness "A" – Déclarations du témoin "A", 10 April 1997 (confidential). The unredacted versions of Witness RL's 11 July 1996 and 16 January 1997 statements were admitted into evidence on 19 April 2004 as part of Exhibits D202 and D203 (confidential). Contrary to Kanyabashi's argument in reply that the witnesses' statements could not serve to provide notice, the Appeals Chamber considers that, upon reading the summaries of Witnesses QI's and RL's anticipated evidence in the Witness Summaries Grid, Kanyabashi should have been prompted to examine their previously disclosed written statements.

considers that, in any event, such indication is immaterial with respect to the question of notice of the charges prior to the start of the trial.[5870]

2531. In light of the supporting material to the indictment provided by the Prosecution, the Appeals Chamber considers that it was indeed reasonable for Kanyabashi to understand that the two attacks on Matyazo Clinic alleged in paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment occurred on the same day.[5871] Contrary to the Trial Chamber's statement, the conclusion on the possible existence of two separate attacks, one on or around 22 April 1994 and another towards the end of April 1994, was therefore not consistent with paragraph 6.34 as interpreted in light of the relevant supporting material.[5872] However, because Kanyabashi was neither charged nor convicted in relation to the "initial attack" that allegedly occurred on the day of the attack on Matyazo Clinic for which he was convicted, the Appeals Chamber does not find that this error on the part of the Trial Chamber invalidates its decision to convict Kanyabashi for the attack on Matyazo Clinic.

2532. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber convicted him for a different attack against Matyazo Clinic than the one pleaded in the Indictment.

(b) Superior Responsibility

2533. In convicting Kanyabashi in relation to the killings at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994, the Trial Chamber found that Kanyabashi's alleged superior responsibility over the soldiers and their role in the events was correctly pleaded in the Indictment.[5873] In particular, while noting that paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment did not specifically describe the soldiers as Kanyabashi's subordinates, the Trial Chamber observed that paragraph 4.3 of the Indictment alleged that Kanyabashi exercised authority over his subordinates in his capacity as bourgmestre of Ngoma Commune and that paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment indicated that these subordinates were not limited to the conseillers de secteur and communal policemen but envisaged the existence of other categories of subordinates.[5874] Considering further that paragraph 6.34 referred to Kanyabashi giving orders to soldiers, "which implies that [he] held a position of authority vis-à-vis soldiers", the Trial Chamber found it established from reading the Indictment as a whole that the soldiers referred to in paragraph 6.34 were Kanyabashi's alleged subordinates and that this paragraph was "sufficiently specific to meet the standards set forth in the case law regarding Article 6 (3) liability."[5875]

2534. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that, based on an overall reading of the Indictment, paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment identifies the soldiers as his alleged subordinates and contends that the defect in the Indictment concerning the identification of the soldiers as his subordinates was not curable.[5876] He argues that, in finding that paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment could be interpreted to also include soldiers, the Trial Chamber went beyond the scope of the Indictment and circumvented its previous decision which ordered the Prosecution to specify the identity of his alleged subordinates in paragraph 6.29 of the indictment.[5877] Kanyabashi recalls that, following the Trial Chamber's order, the Prosecution amended paragraph 6.29 of the indictment by simply referring to paragraph 6.32, which only explicitly identifies conseillers de secteur and communal policemen as his subordinates.[5878] Kanyabashi submits that, in light of this amendment, he legitimately understood that the conseillers de secteur and communal policemen were alleged to be his subordinates with respect to all charges of the Indictment.[5879]

2535. According to Kanyabashi, he was "misled" and, as a result, centred his defence on denying that conseillers de secteur and communal policemen took part in the massacre and endeavoured "to demonstrate that the soldiers were the ones responsible for the attack and that he had no authority over them."[5880] He also points out that his counsel declared at the time of Witness QI's testimony "that he had not prepared to deal with 6(3)"[5881] and that he "did not cross-examine on effective control over the specific soldiers."[5882]

2536. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Kanyabashi received sufficient notice that he was charged with superior responsibility for the crimes committed by the

The Appeals Chamber notes that Kanyabashi substantiates his claim regarding the "requisite ingredients" of superior responsibility only with respect to the identification of the subordinates. He does not make any arguments regarding the other material facts that have to be pleaded with respect to superior responsibility. Accordingly, to the extent that Kanyabashi intended to argue that relevant material facts other than the identification of his subordinates were not pleaded, his vague and unsubstantiated claim is dismissed.

soldiers at Matyazo Clinic.[5883] It argues that paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment, read in conjunction with paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment and the fact that paragraph 6.34 was only charged pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, gave notice to Kanyabashi that he was alleged to be the superior of the soldiers who perpetrated the killings at Matyazo Clinic.[5884] It also submits that Kanyabashi failed to raise a timely objection to the evidence related to his superior relationship with the soldiers, that the conduct of his defence demonstrates that he understood the case against him, and that he was not prejudiced.[5885]

2537. The Appeals Chamber recalls that when an accused is charged with superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the indictment must plead, inter alia, that the accused is the superior of sufficiently identified subordinates over whom he had effective control – in the sense of a material ability to prevent or punish criminal conduct – and for whose acts he was alleged to be responsible.[5886]

2538. In the instant case, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in holding that adequate notice was provided to Kanyabashi that he was alleged to be the superior of the "soldiers" involved in the killings at Matyazo Clinic referred to in paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment through the following information: (i) the reference in paragraph 4.3 of the Indictment that he "exercised authority over his subordinates"; (ii) the indication – through the term "notably" in paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment – that his subordinates were not limited to "conseillers de secteur and communal policemen"; and (iii) the allegation in paragraph 6.34 that he gave orders to soldiers at Matyazo Clinic.[5887] The Appeals Chamber stresses that an accused should not have to decipher the alleged basis of his criminal responsibility from scattered factors read together and that it was incumbent on the Prosecution to set forth clearly and unambiguously in the Indictment all material facts underpinning the charges. The Appeals Chamber considers that the factors relied upon by the Trial Chamber in the Indictment did not provide adequate notice to Kanyabashi that the soldiers invoked

[5884] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1767, 1769-1772. See also AT. 20 April 2015 p. 31. The Prosecution also relies on the fact that Witness QI's Summary and statement also referred to Kanyabashi giving orders which were followed. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1773.
[5885] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1777-1785. See also AT. 20 April 2015 p. 32. In reply, Kanyabashi submits, inter alia, that he complained about the defects of the Indictment regarding the identification of his subordinates already in 1999 and that the Prosecution does not explain why it did not mention that the soldiers were alleged to be his subordinates when ordered to do so. See Kanyabashi Reply Brief, para. 53, referring to Kanyabashi Preliminary Motion, paras. 24, 27, 42.
[5886] See, e.g., Ntabakuze Appeal Judgement, para. 100; Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 323; Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 218. The Appeals Chamber also recalls that a superior need not necessarily know the exact identity of his subordinates who perpetrate crimes in order to incur liability under Article 6(3) of the Statute and that physical perpetrators of the crimes can be identified by category in relation to a particular crime site. See Hategekimana Appeal Judgement, para. 166; Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 196; Blagojević and Jokić Appeal Judgement, para. 287.

in paragraph 6.34 were alleged to be his subordinates within the meaning of Article 6(3) of the Statute.

2539. As emphasised in its submissions, the Prosecution indicated in the charging section of the Indictment that the allegation set forth in paragraph 6.34 was being pursued exclusively pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute.[5888] In the opinion of the Appeals Chamber, this was indicative that the Prosecution intended to prove that Kanyabashi was the superior of the soldiers referred to in this paragraph. However, it was incumbent on the Prosecution to identify Kanyabashi's subordinates unambiguously in the Indictment, especially as it was expressly directed to do so by the Trial Chamber in May 2000.[5889] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Prosecution's failure to provide adequate notice to Kanyabashi of the identity of his alleged subordinates in the Indictment is manifest.[5890]

2540. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Indictment was defective in relation to Kanyabashi's superior responsibility for the killings perpetrated at Matyazo Clinic by soldiers insofar as it failed to provide adequate notice to Kanyabashi that the soldiers involved in these killings were alleged to be his subordinates.

2541. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Kanyabashi on this basis as it considers that the ambiguity of the Indictment was remedied by the additional information provided in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber considers that, reading paragraph 6.34 of the Indictment which was only charged pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute together with the allegation in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief that Kanyabashi exercised a supervisory role vis-à-vis the soldiers involved in the massacres of Tutsi refugees gathered in Matyazo Clinic,[5891] Kanyabashi was put on clear notice that he was alleged to exercise superior authority over the soldiers identified in paragraph 6.34 within the meaning of Article 6(3) of the Statute. The conduct of Kanyabashi's

[5888] See Kanyabashi Indictment, pp. 41-45.
[5889] See 31 May 2000 Decision, para. 5.21(c), p. 8.
[5890] Following the Trial Chamber's instruction in the 31 May 2000 Decision, the Prosecution merely amended paragraph 6.29 of the indictment by simply referring to paragraph 6.32 of the same indictment which, as noted above, only identifies conseillers de secteur and communal policemen as Kanyabashi's subordinates. Compare Amended Indictment with Kanyabashi Third Amended Indictment, para. 6.29.

defence at trial confirms that he understood the charge against him regarding the killings at Matyazo Clinic and was able to prepare a meaningful defence.[5892]

2542. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi was ultimately put on adequate notice that he was charged pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the criminal conduct of the soldiers at Matyazo Clinic and that the vagueness of the Indictment in this respect did not impair his ability to prepare his defence.

3. Incitement by Megaphone (Ground 3.1)

2543. The Trial Chamber found that, around late May 1994, Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[5893] It further found that, around mid-June 1994, Kanyabashi again used a megaphone to tell the population "to clear bushes along the road in order to remove potential hiding places for the Inkotanyi, to flush out people who were hiding in the bushes, and to kill those found there, including children, old men and women."[5894] The Trial Chamber determined that the terms "enemy" and "Inkotanyi" when used by Kanyabashi referred to and were understood as referring to Tutsis in general.[5895] The Trial Chamber concluded that Kanyabashi's May and June 1994 megaphone announcements constituted direct and public incitement to commit genocide and, accordingly, convicted him of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Count 4) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[5896]

2544. In summarising the Prosecution case against Kanyabashi with respect to this allegation, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 5.8 and 6.45 of the Indictment.[5897] The Indictment indicates

The Appeals Chamber further observes that, in his closing brief, Kanyabashi, referring to several testimonies of Defence witnesses, unequivocally contended that there was no relation of subordination between him and the soldiers. See Kanyabashi Closing Brief, para. 238. Similarly, in his oral closing arguments, Kanyabashi argued that he did not have power over soldiers, that they considered him an RPF accomplice, and that he was threatened by them. See Kanyabashi Closing Arguments, T. 28 April 2009 pp. 37, 42, 46, 69.

[5897] Trial Judgement, para. 3693, fns. 9916, 9917. Paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment reads as follows:

> 5.8 From April to July 1994, various prominent persons, including members of the government and local authorities propagated incitement to hatred and violence. On or about April 19, 1994, after the interim president Théodore Sindikubwabo delivered a speech in Butare encouraging people to fight the enemy, Joseph KANYABASHI, gave a speech in support of the interim president, encouraging the population to follow Sindikubwabo's instructions. Shortly thereafter, widespr[]ead attacks on Tutsis began in the area. In or around late May, 1994, on at least on one occasion, Joseph KANYABASHI drove through the town of Butare and spoke to the population through a megaphone. He encouraged the population to systematically search for the "enemy" in the commune and immediately afterwards, more Tutsis were killed in Ngoma commune. Also in or around May, 1994 Joseph KANYABASHI held at least two meetings in Cyarwa sector, Ngoma that the allegations in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.45 of the Indictment were being pursued under, inter alia, Count 4 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[5898]

2545. Prior to examining the relevant evidence, the Trial Chamber discussed Kanyabashi's assertion that paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment was impermissibly vague with respect to the date and place of the megaphone announcements as well as regarding the identity of the victims.[5899] It found that paragraph 5.8 was sufficiently precise to provide notice to Kanyabashi of the Prosecution's intention to lead evidence on an incident of incitement by megaphone occurring in Butare Town around late May 1994.[5900] It also determined that the evidence about a megaphone announcement by Kanyabashi in mid-June 1994 fell under the scope of paragraph 5.8 on the ground that the Prosecution pleaded therein that Kanyabashi incited the population with a megaphone from a vehicle on "at least one occasion".[5901] It further found that, "[w]hile the Prosecution could have employed precise legal terms to indicate the alleged criminal conduct", paragraph 6.45 of the Indictment was nonetheless "sufficiently precise to provide notice to Kanyabashi of the Prosecution's intention to lead evidence in relation to an incident of incitement by megaphone occurring in June 1994."[5902] The Trial Chamber added that, "[i]n any event", Kanyabashi "did not object to the testimony of Witness QI with respect to the megaphone incident of mid-June 1994 at trial."[5903]

2546. Kanyabashi submits that the Indictment was impermissibly vague with respect to the alleged dates and number of incidents of announcement by megaphone.[5904] In particular, he contends that the words "on at least [on] one occasion" in paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment appeared to refer to the number of rounds that Kanyabashi made in Butare Town during the incident which took place in

The Appeals Chamber notes that, in his notice of appeal, Kanyabashi also argued under sub-Ground 3.1.5 that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he had received sufficient notice in relation to the allegation concerning the late May 1994 megaphone announcement testified to by Witness QJ. See Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-paras. 3.1.5-3.1.5.2. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that, while stating in his appeal that "Grounds […] and 3.1.5 are not developed autonomously, but concurrently with other grounds", Kanyabashi has failed to develop and substantiate his allegation of error related to Witness QJ in his appeal brief or during the appeals hearing. See Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 233; AT. 20 April 2015 pp. 16, 18, 19. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Kanyabashi's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding regarding notice of the late May 1994 megaphone incident as unsubstantiated.

May, not to several incidents occurring on distinct dates.[5905] In Kanyabashi's view, the wording of paragraph 5.8 "does not allow for the addition of a new incident, especially not in mid-June".[5906] He also argues that Witness TK's testimony at trial – on the basis of which he alleges he was convicted – "does not match the mode of participation mentioned in [paragraph] 5.8" since Witness TK testified that the message was not broadcasted by Kanyabashi as alleged in this paragraph, but by somebody else.[5907] Kanyabashi adds that Witness TK's evidence should also have been excluded because the Prosecution failed to give him notice that this witness would testify against him on the megaphone allegations.[5908]

2547. Kanyabashi also contends that he was never provided notice of the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement incident.[5909] Specifically, he submits that: (i) the Trial Chamber erred in finding that paragraph 6.45 of the Indictment provided notice of this incident;[5910] (ii) it is not clear from the summaries of Witnesses QJ's and QI's anticipated evidence appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief that the witnesses would testify about two distinct incidents as they mention neither a date nor a place; and (iii) Witness QI's prior statement to Tribunal investigators did not situate the incident in June.[5911] He further argues that, in faulting him for not raising an objection to Witness QI's testimony, the Trial Chamber failed to appreciate that he objected to the vagueness of paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment in several instances, both before and after the trial started,[5912] and [5908] Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-paras. 3.1.5.2, 3.1.6; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 234, 236. Kanyabashi points out that: (i) the Prosecution failed to indicate in its pre-trial brief that Witness TK was expected to testify in relation to the allegations against him, and indicated instead that the witness would exclusively testify in relation to Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali; (ii) Witness TK's prior statements were silent or very unclear as regards Kanyabashi's involvement in megaphone announcements; and (iii) Witness TK's will-say statement did not give notice that the witness would testify against him. In addition, Kanyabashi contends that he should have been provided notice of the evidence concerning the modus operandi in accordance with Rules 66(A) and 93 of the Rules. He also asserts that Witness TK's prior statements were insufficient to remedy the absence of notice. See Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 236-238, 240, fn. 774; Kanyabashi Reply Brief, paras. 81, 83.

[5910] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 245. Kanyabashi highlights that, in contrast with paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment, paragraph 6.45 of the Kanyabashi Indictment does not make any reference to megaphone announcement, refers to instructions given to a selected group of people, and was pursued under both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute. He also points out that the French version of paragraph 6.45, read together with paragraph 5.8, created confusion as it specifically refers to instructions provided near "Butare market". See Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-para. 3.1.7.3; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 245, 246; Kanyabashi Reply Brief, paras. 89, 90; AT. 20 April 2015 pp. 16 and 17 (closed session), 18.

that the Trial Chamber had made it clear that issues of this nature were better being raised in closing arguments.[5913] Kanyabashi submits that the vagueness of the Indictment regarding the time of the megaphone incident caused him serious prejudice as he understood that he had to defend himself in respect of only one incident of incitement by megaphone.[5914]

2548. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly concluded that the Indictment, when read as a whole, provided sufficient notice to Kanyabashi regarding the megaphone announcements that occurred in May and June 1994.[5915] It argues that Kanyabashi's interpretation of the phrase "on at least [on] one occasion" in paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in its conclusion and submits that the Trial Chamber did not convict Kanyabashi on the basis of Witness TK's testimony.[5916] Pointing out that it relied upon paragraph 6.45 of the Indictment in support of Count 4 in the charging section of the Indictment, the Prosecution argues that Kanyabashi was put on notice that he was charged with direct and public incitement to commit genocide on the basis of the conduct described in this paragraph.[5917] In its view, the relevant material facts were therefore provided in both paragraphs 5.8 and 6.45.[5918]

specifically objecting to Witness QI's testimony and that he fails to demonstrate that he suffered prejudice as a result of the alleged lack of notice.[5920]

2550. Kanyabashi replies that the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that Witness TK's evidence was relied upon in relation to both megaphone incidents.[5921] In addition, he submits that the disclosure of Witnesses QJ's and QI's statements did not provide sufficient notice about the mid-June incident.[5922] Kanyabashi further reiterates that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired, notably because he was deprived of the opportunity to conduct the necessary investigations.[5923]

2551. The Appeals Chamber acknowledges that the French version of the relevant sentence in paragraph 5.8, when read in isolation, may be interpreted as alleging a single incident involving Kanyabashi making multiple rounds around Butare Town the same day.[5924] However, when the relevant phrase is read in parallel with the English version, Kanyabashi should have understood that the words "on at least on one occasion" in English and "au moins une fois" in French refer to the occurrence of multiple incidents of the same nature occurring "[i]n or around late May, 1994". The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that this paragraph was overly vague as regards the number of times Kanyabashi was alleged to have incited the population through a megaphone while driving through Butare Town.

2552. Conversely, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, is not persuaded by Kanyabashi's argument that paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment was defective regarding the pleading of the dates of the incidents. While not referring to the month of June in particular, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, considers that the timeframe "[i]n or around late May, 1994" was sufficiently specific to allow Kanyabashi to prepare his defence against two allegations of incitement occurring in late May and mid-June 1994.[5925] The Appeals Chamber [5925] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a decisive factor in determining the degree of specificity with which the Prosecution is required to particularise the facts of its case in the indictment is the nature of the alleged criminal conduct with which the accused is charged. See, e.g., Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 150; Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 25; Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 89. Cf. also Kvočka et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 436 (finding that the appellant had failed to identify any prejudice from the fact that the indictment referred to 4 June 1992 whereas the trial chamber found that the incident took place on or shortly before 29 June 1992), quoting Kunarac et al. Appeal Judgement para. 217 ("[M]inor discrepancies between the dates in the Trial Judgement and those in the Indictment in this case go to prove the difficulty, in the absence of documentary evidence, of reconstructing events several years after they occurred and not, as implied by the Appellant, that the events charged in the Indictment IT-96-23 did not occur."); Rutaganda Appeal Judgement, paras. 296-306 (finding that the variance between an notes that, while it was in possession of information regarding the date of the late May incident through Witness QJ's written statements, the Prosecution did not appear to have more specific information regarding the date of the June incident at the time of the filing of the Indictment.[5926] Accordingly, not only the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, finds no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the allegation of a megaphone announcement by Kanyabashi in mid-June 1994 fell under the scope of paragraph 5.8, but it is also of the view, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, that the timeframe of the allegation of megaphone announcements by Kanyabashi pleaded in this paragraph was sufficient to provide him adequate notice.

2553. As to Kanyabashi's contention that Witness TK's evidence fell outside the scope of paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber notes that Kanyabashi was neither charged nor convicted in relation to the megaphone announcement testified to by Witness TK.[5927] The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber used Witness TK's evidence as circumstantial evidence corroborating Witnesses QJ's and QI's testimonies about the other megaphone announcements on the basis of which Kanyabashi was ultimately convicted.[5928] As the evidence by which the material facts underpinning the charges are to be proven need not be pleaded in the indictment,[5929] the Appeals Chamber rejects Kanyabashi's arguments regarding lack of notice of Witness TK's allegation of a megaphone announcement made on behalf of the Ngoma bourgmestre at the end of May 1994. To the extent that Kanyabashi claims that he did not receive sufficient notice that Witness TK would provide evidence on a matter relevant to the case against him, the Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Kanyabashi's submission, Witness TK's prior statements disclosed to him in 1997 clearly referred to the megaphone announcement the witness testified about at trial,[5930] Kanyabashi did not object to Witness TK's evidence when the witness testified,[5931] and the cross-examination of his counsel reflects that he was prepared to respond to this particular aspect of the witness's evidence.[5932] Kanyabashi's contention regarding the lack of notice of Witness TK's evidence is therefore rejected.

2554. Regarding Kanyabashi's challenge to the Trial Chamber's reliance on paragraph 6.45 of the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber notes that this paragraph refers to Kanyabashi encouraging and instructing "soldiers", "militiamen", and "certain members of the civilian population" between 20 April and June 1994 to search for the Tutsis who had escaped the massacres, without any mention of megaphone announcements or incitement directed at the population of Butare Town in general. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber therefore erred in concluding that paragraph 6.45 provided notice to Kanyabashi of his alleged responsibility for a megaphone announcement directed at the population of Butare Town made in mid-June 1994. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, is of the view that this error is nonetheless inconsequential given the Appeals Chamber's previous conclusion that the pleading of the date of the megaphone incidents in paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment was not overly vague and that the Indictment was not defective in this respect.

2556. Turning to the question whether the defect in the Indictment regarding the number of alleged incidents was subsequently cured, the Appeals Chamber observes that there is no mention of the allegation of megaphone announcements in the Prosecution's pre-trial brief or opening statement. In the summaries of the Prosecution witnesses' anticipated evidence appended to the pre-trial brief, it appears that Witness QJ would testify about Kanyabashi making a megaphone announcement inciting the population to search for the enemy in late May[5933] and that Witness QI would also testify about Kanyabashi saying over a megaphone that all Tutsis should be killed while driving past the witness's house on an unspecified date.[5934] Although not obvious from a reading of Witnesses QJ's and QI's summaries, the Appeals Chamber considers, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, that a review of the witnesses' prior statements confirms that both witnesses were referring to two distinct incidents implicating Kanyabashi in delivering a message using a

[5933] In relevant part, Witness QJ's Summary, which was marked relevant to Kanyabashi and was linked, inter alia, to Count 4 of the Kanyabashi Indictment, reads as follows:

> QJ saw Kanyabashi around late May on an Ngoma commune truck speaking on a megaphone to the public. Kanyabashi said that the enemy still was among them and that they were to make a thorough search for the enemy. This message was repeated for two days. Immediately following the speech, the population began searching for and killing the Tutsis.

[5934] In relevant part, Witness QI's Summary, which was marked relevant to Kanyabashi and was linked, inter alia, to Count 4 of the Kanyabashi Indictment, reads as follows:

> QI saw Kanyabashi drive pass the house, talking over a megaphone, saying that the Tutsi enemy still was among the population and that all Tutsis, even the babies should be killed. Kanyabashi also said that the bushes should be cut down so that the Inkotanyi could not find a hiding place.

megaphone.[5935] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, concludes that the vagueness of the Indictment regarding the number of incidents of incitement by megaphone was remedied by Witnesses QJ's and QI's summaries read together with their relevant prior written statements.

2557. Incidentally, the Appeals Chamber observes that Kanyabashi appears to have treated the allegations of megaphone announcements recounted by Witnesses QJ and QI as one and the same incident in his closing brief.[5936] However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, is of the view that the conduct of his defence at trial effectively reflects that he was provided with sufficient information to conduct meaningful investigations and prepare an effective defence against the allegation of a second megaphone announcement in June 1994. In particular, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, notes that Kanyabashi's counsel – who did not object to the relevant part of Witness QI's testimony[5937] – conducted a detailed and

The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, considers that Kanyabashi should have been prompted to re-examine Witnesses QJ's and QI's prior statements upon reading the Witness Summaries Grid.

[5937] See Trial Judgement, para. 3718. The Appeals Chamber notes that the objections at trial regarding the imprecision of the timeframe of the allegations set forth in paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment to which Kanyabashi points to were very general and concerned the prior formulation of the paragraph. See Kanyabashi 24 December 2007 Reply, para. 29; Kanyabashi 11 December 2007 Motion, para. 39; Kanyabashi 9 May 2007 Appeal, para. 56; Kanyabashi 22 December 2006 Motion, paras. 32, 42, 69, 72, 78, 84, 93, 105, 108; Kanyabashi Preliminary Motion, paras. 23, 25, 38, pp. 17, 18, 25. The objections raised concerned about the previous formulation of paragraph 5.8 contained in the Kanyabashi Amended Indictment, which read as follows:

> From April to July 1994, incitement to hatred and violence was propagated by various prominent persons, including members of the Government and local authorities. The President, Théodore Sindikubwabo, the Prime Minister, Jean Kambanda, Ministers Pauline Ny[i]ramasuhuko and André Rwamakuba, local authorities such as the Préfets, Sylvain Nsabimana and Alphonse Nteziryayo, the Bourgmestres Joseph Kanyabashi, Ladislas Ntaganzwa and Elie Ndayambaje publicly incited the people to exterminate the Tutsi population and its "accomplices".

In response to the Kanyabashi Preliminary Motion, the Trial Chamber ordered the Prosecution to amend and clarify paragraph 5.8 "align[ing] the wording of this paragraph of the Indictment with that of paragraphs 7, 13 and 14 of the initial Indictment dated 15 June 1996, which is more precise". See 31 May 2000 Decision, para. 5.21. Kanyabashi also did not contend that the evidence of Witness QI was outside the scope of paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment in his opening submissions. See Kanyabashi Opening Statement, T. 10 July 2007 p. 8. Besides advancing a generic claim of vagueness of the timeframe of the incitement by megaphone allegation in his closing brief, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, considers that Kanyabashi also failed to object clearly to Witness QI's evidence on the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement for lack of notice. See Kanyabashi Closing Brief, para. 301 ("Without having a specific date, a specific place and an identifiable victim, it would be impossible to establish the falsity of the account of the megaphone incident."). Although concerned by the practice of trial chambers to postpone consideration of Defence objections to the admission of testimonial evidence on the ground of lack of notice to the phase of final deliberations, the Appeals Chamber considers that none of the Trial Chamber's oral rulings Kanyabashi relies upon could have reasonably been understood as suggesting to the Defence to refrain from making objections well-prepared cross-examination of Witness QI with respect to the megaphone incident the witness recounted.[5938] Kanyabashi also called witnesses to rebut Witness QI's account of seeing him delivering a message through a megaphone in June 1994[5939] and requested the addition of Witness D-2-17-A to his witness list for the specific purpose of rebutting Witness QI's testimony that he saw Kanyabashi using a megaphone from his hiding place in June 1994.[5940]

2558. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Indictment was defective in relation to the number of incidents of incitement by megaphone of which Kanyabashi was alleged to be responsible. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, considers that Kanyabashi was ultimately put on adequate notice of the relevant material facts with respect to the number of alleged incidents of incitement by megaphone and that the vagueness of the Indictment did not impair his ability to prepare his defence. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, therefore concludes that the Trial Chamber's error concerning the form of the Indictment regarding the number of incidents of incitement by megaphone did not invalidate its decision to convict Kanyabashi on the basis of the May and June 1994 megaphone announcements.

4. Conclusion

2560. The Appeals Chamber, however, dismisses Kanyabashi's contentions that he lacked sufficient notice of his alleged responsibility as a superior in relation to the killings perpetrated by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting with respect to the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement, further dismisses Kanyabashi's contentions that he lacked sufficient notice of his alleged responsibility for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide through two megaphone announcements in late May and mid-June 1994. In light of the Trial Chamber's analysis concerning the cumulative effect of the defects in the co-Accused's Indictments in the Trial Judgement[5941] and the absence of any substantiation, the Appeals Chamber also dismisses Kanyabashi's allegation of error regarding the assessment of the cumulative effect of the defects of the Indictment on his fair trial rights. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting in part, dismisses Grounds 2.1, 2.2, 2.7 in part, and 3.1 of Kanyabashi's appeal.

C. Kabakobwa Hill (Grounds 1.2-1.7)

2561. The Trial Chamber convicted Kanyabashi of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent the crimes committed by members of the Ngoma commune police at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and for failing to punish them.[5942]

2562. Kanyabashi contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence relevant to this event and in concluding that he had sufficient knowledge that his subordinates might commit crimes or had committed crimes at Kabakobwa Hill.[5943]

2563. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has concluded that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Kanyabashi in relation to the killings perpetrated at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 in the absence of sufficient notice of the material facts underpinning his convictions and, on this basis, reversed his convictions for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II in relation to these killings.[5944] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 1.2 through 1.7 of Kanyabashi's appeal as moot.

D. Matyazo Clinic (Grounds 2.1 to 2.6, 2.7 in part)

2564. Based on the testimonies of Prosecution Witnesses QI and RL, the Trial Chamber, Judge Ramaroson dissenting, found that, in late April 1994, following an initial attack by soldiers, Kanyabashi went to Matyazo Clinic, addressed the Tutsis sheltering there, and thereafter ordered soldiers to open fire on the Tutsis, resulting in many deaths.[5945]

2565. Noting that the Prosecution only charged Kanyabashi under Article 6(3) of the Statute in relation to this event, the Trial Chamber found that it was not proven that Kanyabashi exercised de jure authority over the soldiers.[5946] However, recalling that Kanyabashi ordered the soldiers to shoot at the Tutsis and that they obeyed this order, the Trial Chamber concluded that "Kanyabashi exercised effective control over these soldiers on an ad hoc or temporary basis, and that he was in a superior-subordinate relationship over them."[5947] Consequently, the Trial Chamber, Judge Ramaroson dissenting, convicted Kanyabashi of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent the soldiers from committing these killings and punish them.[5948]

2566. Kanyabashi submits that no reasonable trier of fact could have convicted him for the killings at Matyazo Clinic based on the evidence on the record.[5949] In particular, he argues that the relevant evidence does not demonstrate that he was in a superior-subordinate relationship with the soldiers who allegedly followed his orders or that he had effective control over them.[5950] In his view, while the fact that the persons followed orders may be sufficient to establish responsibility for ordering under Article 6(1) of the Statute, it is insufficient to prove effective control.[5951] Kanyabashi also submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its overall assessment of the evidence concerning this event.[5952] He requests that the impugned conclusions be set aside and that he be acquitted of the crimes committed at Matyazo Clinic.[5953]

2567. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably assessed the evidence pertaining to the killings at Matyazo Clinic.[5954] It submits that the nature of Kanyabashi's orders, the promptness with which they were executed, and evidence that Kanyabashi transported the soldiers to Matyazo Clinic demonstrate his superior responsibility for the crimes committed by these soldiers.[5955] It points to further evidence demonstrating that Kanyabashi "was an extremely influential and powerful man" to show that soldiers "would obey" his orders.[5956]

2568. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the imposition of superior responsibility necessitates a pre-existing superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrators.[5957] While proof that an accused is not only able to issue orders but that his orders are actually followed provides an example of effective control,[5958] the Appeals Chamber has held that:

> [t]he ability to exercise effective control in the sense of a material power to prevent or punish, which the Appeals Chamber considers to be a minimum requirement for the recognition of the superior-subordinate relationship, will almost invariably not be satisfied unless such a relationship of subordination exists. However, it is possible to imagine scenarios in which one of two persons of equal status or rank – such as two soldiers or two civilian prison guards – could in fact exercise 'effective control' over the other at least in the sense of a purely practical ability to prevent the conduct of the other by, for example, force of personality or physical strength. The Appeals Chamber does not consider the doctrine of command responsibility – which developed with an emphasis on persons who, by virtue of the position which they occupy, have authority over others – as having been intended to impose criminal liability on persons for the acts of other persons of completely equal status.[5959]

Specifically, the Prosecution refers to evidence showing that: (i) Kanyabashi was in a senior political position and that Butare Town, for which he was bourgmestre, was second only to Kigali; (ii) Kanyabashi "had outstanding political experience [and] intimate knowledge of the decision makers"; (iii) President Sindikubwabo was Kanyabashi's friend; (iv) Kanyabashi "was the dean of the Butare mayors"; and (v) "Kanyabashi's Tutsi wife could freely pass through road blocks – which were often manned by the soldiers – since Kanyabashi was her 'true identity card'." See idem (internal references omitted). See also AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 35, 36, 38.

In this regard, the ability to exercise effective control in the sense of a material power to prevent or punish necessitates a pre-existing relationship of subordination, hierarchy or chain of command.") (internal reference omitted). See also Bizimungu Appeal Judgement, para. 133 ("The Appeals Chamber recalls that the material ability to prevent or punish can only amount to effective control over the perpetrators if it is premised upon a pre-existing superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrators.") 2569. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in finding that Kanyabashi had superior responsibility over the soldiers at Matyazo Clinic within the meaning of Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber relied exclusively on its findings that he ordered soldiers to shoot at the Tutsis sheltering at Matyazo Clinic and that the soldiers obeyed this order.[5960] Having previously determined that Kanyabashi – a civilian authority who was the bourgmestre of Ngoma Commune[5961] – did not have de jure authority over the soldiers,[5962] the Trial Chamber considered that he nonetheless "exercised effective control over these soldiers on an ad hoc or temporary basis, and that he was in a superior-subordinate relationship over them."[5963]

2570. The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's findings that Kanyabashi ordered soldiers to shoot at Tutsis and that the soldiers obeyed this order may be demonstrative of the fact that Kanyabashi was in a position of authority or influence that could compel the commission of a crime through the execution of his orders.[5964] As noted above, these findings could be indicative of the fact that Kanyabashi exercised effective control over the soldiers.[5965] However, the Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that a single order from a civilian authority which was followed by soldiers demonstrated a pre-existing superior-subordinate relationship, which, in turn, imposed a duty on that civilian authority to prevent the soldiers from committing crimes or to punish them for the crimes committed.[5966]

2571. In so finding, the Appeals Chamber notes that the conduct of Kanyabashi as found by the Trial Chamber could have provided a basis for individual criminal liability pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute. However, as already emphasised, liability under Article 6(3) of the Statute hinges on the existence of a superior-subordinate relationship which imposes an obligation to prevent crimes or punish culpable subordinates for them. The record relied upon by the Trial Chamber, however,

[5961] Trial Judgement, para. 53.
[5962] Trial Judgement, para. 5822.
[5963] Trial Judgement, para. 5823.
[5964] This is the type of authority that could allow for the imposition of ordering liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute. See Semanza Appeal Judgement, para. 361 ("Thus, in its definition, the Trial Chamber did not require proof of a formal superior-subordinate relationship for the Appellant to be found responsible for ordering. All that it required was the implied existence of a superior-subordinate relationship. The Trial Chamber's approach in this case is consistent with recent jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber. As recently clarified by the ICTY Appeals Chamber in Kordić and Čerkez, the actus reus of 'ordering' is that a person in a position of authority instruct another person to commit an offence. No formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrator is required. It is sufficient that there is proof of some position of authority on the part of the accused that would compel another to commit a crime in following the accused's order. The Trial Chamber thus committed no legal error in its enunciation of the elements of ordering.") (internal references omitted).
[5966] The Appeals Chamber stresses that only through an accused's superior position does the corresponding duty arise to exercise effective control to prevent the crimes of subordinates or punish them. See Halilović Trial Judgement, para. 87 ("[I]nternational humanitarian law entrusts commanders with a role of guarantors of laws dealing with humanitarian protection and war crimes, and for this reason they are placed in a position of control over the acts of their subordinates, does not support the conclusion that Kanyabashi was in this position with respect to the soldiers who attacked Matyazo Clinic and, consequently, that he was under this obligation. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Kanyabashi under Article 6(3) of the Statute on the sole basis that the soldiers executed his orders to shoot at Tutsi refugees at Matyazo Clinic.[5967]

2572. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber finds that the evidence referred to by the Prosecution does not support as the only reasonable conclusion the finding that Kanyabashi was in a superior-subordinate relationship with the soldiers involved in the Matyazo Clinic massacre within the meaning of Article 6(3) of the Statute. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber considered that Witnesses QI and RL consistently testified that soldiers accompanied Kanyabashi in his vehicle when he arrived at Matyazo Clinic on the day of the attack.[5968] It also summarised Witness RL's testimony that, approximately five days before the event, Kanyabashi had arrived at Matyazo Clinic accompanied by about six soldiers in camouflage uniform[5969] and that Witness QI testified that soldiers lived at Kanyabashi's house.[5970] The Appeals Chamber finds that this evidence – which was not relied upon by the Trial Chamber when finding Kanyabashi responsible under Article 6(3) of the Statute[5971] – allows for reasonable inferences other than the existence of a de facto hierarchical relationship wherein Kanyabashi was the superior of the soldiers who attacked Matyazo Clinic. One such inference is that Kanyabashi willingly assisted the soldiers without being in a superior-subordinate relationship with them.

and it is this position which generates a responsibility for failure to act."). Cf. Bagilishema Appeal Judgement, paras. 33, 35.

[5967] The Appeals Chamber highlights that Kanyabashi's situation is materially distinct from the Trial Chamber's findings that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali bore superior responsibility for crimes committed by Interahamwe who followed their orders at the Butare Prefecture Office as well as Ntahobali's superior responsibility for crimes committed by Interahamwe in relation to the killing of Ruvurajabo and Tutsi refugees at the EER. See supra, Sections IV.F.4, V.G.3(b), V.I.4. V.J.4. In this regard, the repeated collaboration between Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali and Interahamwe in attacks at the prefectoral office in particular as well as extensive evidence of the Interahamwe consistently following their orders provided a reasonable basis to establish that a pre-existing superior-subordinate relationship existed between Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali, on one hand, and the Interahamwe, on the other hand, and that Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali exercised effective control over them.

2573. Turning to the evidence that Kanyabashi was "an extremely influential and powerful man",[5972] the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that a reasonable trier of fact could have found that Kanyabashi was in a superior-subordinate relationship with the soldiers who killed the Tutsi refugees at Matyazo Clinic on this basis. In this respect, it bears noting that the Trial Chamber did not rely on evidence of Kanyabashi's influence and authority to establish his superior responsibility with respect to these soldiers and that it implicitly found that this general evidence of Kanyabashi's influence and authority was insufficient to demonstrate his superior responsibility over the soldiers implicated in the Kabakobwa Hill massacre.[5973]

2574. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Kanyabashi was responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killings of Tutsi refugees who sought shelter at Matyazo Clinic. As a result, Kanyabashi's remaining challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings concerning this event are moot.

2575. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber grants the relevant part of Ground 2.2 of Kanyabashi's appeal and reverses his convictions for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II in relation to the killings at Matyazo Clinic. The Appeals Chamber will examine the impact of this finding, if any, in Section XII below.

E. Incitement by Megaphone (Grounds 3.2 to 3.8)

2577. Kanyabashi argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence and in finding him responsible for direct and public incitement to commit genocide. The Appeals Chamber will consider these challenges in turn.

1. Assessment of Evidence

2578. The Trial Chamber relied principally on the evidence of Witness QJ to find that, around late May 1994, Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[5978] The Trial Chamber considered that Witness TK, although not referring to the same incident as Witness QJ, provided various details that corroborated Witness QJ's evidence as to "the manner in which the announcements were made and the content of the announcements".[5979] With respect to the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement, the Trial Chamber relied primarily on the direct evidence of Witness QI.[5980] In assessing both incidents, the Trial Chamber also considered evidence which, in its view, established that megaphone announcements from a vehicle were part of the modus operandi by which messages from Kanyabashi, in his capacity as bourgmestre, were delivered to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994.[5981]

2579. Kanyabashi contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing evidence related to the fabrication of evidence against him; (ii) evaluating exculpatory evidence that was inconsistent with the conclusions that he incited genocide; (iii) finding the existence of a modus operandi; (iv) assessing evidence directly related to the late May 1994 megaphone announcement; (v) assessing evidence directly related to the June 1994 megaphone announcement; and (vi) finding that killings occurred after these announcements.[5982] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(a) Fabrication of Evidence

2580. Before turning to its assessment of the Prosecution evidence, the Trial Chamber recalled that the Defence had asserted that "Prosecution Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI were Ibuka members who were induced to falsely testify as to this allegation against Kanyabashi."[5983] However, the Trial Chamber referred to its prior determination that the evidence of Defence Witnesses D-2-21-T, D-13-D, and D-2-18-O "as to the alleged Ibuka membership of Witnesses QI, TK and QJ [did] not undermine the credibility of these Prosecution witnesses."[5984]

2581. Kanyabashi submits that, when evaluating such allegations, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess collectively the testimonies of Defence Witnesses D-2-21-T, D-2-18-O, D-13-D, D-2-13-D, and D-1-4-O concerning evidence fabrication by Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI as well as in only considering whether Prosecution witnesses were members of Ibuka.[5985] He emphasises that Witness D-2-21-T testified that Witnesses QJ and TK were involved in three meetings, the purpose of which was to forge evidence about a "megaphone story" against Kanyabashi, and that the witness implicated Witness QI as well.[5986] He argues that the rejection of Witness D-2-21-T's

The Appeals Chamber understands Kanyabashi's reference to Witness D-2-4-O in paragraph 283 of his appeal brief to instead refer to Witness D-1-4-O, as no witness testified under the former pseudonym and the latter provided evidence concerning alleged evidence fabrication against Kanyabashi.
[5986] Kanyabashi Notice of Appeal, sub-para. 4.1.1.3; Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 318, 331. See also Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 265.

evidence on the basis that the allegations raised by his testimony were "tardy" and because the witness "did not take down notes during these meetings" was unreasonable.[5987]

2582. Kanyabashi further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting evidence from Witnesses QJ and TK, who had close personal ties and were in regular contact after the genocide, even though it determined that they were not truthful in denying that they had discussed the events with each other.[5988] He argues that their evidence, which sought to downplay their personal connection, was consistent with other evidence in the record that other witnesses, such as Witnesses SJ and QY, had been instructed to lie and should have been rejected on this basis.[5989] As a demonstration of their collusion, Kanyabashi stresses that only in Witness TK's second statement to Tribunal investigators, which was signed on the same day Witness QJ gave a statement about the "megaphone incident", did Witness TK discuss "a message over a microphone by a spokesperson for Kanyabashi".[5990] Kanyabashi also stresses that, during Witness QJ's testimony, the witness "imputed to Kanyabashi words which were different from those mentioned in his statements, but almost identical with those used by [Witness TK]."[5991]

2584. The Prosecution responds that Kanyabashi fails to show any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence concerning the allegations that Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI fabricated evidence.[5996]

2585. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Kanyabashi's unsupported contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to assess collectively the testimonies of Witnesses D-2-21-T, D-2-18-O, D-13-D, D-2-13-D, and D-1-4-O. The Trial Chamber assessed the evidence of these witnesses in detail in a prior section of the Trial Judgement on allegations of fabrication of evidence.[5997] Although the Trial Chamber organised its deliberations by assessing the Defence evidence witness-by-witness and prior to the assessment of the Prosecution evidence concerning the megaphone announcements, this organisation of the Trial Judgement does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber did not view the evidence collectively.[5998] Likewise, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not limit its analysis simply to whether Prosecution witnesses were members of Ibuka, but considered specific allegations that Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI participated in meetings where individuals were instructed to implicate Kanyabashi in crimes.[5999]

2586. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Kanyabashi's argument that the Trial Chamber unreasonably rejected Witness D-2-21-T's evidence implicating Witnesses QJ and TK in evidence fabrication on the basis that the allegations it raised were "tardy" and because the witness "did not take down notes". This argument ignores that the Trial Chamber's analysis specifically enumerated nine other factors that led it to conclude that the witness's evidence was neither credible nor reliable.[6000]

2587. Concerning the submission that the Trial Chamber failed to view the evidence of Witnesses QJ and TK with sufficient caution given their close personal relationship, the Appeals Chamber notes the following statement in the Trial Judgement:

> The Chamber recalls that Witness QJ testified that he is married to Witness TK, which was confirmed by Witness TK. Both witnesses also testified that they had never discussed the events of April to July 1994 together, and did not know of each other's plans to testify before this Tribunal. The Chamber recalls its previous finding that while it does not believe that these witnesses never discussed the events at issue in this case, or their plans to testify before this Tribunal, this alone does not undermine Witness TK or Witness QJ's credibility […].[6001]

[6000] Trial Judgement, paras. 346-359. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's suggestion that the Trial Chamber misapplied the burden of proof. When discussing allegations of fabrication of evidence, the Trial Chamber recalled that the Defence evidence only needed to raise a reasonable doubt. See ibid., paras. 343, 383, 2097-2099.
[6001] Trial Judgement, para. 3795 (internal references omitted). See also ibid., paras. 375 ("The Kanyabashi Defence also highlights the fact that Witnesses TK and QJ, a married couple, testified that they did not discuss with each other the events that took place between April to July 1994, and this couple testified that they did not discuss with each other

In this regard, the Trial Chamber found, as Kanyabashi argues, that these witnesses sought to minimise the appearance that they had discussed the events. However, Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that, in the circumstances of this case, no reasonable trier of fact could have found their evidence credible. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Chamber's finding that Witnesses QJ and TK lacked credibility as to whether they discussed the events with each other and about their involvement in this proceeding does not necessarily imply that they fabricated evidence against Kanyabashi.[6002] Given the broad discretion vested in triers of fact when assessing the demeanour and credibility of witnesses, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber was required to reject all of Witness QJ's and TK's evidence because it did not believe that these witnesses never discussed the events at issue in this case, or their plans to testify before the Tribunal.[6003]

2588. Furthermore, while Kanyabashi argues that the increasing similarity between the prior statements of Witness TK and the information and evidence provided by Witness QJ reveals that they colluded, a careful analysis does not sustain this argument. Specifically, while Witness TK's second statement to Tribunal investigators is the first time she discussed a message conveyed on behalf of Kanyabashi asking the population to search for the enemy and was signed on the same day that Witness QJ gave a statement to Tribunal investigators,[6004] Kanyabashi ignores that Witness TK's first statement only concerned events that she witnessed at the Butare Prefecture Office. Consequently, it is reasonable that she would not have given information about the megaphone announcements she heard when she was not at the prefectoral office.[6005] In addition, Kanyabashi's argument that the witnesses colluded appears all the more speculative when considering that, unlike Witness QJ, Witness TK did not identify Kanyabashi as the person making their plans to testify before this Tribunal. The Defence asserts that this testimony was incredible, that the similarity of their evidence indicates that these Ibuka members fabricated their testimony. The Chamber does not believe Witness TK and QJ's testimony that they never discussed the events at issue in this case, or their plans to testify before the ICTR. Nevertheless, the Chamber considers that the Defence assertions in this regard do not undermine Witnesses TK's or QJ's credibility.") (internal references omitted), 2677.

[6002] In particular, Kanyabashi emphasises that this conduct mirrors that of, for example, Witnesses SJ and QY, who were found to have lied before the Trial Chamber. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already considered and rejected arguments that information concerning allegations of false testimonies from Witnesses SJ and QY was relevant to the assessment of the credibility of several other Prosecution witnesses, including Witnesses QJ and TK. See supra, Section III.J.2(a)(ii)b. In this context, the Appeals Chamber rejects Kanyabashi's contention.

[6005] See Exhibit D48 (Witness's TK Statement, dated 12 November 1996) (confidential). Moreover, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Kanyabashi's contention that Witness TK's fourth statement of Nyiramasuhuko making a megaphone announcement is inconsistent with her prior statements implicating the bourgmestre of Ngoma Commune in doing so. Specifically, in this statement, Witness TK described a distinct megaphone announcement by Nyiramasuhuko that she heard advertising a meeting to welcome Sindikubwabo. Although Witness TK did not refer to the megaphone announcement given on behalf of Kanyabashi that she heard, this statement was expressly intended to "supplement and clarify" her previous statements and clearly referred to a separate event. See Exhibit D53 (Witness TK's Statement, dated 22/23 April 1998) (confidential), p. K0052251 (Registry pagination).

the megaphone announcement in any of her prior statements or in her testimony. Kanyabashi also does not show that Witness QJ's evidence about what Kanyabashi said through the megaphone is materially inconsistent with his prior statements or so similar to Witness TK's evidence that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the witnesses did not collude.[6006] These contentions are therefore dismissed.

2589. Turning to Kanyabashi's assertion that the Trial Chamber failed to evaluate Witness D-2-18-O's evidence implicating Witness QI in meetings where persons were encouraged to give false testimony against Kanyabashi, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber summarised this aspect of the witness's evidence in detail[6007] and later determined that his evidence in this regard suffered from "serious credibility issues".[6008] Kanyabashi fails to show any error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion.

2590. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not fail to evaluate Witness QA's evidence. The Trial Chamber expressly rejected the entirety of Witness QA's evidence because the witness lacked credibility.[6009] Further, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness QA's evidence that Witness QI's former employer encouraged Witness QA to accuse falsely Kanyabashi would have required a reasonable trier of fact to speculate as to whether this person also influenced Witness QI to accuse falsely Kanyabashi.[6010] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness QI's evidence of his links with the RPF required the Trial Chamber to assess his evidence with particular caution.[6011] The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the Trial Chamber, which relied notably on the fact that Kanyabashi "had ample opportunity to discover this information before the testimony of the said Proscution witnesses",[6012] placed undue emphasis on the fact that Witness QI was not cross-examined about the meetings in which evidence was allegedly fabricated against Kanyabashi when dismissing evidence to this effect.[6013]

2591. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its analysis of the evidence implicating Prosecution witnesses in evidence fabrication or that it failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to the evidence of Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI.

(b) Exculpatory Evidence

2592. Kanyabashi argues that the Trial Chamber failed to assess evidence that is inconsistent with the testimonies of Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI that he incited the population to kill Tutsis during the genocide.[6014] In this respect, he points to evidence showing that he: (i) had been on a list to be arrested in 1990; (ii) was attacked in the February 1991 issue of the Ijambo review for his ties with Tutsis; (iii) had been nicknamed "Kanyabatutsi" given his closeness to Tutsis; (iv) was close with the Tutsi Prefect Habyalimana as evidenced by a letter from him;[6015] and (v) wrote a letter to his daughter in May 1994 expressing his "helplessness" and "his resignation to death".[6016]

2593. Kanyabashi further points to: (i) a 14 May 1994 speech in which Kambanda criticised the administrative authorities of Ngoma Commune for their links with the RPF; (ii) evidence that Marcel Gatsinzi was unaware of Kanyabashi being implicated in the genocide; and (iii) his role in hiding and caring for his Tutsi family in his home and Tutsis in the Ngoma commune office.[6017] He also highlights his participation in meetings in Matyazo in May 1994 and in Cyarwa in June 1994 in an effort to stop killings and points to his role in assisting the safe and humane transfer of Tutsi refugees to Rango.[6018]

2594. The Prosecution responds that Kanyabashi's contentions should be dismissed as he repeats arguments already raised at trial without identifying any error in the Trial Chamber's reasoning.[6019]

refugees" in determining the individual circumstances relevant to this sentence.[6023] In this context, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber ignored the evidence Kanyabashi points to or that the Trial Chamber was required to discuss this evidence when assessing allegations of Kanyabashi's alleged incitement by megaphone.[6024] Kanyabashi does not show that this evidence would have precluded a reasonable trier of fact from finding that he made inciting statements by megaphone in May and June 1994.

2596. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the alleged exculpatory evidence to which he points.

(c) Modus Operandi

2597. In assessing the testimony of Witness QJ concerning Kanyabashi's announcement by megaphone in late May 1994, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness TK as well as Witnesses D-2-5-I, D-2-13-O, and D-2-YYYY "corroborated and complemented"[6025] his evidence as it established that "megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of the modus operandi by which messages from Bourgmestre Kanyabashi were delivered to the population of Ngoma commune in the period from April through June 1994."[6026] Likewise, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QI's testimony concerning Kanyabashi's announcement by megaphone in June 1994 was "also supported by evidence […] which establishe[d] that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of the modus operandi by which messages from the bourgmestre were disseminated to the population of Ngoma commune."[6027]

2598. Kanyabashi submits that the evidence on the record does not support the Trial Chamber's findings on the existence of a modus operandi wherein he utilised a megaphone to disseminate messages to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994.[6028] He contends that Witnesses D-2-5-I, D-2-13-O, and D-2-YYYY testified about messages of general interest disseminated through megaphone by people other than Kanyabashi and that they explicitly denied that this practice continued after April 1994.[6029] He further argues that Witness TK testified about

[6024] The Trial Chamber also considered evidence that Kanyabashi assisted Tutsis by providing travel documents that allowed him to take Tutsis through roadblocks unharmed when assessing another allegation that Kanyabashi offered a reward for a Tutsi lecturer at a roadblock. See Trial Judgement, paras. 3242-3249. The Trial Chamber considered that evidence of this conduct towards Tutsis did not impact its analysis on the specific allegation and determined that, if true, his good conduct could be a mitigating factor to be considered in relation to sentencing. See ibid., para. 3248.

[6029] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 288, 290-295.

only one event occurring after April 1994 without implicating Kanyabashi.[6030] According to Kanyabashi, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding that none of the Defence witnesses provided an explanation as to why the practice of transmitting messages stopped in April 1994, Witness D-2-YYYY testified that they were discontinued because the administrative services were paralysed after April 1994.[6031]

2599. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that megaphone announcements from April through June 1994 were part of a modus operandi.[6032]

2600. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber exclusively relied on the evidence of Witnesses TK, D-2-5-I, D-2-13-O, and D-2-YYYY in reaching its conclusion on the existence of a modus operandi of megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle by which Kanyabashi disseminated messages to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994.[6033] The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness TK testified about a single event in which she heard a megaphone message delivered from a vehicle at the end of May 1994 that concerned a message from the Ngoma Commune bourgmestre.[6034] Witnesses D-2-5-I, D-2-13-O, and D-2-YYYY testified that, before the war, megaphone announcements conveyed messages to the people of Ngoma Commune but clarified that this practice stopped between May and July 1994.[6035] Moreover, contrary to the Trial Chamber findings, Witness D-2-YYYY explained that this practice was discontinued after 6 April 1994 as the war paralysed such administrative services.[6036] However, the Trial Chamber relied on the Defence witnesses' evidence to make a finding – that from April through June 1994 delivering megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle was a modus operandi employed by Kanyabashi in his capacity of Ngoma Commune bourgmestre – which is contradictory to their testimonies that megaphone announcements were discontinued between April and July 1994. The Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have made such finding on the basis of their evidence.

2601. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that Witness TK's evidence alone, which concerns a single megaphone announcement in May 1994, could reasonably support the modus operandi finding of the Trial Chamber.

[6030] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 287.
[6031] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 289. Kanyabashi argues that the Trial Chamber improperly shifted the burden of proof and required him to prove why the dissemination of the messages through a megaphone did not continue in April 1994. See idem; Kanyabashi Reply Brief, para. 108.

[6036] Witness D-2-YYYY, T. 11 December 2007 p. 37 (closed session).

2602. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence of Witnesses TK, D-2-5-I, D-2-13-O, and D-2-YYYY established that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of a modus operandi by which messages from Kanyabashi were delivered to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994. The Appeals Chamber will consider whether this error occasioned a miscarriage of justice after assessing the remainder of Kanyabashi's challenges with respect to each megaphone announcement.

(d) Late May 1994 Megaphone Announcement

2603. As noted above, the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of Witness QJ to find that, around late May 1994, Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[6037] The Trial Chamber considered that Witness TK, although not referring to the same incident as Witness QJ, provided various details that corroborated Witness QJ's evidence as to the "manner in which the announcements were made and the content of the announcements".[6038]

2604. Kanyabashi contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) evaluating Witness QJ's identification evidence; (ii) assessing the credibility of Witness QJ; (iii) finding that Witness TK's evidence corroborated Witness QJ's evidence; (iv) reversing the burden of proof when assessing Defence evidence; and (v) rejecting the evidence from Defence witnesses on the basis of their relationships with Kanyabashi.[6039] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(i) Identification

2605. With respect to Witness QJ's identification evidence, the Trial Chamber stated:

> Turning to Witness QJ's identification of Kanyabashi, the Chamber notes Witness QJ testified that he knew Kanyabashi because Kanyabashi was a senior public official in Ngoma commune where the witness was living in 1994. Witness QJ testified that Kanyabashi lived nearby and typically drove past the hotel. Further, Witness QJ saw Kanyabashi several times driving around the city in his own car, on which occasions Kanyabashi was obliged to stop at the roadblocks. Witness QJ also frequently saw Kanyabashi stop to speak to those manning the roadblock at the Hotel Faucon. Lastly, Witness QJ had previously seen Kanyabashi attend a meeting at the MRND Palace in Butare sometime between 17 and 21 April 1994. In light of the number of occasions on which Witness QJ had previously seen Kanyabashi, and Witness QJ's positive identification of Kanyabashi in court, the Chamber is persuaded that Witness QJ's identification of Kanyabashi at the Hotel Faucon roadblock in May 1994 was reliable.[6040]

[6040] Trial Judgement, para. 3800 (internal references omitted).

2606. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber applied the wrong legal standard to Witness QJ's identification evidence by placing undue weight on his prior knowledge of Kanyabashi and his ability to identify him in court.[6041] He also argues that the circumstances surrounding his identification by Witness QJ were difficult and required a careful analysis that the Trial Chamber erroneously did not conduct.[6042] Specifically, Kanyabashi contends that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness QJ's identification evidence because the witness: (i) could not estimate the distance at which he saw him;[6043] and (ii) gave inconsistent evidence as to whether Kanyabashi was seated between two persons in the vehicle or not.[6044] He further argues that Witness QJ's evidence that Kanyabashi was being driven was contradicted by Witness QI's testimony as well as by Defence Witnesses D-2-YYY, D-2-5-I, D-2-14-W, D-2-17-I, D-21-B, and Bernadette Kamanzi whose evidence reflects that Kanyabashi drove himself and was accompanied by a policeman.[6045] Kanyabashi also questions the reliability of the identification, arguing that Witness QJ "imputed the same statements to Nsabimana as those imputed to Kanyabashi, at the same roadblock and in the same vague manner."[6046]

2607. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed Witness QJ's evidence and that a slight variation in his testimony does not detract from the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's reliance on it.[6047] The Prosecution also submits that Witness QJ's evidence concerning Nsabimana is irrelevant to assessing his identification evidence of Kanyabashi.[6048]

2608. The Appeals Chamber rejects Kanyabashi's assertion that the Trial Chamber applied the wrong legal standard when assessing Witness QJ's prior knowledge of Kanyabashi and in-court identification. These were factors considered in addition to Witness QJ's numerous sightings of Kanyabashi prior to the megaphone announcement at the Hotel Faucon roadblock, in Butare Town, and at a meeting at the MRND Palace and Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that improper weight was placed on them.[6049]

2609. As regards Kanyabashi's contention that Witness QJ was unable to estimate the distance between him and Kanyabashi on the occasion of the megaphone announcement, the Appeals Chamber observes that the witness was able to provide a detailed description of the location at which he saw him – the Hotel Faucon roadblock – and why Witness QJ was in its vicinity.[6050] Kanyabashi's contention that Witness QJ was unable to provide a specific numerical estimate of the distance fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on his ability to identify Kanyabashi.[6051]

2610. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds no material variance in Witness QJ's evidence as to Kanyabashi's placement in the vehicle.[6052] Furthermore, evidence from Witness QI as well as Witnesses D-2-YYY, D-2-5-I, D-2-14-W, D-21-B, and Kamanzi does not contradict Witness QJ's evidence, as their accounts consist of assertions that Kanyabashi typically drove himself and was usually only accompanied by a policeman.[6053] Notably, while Witness QJ testified that Kanyabashi was not driving the vehicle when he made the announcement,[6054] he, like these witnesses, also testified about Kanyabashi generally driving himself.[6055]

2611. Finally, Kanyabashi's assertion that Witness QJ's testimony that he saw Nsabimana issue the same instructions as Kanyabashi at the Hotel Faucon roadblock necessarily undermines the witness's identification of Kanyabashi making similar statements is without merit. Witness QJ's evidence that Nsabimana gave similar instructions at the Hotel Faucon roadblock is consistent with his testimony that he frequently heard announcements similar to the one Kanyabashi gave being made by other people during the relevant time period.[6056] Furthermore, Witness QJ described Nsabimana's physical appearance and correctly stated that he was the prefect following the removal of Prefect Habyalimana.[6057]

2612. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QJ's identification of him.

(ii) Credibility

2613. The Trial Chamber found Witness QJ's testimony about the late May 1994 megaphone announcement to be detailed and consistent.[6058]

2614. Kanyabashi contends that the Trial Chamber failed to apply sufficient caution to Witness QJ's evidence with respect to the details of the late May 1994 megaphone announcement.[6059] He points to the Trial Chamber's evaluation of the inconsistencies in Witness QJ's evidence as to whether Kanyabashi gave instructions over a megaphone on one or two occasions at the Hotel Faucon roadblock.[6060] He also highlights that Witness QJ testified that he, Kanyabashi, gave instructions each time he passed the roadblock but did not refer to him using a megaphone and instead testified that he could hear him because he was close to him.[6061] Kanyabashi appears to argue that, in this context, it is unclear during which event he used a megaphone and that this ambiguity raises doubts as to the public nature of the alleged incitement.[6062]

2615. Kanyabashi also submits that no reasonable trier of fact could have found Witness QJ credible and that his testimony was detailed and coherent.[6063] He argues that the Trial Chamber unreasonably disregarded Witness QJ's "recollection problems" and several contradictions in his testimony that undermine the witness's credibility and reliability.[6064]

2616. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed Witness QJ's credibility and that Kanyabashi fails to show any error in its reasoning related to Witness QJ's inconsistencies and recollection problems.[6065]

[6064] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 308. Kanyabashi argues that Witness QJ: (i) was unable to recall specific facts approximately 60 times during his testimony; (ii) testified that he went to the Butare Prefecture Office only twice, then stated that he went there "often" before testifying again that he went there twice; (iii) testified that Nsabimana went to all of the roadblocks to announce a message similar to that given by Kanyabashi then stated that he only saw Nsabimana at the Hotel Faucon roadblock; and (iv) testified that he could see everything from his hiding place during an attack against Tutsis hiding in the Hotel Faucon but later retracted this. See idem (emphasis omitted). See also Kanyabashi Reply Brief, paras. 118, 119; AT. 20 April 2015 p. 20.

[6069] Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 pp. 32-34 ("Q. Can you tell us if you saw Bourgmestre Kanyabashi at any other occasion, aside from these two occasions that you saw him in the pickup truck? A. I saw him several times and I also saw him in his own private car, which is a Peug[e]ot 505, and he drove around in this car in the city. […] Q. Did you see Bourgmestre Kanyabashi stop at any of the roadblocks? A. He necessarily had to go to the roadblock and to stop. Not only did the bourgmestre who is in the vehicle had to stop at the roadblock, but also pedestrians also had to stop to go through a check at the roadblock. Further, they had to stop at the roadblock because the roadblock had to be opened for them because there was no other way of going through. […] Q. Can you tell this Court if you saw Bourgmestre Kanyabashi speak to anyone at the roadblock? A. I saw him often. Each time he went through the roadblock, he had to remind people who were manning the roadblock that they had to be careful and ensure that no enemy went through.

the Appeals Chamber also finds that Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that the witness provided contradictory evidence about whether he used a megaphone in May 1994.[6070]

2619. Turning to Kanyabashi's contention that Witness QJ was generally unreliable, the Appeals Chamber observes that Kanyabashi merely refers to excerpts from Witness QJ's testimony in which the witness could not remember precise details when questioned about specific, and often peripheral, aspects of his testimony.[6071] Although Kanyabashi highlights Witness QJ's inability to recall the specific date when the megaphone announcement by Kanyabashi occurred,[6072] Witness QJ consistently stated that the announcement took place in May 1994 and acknowledged his inability to recall the exact day.[6073] Kanyabashi does not show that a reasonable trier of fact could not have relied on his evidence in these circumstances. Likewise, Kanyabashi fails to identify any material inconsistencies in Witness QJ's testimony that a reasonable trier of fact should have addressed in assessing Witness QJ's evidence in relation to this event or that would have precluded it from finding the witness to be credible with respect to it.[6074]

That was what he said often. Q. What did the word 'enemy' mean? A. When they said Umwansi or enemy – I spell Umwansi. U-M-W-A-N-Z-I. When this word was used, it is also intended to mean Tutsi. And, again, to refer to the Tutsis, they could say 'snakes' or 'Nyenzi,' or so on, and so forth.").

[6070] See Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 pp. 32-34, T. 14 November 2001 pp. 123, 124 and 129-138 (closed session); T. 15 November 2001 pp. 9-17 (closed session). The portions of Witness QJ's testimony highlighted by Kanyabashi generally concern questions to and responses from the witness about when Kanyabashi was addressing the persons manning the roadblock. Kanyabashi does not demonstrate, however, that the evidence of Witness QJ speaking to soldiers manning the roadblock is inconsistent with his evidence that he observed Kanyabashi using a megaphone and "informing the people of Ngoma that the enemies are among us and you are requested to seek them everywhere" at the Hotel Faucon roadblock. See Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 p. 26, T. 14 November 2001 p. 100. The witness's evidence reflects that his statements to those manning the roadblock mirrored his "announcements". See T. 14 November 2001 p. 95 ("Q. Witness QJ, you testified to the effect that Mr. Kanyabashi, at a roadblock, allegedly told the soldiers manning the roadblock to do their work properly so as not to let the enemy through. Do you recall saying that? A. Yes, he said that, and these were announcements that he was making.") (emphasis added). Furthermore, Witness QJ repeatedly indicated that the announcements were made throughout Butare Town. See T. 12 November 2001 p. 25 ("Q. Can you describe what he was doing when you saw him at the roadblock? A. He made announcements from his vehicle and that, throughout the city."), T. 14 November 2001 pp. 97, 98 ("Q. Witness QJ, is it not correct that this announcement that he made was made at the roadblock at Hotel Faucon to soldiers. […] THE WITNESS: No, the announcement was made across the whole Butare town and on about three occasions.").

[6071] Kanyabashi points to instances wherein Witness QJ could not recall precise details with respect to: (i) his meetings with Prosecution investigators (see Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 pp. 43-46, and 70, 79, 92, 93, 95, 96 (closed session), T. 13 November 2001 p. 42, T. 15 November 2001 pp. 19, 59 (closed session)); (ii) incidents unrelated to the Kanyabashi's megaphone announcement (see Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 p. 123, T. 13 November 2001 pp. 45, and 81(closed session), 117, T. 15 November 2001 pp. 66, 68 (closed session)); and (iii) issues related to his general credibility (see Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 p. 50, T. 13 November 2001 pp. 28, 30 (closed session), and 38, 59, 118, and 129, 131, 132, 134 (closed session), T. 14 November 2001, pp. 24, 25, 27, 30, 47, 52, 53 (closed session), 64, 65, 73, 77, 84, 86, 92, 101, 104, 119, 122, 123, T. 15 November 2001 pp. 52, 58, 64, 66, 68, 111 (closed session)).

[6073] See Witness QJ, T. 12 November 2001 p. 25, T. 15 November 2001 pp. 9, 10 (closed session).

[6074] The Appeals Chamber notes that: (i) Witness QJ consistently testified that he went to the Butare Prefecture Office on two occasions, and, when read in context, his assertion that he "often went to the [prefectoral office] in the evenings" merely reflects that on the two occasions that he went there, it was in the evening (see Witness QJ, T. 8 November 2001 p. 137 (closed session); T. 12 November 2001 p. 12); (ii) when Witness QJ's testimony is read in context, it is apparent that his statement that Nsabimana "took that itinerary; he went through all the roadblocks that [Witness QJ] mentioned" was based on Witness QJ's supposition that, at the time, Nsabimana would have had to pass through certain roadblocks, 2620. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Kanyabashi's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QJ's evidence was detailed and consistent.

(iii) Corroboration

2621. When assessing Witness QJ's evidence of Kanyabashi making a megaphone announcement in May 1994, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness TK's testimony that, while hiding in a convent in Butare at the end of May 1994, she heard a vehicle drive past broadcasting an announcement through a megaphone that the Ngoma bourgmestre wished to inform the population that the enemy was still among them and that they had to find the enemy.[6075] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness TK could not identify the person delivering the announcement except that the voice she heard was not Kanyabashi's.[6076] It further concluded that Witnesses QJ and TK were "not testifying about one and the same announcement [made] by Kanyabashi in mid-May 1994."[6077] Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber considered that "various details" of Witness TK's evidence, "such as the manner in which the announcements were made and the content of the announcements" corroborated Witness QJ's testimony.[6078]

2622. Kanyabashi argues that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness TK corroborated Witness QJ's evidence, as the two witnesses testified about different incidents, and Witness TK, unlike Witness QJ, did not identify Kanyabashi as the person making the announcement.[6079] In addition, Kanyabashi contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to examine sufficiently whether Witnesses QJ and TK, in light of their relationship and continuous closeness after the genocide, had inadvertently influenced each other's evidence.[6080] in addition to the Hotel Faucon roadblock, based on the route available, as opposed to being an assertion that he had seen Nsabimana passing through those roadblocks, which is consistent with Witness QJ's testimony that he only saw Nsabimana at the Hotel Faucon roadblock (see Witness QJ, T. 8 November 2001 pp. 142, 143 (closed session), T. 13 November 2001 pp. 107, 108 (closed session)); and (iii) Witness QJ originally testified that he could see everything that happened during the attack against Tutsis hiding in the Hotel Faucon from his hiding place (see Witness QJ, T. 13 November 2001 p. 58), but subsequently clarified that he could not "see" the backyard but could "hear" what was occurring (see Witness QJ, T. 14 November 2001 pp. 47-49, 54, 55 (closed session)).

[6080] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, paras. 301-304.

2623. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that the testimony of Witness QJ was corroborated by Witness TK's evidence after expressly considering their ties.[6081]

2624. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber recognised that Witness TK did not testify about the megaphone announcement in May 1994 that Witness QJ testified about.[6082] However, it noted that her testimony corroborated Witness QJ's testimony with respect to the "manner in which the announcements were made and the content of the announcements".[6083] The Trial Chamber recalled that Witness QJ also testified "that these announcements were repeated frequently."[6084] Although Witness TK was not testifying about the same event as Witness QJ, on which Kanyabashi's criminal liability is based, it is clear that the Trial Chamber found that Witness TK's testimony provided circumstantial corroboration for that event.[6085] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, sees no error in the Trial Chamber's approach.[6086]

2626. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, finds that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness TK's evidence partly corroborated Witness QJ's testimony.

(iv) Reversal of Burden of Proof

2627. The Trial Chamber did not find credible Defence evidence that Witnesses QJ and TK did not hear the megaphone messages or that Kanyabashi was not implicated in the megaphone

[6086] The Appeals Chamber recalls that two prima facie credible testimonies corroborate one another when one testimony is compatible with the other regarding the same fact or a sequence of linked facts. See Nizeyimana Appeal Judgement, para. 96; Gatete Appeal Judgement, para. 125; Kanyarukiga Appeal Judgement, paras. 177, 220; Ntawukulilyayo Appeal Judgement, para. 121; Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 428.

announcements.[6088] In particular, it did not accept Witness AND-17's evidence that Witness QJ could not have heard the megaphone announcements, noting that Witness AND-17 was not continuously with Witness QJ and had made several implausible statements under oath.[6089] The Trial Chamber also disregarded Witnesses D-2-YYYY's and D-2-17-I's testimonies as they were not continuously at the location in May 1994 from which Witness TK allegedly heard the inciting remarks.[6090] Finally, it found the testimonies of Witnesses D-2-17-I, D-2-YYYY, D-2-5-I, D-2-14-W, D-2-13-O, D-13-D that they never heard Kanyabashi making a megaphone announcement from a moving vehicle to be of a limited weight, noting that none of these witnesses was continuously in Butare and that some of them had close personal or professional ties with Kanyabashi.[6091]

2628. Kanyabashi argues that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof by requiring the Defence to present evidence demonstrating that its witnesses were permanently present at the same locations and on the same dates as Witnesses QJ and TK in order to counter their testimonies.[6092] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that Witness AND-17's evidence did not raise doubt in Witness QJ's testimony, as the former, although not "attached" to Witness QJ, was continuously present – "night and day" – on the same premises as Witness QJ from April to June 1994.[6093] In the same vein, Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that, because Witness D-2-17-I was not continually at the location in May 1994 from which Witness TK allegedly heard inciting statements, his evidence could not raise reasonable doubt in Witness TK's testimony.[6094] In this regard, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness D-2-17-I was absent from the convent on four occasions during the relevant period as opposed to two and suggests that the witness was, in fact, present on the relevant day.[6095] Kanyabashi also submits that the Trial Chamber required him to prove that Witness D-2-14-W was continuously present in Butare Town and contends that its finding that he left it is speculative as the witness only testified to having left his cellule.[6096]

2629. Kanyabashi further contends that, in light of the public nature of the incitement testified to by Witnesses QJ and TK, "[e]verybody must have heard it" and, consequently, Defence evidence that such incitement did not occur necessarily raised a reasonable doubt.[6097] He argues that the fact that approximately 30 other Prosecution witnesses, who were in Butare Town, were not questioned about this incident should have led a reasonable trier of fact to have reasonable doubt that it occurred.[6098]

[6093] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 262.
[6094] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 260. Kanyabashi also contends that, while the Trial Chamber found that Witness D-2-17-I was vague about his movements, he was prevented from questioning him in this regard. See idem, referring to Witness D-2-17-I, T. 27 February 2008 pp. 22, 26, 27, 31.

2630. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not shift the burden of proof but correctly exercised its discretion in finding that the evidence of Witnesses AND-17, D-2-17-I, and D-2-14-W did not raise a reasonable doubt with respect to the Prosecution case.[6099] It further responds that Kanyabashi's argument resting on the public nature of the incitement is unsupported.[6100]

2631. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's acceptance of the Prosecution evidence that incitement occurred over Defence evidence that it did not does not demonstrate the imposition of an improper evidentiary burden on the Defence to prove a case rather than raise reasonable doubt. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trial chamber to decide which version it considers more credible.[6101]

2632. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Kanyabashi's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness AND-17's evidence. The Trial Chamber rejected Witness AND-17's assertion that he was continuously with Witness QJ during the relevant period as a detailed assessment of Witness AND-17's testimony belied this statement.[6102] Beyond identifying inconsistencies in his testimony, the Trial Chamber further found Witness AND-17's evidence "to be neither credible, nor reliable" based on several other "implausible statements under oath."[6103] Kanyabashi does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's recounting of Witness AND-17's evidence nor does he demonstrate that the Trial Chamber applied an incorrect burden when assessing it.

Witness TK was hiding when she heard the megaphone announcement in May 1994.[6104] In this regard, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness D-2-17-I testified that he left the location on four occasions.[6105] The Appeals Chamber observes, however, that Witness D-2-17-I testified that he only left twice in May 1994.[6106] Nonetheless, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that this error occasioned a miscarriage of justice. Kanyabashi's assertion that Witness D-2-17-I's evidence reflects that he would have been with Witness TK on the day she heard inciting remarks is not substantiated.[6107]

2634. With respect to Witness D-2-14-W, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered that Kanyabashi did not establish that the witness was continuously present in Butare Town throughout late May 1994.[6108] While Kanyabashi argues that the witness's evidence only reflects that he left his cellule, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how any error in this regard has occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[6109] Notably, the witness's evidence reflects that he did not reside in the centre of Butare Town but about two kilometres away.[6110] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi does not show that the witness would have necessarily been in a position to hear what Witnesses QJ and TK heard. Moreover, as found below, the Trial Chamber also considered Witness D-2-14-W's interest in defending Kanyabashi due to their relationship.[6111] Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof when assessing this witness's evidence.

2635. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds speculative Kanyabashi's contention that, because of the public nature of the incitement, Defence evidence that it did not occur and the fact that other Prosecution witnesses in Butare Town were not questioned about it must have raised doubt.

2636. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's contention that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof when assessing the late May 1994 megaphone announcement.

(v) Relationships with Witnesses

2637. In assessing Defence evidence in relation to the megaphone announcement in late May 1994, the Trial Chamber stated that:

> [F]ive of these eight Defence witnesses were closely connected to Kanyabashi in 1994, and as such, may have had an interest in defending him. Witnesses D-2-5-I, D-2-YYYY and D-2-14-W had close professional ties to Kanyabashi, and Witnesses D-13-D and D-2-13-O testified to close personal ties with Kanyabashi.[6112]

2638. Kanyabashi argues that none of the Defence witnesses had ties with him that would support the Trial Chamber's conclusion that they would falsely testify on his behalf.[6113] He contends that the Trial Chamber unreasonably rejected the testimonies of Witnesses D-2-5-I, D-2-YYYY, and D-2-14-W because of close professional ties.[6114] He further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in asserting that he had close personal ties with Witnesses D-2-13-O and D-13-D, as the former simply lived on the same hill as him and the latter was merely a neighbour and not a friend.[6115]

2639. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly assessed the ties between Kanyabashi and his Defence witnesses and argues that he attempts to substitute his assessment of the evidence for that of the Trial Chamber.[6116]

2641. The Appeals Chamber further notes that, in finding that Witnesses D-2-5-I and D-2-YYYY had "close professional ties to Kanyabashi",[6119] the Trial Chamber relied on their evidence that they worked closely with Kanyabashi when employed as policemen in Ngoma Commune and that Witness D-2-YYYY had been employed in that capacity under Kanyabashi's supervision for several years.[6120] In reaching the same conclusion with respect to Witness D-2-14-W, the Trial

Chamber relied on the witness's evidence that his employment was linked closely to a project that Kanyabashi was involved in funding.[6121] Kanyabashi does not show any error in the Trial Chamber's evaluation of these ties when considering the credibility of Witnesses D-2-5-I, D-2-YYYY, and D-2-14-W.

2642. As regards the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witnesses D-2-13-O and D-13-D "testified to close personal ties with Kanyabashi",[6122] the Appeals Chamber notes that the evidence cited by the Trial Chamber supports its conclusion concerning Witness D-2-13-O.[6123] By contrast, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness D-13-D's testimony relied upon by the Trial Chamber reflects that, while the witness lived in the vicinity of Kanyabashi, he stated that Kanyabashi was not a "personal friend".[6124] The Trial Chamber also appears to have disregarded additional evidence of Witness D-13-D distancing his family from Kanyabashi's.[6125] The Appeals Chamber considers that, based on the evidence cited, no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness D-13-D had close personal ties with Kanyabashi. However, it finds that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice as the Trial Chamber's assessment in any event reveals that it considered Witness D-13-D's evidence to be of low probative value with respect to the late May 1994 megaphone announcement.[6126]

2643. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated any error in the assessment of his ties with Defence witnesses that would warrant the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.

(vi) Conclusion

2644. The Appeals Chamber has rejected the vast majority of Kanyabashi's allegations of error with respect to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence concerning the late May 1994 megaphone announcement, including, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, that Witness TK's evidence corroborated Witness QJ's evidence concerning the May 1994 megaphone announcement. The Appeals Chamber has, however, determined that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence established that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of a modus operandi by which messages from Kanyabashi were delivered to the population of Ngoma

Commune from April through June 1994.[6127] The Appeals Chamber will now determine whether this error has occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

2645. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QJ's evidence to reach its factual conclusion with respect to the late May 1994 megaphone announcement in the following terms:

> Insofar as Witness QJ's account was also corroborated and complemented by evidence establishing a pattern of préfecture announcements being disseminated from a vehicle with a public address system, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that around late May 1994 Kanyabashi drove through Butare town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[6128]

2646. Kanyabashi argues that this statement reflects the unambiguous conclusion that Witness QJ's evidence would not have been relied upon but for the existence of the modus operandi as corroboration.[6129]

2647. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber could have relied on the testimony of Witness QJ with or without corroboration.[6130]

2648. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, finds Witness TK's evidence alone, which the Trial Chamber found credible and corroborative of Witness QJ's testimony, sufficient to sustain the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QJ's direct evidence that around late May 1994 Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has rejected, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, Kanyabashi's allegation of error with respect to the Trial Chamber's assessment that Witness TK's evidence corroborated Witness QJ's evidence concerning the May 1994 megaphone announcement. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, notes that the Trial Chamber relied upon Witness TK's evidence that she overheard a vehicle drive past and a megaphone broadcasting an announcement delivered on behalf of the bourgmestre of Ngoma Commune in May 1994.[6131] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, is satisfied that this evidence is sufficiently complementary and corroborative of Witness QJ's evidence of "announcements being disseminated from a vehicle with a public address system".[6132] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, finds that the Trial Chamber's error in finding and relying on the existence of a modus operandi has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

2649. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, concludes that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred, on the basis of Witness QJ's evidence, in finding that, around late May 1994, Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.

(e) Mid-June 1994 Megaphone Announcement

2650. With respect to the allegation that Kanyabashi made inciting statements through a megaphone in June 1994, the Trial Chamber recalled Witness QI's evidence that, in mid-June 1994 while hiding above a bread oven at his employer's house, he saw Kanyabashi exit his white Peugeot 305 with a hand-held megaphone and announce that the Bourgmestre of Ngoma Commune wanted the population to come early in the morning to clear the bushes along the road so the "Inkotanyi" would not find anywhere to hide.[6133] It further recalled that Witness QI testified that "Kanyabashi said they should flush out people hiding in the bushes, and everybody found in those bushes should die, including children, old men and women."[6134] The Trial Chamber found Witness QI's testimony "credible, reliable and convincing" and relied on it to find that, around mid-June 1994, Kanyabashi used a megaphone to disseminate inciting statements to commit genocide.[6135]

2651. Kanyabashi argues that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing Witness QI's identification evidence; (ii) evaluating the witness's credibility; and (iii) reversing the burden of proof.[6136] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

(i) Identification

2652. The Trial Chamber considered Witness QI's prior knowledge of Kanyabashi, the conditions in which the witness observed Kanyabashi, and Defence evidence that was presented as challenging the reliability of this identification.[6137] It concluded that, "notwithstanding the conditions in which Witness QI found himself at the time of observing Kanyabashi's megaphone announcement, and taking into account not only the content of the announcement, but also that Witness QI was already familiar with Kanyabashi, […] Witness QI's identification of Kanyabashi on that day in June 1994 [was] reliable."[6138]

2653. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QI's identification evidence.[6139] He argues that evidence recalled in the Trial Judgement demonstrates that the identification was unreliable or lacked credibility and contends that Witness QI had vision problems.[6140]

2654. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly assessed Witness QI's identification evidence.[6141]

2655. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in support of his argument, Kanyabashi simply lists paragraphs of the Trial Judgement or evidence considered by the Trial Chamber. His contentions merely reflect disagreement with the Trial Chamber's analysis without demonstrating how the Trial Chamber's detailed consideration of Witness QI's ability to identify Kanyabashi was unreasonable.

2656. Kanyabashi's argument that Witness QI had vision problems is likewise without merit. In support of this contention, Kanyabashi refers to a passage of Witness QI's examination-in-chief during which he could not recognise a picture on the screen.[6142] However, the fact that Witness QI may have had vision problems while testifying 10 years after having observed the events does not undermine the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's reliance on his evidence.

2657. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's contention regarding Witness QI's identification evidence.

(ii) Credibility

2658. Kanyabashi argues that Witness QI's credibility is questionable given that, while he could approximate the date and time of the event when testifying in 2004, he was unable to do so when giving his statement to Tribunal investigators in 1999.[6143] He also submits that the Trial Chamber did not consider Witness QI's evidence in light of his former employer's ties with Kanyabashi.[6144]

[6144] Kanyabashi Appeal Brief, para. 330. In this regard, Kanyabashi highlights that, despite the fact that Witness QI was hiding in his former employer's house, he testified that he never discussed the megaphone announcements with him or his wife. See idem, referring to Witness QI, T. 25 March 2004 pp. 9, 10 (closed session).

In this regard, Kanyabashi contends that it is unreasonable to believe Witness QI's evidence that he made inciting remarks precisely in front of the house of Witness QI's former employer since, at the relevant time, he – Kanyabashi – was hiding this person's son.[6145]

2659. Kanyabashi also raises general challenges to the witness's credibility, emphasising that Judge Ramaroson found that Witness QI was not a credible witness when assessing the events at Matyazo Clinic.[6146] He also points to Witness QI's testimony that he was not "psychologically" well and argues that the witness's evidence reflected that he "clearly wanted to incriminate Kanyabashi".[6147] He further submits that material aspects of Witness QI's evidence, through cross-examination, turned out to be hearsay or inexact.[6148]

2660. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber considered the inconsistencies between Witness QI's evidence and his previous statements and that it was in its discretion to conclude that he was credible.[6149] It submits that Kanyabashi's arguments concerning Witness QI's former employer are unsupported and speculative.[6150] The Prosecution further contends that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to accept Witness QI's evidence after having examined the conditions under which he testified.[6151]

2661. The Appeals Chamber notes that, with regard to the inconsistencies between Witness QI's prior statements and testimony, Witness QI's prior statement reflects that he did not remember the date of the events.[6152] While testifying in 2004, the witness stated that the megaphone announcement he witnessed occurred in June at about 2.00 p.m.[6153] The Trial Chamber addressed this issue in the Trial Judgement and accepted the witness's explanation that, at the time he gave his statement, he forgot the precise date of the incident and that he was not "psychologically well".[6154] Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted the witness's explanation for the variance.

2662. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi does not show that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently Witness QI's evidence in light of his former employer's ties with Kanyabashi. His contention that he would not have made inciting remarks in front of Witness QI's former employer's home because he was hiding that individual's son does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QI's evidence to the contrary.

2663. With respect to Kanyabashi's general contentions concerning Witness QI's credibility, he does not show that, because Judge Ramaroson found Witness QI lacking credibility with respect to the events at Matyazo Clinic, a reasonable trier of fact could not have found that his evidence concerning the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement was credible, reliable, and convincing.[6155] Furthermore, while excerpts of Witness QI's evidence reflect the significant emotional impact that recalling the genocide had on the witness,[6156] Kanyabashi does not demonstrate that this would have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from relying on Witness QI's evidence nor does he show that the witness's evidence reflected that he sought to incriminate Kanyabashi in a manner that would raise questions about his credibility.[6157] As regards Kanyabashi's contention that shifts in Witness QI's evidence during cross-examination further undermine his credibility, the Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi only points to clarifications made by the witness, without demonstrating that these clarifications would have led a reasonable trier of fact to reject his testimony.[6158]

2664. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QI's credibility.

(iii) Reversal of Burden of Proof

2665. Kanyabashi repeats his argument that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof by requiring the Defence to present evidence demonstrating that his witnesses were "permanently" present at the same locations and on the same dates as Witness QI in order to counter his evidence.[6159] He also contends that, in light of the incitement testified to by Witness QI, "[e]verybody must have heard it" and argues that, although approximately 30 other Prosecution witnesses were in Butare Town, the fact that they were not questioned about this incident

[6155] The Appeals Chamber observes that, in her dissenting opinion, Judge Ramaroson concluded that "[a]ll these inconsistencies are serious and major discrepancies which lead me to conclude that Witnesses QI and RL are not credible witnesses." See The Prosecutor v. Pauline Nyiramasuhuko et al., Case No. ICTR-98-42-T, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Arlette Ramaroson, dated 24 June 2011, signed 18 July 2011, filed 19 July 2011 (originally filed in French, English translation filed on 21 May 2014) ("Judge Ramaroson Dissenting Opinion"), para. 30. However, as her opinion is confined to the Trial Chamber's conclusions relating to the Matyazo Clinic and because she joined the majority in relying on Witness QI as it relates to mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement, this statement can only reasonably be interpreted to concern Witness QI's evidence concerning the Matyazo Clinic.
[6156] See Witness QI, T. 24 March 2004 p. 61 ("It's when I start to remember the events of that time, I feel disturbed. Sometimes I'm even incapable of speaking. necessarily raises reasonable doubt that it occurred.[6160] In this regard, he notes that although Witness TG was in the same compound as Witness QI, the former was not questioned about this issue.[6161]

2666. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber applied the correct burden of proof and reasonably assessed the evidence on the record.[6162] The Prosecution further contends that it was not obliged to question other Prosecution witnesses about this incident.[6163]

2668. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's contention that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof when assessing Defence evidence concerning the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement.

(iv) Conclusion

2669. Based on the foregoing analysis, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence concerning the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls its previous determination that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence established that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of a modus operandi by which messages from Kanyabashi were delivered to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994.[6164]

2670. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QI's evidence to reach its conclusion with respect to the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement in the following terms:

> the Chamber considers Witness QI's testimony on Kanyabashi's megaphone announcement in mid-June 1994 to be credible, reliable and convincing. His testimony is also supported by evidence cited above which establishes that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle > were part of the modus operandi by which messages from the bourgmestre were disseminated to the population of Ngoma commune.[6165]

2671. Kanyabashi argues that, in view of the importance of the modus operandi finding in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QI's testimony about the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement, the error should result in the overturning of his conviction on this basis.[6166]

2672. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber could have relied on the testimony of Witness QI with or without corroboration.[6167]

2673. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, rejects Kanyabashi's contention and finds that the Trial Chamber's error in finding the existence of a modus operandi did not result in a miscarriage of justice. The language in the Trial Judgement cited above reflects that Witness QI's evidence alone was sufficient to support the Trial Chamber's conclusions as to the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, dismisses Kanyabashi's contentions related to this event.

