Maillet

The miniature of a former mayor of Saint-Quentin presented to the musée in 1899 with an improbable attribution to La Tour is a copy of a pastel, also from the family, and said to be by La Tour (albeit Fleury noted that it was not one of his best). This might be the portrait mentioned by La Tour in his letter to the mayor of Saint-Quentin of 28.VIII.1776 beside which his own portrait was to hang: La Tour makes no reference to the portrait of Maillet being by him. The photograph in the Dommages de guerre files indicates that the pastel was not by La Tour, any more than the pastel of the sitter's daughter, despite both being authenticated by M. Delcroix at the time of the loss.

Manelli 1752

Pietro MANELLI (c.1725–c.1770), premier bouffon chantant de la troupe italienne, in Paris from 1752, returned to Italy before his death (in 1754 according to Fétis); his dates are uncertain. Pergolesi's Maître de Musique was performed on 19.IX.1752 with Manelli, and contributed to the celebrated quarrel between the bouffonnistes and lullistes. Exhibiting Manelli was (for Fleury 1906, p. 12) an act of opposition: in Rousseau's classification, the lullistes included “le roi, les grands, les riches et les femmes”, while the bouffonnistes included “les vais connoisseurs. Les gens à talent, les hommes de génie”. La Tour's clientele evidently belonged to both groups.

It is curious that Anna Tonelli, the other singer in the troupe who attracted much praise (and the wife of the impresario, Eustachio Bambini), was portrayed by Glain (J.351.1765; engraved Lempereur) rather than La Tour.

Marie-Christine de Saxe 1763

Maria Christina Anna Theresia Salomea Eulalia Franziska Xaveria von Sachsen, princesse MARIE-CHRISTINE de Saxe (1735–1782), abbesse de Saint-Pierre de Remiremont en 1773. Born in Warsaw, she was the seventh surviving child of Friedrich August II. She visited France in 1762, progressing through Versailles, Paris, Commercy and Lunéville. It has been suggested (Journal des débats, 18.VI.1903) that Marie Leszczyńska envisaged her father remarrying one of the dauphine’s sisters, but this did not take place. In 1764 she was elected coadjutor to Anne-Charlotte de Lorraine, abbesse de Remiremont, and succeeded in 1773 to this quasi-sovereign role. She died in Schloß Brumath and was buried at Remiremont.

La Tour’s pastel must have been made during the French trip. Her sister kept it until her death, bequeathing it to her brother Clemens Wenzeslas. It is now lost, and only the Saint-Quentin préparation survives. At the Salon de 1763, where it was shown with other members of her family, they royal portraits were politely received – “[ils] sont de toute verité” (although the additions, of Lemoyne and Pommyer, were greeted with greater enthusiasm).

A curious glass painting of Marie-Christine de Saxe en nymphe des eaux de Plombières, by Jouffroy (musée de Remiremont) was executed the same year as the La Tour, and shows a similar face somewhat idealised. According to Stryenski 1902b, she was “d’une laideur repoussante, rachetée par une intelligence très vive”, while her correspondence reveals her as “spirituelle, tendre, enjouée.”

J.46.2222 [MARIE-CHRISTINE de Saxe], une des sœurs de la dauphine de France, pstl (Graf Brühl, Schloß Pforten, 1904) Lit.: Gustave Muller, “Les De La Tour de la galerie de Dresde”, Le Gueigneur de Saint-Quentin, 27.IX.1904, p. 2 n.r., “plusieurs pastels des sœurs de la dauphine, ?La Tour, accrochés trop haut pour les examiner soigneusement” [Attr.; cf. Mme Silvestre. Only one of the dauphine’s sisters was in Franc, so it seems likely to be a misattribution.]

Marie-Josèphe de Saxe 1747–61

Maria Josepha Karolina Eleonore Franziska Xaveria von Sachsen, MARIE-JOSÈPHE de Saxe (1731–1767), dauphine de France. The daughter of Friedrich August II. Kurfürst von Sachsen (August III. of Poland), three of her eight children became kings of France.

Raised in the court at Dresden, she would have been familiar with the extraordinary collection of pastels by Rosalba for which her father had such enthusiasm. He had also (in 1716) engaged Louis de Silvestre as court painter in Dresden, and Marie-Josèphe and all her siblings were portrayed in pastel by Marie-Catherine Hérault, Mme Silvestre (q.v.), before her death in 1743, and by her daughter, Marie-Maximilienne de Silvestre (q.v.), who taught the future dauphine drawing.

A pastel (J.5156.101) by “the king’s daughter, now the dauphiness of France”, no doubt made it under the guidance of her drawing teacher, was encountered by Thomas Nugent (c.1700–1772) on his Grand Tour at a “hunting lodge” half way between Leipzig and Dresden. There (Schloß Hubertusburg) the “gallery is of a good size, and furnished with some fine pictures”, of which Marie-Josèphe’s is the only one described. The first edition of his book came out in 1749 (Hanway’s account, published in 1753, duplicates at least this section), and the pastel, which depicts the saint (Francis Xavier, supported by an angel) whose name she bore, must have been made shortly before the princess went to Versailles. Marie-Maximilienne, alone of her retinue, was allowed to accompany the princess to Versailles.

She became the second wife of Louis le dauphin on 9.II.1747 following the death of the Spanish princess Marie-Thérèse-Raphaëlle; Maurice de Saxe, supported by Mme de Pompadour, proposed his niece to cement relations with the Saxon-Polish dynasty, France’s ally during the War of the Austrian Succession (although Marie Leszczyńska had reservations in view of her father’s claims to Poland). She was the sister of Clément, Xavier and Christine de Saxe; niece of Maurice de Saxe; and mother of Louis XVI and the comte de Provence – all of whom sat to La Tour, probably under her influence.

Of limited intelligence and plain appearance, she was respected for her domestic virtues and her piety. The comte de Vaulgrenant, ministre du roi de Pologne à Versailles, provided this description of her during the negotiations for her marriage (Stryenski 1902):

La princesse de Saxe avait quatorze ans et trois mois quand je suis parti de Dresde; elle était de la taille de Mme de Pons et promettait de croître encore; elle est blonde d’une couleur qui ne m’a pas paru suspecte. Elle a les yeux bleus, grands et ouverts, assez ordinairement battus, le nez un peu gros, la bouche et les dents ni bien ni mal; le teint assez blanc, mais un peu brouillé et quelques petites taches de rousseur. La taille m’a paru bien, le port assez noble et agréable, un bon maintien, assez de physionomie. C’est en total une figure qui, quoique point jolie, n’a rien de choquant ni de rebutant, et ne déplait pas. Quant à l’esprit et au caractère, il n’y a que du bien à en dire : elle est douce, oïe, prévenante, attentive, parlant à propos pour dire des choses obligeantes. Elle a eu une très bonne éducation, elle a l’esprit orné, un enjouement naturel, beaucoup de pénétration et de jugement. Elle aime la lecture plus pour son instruction que pour son amusement. Elle est occupée de ses devoirs de préférence à tout. C’est la favorite de la Reine sa mère, comme sa sœur aînée, future épouse de l’électeur de Bavière, l’est du Roi son père.

In the two surviving finished portraits, the dauphine wears on her left breast the Austrian Sternkreuzorden (with a black ribbon – reçue 14.IX.1739: it appears too in Mme de Silvestre’s pastel, but not in the French dynastic doublet portrait J.46.2259) and, from a red ribbon, the badge of saint Jean Népomucène (the 14th century martyr was canonised in 1729), indicative of the dauphine’s extreme piety, which she had in common with her mother-in-law (and which no doubt contributed to easing the initial tensions between them: according to legend, this was facilitated by the dauphine wearing a miniature of Stanislaw Leszczyński where the queen expected to see one of August III.).

A great many portraits of the dauphine were made, most however deriving from a small group of originals of which those by La Tour are the most important. An oil by Nattier is somewhat uninspired, while the highly idealised pastel by Liotard (J.49.1926 – all surface glitz) offers the most striking contrast with La Tour’s inscapes of domestic piety and calm (Debrie reasonably found melancholy and nostalgia): J.46.2227 and J.46.2237 are most directly comparable. There is no more telling illustration of the fundamental difference between these two artists.

Five La Tour portraits are recorded, as discussed in Jeffares 2018g. The recently discovered first attempt J.46.22251 at a portrait of Marie-Josèphe de Saxe (as the paper size indicates, surely an abandoned work rather than a préparation) raises a chronological problem if related to the 1761 portrait of the dauphine, since the pastel of the queen on the recto was exhibited in 1748. But an analysis of the coiffure in two miniatures (in the Habsburg and Wallace collections) show Marie-Josèphe de Saxe at the time of her marriage in 1747, evidently after the lost La Tour: they show the dauphine in almost exactly the same pose as the 1761 pastel, ignoring the 1749 composition entirely. Commissioned in 1747, and finished by the following year, it must have been in La Tour’s studio at the same time as he was preparing the pastel of the queen (J.46.2269) for exhibition at the salon. A version of this was sent to Dresden in 1750, accompanied by a letter of 12.II.1750 from Graf Loos to Graf Brühl: “Quant au portrait, c’est une copie de l’original que M. de La Tour a faite par ordre de Monsieur le Dauphin.... C’est d’ailleurs sûrement le plus ressemblant que nous ayons jusqu’ici de cette princesse.”

There is a curious echo of the queen’s portrait again in the 1761 pastel, where the dauphine holds her fan upside down in what can only be a conscious reprise of the composition: but was it La Tour or the sitter who suggested this?

Fleury 1904, p. 48f cites this letter from the dauphine to Graf Wackerbarth-Salmour of 21.X.1755 (Stryenski 1902, p. 167f) as evidence of her secure taste in her criticism of the Rotari portraits shown to her, suggesting that the references to the inexact drawing and her preference for a “pinceau plus hardi” were oblique references to La Tour:

il y en a quelques-unes dont les physiognomies m'ont paru fort jolies mais si vous voulez que je vous parle franchement ce n'est point du tout là le goût de peinture que j'estime; comme je ne me donne pas pour connoiseuse en fait de peinture, je puis dire mon sentiment plus hardiment et sans craindre de faire tort au peintre, d'autant plus que je vous prie de n'en pas parler, mais je ne trouve pas le dessin de M. le comte [Rotari] bien exact et sa peinture me paraît trop lèchée ce n'est pas là, je crois, un terme de l'art, mais je n'en trouve pas d'autre pour exprimer ce que je veux dire, j'aime mieux un pinceau plus hardi. Vous vous moquerez sûrement de mon bon goût et vous aurez raison. Je vous prie toujours de lui marquer que je suis très obligée de ses têtes.

The preparation J.46.2237 includes a discarded fragment of a chin, inverted; it does not seem to correspond with any surviving portrait. The vertical blue strokes below the chin might be the first steps to indicate clerical bands.

A letter from the duc d'Aumont to Papillon de Fontpertuis of 1.vii.1761 (see documents) implies that the duc had La Tour pastels of the dauphin and of the dauphine in the Hôtel de Nesle, Paris, to be sent to Anne Nivelon in Versailles to copy: it is which versions were used.