(f) Killings

2674. The Trial Chamber, based on the evidence of Witnesses QJ, TK, and QI, determined that, "following Kanyabashi's megaphone announcements in mid-May 1994 and in June 1994, searches were conducted for Tutsis and consequently more Tutsis were killed."[6168]

2675. Kanyabashi argues that the evidence does not support the conclusion that killings resulted from the megaphone communications.[6169] He contends that the error is relevant to the Trial Chamber's determination of his sentence.[6170]

2676. The Prosecution responds that direct and public incitement to commit genocide is an inchoate crime and, thus, does not require demonstration that Kanyabashi's megaphone announcements resulted in any subsequent killings.[6171]

2677. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide is an inchoate crime, punishable even if no act of genocide has resulted therefrom.[6172] Notably, the Trial Chamber did not convict Kanyabashi of genocide on the basis of ensuing killings, finding that there was insufficient evidence to establish that Kanyabashi's conduct contributed to them.[6173]

2678. Notwithstanding this finding, the Trial Chamber concluded that "the fact that after both megaphone announcements searches were conducted and more Tutsis were killed" constituted further evidence that the public understood that the "enemy" and "Inkotanyi" referred to in Kanyabashi's speeches were Tutsis and that they were to be killed.[6174] The Appeals Chamber recalls that in determining whether a speech constitutes a direct and public incitement to commit genocide, it may be helpful to examine how the speech was understood by its intended audience in order to determine its true message.[6175] The Trial Chamber's analysis reveals that this was the assessment the Trial Chamber undertook.

2679. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi's challenge fails to appreciate that the Trial Chamber's conclusion concerning the public understanding of the words that he used in his megaphone announcements was primarily based on the evidence of Witnesses QJ and QI as well as Expert Witness Ntakirutimana who testified that the term "enemy" or "Inkotanyi" meant Tutsis.[6176]

2680. Furthermore, and contrary to Kanyabashi's contentions, the Trial Chamber's sentencing deliberations reveal that, while it considered the number of victims resulting from the attacks at the Matyazo Clinic and Kabakobwa Hill, it did not consider killings resulting from the megaphone announcements in determining his sentence.[6177] Consequently, Kanyabashi fails to identify an error that would invalidate his sentence or have occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

2681. As a result, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's contentions regarding the ensuing killings without further consideration.

(g) Conclusion

2682. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence concerning the late May and mid-June 1994 megaphone announcements that occasioned a miscarriage of justice and warrants the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.

2. Criminal Responsibility

2683. In the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber determined that the term "enemy" as heard by Witness QJ in the late May 1994 megaphone announcement was a reference to Tutsis in general.[6178] It similarly accepted Witness QI's interpretation of Kanyabashi's mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement that his use of the expression "Inkotanyi" was a reference to "Tutsis hiding in the bushes".[6179] In both instances, the Trial Chamber considered interpretations of the words "enemy" and "Inkotanyi" given by Prosecution Expert Witness Évariste Ntakirutimana that supported this conclusion.[6180]

2684. In the "Legal Findings" Section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled the following:

> Around late May 1994 Kanyabashi drove through Butare town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them. Further, around mid-June 1994 Kanyabashi used a megaphone to tell the population to clear bushes along the road in order to remove potential hiding places for the Inkotanyi, to flush out people who were hiding in the bushes, and to kill those found there, including children, old men and women. After both of Kanyabashi's announcements in mid-May and June 1994 searches were conducted for Tutsis, and consequently, more Tutsis were killed […].
> The Chamber recalls that after hearing Kanyabashi's announcements by megaphone in May and June 1994, the public understood that the "enemy" and "Inkotanyi" were Tutsis and they were to be killed, as further evidenced by the fact that after both megaphone announcements searches were conducted and more Tutsis were killed.[…]
> The Chamber also considers Kanyabashi's spoken words encouraging the population to search for the "enemy" and "clear bushes", being references to killing Tutsis, evidences Kanyabashi had the requisite intent to destroy, in whole or in part, the Tutsi ethnic group.[6181]

2685. Kanyabashi submits that Witness QJ's evidence is too ambiguous to support as the only reasonable conclusion that the term "enemy" meant Tutsis and, consequently, that he possessed genocidal intent.[6182] In support of his contention, he asserts that this term was used in late May 1994 during the RPF advance and reasonably could have been a reference to these combatants.[6183] During the appeals hearing, Kanyabashi further pointed to Witness QJ's evidence reflecting that "no one was going through the roadblocks" when this announcement was made as well as evidence which, in his view, suggests that Kanyabashi was only speaking to the persons manning the roadblock rather than the public in general.[6184] Kanyabashi argued that, based on the evidence, it could not be concluded that his statements satisfied the public element of the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[6185]

2686. Kanyabashi also contends that the evidence of Witness QI is insufficient to establish that Kanyabashi incited the population to clear the bushes with the intention to kill Tutsis.[6186] He argues that the limited number of crimes that followed the megaphone announcements belies the conclusion that his statements constituted direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[6187] Finally, Kanyabashi appears to argue that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Expert Witness Ntakirutimana's evidence when it refused to hear his own Defence expert evidence in rebuttal.[6188]

2687. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly interpreted the evidence and concluded that Kanyabashi's statements amounted to direct and public incitement to commit genocide and that Kanyabashi fails to substantiate his interpretations to the contrary.[6189] It argues that the Trial Chamber reasonably found that Kanyabashi's incitement by megaphone was of a public nature by virtue of the fact it was made through a public-address system.[6190] The Prosecution also contends that Kanyabashi's contentions concerning the absence of killings is irrelevant as this crime is an inchoate offence.[6191]

2688. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Kanyabashi's argument that Witness QJ's evidence was too ambiguous to support as the only reasonable conclusion that the term "enemy" used in the late May 1994 megaphone announcement was a reference to Tutsis in general.[6192] The Trial Chamber considered that the witness's interpretation that the reference to the "enemy" included Tutsis was supported by the evidence of Expert Witness Ntakirutimana, Defence Expert Witness Eugène Shimamungu, and a prior finding of the Trial Chamber – based on an extensive review of evidence – which reflected that, at the time, words such as "enemy" were used to refer to Tutsis.[6193]

2689. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi's contention that Witness QJ's evidence shows that Kanyabashi only intended to address persons manning the roadblock and that there was no public audience when he made the allegedly inciting statement reflects a fragmented reading of the record and the Trial Chamber's findings. The Trial Chamber conclusions, which are reasonably supported by Witness QJ's testimony, are that Kanyabashi was addressing the "population", that he was using a megaphone, and that he drove through town making the announcement.[6194] Kanyabashi's reliance on an incomplete understanding of the record and the Trial Chamber's conclusions fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the announcement as described by Witness QJ was "public".[6195]

2690. Likewise, Kanyabashi fails to show that Witness QI's evidence was insufficient to establish that Kanyabashi incited the population to clear the bushes with the intention to kill Tutsis.[6196] The Trial Chamber assessed the meaning of the term "Inkotanyi" based on Witness QI's testimony and that of Expert Witness Ntakirutimana.[6197] Kanyabashi does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of their evidence in this regard. Furthermore, Witness QI testified, inter alia, that the instruction to clear the bushes so that the Inkotanyi would not find anywhere to hide was accompanied by an additional instruction to "flush out people hiding in the bushes, and everybody found in those bushes should die, including children, old men and women."[6198]

[6193] See Trial Judgement, para. 3814, referring to ibid., Section 3.4.12.2. See also ibid., paras. 573-578. The Appeals Chamber notes that Kanyabashi provides additional citations in support of his contention in his reply brief. See Kanyabashi Reply Brief, para. 132, referring to Exhibit D574 (Kambanda's speech of 15 May 1994), pp. 2-4, 11-13, 18, 22, 23, 27, Witness D-2-5-W, T. 4 October 2007 p. 17 (closed session), Filip Reyntjens, T. 21 November 2007 pp. 47, 66, 67. Recalling that reply briefs shall be limited to arguments in reply to the response brief, and noting that the Prosecution did not have the opportunity to respond to Kanyabashi's argument in this respect, the Appeals Chamber will not consider these additional references. In any event, the Appeals Chamber observes that Kanyabashi merely refers to abstracted excerpts of evidence, most of which was considered and relied upon by the Trial Chamber in reaching its conclusions elsewhere in the Trial Judgement that "enemy" was used to refer to Tutsis. See Trial Judgement, paras. 574-578, 583, 867-890, 5555-5558, 5563-5565. The Trial Chamber did not consider the evidence of Witness D-2-5-W in this respect; however, Kanyabashi merely refers to a portion of his testimony in which he states that at a meeting he attended with Kanyabashi, someone referred to the enemy as "anyone supporting the RPF or anyone working for the RPF". See Witness D-2-5-W, T. 4 October 2007 p. 17 (closed session).

[6195] See Trial Judgement, para. 6011. In light of this conclusion, Kanyabashi's reliance on paragraphs 53-60 of the Ngirabatware Appeal Judgement is misplaced. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi's references to the Presiding Judge's summary of Witness QJ's evidence, as confirmed by the Prosecution, is not a reflection of the evidence on the record but how a limited number of individuals might have understood it at the time. See Witness QJ, T. 15 November 2001 pp. 45, 46. This, however, does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's ultimate evaluation of Witness QJ's testimony.

The Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that these remarks allowed for a reasonable inference other than reflecting the intention of those following the instructions to kill Tutsis.

2691. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber has already considered and rejected Kanyabashi's contentions concerning the relevance of the Trial Chamber's determination as it relates to killings that followed the megaphone announcement.[6199] The Appeals Chamber finds that, in the circumstances of this case, the same rationale applies in this instance.

2692. Finally, Kanyabashi appears to simply disagree with the Trial Chamber's decision rejecting his motion to replace one Defence expert witness with another without demonstrating how it erred in reaching this conclusion.[6200]

2693. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him for direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

3. Conclusion

2694. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for directly and publicly inciting the commission of genocide by making megaphone announcements in Butare Town in late May and mid-June 1994 and dismisses Grounds 3.2 through 3.8 of Kanyabashi's appeal.

IX. APPEAL OF ÉLIE NDAYAMBAJE

2695. The Trial Chamber found Ndayambaje guilty of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for inciting a crowd outside Mugombwa Church to kill the Tutsis who were taking refuge in the church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and based on a speech he made at his swearing-in ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 22 June 1994.[6201] The Trial Chamber also found Ndayambaje guilty of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsis at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994; and (ii) instigating the killings of Tutsi women and girls abducted from Mugombwa Sector on the basis of his words at the statue of the Virgin Mary ("Virgin Mary Statue") after his swearing-in ceremony of 22 June 1994.[6202]

2696. Ndayambaje raises challenges to his indictment and submits that the Trial Chamber showed bias in the assessment of the evidence. He also challenges the Trial Chamber's findings regarding his alibi and contends that the Trial Chamber erred in not conducting site visits. Ndayambaje further challenges the Trial Chamber's findings concerning his responsibility in relation to the incidents at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994, the killings perpetrated at Kabuye Hill on 22, 23, and 24 April 1994, his swearing-in ceremony held on 22 June 1994, and the abduction of Tutsi women and girls after his swearing-in ceremony. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

A. Indictment (Grounds 1 to 6)

2697. Ndayambaje submits that he was not charged with the criminal conduct on the basis of which he was convicted or lacked notice thereof, and that he was materially prejudiced in the preparation of his defence.[6203] He also contends that the "immeasurable accumulation of events not pleaded in the Indictment has caused [him] irreparable prejudice."[6204] Ndayambaje requests that the Appeals Chamber overturn all his convictions.[6205]

2698. The Appeals Chamber will examine Ndayambaje's submissions related to notice of the allegations pertaining to the incidents at Mugombwa Church, before turning to his submissions related to notice of the allegations concerning Kabuye Hill, his swearing-in ceremony, and the abduction of Tutsi women and girls.[6206]

1. Mugombwa Church (Grounds 1, 2, and 6 in part)

2699. Based primarily on the evidence of Prosecution Witness QAR,[6207] the Trial Chamber found that, by his presence at Mugombwa Church, Muganza Commune, Butare Prefecture, on 20 and 21 April 1994 and given his "considerable moral authority", Ndayambaje encouraged the attacks on the Tutsis taking refuge inside the church that took place on these two days, resulting in the deaths of hundreds, if not thousands, of Tutsis.[6208] The Trial Chamber also determined that, on 20 April 1994, Ndayambaje spoke to a group of armed people posted outside the church and told them that their work would no longer be very difficult since the refugees were all gathered together

[6203] Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 5-9, 14-65; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 7-138. To facilitate legibility, the Appeals Chamber will use the term "Indictment" in the body text of the present section when referring to the Ndayambaje Indictment.
[6204] Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 17. See also Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 22, 134, 137.

[6206] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in deferring until deliberations its decision on objections relating to the exclusion of evidence of facts that were not pleaded in the Ndayambaje Indictment. He argues that, as a result, he was only notified of the charges against him during the delivery of the Trial Judgement. He contends that, in doing so, the Trial Chamber deprived him of his right to be clearly informed of the charges against him in order to prepare his defence. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 18. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 53. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that the practice of trial chambers in the exercise of their discretion to postpone consideration of Defence objections to the admission of testimonial evidence on the ground of lack of notice to the phase of their final deliberations on the case is a cause of concern. As held above, leaving the issue of whether facts could be relied upon as a potential basis for liability unresolved until the end of the trial creates uncertainty, which can be a source of potential prejudice to the Defence. See supra, para. 1280. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that, as any matter related to the conduct of the proceedings before a trial chamber, the timing of the ruling on the motions before it, in the absence of any specific provision, is a matter within the discretion of the trial chamber. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, in order to successfully challenge a discretionary decision, a party must demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error resulting in prejudice to that party. See supra, para. 138. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje's general contention of error as developed in his appeal brief fails to demonstrate that he was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's decision to postpone consideration of a number of his objections.

inside the church and that some of them should stay and watch the people in the church while others should search for those hiding in ditches and bushes.[6209] It further determined that the next morning, Ndayambaje again addressed the crowd outside the church, stating that "he could see they were interested in the Tutsis' cows and asking them what they would pay if the Tutsi owners of the cattle escaped."[6210] The Trial Chamber found that Ndayambaje's public addresses at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 directly and publicly incited the commission of genocide.[6211]

2700. On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Count 4) as well as aiding and abetting genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 7, respectively), and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common of the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 9) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[6212]

2701. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ndayambaje with respect to these allegations, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[6213] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraph 6.37 were being pursued under, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute and under Count 4 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[6214]

2702. Prior to examining the relevant evidence, the Trial Chamber noted that the location and dates of the massacre at Mugombwa Church were not specified in the Indictment and that Ndayambaje's role therein was not sufficiently pleaded.[6215] It found that the Indictment was therefore defective in this regard.[6216] However, the Trial Chamber determined that the defect was cured and that the Prosecution gave Ndayambaje timely, clear, and consistent notice that he was "accused of participating in, including through giving orders, and supervising the massacre at Mugombwa Church, Muganza commune, along with other c*ommune* authorities in late April 1994."[6217]

2703. Ndayambaje submits that the location and dates of the massacre perpetrated at Mugombwa Church as well as his participation therein were not pleaded in the Indictment, and that such defect was neither curable nor cured.[6218] He also argues that the Indictment failed to put him on notice that he was alleged to have aided and abetted the killings at the church and that he was charged with direct and public incitement to commit genocide based on his addresses at the church.[6219] He contends that the Trial Chamber therefore erred in convicting him in relation to the events at Mugombwa Church and that his convictions should be reversed.[6220]

(a) Location, Dates, and Participation in the Attacks

2704. As noted above, the Trial Chamber found that the location and dates of the massacre at Mugombwa Church were not specified in the Indictment and that Ndayambaje's role therein was not sufficiently pleaded.[6221] It nonetheless determined that the summary of the anticipated evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FAG, FAU, and TU appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, together with the Prosecution's opening statement, gave timely, clear, and consistent notice to Ndayambaje that he was accused of participating in, including through giving orders, and supervising the massacre at Mugombwa Church in late April 1994.[6222] It found that the defect in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment was cured and that Ndayambaje was not prejudiced in the preparation of his defence.[6223]

2705. Ndayambaje submits that the defect in the Indictment concerning the location and dates of the massacre perpetrated at Mugombwa Church as well as his participation therein was neither curable nor cured.[6224] Pointing out that the Prosecution was in possession of the relevant material facts when filing the Indictment, Ndayambaje submits that the Prosecution chose not to mention these facts in the Indictment and that, as a result, it was legitimate for him to understand that these events were not part of the Prosecution case.[6225] He contends that, by convicting him on the basis of his participation in this massacre, the Trial Chamber proceeded to a "de facto illegal expansion of the Indictment"[6226] as the allegation concerning these events constituted a separate charge which could only have been added through a formal amendment of the Indictment.[6227]

2706. Ndayambaje further submits that, since none of the summaries of the anticipated evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber were marked as relevant to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, they could not be considered as providing unambiguous information.[6228] He also asserts that: (i) Witness FAG's Summary and prior statements do not provide clear and consistent notice regarding his presence at the church on 20 and 21 April 1994;[6229] (ii) Witness FAU's prior statements are contradictory with one another and Witness FAU's Summary directly contradicts Witness FAG's Summary;[6230] (iii) Witness TU's Summary is inconsistent with Witnesses FAU's and FAG's summaries as it refers to events at Mugombwa Church on 24 April 1994;[6231] and (iv) the Prosecution's opening statement refers to massacre at the church in late April 1994 without specifying the date or his alleged criminal conduct.[6232] Ndayambaje adds that the Prosecution failed to indicate in its pre-trial brief that Witness QAR, the sole witness who testified to his presence at the church, would testify in relation to the attacks on Mugombwa Church, and that the Trial Chamber erred in admitting evidence in relation to these events.[6233]

2707. Ndayambaje submits that the lack of notice regarding the events at Mugombwa Church caused him serious prejudice as it prevented him from conducting efficient investigations and organising his defence.[6234]

Ndayambaje argues that Witness FAG did not provide clear and consistent information regarding his presence at the church as Witness FAG did not see him driving attackers to the church on 20 and 21 April 1994. In light of this, he submits that he could not understand that Witness FAG was directly implicating him in the events at Mugombwa Church. See idem.

2708. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the defective indictment was cured by post-indictment information and that Ndayambaje received sufficient notice of his participation in the Mugombwa Church attacks and suffered no prejudice since he was able to prepare a comprehensive defence.[6235]

2709. There is no dispute that the Indictment was defective in relation to the allegation concerning Ndayambaje's responsibility for the massacre at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 as there is no mention of the relevant location and dates in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment or anywhere else in the Indictment.[6236]

2710. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that the allegation of Ndayambaje's participation in the Mugombwa Church massacre did not constitute a new charge but fell within the broader allegation relating to Ndayambaje's participation in massacres of the Tutsi population in Muganza Commune from 20 April 1994 pleaded in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.

2711. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ndayambaje's argument that it was legitimate for him to interpret the Prosecution's failure to set forth the relevant material facts of this specific allegation in the Indictment as indicating that it was not part of its case. While the Prosecution should have specifically pleaded the material facts of the dates, location, and Ndayambaje's participation in the Mugombwa Church massacre in the Indictment that were in its possession prior to the filing of the Indictment,[6237] the Appeals Chamber does not consider that these omissions could have reasonably been understood as demonstrating that the Prosecution did not intend to prosecute Ndayambaje in relation to this massacre. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the fact that the Prosecution disclosed the prior statements of Witnesses QAR and TU which expressly refer to the attacks on Mugombwa Church and Ndayambaje's involvement therein

In particular, the Prosecution contends that: (i) Witnesses FAU's, FAG's, and TU's summaries were linked to the counts with which Ndayambaje was charged and it was not required to link the summaries to a specific paragraph in the Ndayambaje Indictment; and (ii) the fact that Witness QAR's evidence related to Mugombwa Church was not summarised in its pre-trial brief is irrelevant to the question of whether Ndayambaje received sufficient notice of the charge. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 1997, 2002.

Élie Ndayambaje*, Case No. ICTR-96-8-T, Letter from the Prosecution, 21 January 1997; 4 November 1998 Disclosure; The Prosecutor v. Élie Ndayambaje, Case No. ICTR-96-8-T, "Transmission of Redacted Statements in the case of The Prosecutor v Elie Ndayambaje (ICTR – 96 – 8)", 16 June 1999. The Appeals Chamber notes that the statements of Witnesses FAG and FAU concerning Ndayambaje's involvement in the Mugombwa Church massacre were either made or disclosed after the filing of the Ndayambaje Indictment on 11 August 1999.

in 1997, 1998, and 1999,[6238] prior to the filing of the Indictment, shows that these attacks formed part of the Prosecution case at the time the Indictment was issued.

2712. The Appeals Chamber therefore rejects Ndayambaje's contentions that the Trial Chamber allowed a "de facto illegal expansion of the Indictment" by convicting him in relation to this massacre and that the defect in the Indictment related to Ndayambaje's responsibility for the killings perpetrated at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 was not curable.

2713. Turning to Ndayambaje's challenge to the Trial Chamber's finding that the defect regarding the dates, location, and his general participation in the massacre was cured, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument that the summaries of the Prosecution witnesses' anticipated evidence appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief could not inform him of the allegation against him as they were not explicitly linked to any paragraph of the Indictment.[6239] The Appeals Chamber considers that it would have been preferable for the Prosecution to provide greater specificity given the vagueness of the Indictment and its pre-trial brief in this respect. However, it is satisfied that the contents of Witnesses FAG's, FAU's, and TU's summaries and the fact that they were expressly marked relevant to Ndayambaje and to Counts 1 through 9 of his Indictment – which, in turn, were linked to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment[6240] – provided clear notice to Ndayambaje that the Prosecution intended to rely on the evidence of these witnesses in support of the allegation of his participation in the massacres of the Tutsi population in Muganza Commune set forth in paragraph 6.37.

2714. With regard to Ndayambaje's allegation of inconsistencies within and between the witnesses' statements and summaries, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that Witness FAG's Summary and prior statements gave inconsistent information regarding Ndayambaje's implication in the events at Mugombwa Church. While Witness FAG's Summary and prior statements did not explicitly mention Ndayambaje's presence at Mugombwa Church during the days of the attacks, they clearly and consistently implicated him in the events there.[6241] The Appeals Chamber also

[6239] The Appeals Chamber observes that the jurisprudence Ndayambaje points to does not require that the witness's summaries appended to a Prosecution's pre-trial brief be linked to the relevant paragraphs of an indictment in order to provide timely, clear, and consistent information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge. It also notes that Rule 73*bis*(B)(iv)(c) of the Rules relied upon by Ndayambaje only states that, at the pre-trial conference, the trial chamber may order the Prosecutor to file "[t]he points in the indictment on which each witness will testify" and that, in paragraph 108 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber merely recalled the well-established jurisprudence that the summaries appended to a Prosecution's pre-trial brief may in some cases serve to put the accused on notice of the allegations against him. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 18, referring to Rule 73*bis*(B)(iv)(c) of the Rules, Trial Judgement, para. 108; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 14, 33, 34, 37, 38.

[6240] See Ndayambaje Indictment, pp. 40-45.

> FAG states that they were ordered by Venant, Kanyenzi, Bosco, the assistant bourgmestre of Muganza, and Viateur to go to Mugombwa where there was group of attackers that was brought there by Ndayambaje. FAG rejects Ndayambaje's contention that Witness FAU's prior statements are contradictory as unsubstantiated. It also finds that his argument that Witness FAU's Summary contradicts Witness FAG's Summary is without merit as the fact that Witness FAU's Summary did not refer to Ndayambaje's involvement in the same terms as Witness FAU's Summary does not render the summaries of their anticipated evidence contradictory.

2715. Furthermore, while Witness TU's Summary refers to the date of the attack on Mugombwa Church as 24 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that this discrepancy was minor and was not inconsistent with Witness FAU's Summary which referred to "April 1994" or Witness FAG's Summary which did not provide any date. Likewise, Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate any inconsistency between the date range "as from 20 April" provided in the Indictment,[6242] the dates indicated in the relevant witnesses' summaries, and the Prosecution's opening statement which referred to "the end of April".[6243] While Witnesses FAG's, FAU's, and TU's summaries and the Prosecution's opening statement did not mention the exact dates in late April 1994 or Ndayambaje's specific criminal conduct in relation to the Mugombwa Church attacks, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that these materials, read together, put Ndayambaje on notice that the Prosecution intended to hold him responsible for his participation in the killings at Mugombwa Church that occurred in late April 2014.

> states that the attackers threw grenades at the Tutsi and killed them. The attackers finished off the survivors. FAG saw Ndayambaje driving the pick-up with about twenty Burundians on board.

In relevant part, Witness FAG's 1999 Statement reads as follows:

> In April 1994, […] Ndayambaje sought assistance from Burundian refugees armed with grenades, fuel. They attacked Mugombwa where the Tutsis had sought refuge. I participated in this attack. Many of the victims of Mugombwa parish [were] buried a few days later.

In relevant part, Witness FAG's 2000 Statement reads as follows:

> In April 1994, […] KANYENZI, Venant, […] Bosco, Assistant Bourgmestre of Muganza, and VIATEUR who was then Conseiller of Mugombwa ordered the inhabitants of Bishya to go to Mugombwa. On that location, we found a group of attackers made up of the inhabitants of Mugombwa […]. Some of the attackers said that it was Elie NDAYAMBAJE who had brought them there. Grenades were thrown at Tutsis who were hiding in the cellule parish. Some of the Tutsis died on the spot.

The Appeals Chamber considers Ndayambaje's reference to Witness FAG's 1998 Statement irrelevant as it does not discuss any incident at Mugombwa Church.

[6242] Ndayambaje Indictment, para. 6.37.

Prosecution.[6244] The Appeals Chamber also finds no error in the Trial Chamber's admission of Witness QAR's evidence on the Mugombwa Church attacks as a trial chamber may admit any relevant evidence which has probative value, such as evidence which is relevant to the proof of an allegation pleaded in the indictment.[6245]

2717. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defects in the Indictment concerning the dates and location of the Mugombwa Church attacks as well as his participation therein were cured.

(b) Aiding and Abetting Responsibility

2718. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated at Mugombwa Church as this form of responsibility was not mentioned in the Indictment, the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, or the Prosecution's opening statement.[6246] He also argues that the Indictment failed to put him on notice that he was alleged to have had knowledge that his acts and omissions aided and abetted the assailants and that the assailants possessed genocidal intent.[6247]

2719. The Prosecution responds that the paragraphs in the charging section include all forms of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute and that paragraph 6.56 of the Indictment, which is of general application, specifically emphasised that Ndayambaje aided and abetted massacres.[6248] It argues that all material facts were pleaded in the Indictment and that further notice was provided in its pre-trial brief, leaving no doubt that Ndayambaje was charged "at a minimum" with aiding and abetting.[6249] The Prosecution further argues that Ndayambaje did not raise any objections at trial concerning the modes of liability or argued that he did not know that he was charged pursuant to aiding and abetting in his closing brief.[6250] It contends that Ndayambaje suffered no prejudice as he fully defended against all material facts of aiding and abetting.[6251]

[6251] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2052, 2053. See also AT. 21 April 2015 p. 37. The Prosecution points out that Ndayambaje extensively cross-examined Witness QAR on the events at Mugombwa Church, challenged the evidence

2721. The Trial Chamber did not discuss in the Trial Judgement whether Ndayambaje had received sufficient notice that he could be held responsible for aiding and abetting the Mugombwa Church massacre, concluding generally that he was put on notice that he was "accused of participating in, including through giving orders, and supervising the massacre at Mugombwa Church, Muganza commune, along with other c*ommune* authorities in late April 1994."[6253] Although Ndayambaje did not specifically object to the vagueness of paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment regarding his alleged form of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute,[6254] the Appeals Chamber considers that it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to explain why it was satisfied that Ndayambaje was put on sufficient notice that he could be held responsible for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated at Mugombwa Church.

2722. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the alleged nature of the responsibility of the accused should be stated unambiguously in the indictment and that the Prosecution should therefore indicate precisely which form of responsibility is invoked based on the facts alleged.[6255] When it is alleged that the accused planned, instigated, ordered, or aided and abetted the planning, preparation, or execution of the alleged crimes, the Prosecution is required to identify the "particular acts" or the "particular course of conduct" on the part of the accused which forms the basis for the charges in question.[6256]

2723. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution generally indicated in the charging section of the Indictment that the relevant counts were pursued pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, without specifying any particular form of responsibility. In paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, the Prosecution alleged that Ndayambaje "ordered, supervised and participated in massacres", without identifying any particular acts on the part of Ndayambaje that may characterise a responsibility for aiding and abetting. Although the Prosecution alleged in paragraph 6.56 of the Indictment, which elaborates on Ndayambaje's responsibility in broad terms, that Ndayambaje that he said "encouraging words" to the attackers, did not argue that his cross-examination was impeded in any manner, and called several witnesses to establish that he was not present at the church. It also points out that Ndayambaje questioned Witness QAR on the identity of several persons in order to ascertain whether they were at the church with her, which illustrates that Ndayambaje had time to investigate these events. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2001, 2005-2007, 2052.

"aided and abetted [his] subordinates and others in carrying out the massacres", it failed to link this paragraph to paragraph 6.37 or the allegation concerning Ndayambaje's participation in killings in Muganza Commune and the surrounding area pleaded therein, and to specify Ndayambaje's impugned conduct. In this context, the Appeals Chamber is not satisfied that the Indictment put Ndayambaje on sufficient notice of his particular acts or course of conduct which formed the basis for the charge of aiding and abetting the massacres invoked in paragraph 6.37. The Appeals Chamber stresses that the relevant question is not whether Ndayambaje was given notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting crimes, but whether he was given notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting the killings alleged in paragraph 6.37 and whether the particular acts or course of conduct on his part with respect to the killings which formed the basis of the charge against him were identified.

2724. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Indictment was defective in relation to the allegation that Ndayambaje aided and abetted the massacres in which he was alleged to have participated in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.

2725. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Ndayambaje on this basis as it considers that the ambiguity of the Indictment was remedied by the information provided by the Prosecution in its pre-trial brief. Specifically, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Indictment read in conjunction with Witnesses FAG's, FAU's, and TU's summaries gave notice to Ndayambaje that he was alleged to have contributed to the Mugombwa Church massacre through, inter alia, his presence at the church during the days of the attacks and his influence and moral authority over the assailants.[6257] Ndayambaje's alleged knowledge of his contribution to the massacre and of the assailants' genocidal intent was also abundantly clear from these materials.[6258] While the information provided through the summaries also indicated that Ndayambaje transported attackers and grenades to the church, supervised the massacre and issued instructions, this was not inconsistent with the fact that Ndayambaje may also have been responsible for aiding and abetting the crimes by providing moral support and encouragement by his presence. The Appeals Chamber concludes that the subsequent

[6257] In paragraph 30 of the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, it is only stated in a very general manner that, knowing that massacres of the civilian population were being committed, Ndayambaje and others took no measures to stop them and "[i]nstead of intervening to control and appeal to the perpetrators, [Ndayambaje and others] ordered, aided and abetted the acts."

[6258] Ndayambaje also argues in general terms in his appeal brief that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him as the Ndayambaje Indictment failed to plead his genocidal intent. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 131. The Appeals Chamber considers that any error as regards the pleading of Ndayambaje's genocidal intent in relation to his participation in the killings perpetrated at Mugombwa Church would not have the potential of invaliding his convictions for aiding and abetting these killings as this form of responsibility does not require a finding that the aider and abetter had genocidal intent. In any case, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution pleaded under the count of genocide information provided to Ndayambaje through Witnesses FAG's, FAU's, and TU's summaries sufficiently informed him of the course of conduct on his part supporting the generally pleaded charge of aiding and abetting, thereby curing the defect in the Indictment.

2727. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje was ultimately provided with sufficient information detailing the factual basis supporting his conviction for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated at Mugombwa Church and dismisses Ndayambaje's appeal in this respect.

(c) Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide

2728. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him of direct and public incitement to commit genocide on the basis of alleged inciting statements he made at Mugombwa Church as the Indictment does not contain any specific allegations of inciting statements.[6261] He argues that these specific "events at the Church warranted separate charges"[6262] and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider whether the Indictment had been cured of its defects in this respect or assess the prejudice suffered.[6263] In the alternative, he submits that the defect was not cured through the summary of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses QAR, FAU, FAG, or TU

"such as analyzed" in the Trial Judgement.[6264] He also argues that the Indictment failed to put him on notice that he was alleged to have had genocidal intent.[6265]

2729. In its response brief, the Prosecution does not respond directly to Ndayambaje's submissions about the lack of notice of the charge of direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church, simply pointing out that "Ndayambaje's inciting words at the church" were mentioned in Witness QAR's prior statement of 20 May 1997.[6266] It also asserts that Ndayambaje did not raise a contemporaneous objection to Witness QAR's testimony at trial and that his behaviour at trial shows that he had sufficient notice of what he was charged with and suffered no prejudice from the alleged lack of notice.[6267] In this respect, the Prosecution argues that Ndayambaje extensively cross-examined Witness QAR on the events at Mugombwa Church, notably about her prior statements, did not argue that his cross-examination was impeded in any manner, and called several witnesses to establish that he was not present at the church.[6268] According to the Prosecution, all of this shows that Ndayambaje understood the Mugombwa Church charges, had thoroughly investigated the charges, and was well equipped to defend against them.[6269] At the appeals hearing, in response to a specific question by the Appeals Chamber, the Prosecution argued that paragraph 6.33 of the Indictment "was found to be vague" but that "the vagueness was cured through the post-indictment material that specified [Ndayambaje's] inciting words and the impact [they] had."[6270]

2730. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje objected to Witness QAR's testimony at trial on the ground that there was no allegation about Mugombwa Church in the Indictment.[6271] He also objected in his closing brief to the vagueness of paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment as regards the nature of his participation in the massacres referred therein[6272] as well as that of paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment which alleged that he publicly incited the people to exterminate the Tutsi population

The Trial Chamber dismissed Ndayambaje's request for exclusion of witnesses' testimonies for lack of notice in the Ndayambaje Indictment primarily because it was not "satisfied that there [was] a basis to exclude the concerned testimonies at this stage." It stated that "[s]ome of the matters raised may be considered at a later stage of the proceedings". See 1 September 2006 Decision, para. 25, p. 9.

and its accomplices.[6273] He further specifically claimed that the allegations of incitement made in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Indictment were unrelated and too general in nature to include his specific acts at Mugombwa Church as recounted by Witnesses QAR and FAG.[6274]

2731. The Trial Chamber failed to address Ndayambaje's contention that the allegation of incitement at Mugombwa Church was not pleaded in the Indictment. The Trial Chamber instead limited its examination to the question of whether Ndayambaje was put on notice regarding the dates, location, and his general participation, including through giving orders and supervising, in the Mugombwa Church massacre.[6275] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber is not obliged to address each and every submission made at trial and has discretion to decide which argument to address.[6276] However, considering the importance of the matter, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber should have addressed Ndayambaje's claim that he was not charged with direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's failure to address Ndayambaje's contention regarding the pleading of his responsibility for direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the Mugombwa Church massacre infringed Ndayambaje's right to a reasoned opinion under Article 22 of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules. The Appeals Chamber will determine whether this error of law invalidates the Trial Chamber's decision to convict Ndayambaje for direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the Mugombwa Church massacre in examining whether Ndayambaje was charged on this basis and, if so, whether he was provided with sufficient information on the material facts underpinning the charge against him.

2732. The Appeals Chamber observes that, as argued by Ndayambaje, paragraph 6.33 of the Indictment could not put him on notice of the allegation of incitement at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 as it expressly refers to Ndayambaje inciting the population to kill Tutsis "[i]n June 1994". The Appeals Chamber also notes that there is no mention of any inciting statements in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment. This paragraph, however, was among those expressly relied upon in support of the count of direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Count 4).[6277] The Appeals Chamber considers that this reliance gave notice to Ndayambaje that the Prosecution intended to engage his responsibility under this count in relation to the massacres referred to in paragraph 6.37. The Appeals Chamber also observes that paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment, which was being pursued under Count 4 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute, clearly indicates that Ndayambaje was alleged to have publicly incited people to exterminate the Tutsi population.[6278]

2734. However, as Ndayambaje was convicted based on the statements he made at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994, such statements constitute material facts underpinning his responsibility for direct and public incitement to commit genocide which should have been pleaded in the Indictment. Nevertheless, there is no mention of any inciting statements in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, and paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment does not refer to the attacks on Mugombwa Church. The Indictment is therefore defective in this regard.

2735. Turning to whether the defect was cured, the Appeals Chamber observes that there is no reference to Mugombwa Church in Witness QAR's Summary[6279] and no mention of Ndayambaje making inciting statements at Mugombwa Church in Witnesses FAU's, FAG's, and TU's summaries or prior statements or in the Prosecution's opening statement. While Witness TU's Summary and Witness FAG's Statement refer to Ndayambaje's "instruct[ions]" and "orders" to kill Tutsis,[6280] the Appeals Chamber considers that they could reasonably be understood as underpinning the charges of ordering genocide, murder, extermination, or violence to life rather than that of direct and public incitement to commit genocide. The Prosecution correctly points out that Witness QAR's May 1997 Statement mentions that Ndayambaje proffered inciting words against Tutsis at the church.[6281] However, the Prosecution did not signal in its pre-trial brief that it

[6278] Ndayambaje Indictment, p. 42. Paragraph 5.8 of the Ndayambaje Indictment reads as follows:

> 5.8 From April to July 1994, incitement to hatred and violence was propagated by various prominent persons, including members of the Government and local authorities. […] Elie Ndayambaje […] publicly incited the people to exterminate the Tutsi population and its "accomplices".

[6279] Witness Summaries Grid, item 5, Witness QAR ("Witness QAR's Summary").

[6280] The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness TU's Summary refers to Ndayambaje "speaking over a microphone, ordering the Hutus to kill the Tutsis" in Muganza Commune in the commune vehicle on 20 April 1994. However, read in context, this statement does not appear to relate to Mugombwa Church. A review of Witness TU's prior statement to Tribunal investigators of 18 December 1996 confirms that these orders given through microphone from the commune vehicle do not relate to Mugombwa Church but to Bishya. See Witness TU's Statement, p. 2241 (Registry pagination).

[6281] See Witness QAR's May 1997 Statement, which reads, in relevant part, as follows:

> Then around 1 pm, through the broken church windows, I saw Elie NDAYAMBAJE arrive outside the church in a white Toyota pick-up. […] He said the following to a crowd of Hutus assembled there: "The Tutsis must not escape for their God has delivered them" Then he added: "I am going to give weapons to those who do not have any."

intended to rely on this aspect of Witness QAR's evidence. The Appeals Chamber recalls that mere service of witness statements is insufficient to inform the Defence of material facts that the Prosecution intends to prove at trial.[6282] 2736. The Appeals Chamber finds that, even when Witness QAR testified at trial that Ndayambaje made inciting statements to the assailants and the crowd gathered outside the church,[6283] it was not clear that the Prosecution intended to rely on that part of her testimony to prove that Ndayambaje committed direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church. In any event, any information in this regard would have been provided too late in the proceedings to constitute "timely" notice.

2737. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the defect in the Indictment concerning Ndayambaje's inciting statements at Mugombwa Church was not cured through post-indictment disclosures.

2738. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a vague or ambiguous indictment which is not cured of its defect by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information causes prejudice to the accused.[6284] The defect may only be deemed harmless through demonstrating that the accused's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[6285] When an appellant raises a defect in the indictment for the first time on appeal, the appellant bears the burden of showing that his ability to prepare his defence was materially impaired.[6286] When, however, an accused has previously raised the issue of lack of notice before the trial chamber, the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove on appeal that the ability of the accused to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.[6287]

2739. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Ndayambaje raised a contemporaneous objection to Witness QAR's testimony in relation to the allegation related to Mugombwa Church and objected to the vagueness of the Indictment regarding the allegation of direct and public incitement to commit genocide at the church.[6288] Thus, the burden rests on the Prosecution to prove that the ability of Ndayambaje to prepare his defence was not materially impaired.

[6283] See Witness QAR, T. 19 November 2001 pp. 17, 26, 27, 29. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QAR's testimony on Ndayambaje's inciting statements was not made as a response to the Prosecution's specific inquiry on the matter, but was part of a response to the Prosecution's general question about the conduct of the people who were outside the Mugombwa Church and whether Ndayambaje was carrying anything in his vehicle. See ibid., pp. 16, 17, 26.

2740. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to meet this burden. The Prosecution correctly points out that Ndayambaje called several witnesses and extensively cross-examined Witness QAR at trial in relation to the massacre perpetrated at Mugombwa Church. However, an examination of the trial record shows that Ndayambaje's defence primarily focussed on establishing that he was not present during the attacks on Mugombwa Church and his role in a distribution of weapons.[6289] At no point during cross-examination did Ndayambaje question Witness QAR concerning the inciting statements such as the content of the statements, the audience, the manner in which the statements were uttered, or the place and other circumstances in which the statements were made. The fact that Ndayambaje did not call any witnesses[6290] or made any attempt at trial to refute any allegation concerning direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the Mugombwa Church attacks demonstrates his lack of preparation.

2741. Although Ndayambaje objected, particularly in his 31 May 2006 Motion and closing brief, to the vagueness of the Indictment regarding the charge of public and direct incitement to commit genocide in relation to the events at Mugombwa Church,[6291] his objections do not reflect that he fully understood that Witness QAR's evidence on his addresses at the church on 20 and 21 April 1994 was intended to underpin the charge of direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

2742. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to prove on appeal that Ndayambaje's ability to prepare his defence was not materially impaired by the defect in the Indictment concerning his responsibility for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide based on his statements at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber, accordingly, concludes that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide on this basis.

2. Kabuye Hill (Grounds 5, and 6 in part)

2743. The Trial Chamber found that, on 20 April 1994, Ndayambaje and several armed soldiers and communal policemen travelled to Ngiryi Bridge where they arrested Tutsi refugees fleeing to Burundi and forced them to return to Gisagara marketplace, following which soldiers and policemen escorted the refugees to Kabuye Hill.[6292] The Trial Chamber also found that Ndayambaje was present at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 when soldiers, policemen, and armed civilians attacked Tutsis gathered on the hill, resulting in the death of thousands of Tutsis.[6293] In addition, the Trial Chamber found that Ndayambaje: (i) transported soldiers, civilians, and communal policemen to Kabuye Hill, where they participated in attacks against Tutsis on 23 and 24 April 1994; (ii) distributed weapons at Kabuye Hill and at the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994, which were later used in the massacres at Kabuye Hill; and (iii) was present during the attacks at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 that resulted in thousands of deaths.[6294]

2745. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ndayambaje with respect to the events of 20 April 1994 and the attacks at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, and 6.32 of the Indictment.[6297] The Indictment indicates that the [6297] Trial Judgement, para. 1248, fn. 2672. Paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, and 6.32 of the Ndayambaje Indictment read as follows:

> 6.30 On 20 April 1994, Elie Ndayambaje took communal policemen to Gisagara. Teaming up with soldiers, they arrested the refugees and took them to the neighboring hill, which was called Kabuye. The soldiers and communal police separated the Tutsi from the other refugees and forced them to relinquish their traditional tools.
> 6.31 On 22 April 1994, Elie Ndayambaje, accompanied by communal policemen, gendarmes, soldiers and civilians armed with traditional tools and weapons, attacked the Tutsi refugees who had gathered at Kabuye.

allegations in paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, and 6.32 were being pursued under, inter alia, Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[6298]

2746. Addressing Ndayambaje's assertion that paragraphs 6.30, 6.31, and 6.32 of the Indictment lacked specificity, the Trial Chamber found that, when reading the Indictment as a whole, these paragraphs provided sufficient notice to Ndayambaje to enable him to prepare his defence.[6299] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found that the "key elements of the Kabuye Hill events", such as the movements of Tutsis to Kabuye Hill, the attacks that took place there, and the distribution of weapons, were "linked" in the Indictment to a specific date or dates and to a specific location.[6300] Similarly, it stated that: (i) Ndayambaje was "placed at the scene of each of these events"; (ii) Ndayambaje's role as a superior over subordinates could be "inferred from the Prosecution's allegations elsewhere in the Indictment"; and (iii) the alleged attackers were identified by reference to their category.[6301] The Trial Chamber further found that the mode of transportation used, the precise number of grenades thrown into the crowd of Tutsis, and the precise number of victims were not material to the Prosecution case.[6302]

2747. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that: (i) the interception of refugees at Ngiryi Bridge was pleaded in the Indictment and in admitting evidence related to this event; (ii) the circumstances surrounding the transportation of the attackers were not material; (iii) he was sufficiently on notice of the distribution of weapons; (iv) he was informed of his involvement in the events at Kabuye Hill by reason of his authority over the unidentified attackers at Kabuye Hill; and (v) he aided and abetted the massacres at Kabuye Hill because this mode of participation was not pleaded in the Indictment.[6303] Consequently, Ndayambaje requests the Appeals Chamber to reverse all the findings and convictions related to the events at Ngiryi Bridge, to the transportation of attackers, and to the crimes committed at Kabuye Hill.[6304] The Appeals Chamber will address Ndayambaje's contentions in turn.

(a) Interception at Ngiryi Bridge and Forced Return to Gisagara

2748. Ndayambaje submits that the allegation that, on 20 April 1994, he travelled to Ngiryi Bridge with several armed soldiers and communal policemen, where they arrested Tutsi refugees fleeing to Burundi and forced them to return to Gisagara marketplace, was not pleaded in the Indictment.[6305] He argues that the events at Ngiryi Bridge cannot be linked to the events at Gisagara, which is pleaded in paragraph 6.30 of the Indictment, or to Kabuye Hill since these were different places.[6306] Ndayambaje asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to inquire whether he had received sufficient notice of the allegation concerning the interception of refugees at Ngiryi Bridge despite the fact that the allegation was a separate charge that had to be specified in the Indictment.[6307] Ndayambaje contends that, in "admitting evidence thereon, [the Trial Chamber] radically and illegally transformed the Indictment."[6308] He underlines that "in admitting evidence of the events at Ngiryi not pleaded in the Indictment" the Trial Chamber caused him serious prejudice.[6309]

2749. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's challenge is moot since he was not convicted for the interception of refugees at Ngiryi Bridge and forced movement of the Tutsi refugees and that the Trial Chamber "only relied on the incident as one piece of evidence for determining the mens rea for the Kabuye Hill massacre."[6310]

2750. Ndayambaje replies that he can dispute on appeal whether he was on notice of these incidents since the Trial Chamber relied on these facts in support of its finding that he possessed genocidal intent in relation to the events at Kabuye Hill.[6311] He also argues that, had the Trial Chamber correctly concluded that this charge was not in the Indictment, it would have excluded the related evidence.[6312]

2751. As noted above, the Trial Chamber did not convict Ndayambaje for his role in intercepting and forcing Tutsi refugees to return to Gisagara and then go to Kabuye Hill on 20 April 1994.[6313] To the extent that Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred with regard to the pleading of the interception and forced movement of the Tutsi refugees on 20 April 1994 as a separate allegation underpinning criminal charges, his argument is dismissed as it does not have the potential to impact Ndayambaje's conviction or sentence.[6314]

2752. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber relied on the interception and forced movement of Tutsi refugees and Ndayambaje's role in these events in finding that he had the required mens rea for the crimes of which he was ultimately convicted in connection with the events at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994.[6315] As discussed below, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Indictment put Ndayambaje on notice that he was alleged to have had the requisite mens rea to incur responsibility for aiding and abetting genocide at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994.[6316] The Appeals Chamber recalls that, with respect to the mens rea, an indictment may plead either: (i) the state of mind of the accused, in which case the facts by which that state of mind is to be established are matters of evidence, and need not be pleaded, or (ii) the evidentiary facts from which the state of mind is to be inferred.[6317] As the interception of the Tutsi refugees at Ngiryi Bridge and their forced return to Gisagara and subsequent movement to Kabuye Hill, including Ndayambaje's role therein, was ultimately merely relied upon as evidence of Ndayambaje's state of mind expressly pleaded in the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber considers that the evidentiary facts by which Ndayambaje's mens rea would be established did not need to be pleaded in the Indictment.

2753. In addition, insofar as Ndayambaje is contesting the admission of evidence concerning the interception of the refugees and their forced return to Gisagara, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber may admit any relevant evidence which it deems to have probative value, such as evidence which is relevant to the proof of an allegation pleaded in the Indictment.[6318] Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber would have excluded the related evidence had it correctly concluded that the charge regarding the interception and forced movement of the refugees was not pleaded in the Indictment fails to appreciate that this evidence was relevant to Ndayambaje's mens rea which was pleaded in the Indictment.

2754. For the foregoing reasons, as Ndayambaje was not convicted for the interception of Tutsi refugees and their forced return to Gisagara, the Appeals Chamber finds that any error regarding the pleading of these events in the Indictment would not have invalidated the Trial Judgement.

[6315] Trial Judgement, paras. 5770, 5771. The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the events that led the refugees to Kabuye Hill to establish the genocidal intent of those who attacked the refugees at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994. See ibid., paras. 5771, 5773.

The Appeals Chamber also finds no error in the Trial Chamber admitting this evidence to prove Ndayambaje's mens rea for the crimes for which he was ultimately convicted in connection with the events at Kabuye Hill.

(b) Transportation of Attackers

2755. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the circumstances surrounding the transportation of policemen and soldiers were not material to the Prosecution case.[6319] In his view, as transportation is the alleged criminal conduct on the basis of which he was ultimately found guilty, the points of departure and destination, the means used, the dates and times, the identity of those transported, and their behaviour had to be specified in the Indictment.[6320]

2756. The Prosecution responds that all of the material facts for the Kabuye Hill massacres were pleaded in the Indictment, including the place of the massacre, the timeframe, Ndayambaje's participation, and the identity of the attackers, who were identified by categories.[6321]

2757. The Appeals Chamber recalls that where it is alleged that the accused planned, instigated, ordered, or aided and abetted in the planning, preparation, or execution of the alleged crimes, the Prosecution is required to identify the "particular acts" or "the particular course of conduct" on the part of the accused which forms the basis for the charges in question.[6322]

2758. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment specifies that, on 23 and 24 April 1994, Ndayambaje transported attackers to Kabuye Hill, and that paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment identifies the attackers by reference to their category of "communal policemen, gendarmes, soldiers and civilians armed with traditional tools and weapons". In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the acts which formed the basis for the charge pertaining to the transportation of attackers were clearly set forth in the Indictment and the identification of the attackers by reference to their category was sufficient to provide appropriate notice. The Appeals Chamber is also not convinced by Ndayambaje's undeveloped assertion that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the mode of transportation used was not material to the Prosecution case. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds unsubstantiated and unmeritorious Ndayambaje's argument that the behaviour of the attackers during the transportation was a material fact.[6323] Rather, the material fact was that the attackers whom Ndayambaje transported attacked Tutsis after they arrived at Kabuye Hill.

[6321] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2041. The Prosecution contends that, in any event, witnesses' summaries and statements disclosed to Ndayambaje further fleshed out the charges against him, including regarding the transport of soldiers, and that Ndayambaje knew what he was charged with and suffered no prejudice. See ibid., paras. 2043-2046.

2759. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the material facts concerning the transportation of the attackers to Kabuye Hill were sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment.

(c) Distribution of Weapons

2760. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he had been sufficiently notified of the allegation of weapons distribution at Kabuye Hill.[6324] Specifically, he argues that, in its assessment of whether he was provided with clear and consistent information on the distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill, the Trial Chamber failed to consider the fact that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, the Prosecution's opening statement, and the witnesses' statements did not provide further information but rather exacerbated the confusion as to the information that was provided to him.[6325] Ndayambaje also points to the fact that the Trial Chamber found elsewhere that the Indictment was defective and was not cured in respect of the distribution of weapons at Mugombwa Church and argues that the same holds true for the distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill.[6326]

2761. The Prosecution responds that the allegation of Ndayambaje's participation in the massacres by distributing weapons was pleaded in the Indictment and reaffirmed in its closing brief, and that witnesses' summaries and statements provided Ndayambaje with additional information regarding the charge against him.[6327] The Prosecution further argues that Ndayambaje has not pointed to any confusing information from the witnesses' statements.[6328]

2762. The Appeals Chamber notes that paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment clearly put Ndayambaje on notice that, on 23 and 24 April 1994, he was alleged to have transported attackers to Kabuye Hill [6323] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 110; Trial Judgement, para. 1255.

[6325] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 111, 112. Ndayambaje contends that the written statements of witnesses exacerbated the confusion as to the information provided to him with regard to the location of the distribution of weapons, as the witnesses stated that it occurred at Kabuye, at a neighbouring hill, at the office in Muganza Sector, in Butare, or at Bishya, in various and incompatible circumstances. See idem. Ndayambaje contends that Prosecution Witness EV is the sole witness who placed the distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill. See ibid., para. 112.
[6326] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 113, 512.
[6327] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2041, 2043. With regard to Ndayambaje's argument that the information provided to him states that he was involved in criminal conduct at different places, the Prosecution avers that this is simply due to the fact that witnesses saw him in different places, including at Kabuye Hill and Muganza Commune on his way to or from Kabuye Hill. The Prosecution contends that in any event, Ndayambaje knew what he was charged with and suffered no prejudice. See ibid., paras. 2044-2046.

and issued them weapons.[6329] Ndayambaje's argument that he was insufficiently notified of the allegation of weapons distribution at Kabuye Hill is undeveloped and Ndayambaje fails to specify which material facts were ambiguously or not sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment. In the absence of any demonstration of defect in the Indictment, the Appeals Chamber fails to see why the Trial Chamber should have considered the information provided in the Prosecution's pre-trial brief and opening statement and the witnesses' statements in this respect.

2763. Moreover, Ndayambaje's argument relating to the notice of the distribution of weapons at Mugombwa Church is inapposite. With regard to Mugombwa Church, the Trial Chamber found that the Indictment did not specify the alleged site of the distribution of weapons or the identities of those who received the weapons, that the Indictment was defective, and that this defect was subsequently not cured.[6330] In contrast, paragraph 6.32 of the Indictment related to Kabuye Hill states the site of the weapons distribution and paragraph 6.31 of the Indictment clearly identifies the attackers by category.

2764. For the above reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was provided with sufficient notice of the allegation of distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994.

(d) Authority Over Unidentified Attackers

2765. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was informed of his involvement in the events at Kabuye Hill by reason of his authority over the unidentified attackers.[6331] According to him, the Trial Chamber "erred in law in finding that in the instant case, identification by fictitious categories was sufficient to inform [him], leaving paragraphs 6.30 to 6.32 vague and not informing him in a clear and consistent manner as to his involvement in the events of Kabuye and his possible authority over poorly identified attackers."[6332]

and importance were pleaded and that his contentions as to the pleading of this issue are moot as he was not found responsible as a superior.[6334]

2767. Ndayambaje replies that he did not raise the issue of his responsibility as a superior, but rather underscored the illogical approach of the Trial Chamber in stating that the transportation and distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill had been pleaded in the Indictment because of his authority over unidentified attackers.[6335]

2768. Contrary to Ndayambaje's contention, the Trial Judgement does not reflect that the Trial Chamber relied on his authority over unidentified attackers in finding that the transportation and distribution of weapons in Kabuye Hill had been sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment. It is clear from the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber found that the key elements of the Kabuye Hill events, such as the attacks that took place there and the distribution of weapons, were pleaded in paragraphs 6.31 and 6.32 of the Indictment with sufficient specificity.[6336] The Trial Chamber referred to other paragraphs of the Indictment only to clarify Ndayambaje's "alleged relationship with his subordinates"[6337] and "his role as a superior over subordinates"[6338] in relation to the pleading of Ndayambaje's superior responsibility.[6339] As far as Ndayambaje argues that his position of authority is not sufficient to identify the attackers at Kabuye Hill, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it already determined that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that the identification of the attackers by reference to their category provided Ndayambaje with sufficient notice.[6340]

2769. The Appeals Chamber therefore rejects Ndayambaje's arguments that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was informed of his involvement in the events at Kabuye Hill by reason of his authority over the attackers, as it did not rely on Ndayambaje's authority to find that the charge was sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment or that the attackers were sufficiently identified in the Indictment.

(e) Responsibility for Aiding and Abetting

2770. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he aided and abetted the massacres at Kabuye Hill from 22 through 24 April 1994 whereas this form of responsibility was [6339] The Appeals Chamber recalls that Ndayambaje was not convicted for the events at Kabuye Hill on the basis of superior responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute. See Trial Judgement, paras. 5768, 5780.

not pleaded in the Indictment.[6341] Ndayambaje adds that neither the Prosecution's pre-trial brief nor its opening statement mentioned aiding and abetting and that the Trial Chamber chose that form of responsibility proprio motu.[6342]

2771. The Prosecution responds that the paragraphs in the charging section of the Indictment include all modes of liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute and that paragraph 6.56 of the Indictment, which is of general application, specifically emphasised that Ndayambaje aided and abetted massacres.[6343] It argues that all material facts were pleaded in the Indictment, that further notice was provided in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, and that Ndayambaje did not suffer any prejudice.[6344]

2772. The Appeals Chamber notes the general reference to Article 6(1) of the Statute in the charging section of the Indictment[6345] and that, in paragraph 6.56 of the Indictment which elaborates in broad terms on Ndayambaje's responsibility, it is stated that Ndayambaje "aided and abetted [his] subordinates and others in carrying out the massacres of the Tutsi population and its accomplices." As held above in relation to Mugombwa Church, the Appeals Chamber considers that this, on its own, was insufficient to put Ndayambaje on notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting the killings at Kabuye Hill and of his conduct underpinning this charge.[6346]

2773. However, the Appeals Chamber observes that paragraphs 6.31 and 6.32 of the Indictment informed Ndayambaje of the material facts underpinning the charge of aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsi refugees at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994. Paragraph 6.31 sets forth that on 22 April 1994, Ndayambaje, accompanied by communal policemen, gendarmes, soldiers, and civilians armed with traditional tools and weapons attacked the Tutsi refugees who had gathered at Kabuye Hill. Paragraph 6.32 expressly states that Ndayambaje "transported the attackers to Kabuye and issued them weapons." In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the information provided in these paragraphs characterises Ndayambaje's conduct for aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsi refugees at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber is satisfied that the Indictment, when read as a whole, put Ndayambaje on notice that he was alleged to have been aware of the genocidal intent of the attackers at Kabuye Hill and to have known that his actions would assist the attackers in the killing of Tutsi refugees.[6347] Considering the Indictment as a whole, and in particular its charging section as well as paragraph 6.56 in combination with paragraphs 6.31 and 6.32, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje was sufficiently put on notice that he was charged with aiding and abetting the killings at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994 and of his conduct which formed the basis of this charge.

2774. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that he was not sufficiently put on notice of the allegation that he aided and abetted the killings of Tutsi refugees at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994.

3. Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony (Grounds 3, and 6 in part)

2775. The Trial Chamber found that, on the occasion of his public swearing-in ceremony as the bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 22 June 1994 held in the woods near the Muganza commune office, Ndayambaje, together with Nteziryayo, "told the population to continue with their 'work' and urged them to 'sweep the dirt outside'", as well as instructed that those hiding Tutsis and refusing to hand them over should be killed.[6348] The Trial Chamber also found it established beyond reasonable doubt that, after the ceremony, searches for Tutsis took place and killings followed.[6349] The Trial Chamber concluded that the audience understood the words used by Ndayambaje to mean they needed to kill Tutsis and that this was further evidenced by the searches conducted and the killings of Tutsis after the ceremony.[6350] The Trial Chamber convicted Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Count 4) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute on the basis of the statements he made at his swearing-in ceremony.[6351]

[6351] Trial Judgement, paras. 6029, 6038, 6186. In the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgement related to genocide, the Trial Chamber also considered Ndayambaje's utterances at the swearing-in ceremony in the context of his responsibility for instigating the ensuing abduction and killings of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector. The Trial Chamber found that there was a causal connection between Ndayambaje's words at his swearing-in ceremony and the abduction and killing of the Tutsi women and girls, including one named Nambaje, and that, by prompting the assailants to perpetrate these crimes, Ndayambaje instigated genocide. See ibid., paras. 5953-5956. The Trial Chamber also held that, by his words at the Virgin Mary Statue in Mugombwa Sector during the abduction, Ndayambaje instigated the killing of the abducted women and girls, including Nambaje. See ibid., paras. 5957-5959, 6031. The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not ultimately convict Ndayambaje of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for instigating the killing of the Tutsi women and girls, including Nambaje, based on his

2776. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ndayambaje with respect to the incitement of the population to kill Tutsis during Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraphs 5.8, 6.33, and 6.38 of the Indictment.[6352] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraphs 5.8, 6.33, and 6.38 were being pursued under Counts 1 through 3 and 5 through 9 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute and under Count 4 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[6353]

2777. The Trial Chamber found that paragraph 6.38 of the Indictment did not refer to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony or to any criminal conduct by Ndayambaje.[6354] It also determined that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Indictment "encompass[ed] the allegation that Ndayambaje incited the population at his swearing-in ceremony"[6355] but that paragraph 5.8 was very general in nature and paragraph 6.33 failed to provide details of specific incidents of incitement and concluded that both paragraphs were, therefore, defective.[6356] However, the Trial Chamber found that the defect in the Indictment regarding the charge of incitement at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony in June 1994 was cured by clear, consistent, and timely information, and that no prejudice was caused to Ndayambaje with respect to this allegation.[6357]

2778. When addressing, in the Trial Judgement, Ndayambaje's contention that the Indictment failed to plead the killings that allegedly followed the ceremony, the Trial Chamber further relied on paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[6358] It held that, although this paragraph failed to refer to any utterances at his swearing-in ceremony, but instead solely relied on his utterances at the Virgin Mary Statue after the ceremony. See ibid., paras. 5957-5959, 5976 ("Ndayambaje also instigated the killing of Tutsis after his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994."), 5977, 6064 ("The Chamber has found Ndayambaje guilty of genocide for […] instigating the killing of Tutsis after his swearing-in ceremony".), 6066, 6107 ("Ndayambaje […] instigated the killing of Tutsis after his swearing-in ceremony."), 6108, 6125, 6175 ("Ndayambaje […] instigated the killing of Tutsis after his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994."), 6176, 6186 (emphasis added).

[6352] Trial Judgement, para. 4261, fns. 11642-11644. Paragraphs 5.8, 6.33, and 6.38 of the Ndayambaje Indictment read as follows:

> 6.33 In June 1994, Elie Ndayambaje incited the population to kill Tutsis.

specific crimes which Ndayambaje allegedly ordered, supervised, or participated in, this defect was cured through post-indictment disclosures.[6359]

2781. With respect to the pleading of the killings that followed the ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje was not ultimately convicted on the basis that killings were perpetrated as a result of his utterances at the ceremony. The Trial Chamber solely relied on the fact that Tutsis were killed after the ceremony as evidence that the audience understood Ndayambaje's message that they needed to kill Tutsis.[6364] For his words at the ceremony, the Trial Chamber only convicted Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[6365] As the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide is an inchoate crime, the crime is punishable irrespective of whether the incitement substantially contributed to the commission of acts of genocide.[6366] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber considers that there is no need to examine whether Ndayambaje was given sufficient notice of the killings that followed his swearing-in ceremony and dismisses Ndayambaje's arguments in this respect.

2782. The Appeals Chamber will now consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect in the Indictment concerning the charge of direct and public incitement to commit genocide through Ndayambaje's utterances at his swearing-in ceremony was curable, and if so, whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect was cured.

(a) Whether the Defect Was Curable

2783. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him on the basis of alleged inciting statements made during his swearing-in ceremony as the Indictment does not contain any allegation of incitement at this event.[6367] He contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously and artificially linked this charge to paragraphs 5.8, 6.33, and 6.38 of the Indictment.[6368] Ndayambaje further argues that, by doing so, the Trial Chamber contradicted its own position: (i) in paragraph 3233 of the Trial Judgement, where it found that the defect in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 could not be cured;[6369] and (ii) in paragraph 2912 of the Trial Judgement, where it concluded that mentioning a "main element", which was not pleaded in the Indictment, in the summaries of anticipated evidence appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief constituted a radical transformation of the Prosecution case.[6370] Ndayambaje submits that, by convicting him on the basis of inciting statements at his swearing-in ceremony, the Trial Chamber proceeded to an illegal expansion of the Indictment as the facts underpinning the allegation were additional material facts which supported on their own a separate charge, and could only have been added through a formal amendment of the Indictment.[6371]

2784. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the vagueness in paragraphs 5.8, 6.33, and 6.38 of the Indictment concerning Ndayambaje's incitement at his swearing-in ceremony was cured.[6372]

At the appeals hearing, Ndayambaje further argued that, since paragraph 6.38 of the Ndayambaje Indictment reads that he was appointed bourgmestre on 20 June 1994 "[d]espite these crimes", "it is clear that the in[cite]ment referred to in 6.33 occurred before June 1994." See ibid., p. 20 and p. 25 (French).

[6372] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2010, 2011. The Prosecution elaborates that in paragraph 5.8 of the Ndayambaje Indictment it is alleged that Ndayambaje incited the population to kill Tutsis between April and July 1994, and that in paragraph 6.33 of the Ndayambaje Indictment it is alleged, more precisely, that he so incited in June 1994.

2785. The Appeals Chamber finds that the allegation concerning Ndayambaje's inciting statements at his swearing-in ceremony did not constitute a new charge but fell within the broader allegation relating to Ndayambaje's public incitement to exterminate the Tutsi population in June 1994 expressly pleaded in paragraph 6.33 of the Indictment and, in broader terms, in paragraph 5.8 of the Indictment.[6373] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the material facts on which the Trial Chamber entered its convictions could have, on their own, supported a separate charge. As vague as the charge set out in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 was, the Indictment nonetheless pleaded the charge for which Ndayambaje was ultimately convicted, namely his responsibility for directly and publicly inciting the extermination of Tutsis in June 1994.

2786. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber's finding that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Indictment could be cured contradicts its own conclusion in paragraph 3233 of the Trial Judgement. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in paragraph 3233 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 could not be relied upon to include the allegation that Ndayambaje ordered that roadblocks be erected and encouraged those at roadblocks to search for and kill Tutsis. It found that such allegations were new charges that could not be cured by subsequent disclosures. As Ndayambaje was charged in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 with inciting the population to kill Tutsis, the Appeals Chamber considers that paragraph 3233 of the Trial Judgement does not contradict the Trial Chamber's finding that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 could include allegations relating to Ndayambaje's inciting speech at his swearing-in ceremony.

2787. Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber contradicted its own reasoning in paragraph 2912 of the Trial Judgement is likewise without merit. In this paragraph, the Trial Chamber found that his participation in meetings was "an essential ingredient" of the crime of conspiracy to commit genocide which was not contained in the Indictment and, therefore, the subsequent inclusion of such information in the Witness Summaries Grid appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief constituted a radical transformation of the Prosecution case. Contrary to its finding in paragraph 2912 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber did not find with regard to the events at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony that an essential ingredient was not pleaded in

The Prosecution adds that paragraph 6.38 of the Ndayambaje Indictment refers to the appointment of Ndayambaje as Muganza bourgmestre on 20 June 1994. See idem.

[6373] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by Ndayambaje's argument during the appeals hearing that reading paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Ndayambaje Indictment in conjunction with paragraph 6.38 of the Ndayambaje Indictment leads to the conclusion that the crime described in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 necessarily occurred before Ndayambaje was appointed bourgmestre of Muganza. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, a plain reading of the Ndayambaje Indictment shows that the phrase "despite these crimes" in paragraph 6.38 relates to the criminal conduct of Ndayambaje in Muganza Commune and the surrounding area from 20 April 1994 as alleged in paragraph 6.37 of the Ndayambaje Indictment.

the Indictment, but rather that paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Indictment were very general in nature and, for this reason, defective.[6374]

2788. The Appeals Chamber concludes that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect in the Indictment regarding his responsibility for direct and public incitement to commit genocide through his utterances at his swearing-in ceremony of 22 June 1994 was curable. The Appeals Chamber now turns to consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect was cured by the provision of clear, consistent, and timely information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge.

(b) Whether the Defect Was Cured

2789. The Trial Chamber determined that the summary of the anticipated evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TO and QAQ appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief,[6375] their corresponding witness statements,[6376] and the subsequent addition of Witness RV to the Prosecution's witness list in July 2001[6377] provided Ndayambaje with clear, consistent, and timely information that the allegation that he incited the population to kill Tutsis at his swearing-in ceremony in June 1994 was part of the Prosecution case.[6378] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that, despite the fact that Witness TO's Summary and Witness TO's June 1997 Statement referred to this event as occurring in May 1994, "the description of the event as 'Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony' and the reference to Nteziryayo being the préfet of Butare at the time of the meeting, sufficed to put the Ndayambaje Defence on notice that the 'meeting' in question concerned Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony which occurred in June 1994."[6379] Similarly, while the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement refers only to "a meeting in May",[6380] it also found that [6380] Trial Judgement, para. 4294. The Trial Chamber refers to the previous section of the Trial Judgement discussing Nteziryayo's notice of the allegation against him concerning Ndayambaje's Swearing-in Ceremony. See ibid., para. 4279. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in paragraph 4294 of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated that Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement referred to "a meeting in May", whereas it stated in paragraph 4277 of the Trial Judgement that, according to the witness, the meeting took place towards "the end of May or early June 1994". The latter is the correct quote of Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement.

Ndayambaje would have been aware that the meeting Witness QAQ referred to in this statement was Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony since the statement mentioned that "during this meeting Préfet Nteziryayo sacked Bourgmestre Chrysologue Bimenyimana and replaced him with Ndayambaje."[6381]

2790. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the Indictment was cured of its defect concerning the allegation of incitement to commit genocide at his swearing-in ceremony.[6382] In particular, Ndayambaje reiterates that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering that the Prosecution failed to link the relevant summaries of anticipated evidence to the relevant paragraphs of the Indictment.[6383]

2791. In addition, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber: (i) noted that Witness TO's Summary and Witness TO's June 1997 Statement referred to "May 1994" as the date of the ceremony but failed to take this inconsistency into consideration;[6384] (ii) failed to consider the inconsistencies between Witness TO's June 1997 Statement, which it expressly considered, and Witness TO's prior written statements of 8 October 1995 and 16 October 1997 "which placed the meeting respectively in May or/and in late June 1994 and which mentioned another subsequent meeting which allegedly took place two weeks later";[6385] (iii) erred in finding that Witness QAQ's Summary and Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement provided him with clear notice, since they referred to a meeting that was held in late May or early June 1994;[6386] and (iv) failed to consider the inconsistencies between Witness QAQ's Summary and Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement, on one hand, and the witness's statement of 19 June 1995, on the other hand.[6387]

2792. The Appeals Chamber understands Ndayambaje to further argue that the information provided through the prior statements of Prosecution Witness TP and the summaries of the anticipated evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TP, QAR, QAF, QAL, FAD, FAL, FAU, SM, TW, and TX was not coherent with that provided by Witnesses TO's and QAQ's summaries and Ndayambaje relies on the fact that Witness QAQ's 1995 Statement states that he became bourgmestre at the end of May 1994 and held a meeting in June 1994 following which all Tutsi girls were killed. See ibid., para. 66.

statements and added to the confusion since none of them refer to his swearing-in ceremony but instead to another meeting undated or held in May or June 1994.[6388] Ndayambaje adds that, while the Trial Chamber acknowledged that the Prosecution's opening statement was silent on his alleged incitement during the swearing-in ceremony, it failed to imply from this silence that this allegation was not part of the Prosecution case against him.[6389]

2793. Ndayambaje also submits that, as there was no indication in the Indictment that any crime was committed during his swearing-in ceremony, it was not possible to specify the form of responsibility.[6390] In the alternative, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him as the Prosecution failed to plead his genocidal intent in his Indictment.[6391]

2794. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the defect in paragraphs 5.8, 6.33, and 6.38 of the Indictment concerning this allegation was cured.[6392] It contends that the prior statements and summaries of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses "TO, QAQ, and QAF supported the allegation that Ndayambaje had incited the population to kill the Tutsis" at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[6393] While acknowledging that there were minor variations as to the exact date of the events referred to by Witnesses TO and QAQ, the Prosecution argues that "the two witnesses describe the events in a clear and consistent manner that would have enabled Ndayambaje to understand the charges against him."[6394]

2795. The Prosecution further responds that the information provided in Witness TP's summary and statements was not inconsistent with the information provided by other witnesses[6395] and that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the slight difference regarding the dates given in the summaries of the other witnesses he points to caused confusion to an extent that would undermine the Trial Chamber's finding that he had sufficient notice of the incitement at his swearing-in ceremony.[6396]

2796. Concerning Ndayambaje's argument that it failed to plead the form of responsibility in the Indictment, the Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's conduct at trial showed that he was never concerned about the form of responsibility as he never raised a contemporaneous objection on this matter, and that he challenged every piece of evidence that he asked people to kill Tutsis at his swearing-in ceremony.[6397]

2797. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument that the witness summaries appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief could not inform him of the allegations against him because the Prosecution did not indicate "the relevant paragraphs on which their testimonies would be based".[6398] The Appeals Chamber is of the opinion that it would have been preferable for the Prosecution to provide greater specificity given the vagueness of the Indictment and its pre-trial brief in this respect. However, it is satisfied that the contents of Witnesses TO's and QAQ's summaries and the fact that they were expressly marked relevant to Ndayambaje and, inter alia, to Count 4 of the Indictment – which, in turn, was linked to the relevant paragraphs, including paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Indictment[6399] – provided clear notice to Ndayambaje that the Prosecution intended to rely on the evidence of these witnesses in support of the allegation that he publicly incited the population to kill Tutsis in June 1994 set forth in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33.[6400]

2798. The Appeals Chamber also notes that, contrary to Ndayambaje's argument, the Trial Chamber considered the inconsistency between Witness TO's Summary and Witness TO's June 1997 Statement, which referred to "May 1994" as the date of the meeting in Muganza Commune during which Ndayambaje would have incited the commission of genocide.[6401] The Appeals Chamber concurs with the Trial Chamber that from the description of the meeting as "Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony" it should have been clear to Ndayambaje that the meeting in question was Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony which occurred in June 1994.[6402]

2799. The Appeals Chamber further notes that, as argued by Ndayambaje, the Trial Chamber did not discuss Witness TO's 1995 Statement and Witness TO's October 1997 Statement. While these statements are consonant with each other and with Witness TO's June 1997 Statement with respect to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony,[6403] Witness TO's October 1997 Statement states that the swearing-in ceremony took place in late June 1994.[6404] However, Witness TO clarified in his June 1997 statement, which the Trial Chamber considered, that he "no longer remember[ed] the exact date of this ceremony but [that] it probably took place at the beginnin[g] of May 1994."[6405] The Appeals Chamber considers that, in light of Witness TO's admission that he no longer remembered the exact date of the ceremony and the clear indication that Witness TO's Summary and prior statements referred to the meeting held to swear-in Ndayambaje as bourgmestre of Muganza Commune, the references to May 1994 in the witness's summary and June 1997 statement were not such as to affect the clarity of the notice provided to Ndayambaje that the Prosecution intended to prove through Witness TO that he made inciting statements at his swearing-in ceremony.

[6402] See Trial Judgement, para. 4294. The Appeals Chamber observes, however, that Witness TO's Summary, while clearly stating that Ndayambaje made public incitements at his swearing-in ceremony, is confusing as it appears to suggest that the witness attended two meetings at which Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo made inciting speeches – in May 1994, being Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, and in late June 1994 where Nteziryayo introduced Ndayambaje. Notwithstanding this ambiguity in the phrasing of Witness TO's Summary, when reading it in conjunction with the witness's written statements previously disclosed to Ndayambaje, which Ndayambaje should have been prompted to examine upon reading Witness TO's Summary, it is clear that the witness was expected to testify that he attended only one meeting where Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje were present and made inciting speeches and that this meeting was Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

2800. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's argument regarding alleged inconsistencies and lack of clarity in Witness QAQ's Summary and prior statements. The Appeals Chamber notes that, according to Witness QAQ's Summary, Ndayambaje made direct and public incitements at a meeting at "the end of May/early June 1994", but that Witness QAQ's Summary does not provide further information concerning this meeting. However, when Witness QAQ's Summary is read together with Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement, it is clear that the meeting took place in the yard of the Muganza commune office and that on this occasion "the Préfet replaced the sacked Bourgmestre Chrisologue with Ndayambaje".[6406] Since Witness QAQ's Summary contained clear allegations against Ndayambaje and was expressly linked to his Indictment, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje should have been prompted to examine the contents of Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement upon reading Witness QAQ's Summary. Finally, the Appeals Chamber fails to see any inconsistency between Witness QAQ's 1995 Statement and Witness QAQ's Summary and Witness QAQ's 1997 Statement as Ndayambaje submits.[6407]

[6403] See Witness TO's 1995 Statement, p. K0181563 (Registry pagination) (describing the meeting as the swearing-in ceremony of bourgmestre Ndayambaje); Witness TO's June 1997 Statement, p. K0052738 (Registry pagination) (describing the meeting as "the meeting to introduce the new Bourgmestre, Elie Ndayambaje, who had just replaced Chrysologue Bimenyimana"). The Appeals Chamber is of the view that the fact that Witness TO's Summary, Witness TO's 1995 Statement, and Witness TO's June 1997 Statement mention another meeting two weeks later, where Ndayambaje asked people to strengthen the roadblocks and night patrols because the "Inkotanyi" arrived, is irrelevant as to whether Ndayambaje was on notice that he made inciting statements at his swearing-in ceremony in June 1994.
[6404] Witness TO's October 1997 Statement, p. K052738 (Registry pagination). The Appeals Chamber notes that there is no reference to the date of the meeting in Witness TO's 1995 Statement.

[6407] See Witness QAQ's 1995 Statement, pp. K0181567, K0181568 (Registry pagination).

2801. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that, despite the minor inconsistencies as regards their estimates of when the meeting took place in May or June 1994, it was clear from Witnesses TO's and QAQ's summaries and prior statements that they were referring to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. The Appeals Chamber also finds that, according to the information provided in paragraph 6.38 of the Indictment, Ndayambaje was on clear notice that it was alleged that his swearing-in ceremony could not have taken place before he was appointed as bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 20 June 1994, which coincides with the allegation in paragraph 6.33 of the Indictment that Ndayambaje incited the population to kill Tutsis in June 1994.

2803. Regarding the pleading of the form of responsibility, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in the charging section of the Indictment, Ndayambaje is generally charged with the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Count 4) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[6409] However, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in paragraphs 5.8 and 6.33 of the Indictment, it is clearly pleaded, respectively, that Ndayambaje "publicly incited the people to exterminate the Tutsi population and its 'accomplices'" and "incited the population to kill Tutsis". It is therefore clear from the relevant paragraphs of the Indictment that Ndayambaje was charged with committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

2804. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds Ndayambaje's undeveloped alternative argument that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him as the Indictment failed to plead his genocidal intent [6408] Witness Summaries Grid, items 5, 16, 24, 32, 35, 40, 79, 94, 97, 98; statement of Witness TP of 20 June 1995, disclosed on 15 November 2000 in French, on 4 December 2000 in Kinyarwanda and on 23 May 2001 in English; statement of Witness TP of 16 October 1997, disclosed on 4 November 1998.

unmeritorious since, in Count 4, the Prosecution specifically pleaded that Ndayambaje was "responsible for direct and public incitement to kill and cause serious bodily or mental harm to members of the Tutsi population with the intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a racial or ethnic group".[6410]

2805. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was provided with timely, clear, and consistent information putting him on notice of the allegation that he committed direct and public incitement to commit genocide through statements he made at his swearing-in ceremony in June 1994.

4. Abduction of Tutsi Women and Girls in Mugombwa (Grounds 4, and 6 in part)

2806. The Trial Chamber found that, after Ndayambaje's Swearing-in Ceremony on 22 June 1994, a group of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector, Muganza Commune, including one named Nambaje, were abducted by assailants from Saga.[6411] It determined that the assailants came to search for the women and girls because they had attended the swearing-in ceremony "where they were told to search for and throw out dirt".[6412] The Trial Chamber further found that, during the abduction, Ndayambaje came to the Virgin Mary Statue in Mugombwa Sector and made it clear to the abductors that they "were free to do what they wanted with the girls".[6413] The Trial Chamber found that the abducted women and girls were subsequently taken to a brick factory at Gasenyi where they were killed.[6414] On the basis of his words at the Virgin Mary Statue, the Trial Chamber convicted Ndayambaje of genocide (Count 2), extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity (Counts 6 and 7, respectively), and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II (Count 9) pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for instigating the killing of the Tutsi women and girls, including Nambaje.[6415]

The Trial Chamber determined that, because Ndayambaje's words at the Virgin Mary Statue were only addressed to the abductors and not to the general public, Ndayambaje could not be held responsible for direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to this event. See ibid., paras. 6030, 6032, 6033. As discussed in Section IX.A.3 above, although the Trial Chamber found that there was a causal connection between Ndayambaje's words at his swearing-in ceremony and the abduction and killing of the Tutsi women and girls, including Nambaje, and held that, by prompting the assailants to perpetrate these crimes, Ndayambaje instigated genocide, Ndayambaje was ultimately not convicted for instigating genocide for the killing of the abducted women and girls based on his inciting statements at his swearing-in ceremony. See supra, para. 2775, fn. 6351. As a result, the Appeals Chamber will disregard Ndayambaje's arguments under Ground 4 of his appeal alleging lack of notice that his utterances at the swearing-in ceremony instigated genocide for the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 85, 87, 92.

2807. In summarising the Prosecution case against Ndayambaje with respect to the abduction of Tutsi women and girls, the Trial Chamber referred to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[6416] The Indictment indicates that the allegations in paragraph 6.37 were being pursued under Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute and under Count 4 pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[6417]

2808. The Trial Chamber found that the allegation with regard to Ndayambaje's presence during the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls was not sufficiently pleaded in the Indictment, as it failed to specify the site or the date of the allegation, and that the Indictment was therefore defective.[6418] However, the Trial Chamber determined that the defect was subsequently cured and that Ndayambaje was put on adequate notice of the material facts underpinning the relevant charge.[6419]

2809. Ndayambaje submits that the allegation regarding his responsibility for the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls was not pleaded in the Indictment and that such defect was neither curable nor cured.[6420] He requests the Appeals Chamber to reverse all his convictions entered on the basis of his involvement in these killings.[6421] The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that the defect of the Indictment concerning this allegation was cured and that Ndayambaje suffered no prejudice.[6422]

2810. The Appeals Chamber concurs with the Trial Chamber that the Indictment was impermissibly vague in relation to the allegation concerning Ndayambaje's responsibility in the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls in Mugombwa. In particular, there is no mention in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, or anywhere else in the Indictment, of the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls, the specific date of the abduction, the presence of Ndayambaje at the Virgin Mary Statue and his role in the killing of the Tutsi women and girls. The Appeals Chamber will now discuss whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect in the Indictment in this regard was curable and, if so, whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect was cured.

(a) Whether the Defect Was Curable

2811. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in linking the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls after his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994 to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment since this paragraph "was too vague and too general to support such a specific charge."[6423] Ndayambaje argues that the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls was a material fact that could not properly support a conviction unless it was formally incorporated in the Indictment and that the Trial Chamber radically transformed the Indictment in convicting him on this basis.[6424]

2812. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's argument that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment was too vague in order to be cured ignores that curing applies to vague allegations and that Ndayambaje simply disagrees with the Trial Chamber's view without providing any reasons.[6425]

2813. The Appeals Chamber finds that the allegation concerning Ndayambaje's responsibility for instigating the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector fell within the broader allegation relating to the killing of Tutsis throughout Muganza Commune pleaded in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the material facts on which the Trial Chamber entered its convictions could have, on their own, supported separate charges. As vague as the charge set out in paragraph 6.37 was, the Indictment nonetheless pleaded the charge for which Ndayambaje was ultimately convicted, namely his participation in the killing of Tutsis in Muganza Commune from 20 April 1994.

2814. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that the defect in the Indictment regarding Ndayambaje's responsibility for instigating the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls was curable. The Appeals Chamber now turns to consider whether the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect was cured by the provision of clear, consistent, and timely information detailing the factual basis underpinning the charge.

(b) Whether the Defect Was Cured

2815. The Trial Chamber found that the summary of the anticipated evidence of Witnesses QAR and QAF appended to the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief and their respective prior written statements provided Ndayambaje with clear, timely, and consistent notice that following a meeting at Muganza [6423] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 80. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 42, 44; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 83; AT. 21 April 2015 pp. 10, 11, 17, 18, 20, 21.

[6424] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 81, 83. Ndayambaje contends that the Prosecution was aware of the allegations related to the abductions of Tutsi women and girls four years before the amendment of the indictment in August 1999 and that it should have requested an amendment of the indictment before the start of the trial. See ibid., para. 82.

commune office in June 1994 an abduction of Tutsi women and girls took place in Mugombwa Sector by assailants from Saga, that he was present during the abduction, and that the women and girls were subsequently killed.[6426]

2816. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the defect was cured and that he did not suffer prejudice from the lack of notice.[6427] Specifically, Ndayambaje argues that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief did not provide any information regarding his alleged responsibility for instigating the abduction at the Virgin Mary Statue or regarding his genocidal intent or knowledge of the attackers' genocidal intent.[6428] Similarly, he contends that the Prosecution's opening statement did not refer to this incident.[6429] Ndayambaje also avers that Witnesses QAR's and QAF's summaries were not linked to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[6430]

2817. In addition, Ndayambaje claims that Witnesses QAR's and QAF's prior statements were inconsistent and insufficient to provide him with clear and consistent information on the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls and his involvement thereon.[6431] In particular, Ndayambaje argues that: (i) there is no reference to his presence during the abduction in Witness QAF's Statement; (ii) Witness QAR's 1995 Statement mentions a massacre that was linked by the witness to the events "at the Church in April 1994 and not to the swearing-in ceremony in June 1994"; (iii) Witness QAR's May 1997 Statement does not refer to any abduction, an omission that was "excused by the [Trial] Chamber; thereby acting ultra vires"; and (iv) Witness QAR's October 1997 Statement does not mention the fate of the four abducted girls to whom it refers.[6432] Ndayambaje adds that he was not provided with any information regarding the abduction of the woman named Nambaje on the basis of which he was also convicted.[6433]

2818. Furthermore, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law in finding that he instigated the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls because this form of responsibility was not pleaded in the Indictment or any other documents of the Prosecution.[6434] In the alternative,

Ndayambaje argues that the Indictment failed to plead his genocidal intent.[6435] Finally, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that he suffered no prejudice from the lack of notice.[6436]

2819. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment was cured and that Ndayambaje received sufficient and consistent notice through the summaries and statements of Witnesses QAR and QAF that, following Ndayambaje's Swearing-in Ceremony, Tutsi women and girls were abducted, that he was present during the abduction, and that the Tutsi women and girls were subsequently killed.[6437] With respect to the form of responsibility, the Prosecution responds that the paragraphs in the charging section include all forms of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute and that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief notified Ndayambaje that authorities, such as himself, instigated massacres.[6438] It also reiterates that Ndayambaje did not raise any objection at trial concerning the modes of liability or argue in his closing brief that he did not know that he was charged pursuant to instigating.[6439] It submits that the record reflects that Ndayambaje understood the nature of the case against him and was fully prepared to defend against this particular allegation, which shows that he did not suffer any prejudice.[6440]

2821. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QAF's Summary was marked relevant to the counts of conspiracy to commit genocide and direct and public incitement to commit genocide (Counts 1 and 4, respectively), and not to any of the counts for which Ndayambaje was convicted in relation to the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls. In addition, while providing information that the morning after a meeting in Muganza Commune, where Ndayambaje made a speech, Tutsi girls were taken from their hiding places and killed, Witness QAF's Summary does not implicate Ndayambaje in the abduction of the Tutsi girls.[6441] In the view of the Appeals

[6441] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Witness QAF's Statement does not provide any information suggesting that Ndayambaje was directly involved in this abduction of Tutsi women and girls.

Chamber, Ndayambaje could not have therefore reasonably understood on the basis of Witness QAF's Summary that he was alleged to have instigated the killing of Tutsi women and girls, abducted after the ceremony, through the utterances he made at the Virgin Mary Statue. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding otherwise.

2822. By contrast, Witness QAR's Summary was marked relevant to Counts 1 through 9 of the Indictment which, in turn, were linked in the Indictment to paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment.[6442] The Appeals Chamber finds that the link between Witness QAR's Summary and paragraph 6.37, together with the contents of the summary, put Ndayambaje on notice that the Prosecution intended to rely on Witness QAR's evidence in support of the allegation of his participation in the massacres in Muganza Commune, as set forth in paragraph 6.37.[6443]

2823. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber finds that, contrary to Ndayambaje's unsubstantiated submission,[6444] it is clear that the incident described in Witness QAR's 1995 Statement in which "women and girls who had been spared were massacred on the orders of Ndayambaje", following an exchange of words regarding their fate between perpetrators from Saga and Ndayambaje, does not refer to another event in April 1994.[6445] This is also clear from the fact that in this incident Ndayambaje is described as the bourgmestre, a position he only regained in June 1994.[6446] The Appeals Chamber also rejects Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber acted ultra vires because it "excused" the fact that Witness QAR's May 1997 Statement did not mention the abduction incident.[6447] As the Trial Chamber noted, Witness QAR's May 1997 Statement "dealt solely with the massacre at Mugombwa Church in April 1994".[6448] It is not uncommon that a specific statement of a witness focuses, as a result of investigatory considerations, on a particular event.

2824. The Appeals Chamber also observes, as the Trial Chamber correctly noted,[6449] that Witness QAR's Summary is consistent with Witness QAR's October 1997 Statement, in which it is

> In June 1994, QAR attended a meeting chaired by Nteziryayo, also in attendance was Ndayambaje. […] The next day, there was a house-to-house search for girls and women hiding. QAR states that four girls and a teacher were brought out. […] The people were divided as to whether or not these women should be killed. It was decided to wait for Ndayambaje to ask him what to do with them. Ndayambaje arrived and said "were you not told that if you sweep the dirt towards your house, it heaps up and ends up chasing you out of your house? Then throw away the dirt." QAR later heard that the women were taken by a group to the Mugombwa brickyard.

specified that the assailants were waiting for Ndayambaje to decide what to do with the abductees at the Virgin Mary Statue, as some of the abductors wanted to kill them.[6450] Considering the chain of events, as described in the witness's summary and October 1997 statement, and the fact that Witness QAR's evidence was marked relevant, inter alia, to the counts of murder and extermination as crimes against humanity,[6451] the fate of the abductees was sufficiently clear to allow Ndayambaje to prepare an effective defence against the allegation. The Appeals Chamber, therefore, does not find any error in the Trial Chamber's approach to Witness QAR's prior statements.

2825. Notwithstanding the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Witness QAF's summary and statement, the Appeals Chamber considers that Witness QAR's Summary, which attributes to Ndayambaje a major and decisive role in the killing of the abductees, along with Witness QAR's 1995 and October 1997 statements, which were disclosed to Ndayambaje before the beginning of the trial, provided him with timely, clear, and consistent information that his involvement at the Virgin Mary Statue in the killing of Tutsi women and girls who were abducted in June 1994 was part of the Prosecution case. The Appeals Chamber does not find that the lack of reference in the Prosecution's pre-trial brief itself and opening statement to Ndayambaje's responsibility for the killing of these Tutsi women and girls affected the timely, clear, and consistent information that was provided to Ndayambaje through Witness QAR's summary and statements.

[6450] Witness QAR's October 1997 Statement, p. K0052277 (Registry pagination). Since Witness QAR's Summary contained clear allegations against Ndayambaje and was expressly linked to the Ndayambaje Indictment in the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje should have been prompted to examine the contents of Witness QAR's statements disclosed to him upon reading Witness QAR's Summary. See also supra, para. 1101.

instigating the killing of the abducted women and girls, concluding generally that he was put on notice that he was "present during the abduction and that the women and girls were subsequently killed."[6454] Although Ndayambaje did not specifically object to the vagueness of paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment regarding his alleged form of responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute,[6455] the Appeals Chamber considers that it would have been preferable for the Trial Chamber to explain why it was satisfied that Ndayambaje was put on sufficient notice that he could be held responsible for instigating the killing of the abducted women and girls.

2828. As discussed in relation to the notice of Ndayambaje's responsibility in the Mugombwa Church massacre, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Indictment only generally indicates in its charging section that the relevant counts were pursued pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute and, in paragraph 6.37 of the Indictment, that Ndayambaje was alleged to have "ordered, supervised and participated in massacres of the Tutsi population" that were committed by others. In the absence of identification of any particular acts on the part of Ndayambaje that may characterise a responsibility for instigating in paragraph 6.37, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the general reference to Article 6(1) of the Statute and the reference to participation in paragraph 6.37 put Ndayambaje on sufficient notice that he was charged with instigating the killings of the abducted Tutsi women and girls. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Indictment was defective in relation to the allegation that he instigated the massacres in which he was alleged to have participated in paragraph 6.37.

2829. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that it is clear from Witness QAR's Summary and her 1995 and October 1997 statements that Ndayambaje was alleged to have ordered or prompted the killing, when he answered the questions of the abductors regarding the fate of the Tutsi women and girls at the Virgin Mary Statue.[6456] The Appeals Chamber finds, therefore, that the failure of the Prosecution to specify the exact form of responsibility in the Indictment was cured since, when reading the Indictment in conjunction with Witness QAR's summary and prior statements, Ndayambaje was put on notice that he was alleged to have instigated the killing of the Tutsi women and girls who were abducted and brought to the Virgin Mary Statue.

Are they not the ones who are going to relate what happened when the Inkotanyi arrive?'"); Witness QAR's October 1997 Statement, p. K0052277 (Registry pagination) ("When the Bourgmestre arrived, he said: 'Were you not told that if you sweep the dirt towards your house, it heaps up and ends up chasing you out of your house? Then throw away the dirt.'"). The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief states that "[t]he massacres and the assaults thus perpetrated were the result of a strategy planned, adopted, instigated, and elaborated by political, civil and military authorities in the country both at the national and local levels." See Prosecution Pre-Trial Brief, para. 28.

2830. Finally, the Appeals Chamber finds Ndayambaje's general and undeveloped alternative argument that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him as the Prosecution failed to plead his genocidal intent in the Indictment unmeritorious since, in Count 2, in which he is charged with genocide, the Prosecution specifically pleaded that Ndayambaje acted with genocidal intent.[6457]

2831. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Witness QAF's summary and statement did not invalidate its conclusion that Ndayambaje received clear, timely, and consistent information putting him on notice that, following a meeting at Muganza commune office in June 1994, an abduction of Tutsi women and girls took place in Mugombwa Sector by assailants from Saga, that he was present during the abduction, and that they were subsequently killed. The Appeals Chamber further considers that the subsequent information provided to Ndayambaje through Witnesses QAR's summary and statements sufficiently informed him of the course of conduct on his part supporting the generally pleaded charge of instigating, thereby curing the defect in the Indictment as regards the form of responsibility.

2832. This conclusion is bolstered by a review of the conduct of Ndayambaje's defence at trial which reflects that he was provided with sufficient information to conduct meaningful investigations and prepare an effective defence against the allegation that Ndayambaje instigated the killings of the abductees at the Virgin Mary Statue. In particular, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje cross-examined Witness QAR at length regarding the abduction of Tutsi women and girls at the Virgin Mary Statue.[6458] Specifically, Ndayambaje asked questions to the witness about his presence at the Virgin Mary Statue and his behaviour during this event.[6459] Moreover, Ndayambaje called several witnesses in order to challenge and contradict the Prosecution's allegation that he was involved in the deaths of the abducted Tutsi women and girls.[6460] The Appeals Chamber also notes that Ndayambaje challenged in his closing brief the evidence regarding Witness QAR and the allegation that he was involved in the killing of Tutsi women and girls who were abducted and brought to the Virgin Mary Statue.[6461]

2833. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje was provided with sufficient information detailing the factual basis on which he was convicted in relation to the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector to prepare a meaningful defence.

5. Conclusion

2834. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Ndayambaje for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide on the basis of his statements at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 in the absence of sufficient notice that he was prosecuted on this basis. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber grants Ground 2 of Ndayambaje's appeal and reverses his conviction for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church. The Appeals Chamber will examine the impact of this finding, if any, in Section XII below.

2835. Nevertheless, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contentions that he was not charged with or lacked sufficient notice of his alleged responsibility for aiding and abetting the killings at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994, committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide at his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994, and instigating the killings of Tutsi women and girls abducted from Mugombwa Sector after his swearing-in ceremony.

2836. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ndayambaje's claim of prejudice resulting from the accumulation of events not pleaded in the Indictment.[6462] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that Ndayambaje was charged with the criminal conduct on the basis of which he was convicted and, with the exception of the charge of direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church, that the defects in the Indictment concerning these charges were curable and cured by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information. The Appeals Chamber does not minimise the extent of the Prosecution's failure to provide adequate notice in the Indictment: in respect of the four incidents for which Ndayambaje was found guilty, three were not adequately pleaded in the Indictment. However, Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the defects in the Indictment materially hampered the preparation of his defence.

2837. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Grounds 1 and 3 through 6 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

[6462] See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 17; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 22, 134, 137.

B. Bias (Ground 8)

2838. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber demonstrated bias in applying different standards when assessing Prosecution and Defence evidence.[6463] He contends that the fairness of the trial was affected by the fact that the Trial Chamber "unequally assessed the evidence depending on whether it was adduced by the Prosecution or by the Defence".[6464] He argues that this led to a miscarriage of justice and requests the Appeals Chamber "to apply the proper standard in the assessment of all the evidence on the record."[6465]

2839. Specifically, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber considered as a rule that Prosecution witnesses were credible,[6466] which led it to never reject their evidence entirely, while it "rejected a priori" Defence evidence on material facts or only relied on it to corroborate Prosecution evidence.[6467] He also argues that the Trial Chamber: (i) "wrongly and deliberately 'excused'" contradictions and inconsistencies in Prosecution evidence, while rejecting Defence evidence on the basis of "fictitious contradictions" or "futile" and "falsely incriminating reasons";[6468] (ii) adopted a fragmentary approach in its assessment of Prosecution evidence, assessing the credibility of Prosecution witnesses by event and not integrally, while determining that Defence witnesses were not credible in light of an overall assessment of their entire evidence;[6469] (iii) rejected the evidence of Defence witnesses on the basis of the "close ties" they had with him, when it did not discredit Prosecution witnesses on that basis and even found that it enhanced their credibility;[6470] and (iv) relied on the fact that Prosecution witnesses were Tutsis and survivors of the genocide to excuse inconsistencies and weaknesses in their testimonies or enhance their credibility, while considering a Defence witness not credible because the witness merely stated that victims of the massacres were both Tutsis and Hutus.[6471]

2841. In addition, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber considered as a "simple omission" the Prosecution's failure to include charges in the Indictment, while finding that the late notification of his alibi suggested that it was fabricated and tailored to suit the Prosecution case and faulting him for not cross-examining Prosecution witnesses about his alibi.[6475] He also argues that the Trial Chamber "saw nothing wrong" with the late addition of Prosecution Witness RV, while faulting him for reinstating Defence Witness MARVA to his witness list in 2008.[6476]

2842. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not disbelieve Defence witnesses because of some unexplained bias but because they were not credible.[6477] It argues that Ndayambaje's generic contention that the Trial Chamber treated Prosecution and Defence witnesses differently is undeveloped and should fail because Ndayambaje merely compared isolated aspects of the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence without showing that the evidence of Prosecution and Defence witnesses, when seen in context, required similar treatment.[6478] The Prosecution contends that Ndayambaje's claims aimed at showing that the Trial Chamber erred

[6473] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, heading 2.3.1.4 at p. 50, paras. 219-224. To illustrate his argument, Ndayambaje relies on the example of Ndayambaje Defence Witness BOZAN, whose testimony regarding the abduction of Tutsi women and girls in Mugombwa Sector was rejected by the Trial Chamber on the basis of his participation in the massacre at Mugombwa Church despite the fact that there was no evidence on the record establishing his criminal involvement. See ibid., para. 229.

In the absence of any identification of error and any substantiation in his appeal brief, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has abandoned this contention.

in its assessment of the evidence are generally undeveloped and unsupported by the record and should be summarily dismissed.[6479]

the existence of contradictions or inconsistencies,[6489] and relied on Defence evidence in establishing certain material facts[6490] and in instances where their testimonies were not corroborative of Prosecution evidence.[6491] Likewise, Ndayambaje fails to appreciate that, where relevant, the Trial Chamber expressly referred to its assessment of the evidence of Prosecution witnesses regarding particular incidents when deliberating on the evidence of the same witnesses concerning different incidents.[6492] Contrary to Ndayambaje's claim, the Trial Judgement also reflects that the relationship between Defence witnesses and Ndayambaje was just one of several factors considered by the Trial Chamber when assessing their evidence,[6493] and that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the fact that Prosecution witnesses were Tutsis or survivors of the genocide to "excuse inconsistencies and weaknesses" in their testimonies or reject the evidence of a Defence witness merely because the witness stated that the victims of the massacres were both Tutsis and Hutus.[6494]

[6489] The Appeals Chamber has addressed and dismissed Ndayambaje's specific challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Prosecution Witness QAR in the sections examining his allegations of error pertaining to Mugombwa Church, Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, and the abduction and killing of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector. See infra, Sections IX.E.1, IX.G.1, IX.H.1. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber has found no merit in Ndayambaje's challenges to the assessment of the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TP, QAL, FAU, RV, FAL, FAG, and QAQ related to Kabuye Hill and Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. See infra, Sections IX.F.2(a)(i), (iv)-(vi), IX.G.1(b), (c), (e), (f), (h), (i).

[6494] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, fn. 305, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 1243, 1405, 1448, 4710, 4746. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not reject the evidence of Ndayambaje Defence Witness SABINE on the basis that he stated that the victims were both Hutus and Tutsis but rather because the Trial Chamber found that his testimony amounted to a denial of the genocide and suffered from internal inconsistencies. See Trial Judgement, para. 4722.

[6495] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 219-221, fns. 275, 284-287, 293, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 1198, 1199, 1203-1206, 1212-1217, 1220-1223, 1228, 1230, 1243, 1389-1393, 1395-1398, 1401, 1446, 4636-4640, 4721, 4722, 4731, 4737, 4739, 4744.

[6496] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber refers to its finding that, although the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness BOZAN's responsibility in the massacres at Mugombwa Church at one point in the Trial Judgement, this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. See infra, para. 3289. The Appeals Chamber does not see how this error, which is the only one Ndayambaje points to under Ground 8 of his appeal in support of his contention, shows that the Trial Chamber wrongly and deliberately tried to discredit Defence evidence as Ndayambaje claims it did.

The Appeals Chamber also notes that Ndayambaje's contention regarding the failure to consider the detained status of Prosecution witnesses is likewise without any merit as the Trial Chamber expressly considered and discussed their status when evaluating their credibility.[6497]

2846. Neither the arguments addressed above, nor Ndayambaje's remaining submissions regarding the lack of notice in the indictment, the Trial Chamber's assessment of Ndayambaje's alibi evidence, and the timing of addition of witnesses, even if they revealed errors in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion, would lead a reasonable observer, properly informed, to reasonably apprehend bias on the part of the Trial Chamber.

2847. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to show that the Trial Chamber applied a double standard in its assessment of Prosecution and Defence evidence and to rebut the presumption of impartiality attached to the judges of the Trial Chamber. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 8 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 219, fn. 276. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber does not see how the Trial Chamber's error regarding Ndayambaje Defence Witness KEPIR's implication in the Kabuye Hill attacks discussed under Ground 7 of Ndayambaje's appeal shows bias from the Trial Chamber. See infra, Section IX.C.3(c)(vi).

[6497] The Appeals Chamber understands Ndayambaje's submissions and references as pointing to the evidence adduced by Prosecution Witnesses FAG, FAU, RV, QBZ, QAF, and FAL. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 237, fn. 331. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered the detained status of Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, RV, and QAF in the Trial Judgement. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1226, 1429, 4630, 4713. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the evidence provided by Witness QBZ. See ibid., paras. 393, 1260.

C. Alibi (Ground 7)

2848. At trial, Ndayambaje presented alibi evidence for the period of 20 through 24 April 1994, seeking to raise doubt as to his participation or involvement in: (i) the interception of refugees at Ngiryi Bridge on the morning of 20 April 1994; (ii) the subsequent massacre at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994; and (iii) the distribution of weapons, transportation of attackers, and attacks on Kabuye Hill from 22 through 24 April 1994.[6498]

2849. The Trial Chamber noted that Ndayambaje filed his notice of alibi less than one month before the commencement of his Defence case and took this into account when weighing the credibility of the alibi.[6499] The Trial Chamber ultimately concluded that Ndayambaje's alibi evidence failed to raise reasonable doubt with respect to the Prosecution case that Ndayambaje participated in the interception of Tutsis at Ngiryi Bridge on the morning of 20 April 1994, was present at Mugombwa Church for 15 minutes between about noon and 1.00 p.m. on 20 April 1994 and in the morning of 21 April 1994, and participated in the distribution of weapons, transportation of attackers, and attacks on Kabuye Hill from 22 through 24 April 1994.[6500]

2850. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the late notice of alibi, reversed the burden of proof relevant to alibi evidence, and erred in its assessment of the alibi evidence.[6501] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1. Notice of Alibi

2851. On 1 March 2005, the Trial Chamber directed Ndayambaje and his co-accused to "immediately make the necessary disclosures in accordance with Rule 67" of the Rules if they wished to raise an alibi.[6502] More than three years later, and less than one month before the commencement of his Defence case, on 29 April 2008, Ndayambaje filed a document entitled "Avis additionnel et identification des témoins d'alibi", in which he recalled that he clearly indicated in his pre-defence brief that he would be contesting his presence at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill at the time of the events based on evidence that he was at the Muganza commune office and in

Kibayi Commune successively.[6503] On 23 May 2008, the Trial Chamber considered that this filing of a "further notice of alibi" was the first specific notice of alibi filed by Ndayambaje and that it did not contain sufficient information pertaining to the addresses of certain proposed alibi witnesses.[6504]

2852. In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber recalled that Ndayambaje failed to comply with the Alibi Decision, found that the Ndayambaje Notice of Alibi was no substitute for providing the Prosecution with formal notice of alibi in accordance with the Rules, and took this failure into account when weighing the credibility of the alibi.[6505] When considering the late notice of alibi in the context of crimes committed at Kabuye Hill, the Trial Chamber stated that "the late notice the Defence gave regarding its decision to bring alibi evidence suggests that the alibi may be a fabrication, tailored to suit the Prosecution's case."[6506]

2853. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that the alibi was fabricated to rebut the Prosecution case based on the late filing of his notice of alibi.[6507] To demonstrate this error, Ndayambaje contends that the Prosecution and the Trial Chamber were informed of his defence of alibi prior to the filing of the Ndayambaje Notice of Alibi through: (i) the statements he gave in 1995 and 1996 to Belgian authorities and the Prosecution; (ii) Prosecution Witness RV's February 2004 testimony; and (iii) his pre-defence brief filed in December 2004.[6508] Ndayambaje also takes specific issue with the Trial Chamber's decision to discredit the evidence of Ndayambaje Defence Witnesses MARVA and Father Tiziano Pegoraro on the "mere suspicion" that it was fabricated based on the fact that they were not identified in the Ndayambaje Notice of Alibi.[6509] In this regard, he points out that Witness MARVA was initially withdrawn from his witness list in 2006 at the Trial Chamber's request before being reinstated as an alibi witness in June 2008.[6510] Ndayambaje adds that the Trial Chamber improperly described

Ndayambaje also argues that the Alibi Decision directing the Defence to provide particulars of the alibi reflects that the Prosecution and the Trial Chamber were aware of his alibi defence at this date and that the Trial Chamber's later 23 May 2008 Decision reflects that the Prosecution, after having reviewed summaries contained in the Ndayambaje Pre-Defence Brief, understood that Ndayambaje would be raising an alibi. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 177, 178.

Ndayambaje Defence Witnesses Stan, ANGES, BOZAN, and ALIZA as alibi witnesses and improperly used the late notice of alibi to reject their evidence.[6511]

2854. Ndayambaje further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in using the lateness of the notice of alibi to discard it as the Trial Judgement reflects that Ndayambaje received insufficient notice of several of the charges against him, including the fact that the dates of several crimes were not specified.[6512] In this context, and considering the investigative burdens on the Defence, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber's sole reliance on the late filing of the notice of alibi to justify adverse credibility findings of the alibi witnesses was "overly used" and "contrary to the spirit of the law" on alibi.[6513]

2855. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje failed not only to provide timely notice of his alibi, but that the document he filed also did not contain the particulars required to constitute a notice of alibi as required by Rule 67(A) of the Rules.[6514] It argues that, contrary to Ndayambaje's claim, neither the Belgian statements nor the Ndayambaje Pre-Defence Brief disclosed his alibi as presented at trial, and that the differences between them and the evidence adduced at trial reflect that the alibi was fabricated.[6515] The Prosecution emphasises that the failure to raise an alibi in a timely manner may suggest that it was invented to respond to the Prosecution case and contends that the contradictory and evolving nature of all of Ndayambaje's alibi evidence demonstrates that it was in fact invented.[6516]

2856. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Rule 67(A)(ii)(a) of the Rules requires the Defence to notify the Prosecution of its intent to enter a defence of alibi "[a]s early as reasonably practicable and in any event prior to the commencement of the trial". It also reiterates that the manner in which an alibi is presented may impact its credibility and further recalls that it has previously held that failure to raise an alibi in a timely manner may suggest fabrication of the alibi in order to respond to the Prosecution case.[6517]

[6516] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2054, 2062. The Prosecution further argues that if an accused testifies in support of his alibi after having heard other alibi evidence, as Ndayambaje did, the trial chamber is obligated to take this into account when assessing the weight to be given to such testimony. See ibid., paras. 2054, 2061. See also AT. 21 April 2015 p. 51.
[6517] See, e.g., Ndahimana Appeal Judgement, paras. 113, 114; Kanyarukiga Appeal Judgement, paras. 97, 101, 102; Munyakazi Appeal Judgement, para. 18.

2857. In the present case, Ndayambaje does not dispute that he did not satisfy the requirements of Rule 67(A)(ii)(a) of the Rules in providing formal notice of his alibi only several years after the close of the Prosecution case. Instead, Ndayambaje submits that the late notice he provided should not have detracted from the alibi's credibility given that elements of his alibi were present in his prior statements to Belgian authorities and the Prosecution and in other evidence before the Trial Chamber.[6518]

2858. The Appeals Chamber, however, observes that Ndayambaje has failed to provide precise references with respect to his prior statements to Belgian authorities or the Prosecution to substantiate his argument. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber sustained Ndayambaje's objection to the Prosecution using the statements to the Belgian authorities in court[6519] and that, similarly, his prior statement to the Prosecution does not form part of the trial record. Under these circumstances, Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate how any consistencies between these statements and the alibi evidence he presented at trial were relevant to the Trial Chamber's determination that the manner in which the alibi was presented could factor into its assessment of its credibility and its determination that the late notice "suggest[ed] that the alibi may be a fabrication, tailored to suit the Prosecution's case."[6520]

2859. Having reviewed the testimony of Witness RV highlighted by Ndayambaje as well as the Ndayambaje Pre-Defence Brief,[6521] the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the information they provided on Ndayambaje's alibi was so comprehensive or consistent with the evidence led at trial that it would have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from considering the manner in which the alibi was raised when assessing its credibility. Ndayambaje does not demonstrate any error in this regard.[6522]

[6518] In his reply brief, Ndayambaje further argues that the 1995 statements of Witness Stan to Journalist van den Abeele and his interview before Magistrate Damien Vandermeersch also confirmed elements of his alibi. See Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 49. Having reviewed these statements, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that information contained in these statements prevented the Trial Chamber from considering that the late notice of alibi adversely impacted its credibility.

See also* AT. 21 April 2015 p. 69 (acknowledging that Ndayambaje's statements to the Belgian authorities were not part of the record).

[6521] See Witness RV, T. 18 February 2004 pp. 9-11, 18, 19 (closed session); Ndayambaje Pre-Defence Brief, pp. 9 ("ANGES: […] The witness also knows about the activities and movements of Élie Ndayambaje and his family from April to July 1994."), 13 ("GABON: […] Moreover, around 20.4.94 he witnessed the circumstances surrounding the events when Élie Ndayambaje and his family came to seek refuge in the communal office. A few days later, he also saw Élie Ndayambaje and his family leave the communal office to go and seek refuge in the neighbouring Kibayi commune."), 18 ("KEPIR: […] The witness will also be in a position to give evidence on several events that occurred in Muganza commune office in 1994 […]."), 21 ("MARVA: […] The witness followed Élie Ndayambaje's family wherever they went in 1994.").

[6522] Ndayambaje also argues that the Prosecution had remedies available to it to prevent it from being prejudiced by the late notice of alibi and that the Prosecution only exercised them with respect to two alibi witnesses, further

2860. Ndayambaje also fails to show that the Trial Chamber erred in observing in paragraphs 1198 and 1388 of the Trial Judgement that Witnesses MARVA and Tiziano were not named in the Ndayambaje Notice of Alibi. The fact that Witness MARVA was reinstated on the witness list in June 2008, after having been initially removed in January 2006, was expressly taken into consideration by the Trial Chamber[6523] and does not demonstrate any error in its analysis. More importantly, Ndayambaje's argument that Witnesses MARVA's and Tiziano's evidence was erroneously rejected on the basis that they were not identified in the Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal ignores the several other reasons the Trial Chamber relied upon in finding that their evidence did not raise reasonable doubt in the Prosecution case.[6524]

2861. With respect to Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber incorrectly described Witnesses Stan, ANGES, BOZAN, and ALIZA as alibi witnesses and improperly used the late notice of alibi to reject their evidence, the Appeals Chamber is of the view that, because the evidence of Witnesses Stan and ANGES tended to show that Ndayambaje was not present at the time of alleged crimes, it was reasonably considered as alibi evidence by the Trial Chamber.[6525] The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber provided reasons other than the manner in which the notice of alibi was raised to find that the evidence of Witness Stan did not raise doubt with respect to the Prosecution case[6526] and that the Trial Judgement does not reflect that Witness ANGES's evidence was rejected based on the belated notice of alibi.[6527] As for Witnesses BOZAN and ALIZA, the Trial Chamber appears to have erroneously designated their demonstrating that the Trial Chamber placed too much emphasis on the late notice. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 183-185. See also Ndayambaje Reply Brief, paras. 46, 48. The Prosecution responds that the question of whether remedies were available as a result of the late notice of alibi is irrelevant to the consideration of whether the credibility of the alibi defence is impacted due to its late disclosure. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2058. The Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's argument on the basis that a trial chamber is not required to consider whether the Prosecution suffered prejudice from the late notice of alibi when assessing its credibility. See Ndahimana Appeal Judgement, para. 113; Kanyarukiga Appeal Judgement, para. 98.

[6524] With respect to Witness MARVA, the Trial Chamber observed that the witness, an employee of Ndayambaje living in his house at the time of the events, did not specify when she saw Ndayambaje on the morning of 20 April 1994 and further found that her testimony that Ndayambaje remained with her in the same room in the "IGA building" until 23 April 1994 was contradicted by other evidence and was not credible. See infra, Section IX.C.3(c)(iv). As regards Witness Tiziano, the Trial Chamber found, inter alia, his evidence contradictory and lacking credibility as to the sequence of events in the morning of 20 April 1994. See infra, Section IX.C.3(c)(ii). The Appeals Chamber notes that it has determined in Section IX.C.3(c)(i) below that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness Tiziano's alibi evidence in paragraph 1202 of the Trial Judgement but that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice. See infra, para. 2892, fn. 6600.

[6525] See Trial Judgement, paras. 1213-1217, 1390, 1394, 1413, 1415. This is implicitly acknowledged by Ndayambaje in his appeal submissions, which rely on the evidence of these two witnesses as alibi evidence. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 154, 404, 410, 413, 443, 527.

[6526] In particular, the Trial Chamber found that Witness Stan's evidence concerning Ndayambaje's alibi was not credible based on: (i) the witness's testimony about his own conduct during the events and his description of the prevailing situation; (ii) inconsistencies between his evidence and prior statements; (iii) his close friendship with Ndayambaje and because he was a "close associate" of Burundian refugees implicated in massacres at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill. See infra, Section IX.C.3(c)(iii).

testimonies relevant to 20, 21, and 23 April 1994 as alibi evidence.[6528] Notwithstanding this error, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not reject Witness BOZAN's evidence related to this period of time,[6529] and provided reasons unrelated to the notice of alibi to find that the evidence of Witness ALIZA did not raise doubt with respect to the Prosecution case.[6530] For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber placed improper emphasis on the late notice of alibi to discredit the evidence of either witness.[6531]

2862. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber considered that sufficient notice was given to Ndayambaje with respect to the timing of the attacks on Mugombwa Church,[6532] and that the Ndayambaje Indictment provided a precise date range of 20 to 24 April 1994 as it related to Ndayambaje's involvement in events leading up to the massacres at Kabuye Hill.[6533] Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate how alleged insufficient notice related to these events or investigative burdens would have prevented him from providing notice of his alibi in compliance with Rule 67 of the Rules.

2863. Additionally, Ndayambaje's arguments focus on two conditional statements in paragraphs 1198 and 1388 of Trial Judgement, which reflect that the manner in which the notice of alibi was raised could impact its credibility and the Trial Chamber's finding that the belated notice suggests that the alibi may be a fabrication. However, as discussed in greater detail below, a review of the Trial Chamber's analysis of Ndayambaje's alibi reflects that the Trial Chamber took into account several other factors in concluding that the alibi lacked credibility or that it was of insufficient probative value to raise reasonable doubt in the Prosecution case.

[6528] See Trial Judgement, para. 1196, 1415. A review of Witnesses BOZAN's and ALIZA's testimonies, as summarised by the Trial Chamber, reveals that the witnesses did not provide evidence tending to show that Ndayambaje was not present at the time of alleged crimes. See ibid., paras. 1093, 1165-1177, 1319-1327.
[6529] There is no indication in the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber did not find the witness credible with respect to the events of 20 and 21 April 1994 at Mugombwa Church. In fact, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness BOZAN's testimony as corroborative of some aspects of the Prosecution evidence. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1227, 1228, 1235. The Appeals Chamber discusses the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness BOZAN's evidence on 20 and 21 April 1994 at length in Section IX.E.4(c).

2. Reversal of the Burden of Proof

2866. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber misconstrued the standard of proof applicable to alibi evidence when stating that the Prosecution must demonstrate that the alibi evidence offered "does not negate" the presence of the accused at the critical place and time.[6535] He contends that the Trial Chamber discarded alibi evidence that did not "negate" the Prosecution evidence and improperly shifted the burden of proof on to him.[6536] He points to particular language in paragraphs 1198, 1201, 1209, 1211, 1212, 1220, 1223, 1396, 1400, 1403, and 1404 of the Trial Judgement as a reflection of this burden shifting.[6537] Ndayambaje further contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously applied a beyond reasonable doubt standard in its assessment of some alibi evidence.[6538] In this regard, he refers to the assessment of Witness MARVA's evidence and points out that the Trial Chamber assessed and discredited the alibi evidence prior to its assessment of the Prosecution evidence.[6539]

2867. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly stated the burden of proof applicable to the assessment of alibi evidence and did not reverse the burden of proof.[6540] In its view, the Trial Chamber did not use the term "negate" in the manner in which it had been found in the Zigiranyirazo case to show a reversal of the burden of proof, but used this term to explain that alibi evidence may be "irrelevant if it does not address the accused's whereabouts at the critical time".[6541] The Prosecution also contends that the language identified by Ndayambaje in the Trial Judgement does not show that the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof.[6542] It adds that the Trial Chamber did not have to address evidence in a specific order.[6543]

[6543] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2072. See also ibid., para. 2129.

2868. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when setting forth the principles concerning the assessment of alibi evidence, the Trial Chamber stated that alibi "does not carry a separate burden of proof" and that "[i]f the defence is reasonably possibly true, it must be successful."[6544] It then recalled the standard of assessing alibi evidence as articulated by the Appeals Chamber in the Zigiranyirazo case, stating that "alibi does not shift the burden of proof to the accused" and that if the alibi evidence is "'likely to raise a reasonable doubt in the Prosecution case,' and '[…] is reasonably possibly true, it must be accepted.'"[6545] It is in this context that the Trial Chamber stated that "[t]o sustain a conviction, the Prosecution must demonstrate that, regardless of the alibi, the facts as alleged are true beyond a reasonable doubt, […] by demonstrating that the alibi evidence offered does not negate the presence of the accused at the critical place and at the critical time".[6546]

2870. The Appeals Chamber also rejects Ndayambaje's contention that the particular language identified in paragraphs 1198, 1201, 1209, 1211, 1212, 1220, 1223, 1396, 1400, 1403, and 1404 of the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber required Ndayambaje to "negate" the Prosecution evidence.[6549] With respect to paragraph 1198 of the Trial Judgement, the language identified by Ndayambaje simply indicates that he did not challenge the Prosecution witnesses with the proposition that Ndayambaje was not at the scene of the crime and that this, in the view of the

[6547] Zigiranyirazo Appeal Judgement, para. 19.
[6548] Indeed, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber referred to paragraph 18 of the Zigiranyirazo Appeal Judgement when articulating this standard. There, the Appeals Chamber, in relevant respects, stated: "Where an alibi is properly raised, the Prosecution must establish beyond reasonable doubt that, despite the alibi, the facts alleged are nevertheless true. The Prosecution may do so, for instance, by demonstrating that the alibi does not in fact reasonably account for the period when the accused is alleged to have committed the crime."
[6549] Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber speculated as to his whereabouts and discarded alibi evidence from witnesses who were unable to "guarantee [Ndayambaje's] whereabouts that they were testifying to". See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 172, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 1398, 1402-1404. With the exception of his specific contentions concerning paragraphs 1403 and 1404 of the Trial Judgement which are addressed below, Ndayambaje does not develop this argument further. Having reviewed the relevant paragraphs, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this argument without further consideration as Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate any error.

Trial Chamber, detracted from the credibility of the alibi.[6550] This is consistent with the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the belated nature of the notice of alibi impacted its credibility.[6551]

2871. As for the statements identified by Ndayambaje in paragraphs 1201, 1209, and 1211 of the Trial Judgement,[6552] which are repeated in part in paragraphs 1400 and 1403, the Trial Chamber's analysis reflects that the alibi evidence concerning Ndayambaje's whereabouts on the morning of 20 April 1994 was not comprehensive and, by implication, did not reasonably account for the period when he was alleged to have engaged in the relevant conduct. The additional language identified by Ndayambaje in paragraphs 1209[6553] and 1404[6554] of the Trial Judgement does not suggest the imposition of a burden to negate the Prosecution case, but is merely an express reflection of the Trial Chamber's finding that the alibi evidence for the morning of 20 April 1994 was not reasonably possibly true.

2872. With respect to paragraphs 1212 and 1396 of the Trial Judgement, where the Trial Chamber stated that it did not find Ndayambaje's account regarding his whereabouts, and those of his mother on 20 April 1994 to be convincing, the Appeals Chamber considers that using the term "convincing" could suggest an incorrect standard for assessing alibi evidence.[6555] However, read in the context of the analysis that preceded this statement, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber was merely expressing that Ndayambaje's evidence was prima facie "not credible" and was contradicted by other evidence.[6556]

[6550] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 147, quoting Trial Judgement, para. 1198 ("[T]he Prosecution witnesses were not confronted with the Defence's assertion that Ndayambaje could not have been at the scene of the events because he had an alibi. This further detracts from the credibility of the alibi."). See also ibid., para. 205.
[6551] Trial Judgement, para. 1198. See also ibid., para. 1388.
[6552] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 147, quoting Trial Judgement, paras. 1201 ("Witness MARVA […] does not specify when she saw him for the first time that day."), 1209 ("Witness MARVA did not testify to the whereabouts of the Accused during a substantial part of the morning of 20 April 1994."), 1211 ("Recalling Witness MARVA's evidence above, it is clear that her alibi evidence does not cover the period between 12.00 p.m. and 1.00 p.m. on 20 April 1994"). In addition, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber's conclusion in paragraph 1211 that "this would be more than enough time for Ndayambaje to travel from Muganza commune office to his house and the church" is an additional reflection that it imposed a burden on the alibi to exclude the Prosecution case, rather than require the Prosecution to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt. See ibid., para. 158. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by this argument as this statement, read in context, reflects the Trial Chamber weighing the probative value of alibi evidence in light of the proximity of locations and the time to take to travel between them. See Trial Judgement, para. 1211.
[6553] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 160, quoting Trial Judgement, para. 1209 ("[T]he Chamber considers that he could have made a return trip from his home to Gisagara in the time between being seen by Witness RV at around 7.30 a.m. and hiding Chanvrier in his guest room […]. In the absence of any other explanation for the Accused's whereabouts, the Chamber considers that the Defence alibi evidence is not reasonably possibly true, and therefore finds it does not raise a reasonable doubt in the Prosecution case as regards the morning of 20 April 1994.").
[6554] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 147, quoting Trial Judgement, para. 1404 ("In the absence of any other explanation for the Accused's whereabouts, the Chamber considers the Defence alibi as regards the morning of 20 April 1994 not to be reasonably possibly true."). See also ibid., paras. 157, 158, 172.
[6555] Cf. Zigiranyirazo Appeal Judgement, para. 19.

2874. Turning to Ndayambaje's assertion that the Trial Chamber applied a beyond reasonable doubt standard in assessing some alibi evidence, the Appeals Chamber recalls that an accused does not bear the burden of proving his alibi beyond reasonable doubt.[6558] Rather the accused must simply produce evidence tending to show that he was not present at the time of the alleged crime.[6559] In this case, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness MARVA's alibi evidence pointed out by Ndayambaje does not suggest the application of an incorrect burden of proof.[6560] In the same vein, the Appeals Chamber finds that the manner in which the Trial Chamber organised its assessment of the evidence, primarily identifying and assessing the alibi evidence before assessing the merits of the Prosecution evidence, in no way reflects a failure to properly apply the applicable burden of proof.

2875. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to show that the Trial Chamber misconstrued the relevant standard of proof applicable to alibi evidence or reversed the burden of proof.

3. Assessment of Alibi Evidence

2876. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing the alibi evidence relevant to his participation in the events at Ngiryi Bridge, Mugombwa Church, and Kabuye Hill.[6561]

[6557] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 147, quoting Trial Judgement, paras. 1220 ("With respect to the alibi evidence brought by the Defence regarding the whereabouts of Ndayambaje on 21 April 1994, Witness GABON testified that Ndayambaje did not leave the commune office compound on 21 April 1994. […] Witness GABON would therefore not have had sight of Ndayambaje at all times during 21 April 1994 due to the size and layout of the commune office"), 1223 ("Given the relatively large geographical space and the large number of people present at the commune office, the Chamber does not find that the evidence of Witnesses GABON, KEPIR and MARVA that they were with Ndayambaje at all times over the course of 21 April 1994 to be credible and finds that they were not in a position to state that Ndayambaje never left the commune office on 21 April 1994."). See also ibid., para. 162; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, paras. 53, 55. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje's piecemeal quotation of these paragraphs of the Trial Judgement omits analysis showing that the Trial Chamber properly assessed alibi evidence in light of the applicable standard.

[6561] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 173, 174.

Specifically, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to consider evidence supporting his alibi; (ii) improperly relying on his relationships with the alibi witnesses; and (iii) its assessment of the alibi evidence.[6562] Ndayambaje requests that the Appeals Chamber reverse the findings of the Trial Chamber and re-assess the alibi evidence.[6563]

2877. Prior to addressing Ndayambaje's contentions, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that a trial chamber enjoys broad discretion in assessing the credibility of witnesses and in determining the weight to be accorded to each testimony.[6564] It is within the discretion of the trial chamber to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible, and to accept or reject the fundamental features of the evidence.[6565]

(a) Failure to Consider Evidence

2878. Ndayambaje contends that Witnesses ANGES and RV provided evidence that confirmed his alibi with respect to the events at Mugombwa Church but that the Trial Chamber ignored it.[6566] Specifically, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider Witness ANGES's testimony that, on 20 April 1994, she saw him at his residence in Mugombwa at 7.30 a.m. and later on the road from Mugombwa around noon, and Witness RV's testimony that Ndayambaje did not leave the Muganza commune office in the morning of 21 April 1994.[6567]

2879. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber assessed and rejected Witness ANGES's evidence relating to 20 April 1994, which lacked credibility, and that Witness RV did not testify that Ndayambaje never left the Muganza commune office in the morning of 21 April 1994.[6568]

2880. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that "Ndayambaje came to Mugombwa Church at about noon on 20 April 1994" and was there for about 15 minutes.[6569]

[6569] Trial Judgement, para. 1245. The Appeals Chamber has concluded in Section IX.E.3 below that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ndayambaje was present at Bishya trade centre on the morning of 20 April 1994 but that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice as that event was not a basis for Ndayambaje's convictions. See infra, para. 2991. In this context, the Appeals Chamber considers it unnecessary to assess the alibi in relation to Ndayambaje's presence at Bishya trade centre on 20 April 1994.

It further found established beyond reasonable doubt that Ndayambaje came to Mugombwa Church for half an hour at around 10.00 a.m. on 21 April 1994, left and returned around 10.30 a.m. before departing again.[6570]

2881. The Trial Chamber expressly set forth Witness ANGES's evidence that Ndayambaje claims is relevant to his alibi, namely that she saw Ndayambaje at his residence at around 7.30 a.m. on 20 April 1994 and later saw him driving on the road from Mugombwa towards the Muganza commune office in Remera Sector around midday.[6571] The Trial Chamber likewise noted that Witness ANGES provided alibi evidence in relation to the events at Mugombwa Church.[6572] While the Trial Chamber did not expressly discuss this evidence in the course of its deliberations, the Appeals Chamber, mindful that a trial chamber is not required to articulate every step of its reasoning for each finding it makes or refer to every piece of evidence on the trial record,[6573] is not convinced that the witness's evidence was such that it required express consideration in the Trial Judgement. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje's presence at his home around 7.30 a.m. on 20 April 1994 was not disputed.[6574] Witness ANGES's testimony that she saw Ndayambaje driving on the road from Mugombwa towards the Muganza commune office in Remera Sector around midday that day is also not necessarily inconsistent with the Trial Chamber's finding that "Ndayambaje came to Mugombwa Church at about noon on 20 April 1994" and "remained on the spot for about 15 minutes and left".[6575]

2882. Turning to the evidence of Witness RV, the Appeals Chamber notes that, while the Trial Chamber did not expressly recount the witness's evidence about Ndayambaje's presence at the Muganza commune office on the morning of 21 April 1994,[6576] it referred to the relevant portions of the transcripts that contain this evidence.[6577] The Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's decision not to address expressly this testimony in the Trial Judgement. Witness RV's evidence was general in nature and, while the witness mentioned Ndayambaje's presence at the [6572] Trial Judgement, para. 1196. Notably, the Trial Chamber recalled that "all of the alibi witnesses have close ties to Ndayambaje." See ibid., para. 1199. While the Trial Chamber did not expressly refer to Witness ANGES in this context, the witness's testimony reflects that she had known Ndayambaje for years and was a former employee of Ndayambaje who had frequent contact with him in that capacity. See Witness ANGES, T. 20 August 2008 pp. 16, 17, 19, 20, 43 (closed session).

Muganza commune office on that morning, he did not specify whether he was in a position to observe that Ndayambaje remained at the commune office the whole morning of 21 April 1994.[6578] Witness RV's testimony therefore lacked probative value as to Ndayambaje's continued presence at the Muganza commune office on 21 April 1994.[6579]

2883. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider evidence relevant to his alibi.

(b) Relationships with Alibi Witnesses

2884. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred by rejecting alibi evidence from witnesses who had professional, personal, or financial ties with him, ignoring that these would be the people with whom Ndayambaje would be in contact during a crisis and who would recall being with him.[6580]

2885. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering, among other factors, the personal ties between Ndayambaje and the alibi witnesses when assessing their credibility.[6581]

2886. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is settled jurisprudence that a witness's close personal relationship to an accused is one of the factors which a trial chamber may consider in assessing the witness's evidence.[6582] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering these circumstances or in placing improper emphasis on them when assessing the alibi evidence.[6583] In particular, the Appeals Chamber notes that the relationship between alibi witnesses

[6578] See Witness RV, T. 18 February 2004 pp. 19-22 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber also observes that Witness RV was not questioned about Witness QAR's testimony that Ndayambaje came to Mugombwa Church on the morning of 21 April 1994.
[6579] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber also dismissed alibi evidence that, similar to Witness RV's evidence, lacked probative value. See Trial Judgement, para. 1223.
[6580] Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 72; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 149, 152, 168, 395, 400, 402, 405, 406; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 52. See also AT. 21 April 2015 p. 25.

[6582] See, e.g., Kanyarukiga Appeal Judgement, para. 121; Karera Appeal Judgement, para. 137; Bikindi Appeal Judgement, para. 117.
[6583] Ndayambaje has pointed to no specific error in the Trial Chamber's reflection of the evidence concerning his relationships with alibi witnesses. Ndayambaje merely argues that the Trial Chamber observed that he did not have any de jure or de facto control over Witness GABON, suggesting that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing his relationship with the witness. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 402, 403. However, Ndayambaje does not dispute the evidence concerning the nature of their relationship prior to 1994 nor demonstrate how the absence of de jure or de facto authority over the witness in 1994 prevented a reasonable trier of fact from noting their prior relationship when assessing Witness GABON's testimony.

and Ndayambaje was just one of several factors considered by the Trial Chamber when assessing their evidence.[6584] The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this contention.

(c) Assessment of the Alibi Evidence

2887. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing and discrediting his evidence as well as evidence of Witnesses Tiziano, Stan, MARVA, GABON, and KEPIR.[6585] The Appeals Chamber will assess Ndayambaje's challenges as they relate to him and each witness in turn.[6586]

(i) Ndayambaje

2888. The Trial Chamber found that the evidence of Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano that Ndayambaje was at his home at 9.00 a.m. on 20 April 1994 was contradicted by Witness RV and was therefore not credible.[6587] In this context, it noted that "Ndayambaje's testimony must be treated with appropriate caution as he has a personal interest in demonstrating that he was not present at Ngiryi Bridge on the morning of 20 April 1994."[6588] The Trial Chamber also did not find Ndayambaje's account as to why he did not evacuate his mother on 20 April 1994 convincing, which cast further "doubt on the version of events given by Ndayambaje."[6589] It also considered that the evidence of Ndayambaje as well as the evidence of Witnesses GABON, KEPIR, and MARVA that Ndayambaje never left the Muganza commune office on 21 April 1994 was not credible.[6590]

2889. Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber violated the presumption of innocence by assuming, without any proof, that he had an incentive to minimise his role in the events.[6591] With respect to his alibi for 20 April 1994 in particular, he submits that the Trial Chamber: (i) used insignificant contradictions in his evidence and that of Witnesses RV and Tiziano to undermine the credibility of his alibi; (ii) contradicted itself by finding an artificial contradiction between Witness RV's evidence, on one hand, and Ndayambaje's and Witness Tiziano's evidence, on the other, after having determined that their testimonies were coherent regarding their movements and how they met; and (iii) erred in finding him not credible based on the evidence that he did not immediately evacuate his mother on 20 April 1994.[6592] As regards his alibi for 21 April 1994, Ndayambaje contends that his evidence that he did not leave the Muganza commune office on 21 April 1994 was corroborated by Witnesses GABON, MARVA, and KEPIR and was improperly rejected based on an incorrect assessment of the size of the commune office compound due to the Trial Chamber's failure to conduct a site visit.[6593]

[6586] In several instances, Ndayambaje generally challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of the alibi evidence without articulating or identifying how it erred. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 443, 477, 479, 527, 529, 579. The Appeals Chamber has assessed Ndayambaje's challenges pertaining to specific witnesses and evidence when developed elsewhere in his appeal but has declined to address his general and unsubstantiated arguments which fail to satisfy the formal requirements applicable on appeal. See supra, Section II.

2890. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was entitled to consider Ndayambaje's incentive to deny criminal conduct and that, contrary to his claim, the Trial Chamber considered several other factors when finding that his evidence was not credible.[6594]

2891. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's statement that "Ndayambaje's testimony must be treated with appropriate caution as he has a personal interest in demonstrating that he was not present at Ngiryi Bridge on the morning of 20 April 1994"[6595] followed the Trial Chamber's assessment of Ndayambaje's and Witness Tiziano's evidence placing Ndayambaje at his home around 9.00 a.m.[6596] The Trial Chamber did not find this aspect of Ndayambaje's and Witness Tiziano's testimonies credible as it was contradicted by Witness RV's evidence.[6597] The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered the possibility of Ndayambaje's incentive to provide exculpatory evidence in the context of all the relevant evidence and that the Trial Chamber's consideration does not denote a violation of the presumption of innocence.[6598]

2892. Moreover, while Ndayambaje argues that the inconsistencies in his and Witness Tiziano's evidence and that of Witness RV are insignificant, he fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretionary power in assessing this evidence.[6599] In addition, although Nevertheless, the source of a document may be relevant to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the reliability and credibility of that document. Where such a document is tendered by an accused, a Trial Chamber may determine, for example, if the accused had the opportunity to concoct the evidence presented and whether or not he or she had cause to do so. This is part of the Trial Chamber's duty to assess the evidence before it.").

[6599] The Trial Chamber observed that Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano testified that Ndayambaje went to Witness Tiziano's home around 6.00 a.m., departed to see Witness RV, and returned to Ndayambaje's home around 9.00 a.m. See Trial Judgement, para. 1200. While Witness RV confirmed that Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano came to see him around 6.00 a.m., he testified to going to Ndayambaje's home at 7.30 a.m. and informing Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano that he was going to Butare, which the Trial Chamber found contradicted the evidence of Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano that they waited in vain for Witness RV outside Ndayambaje's residence at 9.00 a.m. in order to

Ndayambaje correctly notes that the Trial Chamber reached contradictory conclusions as to whether his evidence and that of Witness Tiziano was inconsistent, he fails to demonstrate how the error occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[6600]

2893. With respect to Ndayambaje's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in emphasising that he did not evacuate his mother from the Mugombwa health centre with the rest of his family when they left for the Muganza commune office on 20 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber considers that, in determining whether his alibi was reasonably possibly true, it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to consider and assess his claim that he fled with his family to seek refuge in the commune office on 20 April 1994, yet failed to bring his mother with them despite her proximity to Ndayambaje's home. While Ndayambaje contends that no evidence demonstrated that the situation was sufficiently alarming when he evacuated his family to the commune office or that he was responsible for and consequently abandoned his mother, he ignores the Trial Chamber's observation that three nuns in charge of the health centre fled Mugombwa parish in the afternoon of 20 April 1994.[6601]

2894. Turning to Ndayambaje's contention regarding the assessment of his alibi for 21 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje points to no evidence demonstrating that the Trial Chamber incorrectly described the Muganza commune office as a "relatively large geographical space" or stated that there were a "large number of people present" on that day.[6602] As discussed in go to Kabuga to address the population. See idem. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness RV's evidence was materially inconsistent with the evidence of Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano.

[6600] The Trial Chamber recalled that Witness Tiziano testified that Ndayambaje came to see him around 6.00 a.m. on 20 April 1994, that they went to see Witness RV, that they left the commune office together, that the witness dropped Ndayambaje near his home at an unspecified time before 9.00 a.m., and that the witness later saw Ndayambaje again at the latter's home around 9.00 a.m. See Trial Judgement, para. 1200. The Trial Chamber noted this evidence was "consistent with Ndayambaje's account of his movements on the morning of 20 April 1994" and that Witness RV confirmed that Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano did come to see him at 6.00 a.m. See idem. However, the Trial Chamber later concluded that Witness Tiziano's "testimony contradicts that of Ndayambaje and Witness RV regarding Ndayambaje's movements on 20 April 1994." See ibid., para. 1202. To support its conclusion, the Trial Chamber highlighted Witness Tiziano's evidence that "he went to Ndayambaje's house at about 9.30 a.m. and left shortly afterwards to return to the parish", that this "was the last time that he saw Ndayambaje", and that he "further testified that when he drove to the Muganza commune office at around 11.30 a.m. to report the situation to the authorities, he was alone." See idem. The Trial Chamber found that this evidence "contradicts Ndayambaje's testimony that he went to [Witness] Tiziano's house at 6.00 a.m. and that they went to the Muganza commune office together to warn the authorities of the insecurity in the area" and that "Ndayambaje's testimony is in concordance with that of Witness RV who testified that he was woken at 6.00 a.m. by Ndayambaje and Father Tiziano warning him of insecurity in the area." See idem. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's analysis is contradictory in this regard. See also Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2241. However, the error has no impact on the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the evidence of Ndayambaje and Witness Tiziano on Ndayambaje's presence at his home at around 9.00 a.m. is not credible, as their evidence that they returned to Ndayambaje's home only around 9.00 a.m. remains inconsistent with Witness RV's evidence that he saw them there around 7.30 a.m. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1200, 1202.

[6602] See Trial Judgement, para. 1223. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied, in part, on a sketch provided by Ndayambaje when stating that the Muganza commune office comprises a number of buildings. See Trial Judgement, para. 1220, referring to Exhibit D694 (Sketch Map, by Ndayambaje).

detail below in Section IX.D of this Judgement, Ndayambaje also fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's decision not to conduct a site visit.[6603] The Appeals Chamber considers that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to consider that the relatively large area of the Muganza commune office, coupled with the large number of people present on 21 April 1994, supported the conclusion that Witnesses KEPIR, GABON, and MARVA were not in a position to state that Ndayambaje never left the commune office on 21 April 1994.[6604]

2895. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of his evidence regarding his whereabouts on 20 and 21 April 1994.

(ii) Witness Tiziano

2896. The Trial Chamber found that Witness Tiziano's testimony that he had asked those seeking refuge in Mugombwa Church to leave because it was not safe and, on cross-examination, that he asked them to lay down their weapons because he did not think the refugees would be attacked in the church was contradictory.[6605] The Trial Chamber also stated that "Witnesses QAR and FAU gave first-hand testimony that Father Tiziano attempted to, or succeeded in locking the doors to the church in the morning of 20 April 1994 before leaving the site."[6606] On this basis, it later concluded that, "[c]onsidering the testimon[ies] of Witnesses QAR and FAU placing Father Tiziano at the massacre site and Father Tiziano's incentive to minimise his role, in addition to his testimony that he did not request help for those seeking refuge in the church", Witness Tiziano's testimony was "not credible as to the sequence of events in the morning of 20 April 1994."[6607]

2897. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber assessed Witness Tiziano's evidence out of context and erred in finding that: (i) his evidence was contradictory; (ii) he did not want to seek help for the refugees in Mugombwa Church; and (iii) he had an incentive to minimise his role in the events.[6608] In particular, Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses QAR and FAU that Witness Tiziano locked refugees inside the church to discredit Witness Tiziano, as it had not yet assessed Witnesses QAR's and FAU's testimonies which were contradictory and lacked credibility.[6609] He submits that Witness FAU's evidence is hearsay and reflects that he only arrived at the church on 22 April 1994, and therefore could not corroborate Witness QAR's evidence of this event, which she testified happened on 20 April 1994.[6610]

[6604] Ndayambaje argues that Witness RV partially corroborates his alibi that he never left the Muganza commune office on 21 April 1994. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, fn. 632. However, Ndayambaje also observes that Witness RV testified about going to Mugombwa Church with Ndayambaje that same afternoon. See ibid., para. 418. Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in disbelieving his evidence that he never left the commune office on 21 April 1994.

2898. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Witness Tiziano's testimony was contradictory and that he had an incentive to minimise his role in the events.[6611] It argues that Ndayambaje's contentions that the Trial Chamber erred in discussing Witnesses QAR's and FAU's evidence after assessing Witness Tiziano's evidence and that the evidence of Witnesses QAR and FAU was contradictory or lacked credibility are without merit.[6612] The Prosecution further points to evidence that Witness Tiziano could have sought help from authorities at the Muganza commune office yet instead returned with a person implicated in the attack on Mugombwa Church.[6613]

[6609] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 152, 202, 388-391. In particular, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber ignored evidence that only one of the several doors at the church could be locked from the outside and that refugees left the church after Witness Tiziano left, undermining the conclusion that Witness Tiziano locked refugees in the church. See ibid., paras. 390-395. See also Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 53; AT. 21 April 2015 pp. 23-25, 65.

2900. Turning to Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the "unassessed" testimonies of Witnesses QAR and FAU to find that Witness Tiziano locked persons seeking refuge in Mugombwa Church, the Appeals Chamber, having reviewed the evidence cited by the Trial Chamber, finds no error in the Trial Chamber's statements or assessment of this evidence, which reasonably shows that Witness Tiziano sought to keep refugees locked in the church.[6618] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that Witness FAU's evidence reflects that Witness Tiziano sought to lock the church on 22 April 1994 rather than 20 April 1994 or that it was hearsay rather than direct evidence.[6619] Furthermore, to the extent that the Trial Chamber's subsequent statement that Witnesses QAR and FAU gave "convincing eyewitness testimony […] that Father Tiziano locked those seeking refuge inside the church"[6620] is inconsistent with their evidence that he attempted to lock the door or other evidence that locking the door would not lock the entire church, the Appeals Chamber considers that any factual inaccuracy would not have occasioned a miscarriage of justice in the present context. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber considers that, whether or not Witness Tiziano actually locked those seeking refuge inside the church, a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that he was implicated in the attack and that, consequently, he had an incentive to minimise his role in it.[6621]

2901. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the Trial Chamber discussed the evidence of Witnesses QAR and FAU after discussing that of Witness Tiziano in the Trial Judgement cannot reasonably be interpreted as an indication that the Trial Chamber had not assessed their evidence prior to referring to it when assessing Witness Tiziano's testimony. Read as a whole, the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that the Trial Chamber expressly considered the reliability of Witnesses QAR's and FAU's evidence based on other evidence in the record and assessed their testimonies in light of several credibility challenges.[6622]

2902. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate any error in the assessment of Witness Tiziano's alibi evidence that would warrant the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.

(iii) Witness Stan

2903. The Trial Chamber found that Witness Stan's evidence concerning Ndayambaje's alibi was not credible based on: (i) his testimony about his own conduct during the events and his descriptions of the prevailing situation; (ii) inconsistencies between his evidence and prior statements; (iii) his close friendship with Ndayambaje and because he was a "close associate" of Burundian refugees implicated in massacres at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill.[6623]

2904. Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting Witness Stan's evidence on the basis of having "insinuated" that he was an accomplice witness.[6624] He further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting Witness Stan as a result of an unsupported finding that he had authority over Burundian refugees responsible for attacking Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill[6625] and in finding that the witness failed to inform the authorities of the prevailing insecurity, which was contradicted by his evidence.[6626] According to Ndayambaje, the Trial Chamber further erred in using insignificant contradictions between the witness's prior statements and testimony to discredit him, although it found similar contradictions in Prosecution evidence minor or immaterial.[6627] He emphasises that the witness, a friar, had devoted his life to the care of refugees and that the Trial Chamber's credibility findings are inconsistent with the fact that he was later rewarded for his service to humanity.[6628]

2905. The Prosecution generally responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in assessing contradictions in Ndayambaje Defence evidence and that Ndayambaje has not shown how inconsistencies within Witness Stan's testimony were so similar to those in the Prosecution witnesses' evidence that they should have been treated alike.[6629] It further submits that the Trial Chamber was correct in treating Witness Stan's evidence with caution.[6630] 2906. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not "insinuate" that Witness Stan was an accomplice,[6631] nor did it err in its assessment of the witness' alibi evidence.

2907. The Trial Chamber did not suggest that it viewed Witness Stan as an accomplice, but stated that it had doubts about Witness Stan's credibility, noting that he had testified that attacks against Tutsis had started by 18 April 1994, yet two days later he left two Tutsis, Mr. Fidèle and his pregnant wife, at a roadblock manned by armed soldiers.[6632] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witness Stan did not attempt to find out what happened to these Tutsis but believed that they may have been killed.[6633] Ndayambaje does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in considering Witness Stan's conduct in the midst of the genocide when assessing the witness's credibility. Moreover, Ndayambaje's contention that Witness Stan did apprise himself of what happened to the two Tutsis he had left at the roadblock is not supported by the witness's testimony, which merely reflects that, when he returned to the roadblock, he was informed that they had gone to the hospital.[6634] Ndayambaje demonstrates no error in the Trial Chamber's statement that Witness Stan "did not attempt to find out what happened to them but […] believed they may have been killed", as nothing in the witness's evidence suggests otherwise.[6635]

2908. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber stated that it found weak Witness Stan's testimony that he could not have disarmed the Burundian refugees from the Saga Camp even though he knew that they had participated in killings on or around 20 April 1994, and that machetes were necessary to the work of the refugees.[6636] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness Stan was not just a "simple priest", but worked in education in the camp and "therefore exercised a degree of authority over the refugees".[6637] It further noted that the Burundian refugees were not working in the fields at the time, casting doubt on Witness Stan's statement that the machetes were for the refugees' work.[6638] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, nothing in these statements suggests that the Trial Chamber treated Witness Stan as an accomplice. Moreover, in support of his contention that the Trial Chamber baselessly attributed to Witness Stan duties which were not his, Ndayambaje simply points to other evidence offered by the witness without demonstrating that the Trial Chamber erred in its reflection or analysis of the witness's testimony in this regard, or in expressing doubts about why he chose not to try to disarm the Burundian refugees.[6639]

2909. In addition, the Trial Chamber expressed doubts about Witness Stan's evidence that he did not inform the prefectoral authorities that the Burundian refugees involved in the killings were armed with traditional weapons because he "had never heard of any measure by a bourgmestre to take away a person's tools".[6640] The Trial Chamber also stated that Witness Stan, while he had the ability to move freely in Butare prior to 25 April 1994, "made no attempt to notify the authorities of the unrest" until the Kibayi commune office secretary requested that Witness Stan accompany him on a visit to the authorities.[6641] Again, the Appeals Chamber considers that these statements cannot reasonably be construed as "insinuations" that Witness Stan was an accomplice. Furthermore, while Ndayambaje contends that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, Witness Stan's trip of 20 April 1994 to Butare with the Kibayi commune office secretary demonstrates that he sought to inform authorities of the insecurity situation,[6642] the Appeals Chamber finds that he simply disagrees with the Trial Chamber's interpretation of the evidence without demonstrating that the Trial Chamber inaccurately recalled it[6643] or abused its discretion when considering it.[6644]

2910. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Ndayambaje presents no arguments as to how the Trial Chamber erred in identifying or assessing inconsistencies between Witness Stan's testimony and prior statements and fails to substantiate how the Trial Chamber's approach was unreasonable

[6639] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 407. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber found Witness Stan not credible because of his association with Burundians responsible for the massacres at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill. See ibid., para. 405. However, because Ndayambaje fails to develop this argument, that the Appeals Chamber dismisses it without further consideration.

And did you know at that time where the bourgmestre of Kibayi commune was? A. No, I did not know. It was the secretary of Kibayi who told me that the bourgmestre had gone to Butare. Q. In the light of this information and facing this request from the communal secretary, what did you decide to do? A. […] I dropped the supplies in a store below the road. I turned, and together we went back to Butare to inform the bourgmestre of Kibayi on the disorder at the communal office."), T. 23 September 2008 p. 60 ("Q. Now, just to round up on these series of questions, Mr. Witness, did you make any attempt to see the préfet of Butare with regard to disarming Burundian refugees, those who were armed with machetes or what you term were just tools for their usage? A. The Burundian refugees were not armed. They had agricultural instruments. And I did not inform. I would not have known how to go about informing the préfectural authorities.").
[6644] Ndayambaje appears to argue that the Trial Chamber also erred in its analysis in paragraph 1215 of the Trial Judgement in concluding, similarly with paragraph 1392 of the Trial Judgement, that Witness Stan failed to notify the authorities. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 405. Paragraph 1215 of the Trial Judgement generally tracks the analysis in paragraph 1392 of the Trial Judgement. For the reasons detailed above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contention.

in light of its analysis of the Prosecution evidence in the other paragraphs of the Trial Judgement to which he points.[6645]

2911. Finally, Ndayambaje's arguments concerning Witness Stan's position as a friar and the fact that he was later rewarded for his service to humanity fail to demonstrate how the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence that formed part of the trial record.

2912. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness Stan's alibi evidence.

(iv) Witness MARVA

2913. In assessing Witness MARVA's alibi evidence, the Trial Chamber observed that the witness, an employee of Ndayambaje living in his house at the time of the events,[6646] did not specify when she saw Ndayambaje on the morning of 20 April 1994.[6647] It further found that her testimony that Ndayambaje remained with her in the same room in the "IGA building" until 23 April 1994 was contradicted by other evidence and was not credible.[6648]

2914. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness MARVA did not testify about the time she saw Ndayambaje on the morning of 20 April 1994.[6649] In addition, he argues that the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness MARVA's testimony that Ndayambaje remained in the IGA building of the Muganza commune office until 23 April 1994 was contradicted by the evidence of Witnesses GABON and KEPIR as well as Ndayambaje was based on a misunderstanding of the various locations in the Muganza commune office and Witness MARVA's evidence.[6650] In support of this contention, Ndayambaje argues that a site visit, complemented by Exhibits P38, D553, D554, and D694, would have demonstrated how small the location was and how there was no contradiction in their evidence.[6651] Moreover, Ndayambaje contends that Witness MARVA's testimony that she remained in the same room with Ndayambaje only concerned 21 April 1994.[6652]

2915. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was entitled to find that Witness MARVA's evidence did not raise a reasonable doubt in the Prosecution case as she could not account for Ndayambaje's whereabouts for a substantial part of the morning of 20 April 1994 and her testimony as to Ndayambaje's whereabouts was contradicted by other Defence witnesses.[6653] It further contends that the evidence and a site visit would not demonstrate that Ndayambaje could be inside the IGA building, as testified to by Witness MARVA, and outside it at the same time, as testified to by Witnesses KEPIR and GABON.[6654]

2916. Having reviewed the testimony referred to by Ndayambaje, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that Witness MARVA did not specify the time when she saw Ndayambaje on the morning 20 April 1994.[6655]

2917. The Appeals Chamber further finds that Ndayambaje's argument that a site visit, complemented by Exhibits P38, D553, D554, and D694, would have prevented the Trial Chamber from discrediting Witness MARVA's evidence is speculative and does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's analysis of this evidence.[6656] Moreover, while Ndayambaje argues that Witness MARVA only testified that Ndayambaje remained in a room in the IGA building on 21 April 1994, a review of the relevant evidence cited by the Trial Chamber[6657] does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's interpretation of Witness MARVA's evidence that Ndayambaje remained in the room until Saturday 23 April 1994[6658] or its conclusion that this evidence contradicted the evidence of Witnesses KEPIR and GABON as well as Ndayambaje's testimony that he did not remain in that room during this entire period.[6659]

2918. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness MARVA's alibi evidence.

(v) Witness GABON

2919. The Trial Chamber found that the evidence of Witness GABON, a former employee of Ndayambaje,[6660] that he slept 27 minutes between 20 and 24 April 1994 "unrealistic" in this respect or not "plausible"[6661] and considered that his alibi evidence was not credible.[6662]

2920. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting Witness GABON's testimony based on his evidence that he only slept for 27 minutes over the course of a four day period.[6663] In this regard, he submits that the French version of the transcript reflects that the witness stated he slept approximately 20 to 25 minutes, and not precisely 27 minutes, and that the Trial Chamber placed too much emphasis on the incorrect English translation and this secondary aspect of Witness GABON's testimony.[6664] Ndayambaje also contends that the Trial Chamber was in no position to find that Witness GABON would not have been able to see Ndayambaje at all times on 21 April 1994 as it did not conduct a site visit.[6665]

2921. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly assessed Witness GABON's evidence.[6666]

So your evidence is he never went outside to get some fresh air, to use the bathroom facilities, to check on his vehicle, that he remained inside that room for 24 hours? Have I understood you? A. the witness's evidence was to account for Ndayambaje's whereabouts during that specific period.[6667] While Ndayambaje highlights variances between the English and French transcripts as to the precise amount of time Witness GABON slept and argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the incorrect English version, he does not demonstrate that the identified variance is material to the Trial Chamber's analysis.[6668] Finally, Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate how the absence of a site visit rendered the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness GABON's evidence unreasonable.[6669]

2923. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness GABON's alibi evidence.

(vi) Witness KEPIR

2924. In relevant parts of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found that the fact that Witness KEPIR, a friend of Ndayambaje, was implicated in the massacres at Kabuye Hill by Prosecution Witnesses EV and FAU had a bearing on Witness KEPIR's credibility.[6670]

2925. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in fact by relying on the evidence of Witnesses EV and FAU to conclude that Witness KEPIR was among the attackers at Kabuye Hill, and then discrediting his evidence on this basis.[6671] He argues that Witnesses EV's and FAU's identification of Witness KEPIR was merely based on the presence of a vehicle and points to evidence that contradicts Witness FAU's description of Witness KEPIR's vehicle to argue that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness FAU's evidence in this regard.[6672]

2926. The Prosecution does not directly respond to these arguments.

2927. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly stated that Witnesses EV and FAU provided "eyewitness accounts" that "implicated" Witness KEPIR in the massacres at

Kabuye Hill and concluded that this had "a bearing on Witness KEPIR's credibility".[6673] The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that Witness FAU did not identify Witness KEPIR at Kabuye Hill and that Witness EV's testimony is too equivocal to be reasonably relied upon as an "eyewitness" account of Witness KEPIR's presence at Kabuye Hill.[6674] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that "eyewitness accounts" "implicated" Witness KEPIR in attacks on Kabuye Hill based on Witnesses FAU's and EV's evidence.[6675]

2928. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error does not affect the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness KEPIR's alibi evidence was not credible or did not raise reasonable doubt in the Prosecution case regarding Ndayambaje's whereabouts from 20 to 24 April 1994.[6676] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness KEPIR was a friend of Ndayambaje and had previously reported to him on professional matters;[6677] circumstances which Ndayambaje does not dispute. The Appeals Chamber has found that the Trial Chamber did not err in weighing this type of evidence when assessing the credibility of witnesses.[6678] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber correctly recalled Witness FAU's evidence that Ndayambaje used Witness KEPIR's vehicle to pick up weapons for use at Kabuye Hill.[6679] While Ndayambaje points to evidence that Witness KEPIR's vehicle was a colour other than that described by Witness FAU,[6680] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that a reasonable trier of fact could not have considered Witness FAU's evidence that Witness KEPIR's car was used in the process of obtaining weapons to be used in an attack when assessing Witness KEPIR's credibility. More importantly, Ndayambaje fails to explain how the Trial Chamber erred when concluding that it did not find credible Witness KEPIR's evidence that he was with Ndayambaje at all times over the course of 21 April 1994 and concluded that he was not in a position to state that Ndayambaje never left the Muganza commune office on that day.[6681]

2929. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness KEPIR's alibi evidence that would warrant the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.

4. Conclusion

2930. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relation to his alibi and, accordingly, dismisses Ground 7 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

[6681] Trial Judgement, para. 1223.

D. Denial of Site Visits (Ground 12)

2931. On 23 September 2004, the Trial Chamber denied a request for site visits made by the Prosecution on the ground that, if the visits were to be made, it was "desirable that they be made at the end of the presentation of the cases of both Parties" and invited the parties to make such a request at the end of the presentation of their cases.[6682] In June 2008, the Prosecution again moved the Trial Chamber to conduct site visits,[6683] to which Ndayambaje responded that the request was premature.[6684] On 26 February 2009, the Trial Chamber dismissed the Prosecution's request for site visits in Rwanda, concluding that the visits were no longer necessary since: (i) a considerable number of exhibits, including photographs and maps, had already been tendered to assist the Trial Chamber's familiarisation with the relevant locations; (ii) visiting the sites, which unlikely remained in the same condition 14 years after the events in question, may not provide much assistance in the discovery of the truth and fair determination of the relevant issues; and (iii) the sites proposed were too numerous, may have had "extraordinary logistical and cost implications for the Tribunal", and the visits may not have been "completed in a short period of time."[6685]

2932. In his closing arguments, Ndayambaje claimed that the Trial Chamber's refusal to authorise site visits, in particular to Kabuye Hill, led "to a great incomprehension of the sites and, therefore, have caused a great prejudice".[6686] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted that Ndayambaje did not describe the prejudice he allegedly suffered as a result of the Trial Chamber's refusal to conduct site visits or explain the purported "incomprehension" of the sites caused by it.[6687] The Trial Chamber recalled that it had considered a number of video and photo exhibits as well as sketches relating to Kabuye Hill and concluded that Ndayambaje's allegation of prejudice was not established and that there was no reason to reconsider the Site Visits Decision.[6688]

2933. On appeal, Ndayambaje submits that the reasons advanced by the Trial Chamber for its refusal to conduct the site visits constitute an error of law which led to errors of fact causing a miscarriage of justice.[6689] In particular, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in:

(i) making findings regarding the state of the relevant sites due to the passage of time that were speculative and in disregarding the fact that many locations and geographic landmarks remained unchanged even after 14 years;[6690] (ii) concluding that the analysis of photographs, maps, and sketches alone was sufficient to enable the Trial Chamber to familiarise itself with the locations of the relevant sites;[6691] and (iii) "sacrific[ing]" trial fairness for logistical and financial considerations.[6692] Ndayambaje also contends that it was "incomprehensible and unacceptable"[6693] for the judges composing the Trial Chamber to refuse to conduct site visits in the present case when they conducted such visits in other cases at the Tribunal, even more than 14 years after the relevant events, acknowledging the importance of those visits to the assessment of the evidence.[6694]

2934. Ndayambaje further submits that visiting the sites was necessary to enable the Trial Chamber to acquire a better understanding of the evidence.[6695] In his view, because the Trial Chamber lacked knowledge of the relevant sites, it erred in its assessment of the evidence, which resulted in a number of erroneous findings concerning multiple sites and caused him prejudice.[6696] Ndayambaje requests that the Appeals Chamber disregard all the erroneous findings made by the Trial Chamber resulting from its lack of knowledge of the locations.[6697]

The Appeals Chamber notes that, under Ground 12 of his appeal, Ndayambaje broadly impugns the Trial Chamber's factual findings in relation to all of his convictions, without indicating the manner in which these findings were flawed, save for a specific example related to the descriptions of the layout and size of the Muganza commune office by Defence witnesses. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 279, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 1223; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 113. on appeal, Ndayambaje does not explain his failure to seek admission of additional visual aids to further clarify matters of geography and fails to support his allegations of errors of fact by any explanations or evidence.[6700]

2936. Ndayambaje replies that he never opposed a site visit but instead argued that the Prosecution's request of 2008 was premature at the time as he had not yet presented his defence.[6701] At the appeals hearing, Ndayambaje further argued that he joined the Prosecution's request for site visits, adding a number of sites to be visited.[6702]

2937. The Appeals Chamber notes that, when the Prosecution moved the Trial Chamber to conduct site visits in March 2004, Ndayambaje responded that he agreed with the principle and the necessity of a site visit.[6703] However, when the Prosecution made another request for site visits in June 2008, Ndayambaje responded that the request was premature as the presentation of the Defence evidence was still ongoing.[6704] Ndayambaje also explicitly expressed his "serious reservations about the utility of such a site visit 14 years after the events, insofar as the configuration of the sites (vegetation, new constructions, renovation of buildings, roads and trails, etc.) [was] no longer the same".[6705]

2939. The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's decision to deny reconsideration of the Site Visits Decision. Indeed, in his closing submissions, apart from vaguely expressing "regrets that the Trial Chamber did not authorise a visit to Kabuye because this decision does affect the overall view of the Defence" and alleging that it "le[d] to a great incomprehension of the sites", particularly as regards Kabuye Hill, Ndayambaje did not advance any argument to substantiate his assertion that he was prejudiced by the Trial Chamber's refusal to authorise site visits, nor did he seek to demonstrate a clear error of reasoning or that the reconsideration of the impugned decision was necessary to prevent an injustice.[6708] Ndayambaje neither elaborated how his Defence case was affected by the fact that the Trial Chamber did not visit the relevant sites nor, as noted by the Trial Chamber, did he "explain how or why there [was] 'incomprehension' of the sites".[6709] Notably, only on appeal did Ndayambaje argue, inter alia, that the "analysis of the photos, sketches and maps tendered in the trial was insufficient to help [the Trial Chamber] to know and familiarize itself with the locations" and that "[o]nly a site visit would have enabled it to really understand the layout of the sites and avoid making a ruling in the abstract."[6710]

2940. The Appeals Chamber also observes that, on appeal, Ndayambaje complains about the fact that the Trial Chamber did not undertake site visits without explaining why he did not move the Trial Chamber to conduct one after the end of the presentation of his case and advances arguments against the Site Visits Decision that were never raised at trial.[6711] Recalling that a party should not be permitted to refrain from raising a matter which was apparent during the course of the trial to raise it only on appeal in the event of an adverse finding against that party,[6712] the Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje has waived his right to introduce this issue as a valid ground of appeal and will accordingly dismiss Ndayambaje's submissions in this regard without further consideration.

2941. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 12 of Ndayambaje's appeal in its entirety.

[6708] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a chamber may reconsider a decision it has previously made if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to do so to prevent an injustice. See Munyagishari Appeal Decision, para. 13; Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 203; Barayagwiza 4 February 2005 Appeal Decision, p. 2.

E. Mugombwa Church (Grounds 9 in part, and 17)

2942. The Trial Chamber found that, by his presence on 20 and 21 April 1994 at Mugombwa Church, Muganza Commune, and given his considerable moral authority, Ndayambaje encouraged the attacks on the Tutsis taking refuge inside the church that took place on these two days, resulting in the deaths of hundreds, if not thousands, of Tutsis.[6713] It also found that Ndayambaje's public addresses at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 directly and publicly incited the commission of genocide.[6714] On this basis, the Trial Chamber convicted Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide as well as aiding and abetting genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute.[6715]

2943. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence related to this event and in finding that he "publicly" incited the commission of genocide and possessed genocidal intent.[6716] The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church as he lacked notice that he was charged on this basis and, consequently, reversed his conviction for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church.[6717] In these circumstances, Ndayambaje's contentions regarding his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide and his genocidal intent have become moot and need not be addressed.[6718] With respect to his convictions for aiding and abetting the killings at the church, Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its assessment of Witness QAR's evidence; (ii) ignoring contradictions in the Prosecution evidence; (iii) failing to consider the lack of corroboration; and (iv) its assessment of Defence evidence.[6719] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1. Assessment of Witness QAR's Evidence

2944. In finding that Ndayambaje participated in the events at Mugombwa Church, the Trial Chamber relied primarily on the evidence of Prosecution Witness QAR.[6720] It noted that Witness QAR placed Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994.[6721] It found her evidence compelling, consistent, and detailed and further noted that it was corroborated by Prosecution and Defence witnesses in several respects.[6722] The Trial Chamber also considered alibi evidence, inconsistencies, and contradictions in Witness QAR's evidence, and potentially contradictory Prosecution evidence in the Trial Judgement and concluded that this evidence did not cast doubt on the witness's credibility.[6723]

2945. The Appeals Chamber will examine Ndayambaje's submission that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QAR's evidence that she saw him at Mugombwa Church, before turning to his contentions that the Trial Chamber failed to apply the standards applicable to identification under difficult circumstances and ignored material inconsistencies and contradictions within Witness QAR's evidence.[6724]

(a) Presence of Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church

2946. The Trial Chamber recalled Witness QAR's testimony that, through one of the church's broken windows, she saw Ndayambaje outside the church about 10 metres away from where she stood at about noon on 20 April 1994.[6725] It also noted that Witness QAR testified to seeing Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church at 10.00 a.m. on 21 April 1994 about 10 metres away from her position inside the church.[6726] The Trial Chamber relied on these aspects of Witness QAR's evidence to find that Ndayambaje was present at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994.[6727]

2947. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QAR saw him at Mugombwa Church on 20 April 1994 through one of the church's broken windows.[6728] He argues that: (i) Exhibit P41 contradicts Witness QAR's evidence and shows that the witness could not possibly see him from the position where she claimed she stood; (ii) Witness QAR could not see outside because of the opacity of the window panes; (iii) Witness QAR could not have seen him from behind a window as stones were being thrown and she would have been exposing herself to the stones.[6729] Ndayambaje also contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the testimonies of Witnesses BOZAN and Tiziano that the panes of a single window were broken at 12.30 p.m., which contradicts Witness QAR's testimony that the panes of several windows were broken at 12.00 p.m.[6730]

2948. Ndayambaje further submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QAR saw him at Mugombwa Church on 21 April 1994 since neither her viewpoint, nor the crowd inside and outside the church, would have allowed the witness to see and hear everything she described.[6731] He contends that Witness QAR acknowledged her inability to see outside the church and to identify the person who threw grenades at the church on 21 April 1994.[6732] Moreover, Ndayambaje argues that the witness's implausible account of his distribution of weapons at the church, which was excluded by the Trial Chamber, shows Witness QAR's lack of credibility and that, having found her evidence related to his swearing-in ceremony not credible, the Trial Chamber had no reasons to believe the witness in relation to Mugombwa Church.[6733] In his view, the Trial Chamber further erred in assessing Witness QAR's testimony in an isolated manner and not in light of the other events she testified about.[6734]

2950. The Prosecution responds that Witness QAR gave consistent, detailed, and clear testimony, supported by video, of her vantage point from where she saw Ndayambaje on 20 April 1994.[6736] It submits that: (i) Exhibit P41 actually corroborates the witness's testimony; (ii) Witness QAR would not have been exposing herself to stone throwers while observing Ndayambaje through the window since the stone throwers stopped upon Ndayambaje's arrival; and (iii) the Trial Chamber merely "observed" that Witness QAR was consistent in her previous statements and that, in any case, relying on consistent portions of the witness's prior statements to bolster her credibility was permissible in order to rebut the charge of fabrication of testimony.[6737]

2953. The Appeals Chamber further observes that, contrary to Ndayambaje's claim, the Trial Chamber expressly considered the evidence of Witnesses BOZAN and Tiziano as to the number of church windows broken and when they were broken.[6742] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness BOZAN testified to only one window being broken but considered that his view of the church was restricted to one side of the church and concluded that his evidence therefore did not cast doubt on Witness QAR's testimony that more than one window was broken.[6743] Ndayambaje does not show how the Trial Chamber erred in reaching this finding. The Trial Chamber also noted Witness Tiziano's evidence that the windows in the church were broken by about 12.30 p.m. and found that this corroborated Witness QAR's evidence.[6744] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate how [6744] See Trial Judgement, para. 1228. See also Tiziano Pegoraro, T. 9 September 2008 pp. 11, 13. The Appeals Chamber also notes Ndayambaje's argument that Witness Tiziano's testimony that, upon returning to the church, he saw "les vitres brisées de l'église […]" was erroneously translated into English in "the broken windows of the church." Ndayambaje argues that the word "vitre" in French translates into "pane" in English and should therefore not have been translated into "window". See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 339. The Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact, whether relying on the French or English version of Witness Tiziano's testimony, could have found that his testimony corroborated Witness QAR's account of stones being thrown at the church and the breaking of the church's windows. Compare Tiziano Pegoraro, T. 9 September 2008 p. 11 (English) with ibid., p. 13 (French).

the evidence of Witnesses QAR and Tiziano is inconsistent in this regard, as Witness Tiziano testified that he came back to the church "[t]oward 12.30" and that upon arrival before entering the parish he saw that the windows of the church were broken,[6745] which is not inconsistent with Witness QAR's testimony that the windows were broken around noon.[6746] Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the relevant testimonies of Witnesses BOZAN and Tiziano is therefore rejected.

2954. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber considers that Witness QAR's evidence that she could not see the person who threw grenades at the church on 21 April 1994 does not establish, as Ndayambaje argues, that she would not have been able to see him on that day. The Appeals Chamber observes that the witness testified being at different locations at the moment she saw Ndayambaje and at the moment when the unidentified person threw grenades at the church.[6747] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not find Witness QAR's account regarding the distribution of weapons implausible, but declined to consider it due to a lack of notice.[6748] Ndayambaje does not substantiate his contention that this particular aspect of Witness QAR's testimony was implausible and how it relates to the witness's ability to observe the events at Mugombwa Church on 21 April 1994. Similarly, Ndayambaje does not explain why the rejection of Witness QAR's testimony related to his swearing-in ceremony, which was based on elements that were specific to this very aspect of the witness's testimony,[6749] required the Trial Chamber to also reject her evidence regarding events at Mugombwa Church.[6750] His general and undeveloped argument that the Trial Chamber considered Witness QAR's testimony in an "isolated manner" also fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QAR's testimony pertaining to Mugombwa Church.[6751]

2955. Turning to Ndayambaje's argument regarding the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QAR's prior consistent statements, the Appeals Chamber recalls that prior consistent statements cannot be used to bolster a witness's credibility, except to rebut a charge of recent fabrication of testimony.[6752] In the Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, to which Ndayambaje points, the Appeals Chamber also clarified that "there is a difference between using a prior consistent statement to bolster the indicia of credibility observed at trial and rejecting a Defence challenge to credibility based on alleged inconsistencies between testimony and earlier statements. The former is a legal error, while the latter is simply a conclusion that the Defence's arguments are not persuasive."[6753]

2956. In his closing brief, Ndayambaje challenged Witness QAR's credibility on the basis of inconsistencies between her testimony and earlier statements and argued, in particular, that Witness QAR did not see him at the church and that her claim was "pure fabrication".[6754] It is in the context of addressing one of these alleged inconsistencies in the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber "observe[d] that [Witness QAR] is consistent in her previous statements that she saw Ndayambaje at the site."[6755] The Appeals Chamber considers that it is clear from the Trial Judgement that Witness QAR's prior consistent statements were not used to bolster her credibility, but to rebut Ndayambaje's challenges of fabrication of evidence and lack of credibility of the witness. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not impermissibly rely on Witness QAR's prior consistent statements to bolster her credibility.

2957. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted Witness QAR's evidence of seeing Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994.

(b) Identification under Difficult Circumstances

2958. Ndayambaje submits that identification done by a witness in circumstances such as those of Witness QAR required caution and corroboration.[6756] He contends that, in such a situation, the Trial Chamber was required to fully reason its decision, identify the factors it relied upon in support of the identification, and adequately address the factors impacting negatively on the reliability of the identification evidence, which it failed to do.[6757] Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber merely stated that it had considered the circumstances surrounding the identification made by Ndayambaje refers to the following circumstances: (i) the church was full of refugees who had to protect themselves from attackers who were throwing stones and could not have exposed themselves near the windows; (ii) Witness QAR moved about "relentlessly" in the crowd; (iii) Witness QAR was close to the door leading to the sacristy; and (iv) Witness QAR did not see Ndayambaje arrive at the church but was merely informed of his arrival by the other refugees. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 348, fn. 494.

Witness QAR but never provided a reasoned opinion for accepting the identification made by the witness.[6758]

2959. The Prosecution responds that corroboration of Witness QAR's identification evidence was not required and that, in any event, her evidence was corroborated on many accounts.[6759] It submits that the Trial Chamber made no error in its assessment of Witness QAR's identification evidence as it noted that the witness had no difficulty seeing Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church, that she did not have to identify him as many refugees in the church recognised him, and that, in any event, she knew him since childhood and correctly identified him in court.[6760]

2960. Ndayambaje replies that identification of an accused under difficult circumstances cannot automatically be inferred on the sole basis of the witness having prior knowledge of the accused and reiterates that a fully reasoned opinion in such situations is required.[6761]

2961. The Appeals Chamber finds that the fact that Witness QAR's identification of Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church was not corroborated did not prevent the Trial Chamber from relying on this aspect of her evidence. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to decide in the circumstances of each case whether corroboration is necessary and whether to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[6762]

2963. The Trial Chamber did not state that Witness QAR's identification of Ndayambaje was made under difficult circumstances.[6765] Rather, it found that Witness QAR saw Ndayambaje outside the church about 10 metres away from where she stood on 20 April 1994 through one of the church's broken windows, and from about 10 metres away from her position inside the church on 21 April 1994.[6766] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that any of the elements Ndayambaje points to demonstrate that the circumstances in which Witness QAR identified Ndayambaje required further reasoning from the Trial Chamber.[6767] While Witness QAR had sought refuge in Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994, her identification of Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church did not occur in circumstances that would have made Ndayambaje difficult to identify.[6768]

2964. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QAR's identification evidence.

(c) Inconsistencies and Contradictions within Witness QAR's Evidence

2965. The Trial Chamber noted discrepancies between Witness QAR's testimony at trial and her prior statements to Tribunal investigators.[6769] It found Witness QAR's explanations that the discrepancies were a result of her statements not being properly recorded by the investigators to be reasonable and accepted them.[6770] It concluded that the discrepancies between Witness QAR's testimony and her prior statements were not material and did not cast doubt on her credibility.[6771]

2966. Ndayambaje submits that no reasonable trier of fact would have accepted Witness QAR's evidence in light of the numerous material inconsistencies and contradictions between her prior statements and her testimony at trial, which undermined her credibility.[6772] Ndayambaje lists a number of inconsistencies and contradictions between Witness QAR's testimony and her prior statements which, he argues, concerned key material facts and should have led the Trial Chamber to reject the witness's evidence.[6773] According to Ndayambaje, it was against all logic that the Trial

[6767] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 348, fn. 494. The Appeals Chamber has already rejected Ndayambaje's argument that Witness QAR could not have been standing by the church's window. See supra, para. 2951.
[6768] The Appeals Chamber also notes that the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAR knew Ndayambaje since her childhood, a finding Ndayambaje does not challenge. See Trial Judgement, para. 1227.

[6773] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 336, 364, 365. Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber failed to take into account that the previous statements of Witness QAR, although recorded within a few months of each other, are contradictory. See ibid., para. 372.

Chamber considered that these contradictions were not material and that they were attributable to errors on the part of the investigators who recorded Witness QAR's prior statements.[6774]

2967. Ndayambaje further contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the contradictions within Witness QAR's testimony in court regarding whether she saw him coming from Remera around 12.00 p.m. or whether she did not see him arrive and was informed of his arrival by the other refugees.[6775] In his view, the witness's contradictory versions demonstrate the implausibility of her account.[6776] He also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in failing to take into account that Witness QAR was hostile when asked about the discrepancies in her evidence.[6777]

2968. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber examined all the inconsistencies raised by Ndayambaje and that he does not demonstrate that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to accept Witness QAR's explanation for them or to consider that they were not material.[6778]

2969. Ndayambaje replies that Witness QAR's allegation that the investigators erred in taking her statements is not believable since it is improbable that the investigators could have made so many mistakes and since the witness signed the statements after they were read back to her.[6779]

2970. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber addressed and found that the inconsistencies between Witness QAR's testimony and prior statements related to the following matters were not material: (i) whether Witness QAR saw Ndayambaje arrive in a vehicle or was informed of his arrival by others; (ii) whether Ndayambaje was holding a gun or not; (iii) whether or not Witness QAR saw who distributed grenades to the attackers, who threw the grenade, and knew the number of grenades thrown; and (iv) whether Witness QAR arrived at the church at 8.00 a.m. or 2.00 p.m. on 20 April 1994.[6780] Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the first three discrepancies in Witness QAR's evidence referenced above concern key material facts and that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that they were not material and did not cast doubt on the witness's credibility.

2971. By contrast, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could not have considered that the discrepancy regarding the time Witness QAR arrived at the church on [6778] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2171-2177. The Prosecution submits that some of the inconsistencies show, if anything, that Witness QAR did not try to incriminate falsely Ndayambaje because her testimony in court was less incriminating than what was recorded in her statements. See idem.

[6779] Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 126. See also ibid., para. 125.
[6780] See Trial Judgement, paras. 1238-1241. See also ibid., paras. 1038, 1043.

20 April 1994 was not material since it related directly to the witness's ability to see Ndayambaje at the church at around noon.[6781] However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it is within the trial chamber's discretion to determine whether an alleged inconsistency is sufficient to cast doubt on the witness's credibility.[6782] In the case at hand, the Trial Chamber expressly accepted Witness QAR's testimony that she arrived at Mugombwa Church at around 8.00 a.m. because it found her explanation that the discrepancy regarding her time of arrival resulted from the improper recording of her statement by Tribunal investigators.[6783] Ndayambaje questions the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's decision by primarily relying on other trial judgements in which trial chambers allegedly rejected similar explanations.[6784] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber's assessment of the appropriate weight and credibility to be accorded to the testimony of a witness is made on a case-by-case basis.[6785] Ndayambaje's submissions fail to recognise that the circumstances in the cases he refers to are distinct[6786] and do not demonstrate the unreasonableness of the Trial Chamber's conclusion concerning this particular inconsistency.[6787]

2972. The Appeals Chamber also considers that Ndayambaje's argument that it is improbable that the investigators made so many mistakes while taking Witness QAR's statements is speculative and unsubstantiated. Furthermore, his reliance on the fact that the witness signed the relevant statements, thereby verifying their content in his view, ignores the witness's explanation as to the conditions under which she signed one of the statements[6788] and that she was not questioned on whether the contents of the other statement were read back to her before she placed her thumbprint on it.[6789] Ndayambaje does not establish that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted Witness QAR's explanation for the discrepancies between her testimony and prior statements.