At the salons, the portraits of the dauphine attracted limited attention. In 1761 Per Gustav Floding mentioned the dauphine's pastel to Tessin, while the abbé Le Blanc cited it and her brother, the comte de Lusace, as the “Ne plus ultrà du Pastel.” In 1763, the Mercur and the Journal encyclopédique critics both cited the portrait of the dauphine together with that of the dauphin.

By 1766 Jeurat, garde des tableaux du roi, had been ordered to get Frédou to make three copies.

In her will, the dauphine took care to distribute the La Tour pastels that she had commissioned of her siblings to one another: Xavier got Clemens, Clemens got Christine, and Christine that of Xavier.

Marie-Josèphe de Saxe et son fils 1761

La Tour's sole attempt at a pastel with multiple figures was left unfinished for reasons that have been widely, but inconclusively, discussed. The Goncourt description (1867, p. 358f) has its reservations:

85. Grand esquisse représentant la Dauphine faisant l'éducation du duc de Bourgogne, son fils.

Grand pastel. Mauvaise proportion des figures. Composition très-chargée d'accessoires mal rangés: buste de Louis XV, console, tenture, tabouret où jouent un chien et un chat, table chargée de livres à images. La Dauphine, en robe de velours rougeâtre, agrémentée de fourrure, assise, donne la main à son fils, tout vêtu de bleu, avec broderies, brandebourgs blancs, le cordon bleu en sautoir, son bonnet à plumes à la main; la tête de la Dauphine et les bras ébauchés. Admirables lumières de velours dans la robe de la mère et dans le bleu de l'enfant, mais point d'effet. Un petit fond à droite presque grotesque: silhouette de soldat montant la garde; et au delà, des remuenses promenant des enfants.

Cette préparation est intéressante, parce que la tradition veut que ce tableau, terminé et offert par la Tour à l'Hôtel de Ville de Saint-Quentin, ait été lacéré en 1793.

That 1793 “tradition”, taken from Dréolle de Nodon (who had the sense to add “dit-on”), probably refers to the fact that the Saint-Quentin pastel itself (there is no evidence that a final version was ever made, still less presented to the town hall) was placed on display at the Hôtel de ville in 1822 by the École gratuite, whose inventory, seven years earlier, records that the “glace” was “en trois parties” (more likely by accident than Revolutionary attention). The chevalier de La Tour had mentioned it in his 1806 will as “le superbe tableau de la famille Royale qui n'a pas été achevé”.

Let us start with the tricky question of the determination of the identity of the foregrounded prince: duc de Bourgogne or duc de Berry. Pave Debrie, the eye colour is of no assistance; nor is there a clear conclusion from analysis of the heights and relative ages of the two princes and the gaps in the Bourbon genealogy (the main figure might be 7–9 years old, while the second prince no more than 3: at the start of 1761, the ages were Bourgogne 9; Berry 6; Provence 5; Artois 3); the babe in arms is most likely to be Madame Clotilde (born .IX.1759). The absence of the Toison d'or, to which Berry was not admitted until 23.VII.1761, although Bourgogne had it from 1754, is noted. All the images on which La Tour draws (notably the préparations for Marie-Josèphe) were available to him by 1761 – except that Berry had not yet sat to him. The prince in his hussar's uniform is reminiscent of J.46.134. Overlooked to date is the fact that the young prince's face is on a separate sheet. The most likely explanation is that the work was indeed abandoned when Bourgogne died, but La Tour later (not necessarily in 1761) replaced the face with Berry's, but remained dissatisfied with the result.

There has been much commentary too on the dynastic symbolism of the setting and accessories, as well as on the curious balance between official and domestic elements. The main image – of the dauphine holding her son's hand – is an almost literal account of her role in his education: the joined hands are practically at the optical centre of the composition – but so too is the image of the queen (perhaps another initiative of the dauphine to win the confidence of a mother-in-law whose dynastic claims to the Polish crown were in opposition with her own). One notes that the Sternkreuzorden and saint Jean Népomucène decorations worn in the earlier solo portraits are omitted. The bust of Louis XV appears to be an unrecorded marble version of the 1751 Lemoyne bronze in the Louvre (inv. MR3371); the significance of the large folio concealed behind the bust and resting on the mirror has not been established.

The oval portrait of the deceased dauphin does not correspond precisely to any surviving portrait; bizarrely the dauphin has his right hand in his pocket, and the dimensions of the head are unconvincing. The pendant, hanging orthogonally, is not identified (perhaps Marie-Thérèse-Raphaëlle?). Its fronton seems to be a simplified version of the shell with dolphins – the two Louvre pastels J.46.2126 and J.46.2242 both share this feature on their frames.

Even the print of Marie Leszczyńska, though derived from J.46.2269, is not the Petit engraving (its presence confirming the reconciliation between the queen and dauphine). The dog's-eared volume surely indicates the frequency of its use in the boy's education rather than any residual hostility between the two women. Indeed the whole composition is surely an echo of the famous Carle Van Loo painting of 1747 (MV 8492) showing the queen in a similar space, an opening to the right, a bust of the king (perhaps one of the early lost Lemoyne works) in profile on the left, a dog in the foreground, the queen in a similar dress, shown at the same angle, her forearm raised to the horizontal, the ermine mantle billowing to the floor. As is well known, Van Loo took his face from the earlier La Tour pastel.

No doubt it is significant that the globe is turned to reveal the Caribbean, with so much of France's wealth coming from the sugar colonies, a trade greatly disrupted during the Seven Years' War (the British captured Guadeloupe in 1759 and Martinique in 1762: in the peace negotiations Choiseul regarded their recovery as worth the surrender of Canada and Louisiana): perhaps the ship shown separately has some related significance, although it might also be an attempt by the artist to recant his notorious "nous n'avons point de marine" remark legend has him making to the king.

The cat and dog quarrelling are Chardinesque (although the execution, particularly of the cat, is astonishingly poor), while the group of tiny figures in the right background echo Liotard's portrait of the maréchal de Saxe which La Tour might well have seen. The opening creates problems with the light source for the composition.

While the interior is assumed to be an apartment at Versailles, and while the level of detail gives the impression that La Tour was recording what he saw, it appears in fact purely imaginary, or at least to combine elements that did not coexist in reality. The overdoors have not been identified (they vaguely resemble Oudry's Cinq Sens at Versailles, but are a different shape; there is little information on the decorations which Louis Aubert made for the dauphin and his family in the royal palaces c.1748, but they may be Italianate landscapes by or in the manner of a Dutch artist such as Nicolaes Berchem). Among numerous objections, there are no overdoors on the exterior walls of the palace, nor would the door to such an opening be unglazed. The boiseries in the apartments at Versailles are white and gilt: the pale green walls shown here may be the colour favoured by the dauphin and found both in Fontainebleau and Compiègne (this would have been a more satisfactory colour for a pastel). The combination of public and private furniture (e.g. the tabouret, with the dauphine's fauteuil) is strange, as is the combination of the dauphine's court dress and mantle with the intimate gesture in holding her son's hand. Curiously, while the Frédou oil portrait of the dauphine, J.46.2249, takes its head, coiffure and single strand of pearls directly from J.46.2242, the large La Tour pastel seems to take the fur-trimmed court dress from the Frédou, albeit altering the colour of the dress and its orientation; there is now too a second strand in the necklace, and the coiffure includes the black feather from the miniature J.46.22505.

One is left with the impression that this was more a work of fantasy than of record. There is no indication of it having been commissioned by the Bâtiments du roi, from which Salmon and others have concluded that it was a private commission by Marie-Josèphe: perhaps in fact it was not commissioned at all, but undertaken speculatively, and abandoned in view of the unsolved problems it presented.

The work is on multiple sheets of paper, and large parts have been left in a very low level of finish. Extensive grid lines visible along the lower border correspond to the mouldings in the boiseries, but other lines at various angles are harder to explain by reference to the complex perspective (had La Tour intended to copy Van Loo's floor too, before reverting to the carpet he had so successfully used in the président de Rieux and Mme de Pompadour?). While some are partly obscured by pastel (e.g. the dog's hind legs obscure two vertical lines marking the feet of the stool), others seem to be penciled on the surface. If La Tour intended them for transfer to a second version, there is no trace.

Marie Leszczyńska 1747

Maria Karolina Zofia Felicja, dite Catherine-Sophie-Félicité-MARIE LESZCZYŃSKA (Breslau 23.VI.1703 – Versailles 24.VI.1768), reine de France. At the age of 15, on 5.IX.1725 in Fontainebleau, for reasons of international politics, Louis XV was married to the daughter of Stanisław Leszczyński, the Polish king dethroned by the Russians whose claims for reinstatement were supported by France, but ended with his abdication in 1736. The choice of a bride who was six years older than Louis, from a dynasty with such limited prospects, and with limited physical attractions (the duc de Luynes nevertheless thought “elle a un visage qui plaît et beaucoup d’innocence”) was a surprise to all, but resulted from the paucity of alternatives among European royalty. The marriage was however successful in that ten children were produced in rapid succession.

The king was however serially unfaithful, from 1733 on; Marie’s response was guided by her extreme piety and devotion to the cult of the Sacré-Cœur and of saint Jean Népomucène. Her inner circle included the Luynes, président Hénault and Helvétius. She played no role in politics, but was fond of reading and music.

Like her father, she was also an amateur artist; examples of her work in oil are known, among them decorative chinoiseries and devotional pictures (v. Marie Leszczyńska 2011). Among her favourite painters were Coypel, Oudry and Vien. An invoice from Coypel “pour des couleurs fournies à la Reine, montant à somme de 30 livres 12s” is in the Archives nationales (O¹ 1914). Vien exhibited six small encaustic pictures in the 1755 salon. They have not survived; but some idea of the Tête de Vierge (Gahtgens & Lugand 1988, no. 109) can be obtained from the crayon-manner engraving by Jean-Charles François (1759), which bears the legend “peint par sa Majesté” [Marie Leszczyńska]. It is tempting to speculate that the queen’s copy may have been in pastel.

Inevitably there is a substantial iconography to which has recently been added a terracotta bust by Lemoyne (Grison 2015). Apart from numerous anonymes, there are paintings by Belle, Gobert, Jouffroy, Santerre, Stiémart, Tocqué, and three members of the Van Loo family, as well as pastels by Aubry, Cammas, Lion, Lundberg, Pichard and Vien. The best known portrait is the Nattier painting from the 1748 salon (MV 5672). Made after the La Tour pastel, it again (and at the express demand of the queen) shows her informally in town rather than court dress; it was the last portrait for which she would sit.

Of La Tour’s pastels there is one surviving image (Louvre; J.46.2269), with many copies. The payment of 25.iii.1752 records two pastels of the queen among the eight royal pastels finished 1744–49. The documentation makes it clear that Carle Van Loo completed his portrait en pied of the queen (MV 8492) by 4.v.1747, when the duc de Luynes recorded seeing it (“La tête de ce portrait a été copiée par Carle Vanloo sur le beau portrait que La Tour fit en pastel, il y a deux ans, dans le temps que la Reine logeoit chez Mgr le Dauphin”): the head corresponds precisely to the surviving pastel by La Tour (apart from the jewellery and scarf).

So it is reasonable to infer that this pastel was the one mentioned in a list of commissions under Orry (AN O¹ 1921^A, c. 1745–47) among four of the royal family of which two were complete, but not that of the queen, which “n’ont que la tête de fait”. The Van Loo painting was exhibited in the salon de 1747 where Lieudé de Sepmanville 1747 explained that the head “n’a été copié d’après [La Tour] que pour épargner des peines à la Reine”, and that Van Loo would have been perfectly capable of doing it unaided.

On the other hand the sketch of Marie-Josèphe de Saxe J.46.22251 (q.v.) on the backing board suggests that the Louvre pastel reused material from an initial attempt for the earliest portrait of the dauphine which cannot predate her marriage on 9.ii.1747. So while there may have been earlier versions, the Louvre pastel was almost certainly made in mid 1747.

When the La Tour was finally shown, in 1748, it met particular praise from Baillet de Saint-Julien 1748:

celui de la Reine est au dessus de tout ceux qu’on peut lui donner. On n’a jamais vû saisir plus parfaitement l’exacte ressemblance; & quant au détail, c’est tout ce qu’on peut de mieux traité & de plus brillant.

For Gougenot “c’est un chef-d’œuvre, tant par la ressemblance, que par l’art avec lequel les ajustemens y sont traités”, while to Léoffroy de Saint-Yves, “la douceur et la bonté de cette Princesse sont exprimées sur son front, dans son air et son maintien, que M. de La Tour a si bien saisis.”

There are confusions in the provenances of some of the more important versions of this and the pendant corrected only in Jeffares 2018g, where the question of the frames is also discussed, suggesting that the versions presented to Graf Brühl J.46.2291 may be of greater importance than previously thought.

La Tour’s own studio version J.46.2273 was originally in the Saint-Quentin collection, but presented by the administrators of the École gratuite de dessin to the duchesse d’Angoulême on a visit to Saint-Quentin in 1814. In a letter of 3.vi.1932 to Elie Fleury, Gaston Brière speculated that it might still be in Schloß Frohsdorf – but if so it may have been destroyed by the Russians in 1944.

As mentioned above (J.46.2242), the curious pose in which the sitter holds her fan upside down appears again in the 1761 pastel of the dauphine J.46.2242. (It also appears in Nattier portraits, of Madame Adélaïde, 1749, MV 8376, and of the dauphine in 1751, MV 2179). The conceit is not original to La Tour: Chéry 2019, p. 97, citing a thesis by Georgina Letourmy, suggests it first arose in three examples from c.1745 (Bonito, Maria Amalia von Sachsen, Prado; Meytens, Maria Amalia von Habsburg, Schönbrunn; and Grooth, Catherine II., Pavlovsk) and proposes that this is a gesture of powerful princesses. It is not however obvious how La Tour would have seen any of these three. On the other hand, what could well have been earlier pastels of commoners by Allais (J.103.202, or the J.103.188 which has been confused with J.46.1328) or Vigée (J.758.215); or an enamel of Lavinia Fenton by Rouquet (RCIN 421958; version in Louvre RF30939); or the 1731 oil of Lady Betty Germain by Charles Phillips (Knole) suggest the pose was not especially uncommon in Europe. A Boucher drawing (New York, MMA, inv. 59.23.39) dated to the 1730s by Laing in Boucher 2003 (pp. 123, 236) relates to lost fan-paintings made for the Tsaritsa. La Tour himself reused the idea in J.46.1379, suggesting that he saw no need to reserve the gesture for royalty.

Marmontel

Jean-François MARMONTEL (1723–1799), de l'Académie française, historiographe de France, poet, playwright, philosophe. The son of a tailor, he was educated by the Jesuits in Toulouse. Voltaire invited him to Paris on the strength of an ode he had composed. His plays met a mixed response, but Mme de Pompadour appointed him secrétaire des bâtiments in 1753. His Contes moraux were published in the Mercur of which he was directeur 1758–60. He lost the privilege as a result of a defamatory satire (which he pronounced at Mme Geoffrin's) against the duc d'Aumont, who had him sent to the Bastille, where he devoted his brief stay to translation. In 1763 the Académie française elected him a member, and in 1772 he was appointed historiographe de France after the death of Duclos. On 28.IX.1777 he married Marie-Adélaïde Leyrin de Montigny, niece of the abbé Morellet (the witnesses included Loménie de Brienne, Necker, the princes de Rohan and de Beauvau, and the duc de Richelieu). In 1783 he succeeded d'Alembert as secrétaire perpétuel de l'Académie française. He was made a membre du Conseil des anciens in 1797. His Mémoires are of great interest.

The lively portrait of Marmontel, in robe de chambre holding a manuscript, by Roslin (Salon de 1767; Louvre, inv. RF 1716) is well known. A later portrait by Boilly is in Versailles (MV 4551). A print by Gaucher is widely reproduced. There is also a Cochin profile (engraved Augustin de Saint-Aubin 1765). D'Hémery's police report (1748) described him as “grand, assez bien de figure et fort pale”, and mentions that he was associated with Mlle Verrières, Maurice de Saxe's mistress, and subsequently la Clairon (both confirmed in his Mémoires).

In the 1753 salon Marmontel supplied verses to La Tour's portraits of Rousseau and d'Alembert that were mentioned by several critics.

This must have been around the same time as the visits he made to the La Pouplinière salon, where he records in his Mémoires (generally one of the best guides to La Tour's clientèle) meeting “La Tour, le plus habile peintre en pastel que nous ayons eu” as well as Rameau, Vaucanson and Carle Van Loo and his wife. In another section he reverts to a discussion of artists:

La Tour avait de l'enthousiasme, et il l'employait à peindre les philosophes de ce temps-là; mais le cerveau déjà brouillé de politique et de morale, dont il croyait raisonner sagement, il se trouvait humilié lorsqu'on lui parlait de peinture. Vous avez de lui, mes enfants, une esquisse de mon portrait; ce fut le prix de la complaisance avec laquelle je l'écoutais réglant les destins de l'Europe.

Far later (19.XII.1783), Marmontel wrote to La Tour acknowledging some unknown “marque d'amitié” the poet had received, apparently a sketch for a portrait, possibly the one he mentions to his children but which does not seem to have resulted in a final piece. If contemporary with the latter, it would be far later than any other known work by La Tour, but it is also possible La Tour sent him a préparation made in years gone by.

He died 31.XII.1799 in Saint-Aubin-sur-Gaillon (Eure); his inv. p.m. was carried out 24.IV.1800 (AN MC/XCV/441).

Mme Masse c.1755

Mme Grégoire-Nicolas-René MASSE, née Marie-Catherine Dufloquet de Réals (1724–1793). From a family of noblesse de l'épée, the sitter was not related to the artist: her husband was a marchand orfèvre, and bourgeois de Paris before becoming a secrétaire du roi in 1732. She lived in Paris, rue des Juifs, but died in Écuellen, 4.X.1793. Based on age and costume, a date of c.1755 is suggested.

Several préparations are linked to the pastel, but some are probably of different, unidentified sitters (probably more than one) retained here for convenience (they appear to date from the same period). J.46.2351, the sitter of which does not seem to match any known portrait, descended in the family of the abbé Duplaquet, but it seems unlikely to represent a member of that family: it is seductive to think it might have been presented to the abbé in recognition of his éloge, as the format (and even the discoloured square in the lower left) are so similar in those remaining in Saint-Quentin.

Mesdames de France

The portraits of “Mesdames de France” which Duplaquet mentions may or may not be the four pastel heads (no doubt préparations) which La Tour bequeathed to Marigny in his 1768 will; Marigny died in 1781 before La Tour’s will was effected, and it is highly probable that they were the four pastels mentioned as in Bellevue by 1788 in a memorandum by Lenormand, mécanicien de Mesdames cited by Biver 1933, p. 315 (as from 1786, although the cote he gives has only a later memorandum of 14.X.1788), and recorded as having been given directly to Mesdames by the artist. The sitters were identified explicitly in the inventory as including Madame Sophie and the late queen, and the other two must have been Madame Adélaïde and Madame Victoire [v. J.46.1206; J.46.23178; J.46.29778; J.46.3084]. If the date of Le Normand’s memorandum is in fact 1786, the préparations could well be the ones Duplaquet saw with the artist’s brother in 1787.

Les Mirleau de Neuville c.1749

Louis-Antoine MIRLEAU DE NEUVILLE (1707–1780), fermier général. On 11.I.1749, at Saint-Germain-l'Auxerrois, he married Adélaïde-Julie (1728–1780), daughter of Jean-Charles Garnier d'Isle (q.v.; that portrait was once thought to be of de Neuville). She was portrayed by Pigalle (with her sister (marble; Getty; terracotta, musée Cognacq-Jay); by Carmontelle, with her husband (1766), and by Nattier, as Minerva (Birmingham, Alabama); the features are consistent with the La Tour pastel J.46.237. Whether J.46.2368 is a true pendant is uncertain, but the existence of a copy with the descendants of the Mirleau de Neuville family (J.46.2369) confirms a connection. Further this pastel seems better to fit the description in Jal, elsewhere assumed to be the Met pastel of Garnier d'Isle (v. supra for discussion).

Louis-Antoine's brother Louis-Grégoire Mirleau, sgr des Radrets, married Anne Racine (the subject of a pastel J.758.305 by Louis Vigée, who also portrayed other members of the family) on 13.I.1746 (Claeys 2009 erroneously confuses this with Louis-Antoine's marriage).

Louis-Antoine was assistant fermier général to his father 1756–57, before taking over the role himself. He lived in splendour in the rue Saint-Honoré near the place Vendôme in a house he leased for 7000 livres p.a. A Qianlong famille rose plate bearing the arms of Mirleau and Garnier (sold Christie's, 13.V.2008, Lot 294) no doubt formed part of a de luxe dinner service. He was the dedicatee of a topographical engraving by Moreau le jeune after Panini, Rudera près le Sans Souci, advertised in the Mercur in .IV.1768; the original painting belonged to the architect Soufflot. Demarteau similarly dedicated to him a print after Boucher, Les amants surprises (Jean-Richard 633). Mirleau de Neuville was one of the witnesses to the marriage contract of Claude Balbastre, organist of the parish of Saint-Roch, on 2.I.1763, along with Rameau, Cassanéa de Mondonville and numerous other financiers.

Louis-Antoine was one of the administrators of the Hôtel-Dieu from 1766; a month after the fire of 29.XII.1772, he and Sartine presented an account of the losses to the king in Versailles.

On 8.IX.1760 at Saint-Sulpice Adélaïde-Julie was marraine to Charles-Pierre Le Bas de Girangy, later a gentilhomme ordinaire de la chambre du roi; his mother was her cousin.