[6785] See Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, para. 47.
[6786] The Appeals Chamber notes that, in all cases cited by Ndayambaje, the trial chambers' decisions to reject the evidence of a particular witness were not based solely on the inconsistencies with the witness's previous statements or refusal to accept the witness's explanation that the previous statements had not been properly recorded, but also on the basis of a global assessment of the witness's evidence and credibility. See Gatete Trial Judgement, paras. 208-215; Bagilishema Trial Judgement, paras. 613-636; Bizimungu et al. Trial Judgement, paras. 211, 216.
[6787] Cf. Ntawukulilyayo Appeal Judgement, para. 15 ("It is only when the evidence relied on by the Trial Chamber could not have been accepted by any reasonable trier of fact, or where the evaluation of the evidence is wholly erroneous, that the Appeals Chamber can substitute its own finding for that of the Trial Chamber").
[6788] Witness QAR explained that the person who had driven her to the place where her May 1997 statement was given retrieved her before she had finished giving her statement. She also explained that her statement was read to her and that she disagreed with certain aspects of it but was told by the investigators that it would not be a problem so she quickly signed it because she had to leave. See Witness QAR, T. 20 November 2001 pp. 30, 40.
[6789] Ndayambaje submits that an entry on Witness QAR's 1995 Statement shows that its content was read to the witness and that she approved it. However, this aspect was not put to the witness by Ndayambaje who, instead, simply asked the witness whether she was shown such a statement and whether she put her thumbprint on it. She was not questioned on Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's error in finding that the discrepancy was not material occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

2973. With regard to the inconsistencies in Witness QAR's evidence concerning whether the distribution of weapons took place on "Wednesday" 20 April 1994 or "Thursday" 21 April 1994 and whether Ndayambaje was present when the doors of the church were broken that were not expressly addressed by the Trial Chamber,[6790] the Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje simply enumerates inconsistencies and argues that so many inconsistencies raise doubt as to the witness's credibility without developing or substantiating how these particular inconsistencies undermined the credibility of the witness.[6791] In these circumstances, and considering that minor inconsistencies commonly occur in witness evidence without rendering the evidence unreliable, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred by not expressly discussing these inconsistencies, which do not concern the fundamental features of the witness's evidence.[6792]

2974. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider the contradiction in Witness QAR's testimony regarding whether she saw Ndayambaje arriving at Mugombwa Church or was informed of his arrival. Not only does the Trial Judgement reflect that the Trial Chamber did not disregard this discrepancy,[6793] but the Appeals Chamber also considers that this discrepancy did not concern a key material fact and did not prevent a reasonable trier of fact from concluding that the fundamental features of Witness QAR's evidence were credible.[6794]

2975. Finally, with respect to the issue of Witness QAR's purported hostility during cross-examination, the Appeals Chamber considers that, after having reviewed the entirety of the witness's cross-examination, none of the portions of the witness's testimony referenced by whether its content was in fact read back to her before she placed her thumbprint on it. See Witness QAR, T. 19 November 2001 pp. 135-139.

[6790] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 365. As for the alleged inconsistency regarding Ndayambaje's alleged intervention to allow the Hutu women and their children to get out of the church, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje does not provide any references in support of his claim. The Appeals Chamber declines to entertain this argument further. See supra, para. 35.

[6791] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 365, 366 (French).

[6792] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that Witness QAR explained these inconsistencies in the same manner as she explained the discrepancies expressly addressed in the Trial Judgement and for which the Trial Chamber accepted her explanation. See Witness QAR, T. 21 November 2001 pp. 47, 54-57; Trial Judgement, para. 1240.

[6793] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted the discrepancy in Witness QAR's testimony on whether or not she saw Ndayambaje arriving at Mugombwa Church when summarising her evidence. It also discussed the same discrepancy in relation to Witness QAR's previous statement in its deliberations, concluding that it was not material and did not cast doubt on the witness's credibility. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1238, 1240, 1241.

Ndayambaje revealed conduct that required explicit consideration on the part of the Trial Chamber.[6795]

2976. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QAR's credibility in light of inconsistencies within her evidence and the witness's demeanour.

2. Contradictions in Prosecution Evidence

2977. Ndayambaje submits that Witness EV's testimony that Ndayambaje was at Ngiryi Bridge in the morning of 20 April 1994 where he intercepted refugees attempting to flee to Burundi before he left for Gisagara and Kabuye directly contradicts Witness QAR's testimony that Ndayambaje was at Mugombwa Church at about noon on 20 April 1994.[6796] He argues that since Witnesses EV's and QAR's testimonies are contradictory and mutually exclusive, the Trial Chamber was not in position to conclude which one was true and should have given Ndayambaje the benefit of the doubt, instead of speculating about distances and times.[6797] Ndayambaje also underlines that Witness RT placed Ndayambaje at Ngiryi Bridge around 11.00 a.m. on 21 April 1994.[6798]

2978. Ndayambaje further contends that Witness QAR's testimony that she saw Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church in the commune vehicle on 20 and 21 April 1994 cannot possibly be true as it was contradicted by the evidence of Witnesses EV and RV.[6799] Ndayambaje asserts that since Muganza Commune had a single vehicle in 1994, the one described by Witness QAR, he could not have possibly been in Butare and at the commune office, at Mugombwa Church, and in "Gisagara-Ngiryi-Kabuye" at the same time.[6800] He submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider these contradictions in the Prosecution evidence.[6801]

2979. The Prosecution responds that Witness EV's testimony can be read as saying that he saw Ndayambaje for the first time on 22 April 1994 and that, in any event, he should not have been relied upon.[6802] It also submits that Witness RT's testimony does not conflict with Witness QAR's evidence because both witnesses provided estimates of the times when they saw Ndayambaje.[6803] It underlines that the evidence does not show that Ndayambaje would not have had time to travel between Mugombwa Church and Ngiryi Bridge on 21 April 1994.[6804] The Prosecution further responds that Witness QAR saw Ndayambaje driving a "white vehicle" which was not necessarily the commune vehicle.[6805] It submits that Ndayambaje mischaracterises the evidence of the other witnesses regarding this vehicle.[6806]

2980. Ndayambaje replies that, even though Witnesses QAR and RT only provided estimates as to when they saw him, this does not eliminate the fact that it was impossible for him to have been at the two locations in different cars at the stated times because of the distance between them.[6807] Ndayambaje also emphasises that Witness QAR could only have been referring to the Muganza commune vehicle.[6808]

2981. The Appeals Chamber observes that, while in support of his submission under this ground of appeal Ndayambaje relies on the Trial Chamber's understanding of Witness EV's timeline of events with respect to his movements on 20 April 1994, he argues in other parts of his appeal that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Witness EV's timeline for the events at Ngiryi Bridge as the witness's testimony reflects that he saw Ndayambaje at Ngiryi Bridge on Thursday, 21 April 1994 and not Wednesday, 20 April 1994 as found by the Trial Chamber.[6809] The Prosecution does not dispute that the Trial Chamber misconstrued Witness EV's testimony about his timeline.[6810] As discussed in further detail in Section IX.F.1 below, a careful review of Witness EV's testimony shows that the witness testified that he was intercepted at Ngiryi Bridge by Ndayambaje on 21 April 1994 and that the Trial Chamber therefore erred in finding that Witness EV testified that the interception at Ngiryi Bridge took place on 20 April 1994.[6811] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument under this ground of appeal that Witness EV's testimony on Ndayambaje's presence at Ngiryi Bridge contradicted Witness QAR's testimony that Ndayambaje was at Mugombwa Church for approximately 15 minutes around noon on 20 April 1994.

[6806] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2189-2192. The Prosecution submits that, while Witness RT testified to sending his driver in a car to Mugombwa Church on the morning of 21 April 1994, he did not testify sending the driver in the commune vehicle. It also points out that Witness RT testified to seeing Ndayambaje in a red Toyota-type single cabin truck and not the white commune vehicle. See ibid., paras. 2190, 2192.

2982. As regards Ndayambaje's reliance on Witness RT's alleged contradictory testimony, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that the witness's account of Ndayambaje's presence at Ngiryi Bridge at around 11.00 a.m. pertained to 20 April 1994 or 21 April 1994.[6812] Regardless of whether Witness RT's account pertained to 20 or 21 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that, given that both witnesses only provided estimates and that undisputed evidence reflects that the travel between the locations took approximately one hour,[6813] Witness RT's evidence of seeing Ndayambaje at 11.00 a.m. at Ngiryi Bridge is not incompatible with Witness QAR's evidence that she saw Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church around noon on 20 April 1994 and between 10.00 and 10.30 a.m on 21 April 1994. Ndayambaje's argument that the witnesses referred to different cars also fails to take into account the Trial Chamber's finding that Ndayambaje had access to both a white and a red vehicle at the time.[6814]

2983. The Appeals Chamber further notes that Ndayambaje misinterprets the Trial Judgement concerning the use of the Muganza commune vehicle. The Trial Chamber did not find that Ndayambaje came to Mugombwa Church in the Muganza commune vehicle[6815] and, contrary to Ndayambaje's suggestion, Witness QAR did not testify to seeing him at the church in the commune vehicle. The witness merely referred to a "white vehicle".[6816] Having reviewed the relevant parts of Witness QAR's testimony, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by Ndayambaje's argument that the witness must have been referring to the Muganza commune vehicle. Even assuming that the vehicle Witness QAR saw was the commune vehicle, Ndayambaje's submissions fail to show that he could not have used this vehicle on 20 and 21 April 1994 to go to Mugombwa Church.[6817]

2984. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Ndayambaje has failed to show any contradiction between Witnesses EV's, RV's, and RT's evidence and the testimony of Witness QAR.

[6817] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje merely refers to the summary of Witness RV's evidence in support of his assertion that Witness RV used the commune vehicle throughout the day on 20 April 1994. Having reviewed the evidence pointed out by Ndayambaje, the Appeals Chamber does not find that such evidence conclusively establishes that Witness RV used the commune vehicle during the entire day on 20 April 1994 or went to Butare with that particular vehicle on that day. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 345; Trial Judgement, paras. 1065-1071; Witness RV, T. 16 February 2004 p. 41 (closed session), T. 17 February 2004 pp. 67-69 (closed session), T. 18 February 2004 p. 7 (closed session). Similarly, Ndayambaje's suggestion that Witness RV sent his driver to Mugombwa Church in the commune vehicle and that this precluded Ndayambaje from using this vehicle at 10.00 a.m. on 21 April 1994 is not supported by the evidence to which he refers. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 345, fn. 488, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 1070. See also ibid., paras. 359, 418.

3. Lack of Corroboration

2985. The Trial Chamber found that aspects of Witness QAR's evidence on the events of 20 and 21 April 1994 were corroborated by: (i) Witnesses BOZAN and Tiziano, who confirmed that the windows of the church were broken; (ii) Witnesses FAU and MAJIK, who also testified about the absence of policemen, priests, and soldiers; (iii) Witnesses JAMES, ALIZA, and FAU, who corroborated the time the attack was launched on 20 April 1994; (iv) Witness FAG, who gave evidence consistent with Witness QAR as to the time the attack was launched on 21 April 1994, that grenades were thrown at the church, and that the attackers set the church on fire; (v) Witnesses FAG and JAMES, who confirmed the presence of Burundian refugees among the assailants and that attackers tried to break down the church door; (vi) Witnesses BOZAN and JAMES, who identified some of the same attackers as Witness QAR; and (vii) Witness JAMES, who also testified that Witness QAR was spared after the intervention of the Hutu father of her child.[6818]

2986. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness FAG to corroborate Witness QAR's evidence on the events at Mugombwa Church.[6819] He contends that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise appropriate caution in assessing Witness FAG's credibility, noting that the witness was awaiting a Gacaca decision when he testified in this case and that he had been released from custody in exchange for confessions in which he had hidden his involvement in the massacre at Mugombwa Church.[6820] Ndayambaje also argues that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on Witness FAG's testimony concerning the events of 20 April 1994 as his evidence did not pertain to 20 April but to 21 April 1994.[6821]

2987. In addition, Ndayambaje submits that, while the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAR's evidence was corroborated in several aspects, it failed to find corroboration for her testimony that

The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje also challenges under this ground of appeal the credibility of Witness FAU's evidence and notes that these challenges have been addressed above in the section related to Ndayambaje's challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings on his alibi in relation to Witness Tiziano. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 350-356; supra, paras. 2899-2902.
[6820] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 356. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 142, 144, 145, 151.

he was present at the church and involved in the crimes committed there.[6822] According to him, the Trial Chamber erred in using the evidence of Witnesses FAU, FAG, JAMES, and MAJIK to corroborate Witness QAR's evidence since these witnesses did not see Ndayambaje at the church.[6823] Ndayambaje also submits that, having made factual findings premised on this error, it is impossible to know if the Trial Chamber's findings regarding his presence and his involvement in the crimes at the church would have been identical without such corroboration.[6824]

2988. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was correct in finding that Witness FAG corroborated several aspects of Witness QAR's accounts.[6825] It argues that the Trial Chamber's mistake in stating that Witness FAG saw Ndayambaje on 20 April instead of 21 April 1994 has no impact on the Trial Chamber's findings as the witness provided relevant evidence on the attack on Mugombwa Church of 21 April 1994.[6826] According to the Prosecution, the absence of corroboration of Witness QAR's evidence on Ndayambaje's presence at Mugombwa Church is insufficient to invalidate the Trial Chamber's findings.[6827]

2989. With respect to the credibility of Witness FAG, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered all the information Ndayambaje points to on appeal[6828] and stated that it would treat his testimony with caution considering that the witness may have had an incentive to lie during his testimony in order to obtain preferential treatment in connection with his Gacaca sentence.[6829] Ndayambaje simply disagrees with the manner the Trial Chamber exercised caution without demonstrating any error in the exercise of its discretion in the assessment of the evidence.

2990. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not find that Witness FAG corroborated Witness QAR's testimony with regard to events on 20 April 1994 but regarding the circumstances of the attack that was launched on 21 April 1994.[6830] The Trial Chamber also expressly stated that it accepted Witness FAG's evidence insofar as it related to the massacre at Mugombwa Church on 21 April 1994 and his account of how he came to find himself at the church.[6831]

[6827] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2195.
[6828] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness FAG participated in the attacks on Mugombwa Church and that, at the time of his testimony, he was awaiting a decision by a Gacaca court. It further took into consideration that, while giving detailed information regarding the identities of the assailants and the sequence of events at Mugombwa Church in his testimony, Witness FAG had not mentioned the attacks on Mugombwa Church in his confession to the Rwandan authorities. It accepted the witness's explanation that he omitted this information because "he was afraid, and there were things he could not talk about at the time", and accepted the witness's evidence insofar as it related to the massacre at Mugombwa Church on 21 April 1994 and his account of how he came to find himself at Mugombwa Church. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1224, 1226, 1236.
[6829] Trial Judgement, para. 1226.

2991. A review of Witness FAG's testimony, as correctly summarised by the Trial Chamber, reflects that the witness testified that Ndayambaje spoke with community leaders at Bishya trade centre on 21 April 1994.[6832] However, in its conclusions on the events at Mugombwa Church, the Trial Chamber found that "on the morning of 20 April 1994, Ndayambaje spoke with community leaders at Bishya trade centre who immediately thereafter directed men at Bishya, including Witness FAG, to Mugombwa Church".[6833] The Trial Chamber provided no reference to the evidence upon which it based this finding and a review of the Trial Chamber's summary of the evidence relevant to Mugombwa Church reveals that no witness provided evidence about such a meeting taking place on 20 April 1994.[6834] As pointed out by Ndayambaje, the Trial Chamber's finding appears to be based on Witness FAG's evidence.[6835] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the meeting between Ndayambaje and community leaders at Bishya trade centre took place on 20 April 1994 since Witness FAG's evidence, as accepted by the Trial Chamber, indicates that the meeting took place on 21 April 1994.[6836] The Appeals Chamber nonetheless finds that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice as none of Ndayambaje's convictions rests on the misstatement of the date when Ndayambaje spoke with community leaders at Bishya trade centre.[6837]

2992. Ndayambaje is correct in his assertion that the Trial Chamber relied exclusively on Witness QAR to conclude that Ndayambaje was present at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and for his involvement in the events there.[6838] The Trial Chamber expressly noted that Witnesses FAU, FAG, JAMES, and MAJIK did not testify to the presence of Ndayambaje at the church on these dates, but found that this aspect of their evidence was not incompatible with

[6831] Trial Judgement, para. 1236.
[6832] In the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber repeatedly referred to Witness FAG's evidence in the context of Mugombwa Church as pertaining to 21 April 1994. The Trial Chamber noted that the witness did not provide a specific date for the events at the church but relied on the witness's explanation that the events took place on the Thursday two weeks after the death of President Habyarimana. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1048-1056. See also ibid., para. 1048, fn. 2088; Witness FAG, T. 1 March 2004 pp. 6, 15 (closed session), T. 2 March 2004 pp. 16-19.
[6833] Trial Judgement, para. 1245.
[6834] See Trial Judgement, paras. 1038-1193. The Prosecution does not dispute that no witness provided evidence about such a meeting taking place on 20 April 1994. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2205, 2318.
[6835] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 358; Trial Judgement, paras. 1048-1056.
[6837] The Trial Judgement clearly reflects that, in finding Ndayambaje guilty in relation to the crimes perpetrated at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994, the Trial Chamber relied on evidence of Ndayambaje's presence at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994, his addresses to the attackers while at the church, and his moral authority. See Trial Judgement, paras. 5756-5758, 5995-6002, 6064-6066, 6107, 6108, 6175, 6176.

Witness QAR's testimony.[6839] Ndayambaje fails to appreciate that nothing in the Statute or the Rules prevents a trial chamber from relying on uncorroborated evidence. A trial chamber has the discretion to decide in the circumstances of each case whether corroboration is necessary and whether to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[6840] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the evidence of Witness QAR was so lacking in reliability and credibility that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on it without corroboration.

2993. As to Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding corroboration of Witness QAR's evidence from witnesses who did not corroborate the key fact of his presence at Mugombwa Church, the Appeals Chamber recalls that two prima facie credible testimonies need not be identical in all aspects or describe the same fact in the same way in order to be corroborative.[6841] Every witness presents what he has seen from his own point of view at the time of the events, or according to how he understood the events recounted by others.[6842] It follows that corroboration may exist even when some details differ between testimonies, provided that no credible testimony describes the facts in question in a way which is not compatible with the description given in another credible testimony.[6843] Recalling that the Trial Chamber found that the evidence of Witnesses FAU, FAG, JAMES, and MAJIK was not incompatible with Witness QAR's testimony as to Ndayambaje's presence at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994,[6844] Ndayambaje's argument that the evidence of these witnesses could not be found to corroborate that of Witness QAR because they only corroborated peripheral aspects of her testimony lacks merit.

2994. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Ndayambaje's meeting with community leaders at Bishya trade centre took place on 20 April 1994.[6845] However, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error has no impact on Ndayambaje's convictions. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Ndayambaje's arguments related to an alleged lack of corroboration.

4. Assessment of Defence Evidence

2995. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting the evidence of Defence Witnesses JAMES, MAJIK, and BOZAN related to Mugombwa Church.[6846]

(a) Witness JAMES

2996. The Trial Chamber observed that Witness JAMES testified that he saw Witness QAR at a bar on the evening of 21 April 1994 and knew that she spent the night at a nearby house, contradicting Witness QAR's evidence that she spent the night of 21 April 1994 at the priest's house.[6847] The Trial Chamber determined that Witness JAMES's testimony that Witness QAR was not telling the truth about where she spent the night of 21 April 1994 did not contradict Witness QAR's evidence in any material aspect.[6848] The Trial Chamber accepted Witness QAR's evidence that she spent the night of 21 April 1994 at the priest's house, noting that "it is possible that Witness JAMES was mistaken and that he in fact saw her on the following evening."[6849] It concluded that Witness JAMES's evidence did not cast doubt on Witness QAR's credibility.[6850]

2997. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting without any valid reason Witness JAMES's evidence even though he raised a reasonable doubt as to the presence of Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and contradicted Witness QAR's evidence on every aspect.[6851] He contends that the Trial Chamber speculated that Witness JAMES might have been mistaken and that this shows that Witness JAMES's evidence raised a doubt.[6852]

2998. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably concluded that Witness JAMES may have been mistaken about the day he saw Witness QAR as the witness conceded that he was not good with dates as he was very young at the time of the events.[6853]

refers.[6854] In fact, many of the paragraphs Ndayambaje referenced show that the Trial Chamber found Witness JAMES to corroborate Witness QAR's testimony in several aspects.[6855]

3000. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber does not agree that the Trial Chamber rejected Witness JAMES's evidence on the basis of mere speculation. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to decide which version it considers more credible.[6856] In this case, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAR's eyewitness account was compelling and accepted her account that she spent the night of 21 April 1994 at the priest's house, noting that Witness JAMES's account did not contradict Witness QAR's evidence in any material respect.[6857] Ndayambaje disregards this part of the Trial Chamber's reasoning and focuses exclusively on the Trial Chamber's observation that Witness JAMES may have been mistaken regarding the date. Ndayambaje therefore fails to show that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted Witness QAR's evidence over Witness JAMES's evidence.[6858]

3001. The Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's submissions regarding the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness JAMES's evidence concerning Witness QAR's whereabouts on 21 April 1994.

(b) Witness MAJIK

3002. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness MAJIK testified that she first "passed by Mugombwa Church at about 11:30 a.m. on 20 April 1994" and that, "[o]n her way back past the church an hour later[,] the attackers had not attacked the church."[6859] It further noted that Witness MAJIK testified that she did not see Ndayambaje on either of her journeys.[6860] The Trial Chamber observed, however, that Witness MAJIK was a passer-by and that she was not at the church for an extended period of time on 20 April 1994.[6861] In light of this, it concluded that Witness MAJIK's testimony did not cast doubt on Witness QAR's eyewitness testimony that Ndayambaje came to the church for 15 minutes at about midday on 20 April 1994.[6862]

3003. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber misconstrued Witness MAJIK's testimony when finding that she only returned to Mugombwa Church at 12:30 p.m.[6863] He claims that the witness testified that she was at the church at about noon on 20 April 1994 and that she did not see him there.[6864] In his view, a reasonable trier of fact could not have rejected Witness MAJIK's evidence on the basis that she was a passer-by.[6865]

3004. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was correct in describing Witness MAJIK as a passer-by since the witness was only in the vicinity of the church for a limited period of time.[6866] It also highlights that the Trial Chamber did not state that Witness MAJIK came back to the church only at 12.30 p.m. but rather that she left the parish grounds around 12.30 p.m., having remained there for about half an hour.[6867]

3005. Ndayambaje replies that what is important is not the amount of time Witness MAJIK spent at the church but rather that she was there when Witness QAR alleged to have seen Ndayambaje.[6868]

3006. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness MAJIK testified that she passed in front of Mugombwa Church at "about 11.30" in the morning of 20 April 1994.[6869] She stated that she stopped at the parish for a short while to ask a young man what had happened, before continuing to the homes of her aunt and uncle, both of which were closed.[6870] Witness MAJIK testified that she then returned to Mugombwa Church to see if her uncle was there.[6871] She added that she stayed on the parish grounds for "about half an hour" and thought that she left "around 12:25 or 12:30".[6872]

3007. In light of this evidence, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in taking into consideration that Witness MAJIK only stayed on the parish grounds for limited amounts of time. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Chamber nonetheless did not accurately recall her evidence when stating that she returned to Mugombwa Church "an hour later" after having previously passed by the church at 11.30 a.m., as her testimony reflects that she estimated her return to the church around 12.00 p.m.[6873]

3008. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that this error has no impact on the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Witness MAJIK's testimony did not cast doubt on Witness QAR's eyewitness testimony that Ndayambaje came to Mugombwa Church for 15 minutes at about midday on 20 April 1994.[6874] Indeed, both Witnesses QAR and MAJIK were very clear that they could not provide exact times but only estimates of what they witnessed or of their whereabouts on 20 April 1994.[6875] In these circumstances, a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that Witness MAJIK was present at the church before or after Ndayambaje's short visit at the church, which Witness QAR observed.[6876]

3009. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness MAJIK's testimony did not cast doubt on Witness QAR's evidence concerning Ndayambaje's presence at Mugombwa Church on 20 April 1994.

(c) Witness BOZAN

3010. The Trial Chamber noted Witness QAR's evidence that, on 20 April 1994, she saw, through a broken window, Ndayambaje speaking to the attackers as well as that of Witnesses BOZAN, Tiziano, and JAMES that it was not possible to look through the windows of the church unless they were broken, given that they were made of opaque coloured glass.[6877] The Trial Chamber added that "[t]his evidence supports Witness QAR's account of her sighting of Ndayambaje in the church grounds on that day."[6878] The Trial Chamber further found that:

[6875] See Witness QAR, T. 20 November 2001 pp. 119 ("I would say [Ndayambaje] got [to the church] around noon"), 131, 132 ("Q. > there are conflicting accounts of precisely when the windows in the church were broken. Witness QAR testified that as she entered the church at about 8.00 a.m. on 20 April 1994, people were throwing stones at the church, breaking the windows. According to her testimony, the window by which she was standing was broken by noon, enabling her to see Ndayambaje outside the church. Witness BOZAN testified that the attackers had not started throwing stones at the church by around 9.30 a.m. but that later he saw from his vantage point near the presbytery, that at about 11.15 a.m. a single window nearest the priest's house was broken. The Chamber observes that Witness BOZAN testified that he watched the assailants throwing stones from the presbytery gate where he saw only one window broken. His view of the church was restricted to one side of the church and does not cast doubt on the testimony of Witness QAR that more than one window was broken.[6879]

In addition, the Trial Chamber found that Witness BOZAN partially corroborated Witness QAR's account with respect to the identity of the assailants on 20 April 1994.[6880]

3011. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness BOZAN's testimony.[6881] He asserts that the Trial Chamber erred in stating that the witness testified about 21 April 1994 since in fact he testified about 20 April 1994.[6882] Moreover, Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting Witness BOZAN's evidence that he did not see him while at Mugombwa Church on 20 April 1994 between 10.00 a.m. and 1.00 p.m. on the basis of the witness's "unspecified" close ties to him and the witness's involvement in the massacre at the church.[6883] He argues that the Trial Chamber confused Witness BOZAN with another person.[6884] According to Ndayambaje, Witness BOZAN was credible and undermined the credibility of Witness QAR.[6885]

3012. The Prosecution concedes that the Trial Chamber mistook Witness BOZAN for another person in relation to another incident but argues that the witness's evidence was in any event incapable of raising a doubt in the Prosecution case against Ndayambaje.[6886]

3013. A review of Witness BOZAN's testimony shows that the event he recounted occurred on 20 April 1994.[6887] While the Trial Chamber, when summarising his evidence, stated that the witness was talking about 21 April 1994,[6888] a plain reading of the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial

In addition, the Prosecution responds that Witness BOZAN undoubtedly had close ties to Ndayambaje as he reported to him while Ndayambaje was bourgmestre. See ibid., para. 2221. The Prosecution adds that, in any event, Witness BOZAN is not credible. See ibid., para. 2222; AT. 21 April 2015 pp. 51, 52.

Chamber only assessed his evidence with regard to events that occurred on 20 April 1994.[6889] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's misstatement of the date in one paragraph of the Trial Judgement within the summary of Witness BOZAN's evidence had no bearing on its findings and has therefore not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.[6890]

3014. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje's remaining arguments are all based on the premise that the Trial Chamber found Witness BOZAN not credible and rejected his evidence. There is, however, no indication in the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber did not find the witness credible with respect to the events at Mugombwa Church. In fact, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness BOZAN's testimony as corroborative of some aspects of Witness QAR's evidence.[6891] The Trial Chamber did not refer to, let alone reject, Witness BOZAN's alleged testimony that he did not see Ndayambaje at the church while he was there between 10.00 a.m. and 1.00 p.m. and Ndayambaje does not provide any reference to support his assertion that the witness so testified.[6892] During Witness BOZAN's examination-in-chief, Ndayambaje did not ask the witness whether he was at the church on the morning of 20 April 1994 and whether he saw him there.[6893] While, upon cross-examination by the Prosecution, Witness BOZAN stated that he was at Mugombwa Church on the morning of 20 April 1994 between 9.30 a.m. and 12.30 p.m. and answered "no" when asked whether he saw Ndayambaje around the church that day,[6894] the Defence objected to any follow-up questions as to whether it was possible that Ndayambaje would have been there and the witness would not have seen him and the Prosecution moved to another line of questioning.[6895] The Appeals Chamber considers that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on this aspect of Witness BOZAN's testimony in these circumstances and that, as a result, the Trial Chamber did not have to discuss it.

3015. As Ndayambaje submits, the Trial Chamber mistook Witness BOZAN for another person and erroneously stated that Witness BOZAN was involved in the massacre at Mugombwa Church.[6896] However, this erroneous finding was made and relied upon in relation to the abduction of Tutsi women and girls after Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, a separate event for which

Ndayambaje was convicted.[6897] As noted above, the Trial Chamber did not reject Witness BOZAN's evidence insofar as it related to Mugombwa Church.[6898] Likewise, the Trial Judgement does not reflect that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness BOZAN's alleged ties with Ndayambaje in reaching its findings on his evidence relating to the Mugombwa Church incidents.[6899]

3016. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's arguments concerning the assessment of Witness BOZAN's evidence pertaining to Mugombwa Church.

5. Conclusion

3017. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence relating to his involvement in crimes perpetrated at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 that occasioned a miscarriage of justice and warrants the intervention of the Appeals Chamber. Recalling that Ndayambaje's submissions pertaining to his responsibility for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide at Mugombwa Church have become moot, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for aiding and abetting the killings committed at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and, accordingly, dismisses the relevant part of Ground 9 and Ground 17 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

[6897] See Trial Judgement, paras. 4744, 4746, 5957-5959. The Appeals Chamber will discuss the impact of this error below in the section on the abductions of Tutsis women and girls in Mugombwa. See infra, Section IX.H.

[6899] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that Witness BOZAN gave alibi evidence for Ndayambaje. See Trial Judgement, para. 1196. When the Trial Chamber assessed the credibility of the alibi witnesses it found that they all have close ties with Ndayambaje but when discussing these ties in more detail, the Trial Chamber did not mention Witness BOZAN. See ibid., para. 1199. Moreover the summary of Witness BOZAN's evidence does not reflect that the witness provided alibi evidence for Ndayambaje at Mugombwa Church on 20 or 21 April 1994. See ibid., paras. 1165-1177. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber considers that there is no indication in the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber found that Witness BOZAN was not credible because he had close ties with Ndayambaje.

F. Kabuye Hill (Grounds 9 in part, 10, 11, 18)

3018. The Trial Chamber found that, on 20 April 1994, Ndayambaje travelled to Ngiryi Bridge with several armed soldiers and communal policemen where they arrested Tutsi refugees fleeing to Burundi and forced them to return to Gisagara marketplace, following which soldiers and policemen escorted the refugees to Kabuye Hill.[6900] The Trial Chamber also found that Ndayambaje was present at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 when soldiers, policemen, and armed civilians attacked Tutsis gathered on the hill, resulting in the death of thousands of Tutsis.[6901] In addition, the Trial Chamber found that Ndayambaje: (i) transported soldiers, civilians, and communal policemen to Kabuye Hill, where they participated in attacks against Tutsis on 23 and 24 April 1994; (ii) distributed weapons at Kabuye Hill and the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994, which were later used in the massacres of Tutsis at Kabuye Hill; and (iii) was present during the attacks at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 that resulted in thousands of deaths.[6902]

3019. After finding that the interception at Ngiryi Bridge and forced escorting of the refugees to Kabuye Hill did not constitute an act of genocide and did not rise to a similar gravity as other crimes against humanity, the Trial Chamber acquitted Ndayambaje of genocide and persecution as a crime against humanity for the interception and forced movement of the Tutsi refugees from Ngiryi Bridge to Kabuye Hill.[6903] However, the Trial Chamber convicted Ndayambaje for aiding and abetting genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for his role in the attacks at Kabuye Hill from 22 to 24 April 1994.[6904]

3020. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence related to the events at Ngiryi Bridge and in convicting him in relation to the attacks at Kabuye Hill. The Appeals Chamber will examine Ndayambaje's challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings pertaining to the events at Ngiryi Bridge and Kabuye Hill on 20 and 22 April 1994 before turning to his submissions related to the attacks on Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994.

3021. As a preliminary remark, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, on 9 April 2015, it admitted as additional evidence on appeal a confidential witness statement dated 30 January 2013 relevant to the assessment of the credibility of Prosecution Witness EV, whose evidence was relied upon by the Trial Chamber in relation to the events at Kabuye Hill.[6905] On 12 May 2015, the Appeals Chamber admitted as additional evidence on appeal a prior statement and part of the testimony of Witness Claver Habimana in the Ntawukulilyayo case relevant to the assessment of the credibility of Prosecution Witness RT, whose evidence was also relied upon by the Trial Chamber in relation to the events at Kabuye Hill.[6906] In accordance with the relevant standard, if the Appeals Chamber determines that a reasonable trier of fact could have reached the conclusion of guilt beyond reasonable doubt on the basis of the trial record alone, the Appeals Chamber will then determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to the finding of guilt.[6907]

1. Interception of Tutsi Refugees at Ngiryi Bridge on 20 April 1994 and Attack on Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994

3022. Based on the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses EV, RT, and TP, the Trial Chamber determined that, on 20 April 1994, Ndayambaje travelled to Ngiryi Bridge with several armed soldiers and communal policemen where they arrested fleeing Tutsi refugees and forced them to return to Gisagara marketplace.[6908] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found that Witness EV testified that he and other refugees were intercepted at Ngiryi Bridge at daybreak on 20 April 1994.[6909] It also held that his testimony reflected that he arrived at Kabuye Hill before 6.00 p.m. on the same day.[6910]

3024. Ndayambaje challenges the Trial Chamber's findings that he was present at Ngiryi Bridge on 20 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994.[6913] In particular, he contends that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Witness EV's timeline for the events at Ngiryi Bridge and Kabuye Hill.[6914] He argues that Witness EV's testimony reflects that, during the night of "Wednesday" to "Thursday" he was at Ngiryi Bridge and that it was only the following day, on "Thursday", 21 April 1994 – and not Wednesday, 20 April 1994 as found by the Trial Chamber – that he returned to Gisagara.[6915] Ndayambaje adds that Witness EV stated that he returned from Ngiryi Bridge to Gisagara on the day President Sindikubwabo addressed the crowd in Gisagara, which is well known to have been Thursday, 21 April 1994.[6916] According to Ndayambaje, the Trial Chamber therefore erred in concluding that Witness EV arrived at Kabuye Hill on Wednesday, 20 April 1994 since the witness's evidence indicates that he arrived on Thursday, 21 April 1994.[6917] He contends that the Trial Chamber further erred in finding that Witness EV testified to Ndayambaje's presence at Kabuye Hill on 20 and 22 April since the witness was in fact referring to 21 and 23 April 1994.[6918] Ndayambaje also challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of other aspects of Witness EV's evidence as well as its reliance on the evidence of other Prosecution witnesses to establish his presence at Ngiryi Bridge on 20 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994.[6919]

3025. The Prosecution acknowledges that the Trial Chamber misinterpreted Witness EV's testimony about his timeline as the witness situated the interception of refugees at Ngiryi Bridge on 21 April 1994, and not on 20 April 1994 as found by the Trial Chamber.[6920] It argues that the Trial Chamber should not have relied on Witness EV's evidence since "his timeline was confused and cannot be considered reliable" and aspects of his testimony were contradicted by other Prosecution witnesses.[6921] In the view of the Prosecution, however, Witness EV's unreliability and the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance thereupon do not affect the Trial Chamber's finding that Ndayambaje turned back refugees at Ngiryi Bridge since the finding was further supported by Witnesses QAQ's, RT's, and TP's testimonies.[6922]

3026. The Prosecution further responds that the Trial Chamber's confusion concerning the timeline of events does not impact its finding about Ndayambaje's involvement in the attack on Kabuye Hill of 22 April 1994 since, even disregarding Witness EV's evidence that should not have been relied upon, "taking the evidence as a whole, there was sufficient circumstantial evidence" from Prosecution Witnesses FAG and QAL "to remove any reasonable doubt that Ndayambaje was involved at Kabuye Hill" on 22 April 1994.[6923]

3027. Ndayambaje replies that it is not possible to speculate as to what the Trial Chamber's conclusions would have been, had it not incorrectly assessed Witness EV's evidence.[6924] He contends that he is prejudiced by the Prosecution moulding its case on appeal by now claiming that the Trial Chamber should not have relied on Witness EV's testimony while pleading that the witness was credible at trial.[6925]

3028. The Appeals Chamber notes that a careful review of Witness EV's testimony shows that the witness testified that he was intercepted at Ngiryi Bridge on 21 April 1994 and that he arrived at Kabuye Hill in the evening of the same day, as both Ndayambaje and the Prosecution submit.[6926]

[6922] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2301, 2304, 2307-2311, 2325. See also ibid., paras. 2297, 2306. The Prosecution further argues that, even if the finding related to Ngiryi Bridge was overturned, it would have no impact on Ndayambaje's convictions as the Trial Chamber merely relied on this finding as one of several factors showing that Ndayambaje knew of the genocidal intent of the Kabuye Hill assailants. See ibid., paras. 2301, 2305, 2320.

[6923] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2380, 2424. At the appeals hearing, the Prosecution also suggested that Witness QBZ testified that he saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994. See AT. 21 April 2015 p. 46, referring to Prosecution Response Brief, para. 1194, Witness QBZ, T. 23 February 2004 p. 25 et seq. The Trial Chamber found that Witness QBZ in the cited portions of his testimony relied upon by the Prosecution recounted an event that occurred around 13 April 1994. See Trial Judgement, para. 1428. The Prosecution does not challenge this finding. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider this argument further. The Prosecution also argues that, although the Trial Chamber relied on an aspect of Witness EV's testimony that related to 23 April 1994 in reaching its finding for 22 April 1994, another part of Witness EV's testimony in any case reflects that the witness saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994. It submits that, accordingly, Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness EV as to Ndayambaje's presence at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2322, 2324, 2332, referring to Witness EV, T. 26 February 2004 pp. 60, 61, T. 25 February 2004 pp. 75, 76. See also AT. 21 April 2015 p. 46. Given that the Prosecution has repeatedly submitted that the Trial Chamber should not have relied on Witness EV's testimony, and given the phrasing of its additional arguments, the Appeals Chamber understands them to be made in the alternative and in order to respond to Ndayambaje's submissions. See Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2296, 2297, 2300, 2301, 2306, 2315, 2320, 2321.

[6926] Witness EV insisted several times that he hardly remembered the dates, but rather remembered weekdays. He stated in examination-in-chief that he left his residence on 19 April 1994 and, although he was first confused under cross-examination as to whether he left his house on 18 or 19 April 1994, he further stated that the "events broke out" on "a Tuesday to Wednesday" and that he left his house on a "Tuesday". A review of his testimony shows that, after he left his home with his family, they wandered all night, and the group only decided to leave the town and head to Burundi the next morning. Witness EV's testimony further reflects that he passed by Kabuye Hill on his way to Burundi on "Wednesday", then by Gisagara, before leaving the place in the evening, and that it was only the following morning that they were intercepted at Ngiryi Bridge. He further stated that following the interception, he returned to Gisagara, where President Sindikubwabo spoke to the crowd and that he arrived at Kabuye Hill the same day in the evening,

The Trial Chamber therefore erred in finding that Witness EV testified that the interception at Ngiryi Bridge took place on 20 April 1994 and that he arrived at Kabuye Hill on that same day.

3029. Likewise, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness EV testified to seeing Ndayambaje during the attack on the refugees at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 based on a part of his testimony that pertained to the "third day" he spent at Kabuye Hill, since this day corresponded to 23 April 1994 and not 22 April 1994.[6927] Another part of Witness EV's testimony nonetheless reflects that the witness did testify about seeing Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill the day after his arrival, which is 22 April 1994.[6928] However, the Appeals Chamber notes that one key aspect of this uncorroborated part of Witness EV's testimony – erroneously considered to relate to 20 April 1994 by the Trial Chamber[6929] – was rejected by the Trial Chamber as unconvincing.[6930]

[6929] See Trial Judgement, paras. 1269, 1270, 1434, 1450. A review of Witness EV's testimony shows that the witness testified that he saw Ndayambaje arriving at Kabuye Hill "before noon" the day following his own arrival at Kabuye Hill and not as the Trial Chamber found on the day he arrived at Kabuye Hill. See Witness EV, T. 25 February 2004 pp. 73-75, T. 26 February 2004 pp. 45-49, 54, 60. See also Trial Judgement, paras. 1267, 1269. The Appeals Chamber acknowledges that according to the English version of the transcripts, Witness EV testified that he saw Ndayambaje "on the day when [he] arrived." See Witness EV, T. 25 February 2004 p. 75 ("Q. On the day when you arrived, were you able to recognise any people amongst the attackers? A. I saw Elie Ndayambaje."). However, the French version of the transcripts differs in this respect, the witness answering in the affirmative to the question whether he recognised anyone the day that followed his own arrival. See Witness EV, T. 25 February 2004 p. 84 (French) ("Q. Le jour qui a suivi, donc, votre arrivée, avez-vous été en mesure de reconnaître qui que ce soit parmi les assaillants ? "). Having listened to the relevant audio-recording, the Appeals Chamber notes that the English version of the transcripts does not capture correctly the question asked in English by the Prosecution, which clearly was about the day following Witness EV's arrival. See audio-recording of Witness EV's testimony of 25 February 2004, at 11:24-11:35. This matter was also later clarified during cross-examination, since Witness EV was directly asked if he witnessed Ndayambaje for the first time on Kabuye Hill on the second day of his own arrival at the scene. See Witness EV, T. 26 February 2004 pp. 54, 59, 60.

[6930] Trial Judgement, paras. 1450, 1451 ("While the Chamber agrees that it would have been impossible for Witness EV to remember all the details of his stay at Kabuye Hill, the Chamber considers that an incident as striking as the throwing of a grenade by a figure of authority such as Ndayambaje would have been at the forefront of the witness' mind when he recorded his experience in his previous statements. For that reason, the Trial Chamber accepts the witness' testimony that Ndayambaje distributed weapons at Kabuye Hill but finds his uncorroborated account that Ndayambaje threw grenades and shot at the refugees to be unconvincing.").

3031. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in holding Ndayambaje responsible for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 on the basis of his presence during the attack and reverses his convictions for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994.

3032. With respect to the Trial Chamber's findings relating to the interception at Ngiryi Bridge and forced movement of the Tutsi refugees to Kabuye Hill on 20 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Ndayambaje was not convicted for these events.[6934] The Trial Judgement also clearly reflects that the Trial Chamber only relied on its factual findings concerning the interception and forced movement to determine the mens rea of the assailants who attacked the refugees at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 and Ndayambaje's knowledge thereof.[6935] Because the Appeals Chamber reversed Ndayambaje's convictions for the killings perpetrated at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to examine the impact of the Trial Chamber's error in assessing Witness EV's evidence concerning the date of the interception and forced movement of the refugees on the Trial Chamber's findings on these specific events as any error in this respect would not have occasioned a miscarriage of justice. For the same reason, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider Ndayambaje's remaining challenges to the Trial Chamber's findings regarding the interception at Ngiryi Bridge and forced movement of the Tutsi refugees to Kabuye Hill.

2. Attacks on Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994

3033. As noted above, the Trial Chamber found that Ndayambaje: (i) transported soldiers, civilians, and communal policemen to Kabuye Hill, where they attacked Tutsis on 23 and 24 April 1994; (ii) distributed weapons at Kabuye Hill and the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994, which were later used in the massacres of Tutsis at Kabuye Hill; (iii) was present on 23 and 24 April 1994 during the attacks against Tutsis at Kabuye Hill that resulted in thousands of deaths.[6936]

3034. In concluding that Ndayambaje transported attackers to Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994, the Trial Chamber relied on the testimonies of Witnesses EV, RT, TW, QAQ, and FAG.[6937] Concerning the distributions of weapons on 23 April 1994, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness RT's account as supported by Witnesses EV's and QAL's testimonies concerning the

The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber did not rely on the events that led the refugees to Kabuye Hill to establish the genocidal intent of those who attacked the refugees at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994. See ibid., paras. 5769, 5771, 5773.

distribution at Kabuye Hill, and on the accounts of Witnesses RV and FAU concerning the distribution that took place at the Muganza commune office.[6938] The Trial Chamber relied on Witnesses EV, RT, TW, QAQ, and to some extent on Defence Witnesses ALIZA and KEPIR, in finding that attacks were perpetrated on 23 and 24 April 1994 at Kabuye Hill and that Ndayambaje was present during the attacks.[6939]

3035. Ndayambaje challenges the Trial Chamber's assessment of Prosecution and Defence evidence regarding these events.[6940]

(a) Assessment of Prosecution Evidence

(i) Witness QAQ

3036. In the section of the Trial Judgement where it discussed the evidence related to the transportation of attackers to Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness QAQ testified that "[o]n the day following his arrival at Kabuye Hill, which would have fallen on 24 or 25 April 1994, [he] saw Ndayambaje driving a white vehicle transporting over five gendarmes to Kabuye Hill."[6941] The Trial Chamber relied on Witness QAQ's evidence, along with that of Witnesses EV, RT, TW, and FAG, to conclude that Ndayambaje transported soldiers, civilians, and policemen to Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 where they participated in attacks against Tutsis and that he was present at Kabuye Hill during the attacks perpetrated against the Tutsi refugees on 23 and 24 April 1994.[6942]

3037. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness QAQ's testimony.[6943] Specifically, he argues that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, it was impossible for Witness QAQ to be in Kabuye Hill on 23 or 24 April 1994 given the timeline the witness gave during his testimony.[6944] In his view, Witness QAQ's testimony reflects that he could not have been in Kabuye Hill before 26 April 1994, namely after the attacks on the refugees.[6945]

[6943] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 486.
[6944] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 481-483. Ndayambaje adds that Witness QAQ confirmed the timeline he gave during his testimony to Defence Witness Évariste-Emmanuel Siborurema. See ibid., para. 482, referring to Évariste-Emmanuel Siborurema, T. 25 August 2008 pp. 52-60 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber observes that Évariste-Emmanuel Siborurema is at times referred to under the pseudonym "Witness NAVIC" in the Trial Judgement, a protective measure the witness asked to lift when testifying in court. See Évariste-Emmanuel Siborurema, T. 25 August 2008 p. 3.
[6945] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 483.

He also contends that Witness QAQ acknowledged that he neither saw nor identified Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill.[6946]

3038. In addition, Ndayambaje avers that the testimonies of Witness TW and Defence Witness KWEPO show that Witness QAQ never went to Kabuye Hill since he was hidden elsewhere "during the events".[6947] Ndayambaje also contends that, having found that Witness QAQ's evidence related to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony was not credible, the Trial Chamber should have also found him not credible in relation to the events at Kabuye Hill.[6948]

3039. The Prosecution responds that it can be inferred from Witness QAQ's evidence that he was on Kabuye Hill either on 23 or 24 April 1994 and that the witness had no reason to lie about Ndayambaje's involvement.[6949] The Prosecution adds that Witnesses TW's and KWEPO's evidence does not necessarily contradict Witness QAQ's testimony in this respect.[6950]

3040. As reflected in the Trial Judgement, Witness QAQ did not give a clear timeline between the moment he left his house and his arrival at Kabuye Hill.[6951] The witness specified that he was only providing estimates concerning the dates.[6952] The Appeals Chamber nonetheless understands that, in light of his testimony as to the sequence of events and the description given by other Prosecution witnesses, the Trial Chamber concluded that the transportation of attackers that Witness QAQ recounted occurred on 24 April 1994.[6953] Having carefully reviewed Witness QAQ's testimony, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded from his testimony, considered in light of the rest of the evidence, that he arrived at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994[6954]

[6950] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2352-2355. The Prosecution contends that Witness Siborurema contradicted Witness KWEPO and probably tailored his testimony in light of Witness QAQ's evidence. See ibid., paras. 2356-2358.
[6951] Trial Judgement, para. 1426 ("On the day following his arrival at Kabuye Hill, which would have fallen on 24 or 25 April 1994, Witness QAQ […]."). See also ibid., paras. 1289, 1290.
[6953] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber stated that Witness QAQ saw Ndayambaje driving a vehicle transporting gendarmes "on 24 or 25 April 1994" and, after discussing the evidence of Witnesses EV, RT, TW, and FAG, concluded that the evidence of these five witnesses demonstrated that Ndayambaje was involved in the transportation of attackers on 23 and 24 April 1994. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1426, 1431. As Witness QAQ was not found to have testified about 23 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber understands that the Trial Chamber concluded that he was testifying about 24 April 1994, and not 25 April 1994 as his testimony could also suggest. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's later reference to the witness testifying about seeing Ndayambaje "on 23 or 24 April 1994" seems to be a typographical mistake in light of the Trial Chamber's summary of the witness's evidence and its discussion of the most relevant part of his evidence. See ibid., paras. 1289, 1290, 1426, 1448.
[6954] The Appeals Chamber observes that it is not clear from the witness's evidence whether he left his house on Tuesday, 19 April 1994 or on Wednesday, 20 April 1994. See Witness QAQ, T. 11 November 2002 p. 23 (closed and that his testimony as to the presence of Ndayambaje, the day after his arrival, pertained to 24 April 1994.[6955]

3041. As to whether Witness QAQ saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber stated in its deliberations that the witness "saw Ndayambaje" driving a vehicle transporting gendarmes to Kabuye Hill.[6956] When summarising his evidence, however, the Trial Chamber correctly noted that Witness QAQ explained during cross-examination that "from where he was he could not personally say whether the person in the car was Ndayambaje" and that he was told by other refugees that the vehicle he saw was Ndayambaje's vehicle and was the same vehicle that had prevented them from continuing on their way to Burundi.[6957] The Trial Chamber therefore erred in stating that Witness QAQ saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill. It is unclear to what extent the Trial Chamber relied on this erroneous statement when reaching its finding on Ndayambaje's involvement in the transportation of attackers to Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994 as the Trial Chamber generally concluded that "the testimony of Witnesses EV, RT, TW, QAQ and FAG [was] credible on the issue of Ndayambaje's involvement in the transportation of attackers and therefore [found] that on 23 and 24 April 1994, Ndayambaje transported soldiers, civilians and policemen to Kabuye Hill."[6958] In any event, Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QAQ's testimony, as correctly summarised, that he saw a white vehicle transporting attackers, which the other refugees recognised as Ndayambaje's vehicle, as corroborative of Witness TW's testimony that Ndayambaje transported attackers to Kabuye Hill in the white commune vehicle on 24 April 1994.[6959]

3042. With regard to Ndayambaje's reliance on Witness KWEPO's evidence as contradicting Witness QAQ's testimony that he was present at Kabuye Hill, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness KWEPO merely gave hearsay evidence that Witness QAQ had been hidden by someone session), T. 12 November 2002 p. 55 (closed session). Witness QAQ stated that then, he "hid for three or four day[s], and […] had to move to at least four places of residence" before going to Kabuye Hill, possibly placing his arrival at Kabuye Hill on 23 or 24 April 1994. See Witness QAQ, T. 11 November 2002 pp. 24, 25 (closed session), T. 12 November 2002 p. 50 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness QAQ also testified that indeed he spent a single night at three different people's houses and maybe two nights at the house of an old lady. See Witness QAQ, T. 12 November 2002 p. 51 (closed session). However, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QAQ was hesitating and did not give a categorical statement regarding the number of nights he spent at the house of the old lady. See idem, p. 51 (closed session) ("I think I went there on two occasions.") (emphasis added), 58 ("I don't remember very well, but I think I spent two nights there […]. Probably we could ask […], but I don't know if she herself can remember the number of nights I spent at her place."). See also Witness QAQ, T. 11 November 2002 pp. 24, 25 (closed session). The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QAQ's testimony about how many nights he spent where was unclear and approximate. See Witness QAQ, T. 12 November 2002 pp. 51, 55-58 (closed session). See also ibid., pp. 95, 104 (closed session) (French).

during the events and that he did not see him between May and July 1994.[6960] Given the limited probative value of this testimony, the Appeals Chamber considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have decided that it did not cast doubt on Witness QAQ's account that he was present during the relevant period at Kabuye Hill. As for Witness TW, the Appeals Chamber notes that his testimony does not show that Witness QAQ did not go to Kabuye Hill, but rather that he did not see Witness QAQ at Kabuye Hill and that he could not say whether Witness QAQ was there because there were many people.[6961] Ndayambaje's argument that Witness TW's testimony contradicts Witness QAQ's account is therefore without merit.

3043. Finally, recalling that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's unsubstantiated claim that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness QAQ's testimony regarding Kabuye Hill, while rejecting his evidence related to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony since this rejection was based on elements that were specific to this very aspect of his testimony.[6962]

3044. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that, although the Trial Chamber erred in stating that Witness QAQ saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill, Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that a reasonable trier of fact could not have relied on Witness QAQ's evidence that he saw a white vehicle transporting attackers, which the other refugees recognised as Ndayambaje's vehicle, as corroborative of Witness TW's testimony on the attacks on 24 April 1994 at Kabuye Hill.

(ii) Witness RT

3045. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness RT testified that, on the day after his arrival at Kabuye Hill, which would have fallen on 23 April 1994, he saw Ndayambaje "[arriving] at Kabuye Hill in a white Toyota commune vehicle" and "distributing what he thought to be grenades to the attackers and supervising their distribution."[6963] The Trial Chamber concluded that Witness RT's eyewitness testimony on the distribution of grenades by Ndayambaje on 23 April 1994 was clear and convincing and that Witnesses EV's and QAL's testimonies lent weight to his account, providing circumstantial evidence that "Ndayambaje was generally involved in distributing weapons at Kabuye Hill."[6964]

3046. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness RT's testimony and in finding that his testimony evidenced the distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill.[6965] In particular, Ndayambaje argues that Witness RT never testified to seeing him at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994 as the witness testified about seeing him at Dahwe Hill.[6966]

3047. Ndayambaje also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness RT's testimony on the distribution of weapons on 23 April 1994 was corroborated by Witnesses EV and QAL.[6967] Ndayambaje argues that Witness QAL's testimony about seeing him on a "Thursday" and Witness EV's testimony about seeing him on "20 April 1994" cannot corroborate Witness RT's account of a distribution that allegedly took place on "Saturday", 23 April 1994.[6968]

3048. Ndayambaje further submits that the Trial Chamber failed to provide a reasoned opinion in finding that Witness RT identified him despite the extremely difficult circumstances in which the identification was made.[6969] The Appeals Chamber also understands Ndayambaje to argue that it was unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness RT's account of his purported distribution of grenades on 23 April 1994 where the Trial Chamber had itself recognised the "uncertainty" of the witness's account in this respect.[6970] Finally, Ndayambaje suggests that the Trial Chamber could not have found that he distributed weapons on 23 April 1994 on the basis of Witness RT's indirect evidence as it was not the only reasonable possible conclusion.[6971]

where attackers disembarked and grouped before going to Kabuye Hill."[6973] In the Prosecution's view, there was ample circumstantial evidence supporting Witness RT's testimony of Ndayambaje distributing weapons at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994 and Ndayambaje's unsubstantiated arguments regarding identification should be dismissed.[6974]

3050. Ndayambaje replies that the Trial Chamber never established that Dahwe Hill was one of the "places where attackers disembarked and grouped before going to Kabuye Hill."[6975] 3051. In summarising Witness RT's testimony about the attacks on Kabuye Hill, the Trial Chamber noted that the witness testified that, on "Saturday", attackers were "gathered near Dahwe and Gahondo" and that "[s]ubsequently, Ndayambaje arrived".[6976] In the course of its discussion of the evidence, the Trial Chamber referred to Witness RT testifying to seeing Ndayambaje "aboard or arriving with vehicles transporting individuals to Kabuye Hill" [6977] and "arrive at Kabuye Hill".[6978] A review of Witness RT's evidence reflects that he testified that on "Saturday", he saw Ndayambaje and soldiers coming in a Toyota vehicle and that they stopped "on the road that crosses Dahwe hill."[6979] Given that the evidence reflects that Dahwe Hill was the place where attackers disembarked from the vehicles before launching attacks on Kabuye Hill where the refugees were gathered[6980] and that Dahwe Hill was within sight of Kabuye Hill,[6981] the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument that Witness RT did not see him at Kabuye Hill.

3052. Turning to the issue of corroboration, a plain reading of the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness RT's evidence alone to find that Ndayambaje distributed weapons at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994.[6982] The Trial Chamber merely relied on Witnesses EV's and QAL's evidence as circumstantial evidence that "Ndayambaje was generally involved in distributing weapons at Kabuye Hill", "lend[ing] weight to Witness RT's account of weapons distribution by Ndayambaje" on 23 April 1994.[6983] For the reasons developed below, the Appeals Chamber considers that Witness EV's testimony as misconstrued by the Trial Chamber could not reasonably provide corroboration of Witness RT's account. However, given the limited weight accorded to his testimony by the Trial Chamber regarding the distribution of weapons on 23 April 1994, the Appeals Chamber considers that this error does not affect the Trial Chamber's finding. Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QAL could corroborate Witness RT because his testimony did not pertain to 23 April 1994 but to Thursday, 21 April 1994 is also unpersuasive as corroboration can be found in circumstantial evidence as long as it concerns a sequence of linked facts,[6984] which is the case here. In any event, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[6985]

3053. Regarding Ndayambaje's contention related to his identification by Witness RT, the Appeals Chamber recalls that "where a finding of guilt is made on the basis of identification evidence given by a witness under difficult circumstances, the Trial Chamber must rigorously implement its duty to provide a reasoned opinion"[6986] and that "identifications made in difficult circumstances, such as darkness, obstructed view, or traumatic events, require careful and cautious analysis by a trial chamber."[6987]

3054. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not state that Witness RT's identification of Ndayambaje was made under difficult circumstances and did not specifically address in its deliberations the circumstances under which Witness RT identified Ndayambaje.[6988] Ndayambaje points to two elements that, in his view, constitute "difficult circumstances": (i) Kabuye Hill was so far away from Dahwe Hill that it rendered identification impossible; and (ii) Witness RT was being attacked and needed to hide.[6989] However, Ndayambaje ignores Witness RT's testimony that when he saw Ndayambaje distributing grenades, he was situated "maybe 80 to 100 steps" away at "a place where [he] could see clearly."[6990] In addition, although the record reflects that there was shooting at the refugees the morning Witness RT saw Ndayambaje, the witness explained that he was at a place where he could see the vehicle with the soldiers and Ndayambaje but that the attackers could not see him.[6991] The Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the elements Ndayambaje points to demonstrate that the circumstances in which Witness RT identified him were such as to require further analysis from the Trial Chamber.

3055. As to Ndayambaje's argument that it was unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness RT's account where it recognised its "uncertainty", the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not state that this part of the witness's testimony was uncertain but merely observed that:

> The witness saw Ndayambaje distributing what he thought to be grenades to the attackers and supervising their distribution. While he did not actually see grenades in Ndayambaje's hands, Witness RT stated that the Accused must have been distributing grenades because many assailants subsequently threw grenades at the refugees and the grenades could only have come from the Accused.[6992]

3056. Apart from generally claiming that the Trial Chamber's finding was unreasonable, Ndayambaje does not develop any argument to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness RT's "clear and convincing" eyewitness account of the distribution of grenades and his inference that Ndayambaje must have distributed the grenades. Ndayambaje merely disagrees with the Trial Chamber's conclusion without showing any error. His contention is accordingly dismissed.

3057. Finally, in the absence of substantiation, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contention regarding the existence of other reasonable inferences available from the evidence regarding Ndayambaje's involvement in the distribution of weapons on 23 April 1994 at Kabuye Hill.

place that you could see if you are on Gahondo hill, you could see the place, and if you are in Dahwe it is even closer to you."), 71 ("I said so yesterday that Ndayambaje also came in the same vehicle. Moreover, he was at a place where he could be seen and I saw him."); Trial Judgement, para. 1279. In addition, the Appeals Chamber notes that the evidence Ndayambaje relies upon does not support his assertion that Kabuye Hill and Dahwe Hill were far away from each other. The Appeals Chamber is also of the view that Ndayambaje misinterpreted the testimony of the witnesses he refers to in support of his claim that they testified about the impossibility of being able to identify someone positioned on Dahwe Hill from Kabuye Hill. It appears clearly from a review of the relevant transcripts that these witnesses were testifying about what they could see from the place they were standing. See Witness SHICO, T. 23 June 2008 pp. 24, 25; Witness MAJIK, T. 17 June 2008 pp. 56, 57; Witness SABINE, T. 12 June 2008 pp. 19, 20; Witness GLANA, T. 11 June 2008 p. 11 (closed session); Witness QAQ, T. 12 November 2002 pp. 84, 85 (closed session).

[6991] Witness RT, T. 11 March 2004 pp. 69-71. The Appeals Chamber also observes that Witness RT had known Ndayambaje prior to the events of 1994, "used to see him often, at least twice a week" and that he identified him in court, aspects that Ndayambaje does not challenge. See Trial Judgement, para. 1281. See also Witness RT, T. 10 March 2004 pp. 76, 77.

[6992] Trial Judgement, para. 1432 (internal references omitted).

3058. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness RT's evidence relating to the attacks on Kabuye Hill.

(iii) Witness TW

3059. When discussing the events at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness TW testified that he saw Ndayambaje transporting armed attackers to Kabuye Hill "on three consecutive days", which, by the Trial Chamber's estimation, "would have fallen on 23, 24 and 26 April 1994."[6993] In this part of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber relied on Witness TW's evidence, along with that of Witnesses EV and RT, as circumstantial evidence pointing to "Ndayambaje's general involvement in the Kabuye Hill events" and supporting "the contention that he was also present on 22 April 1994."[6994]

3060. With respect to the events at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994, the Trial Chamber noted Witness TW's testimony that he "saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill on 24 April 1994 driving a white double-cabin Toyota Hilux carrying Hutu civilians armed with traditional weapons."[6995] The Trial Chamber concluded based on this testimony, along with the evidence of Witnesses EV, RT, QAQ, and FAG, that Ndayambaje transported attackers to Kabuye Hill and was present at Kabuye Hill during the attacks on 23 and 24 April 1994.[6996]

3061. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness TW saw him on Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994 since the witness testified to seeing him for the first time on 24 April 1994, as reflected in the Trial Chamber's summary of the witness's evidence.[6997] He argues that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in explaining that, unlike Witnesses EV and RT, Witness TW did not mention that Ndayambaje distributed weapons by the fact that a multitude of refugees were present at Kabuye Hill and the hill was vast.[6998] Ndayambaje further contends that the Trial Chamber did not take into account Witness TW's incentive to lie due to "obvious personal motives of vengeance and hatred."[6999]

3062. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness TW's evidence.[7000]

3063. According to the Appeals Chamber, a careful review of Witness TW's testimony reflects that Witness TW testified that he saw Ndayambaje at Kabuye Hill for the first time on 24 April 1994.[7001] The Trial Chamber therefore misstated his testimony in stating that Witness TW saw Ndayambaje on 23 April 1994 in the section related to the events on 22 April 1994.[7002] This appears to be a typographical error as the Trial Chamber correctly referred to Witness TW testifying to seeing Ndayambaje on 24 April 1994, and not 23 April 1994, everywhere else in the Trial Judgement.[7003] In any event, the Appeals Chamber finds that this error has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice as the Trial Chamber relied on Witness TW's correct account that he saw Ndayambaje on 24 April 1994 in its deliberations as to the events of 23 and 24 April 1994.[7004]

3064. The Trial Chamber expressly noted that, unlike Witnesses EV and RT, Witness TW did not mention that Ndayambaje distributed weapons at Kabuye Hill. It was of the view that "these witnesses may not have had the same opportunities to witness the events in question."[7005] Ndayambaje's unsubstantiated contention that the Trial Chamber erred in this respect reflects mere disagreement with the Trial Chamber's conclusion and is rejected without further consideration.

3065. Likewise, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that "Witness TW acknowledged that before the 1994 events, he and his brother had been arrested, detained and beaten up on the orders of the Accused" and that "Ndayambaje had been involved in the forced closure of his bar."[7006] It nonetheless concluded that the witness's denial that those events "may have influenced his testimony was vigorous and believable."[7007] Ndayambaje's argument does not show that the Trial Chamber's determination was unreasonable.

3066. The Appeals Chamber concludes that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in assessing Witness TW's credibility as it relates to the events at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994.

[7007] Trial Judgement, para. 1449.

(iv) Witness TP

3067. The Trial Chamber found that Witness TP's account contained "a number of serious discrepancies that rendered her testimony unreliable, but only as it relates to 24 April 1994" and concluded that it would not rely on her evidence as it relates to that day.[7008]

3068. Ndayambaje submits that Witness TP did not see any policeman, soldier, or vehicle on Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994 and that, since she was not found credible by the Trial Chamber as to the "Sunday", she does not corroborate any witness on the transportation of attackers to Kabuye Hill by Ndayambaje on 24 April 1994.[7009]

3069. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's argument that Witness TP did not give corroborating evidence as to Ndayambaje transporting attackers is correct but irrelevant.[7010]

3070. The Appeals Chamber observes that a plain reading of the Trial Judgement shows that the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness TP's evidence for the transport of attackers to Kabuye Hill on 23 or 24 April 1994.[7011] Ndayambaje does not show that Witness TP's evidence, which the Trial Chamber did not rely upon, undermines the reasonableness of the Trial Chamber's findings for 23 and 24 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ndayambaje's obscure argument about Witness TP's evidence without further consideration.

(v) Witness QAL

3071. The Trial Chamber found that Witness QAL, who testified that she witnessed Ndayambaje transporting guns and grenades in the direction of Kabuye Hill "one Thursday in April 1994", provided circumstantial evidence that "Ndayambaje was generally involved in distributing weapons at Kabuye Hill."[7012]

3072. Ndayambaje submits that Prosecution and Defence evidence contradicts Witness QAL's testimony, pointing to: (i) Defence Witness MACHO's evidence that Witness QAL arrived in Muganza Sector "on a Friday at 2 p.m." to find refuge in her parents' house; (ii) Witness RV's testimony that, on Thursday, 21 April 1994, he went to Mugombwa Church with Ndayambaje in the communal vehicle; and (iii) Nteziryayo's and Defence Witness AND-44's testimonies that it was not materially possible to transport unprotected grenades in the rear compartment of a vehicle and on rough roads without a risk of explosion.[7013] Ndayambaje further argues that the Trial Chamber accepted Witness QAL's testimony on the sole basis that she was Hutu and that Ndayambaje officiated at her wedding and ignored the fact that the witness omitted to mention any transport of weapons in her prior statement to Tribunal investigators of 17 October 1997.[7014]

3073. The Prosecution responds that Witness QAL's testimony was credible and reliable.[7015] It argues that Witness MACHO's testimony lacked credibility and reliability, that Witness RV's testimony was not incompatible with Witness QAL's account, and that Nteziryayo and Witness AND-44 did not state that it was impossible to transport grenades in the back of a pickup truck.[7016] The Prosecution also submits that, given the detailed, credible, and consistent nature of Witness QAL's evidence, the Trial Chamber was entitled to accept her testimony despite the inconsistency with her prior statement.[7017]

3074. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not discuss in the Trial Judgement Witness MACHO's testimony that Witness QAL arrived in Muganza Sector on a Friday,[7018] although it relied on Witness QAL's testimony that she witnessed Ndayambaje driving in the direction of Kabuye Hill one Thursday in April 1994.[7019] The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness QAL was not sure about the date and that it is only under cross-examination that she referred to seeing Ndayambaje going to Kabuye Hill on a "Thursday".[7020] She was not cross-examined on the basis of Witness MACHO's evidence, which only arose when Witness MACHO testified four years after her, and thus never had an opportunity to clarify the matter.[7021] In these circumstances, and considering that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QAL's evidence solely as circumstantial evidence that Ndayambaje was generally involved in distributing weapons at Kabuye Hill,[7022] the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered that Witness MACHO's evidence did not undermine the credibility of Witness QAL's account and that any error as to whether Witness QAL saw Ndayambaje on "Thursday", 21 April 1994, or "Friday", 22 April 1994 would have no impact on any material issue. Against this background, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's decision not to expressly discuss this aspect of Witness MACHO's evidence.

3075. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that Witnesses RV's and QAL's evidence is mutually exclusive as Witness RV's testimony does not conclusively establish the whereabouts of Ndayambaje for the entire afternoon of 21 April 1994.[7023] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have decided not to discuss this particular aspect of the evidence in the Trial Judgement and to consider that Witness RV's testimony did not undermine Witness QAL's account. The Appeals Chamber also finds no contradiction between Nteziryayo's and Witness AND-44's evidence and Witness QAL's account as neither Nteziryayo nor Witness AND-44 testified that transporting grenades in the back of a pickup truck would necessarily lead to an explosion but rather gave their personal opinion about the security measures that would generally have to be taken in order to avoid an explosion.[7024]

3076. Furthermore, contrary to Ndayambaje's contention, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not accept Witness QAL's evidence "on the sole basis" that she was Hutu and that Ndayambaje officiated at her wedding. Rather, after considering her testimony including this aspect, the Trial Chamber concluded that she would not have had any reason to lie.[7025] Ndayambaje does not adduce any argument to show that the Trial Chamber erred in this regard.

3077. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber did not address in the Trial Judgement the fact that Witness QAL's prior statement of 17 October 1997 did not refer to the transport of weapons about which she testified at trial. During cross-examination, Witness QAL denied stating in her prior statement that she saw Ndayambaje transporting attackers, explaining that what she saw was weapons in Ndayambaje's vehicle.[7026] Bearing in mind that the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QAL's testimony solely as circumstantial evidence to support the contention that "Ndayambaje was generally involved in distributing weapons at Kabuye Hill",[7027] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the discrepancy between Witness QAL's testimony and her prior statement was such as to undermine the credibility of her evidence or require express consideration by the Trial Chamber in the Trial Judgement.

3078. Based on the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QAL's evidence related to the attacks on Kabuye Hill.

(vi) Witnesses RV and FAU

3079. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness RV testified to seeing Ndayambaje at the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994 with a communal policeman, taking ammunition and a gun from the weapons store and leaving in the direction of Kabuye Hill.[7028] It also found that Witness FAU testified that he travelled with Ndayambaje to the Muganza commune office, that Brigadier Pierre took a gun there, and that he accompanied Ndayambaje and two policemen to Kabuye Hill.[7029] The Trial Chamber determined that their testimonies partly corroborated each other and that the contradictions between their testimonies did not cast doubt on their eyewitness accounts that Ndayambaje was involved in this distribution of weapons at the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994.[7030] The Trial Chamber concluded that the Prosecution had proven beyond reasonable doubt that "Ndayambaje distributed weapons at […] the Muganza commune office".[7031]

3080. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in giving substantial weight to the testimonies of Witnesses FAU and RV, notably because neither of them testified that he "distributed" weapons.[7032] He also points out that both witnesses had an incentive to lie since they were detained and accused in trials for genocide-related crimes at the time of their testimonies.[7033] Ndayambaje also asserts that Witness FAU referred to three Kalashnikovs in cross-examination, while he had initially only mentioned one pistol during examination-in-chief, and that Witness RV testified about a single old gun whereas he had mentioned ten guns in his prior statement.[7034]

3081. In addition, Ndayambaje contends that Witnesses FAU's and RV's testimonies contradicted each other as to: (i) the time of the event;[7035] (ii) the number and type of weapons that were taken;[7036] (iii) the identity of the persons who opened the store and distributed the weapons;[7037]

[7032] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 515. Ndayambaje also submits that "Witness FAU never mentioned the date on which the event allegedly took place" and that "[a]s it did in paragraphs 1034 to 1037, the Chamber had to consider this aspect with regard to the Indictment which was itself vague as to the date of the alleged weapons distribution". See ibid., para. 512, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 1034-1037. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has already addressed and rejected Ndayambaje's arguments with respect to the lack of notice concerning Kabuye Hill and, to the extent Ndayambaje is developing a new argument, dismisses it as unclear. See supra, paras. 2762-2764.

[7034] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 514. Ndayambaje also avers that Witness RV testified that the weapons were taken at 4.00 p.m. during examination-in-chief, and at 2.00 p.m. on cross-examination. See ibid., para. 513.
[7035] Ndayambaje submits that Witness FAU testified that the weapons were taken in the morning and that, according to Witness RV, it happened in the afternoon. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 513.
[7036] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 514.
[7037] Ndayambaje submits that, according to Witness FAU's testimony, the weapons store was opened by Brigadier Pierre who distributed the Kalashnikovs to policemen, whereas Witness RV testified that he opened it himself. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 515.

(iv) the vehicle allegedly used by Ndayambaje;[7038] and (v) Ndayambaje's whereabouts after the distribution of weapons.[7039] Ndayambaje also asserts that the Trial Chamber did not take into account the fact that Witnesses FAU and RV contradicted Witnesses EV and QBZ who placed Ndayambaje elsewhere on Saturday, 23 April 1994.[7040]

3082. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber treated Witnesses RV and FAU with appropriate caution and made no errors in its assessment.[7041] It submits that Ndayambaje is "splitting hairs" when pointing out that Witnesses RV and FAU did not testify that Ndayambaje personally took weapons and distributed them as both testified that he was "the driving force behind bringing weapons and attackers to Kabuye Hill."[7042] It contends that Ndayambaje's unsubstantiated claim regarding their status as detained witnesses awaiting trial should be summarily dismissed.[7043]

3084. The Appeals Chamber notes that, in support of its finding that "Ndayambaje distributed weapons" at the Muganza commune office, the Trial Chamber relied on Witnesses RV's and FAU's evidence that Ndayambaje took the initiative of going to the commune office to take weapons and distribute them and that, although he did not personally proceed with the actual physical distribution [7038] Ndayambaje submits that Witness RV mentioned a khaki-coloured vehicle belonging to the Health Centre, that no other witness mentioned, while Witness FAU spoke about a white Projet Agricole de Muganza ("PAMU") vehicle. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 516, 521.

[7039] Ndayambaje submits that, while Witness FAU testified that Ndayambaje went to Kabuye around 11.00 a.m. and to Butare around 1.00 p.m., driving the PAMU vehicle, and that Charles joined them in Kabuye Hill driving the commune vehicle, Witness RV testified that he saw Ndayambaje around 1.00 p.m. on his way to Kibayi in the khaki-coloured vehicle belonging to the Health Centre and around 2.00 p.m., heading for Kabuye Hill together with Witness FAU, in the vehicle driven by Charles. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 517.
[7040] Ndayambaje submits that: (i) Witness EV placed Ndayambaje on Saturday, 23 April 1994 in Kabuye from 10.00 a.m. to 5.00. p.m.; and (ii) Witness QBZ placed Ndayambaje on Saturday, 23 April 1994 in Kabuye Hill "from morning to evening". See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 518. Ndayambaje contends that Witnesses FAU's testimony is also contradicted by Defense Witnesses GABON and KEPIR who placed Ndayambaje at the Muganza commune office in the afternoon after an attack that took place there. See idem. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber rejected the alibi evidence provided by Witnesses GABON and KEPIR as to Ndayambaje's whereabouts on 23 and 24 April 1994 and that it has affirmed this finding above in Section IX.C. See supra, paras. 2919-2929.

of weapons, he was involved in all steps of its material realization.[7046] In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's emphasis that the witnesses did not testify that he personally distributed weapons at the Muganza commune office; a fact that the Trial Chamber duly considered.[7047]

3085. The Trial Judgement also reflects express consideration that Witnesses RV and FAU may have had incentives to lie because of their status as detained witnesses convicted or awaiting trial in the assessment of their evidence pertaining to the distribution of weapons at Muganza Commune.[7048] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate any error in this respect.

3086. Turning to the alleged inconsistencies in the evidence of Witnesses RV and FAU regarding the number and types of weapons, the Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber expressly recalled Witness FAU's examination-in-chief and cross-examination in this respect and did not find that his testimony was inconsistent but rather that it "was clarified during cross-examination".[7049] Ndayambaje does not advance any argument to show that the Trial Chamber erred in this assessment.[7050] Ndayambaje also ignores that Witness RV explained in subsequent written statements that his prior statement had not been recorded correctly regarding the number of weapons that were taken from the commune office and that he had asked for a formal correction of this statement.[7051]

3087. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered the inconsistencies that Ndayambaje points out between Witnesses FAU's and RV's evidence regarding the time of the day of the distribution of weapons, the type and number of weapons that were taken, and the identity of the person who proceeded with the removal and distribution of weapons and concluded that they did not cast doubt on their eyewitness evidence that Ndayambaje was involved in the distribution of weapons at the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994.[7052] Ndayambaje does not advance any argument to show that this conclusion was unreasonable.

[7050] The Appeals Chamber also notes that, in examination-in-chief, Witness FAU testified that Pierre took a "gun" from the weapons store. In cross-examination, he stated that Pierre took one gun for himself and gave one to each of the two policemen and that the guns were Kalashnikovs. See Witness FAU, T. 4 March 2004 p. 72, T. 9 March 2004 p. 45.

K0169405 (Registry pagination) ("on line 9 on the distribution of arms, I wish to make a substantial change to the words on the distribution of weapons, since what is recorded does not appear to represent what I said during the taking of the statement […]. Witness RV also confirmed during cross-examination that there must have been an error of interpretation. See Witness RV, T. 18 February 2004 pp. 33, 34 (closed session).

3088. By contrast, the Trial Chamber did not explicitly discuss the inconsistencies within Witnesses FAU's and RV's testimonies underscored by Ndayambaje concerning the vehicle he used and his whereabouts after the distribution of weapons at the commune office. The Trial Chamber nonetheless expressly noted these aspects of their evidence in the course of its analysis of the evidence pertaining to the distribution of weapons.[7053] Ndayambaje does not explain why it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber not to discuss these inconsistencies expressly and fails to advance any argument to demonstrate how these minor inconsistencies undermine the credibility of Witnesses FAU's and RV's accounts of Ndayambaje's involvement in the distribution of weapons.

3089. With respect to Ndayambaje's contentions regarding the contradictions between Witnesses RV's and FAU's testimonies, on one hand, and Witnesses EV's and QBZ's testimonies, on the other hand, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness QBZ's account about Ndayambaje's whereabouts on a "Saturday" in April 1994[7054] contradicts Witnesses RV's and FAU's accounts in light of the Trial Chamber's finding that the event Witness QBZ testified about "occurred about one week after the death of the President, i.e. around 13 April 1994"; a finding that Ndayambaje does not challenge.[7055] As for Witness EV, the Appeals Chamber notes that, given that the witness could only provide estimates and did not testify to have constantly seen Ndayambaje, his testimony that on 23 April 1994 he saw Ndayambaje arriving at Kabuye Hill at about 10.00 a.m. and leaving at approximately 3.00 or 4.00 p.m.[7056] is not incompatible with Witnesses RV's and FAU's testimonies recalled by the Trial Chamber that they saw Ndayambaje at the Muganza commune office in the late morning or around 2.00 p.m., before he headed for Kabuye Hill.[7057]

3090. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ndayambaje was involved in the distribution of weapons at the Muganza commune office on 23 April 1994 based on Witnesses FAU's and RV's evidence.

(vii) Witness EV

3091. The Trial Chamber found that Witness EV testified that he saw Ndayambaje arriving in a convoy of vehicles on the fourth day of his stay at Kabuye Hill, "which would have fallen on 23 April 1994", and that he saw him there again on 24 April 1994.[7058] The Trial Chamber relied on Witness EV's evidence as it interpreted it: (i) together with the evidence of Witnesses RT, TW, QAQ, and FAG to find that Ndayambaje transported attackers to and was present at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994;[7059] and (ii) as circumstantial evidence that Ndayambaje was involved in the distribution of weapons at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994.[7060]

3092. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber's misconstruction of the timeline of events recounted by Witness EV led to the erroneous finding that Witness EV saw him at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 in the circumstances he described since the witness was in fact testifying about 24 and 25 April 1994.[7061] He also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ndayambaje used the Muganza commune vehicle to transport assailants and that there is "an obvious problem with the identification made by Witness EV."[7062]

3093. As mentioned above, the Prosecution submits that Witness EV's evidence should not have been relied upon.[7063] It argues that, "even without EV's evidence, there was considerable Prosecution evidence establishing that Ndayambaje transported attackers, distributed weapons and was present during the attacks against Tutsis at Kabuye on 23 and 24 April."[7064] The Prosecution also responds that the timing of the witness was not clear and that, whichever day Witness EV testified about, his testimony did not cast doubt on the other witnesses' evidence regarding the use of the communal vehicle.[7065]

3094. Ndayambaje replies that his convictions in relation to 23 April 1994 should be quashed as Witness EV is the only witness relied upon by the Trial Chamber to convict him for crimes committed on this day.[7066]

[7058] Trial Judgement, paras. 1426, 1448.

[7061] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 487.
[7062] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 488-491. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje also submits that Witnesses EV, RV, RT, FAU, and FAG gave contradictory evidence as they placed within the same time frame Ndayambaje in four different vehicles going into different directions. See ibid., para. 521. Ndayambaje, however, fails to provide any specific reference to sustain his contention, which the Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses.
[7063] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2296, 2297, 2300, 2301, 2306, 2315, 2320, 2321.

[7066] Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 176.

3095. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber misconstrued the timeline provided by Witness EV in his testimony.[7067] As a result of this error, the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on aspects of Witness EV's testimony that pertained to 24 April 1994 in support of its findings concerning events on 23 April 1994, and on aspects of the witness's testimony that pertained to 25 April 1994 in support of its findings on 24 April 1994.

3096. However, the Appeals Chamber is not convinced that the Trial Chamber's error occasioned a miscarriage of justice given the Trial Chamber's reliance on other direct evidence in support of its findings about the events of 23 and 24 April 1994. Contrary to Ndayambaje's submission, Witness EV was not the only witness the Trial Chamber relied upon to establish that Ndayambaje was present and transported attackers on 23 April 1994. The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber primarily relied on Witness RT's direct testimony in this respect, which it found clear and convincing.[7068] For the distribution of weapons, the Trial Chamber relied on the direct evidence of Witnesses RT, RV, and FAU, as further corroborated by Witness QAL's circumstantial evidence.[7069] Likewise, the Trial Chamber's finding on Ndayambaje's presence and transport of attackers to Kabuye Hill on 24 April 1994 was primarily based on the direct evidence of Witness TW, as corroborated by Witness QAQ's testimony that he saw a white vehicle transporting attackers, which the other refugees recognised as Ndayambaje's vehicle.[7070] The Appeals Chamber has found no error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on this evidence.

3097. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's error in assessing Witness's EV testimony occasioned a miscarriage of justice since the Trial Chamber's findings based on Witness EV's testimony were supported by other credible evidence. For this reason, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to consider Ndayambaje's remaining arguments relating to the assessment of the evidence of Witness EV concerning 23 and 24 April 1994.

(b) Assessment of Defence Evidence

3098. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider and discuss in the Trial Judgement the relevant testimonies of his Defence Witnesses ALIZA, GLANA, MAJIK, SHICO, and JEVAN related to the events at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994, thereby failing in its duty to provide a reasoned opinion.[7071] Ndayambaje argues that Witnesses GLANA's,

MAJIK's, and SHICO's evidence that he was not involved in the attacks at Kabuye Hill was "specific and reliable" as they were present among the refugees gathered on Kabuye Hill from 20 to 25 April 1994.[7072] He asserts that their testimonies corroborated Witness ALIZA's evidence and contradicted the Prosecution witnesses' testimonies, particularly as regards the timeline, his presence, and his involvement in the events at Kabuye Hill.[7073] With respect to Witness JEVAN, Ndayambaje highlights that his testimony that the green MRND vehicle was sold prior to 1994 contradicted Witness EV's testimony.[7074] He adds that the testimonies of these five witnesses were not challenged by the Prosecution and that the Trial Chamber did not find contradictions or implausibility in their evidence or establish that they had particular ties with him or any interest in protecting him.[7075] In Ndayambaje's view, this disregarded evidence had "the potential of casting reasonable doubt on the events of Kabuye".[7076]

3099. The Prosecution responds that the evidence pointed out by Ndayambaje was incapable of raising a reasonable doubt in its case.[7077] It argues that Witness ALIZA's evidence was properly considered by the Trial Chamber and that, in any event, he was not a credible witness as he had an incentive to lie for Ndayambaje.[7078] It further submits that: (i) a review of Witnesses GLANA's, MAJIK's, and SHICO's testimonies shows that they were neither reliable nor credible;[7079] (ii) Witnesses GLANA's, MAJIK's, and SHICO's testimonies do not support the contention that Ndayambaje was not at Kabuye Hill;[7080] and (iii) the reason why the Trial Chamber rejected considered and assessed by the Trial Chamber in relation to the events at Kabuye Hill but solely for the alibi and for 22 April 1994. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 256, 474, 524; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 193. Ndayambaje emphasises that the Trial Chamber did not mention Witnesses GLANA, MAJIK, SHICO, and JEVAN in the list it made of the witnesses Ndayambaje relied upon in support of his arguments regarding Kabuye Hill. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 90, 154, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 1252. At the appeals hearing, Ndayambaje claimed that the Trial Chamber also overlooked the testimonies of Defence Witnesses KANUC and Stefaan Marysse related to the events at Kabuye Hill. See AT. 21 April 2015 p. 28. The Appeals Chamber observes that, Ndayambaje not only did not raise this allegation in his written appeal submissions but also failed to substantiate and provide any reference to support his claim that the evidence of these witnesses was relevant to the Trial Chamber's findings on the events at Kabuye Hill and should have been addressed in the Trial Chamber's reasoning. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber declines to consider this argument and dismisses it without further consideration.

[7079] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2395, 2399-2409, 2411, 2412. The Prosecution argues that: (i) the content of Witness GLANA's account of her experience at Kabuye Hill makes it unreliable and not credible and shows that she was not in a position to be able to identify the assailants, even if she pretended to; (ii) Witness GLANA never gave satisfactory explanation as to why she chose to flee to Zaire, "the very place where many génocidaires went", and "over-stated her evidence", claiming that no members of the authorities were present at Kabuye Hill, contrary to the evidence that showed that authorities directed the attacks; and (iii) Witness SHICO overstated her evidence and "made over-reaching assertions that were not consistent with her limited ability to observe". See idem.

Witness ALIZA's testimony, namely that he had a different experience on the hill from other witnesses and that the fact that he did not see or hear Ndayambaje does not mean that the latter was not there, applies equally to Witnesses GLANA's, MAJIK's, and SHICO's evidence.[7081] The Prosecution also argues that Witness JEVAN's evidence about the MRND Muganza commune vehicle has no impact on the Trial Chamber's findings.[7082]

3100. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber need not refer to every piece of evidence provided that there is no indication that the trial chamber completely disregarded any particular piece of evidence; such disregard is shown where evidence that is clearly relevant to the findings is not addressed by the trial chamber's reasoning.[7083]

3101. Contrary to Ndayambaje's contention, the Trial Judgement reflects consideration of Witness ALIZA's evidence in relation to the events at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994. Not only did the Trial Chamber summarise Witness ALIZA's evidence in this regard, but it also referred to it in its deliberations related to the events at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994.[7084] Although the Trial Chamber did not explicitly discuss Witness ALIZA's relevant testimony that he did not see Ndayambaje or hear of his presence at Kabuye Hill on "Saturday afternoon", it is clear that the Trial Chamber's finding that the witness's statement that he did not see or hear about his presence on 22 April 1994 "[did] not mean that [Ndayambaje] was not present at all on that day" was meant to apply equally to the witness's testimony about Saturday, 23 April 1994.[7085] Notably, the Trial Chamber also observed that the witness conceded that, when the attack was launched, he could not see everything that was happening or every person on the hill.[7086] Ndayambaje's argument regarding the assessment of Witness ALIZA's testimony about the attacks on Kabuye Hill of 23 April 1994 is consequently dismissed.

[7081] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2396, 2397. The Prosecution submits that the particular circumstances of the Kabuye Hill massacres make it understandable for the witnesses not to have noticed the presence of Ndayambaje. See ibid., para. 2398. See also AT. 21 April 2015 p. 55.

[7084] See Trial Judgement, paras. 1324, 1325, 1448. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Witness ALIZA's testimony that he did not see Ndayambaje during the interception of refugees or at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 was expressly addressed in the Trial Judgement in relation to the events on the 20 and 22 April 1994 and that the Trial Chamber concluded that his testimony did not cast a doubt on the testimony of the Prosecution witnesses. See ibid., paras. 1413, 1415.
[7085] Trial Judgement, para. 1415. Witness ALIZA testified that, on 24 April 1994, he returned to Kabuye Hill to look for family members, but that because he saw armed civilians killing women and children who had survived, he fled and hid at a sorghum farm. See ibid., para. 1326.

3102. While Ndayambaje is correct in asserting that the Trial Chamber did not refer to Witness MAJIK's testimony in the portion of its judgement relating to Kabuye Hill,[7087] the Trial Judgement reflects express consideration of this witness's evidence in the section addressing the massacres at Mugombwa Church.[7088] Given the limited relevance of Witness MAJIK's testimony to the events that took place at Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 – the witness testifying that she remained at home on 23 April 1994 and only returned to Kabuye Hill on Sunday, 24 April 1994, when there were no more refugees there[7089] – the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was under no obligation to expressly discuss this aspect of Witness MAJIK's evidence when reaching its findings on the allegation of Ndayambaje's involvement in the Kabuye Hill massacres of 23 and 24 April 1994.