Documents in the Archives nationales (registres de tutelles, AN Y4941^B) of 16.VII.1770 reveal that “Louis-Antoine Mirleau, écuyer” was the father of an illegitimate daughter, Louise Mirleau, born 21.IX.1765 to an Anne-Marie Athon, rue de Touraine, on whom he settled a pension of 1200 livres a year. The documents omit the surname de Neuville by which he was usually known, but the address, place Louis Le Grand paroisse Saint-Roch, leaves no doubt as to the father's identity. (On 21.I.1776 Marie-Anne Haton, as she then called herself, gave birth to a son, Louis-Thimoléon, by François Bourgeois de Beaupré, avocat au parlement, whom she only married on 3.VII.1781, after Mirleau's death.)

However Louis-Antoine had borrowed almost all the 1.17 million livres purchase money for his position in the fermes; property speculation in an area known as la Juiverie between the rue Contrescarpe and the fossés de la Bastille resulted in his bankruptcy in 1779 (Claeys 2009). Against assets worth some 800,000 livres there were claims for some 1.76 million livres (plus interest of 0.35 million by 1784).

A bibliophile (whose name appears as a subscriber in many publications: the Carmontelle shows him with a book, still wearing the same style of wig, while his wife is at her embroidery frame), a Notice des principaux articles de la bibliothèque de M. de Neuville, fermier général was advertised for auction by de Hansy on 2–4.XII.1779 in the Journal de Paris; the 262 lots included works of reference, natural history (Buffon), literature (including the so-called fermiers généraux edition of La Fontaine illustrated by Oudry), art (Felibien and d'Argenville), history, travel and religion (Picart's Cérémonies et coutumes religieuses was the most expensive lot, at 300 livres in a sale that produced 4690 livres).

Adélaïde-Julie died in an apartment in the rue du Cherche-Midi on 13.I.1780, while her widower died a few weeks later, 3.III.1780, in the Charenton, having abandoned his personal goods to his creditors, leaving the detailed provenance of these portraits difficult to trace. In view of his infirmities he gave authority for all decision making to his brother-in-law, Charles-Étienne Garnier d'Isle d'Olivet (1734–1795), ancien payeur des rentes de l'hôtel de ville in a document of 14.II.1780 (registre de tutelles, AN Y5065^B); it is possible the family portraits passed to him too; but Jal recorded a pastel, possibly J.46.2368 or a copy, in the possession of the sitter's great-great-nephew in 1872.

The inventaire après décès for the couple, 2.V.1780 (AN MC/XLII/603) recorded two groups of family portraits in Mme

Mirleau's apartment in the rue du Cherche-Midi, all unattributed. They included two marble busts (no doubt the Pigalles), four in plaster, three framed, glazed drawings (Carmontelle?), and no fewer than 16 pastels: one of which was a large oval (the Vigée?), three small ovals: the remaining dozen may well have included the La Tour pastels, and probably among them were the dozen pastels in the inventaire of Mme Mirleau's father, Garnier d'Isle (v. supra, J.46.1827). This unusual allegiance to the medium indicates at least that the Mirleau family were informed clients.

Jean Monnet 1756

Jean MONNET (1703–1785), écrivain, entrepreneur et directeur de l'Opéra-Comique à Paris en 1743 et 1753–58. Bankrupt in the 1740s, he travelled to England before returning to Paris to greater success. He earned enough money to retire early. Through the Opéra-Comique he was close to a good number of La Tour sitters. He also retained connections with the English theatre: Garrick (a lifelong friend from his London trip) called him “ye gayest man at Paris”. He owned a painting by Stubbs with additions by Vernet and Boucher, whom he had engaged as a scenery painter in 1743. His iconography includes a profile by Cochin (engraved Augustin de Saint-Aubin 1765).

Monnet was born to a humble family in Condrieux. Although not mentioned by his biographers, Monnet was married twice: to a Jeanne-Françoise Haby or Abhy (whose family were from Fribourg), by whom he had a son, Charles-Edme, born in 1738; and much later, in Paris, Bonne-Nouvelle, 20.VI.1770, to Marie-Jeanne-Michelle Tardif. Their daughter, Jeanne-Louise, was born 22.IX.1780 and baptised two days later, in Soissons, Saint-Léger (where Monnet seems to have retired several years before); the godparents were Louis-René Boquet and Louise Vigée Le Brun (qq.v.).

A poem by the abbé de Lattaignant, beginning “Peau bise & poil brunet,/Dents blanches comme lait...” (Poésies, 1756, II, p. 300) describes a portrait of Monnet, but does not seem to be a description of the La Tour. A lost pastel of Monnet by Noël Hallé (J.373.106) was in an 1863 sale.

The primary version J.46.2377 in Saint-Quentin was mounted on a very thick sheet of glass as secondary support until conservation in 2004. The glass was of identical appearance to that in Lord Coventry

J.46.1565, and surely represents one the few known examples of La Tour's attempt to avoid fixing. This, with its rare label perhaps signed and dated by the artist (and affixed to the inside of the glass rather than to the back of the support), was presumably intended for Monnet himself, and it is unclear why it was not collected by the sitter after the salon.

The second version J.46.2385 in Saint-Quentin reveals its status as a copy in its timid recreation of individual strokes in the original, and a fully worked background and costume that would be pointless in a préparation.

Le marquis de Montalembert 1753

Marc-René, marquis de MONTALEMBERT, sgr de Maumont (1714–1800), chev. Saint-Louis 1746, mestre de camp de cavalerie, puis maréchal de camp 1761, capitaine des Gardes du prince de Conti, gouverneur de Villeneuve-lès-Avignon, général du génie. He came from an ancient house of military nobility originating in Poitou. He was an associé-libre de l'Académie royale des sciences (1747) and a member of the Imperial Academy of St Petersburg. His interests were broad-ranging: he wrote a treatise correcting and completing Vauban, as well as verse and comedies. His first wife (whom he married in 1770) Marie-Joséphine de Comarieu (1750–1832) wrote novels and held an influential salon; she persuaded him to emigrate to Bath during the Revolution, but he soon returned to France and divorced her in 1794; he was soon remarried, to Rosalie-Louise Cadet, 56 years his junior.

A passport was issued 21.V.1792 describing the 80-year-old Montalembert as 5' 2" (168 cm), "yeux gris, bouche grand, menton sec, front découvert, visage long"; La Tour's eye colour is more ambiguous.

By the time of his portrait, Montalembert had served with distinction in the campaigns in Germany, Bohemia, Italy, Flanders and Sweden. His military rank was "mestre de camp", and from 4.VII.1752 he was troisième cornette des Chevaux-Légers de la garde, one of the élite regiments in the Maison du roi; the red uniform with gold lace is that shown in the pastel. The pose is shared with Maurice de Saxe, Lord Coventry etc.

When Montalembert had the portrait engraved by Pierre Savart for the frontispiece of his monograph on La Fortification perpendiculaire, the uniform was changed to that of a maréchal des camps; when in turn Augustin de Saint-Aubin re-engraved the plate, following Savard closely, he omitted the hat and altered the detail of the Saint-Louis cross.

There is a monument in Ruelle, where he established a foundry in 1750, erected in 1805 with a bronze bust apparently realised from the La Tour pastel.

Newville, v. Garnier d’Isle

Nivelle de La Chaussée 1753

Pierre-Claude NIVELLE DE LA CHAUSSÉE (1692–1754), de l’Académie française, auteur dramatique. The playwright, who was independently wealthy (his uncle Pierre, sgr de La Chaussée, was a fermier général), was best known for the genre of “comédie larmoyante” (for example his Mélanide, 1741, by reference to which Lacombe periphrastically mentioned the pastel in his critique – “l’auteur du préjugé à la mode”), mingling comedy and tragedy, with its picture of sentimental, domestic life targeted at a bourgeois audience. He produced some 40 plays, and was immensely successful in his day; his pieces were translated into Dutch, English and Italian. In 1736, with the support of Voltaire and Destouches, he was elected (on his second attempt) to the Académie française. He is virtually forgotten now.

La Tour’s portrait appeared at the salon of 1753, alongside that of d’Alembert, who mentioned the forthcoming juxtaposition with approval in his letter to Mme du Deffand of 27.1.1753. Gauthier-Dagoty, discussing La Tour’s magic in capturing the sal volatile of the esprit of his sitters, asked who would think “que le principe qui pense & qui a dicté à M. de la Chaussée tant de Comédies morales soit identifié avec le Pastel, & réside sous la glace de son portrait?”

In 1782 the sculptor Jean-Jacques Caffieri, a pupil of Jean-Baptiste Lemoyne with a particular speciality in theatrical portraits, wrote to the Comédie-Française proposing to present them with busts of Thomas Corneille and Nivelles de La Chaussée on behalf of friends. These were to be made from existing portraiture, and in a postscript of 3.1.1783 he added that he now owned the La Tour pastel of La Chaussée, the only such portrait. A marble bust by Caffieri (1785) is in the Comédie-Française, with a terracotta reduction in the Louvre. The following year Caffieri offered the pastel to d’Angiviller (letter 12.1.1786, v. DOCUMENTS) for the Louvre; the directeur decided not to reply to these repeated offers from Caffieri. The pastel was still in his collection when Caffieri died (inv. p.m., 26.VI.1792). Subsequently it belonged to Quentin Craufurd, one of a number of pastels in his collection of historical portraits.

An engraving by Miger after a lost portrait by the little-known Jean-Philippe de La Roche (Nattier’s brother-in-law) is less convincing. D’Hémery’s police report (1748) described him as “gros, moyenne taille, l’air épais, le visage boursoufflé et assez bien de figure.”

Les duchesses de Nivernais

Several portraits of members of the family of the duc de Nivernais have caused confusion. Louis-Jules-Barbon Mazarini-Mancini, 12^e duc de Nivernais (1716–1798) died without a male heir. According to his testament of 4.II.1796 (Archives d’Havrincourt, repr. Herpin, Le Duc de Nivernais 1763–1798, Paris, 1893, pp. 467ff), he bequeathed an unattributed oval pastel portrait of his first wife (Hélène de Pontchartrain) to Mme de Guerchy; that perhaps could be the portrait said to be by La Tour in the 1888 exhibition, J.46.242. (although the exact line of descent to the comte de Mortemart is uncertain, the Rochechouart and Guerchy families had various connections). Secondly the duc de Nivernais bequeathed to his brother-in-law Brancas-Céreste the pastel portrait, also unattributed, of the latter’s sister [i.e. the duc’s second wife, Marie-Thérèse de Brancas (1716–1782), previously comtesse de Rochefort], “avec sa petite chienne Zina sous les bras”: that evidently corresponds to the pastel that descended through the Brancas family to the comte de Forhen in 1887, J.46.2421. The description, but not the dimensions, matches a pastel we have seen bearing the initials “AM/1736” and which is not by La Tour (it shows rather the influence of Rosalba). Four other portraits of the Brancas family, also unattributed, were probably in oil, but might have included the pastel J.46.1814 of Mme de Forcalquier attributed to La Tour; it is even possible that the group were the productions of this amateur pastellist (v. FORCALQUIER).

L'abbé Nollet 1753

L'abbé Jean-Antoine NOLLET (1700–1770), diacre, maître de physique et de l'histoire naturelle du dauphin et des Enfants de France, de l'Académie royale des sciences (1739); fellow of the Royal Society, London (1734); of the Istituto delle scienze e delle arti of Bologna, professeur royal de physique expérimentale au Collège de Navarre et aux Écoles de l'artillerie du génie.

Nollet's background was humble. He was educated at the Collège de Beauvais and intended for an ecclesiastical career, but at the same time developed practical skills in matters such as glass-blowing and enamelling from Jean Raux. By 1728 he had designed and mounted a pair of globes, dedicated to the duchesse du Maine. The fittings and markings of the tropics and ecliptic appear to be those of the globe shown in La Tour's président de Rieux, and perhaps in several other pastels (but are not sufficiently distinctive to be certain). Nollet was soon admitted to the Société des arts. He was appointed précepteur to the family of Taibout, greffier en chef of the debt issued by the Hôtel de ville de Paris.

Nollet was a competent amateur artist, as indicated by copies he made after Huquier's engravings of Watteau's L'Eau and Le Fen, signed and dated 1734 by him, incorporating the arms of the duc de Piquigny (Waddesdon: v. Alastair Laing entry in Catalogue of drawings of architecture, design, and ornament, 2006, I, no. 235a/b): the signatures match his, and differ from other homonyms' (the Flemish painter Dominique Nollet or the abbé's cousin, Pierre-François: v. infra).

He also supplied scientific equipment, famously to Voltaire and Mme du Châtelet for the cabinet at Cirey said to have cost in excess of 10,000 livres: Voltaire wrote (letter to Thieriot, 27.X.1738) "L'abbé Nollet me ruine."

His fame arose from his skill as an experimentalist and demonstrator, and by 1744 he was summoned to Versailles to teach the dauphin. This led to his being awarded a logement aux galeries du Louvre 1746 (he was the next recipient after La Tour; in 1750 La Tour moved to the adjacent logement; and on Nollet's death his logement went to Lorient). His principal residence however was the apartment he leased on the second floor of a house in the rue Hautefeuille belonging to the ordre des Prémontrés (a training college for the abbaye near Laon), adjacent to the École de Médecine. He also owned a country house at Monts-sur-Orge (the present-day Athis-Mons), as well as having an apartment at Versailles.

He was therefore an unsurprising choice for La Tour to include in his parade of distinguished men in the Salon de 1753. Gautier-Dagoty thought it "très-bien", otherwise deploring the juxtaposition of learned men with Manelli, while Lacombe observed "Les traits de M. l'Abbé Nollet et de M. de la Condamine intéresseront les Parisiens de la saine Philosophie."

Grimm, in the Correspondance littéraire (15.V.1770), commented at his death:

C'était un académicien utile et laborieux. Dans le temps de la grande vogue des expériences de l'électricité, l'abbé Nollet fut un homme très à la mode, et toutes les femmes voulurent être électrisées par lui; mais cela a passé de mode, ainsi que la manie de la géométrie, et depuis longues années Comus avait entièrement fait oublier le pauvre abbé Nollet.

His 1767 will (published, with errors, in V. Lecot, L'abbé Nollet de Pimprez, Noyon, 1856, pp. 74ff) included his cousins, among them Pierre-François Nollet, peintre de l'Académie de Saint-Luc, as well as members of the Gallonde family from La Fère in Picardie. (These relationships are a little complicated, and hitherto (2022) unpublished: v. NOLLET genealogy; the sister of Nollet's mother, Genevieve Champenois married Antoine Guy, maître boulanger à Paris; her daughter Anne-Renée had a daughter by her first marriage, Marie-Anne Caylla (–1794); Anne-Renée Guy was, in 1745, remarried to Louis-Charles Gallonde (La Fère 1711 – Paris 1770), mécanicien du roy and a celebrated clockmaker (one of his pendules, valued at 240 livres, was displayed in Nollet's salon de compagnie in the rue Hautefeuille). Gallonde subsequently married, as her first husband, Marie-Anne Caylla.) The residuary legatee under his will was Gallonde's half-sister, Marie-Isaïe-Louise-Françoise d'Hechbourg (q.v.), who lived with Nollet as discussed in the entry for J.46.18865. However Nollet's inv. p.m. contained only a few pictures (mostly religious) and no pastel was mentioned. A plaster medallion of his Italian translator, Mariangela Ardinghelli, was left to M. Bezout de l'Académie des sciences, and is no doubt the 1755 Caffieri in their collection.

The La Tour pastel was offered to the Louvre in 1866, first by Eudore Soulié, conservateur at Versailles, who recommended it to the comte de Nieuwerkerke just before the estate sale where it was bought in: the owner, signing A. de Sorbet Rouany, was the great-grandson, Anathole-Marie Sorbet, of Claude-Léger Sorbet (1716–1788), sgr de Rouany, surgeon, patron of Greuze and art collector (v. Jeffares 2022d; COLLECTORS for the Sorbet and related families, see LAUBRY genealogy). In 1766 Sorbet commissioned an altarpiece for the church of Saint-Germain d'Itteville; the artist was Jean-Baptiste Alizard (1737–1817), a cousin of the abbé Nollet. The connections between all three men are demonstrated in Nollet's will: he left 3000 livres and other items to Alizard, while to Sorbet he left three pictures which he described with precision. They are marked with Sorbet's name in the inv. p.m., where the "descent du croix" listed in the will is further described as a "dessein au crayon par Alizard." None is the La Tour pastel, nor was it included in Sorbet's 1776 sale, thought to have been in response to financial pressures.

The letters from de Sorbet Rouany complicate the matter as he refers to the first owner as "M. Leger Dardin, parent de l'abbé Nollet" who bequeathed it to "son gendre" M. Gaignant. Gaignant was indeed a cousin of the Sorbets but the relationship is complicated (Gaignant married his stepfather's daughter, etc.); no "Léger Dardin" can be identified, but the reference may be a confusion between Gaignant's father-in-law, the lawyer Marc-Antoine Laget de Bardelin, who is not known to have been close to Nollet, and his mother's cousin's husband, Claude Léger Sorbet. The matter is further complicated by Nollet having appointed as his executor "mon amy M. Laubry, cy-devant avocat au conseil", François-Vincent Laubry (1702–1784), who was Gaignant's great-uncle and Sorbet's wife's uncle.

In fact however the La Tour pastel remained in Nollet's apartment in the rue Hautefeuille, passing to the residuary legatee under his will, Mlle d'Hechbourg (v. supra). Her 1783 inv. p.m. contained a number of pictures in addition to J.46.2424, among them another pastel J.46.18865 of herself, here tentatively attributed to La Tour, and two other undescribed pastel portraits. Gaignant was also her executor and presumably acquired the pastel from her estate.

The comte de Nieuwerkerke, directeur des Beaux-Arts at the Louvre, rejected Sorbet Rouany's offer, despite the proceeds being promised for charitable purposes, on grounds of inadequate funds being available (15.IX.1866). On 8.XII.1866 Sorbet Rouany wrote instead to the Emperor Napoléon III. While no reply has been seen, this may well have been the occasion for the princesse Mathilde, the Emperor's cousin and one-time fiancée, to acquire the work that the Goncourts mentioned as in her collection in the 3rd edition (1880) of their La Tour study.

A fine bust of Nollet by Simon Challe (1719–1765), signed and dated 1758 (Versailles, musée Lambinet, inv. 2006.1.1; acqu. Paris, 22.III.2006, a terracotta version is attributed to Defernex at the Carnavalet, inv. S3170) confirms the accuracy of the physiognomy. Another bust by Pigalle, 1760 (olim collection Courty; Choppin de Janvry, 9.XII.2002, Lot 22) is less convincing, and the jabot in place of clerical bands casts doubt on the identification suggested by Louis Réau in 1950 (pp. 114f, 169, pl. 43; although on p. 180 he wondered if M. Courty's bust was not of the abbé Raynal). A portrait by Lajoue of a magistrate in his study wearing the croix de Saint-Louis (Carnavalet, inv. P2004) is not of Nollet (it was however exhibited in Versailles 2022, no. 106 repr., as a "portrait présumé").

Orry 1745

Philbert ORRY, sgr de La Chapelle-Godefroy, de Saint-Geraud, de Vignory etc. (1689–1747), contrôleur-général des finances 1730, ministre d'État 1736, directeur des Bâtiments du roi 1736. His father Jean Orry, comte de Vignory was a maître verrier who enriched himself as an army supplier and purchased the ennobling office of secrétaire du roi in 1701, becoming président au parlement de Metz 1706. His career survived his connections with the princesse des Ursins (her secretary, Jean d'Aubigny, appointed Orry's son as tuteur to his daughter, the future marquise d'Armentières: Saint-Simon). Jean Orry acquired the hôtel de Beauvais (built by Antoine Lepautre, 68 rue François-Miron, then in the rue Saint-Antoine), which remained the family home in Paris for several generations.

Philbert (as the name is spelt in most contemporary documents and in d'Hozier, although Philibert appears in most modern sources) Orry was briefly a cavalry officer before becoming a conseiller au parlement, maître des requêtes 1715 and intendant successively of Soisson (1722), Roussillon (1727) and Flandres (1730). He seems to have used rarely (if at all) his father's title of comte de Vignory (Jean Orry purchased the seigneurie and comté in 1707, but lost a law case in 1719 concerning certain rights over the land), his other seigneuries appearing more often in contemporary documents; modern sources however usually quote the title.

He was contrôleur général des finances 1730–45 and directeur général des Bâtiments du roi 1737–45, grand-trésorier-commandeur des ordres du roi 1743. He was "certainement, de nombreux ministres des Finances de Louis XV, le plus sage et le plus soucieux du bien commun" (de Viguierie 1995). Working with cardinal de Fleury (who had been a friend of his father), his financial policy of budgetary balance, raising necessary taxes and avoiding wasteful expenditure resulted in a period of prosperity for the country, limited only by the costs of the wars of the Polish and Austrian successions. These particularly restricted his freedom at the Bâtiments.

As minister of the arts, he invested in the Vincennes porcelain factory to create a domestic industry offering an alternative to foreign sources. He also encouraged the activities of the Académie royale de peinture et de sculpture, reinstating the salons, which were held annually from 1737 (only 1744 was missed during his tenure): his is the name that appears on the title page of each livret. In 1737 he was appointed vice-protecteur de l'Académie (Fleury was protecteur until Orry succeeded him in that role in 1743). On 26.IX.1739 the procès-verbaux record that Orry presented the Académie with his portrait, without identifying the artist (which is unlikely to be the Louvre pastel, in view of its later appearance in the Chaumont family, but was no doubt a version of Rigaud's portrait). In 1741 Orry directed the Académie to receive the Protestant pastellist Gustaf Lundberg (q.v.). Orry's negotiations with Jean-Baptiste Lemoyne over the monument de Rennes must have taken place 1744/45, and La Tour, intimately acquainted with both, gave an account to the abbé Soulavie which appeared in the latter's fictitious Mémoires du maréchal de Richelieu (v. DOCUMENTS, c.1744).