3103. The Trial Chamber did also not refer to the evidence of Witnesses GLANA and SHICO in relation to the attacks at Kabuye Hill.[7090] Although the Trial Chamber referred to Witness SHICO's testimony elsewhere in the Trial Judgement,[7091] Witness GLANA's testimony is not mentioned at all in the Trial Judgement. As pointed out by Ndayambaje, Witnesses GLANA and SHICO testified that, together with other refugees, they had sought refuge at Kabuye Hill, where they were on Saturday, 23 April 1994.[7092] Both testified that they did not see Ndayambaje or his vehicle on that day or hear about his presence from other refugees.[7093] The Trial Chamber omitted to note in the Trial Judgement that Ndayambaje relied on these aspects of Witnesses GLANA's and SHICO's testimonies in his closing submissions.[7094]

[7093] Witness GLANA, T. 11 June 2008 pp. 42, 74; Witness SHICO, T. 23 June 2008 pp. 32, 33. See also Ndayambaje Closing Brief, paras. 484, 501, 503, 507. Ndayambaje's submissions also seek to demonstrate that Witnesses GLANA's and SHICO's evidence raises a reasonable doubt as to the features and the timeline of the attacks at Kabuye Hill. However, the Appeals Chamber notes that, apart from very general considerations without reference, Ndayambaje only refers to the events of Friday, 22 April 1994. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 91, 155; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 257, 476, 526. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ndayambaje fails to substantiate his claim and dismisses his argument in this respect as to the events of 23 and 24 April 1994.
[7094] Trial Judgement, para. 1252 ("In support of its submissions, the Ndayambaje Defence relies on the testimony of Ndayambaje Defence Witnesses ALIZA, TOVIA, KEPIR, GABON, MARVA, BIDI, Father Tiziano, SABINE, Trial Chamber erred by failing to consider the evidence of Witnesses GLANA and SHICO with respect to the events at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994. However, Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that this error invalidates the Trial Chamber's conclusions concerning his role in the attacks at Kabuye Hill. The Appeals Chamber notes that, although Witnesses GLANA and SHICO testified that they did not see or hear about the presence of Ndayambaje on 23 April 1994, their testimonies also suggest that they could not reliably establish that Ndayambaje was not there. In particular, their testimonies reveal that they were not in a position to identify any of the assailants on 23 April 1994.[7095] Moreover, Witness SHICO's testimony reflects that she could not observe everything that was happening because she was taking care of her children and shared information only with people from the same locality as her.[7096] As for Witness GLANA, her testimony shows that, as there was gunfire, she went into hiding from 4.00 p.m. beside a banana tree and laid down to avoid being hit by a bullet.[7097] Recalling the Trial Chamber's finding that "there were many thousands of refugees on Kabuye Hill, which covered an expansive area",[7098] the Appeals Chamber is of the view that the fact that Witnesses GLANA and SHICO did not see Ndayambaje or hear about his presence is of very limited probative value and would not have precluded a reasonable trier of fact from finding that Ndayambaje was present at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994 as testified by a credible Prosecution witness and corroborated by circumstantial evidence.

3105. Finally, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje fails to provide any reference to the relevant parts of testimonies or the Trial Judgement to support his allegation that Witness JEVAN's evidence contradicts that of Witness EV about the use of the MRND vehicle.[7099] In any case, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness EV's testimony and that it has concluded above that the Trial Chamber's findings nonetheless remain reasonable without Witness EV's evidence.

3106. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider the evidence of Witnesses GLANA and SHICO relevant to the question of Ndayambaje's presence at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that this error invalidates the Trial Chamber's conclusions regarding his responsibility in the attacks on Kabuye Hill of 23 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber dismisses as without merit Ndayambaje's remaining contentions about the assessment of the Defence evidence.

3. Additional Evidence Admitted on Appeal

3107. On the basis of the trial record alone, the Appeals Chamber has found that the Trial Chamber erred in holding Ndayambaje responsible for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994 and reversed his convictions on this basis.[7100] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to examine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to Ndayambaje's guilt in this respect.[7101]

3108. By contrast, the Appeals Chamber has found that, on the basis of the trial record alone, the Trial Chamber did not err in finding Ndayambaje responsible for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated during attacks on Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 by transporting attackers to Kabuye Hill, distributing weapons that were later used in the massacres, and being present during the attacks. In accordance with the relevant standard, the Appeals Chamber will therefore determine whether, in light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to this finding of guilt.

3109. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it admitted as additional evidence on appeal: (i) a confidential witness statement dated 30 January 2013 relevant to the assessment of the credibility of Prosecution Witness EV;[7102] and (ii) a prior statement given confidentially to Tribunal investigators by Witness Claver Habimana ("Habimana") on 9 June 2009 and part of his testimony in the Ntawukulilyayo case relevant to the assessment of the credibility of Prosecution Witness RT.[7103]

3110. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber's error in assessing Witness EV's testimony on the events of 23 and 24 April 1994 at Kabuye Hill have not occasioned a miscarriage of justice, given the Trial Chamber's reliance on other direct evidence in support of its findings about these events.[7104] In these circumstances and given that the 30 January 2013 witness statement admitted as additional evidence on appeal concerns solely the credibility of Witness EV, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to examine it in light of the trial evidence to determine whether it is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt as to Ndayambaje's guilt regarding these events.

3111. Turning to the additional evidence admitted on appeal relevant to the credibility of Witness RT, the Appeals Chamber recalls that, when admitting Habimana's Materials, it stated:

> Habimana's Materials reflect that Witness RT allegedly arrived at Witness Habimana's house approximately a week after the death of President Habyarimana and stayed there until 16 April 1994, according to Witness Habimana's estimate, whereupon he walked with Witness RT to the border of Burundi and assisted him to cross the river separating Rwanda from Burundi. The Appeals Chamber notes that this evidence is inconsistent with Witness RT's testimony at trial that he was present at Ngiryi Bridge and Kabuye Hill between 20 and 24 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber finds that, had Habimana's Materials been available at trial, they could have impacted the Trial Chamber's assessment of the credibility of Witness RT's testimony.[7105]

3112. Ndayambaje submits that Habimana's Materials: (i) show that Witness RT was no longer in Rwanda on the dates, which according to the witness's testimony, Witness RT saw him at Ngiryi Bridge and Kabuye Hill between 20 and 24 April 1994; and (ii) establish that Witness RT lied at trial and falsely incriminated him.[7106] He also argues that Habimana's Materials call into question the overall assessment of the credibility of the Defence evidence, which, in his view, was rejected for the most part because of the substantial weight granted by the Trial Chamber to the testimony of Witness RT.[7107] Ndayambaje contends that all of the Trial Chamber's findings relying on the evidence of Witness RT should be overturned and that the remainder of the Prosecution evidence is not sufficient to sustain the findings of guilt beyond reasonable doubt.[7108]

3113. The Prosecution submits that the evidence contained in Habimana's Materials is not credible and could not have been a decisive factor at trial, and that Ndayambaje's convictions for the events

The Appeals Chamber recalls that it allowed Ndayambaje and the Prosecution, if they deem it necessary, to file written submissions discussing the possible impact of Habimana's Materials on the Trial Chamber's findings. See 12 May 2015 Appeal Decision, para. 91.

[7108] Ndayambaje Submissions on Additional Evidence, paras. 14, 20, 25, 27-29. Ndayambaje also submits that, since Habimana's Materials should not have been taken into account to discredit the Defence witnesses who also testified in relation to the events at Mugombwa Church, Habimana's Materials also invalidate the Trial Chamber's findings related to Mugombwa Church. See ibid., paras. 14, 29. The Appeals Chamber finds that this claim is without merit as the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness RT's evidence to reject any of the Defence evidence relating to Mugombwa Church. See supra, Section IX.E.

at Kabuye Hill would in any event stand without Witness RT's evidence based on other evidence on the record.[7109]

3114. The Appeals Chamber finds Witness RT's testimony pertaining to the interception of Tutsi refugees trying to flee to Burundi at Ngiryi Bridge, his arrival at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994, the attacks on the Tutsis who had sought refuge there, and Ndayambaje's distribution of grenades on 23 April 1994 detailed and coherent.[7110] His evidence is first-hand and his identification of Ndayambaje is compelling.[7111] Witness RT's explanations given in cross-examination concerning alleged inconsistencies about how many times and where he saw Ndayambaje during the events are clear and convincing.[7112]

3115. Habimana's Materials reflect that Witness RT allegedly arrived at Habimana's house approximately a week after the death of President Habyarimana and stayed there until 16 April 1994, whereupon he walked with Witness RT to the border of Burundi and assisted him to cross the river separating Rwanda from Burundi.[7113] This evidence directly contradicts Witness RT's testimony that he was present at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994, where he saw Ndayambaje distributing grenades, and left for Burundi on 25 April 1994.[7114]

3116. However, upon careful review of his evidence and the totality of the evidence in the trial record, the Appeals Chamber does not find Habimana's evidence that Witness RT came to hide at his place as early as 13 April 1994 credible. The Appeals Chamber notes that Habimana's Statement that Witness RT told Habimana that "[Witness RT] could not spend the night at [Witness RT's] home in Remera as the killings had started there"[7115] is inconsistent with Habimana's Testimony that Witness RT came to hide at Habimana's place because "[Witness RT] had observed that there were disturbances", "tension between Hutus and Tutsis", and "unlawful gatherings everywhere".[7116] It is also not disputed that the killings in Muganza Commune started on

The Appeals Chamber observes that the Prosecution claims that the name of the witness who testified as Claver Habimana in the Ntawukulilyayo trial is, in fact, Claver "Nahimana". See ibid., paras. 1, 3. The Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to determine the issue in light of its conclusions on the credibility of the witness. For the sake of clarity, the Appeals Chamber will refer to the relevant individual as Claver "Habimana".

19 or 20 April 1994, and not a week after the death of the President.[7117] As noted by the Prosecution, Defence and Prosecution evidence consistently shows that people in Muganza Commune started fleeing around 20 April 1994,[7118] which is consistent with Witness RT's account.[7119] Moreover, while Habimana stated that he accepted to help Witness RT because they were friends and because he knew "that a human being's life is very precious",[7120] there is evidence on the record that Habimana was one of the community leaders involved in the genocide.[7121]

3117. Considering Witness RT's detailed and convincing account of the events at Kabuye Hill together with the inconsistencies in the Habimana's Materials, the Appeals Chamber finds that the additional evidence admitted on appeal does not undermine the credibility of Witness RT's account about Ndayambaje's involvement in a distribution of grenades at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber makes this determination in light of the totality of the evidence in the trial record, including the evidence pointed out by Ndayambaje at trial and on appeal regarding the circumstances in which Witness RT identified him at Kabuye Hill on 23 April 1994[7122] as well as the evidence of Ndayambaje and Witnesses ALIZA, ANGES, BIDI, GABON, GLANA, KEPIR, MAJIK, MARVA, SABINE, SHICO, and Stan concerning the events at Kabuye Hill and/or Ndayambaje's alibi highlighted by Ndayambaje in his closing brief and referred to by the Trial Chamber.[7123]

3118. In light of the trial evidence and the additional evidence admitted on appeal, the Appeals Chamber is itself convinced beyond reasonable doubt of Ndayambaje's guilt concerning the killing of Tutsis perpetrated at Kabuye Hill following the distribution of grenades on 23 April 1994.

[7117] In this respect, the Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje testified at trial that, during the period before 18 April 1994, "there was no unrest [in Muganza Commune] for people to seek refuge in churches or other buildings". See Ndayambaje, T. 26 November 2008 p. 11. See also Ndayambaje, T. 2 December 2008 p. 29.

The Appeals Chamber further observes that, although the Trial Chamber applied caution to Witness FAG's testimony in light of the fact that witness was still awaiting a decision by a Gacaca court at the time of his testimony, it relied on several aspects of his testimony for the events at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill as well as for Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony. See Trial Judgement, paras. 1226, 1233, 1234, 1236, 1237, 1244, 1245, 1409, 1410, 1425, 1428-1431, 4590, 4610, 4621-4623, 4627, 4629. The Appeals Chamber finds Witness FAG's testimony about the implication of Habimana in the genocide credible and reliable.

4. Conclusion

3119. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Ndayambaje was present at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber grants this part of Ground 18 of Ndayambaje's appeal and, accordingly, reverses his convictions for aiding and abetting genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol in relation to the attacks on Kabuye Hill of 22 April 1994. The Appeals Chamber will examine the impact of this finding, if any, in Section XII below.

3120. However, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for aiding and abetting the killings perpetrated during attacks on Kabuye Hill on 23 and 24 April 1994 by transporting attackers to Kabuye Hill, distributing weapons that were later used in the massacres, and being present during the attacks. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the relevant part of Ground 9 as well as Grounds 10 and 11 and the remaining parts of Ground 18 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

G. Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony (Ground 19)

3121. The Trial Chamber found that, during Ndayambaje's public swearing-in ceremony as the bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 22 June 1994 held in the woods near the Muganza commune office, "Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje told the population to continue with their 'work' and urged them to 'sweep the dirt outside'" in reference to the killing of Tutsis and instructed that those hiding Tutsis who refused to hand them over should be killed.[7124] It also found it established beyond reasonable doubt that, after the ceremony, searches for Tutsis took place and killings followed.[7125] The Trial Chamber convicted Ndayambaje pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide on the basis of the statements he made at his swearing-in ceremony.[7126]

3122. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Prosecution and Defence evidence and made imprecise and unsupported findings.[7127] The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1. Assessment of Prosecution Evidence

3123. In reaching its findings regarding Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Trial Chamber considered, inter alia, the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAF, QAL, QAQ, QAR, RV, TO, and TP.[7128]

3124. Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) failing to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Prosecution witnesses generally; (ii) the assessment of the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses FAL, FAG, QAF, RV, FAU, TO, TP, and QAL; and (iii) determining that all the witnesses were testifying about the same event.[7129]

[7125] Trial Judgement, paras. 4645, 5948, 6026.
[7126] Trial Judgement, paras. 6029, 6038, 6186. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, although the Trial Chamber found that there was a causal connection between Ndayambaje's words at his swearing-in ceremony and the abduction and killing of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector, it did not ultimately convict Ndayambaje on this basis. See supra, fn. 6351.
[7127] See generally Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 182-193; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 532-611; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, paras. 199-246.
[7129] Ndayambaje further "prays the Appeals Chamber to assume jurisdiction over the motions and requests for certification of appeal which were otherwise denied on grounds of judicial economy." See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 581, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 4311-4313, 6426. The Prosecution objects to the relief Ndayambaje now seeks, as he failed to raise it in his notice of appeal. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2471. In the absence of any identification of errors or of the necessary references, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this unsubstantiated and unsupported contention. In addition, Ndayambaje, like Nteziryayo, argues that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the testimonies of Witnesses QAQ and QAR "for the purposes of fictitious corroboration", despite finding elsewhere in the Trial Judgement that they did not attend the swearing-in ceremony and that certain aspects of their evidence were implausible. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 578, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 4595, 4596, 4603, 4604,

(a) Insufficient Caution

3125. Ndayambaje submits that despite acknowledging that Witnesses FAG, FAL, QAF, RV, and TO had an incentive to implicate him, the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution when assessing their evidence.[7130] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider that similar caution should have been exercised with respect to Witness FAU's testimony, which required corroboration as the witness was detained and awaiting sentencing and therefore had an incentive to lie.[7131]

3126. Ndayambaje also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, and RV were detained together, purportedly often discussing the events at Muganza Commune.[7132] Ndayambaje submits that, because these witnesses and Witness QAF took part in Gacaca proceedings while in prison, they influenced each other's evidence which, consequently, should have been rejected.[7133] Ndayambaje further contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently the evidence of Defence Witness GABON that he and Witness RV were mistreated and that pressure was put on them to testify against Ndayambaje, and argues that Witness RV's evidence should be rejected on this basis.[7134]

3127. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber considered the challenges raised by Ndayambaje and submits that he does not demonstrate any error in its assessment.[7135] It also argues that Ndayambaje misrepresents the evidence regarding the collective participation of these witnesses in Gacaca proceedings as well as the purported influence their participation had on their testimonies.[7136] It contends that Ndayambaje does not substantiate his arguments regarding Witness RV's potential motivation to implicate him.[7137]

4607, 4608. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 185, 189; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 233. Given that the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber declined to rely on the accounts of Witnesses QAQ and QAR about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these arguments without further consideration. See Trial Judgement, paras. 4602-4608. See also supra, Section VII.B.1(a).

Ndayambaje, without precise reference, "repeats his submissions in his motion to reject detainee witnesses" when challenging Witness RV's credibility. See ibid., para. 554. The Appeals Chamber recalls that merely referring the Appeals Chamber to the arguments set out at trial is insufficient as an argument on appeal. The Appeals Chamber therefore declines to consider this part of Ndayambaje's submissions further. See, e.g., Mugenzi and Mugiraneza Appeal Judgement, para. 34; Nchamihigo Appeal Judgement, para. 369; Haraqija and Morina Appeal Judgement, para. 26.

3128. As discussed previously, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Judgement reflects express consideration of the admitted involvement of Witnesses FAG, FAL, QAF, and RV in the genocide as well as the fact that Witness RV was detained and Witnesses FAG and FAL were awaiting sentencing decisions when they testified.[7138] The Trial Chamber further recognised that the impugned witnesses "may have had incentives to implicate either Ndayambaje or Nteziryayo in order to secure favourable or lenient treatment or to apportion blame to the authorities" and that because Witness TO was imprisoned during Ndayambaje's tenure as bourgmestre, he may have "a motive to seek revenge against Ndayambaje".[7139] Similarly, the Appeals Chamber has considered and dismissed similar arguments that the Trial Chamber failed to consider sufficiently Witness FAU's status as a detained witness when analysing the evidence related to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, as a holistic reading of the Trial Judgement reflects that it did.[7140]

3129. In addition to its comprehensive discussion of the circumstances raising concerns about the impugned witnesses' motives to implicate the co-Accused, the Trial Chamber's analysis of the evidence of these detained witnesses concerning the ceremony also reflects that it took into account various factors relevant to a cautious assessment of their credibility, including the consideration of discrepancies and inconsistencies in their evidence.[7141] Moreover, it reflects the reliance on these witnesses' testimonies regarding the content and meaning of the utterances made during the ceremony as to which the Trial Chamber found broad corroboration.[7142] Against this background, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to apply sufficient caution.

3130. Regarding the purported impact of the witnesses' detention and participation in Gacaca proceedings, the Appeals Chamber observes that nothing in the transcripts cited by Ndayambaje demonstrates that through discussing events in Muganza Commune while in custody, Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAF, and RV influenced each other's evidence.[7143] With respect to purported coercion Witness RV experienced in detention, the Appeals Chamber notes that, while Witness GABON's testimony indicates that both he and Witness RV were mistreated in custody, it was Witness GABON who was asked to accuse Ndayambaje.[7144] Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness RV's evidence in light of the testimony of Witness GABON.

3131. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution when assessing evidence from these witnesses concerning Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

(b) Witness FAL

3132. When evaluating the content of the speeches made during the swearing-in ceremony, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness FAL, consistent with Witness FAG, testified that "both Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje used parables concerning the need to clean the house of dirt and place it outside."[7145] It further observed that Witness FAL, like Witnesses FAG and TO, testified that Ndayambaje explained the metaphor to mean that surviving Tutsis needed to be killed and that Witness FAL gave evidence that Nteziryayo talked about killing the Tutsis.[7146]

3133. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider that Witness FAL contradicted himself as to the time when he arrived at the ceremony, specifically whether he arrived before or after its start.[7147] He further submits that the witness's testimony that there were 5,000 armed participants who protested against Nteziryayo's criticism of the outgoing bourgmestre and that Ndayambaje climbed on the table and Sebukeye spoke at the ceremony was contradicted in numerous respects by other witnesses, which made the witness's attendance at the swearing-in ceremony improbable.[7148] In particular, Ndayambaje highlights that: (i) Witness FAG did not see Witness FAL at the meeting, recounted that there were only 1,000 unarmed attendees, and did not recall Ndayambaje climbing on the table or any other attendees taking the floor;[7149] and (ii) Witness QAF testified that none of the attendees carried weapons.[7150] Ndayambaje also highlights Defence evidence, which in his view was erroneously discredited without sufficient reasoning, that the participants were not armed, that Ndayambaje did not climb on the table, that

The Trial Chamber also noted aspects of Witness FAL's evidence when observing the "consistent, albeit often general, evidence of the Prosecution witnesses" that killings occurred after the meeting. See ibid., para. 4632.
[7147] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 533.
[7148] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 533, 534. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 185; Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 201.

Sebukeye did not attend the ceremony, and that the participants did not protest against the replacement of the outgoing bourgmestre.[7151]

3135. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted that Witness FAL testified that he arrived after the start of the meeting but then clarified that he actually arrived half an hour before it started.[7153] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate how this clarification by Witness FAL undermined the credibility of his testimony or would have required express consideration by the Trial Chamber.

3136. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Ndayambaje's contention that Witness FAG did not see Witness FAL at the swearing-in ceremony is not supported by the reference he provides.[7154] In any event, the Appeals Chamber fails to see the purported significance of this aspect of Witness FAG's evidence given the Trial Chamber's findings about the large number of attendees, discussed in more detail below. As regards discrepancies between Witness FAL's evidence that the attendees at the meeting were armed and other evidence to the contrary, the Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses FAL, TP, RV, and QAL testified that the population brought traditional arms, whereas Witnesses FAG and QAF as well Nteziryayo and Defence Witnesses GABON, KEPIR, AND-11, and AND-73 testified that the population was not armed.[7155] The Trial Chamber observed that the evidence showed that between 1,000 and 5,000 people were present and considered "it possible that while some people may have come bearing machetes and other instruments which may double as traditional weapons, others did not, which may account for the discrepancy in the witnesses' evidence."[7156] It did not find any discrepancy as to whether the population was armed "significant."[7157] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate any error in this analysis.

3137. The Trial Chamber also expressly referred to the testimonies of Witness FAL that more than 5,000 people were present and Witness FAG that there were about 1,000 people at the meeting when noting that the evidence showed "that between 1,000 and 5,000 people were present".[7158] This reflects that the Trial Chamber did not consider that the variance as to the number of people attending rendered Witnesses FAL's and FAG's testimonies incompatible. Ndayambaje does not show any error in this respect, particularly because these witnesses were simply providing estimates.[7159]

3138. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje fails to identify material differences in the testimonies of Witnesses FAL and FAG as to whether Ndayambaje climbed on a table during the ceremony. The Trial Chamber recounted Witness FAL's evidence that Nteziryayo told Ndayambaje to climb on the table before swearing Ndayambaje in as bourgmestre and that the swearing-in took place "at the beginning of the meeting and was very quick."[7160] The Trial Chamber also recalled Witness FAG's testimony that he did not see Ndayambaje climb on a chair or table and that "[t]he witness did not personally see the swearing-in of the bourgmestre".[7161] Ndayambaje's contentions ignore that Witness FAG's evidence does not demonstrate that he would have been present when Witness FAL heard Nteziryayo instruct Ndayambaje to climb on the table.[7162]

3139. While Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo testified that Ndayambaje did not climb on the table,[7163] Defence Witness KEPIR merely testified that he did not notice Ndayambaje climb on the table,[7164] and several Defence witnesses, including Witness KEPIR, recounted that the dignitaries were seated in front of the table during the swearing-in ceremony.[7165] The Trial Chamber did not ignore this evidence as it noted all of it.[7166] Considering the lack of relevance of this alleged discrepancy to any of the material facts on the basis of which Ndayambaje was found responsible, the Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber not expressly considering it in the Trial Judgement.

3140. Turning to Ndayambaje's argument that only Witness FAL testified that Sebukeye spoke at the ceremony and that the participants protested against Nteziryayo's criticism of the outgoing bourgmestre, having reviewed the relevant transcripts, the Appeals Chamber observes that Witness FAL merely testified that Sebukeye was present at the ceremony and at some later time

Could we say more than 100 persons, 1,000 persons? A. [7160] Trial Judgement, para. 4343. In this regard, the Appeals Chamber observes that neither Witness FAL's testimony nor the Trial Chamber's summary of it definitively indicates that Ndayambaje did climb on the table after being instructed by Nteziryayo to do so. See idem; Witness FAL, T. 9 February 2004 pp. 38 (English) and 45 (French).

said that the orders given there had to be implemented.[7167] The Appeals Chamber fails to see why the fact that other witnesses, including Defence witnesses, did not overhear this conversation is material to the assessment of Ndayambaje's conduct during the ceremony. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje himself testified that he did not know whether Sebukeye attended the swearing-in ceremony,[7168] and other Defence witnesses relied upon by Ndayambaje stated that they did not see Sebukeye at the ceremony.[7169]

3141. The Appeals Chamber further observes that the Trial Chamber noted that, like Witness FAL, Witness TO testified that Nteziryayo criticised the outgoing bourgmestre.[7170] The Trial Chamber also expressly noted that, apart from these two witnesses, no other witness confirmed that Nteziryayo criticised the outgoing bourgmestre.[7171] The Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was not required to provide a more detailed analysis of Defence evidence on this issue and finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that Witness FAL's account of the ceremony was incompatible with other evidence.

3142. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness FAL's evidence regarding his swearing-in ceremony.

(c) Witness FAG

3143. As noted above, the Trial Chamber observed that Witness FAG, like Witness FAL, testified "that both Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje used parables concerning the need to clean the house of dirt and place it outside"[7172] and, consistent with Witnesses FAL and TO, testified that Ndayambaje explained the metaphor to mean that surviving Tutsis needed to be killed.[7173] The Trial Chamber also noted aspects of Witness FAG's evidence when observing the "consistent, albeit often general, evidence of the Prosecution witnesses" that killings occurred after the meeting.[7174]

3144. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness FAG's testimony regarding the swearing-in ceremony.[7175] He argues that Witness FAG was recalled to explain his previous silence on crimes which he had hidden from the Trial Chamber and that the latter incorrectly assessed these omissions, which discredited the witness.[7176] He also stresses that the witness did not mention Ndayambaje making a speech in his prior statements of 1999 and 2000.[7177]

3145. In addition, Ndayambaje appears to argue that, since Witness FAG conceded that he was not present for the swearing-in part of the ceremony, the witness could not have heard Nteziryayo or Ndayambaje speak.[7178] The Appeals Chamber further understands Ndayambaje to argue that, because the witness testified that Nteziryayo repeated Ndayambaje's speech, he reversed the order of the speakers, placing the speeches long after Ndayambaje took the oath.[7179]

3147. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was aware of the omissions from Witness FAG's prior statements and the witness's explanation for them, which Ndayambaje ignores.[7182] It submits that Ndayambaje misrepresents Witness FAG's account of the ceremony and his testimony about the timing of the murder following it.[7183] It adds that the Trial Chamber acted reasonably in assessing Witness KANUC's evidence.[7184]

3148. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber expressly referred to the fact that, upon recall, Witness FAG admitted to having participated in more killings than the ones he had testified about during his initial appearance before the Tribunal[7185] and the witness's explanation for not mentioning those other killings previously when summarising his evidence on Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7186] It also noted that Witness FAG did not mention Ndayambaje taking the

[7186] See Trial Judgement, paras. 4334, 4335. The Trial Chamber noted that, when asked about previously denying having participated in other killings, Witness FAG explained that he did not mention these killings but would have admitted having participated in them if asked about them. The Trial Chamber also noted Witness FAG's explanation floor in his confession to Rwandan authorities of 18 November 1999 and his statement of 23 February 2000 to Tribunal investigators[7187] as well as the witness's explanations for these omissions.[7188] Ndayambaje does not develop any argument to challenge the reasonableness of the witness's explanations or show that no reasonable trier of fact could have accepted Witness FAG's testimony about the swearing-in ceremony, particularly where it was corroborated, despite these omissions.[7189]

3149. The Trial Chamber noted Witness FAG's testimony that he "did not personally see the swearing-in of the bourgmestre".[7190] It also noted that the witness nevertheless expressly mentioned that he "heard both Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje address the crowd in parables".[7191] Given the evidence that the incendiary remarks were made both during and after the swearing-in part of the ceremony,[7192] Ndayambaje's suggestion that Witness FAG's evidence demonstrates that he must not have heard what Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo said is not persuasive.

3150. The Appeals Chamber is similarly not persuaded by Ndayambaje's suggestion that, by claiming that Nteziryayo repeated what was said by Ndayambaje, Witness FAG reversed the order of speakers. The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness FAG specified that he did not pay attention to the order in which the speakers spoke.[7193] In any event, the Trial Chamber noted that the evidence was equivocal as to whether Nteziryayo or Ndayambaje took the floor first and found the variances insignificant.[7194] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate any error in this respect.

3151. Regarding the timing of the murder of Josepha, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in summarising Witness FAG's evidence, the Trial Chamber expressly noted that the appointment ceremony for Ndayambaje as bourgmestre occurred between May and June 1994[7195] and that the witness estimated that Josepha, who was killed after the statements made at the ceremony, died in May 1994.[7196] The Trial Chamber acknowledged that Witness FAG was equivocal as to the timing [7188] See Trial Judgement, para. 4331. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness FAG explained that "it was difficult to remember everything when giving statements" and that "it was hard to always repeat the same things." It also noted that, when asked about his failure to mention Ndayambaje taking the floor in his statement of 23 February 2000 to Tribunal investigators, the witness explained that he was questioned about Nteziryayo, not Ndayambaje, and therefore did not talk about Ndayambaje with the investigators. See idem.

of the swearing-in ceremony, but Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the witness was equivocal as to whether the killing of Josepha occurred after it or that Witness FAG's evidence in this regard was aimed at maliciously implicating him.[7197]

3152. The Trial Chamber relied on Witness FAG's evidence that Josepha's death occurred after the swearing-in ceremony when observing "the consistent, albeit often general, evidence of the Prosecution witnesses to the effect that after the meeting, killings occurred".[7198] Despite relying on this aspect of Witness FAG's testimony, the Trial Chamber did not address in the Trial Judgement Witness KANUC's evidence of seeing Josepha dead prior to Ndayambaje's swearing-in as bourgmestre or any aspects of Witness KANUC's evidence.[7199] Given the direct relevance of this evidence, to which Ndayambaje expressly referred in his closing submissions,[7200] and the absence of any indication in the Trial Judgement that the Trial Chamber assessed and weighed it, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider this evidence.

3153. The Appeals Chamber, however, finds that the Trial Chamber's failure to consider Witness KANUC's evidence does not invalidate any of the Trial Chamber's findings pertaining to the swearing-in ceremony. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber relied on the evidence of several other witnesses concerning the killings that followed the swearing-in ceremony to conclude that killings occurred and, more importantly, that Ndayambaje was not held responsible on the basis of any resulting killing.[7201] Having reviewed Witness KANUC's testimony, which incidentally was equivocal as to the date of another killing,[7202] the Appeals Chamber also does not consider that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion when finding that Witness FAG testified about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony or relying on aspects of his evidence concerning the utterances made during it.[7203]

3154. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated any error in the assessment of Witness FAG's evidence that would invalidate the Trial Chamber's findings relating to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.

(d) Witness QAF

3155. The Trial Chamber noted that, consistent with Witness RV, Witness QAF testified that "only Ndayambaje recounted the fable of sweeping dirt", which meant that surviving Tutsis needed to be killed.[7204] The Trial Chamber also considered Witness QAF's evidence that "Nteziryayo congratulated the population for their work", which meant "to kill", and urged them to continue.[7205]

3156. Ndayambaje submits that Witness QAF did not attend the swearing-in ceremony and that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on his evidence.[7206] Specifically, he argues that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's assertion, Witness QAF testified that he attended a security meeting in May 1994, two weeks after the killings in April 1994.[7207] Ndayambaje argues that, because Witness QAF arrived late, missed the swearing-in part of the meeting, and did not notice Ndayambaje wearing "a scarf with national colours", he also could not have heard Nteziryayo's remarks.[7208]

3157. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate an error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QAF's testimony.[7209]

3158. Ndayambaje replies that "[s]ince the wearing of a scarf was the tradition during the swearing in of a bourgmestre, if [Ndayambaje] was not wearing one it means that it was another meeting."[7210]

3159. The Appeals Chamber notes that, contrary to Ndayambaje's claim, Witness QAF did not specify that the "public safety" meeting[7211] he testified about took place two weeks after the killings started in April 1994, but stated that, after the start of the war in his area in April 1994, "the war stopped for about two weeks, and that it was during that lull of two weeks that the meeting took place" which was "well after the outbreak of the war of April 1994".[7212] The witness also indicated that he had poor recollection of the date of the meeting.[7213] Ndayambaje's argument is therefore without merit.

3160. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded by Ndayambaje's contention that the late arrival of Witness QAF to the meeting and the fact that he was not present for the swearing-in part of the ceremony demonstrate that he could not have heard Nteziryayo's remarks. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that missing the swearing-in part of the ceremony precluded another witness from hearing him and Nteziryayo make incendiary remarks during the gathering.[7214] Likewise, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that Witness QAF's failure to notice Ndayambaje wearing a scarf with national colours shows that he did not attend Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, given that, as noted by the Trial Chamber, the witness simply stated that he "did not pay any attention as to whether Ndayambaje wore any distinct emblem."[7215]

3161. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness QAF's evidence concerning his swearing-in ceremony.

(e) Witness RV

3162. As recalled above, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness RV, like Witness QAF, testified that "only Ndayambaje recounted the fable of sweeping dirt", understood by the witness to mean that surviving Tutsis needed to be killed.[7216]

3163. Ndayambaje argues that Witness RV's testimony is "peppered with major contradictions and inconsistencies."[7217] Specifically, he points to the witness's evidence that, despite claiming that Ndayambaje spoke after Nteziryayo, he also testified that he left the ceremony during Nteziryayo's speech.[7218] Ndayambaje suggests that the witness's explanation that Nteziryayo spoke twice, once before and once after Ndayambaje, is unbelievable, as is his evidence that he could remember the content of Nteziryayo's speech.[7219]

[7213] See Witness QAF, T. 6 February 2004 p. 11 ("Now as concerns the date, I do not have a recollection of what happened.").

[7219] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 551. See also Ndayambaje Reply Brief, paras. 209, 217.

3164. Ndayambaje also argues that the Trial Chamber's refusal to rely on Witness RV's evidence relating to Nteziryayo's involvement in events at Kirarambogo due to ambiguity within it should equally apply to the ambiguity surrounding Witness RV's testimony as to his continuous presence at the swearing-in ceremony and ability to recall the "inflammatory speeches" Ndayambaje allegedly made.[7220]

3165. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was aware of and reasonably assessed the inconsistencies in Witness RV's account of the swearing-in ceremony.[7221]

3166. The Appeals Chamber observes that, when summarising Witness RV's testimony, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witness RV testified that "[h]e could not recall what Nteziryayo said or if he was present for the entirety of Nteziryayo's speech", that "Nteziryayo spoke twice because he spoke again after Ndayambaje's speech",[7222] and that "Ndayambaje was probably the last to speak".[7223] The Trial Chamber further observed that the witness was cross-examined on this alleged inconsistency and noted that Witness RV explained that "he heard Ndayambaje", that the events "occurred a long time ago", and that he left while Nteziryayo was speaking on the second occasion after Ndayambaje spoke.[7224] Ndayambaje simply points to this evidence without demonstrating why it was material to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the witness's testimony. Considering that the Trial Chamber noted Witness FAL's testimony that Nteziryayo addressed the public both before and after Ndayambaje was installed and took the oath,[7225] the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have accepted Witness RV's evidence concerning the ceremony.

3167. Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber failed to take a consistent approach to the assessment of different parts of Witness RV's evidence likewise lacks merit. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony.[7226] When assessing the evidence regarding the events at Kirarambogo and Nteziryayo's involvement in them, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness RV could not remember the exact date of a particular meeting in May 1994, which Nteziryayo purportedly chaired.[7227] It observed that the witness "was a figure of authority at the time the meeting was alleged to have taken place", "affirmed that he convened and organised the meeting at issue", and concluded "that the ambiguity of his testimony as to the date of the meeting undermines his credibility."[7228] The Trial Chamber rejected his evidence in light of the credibility problems arising from this particular part of his testimony, in light of his status as an accomplice witness, and due to the absence of corroborating evidence.[7229] In this context, the Appeals Chamber fails to see how the rejection of Witness RV's evidence in that instance required the Trial Chamber to reject his credible and corroborated evidence concerning Ndayambaje's remarks during the swearing-in ceremony.[7230]

3168. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness RV's evidence concerning his swearing-in ceremony.

(f) Witness FAU

3169. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness FAU provided hearsay corroboration to the evidence of Witnesses FAL and FAG "that both Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje used parables concerning the need to clean the house of dirt and place it outside".[7231] The Trial Chamber also considered that Witness FAU's evidence corroborated other evidence as to the meaning of this metaphor, observing that "he testified that the killers told him that those protecting Tutsis who refused to hand them over would be killed."[7232]

3170. Ndayambaje submits that contradictions between Witness FAU's prior statements to Tribunal investigators and his testimony called for the rejection of his evidence.[7233] Specifically, Ndayambaje observes that, while Witness FAU testified that he did not attend the ceremony, his prior statement of 22 February 2001 reflects that he did and details that "he sat close to Nteziryayo and heard what he said."[7234] Ndayambaje further notes that the witness's statement of 9 October 1999 reveals that the meeting could have taken place prior to the attacks on Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill, which occurred from 20 to 24 April 1994.[7235] Ndayambaje highlights that, elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber found Witness FAU not credible because of the "confusion" between his prior statements and his testimony at trial as well as his status as an accomplice witness.[7236]

3171. Ndayambaje further contends that the Trial Chamber rejected Defence Witness KWEPO's "entire testimony without any explanation" even though his evidence that Witness FAU rejoined the Rwandan Army in May 1994 and did not return to Muganza Commune contradicts Witness FAU's account that he was in Muganza Commune at the time of the swearing-in ceremony.[7237]

3172. The Prosecution responds that certain aspects of Witness FAU's testimony were corroborated and that the Trial Chamber was aware of and reasonably assessed the discrepancies between Witness FAU's prior statements and his testimony.[7238] The Prosecution adds that, contrary to Ndayambaje's submissions, the Trial Chamber provided reasons for rejecting Witness KWEPO's evidence.[7239]

3173. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly noted in the section of the Trial Judgement addressing Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony that, when it was put to Witness FAU that his prior statement of February 2001 outlined that he sat close to Nteziryayo and heard what he was saying, the witness explained that "he knew Nteziryayo's words because those returning from the meeting told him so".[7240] Elsewhere in the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber also expressly noted Witness FAU's explanation when confronted with his prior statement to the Rwandan Prosecutor that he saw Nteziryayo at the meeting that this was a recording error as he did not attend the meeting.[7241] Ndayambaje does not challenge the reasonableness of the witness's explanations or advance arguments to demonstrate why the Trial Chamber was prevented from relying on Witness FAU's evidence despite these contradictions.

3174. The Appeals Chamber also notes that, contrary to Ndayambaje's contention, Witness FAU's statement of October 1999 to Tribunal investigators indicates that the witness said that the meeting occurred after the events at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill not before them.[7242] Ndayambaje's submission in this respect is therefore without merit.

[7242] Exhibit D192 (Witness FAU's Statement, dated 9 October 1999) (confidential), p. K0113046 (Registry pagination). The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber erroneously stated that "it was put to the witness that his statement of October 1999 said the meeting took place before the killings at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill" in paragraph 4403 of the Trial Judgement as Witness FAU's testimony reflects that he was questioned about his statement of 29 December 1999. See Witness FAU, T. 10 March 2004 pp. 25-27. The Appeals Chamber considers this erroneous reference to be inconsequential as, in any event, Witness FAU did not agree with counsel's suggestion that his prior

3177. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ndayambaje's submissions concerning the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness FAU's evidence related to his swearing-in ceremony.

(g) Witness TO

3178. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness TO, in contrast with Witnesses FAG and FAL, testified that only Nteziryayo told the metaphor concerning sweeping dirt and found that

[7243] See Trial Judgement, paras. 5227, 5228.

[7245] The Trial Chamber determined that it would be unduly prejudicial to the Defence for it to consider the evidence of Witness TO with respect to these allegations. See Trial Judgement, para. 5223.

Witness TP corroborated Witness TO's evidence on this issue.[7250] However, it considered that, consistent with Witnesses FAG and FAL, Witness TO testified that Ndayambaje explained the metaphor to mean that surviving Tutsis needed to be killed.[7251] The Trial Chamber also noted aspects of Witness TO's evidence when observing the "consistent, albeit often general, evidence of the Prosecution witnesses" that killings occurred after the meeting.[7252]

3179. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber failed to exercise sufficient caution with respect to Witness TO, highlighting that Defence Witness SABINE testified that Witness TO was sentenced and imprisoned for a murder he committed in 1994, a fact Witness TO denied.[7253] Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber failed to consider this factor and prevented him from exhaustively exploring it.[7254]

3180. Ndayambaje further contends that Witness TO's credibility was "obliterated" because several aspects of his testimony were not supported by any other witness or were contradicted by other evidence.[7255] In particular, Ndayambaje points to the fact that Witness TO "invented" the practice of shooting bows and arrows during the swearing-in ceremony and stories about long ears and tails of Inkotanyi, as well as testified about consuming alcohol during a certain event, which led to his recall before the Tribunal on 21 June 2004.[7256] Ndayambaje argues that Defence evidence contradicting Witness TO's testimony concerning the practice of shooting bows and arrows was erroneously rejected.[7257] Ndayambaje also notes that the witness's statement of 11 June 1997 placed the meeting in May 1994.[7258]

3181. In addition, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber ought to have considered the evidence of Witness SABINE which, in his view, discredited Witness TO's evidence that the murders of Witness TO's cousins took place the day after Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7259] Specifically, Ndayambaje argues that Witness SABINE, who was found guilty and had served his sentence for these murders, testified that they occurred following the events at Kabuye Hill in April 1994, not after the swearing-in ceremony in June 1994.[7260]

3182. Finally, Ndayambaje points out that Witness TO mentioned another meeting two weeks after the swearing-in ceremony.[7261] In his view, the Trial Chamber "confused the two meetings mentioned by Witness TO, who, alone, referred to a second meeting which [Ndayambaje] allegedly chaired at the same place as the swearing-in ceremony, two weeks after."[7262] Ndayambaje further highlights that Defence Witness Stan testified that there were no other meetings in Muganza Commune after 22 June 1994, contradicting Witness TO's evidence.[7263]

3183. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was aware of the elements relied upon by Ndayambaje to impugn the testimony of Witness TO and that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate an error in the Trial Chamber's consideration of them.[7264] It argues that the Trial Chamber provided reasons for rejecting Witness SABINE's evidence, which Ndayambaje misrepresents.[7265]

3185. Turning to the contradictory aspects of Witness TO's account of the swearing-in ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber set forth Witness TO's evidence that, prior to [7267] See Trial Judgement, para. 4722. The Appeals Chamber further notes that Witness TO's alleged trial for the impugned crimes would have taken place in 2007 according to Witness SABINE, i.e. after Witness TO's 2002 testimony in the present proceedings. Thus, there is no basis to assert that, at the time of his testimony, Witness TO had an interest in implicating Ndayambaje in order to receive consideration in Rwanda.

[7269] See Witness TO, T. 5 March 2002 pp. 89-91.

the ceremony, the population practiced shooting bows and arrows.[7270] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witness FAL recounted a bow-and-arrow shooting exercise near the venue of the meeting, albeit not on the same day as the meeting,[7271] and the evidence of Defence witnesses that they did not see any archery practice or did not take part in it.[7272] Ndayambaje largely repeats arguments made at trial[7273] without showing that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness TO was nonetheless testifying about the swearing-in ceremony.

3186. The Appeals Chamber is similarly not persuaded that Witness TO's evidence was incredible based on one element of his testimony concerning how the Inkotanyi were portrayed in Rwanda at the time.[7274] In addition, Ndayambaje, who simply refers to Witness TO's testimony upon recall, fails to explain how the basis of the witness's recall, which concerned his demeanour when testifying about an event other than the swearing-in ceremony,[7275] or his testimony regarding consumption of alcoholic beverages at Nteziryayo's parents' house in 1990, undermined the witness's credibility and prevented the Trial Chamber from relying on his evidence concerning the content of Nteziryayo's and Ndayambaje's remarks during the ceremony.[7276]

3187. As regards the date of the meeting, the Appeals Chamber observes that Ndayambaje merely highlights that Witness TO's prior statement indicated that the swearing-in ceremony occurred in May 1994, which was expressly noted by the Trial Chamber,[7277] without demonstrating that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that the witness was nonetheless testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, which it found to have occurred on 22 June 1994.[7278]

3188. The Appeals Chamber further notes that, contrary to Ndayambaje's submission, the Trial Chamber assessed the part of Witness SABINE's testimony upon which Ndayambaje relies when evaluating evidence regarding the abductions of Tutsi women and girls in June 1994 in another part of the Trial Judgement.[7279] The Trial Chamber found that Witness SABINE was neither reliable nor credible.[7280] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber was not required to expressly discuss his evidence in its consideration of the allegation pertaining to the swearing-in ceremony.

[7274] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber recalled Witness TO's understanding of "Inkotanyi" as Tutsis who had been driven from the country and were considered enemies and cited the pages of his testimony that also contained his recollection as to how they were portrayed. See Trial Judgement, para. 4383, fn. 11834, referring, inter alia, to Witness TO, T. 6 March 2002 pp. 15, 16. The Trial Chamber also noted the witness's explanation for the variance, namely that he "was not in a position to provide exact dates, since this was of little concern to him" and that the witness later estimated that the meeting occurred in June 1994. See idem. See also Witness TO, T. 5 March 2002 p. 28 ("It is true that so far as the dates are concerned, I am not in a position to give you the exact dates. [7278] See Trial Judgement, paras. 4374, 4375.

3189. Turning to the meeting two weeks after the swearing-in ceremony recounted by Witness TO, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber confused the swearing-in ceremony with this other meeting is based on an erroneous reading of the transcript.[7281] Moreover, the Trial Chamber excluded Witness TO's evidence about the meeting following the ceremony due to insufficient notice of the allegations related to this meeting, noting that, in any event, the evidence was not sufficient to prove these allegations beyond reasonable doubt.[7282] Ndayambaje merely highlights Witness Stan's testimony that there were no other public meetings in Muganza Commune after Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, which was expressly noted by the Trial Chamber,[7283] without explaining how it was material to the Trial Chamber's consideration of Witness TO's evidence concerning the witness's presence at the swearing-in ceremony and the content of the speeches made during it.

3190. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness TO's evidence pertaining to his swearing-in ceremony.

(h) Witness TP

3191. As noted above, the Trial Chamber considered that Witness TP's evidence corroborated Witness TO's evidence that only Nteziryayo used the metaphor concerning sweeping dirt.[7284] The Trial Chamber further considered Witness TP's testimony that Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje thanked the population for their "work", which meant "to kill", and urged them to continue.[7285]

[7281] The Appeals Chamber observes that Witness TO testified that, after the meeting chaired by Prefect Nteziryayo during which Ndayambaje was reappointed bourgmestre, the population did not comply with the instructions that were issued during the meeting, save for some scoundrels and certain bandits, who engaged in flushing out women and children and in looting. See Witness TO, T. 4 March 2002 pp. 10, 11, 26 and 31 (French) ("Après la réunion dirigée par le préfet, Élie Ndayambaje a aussi pris la parole… Après le discours du préfet, Élie Ndayambaje a également pris la parole. Il n'a pas dit grand-chose à la population, à part lui assurer sa collaboration, et après, la population est rentrée. Mais la population ne s'est pas impliquée dans les massacres pour appliquer les instructions reçues au cours de la réunion, à part quelques voyous et certains bandits qui se sont mis à débusquer les femmes et les enfants, et à commettre le pillage."). See also Trial Judgement, para. 4384, referring to Witness TO, T. 4 March 2002 pp. 26, 27, T. 6 March 2002 pp. 46, 60, 61.

Finally, the Trial Chamber also noted aspects of Witness TP's evidence when observing the "consistent, albeit often general, evidence of the Prosecution witnesses" that killings occurred after the meeting.[7286]

3192. Ndayambaje submits that Witness TP's testimony "was peppered with inconsistencies and contradictions",[7287] arguing that while the Trial Chamber restated many of them – including the place of the meeting, the content of the speeches, and the order of the speakers – it erroneously described them as minor.[7288] He also argues that the Trial Chamber misstated Witness TP's evidence which, in Ndayambaje's view, reflects that she testified about attending Nteziryayo's swearing-in ceremony and not his.[7289]

3193. Ndayambaje further observes that the witness placed Prefect Nteziryayo's swearing-in ceremony not in the small eucalyptus woods where Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony took place, and argues that the Trial Chamber erred in characterising this discrepancy about the location as minor.[7290] Ndayambaje adds that the Trial Chamber erroneously relied on the English interpretation of Witness Stan's French testimony to corroborate Witness TP's evidence regarding the location of the ceremony.[7291] In his view, the Trial Chamber incorrectly suggested that Witness Stan, like Witness TP, placed the swearing-in ceremony near the football pitch, whereas Witness Stan instead placed it in the small woods close to the road leading from the commune office to Bishya.[7292]

3194. Finally, Ndayambaje argues that Witness TP deliberately placed the abduction of her son and abduction and killing of the son of her brother-in-law after the swearing-in ceremony to implicate him.[7293] He contends that the Trial Chamber disregarded the contradictory evidence of Witness KANUC, who pleaded guilty and served his sentence for the impugned murder and testified that the killing occurred after the events in Kabuye in April 1994 instead of after his swearing-in ceremony.[7294]

Ndayambaje acknowledges that he was not held responsible for this murder. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 567.

3195. The Prosecution responds that it was within the Trial Chamber's discretion to accept Witness TP's testimony despite its various inconsistencies.[7295] It submits that the Trial Chamber's reliance on the erroneous English interpretation of Witness Stan's French testimony was not significant since the Trial Chamber also took into account other elements when considering the location of the meeting mentioned by Witness TP.[7296] It further argues that Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in disregarding Witness KANUC's testimony.[7297]

3197. The Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness TP's testimony about her attendance at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony because she placed it elsewhere than the eucalyptus woods. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness TP testified that the meeting took place outside the commune office, in the courtyard, and observed that this contrasted with other evidence that it took place in the woods near the commune office.[7300] However, the Trial Chamber further recounted that Witness Stan described the venue as woodland area near the Muganza commune office, just before the football pitch, which was on the opposite side of the Muganza commune office from the woods.[7301] The Trial Chamber, in view of "the relative proximity of the woods where the meeting actually took place vis-à-vis the commune office and the football field, where Witness TP and [Witness] Stan respectively testified the meeting took place, variously described as between 30 and 100 metres", did not "consider the discrepancies in these witnesses' testimony significant."[7302] Ndayambaje is correct in asserting that the relevant excerpt of the French transcript of Witness Stan's testimony, unlike the English transcript relied upon by the Trial Chamber, does not contain a mention of a football pitch.[7303] However, the Appeals Chamber fails to see the purported relevance of this variance given the Trial Chamber's finding that the discrepancy as to the venue of the meeting was not significant. Ndayambaje's contention simply reflects disagreement with the Trial Chamber's conclusion without demonstrating that it erred.

[7299] See Witness TP, T. 12 February 2004 p. 38. The Appeals Chamber notes that Witness TP, in response to a suggestion by Nteziryayo that she earlier stated that "the purpose of the meeting was for the installation", responded that "[i]t was for the installation of Préfet Alphonse". However, the description of the purported installation she provided accorded with her earlier testimony that Nteziryayo was being introduced at the meeting rather than installed as a new prefect. See ibid., p. 40 ("Q. Who had to install him, Élie Ndayambaje? Was it Élie Ndayambaje? A. I don't know. I'm describing to you what we saw when we arrived at the meeting venue. The Accused took the floor and he said he was going to introduce to us Alphonse, who was the new préfet. Perhaps the new préfet had been introduced at the level of the whole préfecture and now it was time for him to be introduced to us in our secteur or commune.").

3198. As to Witness TP's testimony regarding the events after the meeting, the Trial Chamber recounted that Witness TP testified that her brother-in-law's children were killed on the day of Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, and that she witnessed the killing of her own son who was taken the night after.[7304] The Trial Chamber, while accepting the witness's account of these events, noted that she did not identify who the killers were or how Nteziryayo or Ndayambaje were otherwise implicated in the events.[7305] The Trial Chamber concluded that the Prosecution had not proven beyond reasonable doubt that either Nteziryayo or Ndayambaje were responsible, directly or indirectly, for the impugned killings given the absence of evidence that they were present or in some other ways responsible for the taking of the children.[7306] The Appeals Chamber, to the extent that Ndayambaje argues that Witness KANUC's evidence demonstrates that Witness TP was trying to implicate him, and recalling that it is not necessary for a trial chamber to refer to the testimony of every witness or every piece of evidence on the trial record,[7307] does not consider that the Trial Chamber was under an obligation to discuss expressly the contradictory evidence of Witness KANUC.

3199. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness TP's evidence related to his swearing-in ceremony.

(i) Witness QAL

3200. The Trial Chamber noted that Witness QAL provided corroborative hearsay evidence that Ndayambaje told the population to clean up and put the dirt out, which the witness understood to mean that good and bad people should be separated and people who were undesirable should be killed.[7308] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witness QAL corroborated Witness QAF's evidence that Nteziryayo questioned people about whether they carried out the instructions given to them and asked those who were married to Tutsis and had children to kill all the Tutsis.[7309]

3201. Ndayambaje argues that elements of Witness QAL's evidence about the swearing-in ceremony – that the participants were armed, that Nteziryayo spoke after Ndayambaje, and that Nteziryayo asked the attendees to raise and show their spears, clubs, and machetes – are unsupported by any other witness or only find corroboration from Witness TP.[7310] In his view, the Trial Chamber erroneously minimised these materially inconsistent aspects of Witness QAL's evidence, undermining the credibility of her evidence about her attendance at the ceremony.[7311] Ndayambaje also points to the evidence of Witness RV as well as Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje that Nteziryayo spoke first, arguing that this evidence was rejected without reason.[7312]

3202. Ndayambaje also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witnesses TP, QAR, and QAQ corroborated Witness QAL's evidence, as the Trial Chamber found that their accounts of attending the swearing-in ceremony were implausible.[7313]

[7309] See Trial Judgement, para. 4624. See also ibid., para. 4427.
[7310] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 572, 573. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 185. Ndayambaje adds that Witnesses TP and QAL testified that speakers did not use microphones. The Appeals Chamber observes, however, that Ndayambaje's contention in this regard is not supported by the reference he provides since the Trial Chamber noted that the witnesses instead testified that the speakers did not use megaphones. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 573, referring to Trial Judgement, paras. 4425, 4389. This contention is therefore dismissed.
[7311] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 570, 573. Ndayambaje also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that "Witness QAL gave detailed and credible evidence about the swearing-in ceremony, including such details as who she went to the meeting with" because it did not hear evidence about who accompanied the witness to the meeting. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 571 (emphasis omitted), referring to Trial Judgement, para. 4600. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that in citing the relevant portion of Witness QAL's testimony, the Trial Chamber noted that the witness went to the meeting with three other people, including her brother-in-law. See Trial Judgement, para. 4600, fn. 12236, referring to Witness QAL, T. 25 February 2004 pp. 19 and 24, 39 (closed session). See also ibid., para. 4425. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses Ndayambaje's contention in this regard.
[7312] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 585.

3203. Ndayambaje further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness QAL's evidence in light of Defence Witness MACHO's testimony that he was with Witness QAL the entire day of the ceremony and contradicted her evidence that she attended it.[7314] Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber "arbitrarily preferred" Witness QAL's testimony "because she was Hutu and [Ndayambaje] had officiated at her wedding", even though Witness MACHO did not have ties to Ndayambaje or an interest in defending him.[7315] He further submits that by rejecting Witness MACHO's contradictory evidence because Ndayambaje did not cross-examine Witness QAL on the possibility that she was not at the ceremony reflected the Trial Chamber's bias and a reversal of the burden of proof.[7316]

3204. Finally, Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber could not have believed Witness QAL's evidence that she attended the swearing-in ceremony because she testified that her daughter was abducted the day of the ceremony and her husband the following day but placed these events in May, rather than June 1994.[7317] Ndayambaje also argues that Witness GABON undermined Witness QAL's evidence, testifying that the murder of Witness QAL's husband occurred in April 1994 and "contradict[ing] the abduction and ransom paid for Witness QAL's daughter."[7318] Ndayambaje adds that Witness MACHO further contradicted Witness QAL's evidence about the abduction and murder and was rejected by the Trial Chamber without reason.[7319]

[7314] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 576. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 189.
[7315] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 576. See also ibid., para. 591.
[7316] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 577. Ndayambaje adds that the Trial Chamber had the power to recall the witness to request clarification. See idem.
[7317] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 569, 575. Ndayambaje also argues that Witness QAL's evidence is implausible as she testified to making a complaint about the murder to a criminal investigation officer which, Ndayambaje claims, is "a gesture she should not have logically made, had the murder been committed on the instructions of the commune authorities." See ibid., para. 575, referring to Witness QAL, T. 25 February 2004 pp. 49, 50. The Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje's contention is speculative and does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's analysis of Witness QAL's evidence. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses it without further consideration.

[7322] Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2467.

3206. The Appeals Chamber notes that it has previously addressed and rejected Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber erroneously assessed contrasting evidence as to whether those attending the swearing-in ceremony were armed.[7323] As to the order in which Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje spoke, the Trial Chamber noted that Witness QAL's evidence that Nteziryayo spoke after Ndayambaje contrasted with other Prosecution evidence.[7324] However, it considered that this discrepancy did "not go to the root of the witness' account of the meeting" and that the witness's clarity on this issue could have been "affected by the passage of time."[7325] The Trial Chamber further noted that Witness TP, like Witness QAL, testified that Nteziryayo took the floor after Ndayambaje, in contrast with evidence of the other witnesses and concluded that it did not regard as significant the discrepancy as to the order of the speakers.[7326] Ndayambaje simply disagrees with this analysis without demonstrating any error in the Trial Chamber's reasoning.

3207. The Appeals Chamber also considers that Ndayambaje's contention about Witness QAL's testimony that Nteziryayo asked the attendees to raise and show their spears, clubs, and machetes is based on an erroneous reading of the Trial Judgement, which reflects that Nteziryayo merely asked the participants with different weapons to raise their hands.[7327] Given the Trial Chamber's finding that between 1,000 and 5,000 people attended the meeting,[7328] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that this aspect of Witness QAL's evidence was material to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence about the ceremony, or that it was incompatible with other accounts given the large number of participants and varying vantage points of witnesses.

3208. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber improperly relied on the evidence of Witnesses TP, QAR, and QAQ to corroborate Witness QAL's account as it found the former witnesses' testimonies about the ceremony implausible.[7329] First, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber reached no such finding with respect to Witness TP and, in fact, accepted that the witness was testifying about Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7330] Similarly, while the Trial Chamber observed similarities in the evidence of Witnesses QAR, QAQ, and QAL,[7331] the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAR did not attend the ceremony and, after expressing doubts about whether Witness QAQ attended this ceremony, concluded that any probative weight to be accorded to the testimony of Witness QAQ was minimal.[7332] None of the findings made by the Trial Chamber to the extent that it expressly relied on Witness QAL's testimony reflects that it did so in light of the corroborative aspects of the evidence of Witnesses QAR and QAQ.[7333] Indeed, the Trial Chamber specifically stated that it would only consider the evidence of Witnesses FAG, FAL, FAU, QAF, QAL, RV, TO, and TP when evaluating the Prosecution's evidence concerning the swearing-in ceremony.[7334]

3209. Concerning the evidence of Witness MACHO, the Trial Chamber noted that it contradicted Witness QAL's evidence of attending the swearing-in ceremony, as Witness MACHO testified that they spent that day together at his godmother's house.[7335] The Trial Chamber observed that Witness QAL was not cross-examined on the basis of this evidence, which only arose when Witness MACHO testified four years after Witness QAL.[7336] It further considered that Witness QAL gave detailed and credible evidence about the swearing-in ceremony, including such details as with whom she went to the meeting, and that aspects of it were consistent with the testimonies of the other Prosecution witnesses whose presence at the meeting was not contested.[7337]

3210. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trial chamber to decide which version it considers more credible.[7338] The Appeals Chamber will defer to a trial chamber's findings on such issues, including its resolution of disparities among different witnesses' accounts, and will only find an error of fact if it determines that no reasonable trier of fact could have made the impugned findings.[7339] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in accepting the evidence of Witness QAL over that of Witness MACHO. Notably, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAL's evidence about the timing and the location of the meeting, Ndayambaje's attire, the presence of Witness Stan, the population being armed, the use of proverbs and the call to kill Tutsis during the ceremony was broadly corroborated.[7340] Ndayambaje also does not show that the Trial Chamber placed undue emphasis on the fact that Witness QAL was a Hutu and had been married by Ndayambaje also argues that some aspects of Witness QAL's testimony were inconsistent with the testimony of other Prosecution witnesses and that the Trial Chamber erroneously implied that Ndayambaje conceded that all Prosecution witnesses were present at the swearing-in ceremony. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 570. The Appeals Chamber considers, however, that Ndayambaje fails to identify any error as the Trial Chamber assessed various inconsistencies between Witness QAL's account of the meeting and that of other Prosecution witnesses. See Trial Judgement, paras. 4597-4599. Moreover, the Trial Chamber's reasoning does not reflect that Ndayambaje conceded that all Prosecution witnesses were present at the meeting but merely reflects that Witness QAL's testimony was consistent with that of certain witnesses whose presence at the swearing-in ceremony was not contested. See ibid., para. 4600.

[7338] See, e.g., Nizeyimana Appeal Judgement, para. 254; Ndahimana Appeal Judgement, para. 46; Gacumbitsi Appeal Judgement, para. 81; Rutaganda Appeal Judgement, para. 29.

Ndayambaje,[7341] or that it was required to credit Witness MACHO's evidence because she had no incentive to provide exculpatory evidence for Ndayambaje. The Appeals Chamber also fails to see how the Trial Chamber's observation that Witness QAL was not cross-examined on the possibility that she was not at the ceremony evinces bias or a reversal of the burden of proof, particularly given its detailed consideration of inconsistencies and contradictions with other evidence.[7342]

3211. With respect to the date of abduction of Witness QAL's daughter and murder of her husband after the swearing-in ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber noted that Witness QAL, as well as Witnesses FAG, FAL, QAF, and TP, testified that after the ceremony further attacks against Tutsis occurred.[7343] However, when noting the consistent, albeit often general, evidence of the Prosecution witnesses to the effect that after the meeting, killings occurred, the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QAL.[7344] The Trial Chamber also expressly noted that Witness QAL did not remember the date of the meeting but recalled that it was held shortly before the RPF invasion of Muganza Commune at the end of June or beginning of July 1994 and that at the time Ndayambaje was bourgmestre of Muganza Commune.[7345] While Ndayambaje is correct that the witness testified that her husband died in May 1994, she also specifically testified that her husband was killed the day following the meeting and that her daughter was abducted on the same day as the meeting, when Ndayambaje was introduced as bourgmestre of Muganza Commune.[7346] Given the Trial Chamber's acknowledgement that Witness QAL did not remember the day of the meeting,[7347] and its limited reliance on the witness's evidence regarding the abduction of her daughter and murder of her husband, the Appeals Chamber does not consider that the fact that the witness indicated that the murder of her husband took place in May 1994 precluded the Trial Chamber from considering that this witness testified about the swearing-in ceremony.

3212. Similarly, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument that the testimony of Witness GABON that Witness QAL's husband was killed at the end of April 1994 and that Witness GABON did not hear about the abduction of Witness QAL's daughter undermined Witness QAL's testimony about the swearing-in ceremony.[7348] The Appeals Chamber observes that, whereas Witness GABON's evidence about the killing of Witness QAL's husband and abduction of her daughter was hearsay, Witness QAL was an eyewitness to the events.[7349] Of greater significance, the Trial Chamber considered Witness GABON's testimony "unrealistic" and not "plausible", discrediting his alibi evidence in relation to Ndayambaje's involvement in another event.[7350] The Appeals Chamber therefore considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have relied on Witness QAL's evidence notwithstanding Witness GABON's testimony.

3213. Finally, since the Trial Chamber rejected Witness MACHO's testimony concerning Witness QAL's whereabouts during the swearing-in ceremony,[7351] the Appeals Chamber considers that it was under no obligation to provide further justification for rejecting this witness's inextricably linked evidence about the abduction of Witness QAL's daughter on the same day.[7352] Because the Trial Chamber did not rely on Witness QAL's evidence about the murder of her husband,[7353] the Appeals Chamber finds that it was not necessary for the Trial Chamber to assess the differences in the evidence of Witnesses QAL and MACHO in this regard.

3214. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in the assessment of Witness QAL's evidence on his swearing-in ceremony.

(j) Date

3215. Ndayambaje submits that no Prosecution witness specified the date of his swearing-in ceremony to be 22 June 1994.[7354] In his view, other reasonable inferences were therefore open regarding the meeting recounted by the Prosecution witnesses.[7355]

3216. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber considered that Prosecution witnesses did not indicate 22 June 1994 as the date of the swearing-in ceremony.[7356]

Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony took place "on various dates in June 1994"[7358] and that Witnesses FAL, QAF, and TP testified about a meeting at Muganza Commune "on or around 22 June 1994".[7359] It also noted that Witness QAL testified to attending a meeting near the Muganza commune office "around May or June 1994" but could not remember its precise date.[7360]

3219. Nevertheless, Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that all the Prosecution witnesses it relied upon were testifying about his swearing-in ceremony in Muganza Commune, which the parties do not dispute occurred on 22 June 1994. The Trial Chamber considered the discrepancies in the Prosecution evidence as to the precise date of the meeting and determined that they were minor and understandable in light of the time that had elapsed between the event and the witnesses' appearances in court.[7364] It determined that all the witnesses were discussing the same event given the consistent descriptions of the fundamental features of it.[7365] Ndayambaje only suggests that other reasonable inferences were available without demonstrating any error in the Trial Chamber's ultimate conclusion that all relevant witnesses were referring to his swearing-in ceremony.

3220. The Appeals Chamber therefore concludes that Ndayambaje has not shown that the Trial Chamber erred in determining that the relevant witnesses were testifying about his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994.

2. Assessment of Defence Evidence

3221. When considering evidence in relation to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Trial Chamber compared the relevant Prosecution and Defence evidence concerning Nteziryayo's and Ndayambaje's speeches.[7366] Specifically, it observed that the relevant Defence witnesses, in contrast to the Prosecution witnesses, testified that Nteziryayo's speech concerned security and that Ndayambaje did not use proverbs, including inflammatory metaphors, and that he denounced wrong-doers.[7367] The Trial Chamber noted, however, that all of the witnesses called by Ndayambaje had close ties with him[7368] and that Nteziryayo Defence Witnesses AND-11 and AND-73 were well-acquainted with Nteziryayo.[7369] The Trial Chamber found that, "notwithstanding the largely consistent nature of the testimony of these witnesses", their credibility was "diminished by the potential motivations and personal ties of each of the Defence witnesses with Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo."[7370] The Trial Chamber also noted that Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje "may have a motive in seeking to reduce their personal responsibility for the alleged incitement".[7371]

3222. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting the Defence evidence that Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje did not use inciting proverbs during the swearing-in ceremony and that no violence against Tutsis followed it.[7372] In particular, he argues that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting evidence from Defence witnesses who had professional or personal ties with him.[7373] Ndayambaje also argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the credibility of Defence Witnesses AND-11 and AND-73, who had no connection to him, was diminished only because they knew Nteziryayo.[7374] Moreover, Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber improperly rejected

[7368] Trial Judgement, para. 4636. In particular, the Trial Chamber recalled that Witnesses Stan and KEPIR were friends of Ndayambaje and that Witnesses GABON and BOZAN had professional ties with him, noting that the evidence of these Defence witnesses with respect to Ndayambaje must be reviewed bearing these personal ties in mind. See ibid., para. 4637.

Ndayambaje adds that no reasonable trier of fact would have made findings to "excuse" and "justify the incompatibilities, contradictions and inconsistencies" in the Prosecution evidence concerning the content of the speeches made at the swearing-in ceremony, while rejecting the entire contradictory Defence evidence. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 607. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, paras. 184, 188. Ndayambaje's contentions as they relate to the Prosecution evidence, as well as specific Defence evidence contradicting it, have been previously addressed. See supra, Section IX.G.1. Ndayambaje adds that the Trial Chamber erred in disregarding evidence of Nsabimana concerning the swearing-in ceremony. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 187. The Appeals Chamber notes, however, that Ndayambaje did not provide any supporting references in his notice of appeal and failed to reiterate or develop this argument in his appeal brief. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this unsubstantiated allegation without further consideration.
[7373] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 587, 588, 591, 597, 600. See also Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 186.

his testimony as well as that of Nteziryayo for the sole reason that they had an interest in minimising their responsibility.[7375]

3223. In addition, Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber rejected the testimony of his Witness Évariste-Emmanuel Siborurema that no inciting speeches were made during the ceremony without providing a reasoned opinion.[7376] He further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of Witness Stan's evidence concerning the content of the speeches made during the ceremony, basing its rejection of his evidence on an erroneous English interpretation of his French testimony.[7377] According to him, the Trial Chamber also misread Witness Stan's 1995 interview with a Belgian judge which, in his view, is consistent with his testimony that the expression "dusting behind the fireplace" was not used by him but was a suggestion put to him by the judge who conducted the interview.[7378]

3224. Finally, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in discounting differences between Prosecution and Defence evidence concerning the presence of Muvunyi, Kalimanzira, and Nyiramasuhuko at the ceremony and erred in not rejecting contradictory Prosecution evidence.[7379] He similarly argues that the Trial Chamber erred in discrediting testimonies of Defence witnesses that the swearing-in ceremony took place in the afternoon,[7380] in contrast with Prosecution witnesses who all testified that it took place before noon.[7381] In his view, by relying on the fact that Prosecution witnesses did not have the opportunity to refute Defence evidence as to the timing of the event when discrediting Defence evidence, the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof or disregarded the presumption of innocence.[7382]

3225. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber reasonably assessed the Defence evidence relevant to the swearing-in ceremony and was entitled to consider Ndayambaje's and Nteziryayo's incentives to deny criminal conduct.[7383] It further argues that the Trial Chamber was correct in disbelieving Witness Siborurema and that, despite the errors in the English interpretation of

Witness Stan's testimony, it was also correct in not crediting his evidence.[7384] In addition, the Prosecution submits that Ndayambaje does not demonstrate any errors in the Trial Chamber's assessment of conflicting Prosecution and Defence evidence as to the timing of the ceremony.[7385]

3226. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the existence of ties between an accused and a witness is a factor which may be considered in assessing the witness's credibility,[7386] and concludes that the Trial Chamber did not err in considering these circumstances or placed improper emphasis on them when rejecting Defence evidence.[7387] The Appeals Chamber likewise considers that a reasonable trier of fact could have considered Ndayambaje's and Nteziryayo's incentive to provide exculpatory evidence in the context of all the relevant evidence.[7388] Bearing in mind that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to decide which version it considers more credible,[7389] the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that no reasonable trier of fact could have noted weaknesses in the credibility of Defence witnesses as well as rejected such evidence in light of the virtually unanimous, credible Prosecution evidence that inciting speeches were made during Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7390] this relevant evidence or was required to provide any further detail for its rejection given the consistent, credible Prosecution evidence that inciting remarks were made during the ceremony.

3227. As to Ndayambaje's contention concerning the evidence of Witness Siborurema,[7391] the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber set forth the witness's evidence and cited to it when evaluating Defence evidence about the contents of the speeches made at the swearing-in ceremony.[7392] As nothing in the evidence referred to by the Trial Chamber reflects that the witness had personal ties with Ndayambaje or Nteziryayo,[7393] the Trial Chamber must have considered that, as part of "the Defence evidence on the whole", his evidence was also "not sufficiently credible as to raise a reasonable doubt about the nature of the utterances made by Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo at Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony."[7394] In light of the clear indication that Witness Siborurema's evidence was considered by the Trial Chamber and the repetitive nature of his evidence, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's allegation that the Trial Chamber ignored

3228. With respect to the assessment of Witness Stan's evidence, the Trial Chamber noted that an earlier statement given by the witness to a Belgian judge in 1995 contained references to Ndayambaje talking about "restoring order in the house" and "the dust behind the fireplace".[7395] The Trial Chamber noted Witness Stan's explanations that he only recalled statements concerning "putting order in … Muganza commune" and that the Belgian judge must have added the expression concerning the dust behind the fireplace, thereby putting words in Witness Stan's mouth.[7396] The Trial Chamber considered that the discrepancies between the statement and his testimony as well as his explanations for them, which it did not find credible, cast doubt on Witness Stan's testimony as to the contents of the speeches at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7397]

3229. Contrary to Ndayambaje's submissions, the Appeals Chamber finds no material discrepancy between the French and English transcripts of Witness Stan's testimony as both reflect that he testified that he did not remember using the expression "the dust behind the fireplace" when speaking with the Belgian judge and that these words appeared in his statement because of the nature of the questioning by the Belgian judge.[7398] The same is true for the French and English versions of Witness Stan's Statement, which both reflect that the judge asked the witness whether Ndayambaje talked about dusting behind the fireplace and that the witness answered that he did not know whether Ndayambaje used this expression.[7399]

Now, Witness, in reference to 'putting the house in order', you have stated that, 'I do not know if he used that term, 'the dust behind the fireplace'.' Do you remember saying this to the investigative judge? A. I see that this sentence is written in this statement, but I do not remember having said it in these terms to the investigative judge. I know that these words were not used in the speech delivered by Mr. Élie Ndayambaje. […] Q. So do you think that the judge was mistaken in including these words in your statement? A. I believe that the investigative judge, Vandermeersch, wanted me – was putting words in my mouth, making me say things that I had not said and which I had not declared. He, among other things, talked about returning the property of those who had remained behind, namely, the survivors. He talked about putting the house in order. I do not know whether he used the expression dusting 3230. However, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that there was a discrepancy between Witness Stan's testimony and prior statement as to whether Ndayambaje had used the expression "the dust behind the fireplace". Consistent with Witness Stan's testimony, his prior statement reflects that he was unaware of Ndayambaje using this expression. Contrary to the Trial Chamber's determination, no discrepancy exists in this regard. The Trial Chamber was nonetheless correct in finding a discrepancy between Witness Stan's Statement referring to Ndayambaje talking about "restoring order in the house" and his testimony that he had not said this during this interview and only recalled Ndayambaje talking about "putting order in … Muganza commune".[7400] The Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that this discrepancy, and Witness Stan's explanation for it, cast doubt on the witness's subsequent testimony about the contents of the speeches at the swearing-in ceremony.[7401] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's error in relying on a discrepancy within Witness Stan's evidence that did not exist has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

3231. Turning to Ndayambaje's challenge to the Trial Chamber's assessment of contradictory evidence as to the presence of various officials, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered that Defence evidence diverged from some Prosecution evidence as to the presence of Muvunyi, Kalimanzira, and Nyiramasuhuko during the ceremony.[7402] The Trial Chamber determined it unnecessary to make findings as to the presence of Muvunyi and Kalimanzira and found that any discrepancy as to their presence was not significant.[7403] Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate why no reasonable trier of fact could have assessed the evidence in this manner.

3232. The Appeals Chamber further notes that the Trial Chamber considered that Witness RV may have been mistaken as to Nyiramasuhuko's presence during the swearing-in ceremony, noting that Ndayambaje, Nteziryayo, and other Defence witnesses contradicted this aspect of his evidence.[7404] However, the Trial Chamber observed that Witness RV's evidence was consistent with Defence evidence as to the presence of certain other dignitaries, and highlighted that all Defence witnesses testified to the presence of another female minister, who Witness RV did not identify.[7405] In this context, the Trial Chamber rejected Witness RV's evidence as to Nyiramasuhuko's presence but found that this did "not weaken the credibility of [his] testimony with respect to more significant aspects of the swearing-in ceremony."[7406] Once again, Ndayambaje simply highlights his disagreement with this finding, ignoring that it is not unreasonable for a trier of fact to accept some, but reject other parts of a witness's testimony.[7407]

3233. Regarding Ndayambaje's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Prosecution and Defence evidence about the timing of the swearing-in ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber acknowledged that "in contrast to all the Prosecution evidence, the Defence witnesses testified that the swearing-in ceremony took place in the afternoon of 22 June 1994, because Nteziryayo was occupied with the swearing-in ceremony for the new bourgmestre of Ndora commune" and that Witness RV also corroborated the latter aspect of the Defence evidence.[7408] The Trial Chamber, noting that the Prosecution witnesses testified between 2001 and 2004, while Defence witnesses testified between 2007 and 2008, observed that it was never put to the Prosecution witnesses that they may be mistaken as to the timing of the swearing-in ceremony and that they never had the opportunity to refute the testimony of the Defence witnesses that it occurred in the afternoon.[7409] The Trial Chamber concluded, however, that it did not consider this discrepancy to be important given that the Prosecution and the Defence witnesses were consistent on the significant features of the meeting, including that it was the swearing-in ceremony of Ndayambaje, that it took place on or around 22 June 1994, and that it was held in the woods near the Muganza commune office as well as that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo spoke at the meeting.[7410] The Trial Chamber determined that the witnesses testified to the same event, namely Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony on 22 June 1994.[7411] The Appeals Chamber considers that Ndayambaje, who largely repeats the arguments he advanced at trial,[7412] fails to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's analysis as to the differences in the timing of the event and its determination that it was insignificant in light of the totality of the evidence.

3234. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that, by noting that Prosecution witnesses did not have the opportunity to respond to Defence evidence as to the timing of the swearing-in ceremony, the Trial Chamber reversed the burden of proof or disregarded the presumption of innocence. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Prosecution evidence reflects estimates as to the

[7409] Trial Judgement, para. 4615.
[7410] Trial Judgement, para. 4616.
[7411] Trial Judgement, para. 4617. Since Defence evidence regarding the timing of the swearing-in ceremony was not rejected due to ties between Defence witnesses and Ndayambaje, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contention regarding Witnesses AND-30 and AND-31 without further consideration.
[7412] See Ndayambaje Closing Brief, paras. 639-648.

timing of the ceremony.[7413] The Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the Trial Chamber observed that the Prosecution witnesses were not challenged as to the timing implies that the differences between Prosecution and Defence evidence on this point might have reasonably resulted from a failure to question the Prosecution witnesses on the issue. The Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's determination that the variance in timing was insignificant and its reliance instead on the similar features of the meeting to determine that all witnesses were referring to the one that included Ndayambaje's swearing-in as the bourgmestre of Muganza Commune.

3235. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's challenges to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the Defence evidence relating to his swearing-in ceremony.

3. Imprecise and Unsupported Findings

3236. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber failed to determine beyond reasonable doubt who between him and Nteziryayo made inciting speeches during his swearing-in ceremony.[7414] In particular, he contends that the Prosecution evidence does not specify which speaker encouraged the crowd to "sweep out the dirt."[7415] He further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he possessed the requisite genocidal intent to "commit the crime of genocide."[7416]

3237. The Prosecution responds that it was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber not to attribute specific utterances to Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo, if it was satisfied that the requisite elements of the offence were met.[7417] It further submits that Ndayambaje's unsubstantiated claim regarding the lack of genocidal intent should be summarily dismissed.[7418]

3238. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber made the following findings:

> Accordingly, the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt that on the occasion of Ndayambaje's swearing in ceremony on 22 June 1994, an event attended by the general population, Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje told the population to continue with their "work" and urged them to "sweep the dirt outside". Further, the Chamber > finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt that after Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony searches for Tutsis took place and killings followed. […][7420]

The Appeals Chamber further notes that, prior to reaching this conclusion, the Trial Chamber extensively considered the consistency of Prosecution evidence as to the content of the speeches given at the swearing-in ceremony and whether Ndayambaje, Nteziryayo, or both made inciting statements.[7421] In particular, the Trial Chamber observed that Witnesses FAG and FAL testified that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo used metaphors concerning the need to clean the house of dirt and place it outside,[7422] and that Witness FAU gave corroborative evidence to this effect.[7423] It also noted contrasting evidence from Witnesses TO and TP that only Nteziryayo used the metaphor concerning sweeping dirt,[7424] while Witnesses RV and QAF testified that only Ndayambaje used this metaphor and that Witness QAL provided hearsay corroboration of the evidence of Witnesses RV and QAF.[7425]

3239. In addition, the Trial Chamber recounted that, according to Witnesses FAG, FAL, and TO, Ndayambaje explained the metaphor to mean that surviving Tutsis needed to be killed,[7426] that Witness TP had a similar understanding of the metaphor (as uttered by Nteziryayo),[7427] and that Witnesses RV and QAF understood the speech of Ndayambaje in the same way.[7428] The Trial Chamber also considered evidence concerning Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje thanking the population for their "work" or urging them to continue their "work", which meant "to kill".[7429]

3240. The Appeals Chamber also observes that when finding Ndayambaje guilty of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, the only crime for which he was convicted on the basis of his remarks at the ceremony,[7430] the Trial Chamber recalled that "Nteziryayo and Ndayambaje told the population to continue with their 'work' and urged them to 'sweep the dirt outside'".[7431] It also [7430] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his remarks at his swearing-in ceremony had a substantial effect on killings that ensued. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 655, 656. The Prosecution responds that there was a sufficient connection between Ndayambaje's conduct at the ceremony and the ensuing killings. See Prosecution Response Brief, para. 2515. While the Trial Chamber noted that killings occurred after the swearing-in ceremony, the Appeals Chamber observes that whether his words had a substantial effect on the ensuing killings is not an element of the inchoate crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide of which he is convicted. See, e.g., Trial Judgement, paras. 4645, 6026, 6027. As noted above, Ndayambaje was ultimately not convicted for instigating the killings of the Tutsi women and girls abducted from Mugombwa Sector after the ceremony. See supra, fn. 6415. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses this contention without further consideration.

[7431] Trial Judgement, para. 6026 (emphasis added).

recalled that "the audience understood the words of both Accused, namely 'to work' and 'sweeping dirt', to mean they needed to kill Tutsis."[7432]

3241. Considering the conclusions in the factual and legal findings sections of the Trial Judgement as well as the relevant evidence, it is apparent that the Trial Chamber accepted evidence reflecting that both Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo made inciting speeches by employing the metaphor concerning sweeping the "dirt" and using the term "work" during the ceremony. The Appeals Chamber recalls that trial chambers enjoy broad discretion in choosing which witness testimony to prefer[7433] and that two prima facie credible testimonies need not be identical in all aspects or describe the same fact in the same way in order to be corroborative.[7434] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in accepting evidence demonstrating that Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo made inciting speeches that included remarks to sweep the "dirt" and to "work".

3242. As to Ndayambaje's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he possessed the requisite intent to "commit genocide", the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber concluded that, "[i]n light of the substance of these statements, the context in which they were made, and the evidence as a whole, the [Trial] Chamber has no doubt that […] Ndayambaje possessed genocidal intent when [he] addressed the population."[7435] Ndayambaje only advances his contention by repeating references to arguments that have already been considered and rejected above.[7436]

3243. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in making imprecise and unsupported findings concerning who made inciting speeches during his swearing-in ceremony.

4. Conclusion

3244. For the foregoing reasons, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide through his utterances at his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994 and, accordingly, dismisses Ground 19 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

H. Abduction of Tutsi Women and Girls in Mugombwa (Ground 20)

3245. Based primarily on the evidence of Prosecution Witness QAR, as corroborated by Prosecution Witnesses FAU and QAF, the Trial Chamber found that, after Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony on 22 June 1994, a group of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector, Muganza Commune, including one named Nambaje, were abducted by assailants from Saga.[7437] It determined that the assailants came to search for the girls because they had attended the ceremony "where they were told to search for and throw out dirt".[7438] The Trial Chamber further found that, during the abduction, Ndayambaje came to the Virgin Mary Statue in Mugombwa Sector and made it clear to the abductors that they "were free to do what they wanted with the girls".[7439] The Trial Chamber found that the abducted women and girls were subsequently taken to a brick factory at Gasenyi, a valley between Mugombwa and Kibayi, where they were killed.[7440]

3246. The Trial Chamber found that there was a causal connection between Ndayambaje's words at his swearing-in ceremony and the abduction and killing of the Tutsi women and girls, including one named Nambaje, and that, by prompting the assailants to perpetrate these crimes, Ndayambaje instigated genocide.[7441] The Trial Chamber also held that, by his words at the Virgin Mary Statue during the abduction, Ndayambaje instigated the killing of the abducted women and girls, including Nambaje.[7442] The Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber ultimately convicted Ndayambaje of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for instigating the killing of the Tutsi women and girls, including Nambaje, based on his words at the Virgin Mary Statue after the swearing-in ceremony.[7443]

The Trial Chamber determined that, because Ndayambaje's words at the Virgin Mary Statue were only addressed to the abductors and not to the general public, Ndayambaje could not be held responsible for direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to this event. See ibid., paras. 6030, 6032, 6033. As discussed above, the Trial Chamber nonetheless convicted Ndayambaje of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide on the basis of his words at his swearing-in ceremony. See ibid., paras. 6026-6029; supra, Section IX.G. In these circumstances, Ndayambaje's arguments under Ground 20 of his appeal related to the link between the swearing-in ceremony and the abduction have been addressed only to the extent that they related to Ndayambaje's ultimate conviction for instigating killings through his words at the Virgin Mary Statue.

3247. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in its findings relating to the abduction of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector.[7444] In particular, Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its assessment of the Prosecution evidence; (ii) its assessment of the Defence evidence; and (iii) finding that all elements of the crimes of genocide and extermination as a crime against humanity were met in relation to this event. The Appeals Chamber will address these contentions in turn.

1. Assessment of Prosecution Evidence

3248. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) finding that Witnesses FAU and QAF corroborated Witness QAR's account of the abduction and killings that followed his alleged utterances at the Virgin Mary Statue; and (ii) its assessment of the credibility of Witnesses QAR and FAU.[7445]

(a) Absence of Corroboration

3249. The Trial Chamber determined that Witness QAR's account of the abduction of Tutsi women and girls in Mugombwa Sector was credible and compelling and, on this basis, found that the Prosecution had proven beyond reasonable doubt that Ndayambaje came to the Virgin Mary Statue during the abduction, that he made it clear that the abductors were free to do what they wanted with the girls, and that the abducted women and girls were subsequently killed at Gasenyi.[7446]

3250. The Trial Chamber found that Witness QAR's account of the abduction of Tutsi women and girls in Mugombwa by assailants from Saga was corroborated by Witnesses FAU and QAF regarding the timing and reason for the abduction.[7447] Specifically, the Trial Chamber found that Witness QAF gave a credible testimony that the abduction took place on the day after Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony, which corroborated Witness QAR's testimony that the abduction occurred in June 1994.[7448] Based on Witness FAU's evidence that the assailants who came to his house to abduct Nambaje told him that they had attended a meeting the purpose of which was to swear in Ndayambaje, it considered "Witness FAU's hearsay testimony to corroborate

[7444] The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje's contention under Ground 20 of his appeal that the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls was not pleaded in the Indictment has been considered and rejected above in Section IX.A.4. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 674.

Witnesses QAR and QAF with regard to the date of the abduction."[7449] The Trial Chamber concluded that, "[n]otwithstanding the evidence brought by the Ndayambaje Defence, and the specific date provided by Witness QAR, […] the detailed evidence proffered by Prosecution Witnesses QAF and FAU affirms that the abduction took place after Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994."[7450] It further found that Witness QAR's account was corroborated by Witnesses QAF and FAU on the fact that some of the abducted were adolescent girls and that the abducted women and girls were taken from homes, and by Witness QAF regarding the identity of the attackers.[7451]

3251. Ndayambaje contends that the Trial Chamber erred in fact and in law in finding that Witness QAR's evidence was corroborated by that of Witnesses FAU and QAF, whose contradictory testimonies related to different events and did not mention the presence of Ndayambaje.[7452] In particular, Ndayambaje argues that "[i]f Witness QAR was referring to a meeting other than the swearing-in ceremony, the abduction she was a victim of would no longer be the consequence of the swearing-in ceremony" and her evidence "would no longer" corroborate that of Witnesses FAU and QAF as to the date of the abduction.[7453]

3252. Ndayambaje further submits that the Trial Chamber "erroneously fused together in its findings two distinct factual events, namely the abduction of the Mugombwa Tutsi girls and women and the abduction and murder of a certain Nambaje from Baziro secteur."[7454] He points out that Witness QAF testified that the abduction of the group of Mugombwa women and girls by attackers from Saga on the morning following the swearing-in ceremony took place at the Virgin Mary Statue, whereas Witness FAU testified that the abduction of Nambaje took place in Baziro Sector on the day of the ceremony and was conducted by attackers from Baziro and did not refer to the presence of Ndayambaje.[7455] In his view, the Trial Chamber erred in "mixing up" these two events, which occurred neither on the same date or place, nor concerned the same actors.[7456]

3253. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness QAF directly corroborated Witness QAR's testimony that the women and girls were killed and that Witness FAU provided corroboration that the killings occurred after the swearing-in ceremony.[7457] The Prosecution submits that the killing of Nambaje and the killing of the Mugombwa women and girls were not unrelated incidents but were part of the same "pattern of killings" as both were consequences of the speeches given at the ceremony.[7458] As such, it argues, the testimonies of Witnesses QAF and FAU were not contradictory but both supported the Trial Chamber's finding that Tutsis were searched for and killed following the ceremony.[7459]

3254. Ndayambaje replies that Witnesses QAF and FAU cannot be said to have provided corroborative evidence as they contradicted each other on material aspects, which clearly indicates that their accounts concerned different events.[7460]

3255. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to what Ndayambaje's speculative argument about the meeting that Witness QAR attended suggests, the Trial Chamber did not find that the meeting in Muganza Commune about which Witness QAR testified was Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7461] It did not conclude that the abduction of the Mugombwa Tutsi women and girls followed the ceremony based on Witness QAR's testimony, but based on Witnesses FAU's and QAF's testimonies.[7462] Ndayambaje does not substantiate his claim that Witness QAF's evidence was contradictory or related to a different event and does not develop any argument to show that the Trial Chamber's reliance on this part of Witness QAF's evidence was erroneous in any other respect.[7463] Ndayambaje's allegation of error pertaining to the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QAF's evidence as relevant to the timing of the abduction and corroborative of Witness QAR's evidence regarding the incident is therefore without merit.

3256. As to Ndayambaje's arguments regarding the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness FAU's testimony as corroborative of Witness QAR's evidence on the abduction, the Appeals Chamber observes that, after reaching its finding on Ndayambaje's involvement in the abduction of the women and girls subsequently killed at Gasenyi, the Trial Chamber specifically referred to [7463] See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 621. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has addressed and dismissed Ndayambaje's submissions related to Witness QAF's evidence relating to Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony in Section IX.G.1(d) above.