Orry may also have been known to La Tour through their mutual friend the abbé Huber, who bequeathed to him not only his own portrait by La Tour ("comme une petite marque de lattachement sincère que j'ay toujours eu pour lui independamment de sa place") but a pastel scene by Parrocel ("dont il est capable de connoitre le merite").

His economic policies were however unpopular, and made the minister "l'un des plus détesté de son temps" (Gaxotte). Among his enemies were Chauvelin and the comte d'Argenson. Relations with the Paris brothers in particular became strained over the issue of military expenditure, and Mme de Pompadour insisted on his dismissal. He resigned his major offices in disgrace on 5.XII.1745. He died two years later and was buried quietly at his château de La Chapelle-Godefroy (for which he had commissioned an important series of paintings by Natoire from 1730 on).

He never married. His sister Jeanne married Louis-Bénigne Berthier de Sauvigny, président aux Enquêtes. His half-brother Jean-Henry-Louis Orry de Fulvy (1703–1751) was a maître des requêtes and intendant des finances (and a notorious gambler whose exploits threatened Orry himself). His half-sister Elisabeth-Louise (1709–1761) married Antoine-Martin Chaumont de La Galaizière, of whose brother, Henry-Ignace Chaumont, abbé de La Galaizière (q.v.), La Tour exhibited a pastel J.46.1533 in the same Salon de 1745 (it may have been confused with J.46.2431 in 1798). It appears that Orry, de Fulvy and the abbé de La Galaizière all lived together in the hôtel de Beauvais (Favre-Lejeune; Mme de Graffigny correspondence). The abbé was the executor of Orry's will, and had his inventaire après décès drawn up. Orry commissioned a portrait of his sister from François Le Moyne (Nonnotte, Vie de M. Lemoyne, p. 539).

Curiously the inventaire does not seem to list the Le Moyne, the earlier Rigaud, nor the La Tour pastels of Orry (Salmon 2018 assumes that the pastel belonged to the sitter); that of his friend, the abbé de La Galaizière; nor that of their niece, Mme Meulan (J.46.2363: if indeed that is correctly identified or attributed). There were several portraits of the royal family, and a bust of Louis XV by (Jean-Baptiste) Lemoyne, and in the library a religious painting of St Francis by Guido Reni. Orry was also a friend of Bouchardon, and commissioned him to design a funerary monument for his former patron, cardinal de Fleury.

The great-grandson of an imprimeur et libraire (whose sign was the lion rampant adopted for the Orry arms shown in the cover of the book), Orry was a bibliophile: his inventaire (and the subsequent catalogue of the sale of his brother's library, 17.I.1752 & seq.) reveals a large collection of books whose bindings are individually described, although none seems to correspond to the in-folio volume in blue morocco La Tour shows (which will have been bound very recently as it bears the family arms within the insignia of the Saint-Esprit awarded in 1743).

The unusual composition has parallels in Rigaud: not only his own 1734 portrait of Orry standing – again holding an upright book resting on a table (James-Sarazin P.1474) – but also, more closely, the 1715 portrait of Beauvau de Rivau (Monbrison: James-Sarazin P.1301), possibly through the 1738 print by Georg Friedrich Schmidt (unlike the Drevet, this is not reversed).

The frame in stuc doré marked DL may be by the Sieur De Launay, quai de Gesvres recommended by Petit de Bachaumont for his composition frames at this time.

A lost, undated portrait of "le comte Orri" by Pierre-Joseph Lion (J.486.229) could be a copy of either the La Tour or Rigaud portraits:

his list of works made in France includes numerous names painted by both masters.

Paradis de Moncrif 1748

François-Augustin PARADIS de Moncrif (1688–1770), de l'Académie française, littérateur.

Moncrif (who was baptised on 4.III.1688 – Claeys 2008, and so probably born a year later than normally shown) was the son of a procureur au Châtelet who is said to have died in financial disgrace when he was very young. His mother, who brought the Scottish Moncrif name to the family, brought him up with all the necessary accomplishments to succeed in society: poet, musician, conversationalist. By 1716 he was a receveur général des domaines et bois d'Auch. The comte d'Argenson took him as his secretary, before the comte de Clermont appointed him secrétaire des commandements; d'Argenson then put him in charge of the Postes (1751). The queen appointed him lecteur, and he had a logement in the Tuileries by lettres patentes of 17.III.1748 (just before the salon) where he died 22 years later at an advanced age, unmarried. He was a member of the academies of Berlin and Nancy and of the Académie française (1733). His publications included novels, comedies, opéra-ballets and poetry. His Histoire des chats, illustrated with drawings by Coypel engraved by the comte de Caylus, which the author omitted from his selected works, has lasted better than the others.

Moncrif presented two volumes of his works to La Tour (published in 1738 and 1743, both inscribed “De la part de son ami et de son serviteur”), one of which later found its way into the musée Antoine-Lécuyer (LT 96). This suggests their friendship predated the pastel (or at least the salon where it was exhibited) by some years.

A profile by Carmontelle (Chantilly, inv. CAR28), perhaps c.1760, shows recognisable features and the same, by then rather old-fashioned, wig. D'Hémery's police report (1749) described him as “petit, blond, et assez passablement de figure.”

The pastel La Tour exhibited in 1748 is known from a number of engravings (and the oil copy in the Académie française series). The pastel version that appeared in 2003 seems on visual grounds alone too weak to be identified as it.

Lavater included an engraving of La Tour's pastel (in the first illustrated German addition) as an example of a face which could not possibly be thought unintelligent, and whose features epitomised the accomplished gentleman and man of taste:

MONCRIF

Es ist kein Mensch, kein Menschenbemerker, der dieß Gesicht leicht in die Klasse der Dummköpfe verweisen wird. Den feinen Weltmann, den Mann von Geschmack wird niemand weder in dem ganzen Gesichte, niemand im Blick, in der Nase besonders, auch mit in dem Munde verkennen.

In the first French translation (1781), the text was rather freely embellished:

Les grâces de l'Original ne se retrouvent pas dans cette copie, cependant on reconnoît dans la forme du front, dans l'extrémité de l'os au dessus de l'œil droit, dans l'obliquité & la pointe du nez – une expression de goût & de délicatesse – Mais il faut en convenir, la Nature en formant ce visage, annonçoit une plus haute destination que celle de produire des Ouvrages de pur agrément.

Jean Paris de Montmartel c.1746

Jean PARIS de Montmartel, marquis de Brunoy (1690–1766). (The frequently seen Paris spelling is not contemporary.) The youngest of the Paris brothers, he was commis des guerres 1709, directeur des vivres dans le Hainault 1711, trésorier general des Ponts et chaussées 1715, fermier général 1718, secrétaire du roi 1721, Garde triennal du Trésor royal 1724, Garde ancien du Trésor 1748–62, receveur des rentes de la Ville de Paris, premier Maître d'hôtel du roi 1758; conseiller d'État 1755. He was exiled in disgrace to Brunoy in 1726, but recalled in 1730 at the insistence of Samuel Bernard. In 1721 he was parrain, and is widely believed to have been the biological father, of the future Mme de Pompadour.

Paris de Montmartel was immensely wealthy (with a fortune estimated at 21 million livres) and spent prodigiously. His posthumous inventory (AN MC/ET/CVII/534, 23.IX.1766; summary in Dubois-Corneau 1917) included a number of pastels which might be by La Tour, among them a maréchal de Saxe (J.46.2915); a La Tour autoportrait J.46.1169 was later inventoried in the hôtel Mazarin.

There is an unusually elaborate Cochin portrait drawing (J.46.24535, engraved Cathelin 1772) with the head taken from the La Tour pastel. It has not so far been noted that the whole composition and many of the accessories also surely echo another La Tour portrait – that of the président de Rieux.

It is unclear if the Saint-Quentin oval was the version shown in 1746; there is no reference to its format, which would have been unusual for La Tour at this date. The préparation J.46.2462 is evidently for a different composition, although the sitter's features put the identification beyond question.

Charles Parrocel 1743

Charles PARROCEL (1688–1752), peintre de l'Académie royale, agrégé 1721, ami de La Tour. He died at the Gobelins 24.V.1752; v. ARTISTS.

A member of an extended dynasty of painters, Parrocel specialised in painting battles. He was a prolific draughtsman, occasionally using coloured chalk. It is likely that a drawing with pastel (J.5738.102) in the cabinet de Montullé in 1783 was one of these, and this may also be the case with the "Esquisse en pastelle faite par Parrocel peintre a Paris représentant une publication de paix sous glace dans la bordure a filets de bois doré prisé Cent livres" in the estate inventory of La Tour's other friend, the abbé Huber (it is conceivably the framed picture which appears in La Tour's pastel of the abbé lisant in Geneva, J.46.1902).

La Tour had intervened on Parrocel's behalf when, in 1743, Rigaud's pension became available after his death (v. DOCUMENTS); a sketch for a painting for Fontainebleau given by Parrocel to La Tour, perhaps in return, was exhibited in the Salon de 1746, no. 55. In the same salon Lemoyne exhibited a terracotta bust (Réau 1927, no. 126); he gave it to the sitter, his friend, who on his death in 1752 bequeathed it back to the sculptor who in turn presented it to the Académie royale; it was last recorded in 1793.

In La Tour's 1784 will, the portrait was bequeathed to the Académie royale, "tout altéré qu'il est". What may have been the primary version was mentioned in the sitter's inventaire, but without attribution or further description. The surviving iconography includes a profile by Cochin, the engraving finished by Dupuis in 1753: despite the different angle, the resemblance is striking. That with a 1743 engraving by Georg Friedrich Schmidt is less compelling.

A second version of the pastel J.46.2472, donated to Saint-Quentin by Yves Carlier de Fontobbia, is sensitively executed and incorporates enough changes of detail to keep open the possibility that it is autograph.

Mme Pellerin c.1740

Mme Jean-Baptiste PELLERIN [née Louise-Marguerite Jourdan de La Salle (1691–p.1749)].

Unidentified beyond her surname hitherto (“on sait peu de choses de cette Mme Pélerin...quelque bourgeoise” in Lille 1970), the information on the back admits of a positive identification.