Witness FAU's evidence of the abduction and killing of a woman named Nambaje and the young girl she was looking after by three assailants who said that they had just attended a meeting for the swearing-in of Ndayambaje.[7464] The Trial Chamber noted that Witness FAU testified that Nambaje and the young girl were killed after their abduction in the home of a man named Kinyagiro.[7465]

3257. When discussing the timing and reason for the abduction of the group of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa by assailants from Saga in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement,[7466] the Trial Chamber stated that "Witness FAU testified that the abductions took place in late May or early June 1994, and gave hearsay evidence that this followed a meeting at the Muganza commune office",[7467] the purpose of which was to swear-in Ndayambaje, and considered "Witness FAU's hearsay testimony to corroborate that of Witnesses QAR and QAF with regard to the date of the abduction."[7468] The Trial Chamber further concluded that:

> the detailed evidence proffered by Prosecution Witnesses QAF and FAU affirms that the abduction took place after Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony of 22 June 1994. On the basis of Witness FAU's hearsay evidence that the assailants came to search for the girls because they were told to search for and throw out dirt, the Chamber also accepts that searches were carried out with a view to locating Tutsis.[7469]

When discussing "Ndayambaje's Alleged Presence During the Abductions",[7470] the Trial Chamber referred to Witness FAU as one of the witnesses who "testified to having witnessed various stages of the abduction"[7471] and stated that "Witness FAU's testimony that Nambaje was taken from a house by the attackers" corroborated Witness QAR's testimony that the women and girls were taken from their homes.[7472]

> a group of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa secteur, Muganza commune, were abducted by assailants from Saga after Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony of 22 June 1994 including one Nambaje who was abducted from a home. During the abduction, Ndayambaje came to the Statue of the Virgin Mary and made it clear that the abductors were free to do what they wanted with the girls, and the abducted women and girls were subsequently taken to a brick factory at Gasenyi where they were killed […].[7473]

When further discussing Ndayambaje's responsibility in relation to his utterances at the Virgin Mary Statue specifically, the Trial Chamber declared it proven that "Ndayambaje committed the actus reus of instigating the killing of the abducted Tutsi girls and one Nambaje"[7474] and that he "knew he was assisting in the deaths of the abducted girls and Nambaje."[7475]

3259. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the Trial Chamber's findings show that it ultimately considered that Nambaje, about whom Witness FAU testified, was part of the group of Tutsi women and girls abducted from Mugombwa Sector by assailants from Saga and killed at Gasenyi following Ndayambaje's utterances at the Virgin Mary Statue.

3260. However, as Ndayambaje points out and as the Trial Chamber correctly noted in other parts of the Trial Judgement,[7476] Witness FAU testified that Nambaje was abducted from his home which was located in Baziro Sector, that the assailants were Casien Ngona, Nyambindi and Rutabana from Baziro Sector, and that Nambaje was taken to the home of a Tutsi named Kinyagiro where she was killed.[7477] The abduction Witness FAU testified about did not concern women from Mugombwa Sector, was not led by assailants from Saga, did not involve a stop at the Virgin Mary Statue or Ndayambaje, and did not end with killings in a brick factory at Gasenyi.

3261. As acknowledged by the Prosecution,[7478] it is apparent that Witnesses QAR and FAU testified about two different incidents of abductions involving different perpetrators and victims. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that Nambaje was part of the group of victims abducted from Mugombwa Sector and killed at Gasenyi following Ndayambaje's words at the Virgin Mary Statue and, consequently, in convicting Ndayambaje for instigating her killing through his words at the Virgin Mary Statue.[7479] girls.[7482] Because Witness FAU testified to a different event, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on his evidence as corroborating these aspects of the different abduction about which Witness QAR testified.

3263. However, because the Trial Judgement does not reflect that Witness FAU's evidence was material to the Trial Chamber's finding that Witness QAR's account of the abduction of Tutsi women and girls – which was in part corroborated by Witness QAF – was credible and proved beyond reasonable doubt Ndayambaje's involvement in the abduction,[7483] the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's erroneous reliance on Witness FAU's evidence as corroborative of Witness QAR's evidence does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's finding in this respect and has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

(b) Credibility of Prosecution Witnesses

3264. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the credibility of Witnesses QAR and FAU.[7484] However, because the Appeals Chamber has concluded above that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Ndayambaje responsible for the abduction recounted by Witness FAU and in relying on his testimony as corroborating Witness QAR's evidence, it finds it unnecessary to address Ndayambaje's submissions concerning Witness FAU's credibility. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber will only examine Ndayambaje's arguments related to the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness QAR's evidence.

3265. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QAR's testimony pertaining to the abduction of Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa.[7485] Ndayambaje argues that Witness QAR could not be found credible given that her testimony that she did not attend his swearing-in ceremony was not found plausible and that her testimony is implausible in many other respects.[7486] He also avers that it was unreasonable on the part of the Trial Chamber to explain that Witness QAR's specific reference to 18 June 1994 as the date of her abduction may have been the result of a distorted view of the timing due to the passage of time.[7487] Ndayambaje emphasises in this respect that the Trial Chamber had considered that an ambiguity in a witness's testimony as to the date of another event undermined the witness's credibility.[7488]

3266. Ndayambaje further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness QAR's testimony despite the numerous and material inconsistencies and contradictions within her evidence.[7489] He points in particular to the fact that Witness QAR: (i) said in her 1995 statement that she was an eyewitness to the massacre of four abducted young girls, while she testified at trial that she was part of the group of abducted women and that this group was composed of eight victims; (ii) contradicted her 1995 statement by testifying that the abducted women were not killed at the Virgin Mary Statue but transported to Gasenyi where they were killed; (iii) was inconsistent during her testimony regarding whether she was also one of the victims and transported to Gasenyi; (iv) stated that the assailants were led by the conseiller of Saga in her 1994 statement, while she testified at trial that they were led by one man named Masima; and (v) failed to mention the swearing-in ceremony and the abduction in her statement of May 1997.[7490] Ndayambaje argues that Witness QAR's explanation that the investigators recorded her statement poorly is not credible given the nature and materiality of the contradictions and omissions.[7491] In Ndayambaje's view, the Trial Chamber erred in ignoring or considering as insignificant the inconsistencies and contradictions within Witness QAR's evidence and failed to provide a reasoned opinion for accepting Witness QAR's contradicted and doubtful testimony about the abduction.[7492]

3267. The Appeals Chamber also understands Ndayambaje to submit that the Trial Chamber erred in accepting Witness QAR's account on his presence and words spoken at the Virgin Mary Statue during the abduction because it was uncorroborated.[7493]

3268. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QAR's consistent evidence.[7494] It argues that a trial chamber can reject parts of a witness's evidence and accept others, that it was reasonable for the Trial Chamber to find that the abduction Witness QAR recounted must have occurred after the swearing-in ceremony in light of Witnesses QAF's and FAU's evidence, and that the inconsistencies within her evidence highlighted by Ndayambaje do not exist or are not material.[7495]

In support of his argument regarding whether the witness was one of the victims, Ndayambaje quotes portions of Witness QAR's testimony about the abduction, in which the witness excluded herself from the narrative and referred to "those ladies and young girls" or "the women and girls", comparing them with Witness QAR's testimony on the Mugombwa Church massacre, where she explicitly included herself into the narrative. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, fn. 262.

3269. Ndayambaje replies that, contrary to the Prosecution's assertions, Witness QAR repeatedly changed her testimony with respect to her presence at the events.[7496] He argues that the fact that she failed to mention being one of the victims in her prior statements cannot be considered as non-material.[7497]

3270. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered that Witness QAR testified that the abduction took place in the days following a meeting at Mugombwa commune office which Ndayambaje and Nteziryayo attended.[7498] However, the Trial Chamber found that "it [was] not evident that the meeting about which Witness QAR testified [was] Ndayambaje's swearing-in ceremony",[7499] explaining that it was not "plausible" that she attended the meeting in question given that she was a Tutsi and relying on the several inconsistencies between her account and the testimony of other witnesses in this regard.[7500] Ndayambaje does not develop any argument to explain why a reasonable trier of fact could not have accepted Witness QAR's corroborated and detailed testimony about the abduction at Mugombwa, while concluding that she did not personally attend his swearing-in ceremony. His contention in this respect is accordingly rejected. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ndayambaje's undeveloped submission that Witness QAR's testimony was implausible in many other respects.

3271. The Trial Chamber recalled in the course of its deliberations that Witness QAR testified that the meeting that preceded the abduction about which she spoke took place on 18 June 1994.[7501] It considered that Witness QAR "may well have been mistaken while placing the purported meeting in mid-June 1994 due to the various meetings she attended at the Muganza commune office before, during and after the war" and "may have had a distorted view of the timing of the events in question

[7495] Prosecution Response Brief, paras. 2488-2491, 2496-2499. The Prosecution submits that Witness QAR was clear at trial that she was detained with the other women and girls kept at the Virgin Mary Statue and that she was not taken to Gasenyi but went home because when her name was read out, another woman who had the same first name was taken. It argues that the English transcript of her testimony does not reflect that she testified that she went to "Mugasenyi" and that, even if the witness in fact testified that "On nous a conduites à un endroit qu'on appelle 'Mu Gasenyi'" as reflected in the French transcript, this can be easily explained as a "slip of the tongue". See ibid., para. 2489 (emphasis in original), referring to Witness QAR, T. 19 November 2001 p. 65 (French). The Prosecution also points out that Ndayambaje failed to cross-examine Witness QAR on the fact that she omitted to mention in her prior statements that she was part of the group of abducted women. It further contends that Witness QAR did not mention her own victimisation because she did not find it important, as illustrated by the fact that she only mentioned it in response to the question why she could be certain about the date of the incident. See ibid., para. 2498.

given the passage of the time", finding her to be "credible in all other respects".[7502] Ndayambaje does not show that this determination was unreasonable. He merely refers to the assessment of the credibility of the account of another witness about a different meeting that has no connection with this particular instance and is, as such, irrelevant.[7503]

3273. In particular, the Trial Chamber discussed the alleged inconsistencies between Witness QAR's testimony at trial and her prior statements regarding the number of abducted women and girls, whether they were immediately killed, and where they were killed.[7505] The Trial Chamber accepted the witness's explanation that her statements were not recorded correctly and found that these inconsistencies were minor and did not go to the root of her account.[7506] Having reviewed the relevant excerpts of Witness QAR's prior statements and testimony, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's conclusion was not unreasonable.

3274. The Trial Chamber did not expressly discuss the purported inconsistencies in Witness QAR's evidence relating to whether she was part of the group of abducted women, whether she was transported to Gasenyi, her failure to mention the ceremony and the abduction in her May 1997 statement as well as who was leading the assailants. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje did not draw the Trial Chamber's attention to these inconsistencies, notwithstanding his position on appeal that they are so material that Witness QAR's evidence is unbelievable.[7507]

3275. Moreover, concerning Witness QAR's evidence as to whether or not she was part of the group of abducted women, the Appeals Chamber considers that the witness's reference to the group of abducted women and girls as "they", "them", or "these women and girls" in her 1995 and

[7507] The Appeals Chamber observes that the only arguments that Ndayambaje raised in his closing submissions were that Witness QAR falsely testified that she was part of the abducted women and that her testimony was inconsistent about whether the girls and women were killed "on the spot" or brought to and killed at Gasenyi. See Ndayambaje Closing Brief, pp. 781-783; Ndayambaje Closing Arguments, T. 30 April 2009 pp. 29, 30.

October 1997 statements and at times in her testimony[7508] is reasonably explained by the fact that she was addressing the issue or answering questions put to her which specifically related to the fate of the women and girls who were abducted and killed.[7509] When specifically being asked how she could remember the date of the abduction, Witness QAR unambiguously testified that she was part of the group of abducted women but did not share the fate of others as she was released.[7510] The Appeals Chamber therefore sees no contradiction in Witness QAR's evidence on this issue. It is also not persuaded that, given the witness's emphasis on the fact that the abducted women and girls were killed and the circumstances of her presence at the Virgin Mary Statue, Witness QAR's failure to mention that she was one of the abducted women in her prior statements is material and required discussion by the Trial Chamber.

3276. With respect to whether Witness QAR contradicted herself in stating that she was brought to Gasenyi with the other women and girls, the Tribunal's language section clarified that the French transcript of Witness QAR's testimony given in Kinyarwanda does not accurately reflect the witness's testimony.[7511] Witness QAR did not testify as reflected in the French transcript that she was transported to Gasenyi with the group of abducted women and girls but, instead, consistently stated that she was not taken to Gasenyi.[7512] Ndayambaje's argument in this respect – which relies on the French transcript of the witness' testimony – is therefore rejected.

3277. As to the alleged inconsistency regarding the identity of the leader of the assailants, the Appeals Chamber observes that it is indicated in Witness QAR's 1995 Statement that the group of assailants was led by "the conseillers of Saga", whereas she refuted this in court and testified that the leader was not a conseiller but a man named Masima.[7513] As noted by the Trial Chamber, Witness QAR explained that her 1995 statement had not been correctly recorded.[7514] The Appeals Chamber reiterates that it is within the discretion of a trial chamber to evaluate inconsistencies in the evidence, to consider whether the evidence taken as a whole is reliable and credible,[7515] without explaining its decision in every detail,[7516] and that the fact that a trial chamber does not address or mention alleged discrepancies does not necessarily mean that it did not consider them.[7517] In this instance, Ndayambaje does not demonstrate the unreasonableness of Witness QAR's explanation or that the inconsistency in her evidence as regards the identity of the leader of the assailants was such that it required express consideration and undermines the Trial Chamber's finding on Witness QAR's credibility.

3278. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument that Witness QAR did not mention Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony or the abduction in her May 1997 Statement given that it is evident from the reading of the statement that it was made in response to queries concerning the Mugombwa Church massacre specifically.[7518]

3279. Finally, the Appeals Chamber recalls that corroboration is not a requirement and that a trial chamber has the discretion to rely on uncorroborated, but otherwise credible, witness testimony.[7519] In the absence of a demonstration that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on Witness QAR's uncorroborated testimony about Ndayambaje's presence and utterances at the Virgin Mary Statue, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's allegation of error in this respect.

3280. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Ndayambaje's arguments addressed above do not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the credibility of Witness QAR's account of the abduction.

2. Assessment of Defence Evidence

3281. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting without valid reason the evidence of Defence Witnesses JAMES, BOZAN, MUZIK, ANGES, and Stan as well as his own testimony that he was not involved in the abduction of the women and girls from Mugombwa.[7520]

The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje further referred to Witness MATIC's testimony but, because he merely points to the main features of the witness's evidence in his appeal brief without developing any specific argument relating to the assessment of this witness's evidence regarding the

(a) Witnesses JAMES and BOZAN

3282. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber accepted Witness JAMES's evidence insofar as it corroborated Witness QAR's account of the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls, the number of abducted women and girls, the identity of the leader of the group of assailants, and their gathering at the Virgin Mary Statue.[7521] The Trial Chamber similarly accepted Witness BOZAN's evidence insofar as it corroborated Witness QAR's account as to the identity of the leader of the group of assailants, the sequence of events, including the stop at the statue, and the fact that the abducted women and girls were taken to Gasenyi to be killed.[7522]

3283. The Trial Chamber noted that Witnesses JAMES and BOZAN directly contradicted Witness QAR since both testified that Witness QAR was not part of the group of the abducted women and girls and that Ndayambaje did not come to the Virgin Mary Statue.[7523] It found that, because Witness JAMES was working on that day and stayed at the statue for less than five minutes, he was not in a position to testify that Witness QAR did not leave the house where she was staying at all on the day of the abduction and his testimony did not "preclude" Witness QAR's or Ndayambaje's presence at the statue after he left.[7524] It further recalled its previous finding that Witness JAMES was not credible in respect of Witness QAR's whereabouts during the Mugombwa Church massacre and Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7525] Moreover, the Trial Chamber determined that Witness BOZAN, like Witness JAMES, was not in a position to testify that Witness QAR or Ndayambaje were not present at the statue during the abduction as the witness only stayed there about five minutes.[7526] It also found that Witness BOZAN's testimony was not credible based on his failure to take steps to protect the abducted women and girls or arrest the assailants, even though he knew them, and based on his implication in the Mugombwa Church massacre.[7527] The Trial Chamber concluded:

> In summary, the presence of Witnesses BOZAN and JAMES in the vicinity of the Statue of the Virgin Mary on the day of the abduction, for a short overlapping period of time, does not preclude abduction, the Appeals Chamber will not examine the Trial Chamber's findings regarding this particular witness's evidence. See Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 642-644. The Appeals Chamber will also not discuss Ndayambaje's challenges to the assessment of the evidence of Witnesses SABINE and KWEPO that he developed under Ground 20 of his appeal as they specifically relate to the abduction of Nambaje and Witness FAU's credibility. See ibid., paras. 657-661. As the Appeals Chamber has found above that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Ndayambaje for the murder of Nambaje and in relying on Witness FAU's evidence, it is therefore unnecessary to discuss his arguments relating to the Trial Chamber's assessment of this evidence. See supra, Section IX.H.1(a).

> either Witness QAR's or Ndayambaje's presence at the site. Their evidence, although consistent, is not conclusive.[7528]

3284. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in rejecting the testimonies of Witnesses JAMES and BOZAN contradicting Witness QAR's evidence regarding her presence as well as that of Ndayambaje at the Virgin Mary Statue even though it found their evidence consistent.[7529] With respect to Witness JAMES, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber's finding that the witness was not in a position to testify that Witness QAR did not leave the house at all on the day of the abduction because he was working on that day is "not justified" given that Witness JAMES "worked just by the entrance of Witness QAR's house".[7530] He also asserts that, contrary to the Trial Chamber's finding, Exhibit D655 – a sketch and photographs of the relevant premises – shows that Witness QAR could not have arrived at the Virgin Mary Statue or come back home after the incident without being seen by Witness JAMES.[7531] He adds that, given Witness JAMES's vantage point at the time, the witness would necessarily have seen Ndayambaje's vehicle pass in front of his place of work and seen him at the statue if he had been there.[7532]

3285. With respect to Witness BOZAN, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the witness was not credible on the grounds that he was implicated in the Mugombwa Church massacre and that he failed to take any steps to protect the abducted women or arrest the assailants afterwards, even though it acknowledged that the witness had made considerable efforts to rescue the abducted girls and alert the commune authorities.[7533] Ndayambaje contends that no evidence suggested that Witness BOZAN had either the power or the means to arrest the armed attackers who came from another commune and that the Trial Chamber wrongly ignored that the witness reported the incident to the then bourgmestre of Muganza Commune, which also indicated that the abduction took place well before Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony as bourgmestre of Muganza.[7534]

[7529] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 633, 637, 638, 641. Ndayambaje further argues that the Trial Chamber should have applied the same reasoning applied by the Appeals Chamber in the Kalimanzira case and by the Trial Chamber in this case with respect to Witness BCZ's evidence on meetings at the Hotel Ihuliro and that the Trial Chamber impermissibly shifted the burden of proof when assessing Witnesses JAMES's and BOZAN's evidence. See Ndayambaje Notice of Appeal, para. 203, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 4745; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 641, referring to Kalimanzira Appeal Judgement, para. 185, Trial Judgement, paras. 3103-3106, 4745. In the absence of any explanation as to the pertinence of the assessment of the evidence of other witnesses concerning other incidents in the Kalimanzira case and the other parts of the Trial Judgement and as to how the Trial Chamber allegedly reversed the burden of proof, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these contentions without further consideration.

3286. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's submissions regarding Witness JAMES should be rejected as he fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the witness was not credible and that his arguments as to the witness's ability to observe the incident from his place of work are "unsupported and unreferenced speculations".[7535] The Prosecution further responds that, while Ndayambaje is correct that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness BOZAN was implicated in the Mugombwa Church massacre, he does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the witness was neither reliable nor credible.[7536]

3287. The Appeals Chamber observes that, contrary to the Prosecution's assertion, the Trial Judgement is unclear as to whether the Trial Chamber rejected the evidence of Witnesses JAMES and BOZAN relating to the abduction because it found that they were not credible. Although the Trial Chamber referred to their lack of credibility, its ultimate finding regarding the assessment of their evidence quoted above, and the fact that it relied on certain parts of their evidence as corroborative of that of Witness QAR, suggest that the Trial Chamber concluded that their evidence was not incompatible with Witness QAR's account.

3288. That being said, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje does not demonstrate why the Trial Chamber was unreasonable in finding that Witness JAMES could not have accounted for Witness QAR's whereabouts during the whole day and for all events at the Virgin Mary Statue, including on Ndayambaje's presence there. Ndayambaje fails to appreciate that the Trial Chamber carefully considered Witness JAMES's testimony that he was working on that day and the short time that he was present at the statue together with evidence of the proximity of his workplace to the relevant locations.[7537] His arguments regarding Witness JAMES's place of work and the layout of the site are therefore rejected.

3289. Concerning the assessment of Witness BOZAN's evidence, the Appeals Chamber notes that, as held above, the Trial Chamber erred in stating that the witness was "implicated in the massacres at Mugombwa and was said that have had a machete when he went there" as the Trial Chamber did not make such findings anywhere in the Trial Judgement and that they are not supported by the evidence on the record.[7538] However, the Appeals Chamber considers that this mistake has no bearing on the Trial Chamber's findings pertaining to the abduction because the Trial Chamber found that Witness BOZAN's evidence of his presence at the Virgin Mary Statue for a short period of time was not necessarily inconsistent with evidence of Witness QAR's and Ndayambaje's presence at the statue.[7539] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in this respect.

3290. The Trial Judgement also reflects that the Trial Chamber did consider Witness BOZAN's evidence that the abduction took place in mid-May 1994 when Ndayambaje was not bourgmestre of Muganza Commune but preferred the detailed evidence of Witness QAF concerning this event.[7540] Recalling that, when faced with competing versions of the same event, it is the prerogative of the trier of fact to decide which version it considers more credible,[7541] the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in not preferring Witness BOZAN's account of when the incident occurred.

3291. For these reasons, the Appeals finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on Witness QAR's evidence despite Witnesses JAMES's and BOZAN's evidence.

(b) Witness MUZIK

3292. The Trial Chamber found that Witness MUZIK's account of the abduction was not credible because he was not present during the abduction but accepted his testimony to the extent that it corroborated Witness QAR's evidence that the abducted women and girls were killed at Gasenyi.[7542]

3293. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Witness MUZIK was not credible because he was not present during the abduction and could not save the girls despite relying on other aspects of his testimony that corroborated that of Witness QAR.[7543] He also submits that the Trial Chamber erroneously ignored that Witness MUZIK's testimony that he reported the incident to the then bourgmestre of Muganza Commune, who was not Ndayambaje, confirmed that the abduction occurred well before Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7544]

3294. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber was correct to find that Witness MUZIK's testimony was not credible.[7545]

3295. The Appeals Chamber notes that, although the Trial Chamber referred to Witness MUZIK's inability to prevent the death of the two Tutsi girls he had in custody, the Trial Judgement reflects that the Trial Chamber rejected Witness MUZIK's testimony on their abduction because he was not present during the incident and that his evidence was therefore "questionable", which the Appeals Chamber understands to mean that the evidence lacked probative value.[7546] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate the unreasonableness of this finding.

3296. A review of the Trial Judgement also shows that the Trial Chamber considered Witness MUZIK's evidence that the abduction took place in mid-May 1994 when Ndayambaje was not bourgmestre of Muganza Commune but preferred the detailed evidence of Witness QAF in this regard.[7547] Ndayambaje does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in the exercise of its discretion in the assessment of the evidence in reaching its conclusion.

3297. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Witness MUZIK's testimony relevant to the abduction in Mugombwa.

(c) Witnesses ANGES, Stan, and Ndayambaje

3298. The Trial Chamber noted that Ndayambaje gave hearsay testimony about the attack and that Witnesses ANGES and Stan corroborated Witness QAR's testimony that the group of abductees included adolescent girls and that the women and girls were taken to Gasenyi, where they were killed.[7548]

3299. Ndayambaje submits that Witnesses ANGES's and Stan's testimonies that they were aware of the abduction of women and girls in mid-May 1994, but did not see or hear about his involvement contradict "the possibility that this event was the consequence of the swearing-in ceremony."[7549] Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber also failed to take into account his own evidence that he was not involved in the abduction, about which he learned in mid-May 1994, prior to his swearing-in ceremony.[7550]

3300. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's reliance on the evidence of Witnesses ANGES and Stan as well as on his own testimony is "unwarranted, since the Trial Chamber rejected the testimony of all three".[7551]

3301. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber summarised the evidence of Witnesses ANGES and Stan to which Ndayambaje points and referred to it in its deliberations on the abduction,[7552] which shows that it did not ignore this evidence. Similarly, the Trial Chamber referred to Ndayambaje's testimony.[7553] Ndayambaje's suggestion that the Trial Chamber failed to consider this evidence is therefore without merit. To the extent that Ndayambaje also intended to challenge the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's claim in the absence of a demonstration of how the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in assessing this evidence.

3302. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber rejects Ndayambaje's contention regarding the assessment of his testimony as well as the testimonies of Witnesses ANGES and Stan related to the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls in Mugombwa.

3. Criminal Responsibility

3303. Having regard to the events that preceded the abductions, and the situation in Rwanda generally, and considering that the assailants asked Ndayambaje what they should do with the abducted Tutsi women and girls at the Virgin Mary Statue, the Trial Chamber found that Ndayambaje must have known of the assailants' genocidal intent.[7554] It also found that the killings of the abducted women and girls "taken by themselves or collectively [with the killing of Tutsis at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill] occurred on a large scale."[7555] As noted above, the Trial Chamber concluded that Ndayambaje was responsible of instigating genocide, persecution and extermination as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II in relation to the killings of the abducted women and girls.[7556]

3305. The Appeals Chamber also understands Ndayambaje to contend that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting him of extermination in relation to the abduction because the abduction of eight identifiable women and girls in Mugombwa and of Nambaje in Baziro does not satisfy the large scale requirement that characterises the crime of extermination.[7560]

3306. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje's claim that the evidence did not establish that the attackers had genocidal intent is unsubstantiated and should therefore be dismissed.[7561] It also contends that Ndayambaje overlooks that the killings of Nambaje and the child she was taking care of and the eight women and girls abducted from Mugombwa were part of a larger pattern of killings following the swearing-in ceremony.[7562] It adds that the victims of the post-swearing-in wave of violence were also linked to the previous mass killings committed at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill and that it would be artificial to consider these killings of victims targeted because of their Tutsi ethnicity in isolation.[7563]

3307. Ndayambaje replies in relation to the crime of extermination that it "is not sufficient for the actions in question to be within the context of 'a larger pattern'" and that the "killing of ten people, even under these circumstances, did not meet the criterion of a 'substantial contribution to extermination'" required for a conviction for extermination.[7564]

The Appeals Chamber understands Ndayambaje's reference to the number of victims as relating to the large scale requirement of the crime of extermination as a crime against humanity, but fails to see how the fact that the group was composed of "perfectly identifiable" girls and abducted by a group of "identifiable" attackers demonstrates that the elements of the crime of extermination were not met.

[7564] Ndayambaje Reply Brief, para. 271, referring, inter alia, to Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 396.

3308. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber found that the individuals responsible for the killing of the abducted Tutsi women and girls had genocidal intent based on "the widespread killing of Tutsis throughout Rwanda as well as the fact that the assailants who abducted Nambaje came to a house claiming to look for Tutsis".[7565] The Appeals Chamber recalls its finding that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the abduction of Nambaje and the abduction of the Tutsi women and girls as one event and in convicting Ndayambaje for the abduction of Nambaje.[7566] In this context, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber could not reasonably rely on the circumstances of the abduction of Nambaje to infer the mens rea of those who abducted and killed the Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector. However, Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that the assailants possessed genocidal intent based on "the widespread killing of Tutsis throughout Rwanda" at the relevant time and the fact that the abducted women and girls were targeted because they were Tutsis.[7567] As Ndayambaje does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the assailants had genocidal intent, his argument that he could not know of their genocidal intent because they had no such intent is similarly rejected.

3309. With respect to the crime of extermination, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of extermination is the act of killing on a large scale.[7568] "Large scale" does not suggest a strict numerical approach with a minimum number of victims.[7569] The assessment of "large scale" is made on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the circumstances in which the killings occurred.[7570] Relevant factors include, inter alia, the time and place of the killings, the selection of the victims and the manner in which they were targeted, and whether the killings were aimed at the collective group rather than victims in their individual capacity.[7571]

3310. It is unclear whether the individual killing of the eight abducted Tutsi women and girls Witness QAR testified about could be considered to meet the "large scale" requirement.[7572] In any event, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in finding that, taken collectively with the killings perpetrated at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill for which

[7566] See supra, Section IX.H.1(a).
[7567] Trial Judgement, paras. 4708, 5954. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Ndayambaje's argument that Witness QAR, known to be a Tutsi, was nonetheless released.
[7568] See, e.g., Karemera and Ngirumpatse Appeal Judgement, para. 660; Lukić and Lukić Appeal Judgement, para. 536; Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, para. 394; Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 516. The Appeals Chamber notes that Ndayambaje failed to raise the alleged error pertaining to the crime of extermination in his notice of appeal. However, since the Prosecution did not object on this basis and responded to Ndayambaje's submission, the Appeals Chamber will exercise its discretion to consider Ndayambaje's arguments developed in his appeal brief.
[7569] See, e.g., Lukić and Lukić Appeal Judgement, para. 537; Rukundo Appeal Judgement, para. 185; Ntakirutimana Appeal Judgement, para. 516. See also Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement, fn. 924.

[7571] Lukić and Lukić Appeal Judgement, para. 538 and references cited therein.

Ndayambaje was also convicted, the killing of the group of abducted women and girls "occurred on a large scale". The Appeals Chamber observes that the killing of the abducted women and girls was perpetrated in the same commune as the Mugombwa Church massacre and not far from the Kabuye Hill attacks,[7573] that Ndayambaje similarly encouraged by his presence or his words the assailants to perpetrate the crimes,[7574] and that the victims were not targeted in their individual capacity but as part of a collective aim to exterminate the Tutsis.[7575] The instant situation therefore differs from the situation addressed in the Bagosora and Nsengiyumva Appeal Judgement which Ndayambaje relies upon in support of his contention that the "large scale" requirement was not met regarding the killings of the abducted women and girls.[7576]

3311. In the circumstances of this case, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's collective consideration of the events on the basis of which Ndayambaje was convicted to find him guilty of extermination as a crime against humanity for the killings of the group of abducted Tutsi women and girls.[7577] The Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's argument in this respect.

4. Conclusion

3312. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering that Nambaje was part of the same group of abducted women and girls Witness QAR testified about and, consequently, in convicting Ndayambaje for instigating her killing through his words at the Virgin Mary Statue. However, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in finding him responsible for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for instigating the killing of the Tutsi women and girls from Mugombwa Sector based on his utterances at the Virgin Mary Statue in June 1994.

[7576] See also supra, para. 2125.
[7577] The Appeals Chamber nonetheless recalls that it has concluded that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Ndayambaje for instigating the killing of Nambaje in June 1994. See supra, Section IX.H.1(a).

3313. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber grants in part Ground 20 of Ndayambaje's appeal and reverses Ndayambaje's convictions for instigating the killing of Nambaje. It will discuss the impact of this finding, if any, in Section XII below. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Ground 20 of Ndayambaje's appeal.

X. APPEAL OF THE PROSECUTION

3314. The Trial Chamber found that Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony held on 19 April 1994 was attended by President Sindikubwabo, Prime Minister Kambanda, Nyiramasuhuko, Kanyabashi, and a number of ministers from the Interim Government.[7578] It held that the speeches given at this ceremony by Prime Minister Kambanda and President Sindikubwabo were inflammatory and contained coded language that was understood by the attendees and the public as a call to identify and kill Tutsis and their accomplices.[7579] The Trial Chamber determined that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches contributed to triggering the subsequent widespread killings and large-scale massacres in Butare Prefecture that constituted genocide,[7580] thereby advocating and inciting genocide and contributing to these genocidal killings.[7581]

3315. The Trial Chamber determined that Kanyabashi's presence at the ceremony and his failure to dissociate himself from the statements made by Kambanda and Sindikubwabo constituted tacit approval of their inflammatory statements and the directives and instructions to the population contained therein.[7582] It also found that Kanyabashi gave his own speech ("Kanyabashi's Speech") following those of Kambanda and Sindikubwabo, which supported their message and contained a commitment to execute the directives and instructions they announced.[7583] The Trial Chamber, however, did not find that Kanyabashi's Speech was inflammatory or that it substantially contributed to the genocide that followed.[7584] It concluded that, although Kanyabashi stated his support and commitment for the preceding speeches, his conduct did not rise to the level of directly inciting genocide and that the Prosecution had not adduced sufficient evidence to support that Kanyabashi substantially contributed to any incitement made by Kambanda, Sindikubwabo, or other speakers at the ceremony.[7585] Accordingly, the Trial Chamber acquitted Kanyabashi of genocide and of direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the speech he made at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7586]

3316. The Prosecution advances two grounds of appeal challenging Kanyabashi's acquittals on the charges of genocide and direct and public incitement to commit genocide based on Kanyabashi's

Speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7587] It argues that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that Kanyabashi's express support to Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's inflammatory speeches and his promise to carry out their directives to kill Tutsis made him criminally liable for the resulting genocide and also constituted direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[7588] The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in acquitting Kanyabashi of the crime of genocide that he committed or, in the alternative, instigated or aided and abetted, by delivering his speech on 19 April 1994 and in not finding him responsible for committing or aiding and abetting direct and public incitement to commit genocide through his speech.[7589] The Prosecution therefore requests that, for his speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony, the Appeals Chamber: (i) convict Kanyabashi of committing or, in the alternative, instigating or aiding and abetting genocide;[7590] (ii) convict Kanyabashi of committing or, in the alternative, aiding and abetting direct and public incitement to commit genocide;[7591] and accordingly (iii) impose a life sentence on Kanyabashi or, in the alternative, substantially increase his sentence.[7592]

3317. Kanyabashi responds that the Prosecution fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred by acquitting him of genocide and direct and public incitement to commit genocide for his speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony and that there is no ground to increase his sentence.[7593] In addition, Kanyabashi raises seven supplementary grounds of appeal challenging the Trial Chamber's findings concerning Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony on which the Prosecution relies in support of its submissions.[7594]

Specifically, Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) in denying his request to call Fidèle Mpiranya to replace François-Xavier Munyarugerero as an expert witness to analyse the speeches delivered at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony; (ii) failing to find that the fact that he expressed support for Kambanda's speech through his speech exceeded the scope of the Indictment and could therefore not serve as a basis for entering a conviction against him; (iii) concluding that he spoke after having heard Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's inflammatory statements; (iv) concluding that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches shared common themes and that Kambanda's Speech was inflammatory; (v) finding that his speech constituted an unambiguous commitment to support the objectives of the Interim Government as set forth in Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches; (vi) limiting its acceptance of the defence of duress he raised at trial to the count of conspiracy to commit genocide; and (vii) finding that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches triggered the massacres in Butare Prefecture. *See idem. 3318. The Appeals Chamber will first address the Prosecution's submissions relating to Kanyabashi's responsibility for genocide before turning to its submissions concerning Kanyabashi's responsibility for direct and public incitement to commit genocide.

A. Crime of Genocide (Ground 1)

3319. As noted above, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in not convicting Kanyabashi of committing or, in the alternative, instigating or aiding and abetting genocide through his speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7595]

1. Committing Responsibility

3320. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that Kanyabashi's Speech was not inflammatory and consequently not a trigger for the genocide that followed in Butare Prefecture as well as in failing to find that Kanyabashi was responsible for committing genocide.[7596] In support of its contentions, the Prosecution argues that a plain reading of Kanyabashi's Speech shows that, rather than dissociating himself from Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's inflammatory statements, he approved and embraced as his own their genocidal instructions.[7597] It contends that Kanyabashi's influential position and leadership role in the community gave weight to his endorsement and that, considered in context, his speech was as inflammatory and as much a trigger for the ensuing genocide as Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches.[7598] As such, the Prosecution argues that Kanyabashi's call to support and implement instructions to commit genocide was as much an integral part of the genocide as the carrying out of the killings by the physical perpetrators and, therefore, constitutes the actus reus of committing genocide.[7599] It further submits that the Trial Chamber's findings provide a basis for the conclusion that Kanyabashi acted with genocidal intent when he pronounced his speech at the ceremony.[7600] The Prosecution therefore requests the Appeals Chamber to enter a conviction against Kanyabashi for committing genocide under Count 2 of the Kanyabashi Indictment for the mass killings that were triggered in Butare.[7601]

3321. Kanyabashi responds that the Prosecution does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Judgement justifying a reversal of his acquittal for committing genocide on the basis of the speech he delivered at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7602] He contends that the conclusion that he is responsible for committing genocide through this speech is not the only reasonable one from the [7597] Prosecution Appeal Brief, paras. 10, 13.

[7598] Prosecution Appeal Brief, paras. 10, 12, 14, 15. The Prosecution contends that Kanyabashi's Speech should not have been viewed in isolation as all three speeches were part of the same event and "were elements of one composite unified call to violence." See ibid., para. 14. See also Prosecution Reply Brief, paras. 42-44.

evidence and that it is not demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt that his speech had any impact on the subsequent killings and massacres.[7603] Kanyabashi further submits that the jurisprudence quoted by the Prosecution cannot lead to his conviction because it concerns accused who were intimately linked with the crimes committed whereas the evidence in this case is not even sufficient to support a conviction for aiding and abetting genocide.[7604]

3322. The Appeals Chamber has held in relation to genocide that "committing" under Article 6(1) of the Statute, which envisions the physical perpetration of a crime, does not only mean physical killing and that other acts can constitute direct participation in the actus reus of the crime.[7605] The question is whether an accused's conduct was "as much an integral part of the [crimes] as were the killings which it enabled."[7606] In the cases where the Appeals Chamber has concluded that an accused's role constituted an integral part of the crimes, the accused were present at the crime scene and conducted, supervised, directed, played a leading role, or otherwise fully exercised influence over the physical perpetrators.[7607]

3323. Even if the Appeals Chamber were to overturn the Trial Chamber's findings that Kanyabashi's Speech was not inflammatory and did not substantially contribute to the subsequent killings, it is not convinced that Kanyabashi's approval of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches, his position of authority, and the contents of his speech are sufficient to qualify Kanyabashi's overall conduct as that of "committing" genocide. The Appeals Chamber considers that, where it is not established that the accused was present at the scene of the crimes, conducted, supervised, directed, played a leading role, or otherwise fully exercised influence over the physical perpetrators, making a speech days, if not weeks, before the physical perpetration of killings cannot be deemed to constitute "direct participation in the actus reus" of the killings. Nor can such circumstances compel the conclusion that the conduct of the individual who gave the speech was as much an integral part of the genocide as were the killings which it allegedly enabled. In the view of the Appeals Chamber, the notion of commission by playing an integral part in the crime is not as expansive as the Prosecution argues in the present case. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to discuss the Prosecution's submissions concerning Kanyabashi's genocidal intent.

3324. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this aspect of the Prosecution's appeal.

2. Instigating Responsibility

3325. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that Kanyabashi's conduct did not substantially contribute to the massacres in Butare Prefecture that followed Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony as well as in failing to conclude, on the basis of its own factual findings, that Kanyabashi's Speech amounted to instigating genocide.[7608] The Prosecution contends that "[t]he prompting here was Kanyabashi's public commitment that he and the population would carry out the instructions to massacre Tutsis" and that "[t]he substantial contribution his prompting made to the commission of genocide flowed from the weight of his authority, as the elder of the Butare bourgmestres, and the influence and respect he commanded among the people."[7609] It further contends that Kanyabashi was, at a minimum, aware of the substantial likelihood that massacres would be committed following his speech.[7610] The Prosecution therefore requests that the Appeals Chamber enter a conviction against Kanyabashi for instigating genocide under Count 2 of the Kanyabashi Indictment.[7611]

3326. Kanyabashi responds that the Prosecution does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred by acquitting him of instigating genocide for his speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7612] In Kanyabashi's view, there is no basis to conclude that the three speeches were elements of one composite unified call to violence and that it is not the only reasonable conclusion from the evidence.[7613] Kanyabashi submits that the jurisprudence quoted by the Prosecution shows that it needed to establish a link between his speech and the killings that followed and that such a connection was not established in this case.[7614]

3327. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of instigating is to prompt another person to commit an offence.[7615] It is not necessary to prove that the accused was present when the Kanyabashi also submits that he was acquitted of conspiracy to commit genocide and that the Prosecution did not appeal this conclusion. See ibid., para. 128. Regarding the mens rea, Kanyabashi asserts that the Prosecution only relies on Expert Witness Guichaoua and that it goes beyond the weight that can be given to an expert witness's testimony. See ibid., paras. 129, 140.

instigated crime was committed[7616] or that the crime would not have been perpetrated without the involvement of the accused; it is sufficient to demonstrate that the instigation was a factor substantially contributing to the conduct of another person committing the crime.[7617]

3328. The Trial Chamber found that Kanyabashi's Speech was not inflammatory and did not substantially contribute to the genocide in Butare Prefecture that followed the ceremony.[7618] The Trial Chamber did not further discuss Kanyabashi's alleged responsibility for instigating genocide in relation to his speech. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded by the Prosecution's contention that Kanyabashi's conduct as found by the Trial Chamber satisfies the actus reus of instigating. As noted above, the Trial Chamber determined that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches were inflammatory and constituted a call to the public to identify and kill Tutsis and their accomplices, and that Kanyabashi gave a speech following those of Kambanda and Sindikubwabo, in which he supported their message and committed to execute their directives and instructions. The Appeals Chamber considers that Kanyabashi's commitment to execute the directives and instructions announced by Kambanda and Sindikubwabo to identify and kill Tutsis does not necessarily amount to prompting the attendees or the people in Butare Prefecture to kill Tutsis.[7619] In the absence of any evidence discussed by the Trial Chamber or pointed out by the Prosecution that Kanyabashi's Speech was understood as instigating the killing of Tutsis or had any impact on the conduct of those who subsequently committed killings,[7620] the Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Kanyabashi did not instigate genocide through his speech.

3329. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in not finding that Kanyabashi's Speech prompted the people in Butare Prefecture to kill Tutsis and that Kanyabashi was therefore liable for instigating genocide. The Appeals Chamber therefore dismisses this part of the Prosecution's appeal.

3. Aiding and Abetting Responsibility

its own factual findings, in failing to conclude that his speech constituted aiding and abetting genocide.[7621] It contends that Kanyabashi's contribution to the ensuing massacres was rendered substantial when he committed to Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's instructions to massacre Tutsis, embraced these instructions as his own, and lent moral support through his influential position.[7622] The Prosecution further argues that Kanyabashi's endorsement of and promise to execute the Interim Government's genocidal instructions while knowing that mass killings were taking place in neighbouring prefectures signaled, at a minimum, that he knew of the likelihood that genocide would be committed following the speeches and that his conduct would assist in its commission.[7623] The Prosecution therefore requests that the Appeals Chamber enter a conviction against Kanyabashi for aiding and abetting genocide under Count 2 of the Kanyabashi Indictment.[7624]

3331. Kanyabashi responds that the Prosecution does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his speech did not substantially contribute to the killings that followed in Butare Prefecture.[7625] He reiterates that the conclusion that the three speeches were elements of one composite unified call to violence is not the only reasonable conclusion from the evidence.[7626] Kanyabashi further restates that his speech did not substantially contribute to the killings that followed Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony since no link was established between his speech and the principal perpetrators of the killings.[7627]

fact-based inquiry.[7630] Moreover, the actus reus may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been perpetrated and the location at which the actus reus takes place may be removed from the location of the principal crime.[7631] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it is not necessary for the principal perpetrator to be aware of the aider and abettor's contribution.[7632]

3333. The Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Kanyabashi's Speech did not substantially contribute to the genocide in Butare Prefecture that followed Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7633] The Appeals Chamber notes that, although the Trial Chamber appears to have primarily relied on its finding that Kanyabashi's Speech was not inflammatory to reach its conclusion, it also relied on "the evidence in its totality".[7634] The Prosecution fails to demonstrate that the evidence on the record shows otherwise and eliminates all reasonable doubt that Kanyabashi's Speech substantially contributed to the subsequent massacres in Butare Prefecture. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber observes that, while the Trial Chamber found that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches contributed to the genocide in Butare Prefecture,[7635] the Prosecution does not point to any evidence to support the conclusion that Kanyabashi's Speech did.[7636] In particular, the Prosecution does not point to any evidence showing or suggesting that Kanyabashi's supportive message and commitment to execute Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's instructions encouraged or provided moral support to the attendees or the people of Butare Prefecture to kill Tutsis. The Prosecution also does not rely on any evidence connecting Kanyabashi's Speech in any way to the genocidal acts that occurred in the prefecture after the swearing-in ceremony, including the massacres expressly cited by the Trial Chamber.[7637] In light of this and bearing in mind the Trial Chamber's finding that Kanyabashi's Speech was not of the same

The Appeals Chamber observes that, as part of his supplementary grounds of appeal, Kanyabashi challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches triggered the genocide in Butare Prefecture that occurred after the swearing-in ceremony. See Kanyabashi Response Brief, paras. 109-118. The Appeals Chamber considers it unnecessary to discuss this issue in light of its conclusions on the merits of the Prosecution's appeal.
[7636] The Appeals Chamber observes that neither the Trial Chamber nor the Prosecution cited evidence showing or suggesting that Kanyabashi's Speech was one of the factors that triggered the ensuing genocide. The Trial Chamber's conclusion that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches triggered the genocide was primarily based on the evidence on the impact of Sindikubwabo's Speech and the evidence that widespread killings of Tutsis did not occur in Butare Prefecture prior to 19 April 1994 and that there was "overwhelming evidence that massacres in most of the Butare communes started in the wake of the events of 19 April 1994." See Trial Judgement, paras. 853-856, 927, 930, 932, 933. The Trial Chamber also cited Expert Witnesses Des Forges's and Reyntjens's testimonies that they also considered that both Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches were factors that triggered the genocide in Butare Prefecture. See ibid., paras. 640, 643-645 (Alison Des Forges), 786 (Filip Reyntjens). See also ibid., paras. 668, 692-694 (André Guichaoua).

nature as those of Kambanda and Sindikubwabo, the Appeals Chamber finds no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that Kanyabashi's Speech did not substantially contribute to the killings in Butare Prefecture that followed Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.

3334. In light of the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Kanyabashi's Speech did not substantially contribute to the genocide that followed Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony and, consequently, in not holding him criminally responsible for aiding and abetting genocide on this basis. Consequently, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to discuss the Prosecution's submissions concerning Kanyabashi's mens rea and dismisses this remaining part of Ground 1 of the Prosecution's appeal.

B. Crime of Direct and Public Incitement to Commit Genocide (Ground 2)

3335. As noted above, the Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in not convicting Kanyabashi of committing or, in the alternative, aiding and abetting direct and public incitement to commit genocide through his speech at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony.[7638]

1. Committing Responsibility

3336. The Prosecution submits that the Trial Chamber erred in law and in fact in finding that Kanyabashi's Speech did not directly incite genocide and, consequently, in failing to convict him of committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[7639] The Prosecution contends that, by unambiguously committing himself and the people under his authority to execute genocidal instructions, Kanyabashi embraced these instructions as his own and called on the population to kill Tutsis.[7640] It further submits that the Trial Chamber's findings of Kanyabashi's genocidal intent in relation to the megaphone incidents in May and June 1994 as well as the fact that he knew that genocide was raging throughout Rwanda when he gave his speech and that he knew that the instructions he promised to carry out were instructions for genocide support the conclusion that Kanyabashi acted with the required mens rea for direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[7641] The Prosecution therefore requests that the Appeals Chamber enter a conviction against Kanyabashi for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide under Count 4 of the Kanyabashi Indictment.[7642]

3337. Kanyabashi responds that the Prosecution does not explain the alleged error of law committed by the Trial Chamber and why his guilt is the only reasonable conclusion from the evidence.[7643] He argues that the Trial Chamber did not err in its application of the jurisprudential criteria in finding that his speech did not constitute direct incitement to commit genocide.[7644]

At the appeals hearing, the Prosecution pointed out that whether an incitement is direct depends on the meaning of the words and their specific context and argued that Kanyabashi did not only promise to implement the Interim Government's objective to carry out genocide but also used genocidal language that ultimately meant that the Tutsis had to be killed. See AT. 22 April 2015, pp. 5, 7.

[7644] Kanyabashi Response Brief, paras. 145, 146. See also ibid., paras. 147-153. Kanyabashi also contends that there is no evidence that members of the population were present at the ceremony, that he knew that his speech was being recorded to be broadcast subsequently, and that he contributed to the drafting of Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches. He argues that he did not have the required mens rea and that his speech was not made publicly. See ibid., paras. 154, 155, 157; AT. 22 April 2015 pp. 20, 21.

3338. The Appeals Chamber recalls that a person may be found guilty of direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 2(3)(c) of the Statute if he directly and publicly incited the commission of genocide (actus reus) and had the intent to directly and publicly incite others to commit genocide (mens rea).[7645] Direct incitement to commit genocide requires the speech to be a direct appeal to commit an act referred to in Article 2(2) of the Statute; it has to be more than a vague or indirect suggestion.[7646]

3339. The Trial Chamber determined that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches were inflammatory and constituted a call to the public to kill Tutsis and their accomplices.[7647] It also found that Kanyabashi addressed the audience after Kambanda and Sindikubwabo, that his own speech was not inflammatory but that it supported their speeches, and that his address contained a commitment to execute the directives and instructions announced by them.[7648] The Trial Chamber found that this conduct did not rise to the level of directly inciting genocide.[7649]

3340. The Appeals Chamber is not convinced by the Prosecution's contention that, by embracing as his own Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches, Kanyabashi's Speech amounted to a call to kill Tutsis. The Appeals Chamber finds that a reasonable trier of fact could have found that Kanyabashi's support and own commitment to Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches did not rise to the level of directly appealing to the people in Butare Prefecture to carry out Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's genocidal instructions.[7650] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that Kanyabashi's Speech did not rise to the level of direct incitement to commit genocide and dismisses this part of the Prosecution's appeal without further consideration.

2. Aiding and Abetting Responsibility

[7650] See supra, para. 3328. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in the Prosecution's contention raised at the appeals hearing that Kanyabashi's Speech amounted to a call to kill Tutsis because he used genocidal language. The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber expressly considered Kanyabashi's reference to the "enemy of Rwanda" and to the issue of security in his speech but concluded that Kanyabashi's Speech did not amount to an inflammatory speech. The Prosecution merely disagrees with the Trial Chamber's assessment without showing any error therein. See AT. 22 April 2015 pp. 5, 7; Trial Judgement, paras. 911, 5753.

public incitement to commit genocide.[7651] The Prosecution contends that Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's Speeches amounted to direct and public incitement to commit genocide and that, by reiterating and reinforcing their message and calling for their instructions to be put into action immediately thereafter, Kanyabashi substantially contributed to their inciting acts.[7652] It argues that "all three speeches comprised a single composite event", complemented one another, and were mutually reinforcing and "brought home the same message: Tutsis must be killed."[7653] The Prosecution also asserts that the fact that Kanyabashi spoke after Kambanda and Sindikubwabo does not mean that he could not have aided and abetted their speeches since the actus reus of aiding and abetting may occur after the principal crime has been perpetrated.[7654] The Prosecution therefore requests that the Appeals Chamber enter a conviction against Kanyabashi for aiding and abetting direct and public incitement to commit genocide under Count 4 of the Kanyabashi Indictment.[7655]

[7660] Kanyabashi Response Brief, paras. 161-163.

3343. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that the actus reus of aiding and abetting "consists of practical assistance, encouragement, or moral support which has a substantial effect on the perpetration of the crime".[7661] The actus reus need not serve as condition precedent for the crime and may occur before, during, or after the principal crime has been perpetrated.[7662]

3344. The Trial Chamber found that "the Prosecution [had not] adduced sufficient evidence to support that Kanyabashi substantially contributed to any incitement made by Kambanda, Sindikubwabo, or other speakers at this event."[7663] The Appeals Chamber sees no error in the Trial Chamber's determination. Even if Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's conduct at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony were found to constitute direct and public incitement to commit genocide,[7664] nothing in the Trial Chamber's findings or in the evidence relied upon by the Prosecution sustains the conclusion that Kanyabashi's Speech substantially contributed to the perpetration of the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide committed by Kambanda and Sindikubwabo.

3345. As an inchoate crime,[7665] direct and public incitement to commit genocide is completed as soon as the discourse in question is uttered or published, even though the effects of incitement may extend in time,[7666] and is punishable even if no act of genocide has resulted therefrom.[7667] Accordingly, in order for Kanyabashi to be found responsible for aiding and abetting direct and public incitement to commit genocide, it would have to be established that he substantially contributed to Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's inciting speeches themselves and not, as the Prosecution suggests, to the effects of their incitements by "reiterat[ing] and reinforc[ing] their message".[7668] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber determined that Kanyabashi spoke after Kambanda and Sindikubabwo delivered their speeches.[7669] The Prosecution points to no evidence or findings demonstrating that Kanyabashi's conduct provided substantial assistance to [7664] The first issue raised by the Prosecution is whether Kambanda's and Sindikubwabo's conduct at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony constituted direct and public incitement to commit genocide. The Trial Chamber did not make specific legal findings in this respect. Nevertheless, in light of its conclusions on the merits of the Prosecution's appeal, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to decide this issue and to address Kanyabashi's arguments relating to the "public" nature of the speeches delivered at the ceremony. See Prosecution Appeal Brief, para. 34; Prosecution Reply Brief, paras. 54, 55; Kanyabashi Response Brief, para. 157; AT. 22 April 2015 pp. 7, 8, 20, 24.

[7669] Trial Judgement, para. 910. See also ibid., paras. 5752, 5992. The Appeals Chamber observes that, as part of his supplementary grounds of appeal, Kanyabashi challenges the Trial Chamber's finding that he spoke after Kambanda Sindikubwabo or Kambanda in the commission of their direct and public incitement to commit genocide, either before, during, or after their respective speeches.

3346. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that there was insufficient evidence to support the conclusion that Kanyabashi substantially contributed to any incitement made by Kambanda or Sindikubwabo during Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony. The Appeals Chamber consequently dismisses this remaining part of Ground 2 of the Prosecution's appeal.

and Sindikubwabo. See Kanyabashi Response Brief, paras. 29-52. The Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to discuss the issue in light of its conclusion on the merits of the Prosecution's appeal.

C. Conclusion

3347. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Prosecution has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in law or in fact in acquitting Kanyabashi of genocide and direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to the speech he gave at Nsabimana's Swearing-In Ceremony. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses the Prosecution's appeal in its entirety. In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi's supplementary grounds have become moot and need not be addressed.

XI. SENTENCING APPEALS

3348. The Trial Chamber sentenced Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje to life imprisonment and imposed sentences of 25, 30, and 35 years of imprisonment on Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, and Kanyabashi, respectively.[7670] Each convicted person challenges the Trial Chamber's sentencing determinations.[7671]

3349. Before turning to the parties' contentions, the Appeals Chamber recalls that trial chambers are vested with broad discretion in determining an appropriate sentence due to their obligation to individualise penalties to fit the circumstances of the convicted person and the gravity of the crime.[7672] As a rule, the Appeals Chamber will not substitute its own sentence for that imposed by the Trial Chamber unless the appealing party demonstrates that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in exercising its discretion, or failed to follow the applicable law.[7673]

[7670] Trial Judgement, para. 6271.
[7671] The Appeals Chamber observes that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, and Ndayambaje failed to raise in their notice of appeal some of the allegations of error they developed in their appeal brief in contravention with the relevant formal requirements applicable on appeal. The Appeals Chamber refers to: (i) Nyiramasuhuko's allegations of error concerning her aggravating circumstances and the imposition of a life sentence; (ii) Ntahobali's allegation of error concerning double-counting; (iii) Nsabimana's allegation of error concerning the double-counting of the vulnerability of the victims; (iv) Nteziryayo's allegation of error regarding the principle of parity; and (v) Ndayambaje's allegations of error in relation to his aggravating factors. See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, paras. 1299, 1314; Ntahobali Appeal Brief, para. 988-990; Nsabimana Appeal Brief, paras. 529-531; Nteziryayo Appeal Brief, paras. 293-297; Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, paras. 684-687. Considering the nature of the allegations and the fact that the Prosecution did not object to these allegations on this basis and responded to the appellant's submissions, the Appeals Chamber will exercise its discretion to consider these allegations of error.

A. Nyiramasuhuko's Sentencing Appeal (Ground 32)

3350. The Trial Chamber sentenced Nyiramasuhuko to a single term of life imprisonment for her convictions for conspiracy to commit genocide, genocide, extermination, rape, and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons, and outrages upon personal dignity as serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[7674]

3351. Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) its consideration of the aggravating circumstances; (ii) failing to consider certain mitigating circumstances; and (iii) sentencing her to life imprisonment.[7675] She requests that her sentence be reduced.[7676]

1. Aggravating Circumstances

3352. The Trial Chamber determined that the vast number of victims was far in excess of the threshold for extermination as a crime against humanity and considered this as an aggravating circumstance in determining Nyiramasuhuko's sentence.[7677] It further considered as an aggravating circumstance "the catastrophic number of victims across Butare préfecture who perished and suffered as a result of Nyiramasuhuko's participation in the conspiracy to commit genocide."[7678] It also found as an additional aggravating circumstance the numerous victims of rapes and killings at the Butare Prefecture Office, many of whom were particularly vulnerable.[7679]

3353. The Trial Chamber further took into account Nyiramasuhuko's abuse of her position of authority as an aggravating circumstance.[7680] Specifically, it held that Nyiramasuhuko's position as Minister for Family and Women's Affairs made her a person of high authority and influence who was respected throughout Rwanda and in particular in Butare Prefecture from where she came.[7681] It found that, on a number of occasions, instead of preserving peaceful co-existence between communities and the welfare of the family, she used her influence over Interahamwe to commit crimes such as rape and murder.[7682]

considered this when assessing the gravity of the offences.[7683] Stressing that aggravating factors must be proven beyond reasonable doubt, she contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the number of victims killed in relation to attacks at the prefectoral office, because its finding in this regard was "doubtful".[7684] She also argues that it was inappropriate for the Trial Chamber to consider the number of victims "across Butare Prefecture" that resulted from her participation in a conspiracy to commit genocide as an aggravating factor as the Trial Chamber could only consider the number of victims of the specific crimes for which she was convicted.[7685] Finally, Nyiramasuhuko contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering her abuse of authority as an aggravating factor, as this was an element of the crimes for which she was convicted pursuant to Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute.[7686]

3355. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly considered the aggravating circumstances in determining Nyiramasuhuko's sentence.[7687]

3356. The Appeals Chamber dismisses as unfounded Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber improperly double-counted the number of victims at the Butare Prefecture Office in determining her sentence. Although factors taken into consideration as aspects of the gravity of a crime cannot additionally be taken into account as separate aggravating circumstances,[7688] the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber's reference to the fact that "hundreds of Tutsis were abducted, raped and killed" at the prefectoral office in its consideration of the gravity of the offences was used to punctuate "the seriousness and atrocity of crimes repetitively perpetrated" at the prefectoral office as opposed to reflecting that the Trial Chamber considered the number of victims in determining the gravity of the offences.[7689]

3357. As for Nyiramasuhuko's submission that the Trial Chamber's finding as to the number of victims killed during attacks at the prefectoral office is "doubtful", the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has previously determined that the record is insufficient to affirm that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted and killed during the attacks in which Ntahobali participated.[7690]

[7684] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1303, referring, inter alia, to Trial Judgement, para. 2779. This conclusion equally applies to Nyiramasuhuko.[7691] Notwithstanding this conclusion, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber's error in its determination of the number of refugees abducted and killed during the attacks in which she participated would have prevented a reasonable trier of fact from considering "the numerous victims of rapes and killings at the Butare préfecture office in particular, many of whom were particularly vulnerable" as an aggravating circumstance.[7692]

3358. Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the number of victims across Butare Prefecture in general as an aggravating factor is equally without merit. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of conspiracy to commit genocide against the Tutsi population throughout Butare Prefecture between 9 April 1994 and 14 July 1994 and expressly found that in doing so she took part in Cabinet meetings and Interim Government decisions that "triggered the onslaught of massacres in Butare préfecture".[7693] Accordingly, it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to consider the number of victims in Butare Prefecture in general as an aggravating circumstance.

3359. With respect to the Trial Chamber's consideration of Nyiramasuhuko's abuse of her authority as an aggravating factor, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber convicted

[7691] The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber's determination that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko participated in attacks that led to the abduction and killing of "hundreds of Tutsi refugees" principally relies on the Trial Chamber's conclusion that "the pickup was nearly full on at least seven occasions" during the attacks from mid-May to June 1994. See supra, para. 1884. However, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Nyiramasuhuko was only convicted for killings on the basis of her conduct during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks. See supra, Sections IV.F.1(a), IV.F.1(c). Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that no reasonable trier of fact could have determined the number of victims abducted and killed based on the seven occasions the pickup truck left the prefectoral office, as it included the Last Half of May Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks for which Nyiramasuhuko was not convicted. Consequently, no basis exists to attribute criminal responsibility to Nyiramasuhuko for ordering killings during these attacks. As regards the remaining occasion when the pickup left the prefectoral office during the attacks for which Nyiramasuhuko was convicted for killings – namely the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks – the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has previously considered that the record is insufficient to attribute responsibility for the killings of hundreds of Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefectoral Office for the Mid-May Attack. See supra, paras. 1886, 1887. Moreover, having considered the record with respect to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber finds that, while the evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber paints a nearly categorical picture of numerous persons being loaded onto the vehicle accompanying Nyiramasuhuko that night, it is insufficient to affirm that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted and killed during the the Night of Three Attacks. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2253, 2278, 2285, 2287, 2289, 2303, 2307, 2308, 2331, 2332. See also ibid., paras. 2703, 2704, 2710-2712, 2714, 2732, 2736, 2738. The Appeals Chamber is of the view that, even when considering the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks together, the record remains insufficient to affirm that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted and killed during these attacks.

[7692] Trial Judgement, para. 6208 (internal reference omitted). The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in considering "the magnitude of the crimes committed" as this was inherent in her convictions for genocide and extermination as a crime against humanity. The Appeals Chamber recalls that there is no minimum number of victims required for a conviction of genocide and that a particularly large number of victims can be an aggravating circumstance in relation to the sentence for extermination as a crime against humanity where the extent of the killings exceeds that required for extermination. See Ndahimana Appeal Judgement, para. 231; Ndindabahizi Appeal Judgement, para. 135. See also Nzabonimana Appeal Judgement, para. 465. Consequently, Nyiramasuhuko's position lacks merit in light of the Trial Chamber's conclusion that the killings exceeded the threshold required to establish extermination as a crime against humanity. See Trial Judgement, para. 6206.

her pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killings of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks.[7694] It also found her responsible as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for these killings, which the Trial Chamber stated it would consider in sentencing.[7695] This is consistent with the jurisprudence that when, for the same count and the same set of facts, the accused's responsibility is pleaded pursuant to both provisions and the accused could be found liable for both, the Trial Chamber should enter a conviction on the basis of Article 6(1) of the Statute alone and consider the superior position of the accused as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[7696] In the present case, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, finds no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko "used her influence over Interahamwe to commit crimes such as […] murder" and that this supported the conclusion that her "abuse of general authority" constituted an aggravating factor.[7697] In the view of the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber impermissibly double-counted an element of the crime as an aggravating factor.

3360. The Trial Chamber also convicted Nyiramasuhuko as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes committed by Interahamwe following her orders during the Night of Three Attacks and one of the First Half of June Attacks at the Butare Prefecture Office.[7698] The Appeals Chamber recalls that a superior position in itself does not constitute an aggravating factor but that it is the abuse of such a position which may be considered as an aggravating factor.[7699] Given that Nyiramasuhuko was found to have ordered rapes but was only convicted pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute – which does not require proof of ordering – Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that her "abuse of general authority" constituted an aggravating factor by relying, in part, on the finding that Nyiramasuhuko "used her influence over Interahamwe to commit crimes such as rape".[7700] For the same reasons, she fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber impermissibly double-counted an element of the offence as an aggravating factor.

3361. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to Nyiramasuhuko's abuse of her authority as an aggravating factor, therefore dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's submissions concerning the aggravating circumstances considered by the Trial Chamber in determining her sentence.

2. Mitigating Circumstances

3362. In discussing Nyiramasuhuko's mitigating circumstances, the Trial Chamber stated that it had "considered [her] background and individual circumstances".[7701] It noted her service as a government minister and "long service in the Ministry of Health" but considered that these were "of a very limited weight, given the gravity of the crimes committed by [her]".[7702]

3363. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred by failing to consider the following factors which she raised in mitigation at trial: (i) her age; (ii) the inhumane conditions of solitary confinement she faced as the only woman detained at the Tribunal's detention facility; and (iii) incidences of discrimination against her in prison, including physical violence.[7703]

3364. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of mitigating circumstances.[7704]

3365. The Appeals Chamber recalls that under Rule 86(C) of the Rules, the parties shall address matters of sentencing in their closing arguments. It was thus Nyiramasuhuko's prerogative to identify any mitigating circumstances she wished to have considered by the Trial Chamber and she cannot raise them for the first time on appeal.[7705] Nyiramasuhuko did not identify her age as a mitigating circumstance to be considered by the Trial Chamber in her closing brief and only referred to the fact that she was "around 60" in her closing arguments without indicating that it was a relevant mitigating factor to be considered in sentencing.[7706] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber Nyiramasuhuko further contends that "[t]he Trial Chamber erred in not taking into consideration the unreasonable delay of 14 years of detention on remand" she raised as a violation of her rights under Rule 20(4)(c) of the Rules at trial, which she argues "must be remedied, at least by a reduction of the sentence". See Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1306 (internal references omitted). See also AT. 15 April 2015 pp. 9-11. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko raised this contention as a relevant sentencing consideration at trial. However, as Nyiramasuhuko's arguments were dismissed, the Trial Chamber was not required to consider this contention as a mitigating circumstance. See Setako Appeal Judgement, para. 297.

This lady, who is around 60, is devoted to her country – has devoted her life to the cause of women."). The Appeals Chamber notes that Nyiramasuhuko did not make any submission in relation to sentencing in her closing brief.

finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in not considering this circumstance in mitigation and dismisses Nyiramasuhuko's contention in this respect.

3366. Likewise, while Nyiramasuhuko referred to her situation in detention "as a condition of isolation" in her oral closing arguments, she does not demonstrate that it was erroneous for the Trial Chamber not to have considered it as a mitigating factor.[7707] Nyiramasuhuko's vague statement does not clearly suggest that the nature of her detention as the only woman within the Tribunal's detention facility was inhumane or violated human rights standards – arguments only made clear on appeal – nor does it demonstrate that such alleged violations had been established by the preponderance of the evidence.[7708] Nyiramasuhuko similarly did not raise the alleged instances of discrimination and physical violence she encountered while in detention as mitigating factors in her closing submissions.[7709] Consequently, Nyiramasuhuko does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in not considering her conditions of detention and the alleged incidences of discrimination against her in prison in determining her sentence.

3367. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider mitigating circumstances in determining her sentence.

3. Life Sentence

3368. Nyiramasuhuko argues that the Trial Chamber erred in sentencing her to imprisonment for the remainder of her life because the Tribunal has signed detention agreements with States that have no domestic provisions for conditional release, thereby potentially imposing upon her a life sentence without the possibility of reduction, which constitutes inhumane treatment.[7710]

[7708] The Appeals Chamber recalls that an accused bears the burden of establishing mitigating factors by a preponderance of the evidence. See, e.g., Karemera and Ngirumpatse Appeal Judgement, para. 694; Rukundo Appeal Judgement, para. 255; Muhimana Appeal Judgement, para. 231; Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 294. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it found that, as the only woman in the Tribunal's custody, Nyiramasuhuko's conditions of detention differed from those of the other detainees. However, it considered that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to substantiate her claim on appeal that the prejudice resulting from the prolongation of her detention on remand was greater than that suffered by her co-Accused. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber rejected Nyiramasuhuko's contention that she was adversely affected by the undue delay in the present proceedings due to her status as the only female detainee in the Tribunal's custody. See also supra, para. 389.

3369. The Prosecution responds that Nyiramasuhuko's assertion "that her life sentence may be inhumane treatment is totally without merit and must fail."[7711]

3370. Nyiramasuhuko's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in sentencing her to life imprisonment because she may be transferred to a State that does not contain domestic legal provisions permitting conditional release is speculative.[7712] In addition, the selection of the State in which Nyiramasuhuko will serve her sentence was not within the discretion of the Trial Chamber when it rendered the Trial Judgement.[7713] As trial chambers are vested with the discretion to sentence convicted persons to imprisonment for the remainder of their lives under Rule 101(A) of the Rules, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nyiramasuhuko has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in this respect.

4. Conclusion

3371. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to Nyiramasuhuko's abuse of her authority as an aggravating factor, finds that Nyiramasuhuko has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the relevant aggravating and mitigating circumstances or in imposing a sentence of life imprisonment. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ground 32 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal.

B. Ntahobali's Sentencing Appeal (Ground 5)

3372. The Trial Chamber sentenced Ntahobali to a single term of life imprisonment for his convictions for genocide, extermination, rape, and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons and outrages upon personal dignity as serious violations of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[7714]

3373. Ntahobali submits that his sentence should be reduced because the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing the gravity of the offences; (ii) its consideration of certain aggravating circumstances; (iii) failing to consider or accord sufficient weight to certain mitigating circumstances; (iv) imposing a higher sentence than that imposed in similar cases; and (v) sentencing him to life imprisonment in violation of his fundamental human rights.[7715]

1. Gravity of the Offences

3374. The Trial Chamber determined that the rapes and killings of Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and at the Butare Prefecture Office, the killings of Tutsis at the IRST, the killing of the Rwamukwaya family, and the killing of Tutsis abducted from the EER were crimes "of the utmost gravity".[7716] It noted that these crimes were not isolated instances, but occurred in various parts of Butare Prefecture over a significant period of time.[7717] It further considered "the seriousness and atrocity of crimes repetitively perpetrated at the Butare préfecture office, where hundreds of Tutsis were abducted, raped and killed."[7718]

3375. Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the crimes as having "occurred in various parts of Butare préfecture" because he was "convicted only of crimes committed in Butare town itself".[7719] He further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account "rapes" perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in assessing the gravity of the offences because he was found guilty of having perpetrated only one rape at this location.[7720]

3376. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber wrongly considered more than one rape at the roadblock was raised for the first time in his appeal brief and should be summarily dismissed.[7721] It also discounts as misleading Ntahobali's remaining argument on the basis that the Butare Prefecture includes Butare Town and further contends that the Trial Chamber determined that Tutsis were abducted and then killed in various locations.[7722]

3377. Ntahobali replies that the interests of justice require that his argument concerning the rapes at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock be considered.[7723]

3378. The Appeals Chamber fails to see the relevance of Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he committed crimes "in various parts" of Butare Prefecture while these crimes only occurred in Butare Town, since Ntahobali was convicted of crimes that occurred at several sites within Butare Prefecture.

3379. As to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the "rapes" perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, Ntahobali does not dispute that he failed to raise this alleged error in his notice of appeal.

3380. The Appeals Chamber recalls that an application to vary the grounds of appeal must be done by way of a motion.[7724] It further recalls that it has prevented Nteziryayo from raising specific challenges in relation to the Trial Chamber's determination of his sentence due to the failure to properly raise them in his notice of appeal as they concerned a distinct legal error.[7725] The Appeals Chamber considers that the current situation is materially similar in that Ntahobali's contention in his appeal brief impermissibly expands the scope of his appeal and the Prosecution objects on this basis. In this context, and given that all the co-Appellants shall be treated equally,[7726] the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius and Judge Liu dissenting, considers that the interests of justice do not require consideration of this argument.[7727]

3381. For these reasons, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius and Judge Liu dissenting, dismisses Ntahobali's challenges pertaining to the determination of the gravity of his offences.

2. Aggravating Circumstances

3382. The Trial Chamber considered as aggravating circumstances in determining Ntahobali's sentence: (i) the vast number of victims, far in excess of the threshold for extermination as a crime against humanity; (ii) the premeditated nature of the atrocities perpetrated by Ntahobali at the

Butare Prefecture Office, which it determined was shown by the repetitive nature of the attacks; and (iii) Ntahobali's superior responsibility in relation to the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock, the Butare Prefecture Office, and the EER.[7728]

3383. Ntahobali argues that the Trial Chamber engaged in impermissible double-counting by considering the number of victims and the repetitive nature of the crimes perpetrated at the prefectoral office in determining the gravity of the offences and the aggravating circumstances.[7729] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering as an aggravating circumstance the premeditated nature of the crimes at the prefectoral office because, in his view, premeditation was not proven beyond a reasonable doubt.[7730] Ntahobali further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the number of victims as being far in excess of the threshold for extermination as a crime against humanity because an element of a crime cannot be considered as an aggravating circumstance.[7731]

3384. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali's argument concerning double-counting the number of victims "is undeveloped and must be summarily dismissed."[7732] It submits that premeditation does not depend on the length of time the crimes persisted but rather on whether Ntahobali planned these acts in advance, a fact which the Trial Chamber found established.[7733] The Prosecution also argues that the Trial Chamber's finding that the number of victims exceeds the threshold for extermination as a crime against humanity is in accordance with the jurisprudence and was proven beyond reasonable doubt based on the evidence.[7734]

3385. With regard to Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber improperly considered the number of victims in the gravity of the offences and again as an aggravating factor, the Appeals Chamber reiterates that factors taken into consideration as aspects of the gravity of a crime cannot additionally be taken into account as separate aggravating circumstances.[7735] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber referred to the fact that "hundreds of Tutsis were abducted, raped and killed" at the Butare Prefecture Office in its consideration of the gravity of the offences.[7736]

However, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber employed this language to punctuate "the seriousness and atrocity of crimes repetitively perpetrated" at the prefectoral office and did not consider the number of victims in determining the gravity of the offences.[7737]

3386. Indeed, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in finding that "the vast number of victims" during the course of all attacks and massacres constituted an aggravating factor, the Trial Chamber did not limit its finding to the number of victims at the prefectoral office alone.[7738] The Appeals Chamber considers that it was the overall number of victims of Ntahobali's crimes that was assessed as an aggravating circumstance and that, as such, it was not the same factor that was taken into account when assessing the gravity of the offence.[7739] Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in double-counting the number of victims is therefore ill-founded.

3387. Ntahobali's contention that the Trial Chamber engaged in double-counting with respect to the repetitive nature of the crimes at the prefectoral office similarly lacks merit. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber did not consider this as an aggravating circumstance in and of itself, but rather relied on this factor as support for its finding that Ntahobali's actions at the prefectoral office were premeditated.[7740]

3388. As to Ntahobali's argument that premeditation had not been established beyond reasonable doubt, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber concluded that the attacks at the prefectoral office were "methodical"[7741] and that, between mid-May and mid-June 1994, Ntahobali with others came to the prefectoral office on various occasions to abduct Tutsis, who were then physically assaulted, raped, and killed.[7742] In these circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that the repetitive attacks were premeditated and dismisses his argument in this respect.

3389. The Appeals Chamber recalls that where an aggravating factor for the purposes of sentencing is at the same time an element of the offence, it cannot also constitute an aggravating factor for the purposes of sentencing.[7743] It also reiterates that a particularly large number of victims can be an aggravating circumstance in relation to the sentence for extermination as a crime against humanity where the extent of the killings exceeds that required for extermination.[7744] In the present case, the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali, inter alia, ordered the killing of about 200 Tutsis at the IRST.[7745] The Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, has also affirmed Ntahobali's convictions for ordering the killing of Tutsis abducted and killed during the Mid-May Attack.[7746] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali does not show that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the number of victims as an aggravating circumstance in light of its finding that the number of victims exceeded that required for extermination.[7747]

3390. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's arguments concerning the aggravating circumstances considered by the Trial Chamber in determining his sentence.

3. Mitigating Circumstances

3391. The Trial Chamber determined that four mitigating circumstances weighed in Ntahobali's favour.[7748] It accorded the following three mitigating circumstances "very limited weight": (i) his young age during the events; (ii) the fact that he is the father of three young children; and (iii) his good character before the events.[7749] The Trial Chamber gave greater weight to the fact that Ntahobali voluntarily surrendered himself to the Tribunal.[7750] However, the Trial Chamber considered that, despite the weight accorded to these mitigating circumstances, "they pale[d] in comparison to the sheer gravity of Ntahobali's crimes, even before aggravating circumstances [were] taken into account."[7751]

Ntahobali argues that a reasonable trier of fact would not have imposed a sentence of life imprisonment because the consequences of imposing such a sentence on a detainee who is only 27 years old far outweigh those borne by a detainee receiving such a sentence at the age of 50 or 60. He further contends that his age, his family circumstances, and his good conduct indicate that he can be rehabilitated into society and warrant the possibility of being released.

the Trial Chamber abused its discretion by not considering that he "did not hold a position of authority in Rwanda and was not one of the architects of the genocide".[7753]

3393. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber did not err in weighing Ntahobali's mitigating circumstances.[7754]

3394. The Appeals Chamber recalls that, while a trial chamber has the obligation to consider any mitigating circumstances when determining the appropriate sentence, it enjoys a considerable degree of discretion in determining what constitutes a mitigating circumstance and the weight, if any, to be accorded to it.[7755] Accordingly, the existence of mitigating circumstances does not automatically imply a reduction of sentence or preclude the imposition of life imprisonment where the gravity of the offence so requires.[7756]

3395. The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber expressly took into account Ntahobali's young age during the events, the fact that he was the father of three children, and his good character before the events.[7757] In light of a trial chamber's discretion in determining the weight, if any, to be accorded to mitigating circumstances, the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to give sufficient weight to these mitigating circumstances and dismisses his arguments in this respect.

3396. The Appeals Chamber further observes that Ntahobali argues for the first time on appeal that the fact that he did not hold any position of de jure authority in Rwanda warranted mitigation.[7758] Recalling that it is the accused's prerogative to identify any mitigating circumstances he wished to have considered by the Trial Chamber and cannot raise them for the first time on appeal,[7759] the Appeals Chamber considers that Ntahobali has waived his right to have this circumstance considered on appeal.

4. Comparability of Sentences

3398. Ntahobali argues that his sentence is excessive because it is disproportionate to those rendered in similar cases concerning the same offences.[7760] In support of his argument, Ntahobali refers to the cases of Yussuf Munyakazi, Obed Ruzindana, and Gérard Ntakirutimana in which the accused received sentences of 25 years of imprisonment.[7761]

3399. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error or abused its discretion in determining his sentence.[7762]

3400. The Appeals Chamber recalls that comparison between cases is of limited assistance in challenging a sentence given the broad discretion afforded to trial chambers in determining the appropriate sentence on account of their obligation to tailor the penalties to fit the individual circumstances of the convicted person and to reflect the gravity of the crimes.[7763] As repeatedly held, any given case may contain a multitude of variables, ranging from the number and type of crimes committed to the personal circumstances of the individual,[7764] and often the differences are more significant than the similarities, and the mitigating and aggravating factors dictate different results for every individual.[7765] Aside from referring to cases in which lesser sentences were imposed and which he contends are similar to his, Ntahobali fails to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in imposing a sentence of life imprisonment in light of the sentences imposed on other convicted persons he has identified.

3401. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contention in this respect.

5. Life Sentence

3402. Ntahobali submits that, while the Statute of the International Residual Mechanism for Criminal Tribunals ("Residual Mechanism Statute" and "Residual Mechanism", respectively) provides for the possibility of pardon or commutation of sentence, the realisation of such possibility depends on the law of the State where the sentence is being served.[7766] He argues that, given that certain States in which persons convicted by the Tribunal may serve their sentences do not provide for the possibility of parole,[7767] there is a risk that he may be subjected to serving a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole in violation of, inter alia, Article 7 of the ICCPR and other instruments prohibiting cruel, inhumane or degrading treatment or punishment.[7768] Ntahobali further contends that the "Appeals Chamber should take the opportunity to state unequivocally that [a life] sentence violates [his] fundamental rights […] and that the absence of a formal provision in the [Residual Mechanism] Statute enabling mandatory review of sentences after a mandatory period of service of a life sentence violates those rights."[7769] He adds that persons sentenced by the ICTY and ICTR should be treated equally and that, while he may have no prospect of conditional release if his sentence is affirmed, persons convicted by the ICTY generally serve their sentences in States which recognise the principle of conditional release in the case of life sentences.[7770]

3403. The Prosecution responds that Ntahobali does not demonstrate any error of law or fact committed by the Trial Chamber and that his allegations are based on material not on the record and mere assertions unsupported by any evidence.[7771] It submits that Article 7 of the ICCPR does not list life imprisonment as a degrading and inhumane treatment.[7772]

3405. The Appeals Chamber further dismisses Ntahobali's contention that the absence in the Residual Mechanism Statute of a mandatory review of his life sentence after a fixed period would violate his fundamental rights. The Appeals Chamber observes that Ntahobali will retain the possibility to directly petition the President of the Residual Mechanism for pardon, commutation of sentence, or early release.[7775]

3406. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ntahobali's contentions concerning the imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment.

6. Conclusion

3407. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius and Judge Liu dissenting with respect to the gravity of the offences, finds that Ntahobali has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's determination of his sentence and, accordingly, dismisses the remainder of Ground 5 of his appeal.

C. Nsabimana's Sentencing Appeal (Grounds 15 and 16)

3408. The Trial Chamber sentenced Nsabimana to a single term of 25 years of imprisonment for his convictions for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental-well being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[7776]

3409. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing the aggravating circumstances; (ii) failing to consider or accord sufficient weight to certain mitigating circumstances; and (iii) imposing a sentence manifestly disproportionate to the form and degree of his participation in the crimes.[7777] He requests that the Appeals Chamber "revise the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber to faithfully reflect the particular circumstances of this case."[7778]

1. Aggravating Circumstances

3410. The Trial Chamber found that the vulnerability of the victims at the Butare Prefecture Office constituted an aggravating circumstance when imposing Nsabimana's sentence.[7779] It noted that other potentially aggravating factors had not been proven.[7780]

3411. Nsabimana argues that the Trial Chamber engaged in impermissible double-counting because it considered the vulnerability of the victims both when assessing the gravity of the offences and as an aggravating circumstance.[7781] He submits that the Trial Chamber also impermissibly considered his participation in the crimes through omission as an aggravating circumstance, as this was also an element of the form of aiding and abetting for which he was convicted.[7782]

3412. The Prosecution responds that Nsabimana does not demonstrate any discernible error in the Trial Chamber's determination that the vulnerability of the refugees at the prefectoral office constitutes an aggravating circumstance.[7783]

Nsabimana also submits that the Trial Chamber's "acknowledgement that there was no premeditation" on his part "amounts to confirming that he could not have been aware of the violent acts committed at the [Butare Prefecture Office] because premeditation presupposes preparation prior to the commission of the offence." See Nsabimana Appeal Brief, para. 508.

3413. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber relied on the vulnerability of the victims in assessing the gravity of the crimes[7784] and the aggravating circumstances.[7785] By doing so, the Trial Chamber engaged in impermissible double-counting as factors taken into consideration as aspects of the gravity of a crime cannot be additionally taken into account as separate aggravating circumstances and vice versa.[7786] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the same factor in assessing the gravity of the offences and as a separate aggravating circumstance and will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

3414. Nsabimana's remaining argument that the Trial Chamber impermissibly considered his indirect participation in crimes committed at the prefectoral office as an aggravating factor as this also constituted an element of aiding and abetting through omission is without merit. As indicated above, the Trial Chamber only considered the vulnerability of the victims as an aggravating factor and, in fact, considered that his indirect participation in crimes through omission warranted "substantial mitigation."[7787]

2. Mitigating Circumstances

3415. The Trial Chamber considered Nsabimana's indirect participation in the crimes at the prefectoral office and the fact that he eventually discharged his legal duty in June 1994 to protect the refugees there as mitigating factors.[7788] It considered as further mitigating circumstances his: (i) humanitarian actions in helping individuals and groups find refuge; (ii) assistance in evacuating orphans, including approximately 600 children from the Groupe scolaire; and (iii) remorsefulness and good behaviour in detention as further mitigating circumstances.[7789]

[7784] See Trial Judgement, paras. 6229 (noting the "particularly vulnerable" refugees at the Butare Prefecture Office), 6230 ("the magnitude of human devastation could only have occurred because he failed to discharge his legal duty. Nsabimana's position as préfet imposed upon him a duty to act to protect those vulnerable people within his realm. His omission in this regard at the Butare prefecture office, despite his knowledge that these acts were occurring around him, was central to the crimes that resulted.").

[7785] See Trial Judgement, para. 6231 ("The victims of the attacks at the Butare prefecture office were particularly vulnerable. The Chamber considers this as an aggravating circumstance.").

[7786] See Gatete Appeal Judgement, para. 275; Milošević Appeal Judgement, para. 306; Semanza Appeal Judgement, para. 338. See also supra, para. 3385.

[7787] See Trial Judgement, para. 6232. To the extent that, through his reference to paragraph 6230 of the Trial Judgement which relates to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the gravity of the offences, Nsabimana intended to argue that the Trial Chamber impermissibly double-counted his participation in the crimes through omission both in assessing the gravity of the offences and as an element of his form of responsibility, the Appeals Chamber recalls that the determination of the gravity of the offences requires a consideration of the particular circumstances of the case as well as the form and degree of the participation of the convicted person in the crime. See Kanyarukiga Appeal Judgement, para. 281; Rukundo Appeal Judgement, para. 243. The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no error in the Trial Chamber's consideration of the nature of Nsabimana's contribution to the crimes at the prefectoral office when assessing the gravity of his offences.

3416. Nsabimana submits that the Trial Chamber failed to consider certain mitigating circumstances such as his inexperience for his appointment as prefect, the length of his trial, and his humanitarian actions in providing blankets and food to refugees.[7790] He also argues that the Trial Chamber failed to accord sufficient weight to the factors it considered which, in his view, would have led to a significant reduction of the sentence imposed.[7791]

3417. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly assessed the mitigating circumstances and that Nsabimana fails to identify any error in the Trial Chamber's exercise of its discretion when assessing them.[7792]

3419. Turning to Nsabimana's remaining contentions that the Trial Chamber failed to give sufficient weight to the mitigating factors it did identify, the Appeals Chamber recalls that mere assertions that the Trial Chamber failed to give sufficient weight to certain evidence, or that it should have interpreted evidence in a particular manner, are liable to be summarily dismissed.[7795] The Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber explicitly stated that Nsabimana's indirect participation "warrants substantial mitigation", listed concrete examples of individuals, families, and groups he aided, and expressly considered his words of remorse as well as an attestation of his good conduct in detention.[7796] Nsabimana does not demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment.

[7793] See Nsabimana Closing Brief, paras. 1996-2019; Closing Arguments, T. 27 April 2009 p. 23. In this respect, the Appeals Chamber considers that Nsabimana's general statement that he "provided better protection for the lives of some Rwandan Tutsis and Hutus alike through food, drugs etc…" in paragraph 2016 of his closing brief is not sufficiently detailed to identify mitigating circumstances and fails to demonstrate their existence by a preponderance of the evidence. See, e.g., Karemera and Ngirumpatse Appeal Judgement, para. 694; Rukundo Appeal Judgement, para. 255; Muhimana Appeal Judgement, para. 231; Kajelijeli Appeal Judgement, para. 294.

3420. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nsabimana's contentions related to the Trial Chamber's consideration of the mitigating circumstances relevant to the determination of his sentence.

3. Form and Degree of Participation in the Crimes

3421. In determining the gravity of his offences, the Trial Chamber noted that it had not found that "Nsabimana was a direct perpetrator in any massacre or killing perpetrated in Butare préfecture or that he ordered or was in any other way directly associated with any given attack."[7797] The Trial Chamber, however, considered that "the magnitude of human devastation could only have occurred because he failed to discharge his legal duty" and that "[h]is omission in this regard at the Butare préfecture office […] was central to the crimes that resulted."[7798]

3422. Nsabimana submits that the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber is excessive and manifestly disproportionate given the indirect mode of participation by omission of which he was convicted and the absence of premeditation and lack of direct collaboration.[7799] He argues that secondary or indirect forms of responsibility have generally resulted in lower sentences and that he should have received a sentence of less than 15 years.[7800]

3423. The Prosecution responds that Nsabimana fails to show that the Trial Chamber committed an error in exercising its discretion or in following the applicable law in determinating his sentence.[7801]

3424. The Appeals Chamber considers that Nsabimana's participation in the killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office constituted his culpable conduct and that the fact that he was not found to have acted with premeditation or directly collaborated with the principal perpetrators or those who ordered the crimes does not reduce that culpability. It is correct, however, that aiding and abetting is a form of responsibility that has generally warranted lower sentences than forms of direct participation.[7802] In the specific circumstances of this case and in light of the form and degree of participation of Nsabimana in the crimes committed, the Appeals Chamber considers that the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber is excessive. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in exercising its discretion and will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

4. Conclusion

3425. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the vulnerability of the victims in assessing the gravity of the offences and as a separate aggravating factor. The Appeals Chamber further finds that, in light of the form and degree of participation of Nsabimana in the crimes committed, the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber is excessive and that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in exercising its discretion in this regard. The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact of these errors, if any, in Section XII below. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Grounds 15 and 16 of Nsabimana's appeal.

D. Nteziryayo's Sentencing Appeal (Grounds 10 and 11)

3426. The Trial Chamber sentenced Nteziryayo to a single term of 30 years of imprisonment for his convictions for direct and public incitement to commit genocide.[7803]

3427. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing the gravity of the offences; (ii) its consideration of certain aggravating factors; (iii) failing to consider or accord sufficient weight to certain mitigating factors; (iv) failing to impose a sentence proportionate to his criminal conduct; and (v) failing to impose a sentence similar to those imposed in comparable cases.[7804] Nteziryayo requests that his sentence be reduced to time served.[7805]

1. Gravity of the Offences

3428. When considering the gravity of Nteziryayo's offences, the Trial Chamber recalled that he "incited the population to kill Tutsis at meetings."[7806] It further noted, however, that Nteziryayo "was not a direct perpetrator in any massacre or killing perpetrated in Butare préfecture."[7807] The Trial Chamber then stated the following:

> The Chamber has determined that Nteziryayo had a leadership role in the civil defence programme in Butare préfecture, and that he was later sworn in as préfet of Butare, on 17 June 1994. As such, he exerted considerable authority and power in Butare préfecture at this time. During this period, soldiers and civilian militiamen participated in a widespread and systematic campaign of slaughter and targeted Tutsi civilians, including those who were particularly vulnerable, as well as Hutu moderates.[7808]

3429. Nteziryayo contends that the Trial Chamber erred in considering his role in the civil defence programme as well as crimes committed by "civilian militiamen" in determining the gravity of the offences as it elsewhere found that he could not be held criminally responsible in relation to his involvement in the civil defence programme and acquitted him of crimes committed by its members.[7809]

3430. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber found it established beyond reasonable doubt that Nteziryayo had a leadership role in the civil defence programme in Butare Prefecture, even though it was not satisfied that the only reasonable inference was that Nteziryayo was responsible for the attacks by civil defence forces.[7810]

3431. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the determination of the gravity of the offence requires a consideration of the particular circumstances of the case, as well as the form and degree of the participation of the convicted person in the crime.[7811] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's consideration of Nteziryayo's leadership role in the civilian defence programme when assessing the gravity of his offences constitutes a discernible error as the Trial Chamber had previously found that Nteziryayo could not be held responsible for his role in the civil defence programme and acquitted him for the crimes committed by its members.[7812] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's unreferenced statement that "soldiers and civilian militiamen participated in a widespread and systematic campaign of slaughter and targeted Tutsi civilians, including those who were particularly vulnerable, as well as Hutu moderates"[7813] is insufficiently linked to the crime for which Nteziryayo was convicted – direct and public incitement to commit genocide – and, consequently, irrelevant to the consideration of its gravity.