Louise-Marguerite Jourdan de La Salle was born and baptised at Paris, Saint-Eustache, 16/18.11.1691, her parrain being her grandfather, Bernard Jourdan de La Salle, maître de guitare de Louis XIV (Jal 1872, p. 667). Her father (whose godparents were the duc de Noailles and duchesse de La Vallière) inherited his father's position, but became a greffier des insinuations au Châtelet; he died in 1742 (inventaire, 23.VI.1742, AN MC/CXVII/444). In 1722 she married, Jean-Baptiste Pellerin, sgr de Moyencourt (1690–1738), écuyer, payeur des rentes de l'hôtel de ville de Paris et des rentes sur le clergé and a conseiller aux Aides. Her sister Élisabeth married Séraphin Lenoir de Sérigny, trésorier général et payeur des rentes de l'hôtel de ville. Their daughter Louise-Élisabeth Le Noir married, in 1740, Louis-Dominique Le Bas de Courmont, as mentioned in the inscription (Mme Pellerin was marraine to their son at Saint-Sulpice on 16.VII.1749, but is not recorded later). In turn her daughters married into the Croismare and Maupeou families.

Perrinet de Jars 1740

Étienne PERRINET, sieur de Jars et de Boucart (1670–1762), directeur de la compagnie des Indes, fermier général 1719.

Despite the evident importance of this pastel in La Tour's œuvre, the fact that the main version has not been seen in public or photographed since 1908 has obscured its significance and limited the amount of scholarly attention it has received.

Perrinet was born into a Protestant family and only converted to Catholicism in 1686. (Claeys 2009 has a good summary.) His religious sympathies remained suspicious: as late as 1757 the duc de Luynes described him as a closet Protestant. His father was a wine merchant from Sancerre, as was his uncle; his brother Jacques a marchand orfèvre. His niece married Jacques Rouillé, and her portrait (J.46.274) exhibited in 1738 was in all probability the introduction that La Tour needed to this financier. Perrinet himself began as a wine merchant in Paris, with a famous cellar under the sign La Tour d'Argent. He supplied wine to the duc de Noailles and the king, and was protected by the prince de Conti, gouverneur de Sancerre. By 1715 he was intéressé dans les affaires du roi, and three years later he became a fermier général, subsequently becoming doyen des fermiers généraux (1758). In 1720 he became a director of the C^{ie} des Indes, and in 1729 he purchased the office of secrétaire du roi (for the price of 90,666 livres).

Diderot mentions, in a letter of .v.1770 (Correspondance littéraire... par Grimm et Diderot, 1812, I, p. 137), commenting on the murder of a relative,

J'ai connu son oncle, homme d'esprit, qui mourut, il y a sept ou huit ans, fermier général et nonagénaire. Il avait passé sa jeunesse, comme c'était la mode alors, dans les cafés de Paris, avec tous les beaux esprits à la mode, et il est fait mention de lui dans les fameux couplets de Jean-Baptiste Rousseau qui lui occasionèrent un procès criminel. Le vieux Perrinet y est cité comme attaché à la foi protestante. Quand je l'ai connu, il avait embrassé depuis long-temps le parti de la neutralité; il était possesseur de plusieurs millions, avec beaucoup de simplicité dans les mœurs et une grande subtilité dans l'esprit.

By the time of his death his fortune amounted to 7,122,369 livres (of this he kept 386,885 livres in cash in his Paris hôtel in the rue Faubourg Saint-Honoré).

The estate at Jars was acquired in 1720 for 642,000 livres. Its descent to the Vogüé family is presumably the same line as suggested below for J.46.2482. However his estate inventory (19.VII.1762, AN MC/CXV/748), which runs to some 184 pages, includes a relatively modest group of paintings, prints and sculpture valued by Pierre Rémy; there were further such items in other parts of the inventory (mainly landscapes, pastorales etc., by or after Boucher, Lemoigne, Le Brun or Coysevox, but mostly unattributed). Neither the La Tour portrait nor any other pastel appears to be included.

At the 1740 salon, where La Tour exhibited also lost pastels of Bachaumont and a Mme Duret, "Un portrait jusqu'aux genoux de M. de , qui prend du Tabac" was identified by the abbé Desfontaines who thought it "admirable". The critic in the *Mercur*e commented rather cryptically "Nous n'entreprendrons point de donner une idée de ces trois excellens Portraits, les expressions seroient trop difficiles à trouver, nous rendrons seulement témoignage de l'admiration générale du Public & de son étonnement."

By 1908 Fourcaud gave the longest discussion of the work, suggesting discreetly (I think correctly) that J.46.2482 was the autograph version. After a meticulous discussion of the composition, he concluded "L'aspect d'ensemble est franc et robuste; la tête saisie en son caractère impérieux, en sa structure, en son volume, en sa vigueur presque rude." The Baltimore version is an extremely exact copy (even down to the location of the join in the paper), but follows the Vogüé pastel too closely, carefully imitating each stroke.

On 3.VII.1746 Perrinet de Jars wrote to Le Normant de Tournehem encouraging him to write in turn Jean-François de Troy to support Guillaume Voiriot's stay in Rome. Voiriot was working in pastel at this stage, and had already made several copies of La Tour's pastels; it is not impossible that he might have copied La Tour's pastel of Perrinet de Jars.

La Tour here works in the tradition of Rigaud in presenting his model in context, with a curtain backdrop, partial landscape and studied nonchalance. It is the first step in the progression of his large-scale works leading to the président de Rieux (the following year), Duval de l'Épinoy (1745) and ultimately Mme de Pompadour. The snuff-box is used again in Duval; the reversed chair is in Dupouch and Laideguive; the lost look, in Huber, Nollet, Pommyer and the earliest Louis XV. But these elements are found too in Rigaud: among many parallels, the 1694 portrait présumé de Laugeois d'Imbercourt (James-Sarazin P.414) is notable. What principally distinguishes the La Tour from most of Rigaud's standard poses is that the hands come together, rather than flowing apart as in most baroque poses: but here too Rigaud has a model, in the 1700 portrait of Pierre Drevet (Lyon, mBA; James-Sarazin P.702); Desjardins (Louvre; James-Sarazin P.703) has similar elements.

Petit de Bachaumont

Louis PETIT DE BACHAUMONT (1690–1771), auteur et critique. The grandson of a médecin du roi, Bachaumont’s father was an auditeur aux Comptes; his godparents were the dauphin and the princesse de Conti. From about 1730 he was associated with Marie-Anne Doublet, a salonnière, widow of a secrétaire des commandements du Régent and amateur PASTELLIST. She was also the sister-in-law of Antoine Crozat (Bachaumont did an appraisal of some of Pierre Crozat's collection for his nephew and heir Crozat du Chatel).

Bachaumont was a friend of Charles Coypel and a supporter of Boucher, and his views on the administration of the arts were regularly submitted to the surintendants des Bâtiments and others. D'Hémerly's police report (20.VII.1749) noted that he had an income of 50,000 livres and a taste for prints.

His lasting monument is the series of Mémoires secrets which were issued in his name and continued by Pidansat de Mairobert and several other writers after his death. In his salon critiques he showed a decided preference for La Tour, who had exhibited his portrait, over Perronneau. In 1748 he expressed concern over the longevity of pastels, and recommended they be fixed using La Tour's secret method. Bachaumont included La Tour in a Liste des meilleurs peintres, ... des académies royales de peinture. ... suivant leur rang à l'Académie, 1750 (v. DOCUMENTS); this again refers to La Tour's unsatisfactory methods, adding the much quoted observation "le pastel ne veut pas être tourmenté, trop de travail lui oste sa fleur, et l'ouvrage devient comme estompé."

The La Tour pastels exhibited in 1740 and 1753 are not known today, but it is easy to imagine that Bachaumont commissioned a second if the first suffered the fate he had described. The two pastels however are surely the ones listed in his posthumous inventory (11.V.1771) hanging in the Salon de compagnie in Mme Doublet's apartment: "deux portraits en pastel représentant le deffunt par la tour dans leur verre blanc et dans leur bordure quarrée de bois doré. ... pour mémoire". Mme Doublet herself died a few weeks after Bachaumont, and "les deux portraits en pastel par La Tour" were again listed.

They were not explicitly mentioned in Bachaumont's will, so they should have passed to his universal heir Charles-Louis de Maussabré (1750–1821), a soldier; he was Bachaumont's godson as well as a first cousin, once removed.

A 1761 profile by Carmontelle is in Chantilly; engraved Jean Houël. Bachaumont himself engraved a profile of the comte de Caylus drawn by Mme Doublet (Versailles).

?M. Philippe 1761

Until suggested here (2020), it had been assumed that the pastel of M. PHILIPPE that La Tour exhibited in 1761 was one or other version of the 1748 pastel of Jean-Baptiste Philippe, J.46.2508. There are three difficulties: why would La Tour exhibit a work done 13 years previously, and presumably delivered to the sitter; Saint-Aubin's sketch is not close enough; and his reference to the cour des Aides (if read correctly) does not fit the financier or (at first sight) his immediate family. However, from 1758 to 1769 Jean-Baptiste's nephew, Jean-Antoine-Gabriel Philippe, held the office (as described in the Almanach) of "Payeur des rentes de l'Hôtel de ville assignées sur les Aydes & Gabelles", which Saint-Aubin may have struggled to abbreviate. He was the "M. Philippe payeur des rentes", shown with "Mlle Delon de Genève et M. Tellier" (Suzanne Delon married Jean-Pierre-Louis, marquis de Luchet in 1765) in a Carmontelle drawing (Carnavalet). He died without marrying.

Jean-Baptiste Philippe 1748

Jean-Baptiste PHILIPPE (1689–1768), intéressé dans les affaires du roi, quai de Bourbon. Philippe came from an old established family in the nobility of Lorraine; his father, also Jean-Baptiste (1642–1714), was born in Lunéville, and became secrétaire des commandements de Marie-Thérèse d'Autriche.

In 1741 Philippe was one of nineteen financiers awarded a nine-year contract for the tax farm in Tuscany, together with Duval de l'Épinoxy (q.v., & Jeffares 2010b) and his brother's brother-in-law, Edmé-Gabriel Gendon. The syndicate was managed by an obscure banker, Gabriel-Louis Boët de Saint-Léger (the préparation J.46.1318 is either of his wife or sister), whose fraudulent arbitrage operations led to a scandal in which Duval, Gendon and Philippe were expelled from the ferme Lombart. It does not however seem that he was one of the fermiers généraux in France (contrary to La Tour 2004a), although he was invested indirectly and evidently wealthy.

As his inventaire après décès (18.VI.1768, AN MC/XXXVI/535) demonstrates, he was able to lend 330,000 livres in a single transaction to three fermiers in the bail d'Alaterrre in 1767 against short-term debt. Among the extensive contents and library were a Ruckerts harpsichord, two telescopes and a good many pictures: some 67 framed prints, 38 oil paintings. There were also eight portraits de famille, described simply as "tableaux" without specifying "sur toile" or "au pastel", recorded "pour mémoire"; one pair depicted the deceased and his first wife, while another group of four pictures showed "le deffunt et sa veuve et autres portraits de famille."

He leased the hôtel Nicolas de Jaussaud, 19 quai de Bourbon, and had a house in Chaillot valued at 35,000 livres (which he bought from the marquis du Terrail in 1748, the same year as the pastel was commissioned). He died in Paris, 11.VI.1768, rue des Batailles (AN Y 15374, index des sceaux).