3432. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account Nteziryayo's role in the civil defence programme in Butare Prefecture in determining the gravity of his offences and will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

2. Aggravating Circumstances

3433. When assessing Nteziryayo's aggravating circumstances, the Trial Chamber stated the following:

> In aggravation, the Chamber has considered Nteziryayo's role as leader of the civil defence programme and his position as préfet of Butare préfecture. Given his high profile position, Nteziryayo's active incitement and encouragement of the public to commit genocide demonstrates the abuse of his position. This constitutes an aggravating factor.[7814]

3434. In addition to arguing that he was not found to have committed crimes in relation to his participation in the civil defence programme, Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber's findings as to his role and responsibility in the civil defence programme were vague, preventing the Trial

Chamber from considering it "in aggravation".[7815] He contends that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of the evidence concerning his participation in the civil defence programme.[7816]

3435. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber correctly found that Nteziryayo had a high profile position based on his role in the civil defence programme and position as Butare Prefect and reasonably concluded that his abuse of his position constituted an aggravating factor.[7817]

3436. The Appeals Chamber recalls that Nteziryayo's conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide is based on conduct that he engaged in his official capacity as prefect of Butare.[7818] The Appeals Chamber considers that this finding alone reasonably supports the Trial Chamber's determination that his abuse of his authority constituted an aggravating factor.

3437. Consequently, Nteziryayo's challenges about the ambiguity of the Trial Chamber's findings as to his role in the civil defence programme as well as its alleged erroneous assessment of the evidence relating to it, if substantiated, could not invalidate the sentence or lead to a miscarriage of justice. As a result, the Appeals Chamber dismisses these arguments without further consideration.

3. Mitigating Circumstances

3438. In discussing Nteziryayo's mitigating factors, the Trial Chamber stated:

> [The Chamber] has taken into account [Nteziryayo's] selective assistance to some Tutsis in Butare préfecture during this period, including Egide Gatera and his wife Rose Umulisa, who he welcomed into his house and helped evacuate to Burundi, as well as, among others, six seminarians of Mbazi, in cooperation with Father Vieckoslav. The Chamber has assessed his efforts to facilitate the evacuation of orphans on 18 June 1994 and 3 July 1994 respectively. It is mindful of Nteziryayo's endeavours in relation to the protection of Bishop Gahamanyi, a Tutsi, and other priests, Tutsi nuns and monks at the Karubanda minor seminary, and religious personalities in Save, including the Tutsi parish of Father Calver Rahundi and the Mother Superior of the Benebikira sisters, where many Tutsi refugees had sought sanctuary. In the Chamber's view, this selective assistance carries only limited weight as a mitigating factor.[7819]

The Trial Chamber concluded, however, that "helping a handful of Tutsi civilians does not outweigh the gravity of the crimes for which Nteziryayo has been charged" and that "the gravity of the crimes and the aggravating factors negate[d] any mitigating factors."[7820]

3439. Nteziryayo submits that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider or explain why it did not accord any weight in mitigation to his deteriorating health as well as in failing to consider his: (i) assistance to the refugees in Rango; (ii) participation in an evacuation on 5 June 1994; (iii) role in the evacuation of 600 school children on 30 June 1994; (iv) assistance in evacuating a Rwandan woman who was the wife of an expatriate on 25 June 1994; and (v) implementation of security directives which saved thousands of lives.[7821]

3440. Nteziryayo further contends that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his assistance was selective and that he helped only a handful of Tutsis.[7822] He argues that the Trial Chamber failed to consider the entire scale of his assistance, which shows a consistent pattern of conduct aimed at indiscriminately saving hundreds if not thousands of civilians.[7823]

3441. The Prosecution responds that Nteziryayo failed to demonstrate any discernible error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the mitigating circumstances.[7824] It submits that Nteziryayo's alleged deteriorating health was considered and that Nteziryayo's submissions are insufficient to establish that it should have been considered as a mitigating factor.[7825] The Prosecution also argues that Nteziryayo did not make submissions at trial regarding his alleged assistance to the Rango refugees, his involvement in the evacuation of a Rwandan woman on 25 June 1994, and his participation in the evacuation of 600 school children on 30 June 1994, which precludes him from raising them for the first time on appeal.[7826]

3442. The Appeals Chamber finds no merit in Nteziryayo's contention that the Trial Chamber failed to consider his health as a mitigating circumstance. The Trial Chamber expressly summarised Nteziryayo's submission that his health problems should be considered in mitigation in the Trial Judgement.[7827] Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in not giving weight to this argument in light of the vague and unsupported submissions he made at trial.[7828]

Recently Alphonse Nteziryayo has been experiencing serious health problems which continue to dog him. Therefore, the judgement of 24th February 2003 in the Prosecutor versus Elizaphan, […] in paragraph 898, agreed to mitigating factors because the Accused was ill. Therefore, we request the Trial Chamber to take into account mitigating circumstances in respect of the Accused Alphonse Nteziryayo.").

3443. The Appeals Chamber also observes that, as noted by the Prosecution, Nteziryayo failed to identify as mitigating circumstances in his closing brief or oral closing arguments his assistance to the Rango refugees, his role in evacuating 600 school children on 30 June 1994, and his assistance in the evacuation of a Rwandan woman who was the wife of an expatriate on 25 June 1994.[7829] Recalling that it is the accused's prerogative to identify any mitigating circumstances he wished to have considered by the Trial Chamber and cannot raise them for the first time on appeal,[7830] the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in not considering whether these circumstances warranted mitigation and considers that Nteziryayo has waived his right to have them considered on appeal.

3444. The Appeals Chamber notes that Nteziryayo did identify, albeit vaguely, the 5 June 1994 evacuation from the Groupe scolaire and that he implemented security directives that resulted in the saving of thousands of lives as mitigating factors in his oral closing arguments.[7831] Although the Trial Chamber did not expressly discuss these factors, the Trial Judgement reflects that they were considered by the Trial Chamber.[7832] Moreover, the Appeals Chamber observes that the Trial Chamber found that Nteziryayo "attempted to prevent the evacuation from Butare of about 300 orphans and their adult supervisors and selected about 30 individuals whom they believed to be Tutsi adults and forced them to remain in Rwanda."[7833] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds no error in the Trial Chamber's decision not to consider the 5 June 1994 evacuation in mitigation of Nteziryayo's sentence. Given that an accused bears the burden of establishing mitigating factors by a preponderance of the evidence,[7834] the Appeals Chamber is also not persuaded that, although Nteziryayo's counsel briefly indicated that evidence of Nteziryayo's assistance could be found in his testimony,[7835] the Trial Chamber was required to search for and expressly assess whether Nteziryayo met his burden in establishing that security directives he issued contributed to saving the lives of thousands given the vague and ambiguous nature of his submissions.[7836]

[7829] See Nteziryayo Closing Arguments, T. 28 April 2009 pp. 27-31. As for the alleged assistance to the Rango refugees, the Appeals Chamber observes that, in his closing arguments, Nteziryayo merely pointed to Expert Witness Des Forges's testimony that the refugees who had been sent to Rango were fed and survived, without pointing, as he does now for the first time on appeal, to the fact that he visited the refugees and ensured their safety. See idem.

This enabled thousands of lives to be saved, Mr. President.").

3445. The Appeals Chamber also considers that Nteziryayo does not show that the Trial Chamber committed any discernible error in finding that this assistance was selective and that he helped a limited number of Tutsis.

3446. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that Nteziryayo has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider or according sufficient weight to certain mitigating circumstances.

4. Proportionality of Sentence

3447. Nteziryayo submits that a sentence of 30 years of imprisonment is disproportionate to the offences of which he was convicted.[7837] He emphasises the Trial Chamber's findings that there was "limited evidence of any specific acts committed by members of the population subsequent to Nteziryayo's speeches" and "insufficient evidence to establish that Nteziryayo's words at [Muyaga and Kibayi Communes] meetings substantially contributed to any subsequent crime".[7838] Nteziryayo argues that his sentence is excessive and disproportionate "where no harm, in terms of consequential crime, is established".[7839]

3448. The Prosecution responds that the offence of direct and public incitement to commit genocide, of which Nteziryayo was convicted, is a crime warranting a serious punishment and that the sentence imposed on Nteziryayo was proportionate to the degree of his responsibility.[7840]

3449. The Appeals Chamber observes that the gravity of the crime of direct and public incitement to commit genocide derives from that of the crime of genocide, a crime of the most serious gravity.[7841] The Trial Chamber found that Nteziryayo committed direct and public incitement to commit genocide on three separate occasions.[7842] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber considers that, regardless of whether or not deaths resulted from his statements, the imposition of a sentence of 30 years of imprisonment was not beyond the Trial Chamber's sentencing discretion.

3450. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nteziryayo's contention that the Trial Chamber imposed a sentence disproportionate to his criminal conduct.

5. Comparability of Sentences

3451. Nteziryayo points to parallels between his case and those of Muvunyi, Simon Bikindi ("Bikindi"), Aloys Simba, and Nsabimana[7843] and argues that his criminal conduct "was no more serious than in each of the four cases" and that the higher sentence imposed on him by the Trial Chamber "was wholly unjust in all the circumstances."[7844] In particular, with respect to Nsabimana, Nteziryayo emphasises that his tenure as prefect of Butare was much shorter and that Nsabimana was convicted of more crimes.[7845]

3452. The Prosecution responds that comparing sentences imposed in other cases is not a proper avenue for challenging the exercise of the Trial Chamber's discretion on sentencing and points to factors that distinguish Nteziryayo's case from the cases he cites.[7846]

3453. The Appeals Chamber reiterates that comparison between cases is of limited assistance in challenging a sentence given the discretion afforded to trial chambers in determining the appropriate sentence on account of their obligation to tailor the penalties to fit the individual circumstances of the convicted person and to reflect the gravity of the crimes.[7847] Aside from referring to cases before the Tribunal in which lesser sentences were imposed and which Nteziryayo contends are similar to his, Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in imposing a sentence of 30 years of imprisonment in light of the sentences imposed on the other convicted persons he has identified.

3454. With respect to the sentence imposed on Nsabimana, while Nteziryayo highlights the respective length of his and Nsabimana's tenures as prefects of Butare and the number of counts upon which the Trial Chamber entered convictions, his submissions ignore the difference in his and Nsabimana's criminal conduct as well as the aggravating and the mitigating factors considered by the Trial Chamber.[7848] The Appeals Chamber therefore finds that Nteziryayo does not demonstrate that the sentence imposed on him by the Trial Chamber was out of reasonable proportion in comparison to that imposed on Nsabimana.

3455. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Nteziryayo's arguments in this respect.

6. Conclusion

3456. The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering Nteziryayo's role in the civil defence programme and the unspecified conclusion that "soldiers and civilian militiamen participated in a widespread and systematic campaign of slaughter and targeted Tutsi civilians, including those who were particularly vulnerable, as well as Hutu moderates" when assessing the gravity of his offences. It will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below. The Appeals Chamber nonetheless finds that Nteziryayo has failed to demonstrate any other error in the Trial Chamber's findings that may impact the determination of his sentence and dismisses the remainder of Grounds 10 and 11 of his appeal.

E. Kanyabashi's Sentencing Appeal (Ground 8)

3457. The Trial Chamber sentenced Kanyabashi to a single term of 35 years of imprisonment for his convictions for genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[7849]

3458. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing the gravity of the offences; (ii) double-counting the aggravating circumstances; (iii) failing to consider or accord sufficient weight to mitigating circumstances; and (iv) imposing a disproportionate sentence which the Appeals Chamber should substantially reduce.[7850] He requests that his sentence be substantially reduced.[7851]

1. Gravity of the Offences

3459. When assessing the gravity of Kanyabashi's offences, the Trial Chamber determined that his crimes were "of an obvious gravity resulting in a significant number of casualties in terms of death and injuries."[7852]

3460. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the killings that resulted from the May and June 1994 megaphone announcements that support his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide since the Trial Chamber found that the evidence was insufficient to establish that the megaphone announcements contributed to subsequent killings.[7853] He further contends that it was erroneous and illogical for the Trial Chamber to have considered the number of victims with respect to the Kabakobwa Hill attack in assessing the gravity of the offences as he was found to have failed to punish his culpable subordinates, an act that would have had no impact on the number of casualties.[7854]

3461. The Prosecution did not respond to these contentions.

3462. The Appeals Chamber finds that, contrary to Kanyabashi's contention, the Trial Chamber did not consider the killings that followed the megaphone announcements in order to determine the gravity of his offences. Rather, the Trial Chamber considered that "all [of Kanyabashi's] crimes are of an obvious gravity, resulting in a significant number of casualties in terms of death and injuries."[7855] The Appeals Chamber notes that the Trial Chamber's conclusions related to the casualties that occurred as a result of attacks on Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic alone supported the finding as it concerned the "significant number of casualties".[7856] The fact that the Trial Chamber only relied on these casualties in determining Kanyabashi's sentence is obvious as it only considered the number of victims resulting from Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic when determining that the number of victims constituted an aggravating circumstance.[7857] Consequently, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that the Trial Chamber considered the resulting killings in assessing the gravity of the offence as it related to his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Kanyabashi's challenge in this regard.

3463. With respect to Kanyabashi's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account the casualties resulting from the attack at Kabakobwa Hill, the Appeals Chamber finds that he does not demonstrate that his responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute as determined by the Trial Chamber would have prevented the Trial Chamber from considering this factor in determining the gravity of the offences in sentencing.[7858] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses his arguments in this respect.

2. Aggravating Circumstances

3464. The Trial Chamber considered Kanyabashi's abuse of authority in committing the crimes that occurred at Matyazo Clinic and the number of victims resulting from the killings at Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic as aggravating circumstances in determining his sentence.[7859]

3465. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on his abuse of authority with respect to the killings at Matyazo Clinic since an element of a crime cannot be also considered as an aggravating factor.[7860] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in double-counting the number of victims of the attacks on Kabakobwa Hill and at Matyazo Clinic when assessing the gravity of the offences and factors in aggravation.[7861]

3466. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed Kanyabashi's aggravating factors and that it did not err in considering his abuse of authority as an aggravating circumstance since it is not an element of superior responsibility.[7862] It also submits that Kanyabashi's sentence reflects his extensive criminal culpability and that, "although the Trial Chamber erred in double counting the number of victims, this error does not warrant a lower sentence."[7863]

3467. With respect to the Trial Chamber's consideration of Kanyabashi's abuse of authority as an aggravating factor, the Appeals Chamber observes that, while Kanyabashi was only convicted pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Trial Chamber, Judge Ramaroson dissenting, found that he ordered soldiers to open fire on the Tutsis at Matyazo Clinic, resulting in the deaths of many Tutsi refugees.[7864] As an abuse of authority is not an element of superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute, the Appeals Chamber finds that it was not improper for the Trial Chamber to consider Kanyabashi's abuse of authority through, for instance, ordering the killings as an aggravating circumstance.[7865]

3468. Turning to Kanyabashi's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in double-counting the number of the casualties of the attacks on Kabakobwa Hill and at Matyazo Clinic for the purpose of the gravity of the offences and as an aggravating factor, the Appeals Chamber recalls that factors taken into consideration as aspects of the gravity of a crime cannot additionally be taken into account as separate aggravating circumstances.[7866] Since the Trial Chamber clearly relied on the number of victims from the attacks at Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic when assessing the gravity of the offences,[7867] this same factor could not be taken into account as an aggravating circumstance.[7868]

In this regard, Kanyabashi's reliance on the Naletilić and Martinović Appeal Judgement is misplaced since Kanyabashi has been convicted only pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute despite his direct participation in the killing on Kabakobwa Hill.

[7868] Trial Judgement, para. 6254.

3469. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the number of casualties of the attacks on Kabakobwa Hill and at Matyazo Clinic both in assessing the gravity of the offences and as a separate aggravating circumstance. The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

3. Mitigating Circumstances

3470. The Trial Chamber took into account "Kanyabashi's purported good character and his 20 years of service as a bourgmestre" as well as his "efforts, on occasions, to stop the massacres from spreading and to assist the refugees" as mitigating circumstances in determining his sentence.[7869] However, it found that these mitigating circumstances were of limited weight given the gravity of Kanyabashi's crimes.[7870]

3471. Kanyabashi submits that the Trial Chamber "gravely underestimated the exculpatory evidence".[7871] He also argues that the Trial Chamber did not consider his assistance to a Tutsi woman called Rumiya,[7872] his 18 years of employment at the Butare University Hospital, and the undue delay of the proceedings which resulted in violation of his fair trial rights.[7873] He also contends that the Trial Chamber disregarded his advanced age and his good conduct in detention.[7874] Kanyabashi suggests that, since he was born in 1937, a sentence of 35 years in effect equals a sentence of imprisonment for life.[7875]

3472. The Prosecution responds that the Trial Chamber properly assessed the mitigating circumstances and that, in any case, their existence does not automatically imply a reduction of the sentence.[7876] It also submits that the length of the proceedings is not a factor that a trial chamber must consider as a mitigating circumstance.[7877]

3473. The Appeals Chamber finds that Kanyabashi's contention that the Trial Chamber "underestimated exculpatory evidence" lacks merit. When discussing potential mitigating factors,

3474. The Appeals Chamber also observes that Kanyabashi failed to identify, either in his closing brief or his closing arguments, his assistance to a Tutsi refugee called Rumiya, his previous employment at the Butare University Hospital, and the violation of his right to be tried without undue delay as mitigating circumstances before the Trial Chamber. Given that an accused cannot raise mitigating circumstances for the first time on appeal,[7879] the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber did not err in not considering whether these circumstances warranted mitigation and finds that Kanyabashi has waived his right to have them considered on appeal.

3476. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the age and state of health of an accused may be relevant factors in sentencing.[7883] While the Trial Judgement clearly reflects that the Trial Chamber was cognisant of Kanyabashi's age, the Appeals Chamber considers that its statement in the "Sentencing" section of the Trial Judgement suggests that it did not consider this as a possible mitigating circumstance. Likewise, the absence of any reference to Kanyabashi's contention concerning his good conduct in detention, of which Kanyabashi gave evidence through the presentation of a letter from the commander of the Tribunal's detention facility and of which the Trial Chamber took note,[7884] shows that the Trial Chamber also disregarded this factor.

3477. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider Kanyabashi's age and good conduct in detention in determining his individual circumstances relevant to sentencing. The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

4. Proportionality of Sentence

3478. Kanyabashi submits that his sentence is manifestly excessive in light of the fact that he was acquitted of a number of charges, that he did not personally participate in the killings at Kabakobwa Hill, and that no killings resulted from the megaphone announcements.[7885]

3479. The Prosecution responds that the lack of direct participation in the killings at Kabakobwa Hill does not detract from the seriousness of Kanyabashi's conviction under Article 6(3) of the Statute.[7886]

3480. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, has affirmed Kanyabashi's convictions pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide in relation to megaphone announcements he made in Butare Town in May and June 1994.[7887] However, the Appeals Chamber has reversed Kanyabashi's convictions for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a result of its findings that the Trial Chamber erred in finding Kanyabashi guilty of the killings of Tutsis committed by members of the Ngoma commune police at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994.[7888]

3481. In light of the fact that a majority of Kanyabashi's convictions have been overturned on appeal, the Appeals Chamber finds it unnecessary to rule on Kanyabashi's contentions as to whether his sentence is manifestly excessive but will consider these arguments when determining the impact of the Appeals Chamber's findings on his sentence in Section XII below.

[7884] See Kanyabashi Closing Arguments, T. 29 April 2009 pp. 38, 39. Specifically, Kanyabashi submitted a letter from the commander of the Tribunal's detention facility dated 17 February 2009 certifying his good conduct while in detention. See ibid., p. 38. While the Trial Chamber did not admit the letter, it took note of its contents. See ibid., p. 39.

5. Conclusion

3483. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that, in light of the fact that Kanyabashi's convictions for the killings of Tutsis committed by members of the Ngoma commune police at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994 have been overturned on appeal, the Trial Chamber's conclusion in its sentencing deliberations that his crimes were "of an obvious gravity resulting in a significant number of casualties in terms of death and injuries" and its reliance on the number of victims resulting from the killings at Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic as an aggravating circumstance are no longer supported.[7889] Likewise, the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Kanyabashi abused his authority in relation to the crimes that occurred at Matyazo Clinic also lacks support.[7890] The Appeals Chamber will consider the impact of this error, if any, in Section XII below.

3484. The Appeals Chamber also concludes that, in light of the fact that a majority of Kanyabashi's convictions have been overturned on appeal, the Appeals Chamber will consider Kanyabashi's contentions as to whether his sentence is manifestly excessive when determining the impact of its own findings on his sentence in Section XII below. The Appeals Chamber grants these parts of Ground 8 of Kanyabashi's appeal and dismisses his remaining challenges under this ground.

3485. The Appeals Chamber dismisses the remainder of Ground 8 of Kanyabashi's appeal.

F. Ndayambaje's Sentencing Appeal (Ground 21)

3486. The Trial Chamber sentenced Ndayambaje to a single term of life imprisonment for his convictions for genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II.[7891]

3487. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in: (i) assessing certain aggravating factors; (ii) failing to consider or accord sufficient weight to certain mitigating factors; (iii) imposing a sentence disproportionate to the degree of his participation in the crimes; (iv) failing to impose a sentence similar to those imposed in comparable cases; and (v) imposing a single sentence of life imprisonment.[7892] He requests that his sentence be reduced.[7893]

1. Aggravating Circumstances

3488. When discussing Ndayambaje's aggravating factors, the Trial Chamber recalled "that hundreds, if not thousands, of predominantly Tutsis who took refuge at Kabuye Hill and at Mugombwa Church perished following days of intensified attacks."[7894] The Trial Chamber further found that the number of victims "surpasse[d] the threshold for extermination" and considered this as an aggravating factor.[7895] Noting that "Ndayambaje was an influential, respected figure in Butare" who committed crimes before and during his tenure as bourgmestre of Muganza Commune in 1994, the Trial Chamber concluded that he "used his status and influence to further these grave crimes" and considered this abuse of authority as an aggravating factor.[7896] Finally, the Trial Chamber was of the view that "the premeditated nature" of the attacks on Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill, as evidenced by their prolonged and repetitive nature, also constituted an aggravating factor.[7897]

3489. Ndayambaje argues that the Trial Chamber impermissibly considered the number of victims, abuse of authority, and premeditation as aggravating factors as these were also elements of the offences for which he was convicted.[7898] He also contends that the Trial Chamber erroneously

"confused the notions of 'influence' and 'authority'" in finding that he "used his status and influence to further these grave crimes" and considering "this abuse of authority as an aggravating factor".[7899]

3490. Furthermore, Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in relying on the Semanza Appeal Judgement because, in relation to his convictions for the crimes committed at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill, he "was just a student at the time", unlike Laurent Semanza who was appointed to serve as a member of Parliament.[7900] In this context, he argues that "[i]t was inconceivable to liken him to an authority [like Semanza] and that he abused an influence which he did not have."[7901] Alternatively, Ndayambaje points to the Rugambarara case to argue that, with respect to his convictions for events that occurred after he was installed as bourgmestre of Muganza Commune, the position of bourgmestre is an insufficiently high level of authority so that abuse of such authority could not constitute an aggravating factor.[7902]

3491. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje does not show any error in the Trial Chamber's reliance on the aggravating factors he challenges and that his claims should be summarily dismissed.[7903]

3492. The Appeals Chamber notes that, when finding that the number of victims was an aggravating factor in relation to the attacks at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill, the Trial Chamber recalled that "hundreds, if not thousands, of predominantly Tutsis who took refuge at [these locations] perished" and determined that the number of victims "far surpasse[d] the threshold for extermination".[7904] The Appeals Chamber recalls that there is no minimum number of victims required for a conviction of genocide and that a particularly large number of victims can be an aggravating circumstance in relation to the sentence for extermination as a crime against humanity where the extent of the killings exceeds that required for extermination.[7905] None of the other crimes for which Ndayambaje was convicted in relation to these events requires a minimum number of victims. Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial

Chamber erred in considering the number of victims both as an element of the offence and as an aggravating factor.[7906] Likewise, Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that his abuse of authority or the premeditated nature in which the attacks at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill were perpetrated constituted elements of the offences for which he was convicted and that, consequently, they could not be considered as aggravating circumstances.

3493. Turning to Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber erred in confusing notions of abuse of influence and authority, the Appeals Chamber recalls that a trial chamber may consider the abuse of a convicted person's influence as an aggravating factor in sentencing.[7907] Ndayambaje simply points to semantic differences without demonstrating how the Trial Chamber erred in relying on findings that Ndayambaje used "his status and influence to further […] grave crimes" when determining that his abuse of authority was an aggravating factor.[7908] Moreover, the Trial Chamber did not liken Ndayambaje's authority to that of Laurent Semanza but merely cited the Semanza Appeal Judgement in its summary of the applicable law in support of the principle that it "may consider an individual's influence as an aggravating circumstance".[7909] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate how any finding concerning Laurent Semanza's abuse of authority in the Semanza case prevented the Trial Chamber from concluding that Ndayambaje abused his authority in relation to the crimes of which it convicted him. Ndayambaje's submission that he was not a public official at the time of the attacks on Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he was nonetheless influential within the commune and used his "influence to further these grave crimes".[7910]

3494. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber is not persuaded that, simply because the Trial Chamber found the evidence insufficient to establish that he could bear superior responsibility over perpetrators of the attacks at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill, the Trial Chamber erred in finding that he abused his authority in relation to these events. The Trial Chamber considered that "Ndayambaje was an influential, respected figure in Butare" who: (i) "had been bourgmestre of Muganza commune between 1983 and 1992, prior to his participation in the attacks at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill"; (ii) "committed genocide and incitement to commit genocide both before and after his reinstallation as bourgmestre in June 1994"; and (iii) "used his status and influence to further these grave crimes."[7911] Indeed, when assessing his potential superior responsibility for the attacks at Mugombwa Church, the Trial Chamber emphasised that "Ndayambaje, as former bourgmestre of Muganza commune for a period of 11 years, and the holder of a number of other offices, was a well-known authority figure and was influential within his commune."[7912] The Trial Chamber also referred to "the prominent role that Ndayambaje played in contributing to the attacks at Kabuye Hill".[7913]

[7906] As noted previously by the Appeals Chamber, while extermination as a crime against humanity has been found in relation to the killing of thousands of persons, it has also been found in relation to fewer killings, such as the killings of approximately 60 individuals and less. See Ndahimana Appeal Judgement, para. 231 and references cited therein. See also supra, para. 2123 ("The Appeals Chamber recalls that the actus reus of extermination is the act of killing on a large scale. This is what distinguishes the crime of extermination from the crime of murder. The assessment of "large scale" is made on a case-by-case basis, taking into account the circumstances in which the killings occurred.") (internal references omitted).

3495. With respect to Ndayambaje's final contention that holding a position of bourgmestre was insufficient to constitute an aggravating factor given a finding of this nature in the Rugambarara Sentencing Judgement, the Appeals Chamber stresses that "the precedential effect of previous sentences rendered by the [ICTY and the Tribunal] is not only 'very limited' but 'also not necessarily a proper avenue to challenge a Trial Chamber's finding in exercising its discretion to impose a sentence'."[7914] Ndayambaje's emphasis on the Rugambarara Sentencing Judgement fails to appreciate, for example, that the Appeals Chamber affirmed another trial chamber's determination in the case of Sylvestre Gacumbitsi – who was a bourgmestre and an important and influential personality in Rusumo Commune – that the abuse of his powers as a bourgmestre constituted an aggravating factor.[7915]

3496. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its consideration of the aggravating factors in determining his sentence.

2. Mitigating Circumstances

3497. The Trial Chamber considered the propriety of Ndayambaje's first tenure as bourgmestre between 1983 and October 1992 as well as the facts that he was described as an honest man concerned about the welfare of the people and the agricultural sector and that he accommodated two Tutsis during the events of May 1994 in his home as mitigating factors.[7916] However, in view of the gravity of Ndayambaje's crimes and the nature of his involvement in them, the Trial Chamber accorded these circumstances "very limited weight".[7917]

3498. Ndayambaje contends that, when assessing his mitigating circumstances, the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider adequately his age, the possibility of his social reintegration, and the facts that he is the father of three children and that he did not have a criminal record.[7918] Ndayambaje also highlights that he expressed remorse and compassion towards the victims and adds that he was not subject of disciplinary measures while detained.[7919]

3499. Ndayambaje also contends that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to afford mitigation for the violation of his right to an expeditious trial, in particular for the length of his detention on remand.[7920] He argues that he was subject to "the longest preventative detention" and requests a remedy of a considerable reduction in his sentence.[7921]

3500. The Prosecution responds that since Ndayambaje made no submissions regarding mitigating circumstances at trial, he cannot now raise them on appeal for the first time.[7922] It further contends that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate undue delay and that a remedy was required in this regard.[7923]

3501. Ndayambaje replies that he identified mitigating circumstances at trial but that the Trial Chamber "incorrectly assessed" them.[7924]

3502. The Appeals Chamber observes that, in his sentencing submissions at trial, Ndayambaje principally argued that "it [was] premature and almost impossible to discuss the sentence at this stage of the proceedings"[7925] and requested that he "be given the broadest mitigating circumstances, taking into account everything that emerged from this trial relating to his personality and the circumstances under which he experienced the extremely difficult events from April to June 1994."[7926] Given the ambiguity of these submissions, the Appeals Chamber considers that the Trial Chamber was under no obligation to consider the mitigating circumstances Ndayambaje now points to and that he has waived his right to have them considered on appeal.

3503. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber notes that, notwithstanding the nature of his submissions at trial, the Trial Chamber nevertheless considered as mitigating factors: (i) the propriety of Ndayambaje's first tenure as bourgmestre between 1983 and October 1992 as well as the fact that Ndayambaje was described as an honest man concerned about the welfare of the people and the agricultural sector; and (ii) the fact that Ndayambaje accommodated two Tutsis during the events of May 1994 in his home.[7927] However, as noted above, they were accorded only "very limited weight".[7928] While Ndayambaje generally argues that the Trial Chamber "incorrectly assessed" the mitigating circumstances, he does not demonstrate how it committed a discernible error in this respect.

3504. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in its consideration of the mitigating factors in determining his sentence.

3. Degree of Participation in the Crimes

3505. Ndayambaje submits that the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber was disproportionate to the degree of his participation in the crimes as he was only convicted of aiding and abetting and inciting certain crimes.[7929] Quoting the Trial Chamber's finding that "[w]hile Ndayambaje played a role in events surrounding the killings, and substantially contributed to them, the Chamber does not find that his conduct was as much an integral part of genocide as the killings themselves",[7930] Ndayambaje argues that his direct participation in the crimes was not established and the sentence of life imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber was excessive and disproportionate.[7931] He further contends that the sentence was disproportionate because he was not a superior and did not possess de jure or de facto authority over the principal perpetrators.[7932]

[7932] Ndayambaje Appeal Brief, para. 682. Ndayambaje adds that a conviction under both Articles 6(1) and 6(3) of the Statute warrants a heavier sentence than a conviction under Article 6(1) of the Statute alone. See ibid., para. 683.

3506. The Prosecution responds that, given the scale of the crimes for which Ndayambaje was found responsible, a life sentence was not disproportionate and that the Trial Chamber did not abuse its discretion.[7933]

3507. The Appeals Chamber recalls that the Trial Chamber found that Ndayambaje aided and abetted the killings of Tutsis at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill, committed direct and public incitement to commit genocide prior to an attack on Mugombwa Church and during his swearing-in ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune, and instigated the killings of Tutsi women and girls abducted from Mugombwa Sector.[7934] Furthermore, while the Trial Chamber determined that "his conduct [at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill] was [not] as much an integral part of the genocide as the killings themselves" when determining that aiding and abetting rather than committing best characterised his responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute,[7935] it nevertheless "found Ndayambaje guilty of genocide for his direct participation in the massacres at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill".[7936] The Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's conclusions as to Ndayambaje's participation in the attacks at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill support the characterisation that he directly participated in the massacres even though he was only found to have aided and abetted them.[7937] Moreover, Ndayambaje's contentions ignore that, with respect to the other events for which he was convicted, he was found responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for directly participating in the crimes through committing or instigating them.[7938]

3508. Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber considers that the fact that the Trial Chamber found that the Prosecution failed to lead sufficient evidence that Ndayambaje exercised effective control over the perpetrators of the attacks at Mugombwa Church and Kabuye Hill did not prevent the Trial Chamber from imposing a sentence of life imprisonment.[7939]

3509. In light of the gravity of the crimes which the Trial Chamber described as leading "to a loss of life on a massive scale and caused immense human suffering",[7940] the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's contention that the Trial Chamber imposed a sentence disproportionate to the form and degree of his participation in the crimes of which he was convicted at trial.

4. Comparability of Sentences

3510. Ndayambaje submits that the Trial Chamber erred in not applying the principle of parity and not imposing a similar sentence on him as those imposed on Elizaphan and Gérard Ntakirutimana, Muvunyi, Emmanuel Rukundo, Bikindi, Kalimanzira, and Dominique Ntawukulilyayo.[7941]

3511. The Prosecution did not directly respond to these submissions.

3512. The Appeals Chamber recalls that comparison between cases is of limited assistance in challenging a sentence given the broad discretion afforded to trial chambers in determining the appropriate sentence on account of their obligation to tailor the penalties to fit the individual circumstances of the convicted person and to reflect the gravity of the crimes.[7942] Apart from referring to other cases before the Tribunal that he argues are comparable to his, Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in imposing a sentence of life imprisonment in light of the sentences imposed on other convicted persons he has identified.

5. Life Sentence

3514. Ndayambaje submits that, in imposing a life sentence without a possibility of conditional release, the Trial Chamber violated his rights under Articles 19 and 20 of the Statute as well as his rights under Article 7 of the ICCPR.[7943] In his appeal brief, Ndayambaje further argues that the Trial Chamber erred in imposing a life imprisonment without providing a reasoned opinion and, that, by sentencing him to a single sentence for all of his crimes, the Trial Chamber deprived him of the benefit of any credit based on the period already spent in detention.[7944]

3515. The Prosecution responds that Ndayambaje does not show any error and that his argument should be dismissed.[7945]

3517. The Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ndayambaje's claim that imposing a single life sentence deprived him of the benefit of any credit based on the period already spent in detention and that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to provide a reasoned opinion in this regard. Rule 101(C) of the Rules states that "[c]redit shall be given to the convicted person for the period, if any, during which the convicted person was detained in custody pending his surrender to the Tribunal or pending trial or appeal". This provision, however, does not affect the ability of a trial chamber to impose the maximum sentence, as provided for by Rule 101(A) of the Rules.[7946]

3518. Moreover, the Appeals Chamber recalls that Rule 87(C) of the Rules provides that "[i]f the Trial Chamber finds the accused guilty on one or more of the counts contained in the indictment, it shall impose a sentence in respect of each finding of guilt […] unless it decides to exercise its power to impose a single sentence reflecting the totality of the criminal conduct of the accused."[7947] Ndayambaje does not demonstrate that the Trial Chamber abused its discretion in deciding to impose a single sentence in this instance.

3519. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber dismisses Ndayambaje's arguments concerning the imposition of a sentence of life imprisonment.

6. Conclusion

3520. Based on the foregoing, the Appeals Chamber finds that Ndayambaje has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's determination of his sentence and dismisses Ground 21 of his appeal.

[7946] See Karera Appeal Judgement, para. 397.
[7947] The Appeals Chamber notes that Rule 87(C) of the Rules was amended on 14 March 2008 to expressly provide for the imposition of single sentences. See, e.g., Karemera and Ngirumpatse Appeal Judgement, para. 679, fn. 1828; Ntabakuze Appeal Judgement, para. 276, fn. 631. Prior to this amendment, the Appeals Chamber confirmed the propriety of this practice. See Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement, paras. 1042, 1043; Kambanda Appeal Judgement, paras. 111, 112.

XII. IMPACT OF THE APPEALS CHAMBER'S FINDINGS ON SENTENCES

A. Nyiramasuhuko

3521. With respect to Nyiramasuhuko, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that her right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused her prejudice.[7948] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has reversed, Judge Agius dissenting, Nyiramasuhuko's conviction for persecution as a crime against humanity.[7949]

3522. However, the Appeals Chamber has upheld Nyiramasuhuko's convictions for: (i) conspiracy to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by entering into an agreement with members of the Interim Government on or after 9 April 1994 to kill Tutsis within Butare Prefecture;[7950] (ii) genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the office of Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks;[7951] and (iii) rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish rapes perpetrated by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[7952]

3523. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting as to the number of years, reduces Nyiramasuhuko's sentence of life imprisonment to 47 years of imprisonment.

B. Ntahobali

3524. With respect to Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused him prejudice.[7953] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has reversed, Judge Agius dissenting, Ntahobali's conviction for persecution as a crime against humanity.[7954] In addition, the Appeals Chamber has reversed Ntahobali's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) killing numerous Tutsis, other than a Tutsi girl, at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994; and (ii) aiding and abetting the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family around 29-30 April 1994.[7955] It has also reversed Ntahobali's convictions for rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) raping Tutsi women, other than Witness TA, at the Butare Prefecture Office; and (ii) ordering the rapes of six Tutsi women, other than Witness TA, at the prefectoral office during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks.[7956]

[7949] See supra, Section V.M.
[7950] See supra, Section IV.D.

3525. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack, has upheld Ntahobali's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) killing a Tutsi girl he had first raped at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994; (ii) ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994, killings of Tutsis at the IRST on 21 April 1994, and killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack; and (iii) aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsis abducted from the EER perpetrated between mid-May and early June 1994.[7957] The Appeals Chamber has further upheld Ntahobali's convictions for rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II

[7953] See supra, Section III.K.
[7954] See supra, Section V.M.
[7955] See supra, Sections V.G, V.H.
[7956] See supra, Section V.I. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has further reversed the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali also bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rapes of six Tutsi women, other than Witness TA, at the prefectoral office during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks.
[7957] See supra, Sections V.F, V.G, V.I, V.J. With respect to the Mid-May Attack for which Ntahobali was convicted for ordering killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office, although the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, upheld Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering the killings of Tutsi abducted during the Mid-May Attack, it recalls that is has also found that the Trial Chamber's apparent attribution of responsibility to Ntahobali for the killings of hundreds of Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefectoral Office is not sustained by the record or is based on findings for which Ntahobali was not convicted by the Trial Chamber. See supra, Section V.I. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it has, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to Ntahobali's responsibility for the Mid-May Attack, further upheld the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali also bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994, the killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack, and the killings of Tutsis abducted from the EER perpetrated between mid-May and early June 1994. See supra, Sections V.G, V.I, V.J. The Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, has further upheld the Trial Chamber's finding that Ntahobali also bore responsibility as a superior under Article 6(3) of the Statute for the rape of Witness TA at the prefectoral office during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks. See supra, Section V.I.

pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) raping a Tutsi girl near the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994 as well as Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack and the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks at the prefectoral office; (ii) ordering the rape of Witness TA at the prefectoral office during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; and (iii) aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA at the prefectoral office during the First Half of June Attacks.[7958]

3526. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting as to the number of years, reduces Ntahobali's sentence of life imprisonment to 47 years of imprisonment.

C. Nsabimana

3527. With respect to Nsabimana, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused him prejudice.[7959] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has reversed, Judge Agius dissenting, Nsabimana's conviction for persecution as a crime against humanity.[7960] The Appeals Chamber has also found that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the vulnerability of the victims in assessing the gravity of the offences and as a separate aggravating factor and that, in light of the form and degree of participation of Nsabimana in the crimes committed, the sentence imposed by the Trial Chamber is excessive and that the Trial Chamber committed a discernible error in exercising its discretion in this regard.[7961]

3528. However, the Appeals Chamber has upheld Nsabimana's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office by failing to discharge his duty to provide assistance to people in danger and to protect civilians against acts of violence.[7962]

3529. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber reduces Nsabimana's sentence of 25 years of imprisonment to 18 years of imprisonment.

D. Nteziryayo

3530. With respect to Nteziryayo, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and

[7958] See supra, Sections V.G, V.I
[7959] See supra, Section III.K.
[7960] See supra, Section V.M.
[7961] See supra, Section XI.C.

that this violation caused him prejudice.[7963] The Appeals Chamber has also found that the Trial Chamber erred in considering Nteziryayo's role in the civil defence programme and the unspecified conclusion that "soldiers and civilian militiamen participated in a widespread and systematic campaign of slaughter and targeted Tutsi civilians, including those who were particularly vulnerable, as well as Hutu moderates" when assessing the gravity of his offences.[7964]

3531. However, the Appeals Chamber has upheld Nteziryayo's conviction for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making speeches that constituted direct appeals to the population to kill Tutsis at public meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes in mid to late June 1994 and at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune that took place on 22 June 1994.[7965]

3532. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber reduces Nteziryayo's sentence of 30 years of imprisonment to 25 years of imprisonment.

E. Kanyabashi

3533. With respect to Kanyabashi, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused him prejudice.[7966] In addition, the Appeals Chamber has reversed Kanyabashi's convictions for genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish the killings of Tutsis perpetrated by Ngoma commune policemen at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994.[7967] The Appeals Chamber recalls that, in Section XI.E above, it has concluded that, in light of the fact that a majority of Kanyabashi's convictions have been overturned

[7962] See supra, Section VI.D.
[7963] See supra, Section III.K.
[7964] See supra, Section XI.D.
[7965] See supra, Sections VII.B-VII.D.
[7966] See supra, Section III.K.
[7967] See supra, Sections VIII.B.1, VIII.B.4, VIII.C, VIII.D. See also supra, Section V.M. The Appeals Chamber recalls that it had also found that the Trial Chamber erred in considering the number of casualties of the attacks on Kabakobwa Hill and at Matyazo Clinic both in assessing the gravity of the offences and as a separate aggravating circumstance. See supra, Section XI.E. The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has found that, in light of the fact that Kanyabashi's convictions for the killings of Tutsis committed by members of the Ngoma commune police at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994 have been overturned on appeal, the Trial Chamber's conclusion in its sentencing deliberations that his crimes were "of an obvious gravity resulting in a significant number of casualties in terms of death and injuries" and its reliance on the number of victims resulting from the killings at Kabakobwa Hill and Matyazo Clinic as an aggravating circumstance are no longer supported. Likewise, the Appeals Chamber has found that the Trial Chamber's conclusion that Kanyabashi abused his authority in relation to the crimes that occurred at Matyazo Clinic also lacks support. See supra, Section XI.E.

on appeal, the Appeals Chamber will consider Kanyabashi's contentions as to whether his sentence is manifestly excessive when determining the impact of its own findings on his sentence. The Appeals Chamber has also found that the Trial Chamber erred in failing to consider Kanyabashi's age and good conduct in detention when determining his mitigating circumstances relevant to sentencing.[7968]

3534. However, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, has upheld Kanyabashi's conviction for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making megaphone announcements on two occasions in late May and mid-June 1994 calling on the population to kill Tutsis.[7969]

3535. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber reduces Kanyabashi's sentence of 35 years of imprisonment to 20 years of imprisonment.

F. Ndayambaje

3536. With respect to Ndayambaje, the Appeals Chamber recalls that it has found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and that this violation caused him prejudice.[7970] The Appeals Chamber further recalls that it has reversed, Judge Agius dissenting, Ndayambaje's conviction for persecution as a crime against humanity.[7971] In addition, the Appeals Chamber has reversed Ndayambaje's convictions for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by directly inciting a crowd outside Mugombwa Church to kill the Tutsis who were taking refuge in the church on 20 and 21 April 1994.[7972] It has also reversed Ndayambaje's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsis at Kabuye Hill on 22 April 1994; and (ii) instigating the killing of a Tutsi girl named Nambaje abducted from Mugombwa Sector after his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994.[7973]

3537. However, the Appeals Chamber has upheld Ndayambaje's conviction for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making a speech containing inciting statements to commit genocide at his swearing in ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune on 22 June 1994.[7974] The Appeals Chamber has further upheld Ndayambaje's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for: (i) aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsis at Mugombwa Church on 20 and 21 April 1994 and at Kabuye Hill from 23 to 24 April 1994; and (ii) instigating the killings of Tutsi women and girls, other than one named Nambaje, abducted from Mugombwa Sector based on his utterances at the Virgin Mary Statute after his swearing-in ceremony on 22 June 1994.[7975]

3538. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber, Judge Agius dissenting as to the number of years, reduces Ndayambaje's sentence of life imprisonment to 47 years of imprisonment.

XIII. DISPOSITION

3539. For the foregoing reasons, THE APPEALS CHAMBER,

PURSUANT to Article 24 of the Statute and Rule 118 of the Rules,

NOTING the written submissions of the parties and their oral arguments presented at the appeals hearing between 14 and 17 April 2015 as well as between 20 and 22 April 2015;

SITTING in open session;

WITH RESPECT TO PAULINE NYIRAMASUHUKO'S APPEAL

GRANTS Ground 1 of Nyiramasuhuko's appeal in part, FINDS that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that her right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and FINDS that this violation caused her prejudice;

DISMISSES Nyiramasuhuko's appeal in all other respects;

FINDS, proprio motu, Judge Agius dissenting, that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Nyiramasuhuko for persecution as a crime against humanity, REVERSES Nyiramasuhuko's conviction for this crime, and ENTERS a verdict of acquittal under Count 8 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment;

AFFIRMS Nyiramasuhuko's convictions for:

- conspiracy to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by entering into an agreement with members of the Interim Government on or after 9 April 1994 to kill Tutsis within Butare Prefecture;
- genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack and the Night of Three Attacks; and
- rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish rapes perpetrated by Interahamwe at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks;

REDUCES Nyiramasuhuko's sentence of life imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber to 47 years of imprisonment, Judge Agius dissenting as to the number of years, subject to credit being given under Rules 101(C) and 107 of the Rules for the period she has already spent in detention since her arrest on 18 July 1997;

WITH RESPECT TO ARSÈNE SHALOM NTAHOBALI'S APPEAL

GRANTS Ground 1.1 of Ntahobali's appeal, FINDS that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and FINDS that this violation caused him prejudice;

GRANTS, Judge Agius dissenting, Ground 4.6 of Ntahobali's appeal, REVERSES Ntahobali's conviction for persecution as a crime against humanity, and ENTERS a verdict of acquittal under Count 8 of the Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Indictment;

GRANTS Ground 4.2 of Ntahobali's appeal in part and REVERSES his convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for killing numerous Tutsis, other than a Tutsi girl, at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994;

GRANTS Grounds 3.4, in part, and 4.7 of Ntahobali's appeal and REVERSES his convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting the killing of Rwamukwaya and his family around 29-30 April 1994;

GRANTS, in part, Grounds 3.6, and 4.2 through 4.4, of Ntahobali's appeal and REVERSES his convictions for rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for:

- raping Tutsi women, other than Witness TA, at the Butare Prefecture Office; and
- ordering the rapes of six Tutsi women, other than Witness TA, at the Butare Prefecture Office during the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks;

DISMISSES Ntahobali's appeal in all other respects;

AFFIRMS, Judge Liu dissenting with respect to Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack at the Butare Prefecture Office, Ntahobali's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for:

- killing a Tutsi girl he had first raped at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994;
- ordering the killing of Ruvurajabo at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock on 21 April 1994, the killing of Tutsis at the IRST on 21 April 1994, and the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Mid-May Attack; and
- aiding and abetting the killings of Tutsis abducted from the EER between mid-May and early June 1994;

AFFIRMS Ntahobali's convictions for rape as a crime against humanity and outrages upon personal dignity as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for:

- raping a Tutsi girl near the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in late April 1994 as well as Witness TA during the Mid-May Attack and the First Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks at the prefectoral office;
- ordering the rape of Witness TA at the prefectoral office during the Second Attack of the Last Half of May Attacks; and
- aiding and abetting the rapes of Witness TA at the prefectoral office during the First Half of June Attacks;

REDUCES Ntahobali's sentence of life imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber to 47 years of imprisonment, Judge Agius dissenting as to the number of years, subject to credit being given under Rules 101(C) and 107 of the Rules for the period he has already spent in detention since his arrest on 24 July 1997;

WITH RESPECT TO SYLVAIN NSABIMANA'S APPEAL

DISMISSES Nsabimana's appeal in all respects;

FINDS, proprio motu, that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Nsabimana's right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated and FINDS that this violation caused him prejudice;

FINDS, proprio motu, Judge Agius dissenting, that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting

Nsabimana for persecution as a crime against humanity, REVERSES Nsabimana's conviction for this crime, and ENTERS a verdict of acquittal under Count 7 of the Nsabimana and Nteziryayo Indictment;

AFFIRMS Nsabimana's convictions for genocide, extermination as a crime against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute for aiding and abetting by omission the killing of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office by failing to discharge his duty to provide assistance to people in danger and to protect civilians against acts of violence;

REDUCES Nsabimana's sentence of 25 years of imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber to 18 years of imprisonment, subject to credit being given under Rules 101(C) and 107 of the Rules for the period he has already spent in detention since his arrest on 18 July 1997;

WITH RESPECT TO ALPHONSE NTEZIRYAYO'S APPEAL

GRANTS Ground 9 of Nteziryayo's appeal, FINDS that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and FINDS that this violation caused him prejudice;

DISMISSES Nteziryayo's appeal in all other respects;

AFFIRMS Nteziryayo's convictions for direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making speeches that constituted direct appeals to the population to kill Tutsis at public meetings held in Muyaga and Kibayi Communes in mid to late June 1994 and at Ndayambaje's Swearing-In Ceremony as the new bourgmestre of Muganza Commune that took place on 22 June 1994;

REDUCES Nteziryayo's sentence of 30 years of imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber to 25 years of imprisonment, subject to credit being given under Rules 101(C) and 107 of the Rules for the period he has already spent in detention since his arrest on 26 March 1998;

WITH RESPECT TO JOSEPH KANYABASHI'S APPEAL

GRANTS Ground 6 of Kanyabashi's appeal, FINDS that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and FINDS that this violation caused him prejudice;

GRANTS Grounds 1.1 and 2.2 of Kanyabashi's appeal, REVERSES his convictions for genocide extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, and violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II as a superior pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for failing to prevent and punish the killings of Tutsis perpetrated by Ngoma commune policemen at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 and by soldiers at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994, and ENTERS a verdict of acquittal under Counts 2, 6, 7, and 9 of the Kanyabashi Indictment;

DISMISSES, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting with respect to the incitement by megaphone, Kanyabashi's appeal in all other respects;

AFFIRMS, Judge Pocar and Judge Agius dissenting, Kanyabashi's convictions for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by making megaphone announcements on two occasions in late May and mid-June 1994 calling on the population to kill Tutsis;

REDUCES Kanyabashi's sentence of 35 years of imprisonment imposed by the Trial Chamber to 20 years of imprisonment, subject to credit being given under Rules 101(C) and 107 of the Rules for the period he has already spent in detention since his arrest on 28 June 1995;

WITH RESPECT TO ÉLIE NDAYAMBAJE'S APPEAL

GRANTS Ground 15 of Ndayambaje's appeal in part, FINDS that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that his right to be tried without undue delay had not been violated, and FINDS that this violation caused him prejudice;

GRANTS Ground 2 of Ndayambaje's appeal and REVERSES his conviction for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute by directly inciting a crowd outside Mugombwa Church to kill the Tutsis who were taking refuge in the church on 20 and 21 April 1994;

XIV. PARTIALLY DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE POCAR

1. At trial, the Prosecution submitted an initial indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali on 26 May 1997, which was confirmed on 29 May 1997.[1] On 10 August 1999 the Prosecution was granted leave to amend the indictment, which included, inter alia, adding six new counts.[2]

2. In deciding to grant the Prosecution leave to amend the indictment as requested, the Trial Chamber held that there was no need to inquire whether or not a prima facie case had been established in support of the new counts since it had only been seised of a motion to amend the indictment pursuant to Rule 50 of the Rules.[3] The Trial Chamber only satisfied itself that the Prosecution "provided sufficient grounds both in fact and in law".[4]

3. In this Judgement, the Appeals Chamber finds Nyiramasuhuko's allegation that the Trial Chamber erred in law by not requiring the Prosecution to present a prima facie case in support of the six new counts to be without merit.[5] Likewise, the Appeals Chamber also dismisses Ntahobali's similar arguments.[6] I respectfully disagree with both the reasoning and the conclusion of the majority of the Appeals Chamber ("Majority") in this respect.

4. Although on 10 August 1999 when the Prosecution was granted leave to amend the initial indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali Rule 50(A)(ii) of the Rules had not been adopted yet,[7] for the reasons already expressed in my opinion of 12 February 2004 in the Casimir Bizimungu et al. case, I believe that – even prior to the adoption of Rule 50(A)(ii) of the Rules – an amendment to an indictment to include new counts could not be allowed if the conditions for confirming the indictment set forth in Rule 47 of the Rules were not satisfied.[8] For the completeness of my argument, I hereby reproduce the relevant paragraphs of my previous opinion:

> 2. […] In paragraph 11 of the decision, it is stated that "…Rule 50 of the Rules assigns the decision to allow an amendment to the indictment to the discretion of the Trial Chamber…." This may give the impression that a decision to allow an amendment rests solely in the discretion of a Trial Chamber, without more. I do not believe, however, that such a decision is solely a matter of discretion, because the conditions set forth in Rule 47 of the Rules must be taken into account by the Trial Chamber when it carries out its assessment. To dispel confusion, the Appeals Chamber should have pronounced on the issue even if the parties did not raise it expressly.

[7] As noted in this Judgement, Rule 50(A)(ii) of the Rules was introduced in the Rules on 15 May 2004, following the 14th plenary session held on 23 and 24 April 2004. See Appeal Judgement, para. 450, fn. 1051.
[8] Bizimungu et al. 12 February 2004 Appeal Decision, Individual Opinion of Judge Pocar, para. 1. I note that Rule 47 of the Rules applicable on 10 August 1999 is similar to Rule 47 of te Rules applicable today.

3. Article 18(1) of the Statute of the International Tribunal provides that "[t]he judge of the Trial Chamber to whom the indictment has been transmitted shall review it. If satisfied that a prima facie case has been established by the Prosecutor, he or she shall confirm the indictment. If not so satisfied, the indictment shall be dismissed." The confirmation of an indictment can therefore only take place if a prima facie case exists. This statutory requirement is echoed in Rule 47(E) of the Rules, which states that "[t]he reviewing Judge shall examine each of the counts in the indictment, and any supporting materials the Prosecutor may provide, to determine, applying the standard set forth in Article 18 of the Statute, whether a case exists against the suspect."

4. Rule 50 of the Rules governs the amendment of indictments. This rule does not set forth conditions for allowing an amendment to an indictment. But it does preserve the rights of the accused in relation to new charges—for example, it provides for a further appearance to enable the accused to enter a plea on the new charges, and it also provides for a further period of thirty days to file preliminary motions pursuant to Rule 72 in relation to the new charges. Hence, after a request for an amendment is allowed, the new charges are subject to the same rules that would have applied if they had been presented in the original indictment.

5. In the same way, before an amendment is allowed, the inquiry must be governed by Rule 47, applicable to all indictments submitted, and a prima facie case must be presented. The illogic of any contrary view aside, the following may be noted. First, Rule 50 is placed in the same section in which the provisions for the confirmation of indictments are located, and no derogation from the general rule can be inferred from the text. Second, it cannot be that an amended indictment satisfies fewer requirements than those that were necessary for the original indictment's confirmation. Such an approach would allow the conditions set out in the Statute and Rule 47 to be circumvented in a given case on any number of additional amendments.

6. For these reasons, I believe that the Appeals Chamber should have stated, in this decision, that an amendment to an indictment should not be allowed if the conditions for confirming the indictment, articulated in Rule 47 of the Rules, are not satisfied.

5. In light of the above, I dissent from the Majority's conclusion that Nyiramasuhuko's – and Ntahobali's – allegation that the Trial Chamber erred in law by not requiring the Prosecution to present a prima facie case in support of the six new counts is without merit.

XV. JOINT DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE POCAR AND JUDGE AGIUS

1. In this Judgement, the Appeals Chamber considers that, although the Trial Chamber erred in failing to find that the Indictment was defective in relation to the number of incidents of incitement by megaphone of which Kanyabashi was alleged to be responsible, Kanyabashi was ultimately put on adequate notice of the relevant material facts with respect to the number of alleged incidents of incitement by megaphone and that the vagueness of the Indictment did not impair his ability to prepare his defence.[1] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's error concerning the form of the Indictment regarding the number of incidents of incitement by megaphone did not invalidate its decision to convict Kanyabashi on the basis of the late May and mid-June 1994 megaphone announcements and, therefore, dismisses Kanyabashi's contentions that he lacked sufficient notice of his alleged responsibility for committing direct and public incitement to commit genocide through two megaphone announcements in late May and mid-June 1994.[2]

2. Moreover, when examining the merits of Kanyabashi's appeal against his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide by making megaphone announcements in Butare Town in late May and mid-June 1994, the Appeals Chamber concludes that Kanyabashi has not demonstrated that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness TK's evidence partly corroborated Witness QJ's testimony with respect to the megaphone announcement in late May 1994.[3] In light of this conclusion and after having found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence established that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of a modus operandi by which messages from Kanyabashi were delivered to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994, the Appeals Chamber finds that Witness TK's evidence alone, which the Trial Chamber found credible and corroborative of Witness QJ's testimony, is sufficient to sustain the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QJ's direct evidence that around late May 1994 Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[4] Accordingly, the Appeals Chamber finds that the Trial Chamber's error in finding and relying on the existence of a modus operandi has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice and that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial

Chamber erred in finding that, around late May 1994, he drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[5]

3. Similarly, with respect to the megaphone announcement in mid-June 1994, the Appeals Chamber rejects Kanyabashi's contention related to this event and finds that the Trial Chamber's error in finding the existence of a modus operandi did not result in a miscarriage of justice as Witness QI's evidence alone was sufficient to support the Trial Chamber's conclusions as to the mid-June 1994 megaphone announcement.[6]

4. In light of the above, the Appeals Chamber: (i) finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate any error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of the evidence concerning the late May and mid-June 1994 megaphone announcements that occasioned a miscarriage of justice and warrants its intervention; (ii) dismisses Grounds 3.2 through 3.8 of his appeal; and (iii) upholds his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide by making megaphone announcements in Butare Town in late May and mid-June 1994.[7]

5. For the reasons mentioned below, we disagree with both the reasoning and the conclusions of the Majority concerning Kanyabashi's conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide by making megaphone announcements in Butare Town in late May and mid-June 1994.

1. Kanyabashi Indictment: Mid-June 1994 Incident

6. On one hand, the Appeals Chamber – and we concur with this conclusion – finds that paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment[8] was overly vague as regards the number of times Kanyabashi was alleged to have incited the population through a megaphone while driving through Butare Town.[9] On the other hand, the Majority – and we disagree with this conclusion – is not persuaded by Kanyabashi's argument that paragraph 5.8 was defective regarding the pleading of the

[5] Appeal Judgement, paras. 2648, 2649.
[6] Appeal Judgement, para. 2673.
[7] Appeal Judgement, paras. 2682, 2694, 3539.
[8] Paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment reads as follows:

> 5.8 From April to July 1994, various prominent persons, including members of the government and local authorities propagated incitement to hatred and violence. On or about April 19, 1994, after the interim president Théodore Sindikubwabo delivered a speech in Butare encouraging people to fight the enemy, Joseph KANYABASHI, gave a speech in support of the interim president, encouraging the population to follow Sindikubwabo's instructions. Shortly thereafter, widespr[]ead attacks on Tutsis began in the area. In or around late May, 1994, on at least on one occasion, Joseph KANYABASHI drove through the town of Butare and spoke to the population through a megaphone. He encouraged the population to systematically search for the "enemy" in the commune and immediately afterwards, more Tutsis were killed in Ngoma commune. Also in or around May, 1994 Joseph KANYABASHI held at least two meetings in Cyarwa sector, Ngoma commune, at which he encouraged local residents to kill Tutsis. In the days following the meetings, Tutsis in the area were attacked.

[9] Appeal Judgement, para. 2551.

dates of the incidents.[10] In particular, the Majority considers that, while the Kanyabashi Indictment does not refer to the month of June in particular, the timeframe "[i]n or around late May, 1994" was sufficiently specific to allow Kanyabashi to prepare his defence against two allegations of incitement occurring in late May and mid-June 1994.[11] In this respect, the Majority notes that, although the Prosecution was in possession of information regarding the date of the late May incident through Witness QJ's written statements, it did not have information regarding the date of the June incident at the time of the filing of the Indictment.[12] Accordingly, the Majority finds no error in the Trial Chamber's finding that the allegation of a megaphone announcement by Kanyabashi in mid-June 1994 fell under the scope of paragraph 5.8 and considers that the timeframe of the allegation of megaphone announcements by Kanyabashi pleaded in this paragraph was sufficient to provide him adequate notice.[13]

7. In our view, the two above-mentioned conclusions of the Majority are contradictory. Indeed, how can the Majority finds, on one hand, that the Kanyabashi Indictment is defective as to the number of times Kanyabashi was alleged to have incited the population through a megaphone and, on the other hand, that it is not defective regarding the pleading of the date*s* of the incident*s*? In this respect, we recall that paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment only mentions that, "[i]n or around late May, 1994, on at least on one occasion, Joseph KANYABASHI drove through the town of Butare and spoke to the population through a megaphone."[14] If the Kanyabashi Indictment does not indicate how many times Kanyabashi is alleged to have incited the population through a megaphone while driving through Butare Town, how can it be not defective regarding the pleading of the date*s* of the incident*s*, especially with respect to the mid-June 1994 incident? Thus, we consider that – after having found that the Kanyabashi Indictment is defective as to the number of times Kanyabashi was alleged to have incited the population through a megaphone – the Majoriy had no other choice than to find that the Trial Chamber also erred with respect to the pleading of the date of the mid-June 1994 incident. We consider that Kanyabashi has demonstrated that the phrase "[i]n or around late May, 1994, on at least on one occasion" pleaded in paragraph 5.8 did not provide him with notice that he was to defend against a second allegation of incitement by megaphone occurring in mid-June 1994. The Trial Chamber therefore erred in determining that the mid-June 1994 megaphone incident fell within the scope of paragraph 5.8 and that Kanyabashi was put on notice that he was alleged to have incited to the commission of genocide through a megaphone announcement while driving though Butare Town in mid-June 1994.

[12] Appeal Judgement, para. 2552.
[13] Appeal Judgement, para. 2552.
[14] Emphasis added. See also supra, fn. 8.

8. We also note that, while the Prosecution was in possession of information regarding the date of the late May incident through Witness QJ's written statements when charging Kanyabashi, it did not have information on any incident of incitement by megaphone occurring in mid-June 1994.[15] In this respect, we recall that it is the well established jurisprudence of the Appeals Chamber that "the Prosecution is expected to know its case before proceeding to trial and may not rely on the weaknesses of its own investigation in order to mould the case against the accused in the course of the trial depending on how the evidence unfolds."[16] In light of the fact that the Prosecution only charged Kanyabashi based on megaphone incident(s) taking place "[i]n or around late May, 1994, on at least on one occasion" in paragraph 5.8 of the Kanyabashi Indictment and was not in possession of any information regarding the mid-June 1994 incident when charging Kanyabashi and up until Witness QI testified at trial, we are of the view that the mid-June 1994 megaphone incident was not part of the Prosecution case against Kanyabashi at the time of the filing of the Indictment.

9. Accordingly, we believe that the Trial Chamber erred in convicting Kanyabashi of an incident of incitement by megaphone in mid-June 1994 since he was not charged on this basis in the Kanyabashi Indictment. We would therefore have acquitted Kanyabashi of the mid-June 1994 incident.

2. Assessment of the Evidence: Late May 1994 Incident

10. Turning to the merits of Kanyabashi's appeal against his conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide by making megaphone announcements in Butare Town, we would also have acquitted Kanyabashi of the late May 1994 incident for the reasons expressed below.

11. We recall that the Appeals Chamber – and we concur with this conclusion – found that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that the evidence established that megaphone announcements from a moving vehicle were part of a modus operandi by which messages from Kanyabashi were delivered

[15] In this respect, we note that, in paragraph 2556 of the Appeal Judgement, the Majority – after having found that the Kanyabashi Indictment was defective but could be cured by the provision of timely, clear, and consistent information – correctly notes that "there is no mention of the allegation of megaphone announcements in the Prosecution's pre-trial brief or opening statement." The Majority then proceeds to examine whether Witnesses QJ's and QI's summaries and prior statements can remedy the defect in the Kanyabashi Indictment. While the Majority concludes that, "[a]lthough not obvious from a reading of Witnesses QJ's and QI's summaries", "a review of the witnesses' prior statements confirms that both witnesses were referring to two distinct incidents implicating Kanyabashi in delivering a message using a megaphone", it fails short to provide any explanation. See idem. Indeed, a review of the witnesses' prior statements, even in light of the witnesses' summaries, does not confirm that both witnesses were referring to two distinct incidents. While they contain differences, they are also very similar in many respects. See ibid., fns. 5934-5936. In our view, these materials are inconclusive at to whether the witnesses were referring to two distinct incidents and, more importantly, certainly do not prove that the Prosecution intended to charge Kanyabashi with a second incident occurring in mid-June1994.

[16] See, e.g., Ntagerura et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 27. See also Kupreškić et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 92; Niyitegeka Appeal Judgement, para. 194; Kvočka et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 30.

to the population of Ngoma Commune from April through June 1994.[17] We further recall that, as correctly noted by the Appeals Chamber,[18] the Trial Chamber relied on Witness QJ's evidence to reach its factual conclusion with respect to the late May 1994 megaphone announcement in the following terms:

> Insofar as Witness QJ's account was also corroborated and complemented by evidence establishing a pattern of préfecture announcements being disseminated from a vehicle with a public address system, the Chamber finds that the Prosecution has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that around late May 1994 Kanyabashi drove through Butare town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[19]

12. In light of the wording of the Trial Chamber's conclusion, it is clear that the Trial Chamber only relied on Witness QJ's evidence concerning the May 1994 megaphone announcement "[i]nsofar as [his] account was corroborated and complemented by evidence establishing a pattern of préfecture announcements being disseminated from a vehicle with a public address system".[20] Having determined that the Trial Chamber's findings as they concern the modus operandi were unreasonable, the Majority finds that "Witness TK's evidence alone, which the Trial Chamber found credible and corroborative of Witness QJ's testimony, sufficient to sustain the Trial Chamber's reliance on Witness QJ's direct evidence that around late May 1994 Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them."[21] It adds that "this evidence is sufficiently complementary and corroborative of Witness QJ's evidence of 'announcements being disseminated from a vehicle with a public address system'."[22] In light of these findings, the Majority concludes that the Trial Chamber's error in finding and relying on the existence of a modus operandi has not occasioned a miscarriage of justice and, therefore, finds that Kanyabashi has failed to demonstrate that the Trial Chamber erred in finding that, around late May 1994, Kanyabashi drove through Butare Town with a megaphone and instructed the population to search for the enemy among them.[23]

13. However, in our view, and contrary to the Majority's position,[24] the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness TK's evidence partly corroborated Witness QJ's testimony.[25] Indeed, Witness TK's evidence that an announcement was made to the public with a megaphone from a vehicle by someone else than Kanyabashi is insufficiently linked to Witness QJ's testimony that Kanyabashi directly and publicly incited genocide using a megaphone announcement in late [17] Appeal Judgement, paras. 2600-2602. See also ibid., para. 2644.

May 1994. Witness TK's evidence concerns the conduct of someone else than Kanyabashi. Thus, it simply cannot be corroborative of Witness QJ's testimony. On this basis, we believe that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Witness TK's evidence corroborated Witness QJ's evidence of Kanyabashi inciting the population using a megaphone in May 1994.

14. Having found that the Trial Chamber's findings as they concern the modus operandi were unreasonable and that the Trial Chamber erred in concluding that Witness TK's evidence corroborated Witness QJ's concerning the May 1994 megaphone announcement, we would have found that Witness QJ's evidence is no longer corroborated in the manner in which the Trial Chamber required it to be in order to reach findings beyond reasonable doubt. Consequently, we believe that these errors have occasioned a miscarriage of justice and that fairness requires that the findings concerning the May 1994 megaphone announcement must be set aside.

3. Conclusion

15. For the foregoing reasons, we disagree with both the reasoning and the conclusions of the Majority concerning Kanyabashi's conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide by making megaphone announcements in Butare Town in late May and mid-June 1994. Given that the mid-June 1994 incident was never part of the Prosecution case against Kanyabashi at the time of the filing of the Indictment and up until Witness QI testified at trial, we would have acquitted Kanyabashi of the mid-June 1994 incident. Moreover, having found that Witness QJ's testimony is no longer corroborated in the manner in which the Trial Chamber required it to be in order to reach findings beyond reasonable doub, we would also have acquitted Kanyabashi of the late May 1994 incident. Accordingly, we would have reversed Kanyabashi's conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide for the late May and mid-June 1994 megaphone announcements.

16. In light of the above, and the fact that the Appeal Chamber reversed Kanybashi convictions in relation to the killings perpetrated at Kabakobwa Hill on 22 April 1994 as well as his convictions for failing to prevent the soldiers from committing the killings at Matyazo Clinic in late April 1994 and punish them,[26] we would have acquitted Kanyabashi fully.

XVI. DISSENTING AND SEPARATE OPINIONS OF JUDGE AGIUS

1. I respectfully disagree with the Majority's position concerning: (i) Ndayambaje's and Nteziryayo's arrest and initial appearance; (ii) the reversal of the convictions of Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje for persecution as a crime against humanity; (iii) Kanyabashi's conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide for the late May and mid-June 1994 Megaphone Announcements; (iv) Ntahobali's appeal on sentencing related to the Trial Chamber's assessment of the gravity of the offences; and (v) the impact of the Appeals Chamber's findings on Nyiramasuhuko's, Ntahobali's, and Ndayambaje's sentences. Moreover, I attach to this Judgement a separate opinion setting out my position in relation to the mode of responsibility of aiding and abetting.

2. My position concerning Kanyabashi's conviction for direct and public incitement to commit genocide for the late May and mid-June 1994 Megaphone Announcements is expressed above, in a joint dissenting opinion with Judge Pocar.[1] I discuss my views in relation to the other matters below.

A. Dissenting Opinion: Ndayambaje's and Nteziryayo's Arrest and Initial Appearance

1. Ndayambaje's Arrest and Initial Appearance

3. In this Judgement, the Majority declines to consider on the merits Ndayambaje's submissions concerning the legality of his detention prior to the issuance of the indictment against him, as well as the delays in his transfer to the Tribunal and in his initial appearance following the issuance of his indictment.[2] The Majority also declines to examine Ndayambaje's submissions that these delays resulted in violations of his right to be promptly informed of the charges against him, his right to counsel, and his right to initial appearance without delay.[3] It does so on the basis that Ndayambaje failed to raise these submissions during the course of his trial and in his notice of appeal, and that he has failed to identify the error allegedly committed by the Trial Chamber which would justifiy the intervention of the Appeals Chamber.[4] Further, the Majority states that it "does not consider that the seriousness of the violations alleged by Ndayambaje constitutes special circumstances warranting the consideration on the merits of these allegations raised for the first time in the Ndayambaje Appeal Brief or at the appeal hearing."[5] The Majority concludes that

Ndayambaje has therefore waived his right to raise these issues on appeal, and dismisses the relevant part of Ndayambaje's appeal "without further consideration".[6]

4. For the reasons set out below, I respectfully disagree with the approach taken by the Majority and its decision not to consider Ndayambaje's submissions on the merits. In my view, the Appeals Chamber ought to examine the merits of his submissions.

(a) The Issue of Waiver

5. I accept that, as a general principle, if a party raises no objection to a particular issue before the Trial Chamber, in the absence of "special circumstances", the Appeals Chamber will find that the party has waived its right to adduce the issue on appeal.[7] I am also aware that this waiver principle has been applied to allegations of fair trial violations, including allegations of violations of the right to initial appearance without delay and the right to counsel of one's own choosing.[8] However, as set out below, I am not convinced that Ndayambaje did waive his right to adduce the issues on appeal. On the contrary, in my view, he sufficiently raised the issues at trial. Furthermore, even if Ndayambaje had failed to raise these issues, I consider that the nature of the alleged fair trial violations, and particularly their gravity and seriousness in the circumstances described by Ndayambaje, constitutes "special circumstances" requiring the Appeals Chamber to address his submissions on the merits, or otherwise warrants its intervention in the interests of justice.

6. I should note at the outset that I am not in a position to properly assess the merits or accuracy of Ndayambaje's submissions or to establish the precise nature and extent of any violation of his rights. In my view, were the Appeals Chamber minded to consider his submissions on the merits, it would require and indeed should request submissions in writing from both Ndayambaje and the Prosecution.[9] My point is that the seriousness of the alleged violations warrants the attention and concern of the Appeals Chamber, which, upon full briefing by the parties, would then make its own determination on the issues. I will therefore limit my dissenting opinion to whether the Majority rightfully declined to examine Ndayambaje's submissions.

(i) Whether Ndayambaje failed to raise the issues at trial

7. I agree with the Majority that Ndayambaje did not raise the allegations of violations of his right to be promply informed of the charges against him and his right to counsel in his notice of appeal.[10] However, I respectfully disagree with the Majority that "Ndayambaje has further failed to demonstrate that he raised these allegations of violations of his rights at trial".[11] In particular, I take a different view from the Majority when it states that "contrary to Ndayambaje's argument, these allegations were not raised in the motions he referred to during the appeals hearing."[12] I consider that the relevant motions do in fact raise the relevant issues.

8. At the appeal hearing, in response to the Prosecution's submission that he failed to previously raise any issue concerning the appointment of counsel,[13] Ndayambaje referred to a motion dated 28 November 1996, which he stated "underscored his difficulties" in relation to the right to counsel of one's choosing.[14] I note that the Motion of 29 November 1996 indicates, inter alia, that Ndayambaje was assigned counsel by the Registrar of the Tribunal on 22 November 1996 and that they met for the first time on the eve of Ndayambaje's initial appearance, on 28 November 1996.[15] The Motion of 29 November 1996 further reflects that Ndayambaje sought to be represented by a different counsel than the assigned counsel, and that the assigned counsel requested the Trial Chamber's intervention to resolve the dispute between Ndayambaje and the Registrar on the assignment of counsel.[16] I note further that, in a correspondence to the Registrar dated 3 December 1996, Ndayambaje reiterated his position that the assigned counsel was not counsel of his choice and provided the names of several lawyers whose assignment would satisfy him.[17] Nonetheless, it appears that Ndayambaje continued to be represented by the assigned counsel at least until 7 July 1998, when the Trial Chamber granted motions by Ndayambaje for the withdrawal of the assigned counsel and the assignment of new counsel to his case.[18]

9. In response to the Prosecution's submissions that he had also failed to raise issues regarding the delay in service of the Indictment and other pre-trial delays,[19] Ndayambaje referred to an extremely urgent motion for provisional release dated 15 August 2002 and filed 21 August 2002.[20] Ndayambaje stated that, while the violation of his right to counsel had prevented him from raising arguments during the initial pre-trial period with respect to the right to be informed of the charges against him, all of the relevant circumstances, dates and delays were "clearly indicated in that motion".[21] I observe that in the Motion of 21 August 2002, Ndayambaje requested provisional release on the basis of the unduly long period of time in which he had been in detention and the prospect of the trial being exceptionally long, asserting that continued detention throughout the trial would be prejudicial to him.[22] Ndayambaje also asserted that, as of 24 January 1996, his detention in Belgium was based on the request of the ICTR Prosecutor, and that while an indictment was issued against him on 21 June 1996, it was not served on him until 12 August 1996.[23] He further noted that he was transferred to Arusha three months later, on 8 November 1996, which according to him was 289 days after his provisional arrest at the request of the ICTR Prosecutor.[24] Additionally, in describing the many delays to the commencement of his trial, Ndayambaje pointed to the fact that he made his initial appearance before the Trial Chamber on 29 November 1996.[25] Finally, he argued that "his detention to date largely exceeds any acceptable standard".[26]

10. In these circumstances, I am unable to see how Ndayambaje can be claimed to have failed to raise any objection to the alleged violations before the Trial Chamber. In my view, Ndayambaje set out in detail the factual circumstances which form the basis of his allegations and sought remedies for these alleged violations before the Trial Chamber. Furthermore, the Trial Chamber issued its determination on the issues raised by Ndayambaje in a decision on the Motion of 21 August 2002, rejecting his submission that the delays suffered by him were unacceptable.[27] Recalling that "[t]he obligation is on the complaining party to bring the difficulties to the attention of the Trial Chamber forthwith so that the latter can determine whether any assistance could be provided under the Rules or Statute to relieve the situation",[28] and emphasising the duty of the Trial Chamber to ensure the fairness of the trial,[29] I consider that Ndayambaje sufficiently brought his complaints to the Trial Chamber's attention in such a way as to oblige the Trial Chamber to act on the issues and address his allegations with careful attention.

11. Further, in my view, any waiver of the right to adduce issues on appeal must be unequivocal. I emphasise in this respect that the European Court of Human Rights ("ECtHR") has held that a waiver of a procedural right, including the right to appeal, must be established in an unequivocal manner and be attended by minimum safeguards commensurate with its importance.[30] I consider that these principles should apply in the instant case, particularly as it concerns allegations of breaches of fundamental fair trial rights.[31] Moreover, I find it very difficult to accept that Ndayambaje has unequivocally waived his right to raise the relevant matters on appeal, for the following reasons.

12. First, as set out above, in my view the Motion of 29 November 1996 and Motion of 21 August 2002 clearly relate to the same issues that Ndayambaje elaborated upon in his oral submissions (even if they do not precisely mirror those submissions), and request the Trial Chamber to grant appropriate relief.[32] Second, in his oral submissions in reply, Ndayambaje disputed the Prosecution's assertion that he had not raised the relevant issues before the Trial Chamber, and drew the Appeals Chamber's attention to the motions.[33] Third, in his appeal brief Ndayambaje clearly (albeit briefly) set out his allegations concerning the delays he suffered before his initial appearance and the alleged violation of his right to be informed of the charges.[34] Fourth, Ndayambaje's submission that he was without legal counsel for almost all of the period between his

In this context, the Appeals Chamber also recalls that the right to be tried without undue delay is provided under Article 21(4)(c) of the Statute and embodied in numerous international human rights instruments and is an inseparable and constituent element of the right to a fair trial. Accordingly, the trial chamber has a duty to be proactive in ensuring that the accused is tried without undue delay, regardless of whether the accused himself asserts that right.") Moreover, such waiver, in order to be effective for Convention purposes, requires minimum guarantees commensurate to its importance. The Court further considers that the waiver of a right to appeal is, in principle, permissible if the principles mentioned above are adhered to."); Natsvlishvili and Togonidze v. Georgia, ECtHR, No. 9043/05, Judgment, 29 April 2014, para. 91 ("it is also a cornerstone principle that any waiver of procedural rights must always, if it is to be effective for Convention purposes, be established in an unequivocal manner and be attended by minimum safeguards commensurate with its importance. In addition, it must not run counter to any important public interest."). When examining the circumstances to ensure minimum safeguards are in place, the ECtHR considered, inter alia, whether an applicant benefited from legal representation and whether he was aware of the consequences of his waiver and waived his right to appeal voluntarily. See, e.g., *Natsvlishvili and Togonidze v. arrest and initial appearance[35] raises serious questions as to whether he was in a position to be able to effectively object to issues before the Trial Chamber during that time.[36] To my mind, these are strong indications that Ndayambaje has not waived his right unequivocally. Regardless, if there is the slightest doubt as to whether the appellant has waived his right, and where the relevant submissions address fundamental fair trial rights, I firmly believe that we ought to err in favour of the appellant in considering those submissions.

(ii) Whether the Appeals Chamber should nevertheless consider Ndayambaje's submissions

13. As noted above, the Majority "does not consider that the seriousness of the violations alleged by Ndayambaje constitutes special circumstances warranting the consideration on the merits of these allegations raised for the first time in the Ndayambaje Appeal Brief or at the appeal hearing."[37] Here, I must respectfully but strongly disagree. Even if I were to agree with the Majority that Ndayambaje did not object to the relevant issues at trial, in my view, the seriousness of the alleged violations in this case most certainly warrants the attention and consideration of the Appeals Chamber.

14. I emphasise in this respect that Ndayambaje has raised issues of the utmost gravity regarding breaches of his fundamental fair trial rights. He alleges, inter alia, that he was in detention for 202 days without a warrant of arrest and without an indictment;[38] that he was without legal counsel for 303 days after his arrest;[39] and that the total number of days between his arrest and initial appearance was 311 days.[40]

15. The Tribunal has acknowledged the crucial importance of the rights of a detainee to be brought promptly before a Judge and to be informed of the charges against him.[41] These rights concern the fundamental right to liberty and their protection is key to ensuring that other basic rights of the detainee are respected.[42] I note that the Appeals Chamber held in the Kajelijeli Appeal

The strict time constraint imposed by this requirement leaves little flexibility in interpretation, otherwise there would be a serious weakening of a procedural guarantee to the detriment of the individual and the risk of impairing the very essence of the right protected by this provision"); Öcalan v. Turkey, ECtHR, No. 46221/99, Judgment, 12 May 2005, para. 103 ("The Grand Chamber notes

Judgement that a delay of 85 days in serving an arrest warrant and a redacted indictment after a suspect's arrest could not be considered "prompt" or "immediate" within the meaning of the Tribunal's Statute and Rules, and that it was "clearly unlawful and was in violation of the suspect's rights under the Tribunal's Statute and Rules as well as international human rights law".[43] In the present case, where Ndayambaje asserts that he was kept in custody for a period of over six months without a warrant of arrest and without receiving notice of the charges against him, the extent of the alleged violations is far more serious and alarming.

16. Ndayambaje's submission that he was without legal representation from the time of his arrest and until the assignment of duty counsel on 22 November 1996 is also extremely concerning. The right to counsel is one of the fundamental features of a fair trial, being crucial for the ability of the accused to defend himself and to protect his procedural rights.[44] In this light, I am also most concerned by Ndayambaje's submission that, because he was without counsel for almost all of the period between his arrest and initial appearance, he was not able to make submissions before the Trial Chamber concerning alleged violations of other fair trial rights during that time.[45]

17. For these reasons, I simply cannot agree with the Majority that the violations alleged by Ndayambaje are insufficiently serious to constitute "special circumstances". On the contrary, I would consider such breaches, if substantiated, to be an egregious violation of Ndayambaje's fair trial rights. While I again make no comment as to whether such violations have occurred,[46] the very nature of the allegations disturbs me to my core.

at the outset the importance of the guarantees afforded by Article 5 § 3 to an arrested person. The purpose of this provision is to ensure that arrested persons are physically brought before a judicial authority promptly. 18. I acknowledge (as noted above) that the waiver principle has been applied in cases involving alleged violations of fair trial rights.[47] However, in my view, the seriousness of the allegations in this case eclipses that of the alleged violations in those cases.[48] Further, I note that in other cases concerning alleged violations of fair trial rights, the Appeals Chamber has decided to consider submissions – notwithstanding a party's failure to object to the relevant issues at trial – given the general importance of the matter[49] or because it concerned an integral component of the right to a fair trial.[50] I consider that the principles established therein clearly allow the Appeals Chamber to intervene and examine Ndayambaje's submissions in the present case.[51]

19. Most notably, the Appeals Chamber has exercised its discretion in such a manner in the present Judgement. In the section of the Judgement dealing with the appellants' right to be tried without undue delay,[52] the Appeals Chamber has considered Nteziryayo's submissions on undue delay despite the fact that he did not raise them at trial.[53] In addition, it has proprio motu considered the impact of its findings on undue delay on Nsabimana's rights, regardless of the fact that he did not raise allegations on this issue at all.[54] The Appeals Chamber has addressed these arguments "[c]onsidering the extraordinary length of these proceedings, the Trial Chamber's determination in the Trial Judgement that none of the co-Accused's right to a trial without undue delay had been violated, and the interests of justice".[55] I fully agree with this approach.

20. In these circumstances, I am unsure why the Majority is unwilling to also examine Ndayambaje's arguments in the interests of justice, given that his submissions – like Nteziryayo's – relate to serious matters of delay, inter alia, and the Trial Chamber made determinations on the relevant issues.[56] I consider that the allegations raised by Ndayambaje concern not one, but several, integral components of a fair trial, and that these matters are undoubtedly of "general importance". I emphasise further that, as held in the Mucić et al case, the Appeals Chamber "has an inherent power, deriving from its judicial function, to control its proceedings in such a way as to ensure that justice is done."[57] I strongly believe that the allegations brought before us by Ndayambaje relate to the protection of the most fundamental fair trial rights, and indeed call on the Appeals Chamber to utilise its inherent powers in the interests of justice.

(b) Conclusion

21. For the foregoing reasons I respectfully, but strongly, disagree with the Majority that Ndayambaje has waived his right to raise the alleged violations of his fair trial rights on appeal. I also respectfully, but strongly, disagree that the seriousness of these alleged violations does not warrant consideration of his arguments on the merits. In my view, the interests of justice dictate that the Appeals Chamber consider the merits of Ndayambaje's submissions. Accordingly, and it pains me to say it, I cannot accept that the Majority's refusal to consider Ndayambaje's submissions will lead to a just result.

2. Nteziryayo's Arrest and Initial Appearance

22. In the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, the Appeals Chamber, of which I was a part, granted the Prosecution's request for summary dismissal of Nteziryayo's allegation of violation of his rights as a result of the delay between his arrest and his initial appearance, on the ground that Nteziryayo had waived his right to raise the issue on appeal.[58] At the appeals hearing, Nteziryayo requested inter alia that the Appeals Chamber reconsider its decision to summarily dismiss his submissions, in light particularly of the fact that the length of delay now appeared to be "no less than 144 days".[59]

23. In this Judgement, the Majority declines to reconsider the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision and to examine on the merits Nteziryayo's allegation of violation of his rights resulting from the delay between his arrest and initial appearance.[60] For the reasons explained below, I respectfully disagree with the reasoning and the outcome reached by the Majority.

24. I recall that the Appeals Chamber may reconsider a previous interlocutory decision under its inherent discretionary power to do so if a clear error of reasoning has been demonstrated or if it is necessary to do so to prevent an injustice.[61] In this case, I consider that the Appeals Chamber should have reconsidered the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision as it contains a clear error of reasoning. Moreover, although I am not in a position to assess whether reconsideration is necessary to prevent an injustice, I consider that Nteziryayo's allegations, if substantiated, would constitute serious violations of his fair trial rights.[62]

25. In the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, the Appeals Chamber found that "none of the arguments raised by Nteziryayo constitute special circumstances that may convince the Appeals Chamber to exercise its discretion to entertain Nteziryayo's allegation of error despite his failure to raise the issue in the nearly 14 years that the trial proceedings lasted in his case."[63] I observe that, at the time, Nteziryayo had submitted inter alia that the issue of the delay between his arrest and initial appearance was a central feature of the right to a fair trial, and that summary dismissal was inappropriate given the Prosecution's acknowledgement of the "anomalous" delay between his arrest and initial appearance.[64]

26. Having reconsidered the issue, I find that Nteziryayo's arguments should have led the Appeals Chamber to conclude, in 2013, that special circumstances existed and therefore should have convinced the Appeals Chamber to exercise its discretion to entertain Nteziryayo's allegation of violation of his fair trial rights in light of the delays between his arrest and initial appearance. In this respect, I emphasise that Nteziryayo had raised serious issues regarding breaches of his fundamental fair trial rights. In his relevant appeal submissions, Nteziryayo alleged that 115 days had elapsed between his arrest on behalf of the Tribunal and his presentation to a Judge during his initial appearance, and that the delay between his transfer and initial appearance amounted to 88 days.[65] For the reasons explained above in relation to Ndayambaje, I cannot agree that such alleged violations are insufficiently serious to constitute "special circumstances".[66] I would consider such breaches, if substantiated, to be serious violations of Nteziryayo's fair trial rights. While I cannot make any comment as to whether such violations actually occurred,[67] the very nature of the

[67] I am not in a position to properly assess the merits or accuracy of Nteziryayo's submissions. I observe that, at the time of the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, the Prosecution had requested the Appeals Chamber, as an alternative to the summarily dismissal of Nteziryayo argument, to: (i) instruct the Registry to certify that five documents pertaining to allegations is sufficiently serious to warrant the Appeals Chamber's attention. I therefore conclude that the Appeals Chamber erred in considering in its 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision that none of Nteziryayo's arguments constituted "special circumstances". I further find that the fact that the authorities of Burkina Faso have since indicated that the date of Nteziryayo's arrest was almost a month earlier than the date taken into account in the Trial Judgement and in the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision,[68] increases the seriousness of the possible violations. Indeed, it reinforces my conclusion that the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision should have been reconsidered by the Appeals Chamber.

27. Moreover, I find the way the Majority deals with the waiver principle in this Judgement to be inconsistent and unpredictable. I recall that, in dealing with the appellants' right to be tried without undue delay, the Appeals Chamber has considered Nteziryayo's submissions on undue delay despite the fact that he did not raise them at trial.[69] The Appeals Chamber has addressed his arguments "[c]onsidering the extraordinary length of these proceedings, the Trial Chamber's determination in the Trial Judgement that none of the co-Accused's right to a trial without undue delay had been violated, and the interests of justice".[70] As indicated previously, I am in full agreement with this approach.[71] However, I find no valid reason for the Majority not to apply the same reasoning to other serious allegations of violations of Nteziryayo's rights resulting from the delay between his arrest and initial appearance. To the contrary, I find that the Majority's decision to treat these similar allegations of fair trial violations in a different manner creates inconsistency and unpredictability in the application of the waiver principle in this case.[72] Here again, I believe that the Appeals Chamber's decision to address Nteziryayo's arguments on undue delay, despite the waiver principle, strongly supports that there was a clear error of reasoning in the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, and that special circumstances exist in this case that should have convinced the Appeals Chamber to exercise its discretion to entertain Nteziryayo's allegations on the merits.

Nteziryayo's arrest and detention in Burkina Faso and his transfer to the Tribunal's detention facility ("Documents") were part of the record on appeal or, if the Appeals Chamber found that the Documents were not part of the record, admit them as additional evidence on appeal pursuant to Rule 115 of the Rules of Procedure and Evidence of the Tribunal; and (ii) instruct the Registry pursuant to Rule 33(B) of the Rules to provide clarifications on the dates of, and actions related to, Nteziryayo's arrest, transfer, appointment of counsel, and initial appearance. See 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, para. 4. In my view, were the Appeals Chamber minded to reconsider the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision and consider Nteziryayo's submissions on the merits, the alternative request of the Prosecution should have been considered and dealt with, and further submissions requested from both Ndayambaje and the Prosecution. Upon full briefing by the parties, the Appeals Chamber would then make its own determination on the issues.

[68] As a result of Nteziryayo's request for clarification of the date of his arrest, the Appeals Chamber instructed the Registrar to make written representations as to Nteziryayo's date of arrest. See 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision, paras. 19-23. On 14 March 2014, the Registrar indicated that the authorities of Burkina Faso provided the date of the arrest of Nteziryayo as 26 March 1998. See Appeal Judgement, fn. 18. The Trial Chamber initially stated in the Trial Judgement that Nteziryayo was arrested in Burkina Faso on 24 April 1998. See Trial Judgement, paras. 49, 6309.

[69] Appeal Judgement, paras. 355, 358. In addition, the Appeals Chamber has proprio motu considered the impact of its findings on undue delay on Nsabimana's rights, regardless of the fact that he did not raise allegations on this issue at all. See Appeal Judgement, paras. 358, 398. See also supra, para. 19.

28. Based on the foregoing, I find myself unable to agree with the Majority's decision not to reconsider the 5 July 2013 Appeal Decision and examine on the merits Nteziryayo's allegations of violations of his right resulting from the delay between his arrest and initial appearance.

B. Dissenting Opinion: the Crime of Persecution as a Crime Against Humanity

29. The Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje for persecution as a crime against humanity on the basis of their individual criminal responsibility for killings of Tutsis between April and June 1994.[73] In this Judgement, the Majority overturns their convictions in this respect.[74] For the reasons detailed below, I respectfully, but strongly, disagree with the reasoning and the conclusion reached by the Majority.

30. I should first emphasise that I do not contest that, in light of Article 3(h) of the Statute, the jurisdiction of the Tribunal over the crime of persecution as a crime against humanity is limited to the three listed discriminatory grounds, namely "racial, political and religious grounds."[75] As a result, I agree with the Appeals Chamber's finding that the Trial Chamber erred in law to the extent that it intended to convict Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje on the basis that they acted with discriminatory intent on "ethnic" grounds as a separate discriminatory ground.[76]

31. I also concur with the Appeals Chamber's statement that while the Statute "is legally a very different instrument from an international treaty", it is to be interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms in their context and in the light of its object and purpose, within the meaning of Article 31(1) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 1969, which reflects customary international law.[77] However, I disagree with the way the Majority applies this principle of interpretation in this case. In my view, the interpretation conducted by the Majority erroneously leads it to conclude that discrimination on the basis of "ethnicity" cannot be included in one of the three listed discriminatory grounds of persecution and, in particular, under "racial grounds".[78]

[74] Appeal Judgement, para. 2141.
[75] Appeal Judgement, para. 2136. I also do not dispute that the Trial Chamber's reliance on the Nahimana et al. Appeal Judgement to reach this finding was misplaced. See Appeal Judgement, para. 2138.
[76] Appeal Judgement, para. 2139.
[77] Appeal Judgement, para. 2137 and references cited therein.
[78] Appeal Judgement, para. 2137.

32. The Majority reasons as follows: it first notes that the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute distinguishes "ethnicity" from "race" in the listed discriminatory grounds for the attack against a civilian population.[79] The Majority then finds that:

> "[a]ccording to the ordinary meaning of the terms of the provision, such distinction reflects the autonomy between the two notions. This conclusion is also supported by a contextual reading of Article 3 of the Statute which makes it clear that 'ethnicity' cannot be encapsulated in 'race'. Indeed, interpreting the discriminatory ground of 'race' in Article 3(h) of the Statute as including 'ethnicity' would render the distinction in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute redundant, illogical, and superfluous."[80]

33. I disagree that the fact that "ethnic" and "racial" are listed as two separate terms under the chapeau element of Article 3 of the Statute indicates that the two notions are autonomous with respect to persecution as a crime against humanity. I am of the view that this distinction does not mechanically lead to the conclusion that discrimination on the basis of ethnicity cannot overlap or be encompassed in other discriminatory grounds for persecution, in particular, "racial" grounds. The Majority does not interpret the Statute in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms "ethnic" and "racial" in their context, but merely states that since the Statute refers to both "ethnicity" and "race", these terms must be different and cannot overlap in any way. This reasoning appears overly restrictive.

34. I further note that when the Majority states that interpreting the discriminatory ground of "racial" in Article 3(h) of the Statute as including "ethnicity" would render the distinction in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute redundant, illogical, and superfluous, it implies that the intention of the drafters of the Statute was to deliberately exclude discrimination on the basis of ethnicity from the definition of persecution by mentioning in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute both the terms "ethnic" and "racial". However, as outlined below, I do not detect any such intention from the drafters of the Statute to exclude crimes committed on the basis of ethnicity from the crime of persecution. Further, in my view, the Majority places too much emphasis on the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute, while in fact this additional jurisdictional requirement is of a very different nature from the discriminatory intent required for persecution as a crime against humanity.[81] In doing so, the Majority fails to address the relevant question in this case, which is to define [79] Appeal Judgement, para. 2137. I note that the Majority refers to "ethnicity" in its reasoning while in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute the term "ethnic" is used.

[80] Appeal Judgement, para. 2137.
[81] In this respect, I observe that the additional discriminatory grounds contained in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute narrow the jurisdiction of the Tribunal over crimes against humanity further than would otherwise have been necessary under international customary law, and do not create an additional requirement of discriminatory intent for crimes against humanity other than for the crime of persecution. See Akayesu Appeal Judgement, paras. 465, 466, 469; Tadić Appeal Judgement, para. 305. See also Bagosora et al. Trial Judgement, paras. 2166, 2208. I also note that the discriminatory grounds contained in the chapeau of Article 3 of the Statute are not reproduced in Article 5 of the ICTY Statute.

persecution on "racial grounds" as a crime against humanity under Article 3(h) of the Statute at the time the Statute was adopted.

35. In this respect, I recall that as a general principle, provisions of the Statute defining the crimes within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal should always be interpreted as reflecting customary international law, unless an intention to depart from customary international law is expressed in the terms of the Statute, or discerned from other authoritative sources.[82] I cannot discern such will to depart here. Indeed it appears that the intention of the drafters of the Statute was to mirror the definition of crimes against humanity adopted in the Charter of the International Military Tribunal for the Trial of the Major War Criminals annexed to the London Agreement of 8 August 1945 ("Nuremberg Charter") and in the Control Council Law No. 10, which the Secretary General considered to be reflective of international customary law.[83]

36. Having reviewed relevant international sources, I conclude that at the time of the adoption of the Statute, persecution on "racial grounds" as a crime against humanity was understood under international customary law as including discrimination on the basis of ethnicity. In this respect, I observe that Article 1.1 of the broadly ratified International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination defines racial discrimination as "any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin."[84] Indeed, the CERD differentiates the terms "race" and "ethnic", just as the Statute does, but also establishes that exclusion, restriction or preference based on "race" and "ethnic" origin constitutes "racial" discrimination in both cases.

37. Moreover the travaux préparatoires of the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide of 9 December 1948 ("Genocide Convention") do not support the conclusion that the notions "ethnical" and "racial" were autonomous at the time of the adoption of [82] Tadić Appeal Judgement, para. 296. See also Tadić Appeal Judgement, para. 287 ("In the case of the Statute, it must be presumed that the Security Council, where it did not explicitly or implicitly depart from general rules of international law, intended to remain within the confines of such rules").

[83] See Report of the Secretary General Pursuant to Paragraph 2 of Security Council Resolution 808 (1993), U.N. Doc. S/25704, 3 May 1993, paras. 47-49 ("Report of the Secretary General on ICTY"); Report of the Secretary General Pursuant to Paragraph 5 of the Security Council Resolution 955 (1994), U.N. Doc. S/1995/134, 13 February 1995, para. 11, fn. 5 ("Report of the Secretary General on ICTR"). There is no discussion in the Report of the Secretary General on ICTY about the proposed definition of persecution as a crime against humanity and its limitation to persecution committed on "political, racial and religious grounds" in the ICTY Statute. The Report of the Secretary General on ICTY reflects, however, that the definition of persecution suggested by the United Nations Secretary General was based on the definition of the crime provided for in the Nuremberg Charter and the Law No. 10 of the Control Council. The Report of the Secretary General on ICTR merely refers to the list of crimes against humanity defined in Article 5 of the ICTY Statute, suggesting that the definition of the crime was by analogy also based on the Nuremberg Charter and Law No. 10 of the Control Council.
[84] Article 1.1, International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination adopted by General Assembly Resolution 2106(XX), UN Doc. A/RES/20/2106, 21 December 1965, entered into force on 4 January 1969 ("CERD"). I note that there are currently 177 States Parties to the CERD.

the Genocide Convention. It appears that there, the term "ethnical" was added at a late stage in the negotiation process and there was no controversy over its addition since it did not appear to be a "fresh category" compared to the groups already listed in the draft of the Genocide Convention, namely "national", "racial", and "religious". No clear delineation of the concept of ethnicity emerged from the travaux préparatoires of the Genocide Convention, in which the concept was considered by the States as largely overlapping or as synonymous with the term "racial" but also in some cases as a "sub-group of a national group" or as "linguistic group".[85]

38. I further note that the post-World War II cases reflect that several convictions were entered for persecution on "racial grounds" as a crime against humanity against the "Poles" and "Jews".[86] In my view, this shows that persecution on "racial grounds" as a crime against humanity was understood in international law at the time as including a broad range of features, including descent or national origin.

39. In my opinion, the foregoing strongly supports the conclusion that at the time the Statute was adopted, persecution on "racial grounds" as a crime against humanity was understood in international customary law as including discrimination on the basis of ethnicity. Accordingly, I consider that persecution on "racial grounds" in Article 3(h) of the Statute should be interpreted as encompassing discrimination on the basis of ethnicity.

40. Moreover, I underline that the Tribunal was created to adjudicate alleged crimes committed in Rwanda in 1994. In this respect, I observe that the Report of the Secretary General on ICTR explicitly makes reference to crimes allegedly committed against the "Tutsi ethnic group."[87] In my view, it would be illogical for the drafters of the Statute to give the Tribunal jurisdiction over persecution as a crime against humanity, but wilfully exclude from its jurisdiction the ground upon which it considered the Tutsis had been persecuted. Concluding otherwise leads to an unreasonable interpretation of Article 3(h) of the Statute.[88]

41. I further note that, although the jurisprudence on the matter is not settled, this interpretation finds some support in the jurisprudence of the ICTY. I highlight the Brđanin Trial Judgement, for instance, where the trial chamber stated that "the concept of 'race' includes 'ethnicity', which [the trial chamber] finds more appropriate to refer to in the context of the present case."[89] The Đorđević Trial Judgement, in which Vladimir Đorđević was convicted of persecution as a crime against humanity on "racial grounds" committed against Kosovo Albanians, also provides support in this respect. In that case, the trial chamber found that the Kosovo Albanians were discriminated against on the basis of their ethnicity.[90] Although this question was not directly addressed by the ICTY Appeals Chamber, the Đorđević Appeal Judgement recalled the applicable law as including only the intent to discriminate on "political, racial, or religious grounds."[91] It then held that the victims were discriminated against on the basis of their ethnicity before concluding that the requirements for persecution were fulfilled, without further precision on the ground under which this conviction was entered.[92] In my view, the Đorđević Appeal Judgement provides further support for considering that discriminatory intent on the basis of ethnicity is covered by "racial grounds".

42. As a result, I consider that, even if the Trial Chamber erred in law to the extent that it intended to convict Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi and Ndayambaje on the basis that they acted with discriminatory intent on "ethnic" grounds as a separate discriminatory ground, this error does not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision to convict them for persecution as a crime against humanity. Having articulated the correct legal standard above, I would conclude that the Trial Chamber's factual findings that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje acted with discriminatory intent against the Tutsi on the basis of their ethnicity conflicts as it would be "illogical for the drafters of the Statute to confer on the International Tribunal the competence to adjudicate the very conduct with which they were concerned only in the event that the context was an international conflict, when they knew that the conflicts at issue in the former Yugoslavia could have been classified, at varying times and places, as internal, international, or both." See Tadić Appeal Decision on Jurisdiction, para. 78.

I also note that, in several cases, ICTY trial chambers reasoned in a similar way to the Đorđević Appeals Chamber. In these cases, trial chambers recalled the applicable law for persecution as including only the intent to discriminate on "political, racial, or religious grounds", but then went on to define the discriminated-against group by reference to ethnicity before concluding that the requirements for persecution were fulfilled. In my view, these ICTY trial judgements provide further support for considering that discriminatory intent on the basis of ethnicity is covered by "racial grounds" for the crime of persecution as a crime against humanity. See Prosecutor v. Vujadin Popović et al., Case No. IT-05-88-T, Judgement, 10 June 2010, paras. 968, 991, 995; *Prosecutor v. support their convictions for persecution on "racial grounds" as a crime against humanity. Accordingly, I would uphold their convictions in this respect.[93]

43. For these reasons, I find myself unable to agree with the Majority that the convictions of Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje for persecution as crime against humanity should be overturned on appeal.

C. Separate Opinion: Aiding and Abetting

44. In the Perišić Appeal Judgement, the majority, of which I was part, set out why "specific direction" had always been an element of aiding and abetting liability pursuant to the jurisprudence of this Tribunal.[94] I acknowledge that appeal judgements have subsequently been issued in the Šainović et al. and the Popović et al. cases, departing from the approach adopted in the Perišić case.[95] However, I remain of the opinion that the decision in the Perišić Appeal Judgement was the correct one, and am not convinced by the reasoning expressed in these subsequent cases. Therefore, I must express my disagreement with paragraphs 1955, 3332, and 3343 of the Judgement to the extent that these paragraphs do not mention "specific direction" when recalling the applicable law on aiding and abetting.[96]

D. Dissenting Opinion: Sentencing

1. Ntahobali's Appeal on the Gravity of the Offences in Sentencing

45. The Majority dismissed Ntahobali's argument that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account rapes perpetrated at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock in assessing the gravity of the offences,[97] because Ntahobali failed to raise this alleged error in his notice of appeal, and thus impermissibly expanded the scope of his appeal.[98] The Majority further finds that the interests of justice do not require consideration of this argument.[99] I respectfully disagree with the Majority for the reasons developed by Judge Liu in his dissenting opinion in this respect. To the extent that Judge Liu explains the reasons why the Majority should have considered Ntahobali's argument and finds that [93] I underline that the question is theoretical in the case of Kanyabashi since I support the reversal of all of his convictions and that, in any event, the Appeals Chamber overturns in this Judgement the factual basis relied upon by the Trial Chamber to convict Kanyabashi for persecution as a crime against humanity. See Appeal Judgement, pp. 1211, 1212; Joint Dissenting Opinion of Judge Pocar and Judge Agius.

the Trial Chamber erred in determining the gravity of the offences in relation to Ntahobali's sentence, I fully endorse his position.[100]

46. I wish, however, to add a further point. I note that the reasons relied upon by the Majority in deciding not to consider Ntahobali's argument are that: (i) all of the co-Appellants shall be treated equally, and that since Nteziryayo was prevented from raising challenges due to his failure to raise them in his notice of appeal, the same should apply to Ntahobali; and (ii) the Prosecution objected to Ntahobali's failure to raise his argument in his notice of appeal.[101] I find this reasoning inconsistent with footnote 7671 of the Judgement, where, contrary to the equality of treatment relied upon by the Majority in declining to examine Ntahobali's argument on the gravity of the offences, the Appeals Chamber exercises its discretion to consider allegations of error on sentencing that were not raised in some of the co-Appellants' notices of appeal.

47. In this footnote, the Appeals Chamber explains that it exercises its discretion to consider allegations of error that some of the co-Appellants' failed to raise in their respective notices of appeal, in light of "the nature of the allegations and the fact that the Prosecution did not object to these allegations on this basis and responded to the appellant's submissions." As explained by Judge Liu, the nature of Ntahobali's allegation on the gravity of the offences clearly justifies the consideration of his argument.[102] In my opinion, it appears that the only difference between Ntahobali's allegation relating to the gravity of the offences and the other co-Appellants' arguments is whether or not the Prosecution objected to the expansion of the scope of the appeal. I do not believe that whether or not the Prosecution objects should be the decisive, if not the only, element to determine whether it is in the interests of justice to examine on the substance an appellant's contention when he or she failed to raise it in his or her notice of appeal.

2. Impact of the Appeals Chamber's Findings on Nyiramasuhuko's, Ntahobali's, and Ndayambaje's Sentences

48. The Majority, addressing the impact of the Appeals Chamber's findings on the Co-Appellants' sentences, reduces the life sentences imposed on Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and [100] Partially Dissenting and Dissenting Opinions of Judge Liu, paras. 25-27. I note that Judge Liu further indicates that, given this error regarding the gravity of offences as well as the error he identified in relation to Ntahobali's liability for ordering the killings and superior responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office, Ntahobali's sentence should be further reduced. See Partially Dissenting and Dissenting Opinions of Judge Liu, para. 28. I do not endorse this statement since, with the Majority, I find that the Trial Chamber did not err in relation to Ntahobali's liability for ordering the killings and superior responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office. My view on the impact of the Appeals Chamber's findings on Ntahobali's sentence is expressed below. See infra, para. 48.

Ndayambaje to 47 years of imprisonment.[103] I find myself unable to agree with the sentences imposed by the Majority in this respect. Having given due consideration to the violation of Nyiramasuhuko's, Ntahobali's, and Ndayambaje's rights to be tried without undue delay and the related prejudice they suffered, as well as the errors committed by the Trial Chamber,[104] I believe that a sentence of 45 years of imprisonment in lieu of life imprisonment more adequately reflects the overall criminal responsibility of Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and Ndayambaje in the present case.

XVII. PARTIALLY DISSENTING AND DISSENTING OPINIONS OF JUDGE LIU

1. I respectfully disagree with the Majority's position on the following: (i) regarding the appeals of Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali on leave to amend the indictment, the Majority upheld the Trial Chamber's position of not requiring the Prosecution to present a prima facie case in support of the new counts;[1] (ii) as to Ntahobali's responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office, the Majority upheld the Trial Chamber's determination that he was responsible for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack,[2] and was responsible as a superior over the Interahamwe who committed crimes based on his orders;[3] and (iii) with respect to sentencing, the Majority found no error in the Trial Chamber's assessment of Nyiramasuhuko's abuse of authority as an aggravating factor,[4] and it declined to consider Ntahobali's appeal on gravity of offences because his contention impermissibly expanded the scope of his appeal.[5] I will discuss my views on these matters in turn.

A. Partially Dissenting Opinion: Leave to Amend Indictment

2. On 10 August 1999, the Trial Chamber granted the Prosecution leave to amend the indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali.[6] The Trial Chamber held that, under Rule 50 of the Rules, there was no necessity to assess whether a prima facie case had been met prior to granting the amendment.[7] The Trial Chamber was satisfied that the Prosecution "provided sufficient grounds both in fact and in law",[8] and determined that the accused will suffer no prejudice as any prejudice can be remedied through Rule 72 of the Rules.[9]

3. Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali both argue, inter alia, that the Trial Chamber erred in law in failing to ascertain the existence of prima facie evidence before granting leave to include six new counts in the indictment and the addition of the charge of superior responsibility.[10] The Majority

[6] I note that with respect to Nyiramasuhuko several new charges were added, including: conspiracy to commit genocide, rape as a crime against humanity, as well as her responsibility pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute. As for Ntahobali, his superior responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute was added in relevant and existing counts of the indictment. See 10 August 1999 Oral Decision; 10 August 1999 Decision, p. 6.

dismissed this submission on the basis that: (a) the requirement to establish a prima facie case for granting leave to amend an indictment pursuant to Rule 50(A)(ii) of the Rules was only introduced on 15 May 2004; (b) prior to this enactment, the practice of trial chambers of the Tribunal was not uniform regarding the need to establish a prima facie case; and (c) the Appeals Chamber, when seised with the matter, provided no guidance on this issue.[11]

4. From the Majority's position, it appears that, on the basis of Rule 50 of the Rules at the time, the Trial Chamber had full discretion to choose whether a prima facie case had to be met or not before granting amendment of the indictment. Respectfully, I disagree. As a matter of law, I believe that prior to granting leave to amend an indictment, a trial chamber must ensure that the new charges satisfy the same requirements applied at the confirmation stage of the original indictment.[12] Specifically, according to Article 18(1) of the Statute, a judge of the Trial Chamber shall confirm an indictment "[i]f satisfied that a prima facie case has been established by the Prosecutor", and if not satisfied, shall dismiss the indictment.[13]

5. While not explicitly stated in Rule 50 of the Rules at the time, it is my view that a prima facie case was required prior to granting an amendment to the indictment against Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali. In particular, I note that Rule 50 of the Rules was placed within the same section of provisions for the confirmation of indictments and no derogation from the general rule could be inferred from the text.[14] In addition, it would be illogical that an amended indictment satisfies lower thresholds than those necessary for the original indictment's confirmation.[15] Finally, allowing an amendment that fails to satisfy a prima facie case could have allowed the Prosecution to insert new counts and undermined the accused's right to be adequately informed of the nature and cause of the charges against him so as to be able to prepare a meaningful defence.[16]

6. Having reviewed the relevant parties' submissions and decisions of the Trial Chamber, I am of the view that a prima facie case could have been, in any event, established prior to the Trial

[13] In the same vein, Rule 47(E) of the Rules, at the time, also provided that the "reviewing Judge shall examine each of the counts in the indictment, and any supporting materials the Prosecutor may provide, to determine, applying the standard set forth in Article 18 of the Statute, whether a case exists against the suspect." See Judge Pocar Individual Opinion, para. 3.

Chamber granting leave to amend the indictment.[17] Despite my disagreement with the Majority's reasoning, I would therefore reject this submission from Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's appeals.

B. Dissenting Opinion: Ntahobali's Responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office

1. Ordering Responsibility for Killings at the Mid-May Attack

7. The Trial Chamber found that, in mid-May 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, and about 10 Interahamwe came to the Butare Prefecture Office in a camouflaged pickup truck and that Nyiramasuhuko pointed out Tutsi refugees to the Interahamwe, ordering them to force the refugees onto the pickup truck.[18] The Trial Chamber found that "Ntahobali also gave the Interahamwe orders, telling them to stop loading the truck because it could not accept anymore dead."[19] The Trial Chamber concluded that refugees were taken to other locations in Butare and killed, and it found that "both Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali were responsible for ordering the killings of numerous Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup."[20]

8. While determining that the Trial Chamber erred in its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion, the Majority concluded that the error did not invalidate the Trial Chamber's decision, as its findings and relevant evidence sustain the conclusion that Ntahobali is responsible under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering the killings of numerous Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup during the Mid-May Attack at the prefectoral office.[21] Contrary to the Majority's position, I cannot agree that the Trial Chamber's error in failing to provide a reasoned opinion did not invalidate Ntahobali's conviction for ordering killings during this specific attack.

9. I recall that a person in a position of authority may incur responsibility for ordering another person to commit an offence if the order has a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act.[22] I find that the Trial Chamber, having concluded that Ntahobali ordered killings of Responsibility for ordering is also incurred when an individual in a position of authority orders an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that order. Ordering with such awareness has to be regarded as accepting that crime. See Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 42. See also Galić Appeal Judgement, para. 157; Kordić and Čerkez Appeal Judgement, para. 30.

Tutsis during the Mid-May Attack,[23] failed to refer to any express order to kill, identify a particular instruction that had a direct and substantial effect on the eventual killings of Tutsis forced to board the pickup truck, or state that it inferred as the only reasonable conclusion that Ntahobali ordered the killings.[24]

10. In my view, the Trial Chamber's failure to provide a reasoned opinion in this regard was further compounded by the absence of findings or relevant evidence that could sustain Ntahobali's conviction for ordering killings during this specific attack. The only order that the Trial Chamber identified was Ntahobali's instruction to the Interahamwe to stop putting refugees on the pickup truck.[25] I fail to see how this instruction could lead to the only reasonable inference that it had direct and substantial effect on the killing of Tutsi refugees who were forced on board the pickup truck.[26] In addition, having reviewed relevant parts of the Trial Judgement and the record, I find that Ntahobali's responsibility cannot be supported on the basis of Witness TA's evidence. According to Witness TA, only Nyiramasuhuko, and not Ntahobali, selected individuals to be placed on the vehicle.[27] Thus, the Trial Chamber's finding that the Interahamwe were acting under Ntahobali's orders to load the truck with Tutsi refugees is not supported by the evidence.

11. For the foregoing reasons, I consider the evidence on the record insufficient to support as the only reasonable conclusion that Ntahobali ordered killings during the Mid-May Attack at the prefectoral office. In these circumstances, I therefore consider that Ntahobali's convictions on this basis should be overturned.

2. Superior Responsibility

12. Recalling that "Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali issued orders to Interahamwe and the Interahamwe complied with these orders and perpetrated the acts asked of them, which included abductions, rapes and killings" as well as "considering the evidence in its entirety", the Trial Chamber found that Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko were in a superior-subordinate relationship over the Interhamwe at the prefectoral office and wielded effective control over them.[28] On this basis, the Trial Chamber determined that Ntahobali was responsible pursuant to Article 6(3) of the Statute for the acts of the Interahamwe against Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office, including their perpetration of rapes and killings.[29]

13. The Majority upheld Ntahobali's responsibility under Article 6(3) of the Statute[30] and also considered that, as reflected in the Trial Judgement, he was only held liable as a superior for crimes committed by the Interahamwe who followed his orders.[31] Having considered the jurisprudence and reviewed the evidence, I respectfully disagree with the Majority's position to uphold the Trial Chamber's finding as to Ntahobali's superior responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office.[32] In my view, the Trial Chamber erroneously conflated Ntahobali's liability for ordering and superior responsibility, and no reasonable trier of fact could have concluded that Ntahobali had effective control over the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office. As discussed below, I distinguish this from circumstances at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and the EER, where I agree that Ntahobali should have incurred superior responsibility over the acts of the Interahamwe.

14. I recall that the imposition of superior responsibility necessitates a pre-existing superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrators.[33] A commander or superior is "one who possesses the power or authority in either a de jure or a de facto form to prevent a subordinate's crime or to punish the perpetrators of the crime after the crime is committed."[34] While "the degree of control wielded by a de jure or de facto superior may take different forms, a de facto superior must be found to wield substantially similar powers of control over subordinates to be held criminally responsible for their acts."[35]

15. For a superior to be found criminally liable, it must be shown that he or she exercised effective control over subordinates who have committed crimes.[36] The indicators of effective control are more a matter of evidence than of substantive law, and those indicators are limited to showing that the accused had the power to prevent, punish, or initiate measures leading to proceedings against the alleged perpetrators where appropriate.[37] According to the jurisprudence of the Tribunal, an accused's ability to issue orders and the fact that his orders were actually followed

[34] Čelebići Appeal Judgement, para. 192.
[35] Čelebići Appeal Judgement, para. 197. I note that the Appeals Chamber in Čelebići has also stated that generally possession of de jure power in itself may not suffice for finding command responsibility if it does not manifest in effective control. See idem.
[36] See e.g., Popović et al. Appeal Judgement, para. 1857 and references cited therein. The Appeals Chamber in Čelebići has stated that "[a]s long as a superior has effective control over subordinates, to the extent that he can prevent them from committing crimes or punish them after they committed the crimes, he would be held responsible for the commission of crimes if he failed to exercise such abilities of control." See Čelebići Appeal Judgement, para. 198.

can demonstrate effective control.[38] However, this cannot be the sole indicator nor does it automatically establish effective control.[39] Indeed, "[i]n circumstances where a superior would not be able to perform the functions necessary to prevent or punish, the superior could not be said to possess the material ability required to exercise effective control."[40] Additionally, a superior need not know the exact identity of his or her subordinates who perpetrate crimes.[41] However, where multiple groups of subordinates may exist, there should be evidence linking the accused to the specific group committing the crimes.[42]

16. In comparison, the threshold to establish authority for ordering liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute is lower than that for superior responsibility. Based on the Tribunal's jurisprudence, ordering liability requires no formal superior-subordinate relationship between the accused and the perpetrator[43] and no effective control.[44] Additionally, the authority may be informal or of a purely temporary nature,[45] and physical perpetrators, those receiving orders, may be identified generally by group.[46] It is sufficient that there is proof of a position of authority on the part of the accused that would compel another person to commit a crime.[47] Whether such authority exists is a question of fact[48] and is a "more subjective criterion that depends on the circumstances and the perceptions of the listener."[49]

17. Turning to the circumstances at the Butare Prefecture Office, I believe that, based on the evidence, no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Ntahobali was in a superior-subordinate relationship with the Interahamwe and that he had effective control over them. I observe the Trial Chamber's consideration that, inter alia: (i) Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali (although mostly [39] The Appeals Chamber in Setako has stated that "a superior's authority to issue orders is one indicator of effective control, but that it does not automatically establish such control." Setako Appeal Judgement, para. 272. It further held that "convictions under Article 6(3) of the Statute are generally based on a thorough analysis of various indicators of effective control." Setako Appeal Judgement, fn. 615 and references cited therein. According to the Appeals Chamber in Strugar: "a superior's authority to issue orders does not automatically establish that a superior had effective control over his subordinates." Strugar Appeal Judgement, para. 253 (emphasis in original). Furthermore, the Appeals Chamber in Blaškić found that "the issuing of humanitarian orders does not by itself establish that the Appellant had effective control over troops that received the orders." Blaškić Appeal Judgement, para. 485.

Nyiramasuhuko) appeared to be in charge of assailants;[50] (ii) Ntahobali had the ability to stop the Interahamwe from putting more refugees on the pickup truck;[51] and (iii) the Interahamwe referred to him as "Shalom, chef" and he told them "to do their work seriously."[52] From the evidence and Trial Chamber's findings as to the attacks occurring between May and June 1994 at the prefectoral office, I also note the identification of the Interahamwe to be extremely vague.[53] It is unclear whether the Interahamwe, who came during separate and multiple attacks, were the same individuals, from the same group, under the same authority, or otherwise. Indeed, as indicated in this Appeal Judgement, Ntahobali was not found liable as a superior of Interahamwe who committed crimes on the basis of Nyiramasuhuko's orders.[54]

18. In my view, the evidence could demonstrate that Ntahobali was at most in some temporary position of authority over the Interahamwe and this may have been sufficient for ordering liability under Article 6(1) of the Statute. However, irrespective of the Majority's position regarding the alleged repeated nature of his "orders" and the fact that they were followed,[55] there is insufficient evidence, outside these "orders", to conclude that Ntahobali had a de facto superior-subordinate relationship over the Interahamwe during attacks at the prefectoral office. In assessing Ntahobali's superior responsibility, the Trial Chamber stated that it "consider[ed] the evidence in its entirety".[56] However, other than his orders, it is unclear upon what solid evidence the Trial Chamber relied. There is also inadequate evidence to show that he could materially prevent crimes of the Interahamwe before their commission or punish crimes thereafter. The insufficiency of evidence is revealed by the Trial Chamber's circular reasoning in assessing his ability to prevent or punish:

> [Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's] orders demonstrate that they knew that the Interahamwe were about to commit a crime and had later done so, and that they failed to prevent the crimes. It is also clear from that evidence that they did not punish the Interahamwe for obeying their orders.[57]

19. I distinguish the situation at the prefectoral office from the circumstances at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and at the EER, where there appears to be stronger indicia of his effective control over the Interahamwe present.[58] In particular, at the roadblock, aside from his order to kill Ruvurajabo, the Trial Chamber considered direct evidence that the Interahamwe, identified to be present at the time, specifically sought instructions from Ntahobali.[59] At the EER, the Trial Chamber considered concrete evidence that Ntahobali was the leader of the Interahamwe,[60] he led attacks at the EER,[61] and that the Interahamwe at the scene feared and obeyed him.[62]

20. On the basis of the foregoing, I would accordingly conclude that no reasonable trier of fact could have found that Ntahobali had superior responsibility over the crimes committed by the Interahamwe at the prefectoral office.

C. Partially Dissenting Opinion: Sentencing

1. Double-Counting Nyiramasuhuko's Abuse of Authority

21. The Trial Chamber found Nyiramasuhuko guilty of ordering the killing of Tutsi refugees at the Butare Prefecture Office.[63] In determining her sentence, the Trial Chamber stated that "Nyiramasuhuko, on a number of occasions, used her influence over Interahamwe to commit crimes such as rape and murder" and concluded that this "abuse of general authority vis-à-vis the assailants is an aggravating factor."[64] Nyiramasuhuko submits that the Trial Chamber erred in considering her abuse of authority as an aggravating factor since this was an element of the crimes for which she was convicted.[65]

22. The Majority found no error in the Trial Chamber's conclusion and dismissed Nyiramasukuo's appeal that the Trial Chamber impermissibly double-counted an element of the crime as an aggravating factor.[66] I respectfully disagree with the Majority's conclusion in this regard.

[59] The Trial Chamber considered that the Interahamwe asked Ntahobali "what shall we do with [Ruvurajabo]", to which Ntahobali responded, "[k]ill him." See Trial Judgement, paras. 2959, 5847.
[60] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3858, 3951; Witness RE, T. 24 February 2003 p. 13.

[62] See Trial Judgement, paras. 3878, 3951. According to Witness SX: "[Ntahobali] was their leader, he ordered [the Interahamwe] around. He ordered them to arrest anybody. He could turn to anybody to say something and the other would say in turn, Shalom, but they were scared of him because he was their boss. At any rate, when he came, he [was] consulted when there was any issue to be consulted about." Witness SX, T. 27 January 2004 p. 26.
[63] Based on her orders to kill at the prefectoral office, the Trial Chamber convicted Nyiramasuhuko of genocide, extermination and persecution as crimes against humanity, as well as violence to life, health, and physical or mental well-being of persons as a serious violation of Article 3 common of the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II pursuant to Article 6(1) of the Statute. Trial Judgement, paras. 5876, 5969, 5970, 6049-6051, 6098, 6099, 6120, 6166, 6167, 6186.
[64] Trial Judgement, para. 6207.
[65] Nyiramasuhuko Appeal Brief, para. 1300.
[66] Appeal Judgement, para. 3359.

23. According to the Tribunal's jurisprudence, a factor considered by a trial chamber as an element of a crime cannot also be considered as an aggravating circumstance.[67] The actus reus of ordering responsibility requires a person in a position of authority to issue an instruction to commit a crime.[68] In my view, it follows that the abuse of a position of authority is inherent in the mode of liability for ordering.[69] Given Nyrimasuhuko's position as Minister for Family and Women's Affairs[70] and her authority over the Interahamwe during the events at the prefectoral office,[71] any order issued by her in breach of the priniciples of international criminal law necessarily entailed an abuse of her position of authority and influence.

24. Based on the foregoing, I would conclude that the Trial Chamber erred by impermissibly double-counting an element of the crime as an aggravating factor when it determined Nyiramasukuo's sentence.

2. Consideration of Argument in Gravity of Offences

25. In assessing gravity of the offences in relation to Ntahobali's sentence, the Trial Chamber considered that the crimes included, inter alia, "the rapes and killings of Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock".[72] Ntahobali submits that the Trial Chamber erred in taking into account "rapes" perpetrated at this roadblock because he was found guilty of only perpetrating one rape at this location.[73] Considering that Ntahobali only raised this contention in his appeal brief and not in his notice of appeal, the Majority dismissed his contention because it impermissibly expanded the scope of his appeal and determined that the interests of justice do not require consideration of this argument.[74] I respectfully disagree with the Majority's position and believe that it is in the interests of justice to address Ntahobali's submission. For the reasons set out below, I consider that the Trial Chamber erred in its assessment of gravity of offences and that Ntahobali should not be prejudiced in this regard.

26. I observe that the language in the gravity portion of the "Sentencing" section of the Trial Judgement gives the impression that Ntahobali was found responsible for the rapes of multiple Tutsis at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock.[75] However, the Trial Chamber's detailed legal findings reflect that Ntahobali was found responsible for having committed the rape of a single woman at this roadblock.[76] Moreover, while it determined that other rapes were committed against members of the Tutsi population when Ntahobali manned the roadblock, it found that the evidence was insufficient to establish that Ntahobali could be held responsible as a superior for the rapes that occurred near this roadblock.[77] Consequently, the Trial Chamber stated that it would not take into account this "alleged responsibility […] in sentencing."[78] Accordingly, I would find that the Trial Chamber erred to the extent that it considered that Ntahobali was held responsible for more than one rape at the Hotel Ihuliro roadblock and took it into consideration when determining the gravity of the offences.

27. Given that the Trial Chamber erred in determining the gravity of the offences and that this may impact Ntahobali's sentence, I am of the view that he should not bear the burden of this error on the Trial Chamber's part. Thus, contrary to the Majority's findings, I believe his argument should have been considered in the interest of justice and not dismissed on the basis of a technicality.

28. Given my dissent regarding gravity of offences as well as to Ntahobali's liability for ordering killings and superior responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office, I am of the view that his sentence should be further reduced.

XVIII. DISSENTING OPINION AND DECLARATION OF JUDGE KHAN

A. Dissenting Opinion: Ntahobali's Responsibility at the Butare Prefecture Office

1. In this Judgement, the Majority finds that the Trial Chamber did not convict Ntahobali for ordering the killings committed during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[1] The Majority concludes that, although the evidence of Prosecution Witnesses TK, QBQ, RE, SS, SU, FAP, and TA appears to reflect that Ntahobali participated in abductions and killings, issued orders, and held a position of authority over the assailants during these events, the Trial Chamber's discussion of this evidence does not demonstrate that it relied on this evidence to find Ntahobali responsible for ordering killings of Tutsis who sought refuge at the prefectoral office.[2] The Majority therefore concludes that Ntahobali was not convicted for the killings perpetrated during these attacks in the absence of: (i) relevant factual or legal findings underlying Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering such killings; or (ii) any clear indication that the Trial Chamber intended to convict him on this basis.[3] While I see merit to the Majority's conclusion, for the reasons set forth below, I respectfully disagree.

1. The Trial Chamber Convicted Ntahobali for Ordering Killings in Relation to These Attacks

2. At the outset, I fully endorse the Majority's position that, on their face, the Trial Chamber's conclusions in the "Factual Findings" and "Legal Findings" sections of the Trial Judgement about the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks do not: (i) refer to an express order to kill given by Ntahobali or a particular instruction that had a direct and substantial effect on the relevant killings; or (ii) specify the category of assailants to whom Ntahobali gave an order.[4] However, for the reasons set forth below, I find that these omissions are the result of the Trial Chamber's failure in its obligation to provide a reasoned opinion in accordance with Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules. The omissions do not, in my view, reflect that the Trial Chamber did not convict him on the basis of his participation in the abduction and killing of Tutsi refugees during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.

3. As noted by the Majority, in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber stated as follows concerning Ntahobali's involvement in crimes which occurred at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks:

[1] See supra, Appeal Judgement, para. 1545.
[2] See supra, Appeal Judgement, para. 1544.
[3] See supra, Appeal Judgement, para. 1545.
[4] See supra, Appeal Judgement, para. 1543.

> the Chamber finds beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] three times abducting Tutsi refugees on each occasion on this night.[5]
>
>
> the Chamber is convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that Ntahobali and Interahamwe attacked many different women and children at the [Butare Prefecture Office], assaulted them and forced them aboard the pickup. It further finds that Nyiramasuhuko gave orders to the Interahamwe to commit these crimes. The women and children were taken away from the [Butare Prefecture Office] and killed elsewhere.[6]
>
> Therefore, based upon the evidence of Witnesses TK, QBQ, RE, SS, SU and FAP, including the specific evidence as to the abduction of Mbasha's wife and children, the assault of a woman named Trifina and the assault of an unnamed woman and her children, the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt that at the end of May or beginning of June 1994, Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali and about 10 Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] aboard a camouflaged pickup. Nyiramasuhuko ordered the Interahamwe to force Tutsi refugees onto the pickup. The pickup left the [Butare Prefecture Office], abducting Tutsi refugees in the process, some of whom were forced to undress.[7]

4. In the same section, the Trial Chamber found, in relevant respects, the following regarding Ntahobali's involvement in crimes which occurred at the prefectoral office during the First Half of June Attacks:[8]

> the Chamber finds it established beyond a reasonable doubt, based on the testimony of Witnesses TA, QBP and TK that, in addition to those attacks described above, Ntahobali, injured soldiers and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] in June 1994 to rape women and abduct refugees.[9]

As noted by the Majority, the Trial Chamber recalled these conclusions when summarising its factual findings related to Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's involvement in crimes committed at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[10] Furthermore, it is worth noting that when concluding in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement that "hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted from the [prefectoral office] and killed", the Trial Chamber relied, in part, on Ntahobali's participation in the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[11]

5. It is my view that the Trial Chamber's extensive and repeated conclusions concerning Ntahobali's participation in the abductions and killing of Tutsi refugees during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks in the "Factual Findings" section of the Trial Judgement support the conclusion that the Trial Chamber intended to convict Ntahobali based on his involvement in these attacks. That the Trial Chamber did convict him for his role in these attacks is, in my view, evident from the fact that, in the "Legal Findings" section, the Trial Chamber again recalled its findings of Ntahobali's participation in the Night of Three Attacks[12] and the First Half of June Attacks[13] before ultimately concluding that Ntahobali was responsible for ordering the killing of "Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office".[14] Furthermore, in the "Sentencing" section of the Trial Judgement, the Trial Chamber noted, with respect to the gravity of the crimes, the "seriousness and atrocity of crimes repetitively perpetrated at the [Butare Prefecture Office], where hundreds of Tutsis were abducted, raped and killed."[15]

6. Consequently, a holistic reading of the Trial Judgement leads to the conclusion that, when convicting Ntahobali of genocide, crimes against humanity, and a serious violation of Article 3 common to the Geneva Conventions and of Additional Protocol II for "ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office",[16] the Trial Chamber entered these convictions on the basis of its findings that Ntahobali was involved in the abduction and killings of Tutsis during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks. For these reasons, I respectfully disagree with the Majority's interpretation of the Trial Judgement that Ntahobali was only convicted for ordering killings during the Mid-May Attack.[17]

2. The Absence of a Reasoned Opinion Does Not Invalidate the Verdict

7. As noted, above, I find that the Trial Chamber erred in law by failing to provide a reasoned opinion in support of Ntahobali's conviction for ordering killings in relation to the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks in accordance with Article 22(2) of the Statute and Rule 88(C) of the Rules.[18] In this respect, the Trial Chamber failed to set out in a clear and articulate manner the factual and legal findings on the basis of which it concluded that Ntahobali was responsible for ordering killings in relation to these attacks. Instead, Ntahobali has had to interpret imprecise legal and scattered factual findings as well as the evidence supporting them in order to decipher the basis of his conviction for ordering these killings.

8. I recall that a reasoned opinion in the trial judgement is essential to allow for a meaningful exercise of the right of appeal by the parties and to enable the Appeals Chamber to understand and review the trial chamber's findings.[19] In this regard, despite the Trial Chamber's failure to provide a reasoned opinion, I do not think that Ntahobali has been denied the opportunity to fully exercise his right to appeal this aspect of his convictions. I note, in particular, that the Appeals Chamber requested further briefing from the Prosecution and a response from Ntahobali as to what evidence cited in the Trial Judgement and findings of the Trial Chamber would support a conviction for ordering the killings of Tutsis who had sought refuge at the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[20]

9. Having found that Ntahobali's right to appeal has not been infringed, I will proceed to examine the Trial Chamber's findings in order to define the scope of Ntahobali's liability for ordering killings before considering whether the findings and the evidence the Trial Chamber relied upon as well as the evidence identified by the parties could sustain its conclusions that Ntahobali was responsible for ordering the killings in relation to the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.

3. The Scope of Ntahobali's Liability in Relation to These Attacks

10. The imprecision in the Trial Judgement has fuelled considerable confusion as to the scope of Ntahobali's liability for ordering the killings of Tutsi refugees during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks. For example, the Prosecution's arguments suggest that Ntahobali's liability is based on the conduct of soldiers and Interahamwe for killings committed at the Butare Prefecture Office and elsewhere.[21] Ntahobali's argues that he could not be convicted for the conduct of soldiers[22] and submits that the Trial Judgement is unclear as to whether he was convicted for killings that occurred at the prefectoral office or only for the killings of Tutsis removed from it during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[23]

11. I recall the Appeals Chamber's previous observation that the Trial Chamber found that, although soldiers played a role in events at the Butare Prefecture Office, "no evidence has been led to establish any relationship between the soldiers and […] Ntahobali".[24] Even though this finding was made in the context of assessing Ntahobali's superior responsibility, the Appeals Chamber has found that "it suggests that no finding of any liability was imposed on Ntahobali for the conduct of soldiers" as it concerns attacks at the prefectoral office.[25] I fully endorse this conclusion and reject any suggestion that the Trial Chamber convicted Ntahobali in relation to killings committed by soldiers during these attacks.[26] Rather, the relevant findings demonstrate that Ntahobali was found responsible in relation to the killings committed by the Interahamwe.[27]

12. Unquestionably, there is evidence of Ntahobali issuing orders at the Butare Prefecture Office in relation to killings committed at the prefectoral office during these attacks.[28] Furthermore, the Trial Chamber generally found that Ntahobali was responsible for "ordering the killing of Tutsis taking refuge at the Butare préfecture office".[29] However, the Trial Chamber's most detailed findings in the "Legal Findings" section of the Trial Judgment necessarily limit Ntahobali's responsibility to ordering the killings of Tutsi refugees who were abducted and taken to other locations in Butare Prefecture to be killed.[30] That the Trial Chamber intended to limit Ntahobali's responsibility for killings in this respect is further reflected by the fact that, when considering the extent of the killings in relation to the attacks perpetrated by Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali, the Trial Chamber limited its conclusion specifically to the number of Tutsi refugees who were abducted and killed.[31]

13. In light of the above, it is clear to me that Ntahobali was found to have ordered killings of Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks, which were perpetrated by Interahamwe who participated in these attacks with him.

4. The Record Sustains Ntahobali's Convictions for Ordering Killings During These Attacks

14. I note that the Prosecution points to findings and evidence credited by the Trial Chamber that it contends support the elements establishing Ntahobali's ordering responsibility in relation to [30] With respect to the Night of Three Attacks, the Trial Chamber concluded that Ntahobali "abducted Tutsi refugees" and "took them to other sites in Butare préfecture to be killed". See Trial Judgement, para. 5873 (emphasis added). It similarly found with respect to the First Half of June Attacks that "Ntahobali, injured soldiers, and Interahamwe came to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to […] abduct refugees". See ibid., para. 5874 (emphasis added). Furthermore, the Trial Chamber's findings reflect that those abducted during the First Half of June Attacks were killed. See ibid., para. 2779. Cf. ibid., para. 5867 ("Between mid-May and mid-June 1994, […] Ntahobali […] went to the [Butare Prefecture Office] to abduct hundreds of Tutsis; the Tutsi refugees were physically assaulted and raped; and were killed in various locations throughout Butare [Prefecture].") (emphasis added).

[31] See Trial Judgement, para. 2779.

the Night of Three Attacks[32] and the First Half of June Attacks.[33] Ntahobali's argues that no reasonable trier of fact could rely on the sole order he issued during the Mid-May Attack – the order to stop loading the truck – to find that he ordered all the killings during the subsequent attacks.[34] He further submits that neither the evidence nor the factual and legal findings concerning the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks supports the conclusion that he ordered killings during the Night of Three Attacks[35] or the First Half of June Attacks.[36]

15. I recall that a person in a position of authority may incur responsibility under Article 6(1) of the Statute for ordering another person to commit an offence if the order has a direct and substantial effect on the commission of the illegal act.[37] Responsibility is also incurred when an individual in a position of authority orders an act or omission with the awareness of the substantial likelihood that a crime will be committed in the execution of that order.[38]

16. At the outset, I disagree with Ntahobali's contention that the finding of his liability for ordering killings during the Night of Three Attacks and First Half of June Attacks in the Trial Judgement is based solely on the instruction he gave to Interahamwe to stop loading the truck during the Mid-May Attack. The Trial Chamber considered the various attacks committed at the Butare Prefecture Office collectively, evidence of Ntahobali's participation therein, as well as the similarity among them to reach its conclusions as to his criminal liability.[39] I note the extensive evidence cited by the Trial Chamber[40] and its findings[41] describing the violent nature of the attacks at the prefectoral office on the Night of Three Attacks as well as the roles that Ntahobali, Nyiramasuhuko, and Interahamwe played in abducting Tutsi refugees, as well as their killings. The evidence and findings indicate a regular and systematic pattern of attacks aimed at eliminating Tutsis refugees at the prefectoral office. I therefore find Ntahobali's contention in this respect unpersuasive.

17. With respect to Ntahobali's ordering responsibility in relation to the Night of Three Attacks, the Appeals Chamber has accepted Ntahobali's submission that Witness SJ's evidence cannot be relied upon in relation to the Night of Three Attacks.[42] I extend this conclusion to my own analysis and will not consider the Prosecution's arguments that rely on this witness's evidence in establishing Ntahobali's responsibility for ordering the killings of Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office.[43] Nonetheless, the Trial Chamber credited Witness TK's evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks and, in particular, her testimony as to Ntahobali's conduct and position of authority vis-à-vis the Interahamwe. The Trial Chamber referred to Witness TK's evidence that Interahamwe surrounded Ntahobali and referred to him as "Shalom, chef."[44] The Trial Chamber similarly pointed to Witness TK's testimony that upon arriving at the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks, Ntahobali "and some of the Interahamwe exclaimed that nobody should be spared or treated leniently", that Ntahobali "told the Interahamwe to do their work seriously", that "Interahamwe attacked the group of refugees and chose people to be taken away to be killed", and that the "truck left behind certain Interahamwe to select those who were to be loaded on the next trip."[45] Similarly, the Trial Chamber credited evidence that Tutsi refugees who were abducted from the prefectoral office during, inter alia, the Night of Three Attacks were killed.[46]

18. Ntahobali does not demonstrate that it was unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to rely on these aspects of Witness TK's evidence or that it mischaracterised the witness's evidence.[47] Witness TK's evidence demonstrates Ntahobali's authority over the Interahamwe present at the prefectoral office and reflects that they followed his instructions.[48] Ntahobali also fails to demonstrate that a reasonable trier of fact could not have concluded that refugees abducted from the prefectoral office during the Night of Three Attacks and other attacks were killed.[49]

[42] See supra, Appeal Judgement, Sections V.I.2(b)(iii)a.ii, V.I.2(d)(ii)a.

[45] Trial Judgement, para. 2681, referring to Witness TK, T. 20 May 2002 pp. 75, 88, 89. Ntahobali's assertion that Witness TK's testimony about the alleged instructions issued by Ntahobali cannot reasonably be interpreted as instructions to kill and that the evidence fails to support the conclusion that Interahamwe attacked refugees at the prefectoral office based on his orders reflects mere disagreement and does not demonstrate any error on the part of the Trial Chamber. See Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, para. 31.
[46] See Trial Judgement, paras. 2739-2749.
[47] The Appeals Chamber has previously considered and rejected contentions that the Trial Chamber failed to apply sufficient caution when assessing Witness TK's evidence. See supra, Appeal Judgement, Section III.J.3. It has also found that the Trial Chamber acted reasonably in relying on Witness TK's evidence, notwithstanding its disbelief that Witnesses TK and QJ did not discuss the events at issue in this proceeding or their plans to testify before the Tribunal. See supra, Appeal Judgement, Section VIII.E.1(a). Similarly, the Appeals Chamber has rejected contentions that Witness TK's testimony cannot be believed due to variances between her account of the Night of Three Attacks and that of other witnesses who were in proximity to her that evening. See supra, Appeal Judgement, Section IV.F.2(e)(iii). I find no merit to any of Ntahobali's additional challenges to the credibility and reliability of Witness TK's evidence concerning the Night of Three Attacks. See, e.g., Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, paras. 25, 26.
[48] I also find no merit to Ntahobali's contention that the record fails to demonstrate that he possessed the requisite authority over the perpetrators. See Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, paras. 16, 20.
[49] See supra, Appeal Judgement, Section V.I.2(d)(vi).

19. Furthermore, I am not persuaded by Ntahobali's contention that no evidence could support the conclusion that he ordered killings, in the absence of clear findings and evidence establishing the exact perpetrators of the killings.[50] Based on the evidence relied upon by the Trial Chamber, its general findings that Ntahobali ordered killings and that refugees abducted by Ntahobali and Interahamwe from the prefectoral office during, inter alia, the Night of Three Attacks were killed, it is clear that the Trial Chamber concluded as the only reasonable inference that some of the Interahamwe who participated in the attacks at the prefectoral office subsequently killed the refugees elsewhere on Ntahobali's orders.[51] In my view, it was well within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to make such an inference, notwithstanding its findings that Nyiramasuhuko also ordered killings of Tutsis who were abducted from the prefectoral office during this attack. Given the entire record before the Trial Chamber, including the finding affirmed by the Appeals Chamber, Judge Liu dissenting, that Ntahobali is responsible for ordering killings of Tutsis abducted during the Mid-May Attack,[52] I find that a reasonable trier of fact could have convicted Ntahobali for ordering killings of Tutsi refugees who were abducted and killed during the Night of Three Attacks.

20. Regarding the First Half of June Attacks, the Trial Chamber accepted Witness TK's evidence that Ntahobali came to the Butare Prefecture Office on a number of evenings accompanied by Interahamwe "or" disabled soldiers, that he "committed crimes on each evening he came to the [Butare Prefecture Office]" and that, on some occasions, Ntahobali "came to determine whether there were any men left, who were then taken away to be killed".[53] The Trial Chamber also noted that Witness TK testified that Ntahobali "would say to the Interahamwe, '[b]e firm in your actions,' when he meant, 'kill all of them.'"[54] The Trial Chamber similarly recalled Witness TA's evidence that "a group of eight Interahamwe, including Shalom arrived at the [Butare Prefecture Office] in the same vehicle and attacked the refugees with machetes, hammers, Rwandan clubs and sticks"[55] and that "[th]ey killed some, wounded others and threw the dead and wounded into their vehicle".[56]

21. The Appeals Chamber has previously dismissed Ntahobali's contentions as to the unreliability of the evidence of Witnesses TK and TA that would relate to killings during the First Half of June Attack.[57] I consider Ntahobali's additional submissions challenging this evidence as [50] See, e.g., Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, paras. 33, 35.

[51] In this respect, Ntahobali's contention that the record fails to demonstrate that his words and actions had a direct and substantial effect on the perpetration of the killings is unpersuasive. See Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, paras. 33, 35.
[52] See supra, Appeal Judgement, paras. 1902, 1905, 1906.

[57] See supra, Appeal Judgement, Section V.I.2(e)(ii).

unpersuasive.[58] Given the Trial Chamber's factual findings as to Ntahobali's conduct during other attacks at the prefectoral office starting in mid-May 1994 and its conclusions that Tutsis who were abducted from the prefectoral office were killed – findings that have been sustained on appeal[59] – I am also satisfied that it was within the discretion of the Trial Chamber to infer as the only reasonable inference that Ntahobali ordered Interahamwe to kill Tutsis who were abducted from the prefectoral office during the First Half of June Attacks.[60]

22. For the foregoing reasons, I conclude that the findings of the Trial Chamber, the evidence it relied upon, and the evidence identified by the parties sustain the conclusion that Ntahobali is responsible for ordering the killings of Tutsi refugees abducted from the Butare Prefecture Office during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.

5. The Record Sustains Ntahobali's Superior Responsibility for Killings During These Attacks

23. With regards to his responsibility as a superior, as stated in this Judgement, the Trial Chamber held Ntahobali responsible as a superior only of those crimes that he ordered and for which he was convicted under Article 6(1) of the Statute.[61] I agree with this conclusion but, in light of the above, would extend it to include the killings of abducted refugees committed by Interahamwe on the basis of Ntahobali's orders during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks.[62]

6. Number of Refugees Abducted and Killed

24. The Appeals Chamber in this Judgement has found the record insufficient to affirm that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted and killed during the attacks of which Ntahobali was convicted by the Trial Chamber.[63] Notwithstanding my view that Ntahobali was convicted for ordering the killings of Tutsi refugees abducted during the Night of Three Attacks and the First Half of June Attacks, I continue to agree that the record remains insufficient to affirm that hundreds of Tutsi refugees were abducted and killed during the attacks in which Ntahobali participated.[64]

[58] In particular, Ntahobali's contention that that Witness TK's uncorroborated evidence cannot be relied upon and that her testimony that, during these attacks, he instructed Interahamwe to "be firm in [their] actions" is taken out of context and cannot be understood as an order to kill reflects mere disagreement without demonstrating error. See Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, para. 43, referring to Trial Judgement, para. 2771, Witness TK, T. 22 May 2002 p. 109.
[59] See generally supra, Appeal Judgement, Section V.I.2.
[60] In this respect, I find unpersuasive Ntahobali's contentions that the record is insufficient to demonstrate that any one who killed abducted Tutsis from the prefectoral office was acting on Ntahobali's instructions or that his instructions had a direct and substantial effect on the perpetration of the killings. See Ntahobali Supplementary Submissions, paras. 44, 46. See also ibid., paras. 30-35.
[61] See supra, Appeal Judgement, paras. 1927, 1928.
[62] The analysis and findings in paragraphs 1929-1943 of the Appeal Judgement apply with equal force to these events.
[63] See supra, Appeal Judgement, paras. 1884-1887.
[64] With respect to the Night of Three Attacks, the evidence of Witnesses TK, SU, SS, RE, FAP, QJ, and QBQ found credible by the Trial Chamber reflects that the purpose of the attacks that night was to target the refugees at the

Nevertheless, I consider that the evidence reflects Ntahobali's involvement in a regular and systematic pattern of attacks aimed at eliminating Tutsi refugees at the prefectoral office and reasonably demonstrates that he is responsible for a large number of killings of Tutsis abducted from the prefectoral office.

B. Declaration: Joinder

25. I am in full agreement with the conclusion in this Judgement to dismiss the appeals of Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali concerning the issues of joinder and severance in the context of this case.[65] The relevant decisions of the Trial Chamber fall within, inter alia, the boundaries imposed by Rules 48 and 82 of the Rules as guided by Article 20 of the Statute.[66] Furthermore, I agree with the finding of the Appeals Chamber that "the argument that the excessive length of the proceedings in this case was an unavoidable and clearly foreseeable consequence of the joinder decision is not substantiated."[67] I also agree with the conclusion that "the mere contention that separate trials would have proceeded faster is insufficient to substantiate a claim that undue delay occurred as a result of the joinder."[68]

26. However, armed with the benefit of hindsight, it is my view that the legacy of joined cases in this Tribunal serves as a cautionary one. On the completion of this, the last and longest case of the Tribunal, now is the time to consider the theoretical considerations that have commonly supported the joinder of cases alongside the empirical reality of joined cases before this Tribunal. Ultimately, for the reasons explained below, it is my view that international criminal tribunals should take a more rigorous approach when examining whether joinder is appropriate, notwithstanding permissive rules that might otherwise allow it.

The evidence further describes persons being loaded onto the vehicle accompanying Ntahobali and Nyiramasuhuko that night. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2253, 2278, 2285, 2287, 2289, 2303, 2307, 2308, 2331, 2332. See also Trial Judgement, paras. 2703, 2704, 2710-2712, 2714, 2732, 2736, 2738. Notably, Witness TK specified that on at least one occasion the vehicle was full when it left with the abducted refugees. See Trial Judgement, para. 2215. With respect to the First Half of June Attacks, Witness TK's evidence, as summarised and relied upon by the Trial Chamber, is of principal relevance as to the number of persons abducted by Ntahobali to be killed, but her account does not provide a specific or estimated number of victims. See Trial Judgement, para. 2218. Nonetheless, and as noted by the Trial Chamber, the evidence reflects that those who were abducted from the prefectoral office were, almost without exception, killed. See Trial Judgement, paras. 2703, 2740-2749.

1. Examining the Theoretical Justifications for Joinder

27. In theory, joint proceedings require less court time and judicial resources,[69] minimise hardship to witnesses and ensure the presentation of evidence that might not be available in the future,[70] avoid undue delay for the defendants,[71] and minimise the possibility of inconsistent verdicts while enhancing procedural and substantive fairness among defendants through uniform proceedings.[72] Furthermore, it must be stressed that the purpose of joining cases is to serve the interests of justice and avoid undue delay.[73]

28. Examining first the judicial efficiency theory that joint trials will require less court time and judicial resources, the history of joint proceedings in this Tribunal reflects that they have required more trial days to hear witnesses than single accused trials.[74] On average, a witness's evidence in a multi-accused case will last for nearly two and a quarter trial days while a witness's testimony in a single accused case will last around one trial day.[75] Explained differently, trials with one defendant, [69] See, e.g., Gotovina et al. Appeal Decision on Joinder, para. 44 ("Two separate trials, whether conducted simultaneously or otherwise, are still likely to require more court hours in total than one joint trial and require more judicial time and resources."). See also Ntabakuze Appeal Decision on Severance, para. 25.

[70] See, e.g., Gotovina et al. Appeal Decision on Joinder, para. 47 ("The Appeals Chamber finds that it was not unreasonable for the Trial Chamber to generally conclude […] that there will be lesser hardship for some witnesses if only one trial is held and that this should weigh in favour of joinder."); The Prosecutor v. Théoneste Bagosora et al., Case No. ICTR-98-41-T, Decision on Request for Severance of Three Accused, 27 March 2006, para. 3 ("A joint trial relieves the hardship that would otherwise be imposed on witnesses, whose repeated attendance might not be secured.").

[71] Tolimir et al. Decision of 27 January 2006, para. 25 ("It is possible that if the Appellant were tried separately from the other Accused, further delay would result as it is not obvious that his separate trial could commence at the same time as this joint trial.").

[72] See Ntabakuze Appeal Decision on Severance, para. 25 ("Joint appeal proceedings not only enhance fairness as between the appellants by ensuring a uniform procedure against all but also minimize the possibility of inconsistencies in (a) treatment of such evidence, (b) common legal findings of the Trial Chamber, (c) sentencing, or (d) other matters that could arise from separate appeals."); Prosecutor v. Radoslav Brdanin and Momir Talić, Case No. IT-99-36, Decision on Request to Appeal, 16 May 2000 ("Nothing could be more destructive of the pursuit of justice than to have inconsistent results in separate trials based upon the same facts.").

[73] Cf. Gotovina et al. Appeal Decision on Joinder, para. 44; Tolimir et al. Decision of 27 January 2006, para. 8.

[74] In reaching this calculation, I was unable to determine the trial days for the following proceedings before the Tribunal: Gacumbitsi; Kajelijeli; Kamuhanda; Kayishema; Mpambara; Ndahimana; Rutaganda; Seromba. My calculations in this declaration are based on information provided in the trial and appeal judgements of the relevant cases before the Tribunal.

[75] Single accused trials: Akayesu (43 trial days; 41 witnesses); Bagilishema (60 trial days; 33 witnesses); Bikindi (61 trial days; 57 witnesses); Gatete (30 trial days; 49 witnesses); Hategekimana (43 trial days; 40 witnesses); Kajelijeli (91 trial days; 42 witnesses); Kalimanzira (37 trial days; 66 witnesses); Kanyarukiga (28 trial days; 34 witnesses); Karera (33 trial days; 43 witnesses); Muhimana (34 trial days; 52 witnesses); Munyakazi (19 trial days; 31 witnesses); Musema (39 trial days; 30 witnesses); Muvunyi I (80 trial days; 48 witnesses); Muvunyi II (9 trial days; 13 witnesses); Nchamihigo (57 trial days; 60 witnesses); Ndindabahizi (27 trial days; 34 witnesses); Ngirabatware (75 trial days; 62 witnesses); Niyitegeka (33 trial days; 24 witnesses); Nizeyimana (54 trial days; 84 witnesses); Nsengimana (42 trial days; 43 witnesses); Ntawukulilyayo (33 trial days; 35 witnesses); Nzabonimana (87 trial days; 60 witnesses); Renzaho (49 trial days; 53 witnesses); Rukundo (66 trial days; 50 witnesses); Rutaganda (108 trial days; 41 witnesses); Rwamakuba (78 trial days; 49 witnesses); Semanza (73 trial days; 51 witnesses); Setako (60 trial days; 55 witnesses); Simba (53 trial days; 36 witnesses); Zigiranyirazo (90 trial days; 66 witnesses). Multi-accused trials: Bagosora et al. (408 trial days; 242 witnesses); Bizimungu et al. (399 trial days; 171 witnesses); Karemera et al. (374 trial days; 153 witnesses); Nahimana et al. (238 trial days; 93 witnesses); Ndindiliyimana et al. (395 trial days; 216 witnesses); Ntagerura et al. (161 trial days; 123 witnesses); Ntakirutimana and Ntakirutimana (57 trial days; 43 witnesses); Nyiramasuhuko et al. (714 trial days; 189 witnesses).

on average, have used 53 trial days to hear around 46 witnesses. Proceedings with multiple defendants have, on average, required around 343 trial days to hear only around 154 witnesses. I must also note that not a single multi-accused case had more witnesses testify than trial days,[76] standing in marked contrast to several single-accused cases.[77]

29. In my view, this comparative inefficiency in hearing witnesses is not simply explained by the greater substantive complexity of multi-accused trials or the notion that witnesses will testify longer in multi-accused trials because they are necessarily giving evidence against more than one accused. Having presided over a multi-accused trial as well as participated in multi-appellant appeal proceedings, it is apparent to me that, in some circumstances, the examination of witnesses in multi-accused cases tends to be less focused and unnecessarily lengthy because the size of the cases can prevent the parties – the prosecution in particular – from fully grasping what evidence is and is not crucial to their case. Furthermore, it is my view that the inefficiency is also a result of the inherently greater procedural complexity that accompanies trials when more than two parties are litigating a case.

30. In addition, when considering judicial resources outside the court room, one must consider that proceedings with multiple defendants present weighty, practical and legal challenges that would not otherwise arise in a single accused case. Motions to sever may arise from pre-trial proceedings through appeal. Defence objections to evidence or motions to exclude evidence may arise not only in relation to prosecution evidence but in relation to inculpatory evidence presented by a co-accused. Health issues concerning one defendant or a single defendant's refusal to participate in proceedings involves extra litigation and inevitably delays proceedings for his co-defendants. The proceedings for co-defendants may also be delayed when: (i) disputes between one defendant and his counsel arise during the proceedings; (ii) there are disputes between one defendant's counsel and the administration that require judicial intervention; or (iii) counsel for one defendant needs to be replaced. While Rule 82 of the Rules requires that "each accused shall be accorded the same rights as if such accused were being tried separately"[78] and empowers a chamber to sever cases when "it is necessary to avoid a conflict of interests that might cause serious prejudice to an accused or to protect the interests of justice",[79] the issues identified above present perplexing practical and legal questions that require careful consideration by the judiciary. Resolving them can be a difficult and time consuming process.

31. I turn now to the theoretical consideration that joined proceedings will minimise the hardship to witnesses and/or ensure the presentation of evidence that might not be available in the future. There is no question that being a witness is a disruptive and often uncomfortable exercise. For victims of sexual and physical violence or persons who lost loved ones, testifying about such incidents can result in new trauma. Furthermore, there is no certainty that a witness will be able to testify in multiple proceedings. However, let us consider this theory in the context of the Muvunyi, Hategekimana, and Nizeyimana proceedings. In January 2000, a joint indictment was confirmed against these three military figures whose criminal liability was principally based on the crimes committed by École des sous-officiers ("ESO") and Ngoma Camp soldiers in and around Butare Town during the genocide. In December 2003, the Muvunyi case was severed from that of the Hategekimana and Nizeyimana cases as Hategekimana had only been arrested in February of that year and was unprepared for trial and because Nizeyimana remained at large.[80] In September 2007, the Hategekimana case was severed from the Nizeyimana case, as Nizeyimana remained a fugitive.[81] Nizeyimana was eventually arrested in October 2009.[82]

32. What can be seen from an examination of these three cases is that there was considerable overlap as it pertains the crime bases for which each defendant was pursued at trial.[83] What is also clear is that, in three different trials held between February 2005 and September 2011, the relevant

In granting severance of the Hategekimana trial from the Nizeyimana case, the Trial Chamber also accepted the prosecution's submission that the "key allegations against Mr. Hategekimana are largely distinct from those made against Mr. Nizeyimana, so a joint trial is not likely to promote judicial economy." See ibid., para. 6.

[83] Muvunyi and Nizeyimana were both pursued on the basis of crimes committed by ESO soldiers at roadblocks throughout Butare Town as well as for attacks at the Butare University and the Butare University Hospital. See Nizeyimana Trial Judgement, Sections II.5 (Butare University), II.7.3 (roadblocks), II.8 (Butare University Hospital); Muvunyi Trial Judgement of 12 September 2006, Sections II.5.3 (roadblocks), II.5.6 (Butare University Hospital), II.5.8 (Butare University). Muvunyi, Hategekimana, and Nizeyimana were all pursued with respect to the attacks on Groupe Scolaire and the Benebrika Convent in late April 1994. See Nizeyimana Trial Judgement, Section II.7.3 (Benebrika), II.10 (Groupe Scolaire); The Prosecutor v. Ildephonse Hategekimana, Case No. ICTR-00-55B-T, Judgement and Sentence, pronounced on 6 December 2010, filed on 14 February 2011 ("Hategekimana Trial Judgement"), Sections III.C.12 (Groupe Scolaire), III.C.14 (Benebrika); Muvunyi Trial Judgement of 12 September 2006, Sections II.5.7 and II.5.12.3 (Benebrika), II.5.10.3 (Groupe Scolaire). Hategekimana and Nizeyimana were both tried on the basis of alleged orders issued during a 7 April 1994 meeting at the ESO as well as the rapes about which Witness BUQ testified. See Nizeyimana Trial Judgement, Sections II.1 (rapes), II.2 (7 April 1994 meeting); Hategekimana Trial Judgement, Sections III.C.1 (7 April 1994 meeting), III.C.2 (rapes).

prosecution and defence teams were able to produce evidence on the same or related events in successive proceedings. Witnesses – including at least one who was a victim of sexual violence – testified in more than one proceeding. While I acknowledge that this "survey sample" is small, it is nonetheless suggestive that we must not blindly fear that hardship on witnesses will prevent them from testifying more than once. Indeed, this Tribunal, like other international criminal tribunals, is equipped with a witness and victims support section with a broad mandate and well trained personnel to mitigate the hardship faced by witnesses through their participation in trials. Likewise, fears that evidence will no longer be available in future proceedings should be examined in light of the fact that evidence of the same or largely similar events was presented in several successive trials before this Tribunal.[84]

33. Let us now examine the theoretical consideration that joined trials avoid undue delay. Based on my calculation from proceedings before this Tribunal, a single accused proceeding from opening statement to the issuance of a trial judgement will last on average 641 days,[85] whereas the length for a multiple accused trial is on average 2,026 days.[86] On average, the time between closing arguments to the issuance of trial judgements in single accused cases before the Tribunal is 196 days,[87] where

[84] As an example, Ndayambaje, Kalimanzira, and Ntawakulilyayo were each prosecuted on the basis of the attacks at Kabuye Hill in April 1994. See Trial Judgement, Section III.3.6.5 (Kabuye Hill); The Prosecutor v. Dominique Ntawukulilyayo, Case No. ICTR-05-82-T, Judgement and Sentence, pronounced on 3 August 2010, filed on 6 August 2010, Sections II.1.3.2 and II.1.3.4 (Kabuye Hill); The Prosecutor v. Callixte Kalimanzira, Case No. ICTR-05-88-T, Judgement, 22 June 2009, Section III.2.4 (Kabuye Hill). Munyakazi, whose trial started in April 2009, was prosecuted on the basis of attacks in Nyamasheke Parish, Shangi Parish, and Mibilizi Parish, which also featured in the Ntagerura et al. trial, whose evidentiary phase was completed in first quarter of 2003. See Munyakazi Trial Judgement, Sections II.3.7 (Nyamasheke Parish), II.3.8 (Shangi Parish), II.3.9 (Mibilizi Parish); Ntagerura et al. Trial Judgement, Sections II.B.5.b (Shangi Parish), II.B.5.c (Mibilizi Parish), II.B.5.d (Nyamasheke Parish). In addition, Ndahimana, Kanyarugika, and Seromba were prosecuted on the basis of attacks at Kivumu Commune and Nyange Parish. See The Prosecutor v. Grégoire Ndahimana, Case No. ICTR-01-68-T, Judgement and Sentence, pronounced on 17 November 2011, signed on 30 December 2011, filed on 18 January 2012, Sections III.1(Kivumu Commune), III.5 and III.6 (Nyange Parish); The Prosecutor v. Gaspard Kanyarukiga, Case No. ICTR-02-78-T, Judgement and Sentence, pronounced on 1 November 2010, filed on 9 November 2010, Sections III.2 (Kivumu Commune), III.5 and III.6 (Nyange Parish); Seromba Trial Judgement, Sections II.3 (Kivumu Commune), II.6 and II.7 (Nyange Parish). Beyond these anecdotal references, the general reliance on incarcerated witnesses – a practice ubiquitous to proceedings before the Tribunal – also tends to reduce the risk that witnesses will not be located or will be unavailable to testify in more than one proceeding.

in multiple accused cases it is 479 days.[88] From notice of appeal to appeal judgement, the duration for a case involving a single convicted person is 556 days,[89] where it is 973 days when it involves multiple convicted persons.[90] The average length from the date of arrest to final judgement on appeal for a single accused proceeding before the Tribunal is 2395 days[91] (or around six and a half years), while the length of multiple accused proceedings is approximately 4825 days (or just over 13 years).[92]

34. These numbers do not necessarily reflect the occurrence of undue delay in joined proceedings. However, that an accused convicted at trial in a joined proceeding might expect to spend around six and a half years more in preventative detention before receiving a final verdict than an accused who proceeds at trial and appeal alone reflects a staggering difference.

35. I concede that the data reflecting that single accused proceedings generally advance faster than multiple accused proceedings does not eliminate the possibility of other logistical considerations that could delay the commencement of single accused cases.[93] However, I would nonetheless support that defendants be tried individually, particularly where the circumstances I discuss below that could lead to more efficient joint proceedings are not present,[94] given the relative efficiency of single accused proceedings when compared to multi-accused proceedings.

[91] So as not to skew the statistics when comparing single accused cases to multi-accused proceedings, I have excluded from this calculation single accused cases where guilty pleas were entered as well as cases where defendants were acquitted at trial and where such acquittals were not appealed.

[92] The length of multi-accused cases consists of the entire proceedings through appeal, even where one or multiple defendants was or were acquitted at trial and where such acquittals were not appealed.

[93] In this respect, where defendants who could be tried jointly are tried separately, the separate proceedings would require either: (i) more court space and additional judges to hear the separate proceedings; (ii) one bench to hear both cases and splitting the court time for both so that each may proceed at the same time; or (iii) one bench hear both proceedings consecutively, with one defendant waiting for his case to start after the close of the first defendant's case. Thus, the last scenario validates the concern that "further delay would result as it is not obvious that his separate trial could commence at the same time as this joint trial." See Tolimir et al. Decision of 27 January 2006, para. 25.

[94] See infra, Dissenting Opinion and Declaration of Judge Khan, para. 38.

36. Let us now consider the theoretical justification that joined trials minimise the possibility of inconsistent verdicts while enhancing procedural and substantive fairness among defendants through uniform proceedings. While the work of the Tribunal will contribute to the collective history of the Rwandan genocide, its purpose is not to create a cohesive historical narrative. The Tribunal, like all criminal courts, is tasked with determining the individual criminal liability of each defendant tried before it. "Inconsistent verdicts" might occur in any trial due to the rigorous application of the high standard of proof in criminal proceedings to the evidence of the acts and omissions of each individual defendant, even where they are alleged to bear criminal responsibility for the same or related events. Furthermore, the fairness of proceedings before the Tribunal is enshrined in Article 20 of the Statute and required by Article 19 of the Statute. It is my view that joining trials does not inherently provide further guarantees of such fairness for defendants even where evidence and the alleged crime base is overlapping.

2. Considering Joinder in the Future

37. Having compared the theoretical justifications for joinder with some empirical data, I must first concede that the calculations I have used above are an imperfect reflection of how trials and appeals proceeded before the Tribunal. I have drawn heavily from my personal experiences or used anecdotes to raise questions about broad theories. Furthermore, I also acknowledge that not all single accused cases have proceeded "efficiently" and not all joint proceedings were slow. In fact, the Kayishema and Ruzindana and Ntakirutimana and Ntakirutimana trials and appeals moved rapidly, even when compared to cases involving single defendants. The Mugenzi and Mugiraneza appeal, for example, was quick.[95] However, what can be seen from these cases is that: (i) the crime bases were limited; and (ii) the record in support of the criminal liability for each accused was, or was almost, entirely overlapping.

38. The purpose of this declaration is not to criticise the joinder practice of the Tribunal. The reality for this Tribunal is that the Rules allowing joinder are permissive[96] and cases have been joined accordingly. Nonetheless, I hope that this declaration serves as a starting point for international criminal tribunals to take a more nuanced and sceptical approach to the joinder of the cases before them. It is my suggestion that the judiciary of international criminal tribunals, when [95] In this respect, I note that Mugenzi and Mugiraneza were prosecuted on the basis of several different actions and particular crimes in the Bizimungu et al. trial. However, their appeal was based on their convictions for the two same events, which were supported by the same evidentiary record. See generally Mugenzi and Mugiraneza Appeal Judgement.

[96] Rule 48 of the Rules provides that "persons accused of the same or different crimes committed in the course of the same transaction may be jointly charged and tried." Rule 2 of the Rules defines "transaction" as "[a] number of acts or omissions whether occurring as one event or a number of events, at the same or different locations and being part of a common scheme, strategy or plan."

reviewing the prospective joinder of cases, review the relevant indictments, the prosecution disclosures – including witness statements – and the prosecution pre-trial submissions – such as its pre-trial brief – and ask the following questions: (i) is the crime base limited; (ii) are each of the prospective prosecution witnesses intended to give evidence that is central to establishing the criminal responsibility of all or almost all of the accused; and (iii) are the forms of liability for each accused such that the prosecution evidence against one accused is relevant to all accused.

39. If these questions are answered in the affirmative, the possibility of realising the theoretical underpinnings supporting joinder – judicial economy, minimising hardship to witnesses, and avoiding undue delay – is high. However, the theoretical justifications for joinder might not be realised even if some overlap exists where: (i) the crime base is large – e.g. an overlapping charge of conspiracy related to an entire conflict; and (ii) it is clear that the case against each accused will require the presentation of unique evidence from different witnesses due to the fact that there are distinct crime bases and/or particular acts and omissions that are unique to each accused.

XIX. ANNEX A: PROCEDURAL HISTORY

1. The main aspects of the appeal proceedings are summarised below.

A. Briefing

2. Trial Chamber II of the Tribunal pronounced the judgement in this case on 24 June 2011 and issued its written Trial Judgement in English on 14 July 2011. Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, Ndayambaje, and the Prosecution appealed the Trial Judgement.

1. Notices of Appeal

3. On 22 July 2011, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted, in part, motions for extensions of time and ordered that the Prosecution file its notice of appeal no later than 1 September 2011 and that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje file their respective notices of appeal no later than 17 October 2011.[1] Because of the inability of Nteziryayo and his counsel to work in English, the Pre-Appeal Judge, in the same decision, ordered that Nteziryayo file his notice of appeal no later than 90 days from service of the French translation of the Trial Judgement.[2]

4. The Prosecution filed its notice of appeal on 1 September 2011.[3] Nsabimana filed his notice of appeal on 10 October 2011.[4] Nyiramasuhuko,[5] Ntahobali,[6] Kanyabashi,[7] and Ndayambaje[8] filed their respective initial notices of appeal on 17 October 2011.

5. On 22 February 2012, the Appeals Chamber granted Nyiramasuhuko's and Ntahobali's motions to amend their respective notices of appeal.[9] Each filed their first amended notice of appeal on 24 February 2012.[10]

6. On 1 March 2012, subsequent to the appointment of an English speaking co-counsel to Nteziryayo's Defence, the Pre-Appeal Judge, proprio motu, reconsidered his 22 July 2011 Appeal Decision and ordered Nteziryayo to file his notice of appeal no later than 1 May 2012.[11] Nteziryayo filed his initial notice of appeal on 26 April 2012.[12]

7. On 23 October 2012, the Appeals Chamber granted Ntahobali's motion to amend his first amended notice of appeal.[13] Ntahobali filed his second amended notice of appeal on 29 October 2012.[14]

8. On 18 February 2013, the Appeals Chamber granted, in part, Nyiramasuhuko's motion to amend her first amended notice of appeal.[15] Nyiramasuhuko filed her second amended notice of appeal on 21 February 2013.[16]

9. On 5 April 2013, the Appeals Chamber allowed Kanyabashi and Ndayambaje to amend their respective notices of appeal.[17] Ndayambaje and Kanyabashi each filed a second amended notice of appeal on 8 April 2013.[18]

10. On 8 May 2013, the Appeals Chamber granted, in part, Nteziryayo's motion to amend his notice of appeal.[19] Nteziryayo filed his amended notice of appeal on 13 May 2013.[20] On 5 July 2013, the Appeals Chamber granted the Prosecution's request to summarily dismiss Nteziryayo's appeal as it concerned the delay between his arrest and initial appearance, finding that Nteziryayo had waived his right to raise this issue on appeal.[21]

2. Appeal Briefs

11. On 22 July 2011, the Pre-Appeal Judge ordered that Nyiramasuhuko, Ntahobali, Nsabimana, Nteziryayo, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje file their respective appeal briefs no later than 60 days from the date of service of the French translation of the Trial Judgement.[22]

12. The Prosecution filed its appeal brief on 15 November 2011.[23]

13. On 13 December 2012, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted, in part, motions for extension of the word limits, and authorised: (i) Nyiramasuhuko and Ntahobali to file appeal briefs not exceeding 80,000 words; (ii) Kanyabashi to file an appeal brief not exceeding 40,000 words; and (iii) Ndayambaje to file an appeal brief not exceeding 50,000 words.[24]

15. On 8 May 2013, the Appeals Chamber granted, in part, a Prosecution's motion to strike paragraphs of Nteziryayo's appeal brief containing new grounds of appeal and ordered Nteziryayo to file a revised appeal brief no later than 13 May 2013.[34] Nteziryayo filed his confidential corrected revised appeal brief on 14 June 2013.[35] On 16 July 2013, he filed an addendum to his confidential corrected revised appeal brief.[36]

3. Response Briefs

16. On 28 October 2011, Kanyabashi was granted leave to file his response brief to the Prosecution's appeal no later than 30 days from the service of the French translation of the Trial Judgement and the Prosecution's appeal brief, whichever occurred later.[37] Kanyabashi filed his response to the Prosecution's appeal on 6 March 2013.[38]

17. In his decision of 13 December 2012, the Pre-Appeal Judge allowed the Prosecution to file a consolidated response brief not exceeding 270,000 words in total or separate response briefs not exceeding the word limit granted for the corresponding appeal brief.[39] On 22 April 2013, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted, in part, the Prosecution's motion for an extension of time to file its response briefs, ordering that they be filed no later than 100 days from the date of filing of each corresponding appeal brief.[40]

18. The Prosecution filed a consolidated response brief on 17 July 2013.[41] On 19 July 2013, the Pre-Appeal Judge ordered the Prosecution to re-file a consolidated response brief not exceeding 270,000 words that complied with the formal requirements on appeal no later than [32] On 15 April 2013, the Pre-Appeal Judge noted that the appeals briefs filed by Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje had systematically omitted necessary spaces between words, numbers, and punctuation marks and considered that, if corrected, these appeal briefs would exceed the word limits imposed on them. The Pre-Appeal Judge issued a formal warning under Rule 46(A) of the Rules to the counsel for Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje but, in light of the need to facilitate expeditious appellate proceedings and in order not to prejudice Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje for the misconduct of their respective counsel, found their respective appeal briefs validly filed. See Order Issuing a Formal Warning to Counsel for Ntahobali, Kanyabashi, and Ndayambaje, 15 April 2013.

20. On 27 August 2013, the Pre-Appeal Judge granted, in part, motions for the extension of time and word limits and authorised and ordered: (i) Nyiramasuhuko to file a reply brief of no more than 21,000 words no later than 45 days from the filing of the Prosecution's revised response brief; (ii) Ntahobali to file a reply brief of no more than 23,000 words no later than 45 days from the filing of the Prosecution's revised response brief; (iii) Nsabimana to file his reply brief no later than 30 days from the filing of the Prosecution's revised response brief; (iv) Kanyabashi to file a reply brief of no more than 11,000 words no later than 30 days from the date of the filing of the Prosecution's revised response brief; and (v) Ndayambaje to file a reply brief not exceeding 16,000 words no later than 35 days from the date of filing of the Prosecution's revised response brief.[45] In the same decision, the Pre-Appeal Judge, proprio motu, authorised Nteziryayo to file his reply brief no later than 30 days from the date of the filing of the Prosecution's revised response brief.[46]

21. Nsabimana,[47] Nteziryayo,[48] and Kanyabashi[49] each filed their respective reply briefs on 20 September 2013. Ndayambaje filed his reply brief on 25 September 2013.[50] Nyiramasuhuko[51] and Ntahobali[52] each filed their respective reply briefs on 7 October 2013.

B. Assignment of Judges

22. On 15 July 2011, the Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber, Judge Patrick Robinson, assigned the following Judges to hear the appeal: Judge Fausto Pocar (Presiding), Judge Liu Daqun, Judge Andrésia Vaz, Judge Theodor Meron, and Judge Carmel Agius.[53] On 21 July 2011, Judge Fausto Pocar assigned himself as Pre-Appeal Judge.[54]

23. On 17 November 2011, Judge Theodor Meron became the Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber and assigned Judge Patrick Robinson to replace him in this case.[55] On 11 July 2012, Judge Theodor Meron assigned Judge Bakhtiyar Tuzmukhamedov to replace Judge Liu Daqun.[56]

24. On 2 October 2012, Judge Theodor Meron denied Ndayambaje's motion requesting the disqualification of Judge Fausto Pocar from this case.[57]

25. On 19 March 2013, Judge Theodor Meron assigned Judge Liu Daqun to replace Judge Andrésia Vaz.[58] On 8 October 2013, Judge Theodor Meron assigned Judge Khalida Rachid Khan to replace Judge Patrick Robinson.[59] On 17 November 2015, Judge Carmel Agius became the the Presiding Judge of the Appeals Chamber and, on 18 November 2015, ordered that the Bench in this case shall not change in composition and that Judge Fausto Pocar shall remain the Presiding Judge of this case.[60]

C. Status Conference

26. A status conference was held by the Pre-Appeal Judge on 10 May 2013 in Arusha, Tanzania.[61]

D. Motions for Stay of the Proceedings, Provisional Release, and Severance

27. On 7 February 2014, the Appeals Chamber allowed the Prosecution's application to strike Nyiramasuhuko's motion for a stay of proceedings filed by Nyiramasuhuko on 21 November 2013, finding that Nyiramasuhuko's motion was an unauthorised attempt to expand the scope of her arguments in her written appeal submissions.[62]

28. On 10 September 2014, the Appeals Chamber dismissed Nsabimana's motion for provisional release, finding that Nsabimana failed to satisfy the requirements of Rule 65(I)(iii) of the Rules.[63]

29. On 21 November 2014, the Appeals Chamber denied Nsabimana's request for severance of his appeal on the ground that Nsabimana did not establish a conflict of interest causing him serious prejudice or demonstrate that the severance of his case would protect the interests of justice.[64]

E. Motions for the Admission of Additional Evidence on Appeal

30. In response to a motion filed by Ntahobali, the Appeals Chamber, on 23 November 2012, clarified that amicus curiae reports relating to false testimony and contempt investigations were part of the record on appeal, and determined that Ntahobali's request that they be admitted as additional evidence on appeal was moot.[65]

31. On 9 April 2015, the Appeals Chamber granted, in part, a motion filed by Ndayambaje to present additional evidence on appeal and admitted a witness statement as additional evidence on appeal.[66] In the same decision, the Appeals Chamber denied Ndayambaje's request for the admission of a second witness statement.[67]

32. On 14 April 2015, the Appeals Chamber granted, in part, a motion filed by Ntahobali and admitted as additional evidence on appeal statements given by Witness QCB during investigations in Canadian criminal proceedings.[68] The Appeals Chamber denied Ntahobali's further request for the admission of letters and testimony as additional evidence on appeal in the same decision.[69]

33. On 12 May 2015, the Appeals Chamber also granted, in part, Ndayambaje's request to admit as additional evidence on appeal a prior statement and testimony given by a witness in the Ntawukulilyayo case.[70] The Appeals Chamber denied Ndayambaje's requests to admit as additional evidence on appeal testimonies and statements from the Kalimanzira case and the Ntawukulilyayo case in the same decision.[71] On 1 October 2015, the Appeals Chamber dismissed the Prosecution requests to admit rebuttal evidence in light of the additional evidence admitted on appeal.[72]

34. In decisions issued on 27 March 2015,[73] 2 April 2015,[74] 8 April 2015,[75] 9 April 2015,[76] 17 April 2015,[77] 6 May 2015,[78] and 6 October 2015,[79] the Appeals Chamber denied all other motions for the admission of additional evidence on appeal.

F. Appeals Hearing

35. In accordance with the scheduling order of 5 March 2015,[80] the 19 March 2015 order setting the timetable for the appeal hearings,[81] and the 25 March 2015 order inviting the appellants to address certain issues,[82] oral arguments of the parties were heard at a hearing held between 14 and 17 and between 20 and 22 April 2015 in Arusha, Tanzania.