His monument at the Couvent des Bons-Hommes de Chaillot, raised by his daughter (although his widow survived him), reads "Jean-Baptiste Philippe, écuyer, mort octogénaire, le 13 juin 1768, après avoir servi cinquante ans sa patrie dans les affaires, et, dans sa vie privée, les malheureux, tous le reste de ses jours." (Millin 1791, II, p. 23); the engraving shows a bas relief medallion, almost in profile, showing a prominent nose, arched brow, full chin and – surprising unless based on an earlier image – a full-bottomed wig knotted as in the La Tour pastel.

The composition of the pastel is practically identical to that of Roussel (J.46.282).

Philippe's brother Jean-Antoine was premier commis de Jean Paris de Montmartel, and married the daughter of Edmé Gendon, premier secrétaire to the comte d'Argenson, garde des sceaux. Jean-Baptiste Philippe's first wife was also from Lorraine nobility; his second wife, Françoise-Geneviève de Vallembras de Sambrevil (1700–1779), was the widow of Pierre Touvenot de Vauroulant (–1731), who had also been a payeur des rentes de l'Hôtel de ville. She died in 1779, and her inventaire après décès, taken 11.II.1779 (AN MC/XXXVI/565), named her sole heir as her niece, Mme Benoist Bastide, née Marguerite-Geneviève-Françoise Touvenot (1728–1805); but the only portrait mentioned is the portrait "de la déffunte peint par Natier sous les attributs de la Muse, Erato, avec son petit filis sous l'emblème d'en genie." Exhibited in the Salon de 1746, it is now in the Louvre (inv. RF 1962-20; exh. Nattier 1999, no. 45); we here identify the child as François-Gabriel Chappron de Monsivry (c.1744–p.1769), the youngest son of her step-daughter Charlotte-Marguerite, Mme Jean-Baptiste Chappron (and the only one born a.1746, still a minor in 1769). He and his elder siblings (no others were minors), together with Mme Chappron, were named in the tuition document of 20.IV.1769 (AN Y4926^B) as the universal heirs of their grandfather's estate. Although Philippe's estate had a gross value of 801,736 livres to the Chapprons (succession Philippe, 23.I.1769, AN MC/XXXVI/527), the tuition indicates that it was encumbered by an annuity of 40,000 livres (without deductions) payable by them to Philippe's widow, arising under the terms of the 26.X.1759 marriage contract which survived Philippe's death. His widow also had certain residence rights including in the house at Chaillot. Mme Chappron bought out her children's obligations (which exceeded the income due to them from their grandfather's estate) with a capital sum. Nevertheless, according to her grandson, the duc de Raguse (Mémoires, I, p. 15), when Mme Chappron married her second husband, Colonel Mehegan, having been a widow for many years, she enjoyed "une assez belle fortune." The La Tour pastels of Philippe probably went to the Chappron family before Mme Philippe's death in 1779.

L'abbé Pommyer c.1757

L'abbé François-Emmanuel POMMYER (1713–1784), conseiller-clerc au parlement, amateur honoraire de l'Académie royale de peinture, ami et exécuteur de La Tour. It is likely that the pastel was made c.1757 and lent by the subject for the salon when Pommyer was a candidate for an honorary position. For the full discussion and references for the summary below, see Jeffares 2001.

The abbé François-Emmanuel Pommyer, sgr de La Guyonnière was abbé commendataire de Bonneval, chanoine de Tours, doyen de Reims, etc., conseiller au parlement, président de la Chambre souveraine du clergé, honoraire amateur de l'Académie royale de peinture and directeur de l'École royale gratuite de dessin. His father was trésorier général, and he was related to the Voysin, Lamoignon, Bignon and Nicolaj families. Pommyer's career as a magistrate commenced in the chambre des enquêtes in 1740. In 1766 he was appointed conseiller-clerc in the grand'chambre, where he was reinstated in 1774 after the Maupeou reforms of 1771.

La Tour's bold technique is evident throughout this portrait, including his use of ultramarine to the sitter's temple, upper lip and chin, as well as some light feathering on the rabat. The primary version J.46.2518 belonged to the sitter. The ricordo in Saint-Quentin, J.46.252, shown against the primary version in 2004, lacks its depth and variation of light, although its autograph status is evident from touches such as the zig-zag white highlights on the coat under the sitter's right cheek, while similar blue chalk touches on the rabat in the primary version are not copied; the work not only shows less background and omits the chair, but is reduced in scale to about 15:16.

The version in Melbourne J.46.2524 includes the chair, but from a photograph, appears to be a too-accurate copy of the primary version to be autograph. The question is discussed at more length in the updated version of Jeffares 2001. From a 1905 law case brought by a dealer, M. Jacob, Decourcelle bought the pastel from the widow of the actor Alexandre Mauzin, from whom he also bought a sanguine by Cochin which may also have come from the Pommyer family (Decourcelle's 1911 sale included several black chalk drawings by Cochin whose descriptions suggest they were connected to the abbé); while her claim to be the abbé's descendant appears unfounded after exhaustive genealogical analysis, the Melbourne version is likely to be a contemporary copy ordered by the abbé – perhaps even by Mlle Navarre whom he mentions in a letter to La Tour of 15.x.1762.

Numerous other pastel copies are all taken from the Saint-Quentin version. The authenticity of the préparation J.46.253 has been questioned (notably by Fleury & Brière 1954 and by implication or explicitly by later authors). On the basis of the image in B&W, this is understandable; but a more recent photograph reveals white highlights that are credibly autograph, and a redrawn sleeve in the upper left background whose folds are found in the primary version and which argues in favour of autograph status.

Pommyer's iconography includes a 1722 Largillier portrait of him as a child (already with features recognisable from the La Tour); several drawings by Cochin; and a 1783 marble bust by Étienne-Pierre-Adrien Gois. These are of limited value in dating the La Tour, although consistent with a date in the 1750s. The composition (La Tour chose almost exactly the same pose as Largillier had used so many years earlier) has perhaps an echo of Mme de Pompadour. Salmon draws parallels with the “facture vibrante du visage” of the 1753 portrait of the abbé Nolle in Munich (which shares a similar chair not used in other La Tour pastels), and plausibly suggests that the picture was executed in the 1750s.

Its appearance in the Salon of 1763 (unnamed) was recorded by several critics: Mathon de La Cour mentions “un Ecclésiastique respectable”; Bridard de La Garde, noted–

Il est difficile d'exprimer avec quel plaisir tout le monde est frappé de l'étonnante vérité des Portraits de M. le Moine, Sculpteur du Roi, & d'un Ecclésiastique connu du Public, & très-consideré dans la Magistrature.

while the critic in the Journal encyclopédique adds:

On a vû avec beaucoup de plaisir celui d'un Abbé musqué, frisé & paré avec toute l'élégance possible, & qui semble regarder cet Artiste avec un sourire assez malin, & se moquer de son ajustement: ces deux tableaux [avec Lemoyne] ... sont d'une force de couleur & d'une expression qui étonnent.

Pommyer's friendship with La Tour is documented in several letters (15.x.1762, 27.x.1767), one of which is notable for its mention of the pastellist Geneviève Navarre who may well have worked as a copyist for La Tour. At some stage after 1768 La Tour named Pommyer as his executor, although he revoked this by a further codicil in 1783 on the grounds that Pommyer was too busy to undertake the role (this was a few months before Pommyer's death). The letters also mention their mutual friends Cochin and Chardin: Pommyer owned several paintings by the latter (probably the Bocal d'olives now in the Louvre, and a version of Les Attributs des arts), one of which he lent to the Salon of 1769 (no. 31). Other paintings in his collection include works by Lagrenée, Bachelier and Guérin, as well as a group of portrait drawings by Cochin. He also owned two other pastels: Nattier's 1745 portrait of René-Charles de Maupeou (J.554.169), which he bought in the Nattier sale in 1763; and the ambitious La Tour pastel of Marie Fel (J.46.1763).

Pommyer became honoraire associé-libre de l'Académie royale de peinture et de sculpture on 31.x.1767 in competition against Blondel d'Azincourt, the baron de Besenval, and others. It may be that the appearance of his portrait in 1763 was in preparation for this. Cochin set out the politics surrounding the choice of replacements in a letter to Marigny of 1.x.1767, recommending Pommyer, as an “homme très digne, dans la force de l'âge, qui est lié d'amitié avec plusieurs artistes, et qui est, de plus, amy particulier de M. le vice-chancelier [Maupeou]” who would represent the interests of the Académie in the parlement. Marigny agreed. Others, such as Pidansat de Mairobert, did not (gossips of the day also claimed that Pommyer was fond of the “épices des juges”, essentially bribes). In the event, Pommyer's attendance at proceedings of the Académie was very infrequent, but he did play a rôle in the row between the Académie royale and the Académie de Saint-Luc leading to the latter's formal suppression. When Ange-Jacques Gabriel died on 4.I.1782, Pommyer replaced him as honoraire amateur of the Académie.

Friendship with the painter Jean-Jacques Bachelier (1724–1806) led to Pommyer's appointment in 1776 as a director of the École royale gratuite de dessin founded in 1766 by Sartine, with Bachelier as artistic director. It is quite possible that Pommyer may have introduced Bachelier to La Tour, or inspired him to open the École royale gratuite de dessin in Saint-Quentin in 1782 (La Tour also left Bachelier his portrait in his 1784 will).

The Saint-Quentin version was widely copied, and was the set piece for the 1858 drawing competition at the École gratuite de dessin de Saint-Quentin (registre des délibérations, 17.II.1858).

Mme de Pompadour 1748–55

Jeanne-Antoinette Poisson, marquise de POMPADOUR (1721–1764), ∞ 1741 Charles-Guillaume-Borromée Le Normant d'Étiolles; maîtresse du roi depuis 1745. For the full discussion and references for the summary below, see Jeffares 2019c.

La Tour's full-length pastel of Mme de Pompadour is arguably the most important work in the medium made before 1800, vying for that position only with the president de Rieux J.46.2722. Among the vast secondary literature, Méjanès 2002 and Salmon 2018 are the most detailed discussions but a number of disagreements arise.

The earliest evidence of the commission is in a letter from Mme de Graffigny to Devaux on 8.VII.1748, describing another “anecdote toute fraîche de ce maître peintre et plus, maître fol”:

Je lui dis que puisque j'étois en connoissance avec lui, j'esperois qu'il me permettroit d'entrer chez lui, où n'entre pas qui veut. Sur cela il me pria à genoux d'y diner. (Je pouvois bien le faire.) Je lui dis que j'étois fort curieuse de voir un portrait de Mde de Pompadour, dont j'ai beaucoup entendu parler, comme d'une merveille non achevée. Le boureau secoua encore l'oreille, baissa les yeux, et dit: « Il n'est plus. » Il l'a encore brûlé parce qu'il avoit donné un faux trait. Il étoit en grand. C'étoit un tableau de la taille de ceux dont il prend jusqu'à dix mille francs. Il est brûlé. Avez-vous une idée d'une tete aussi folle? Je lui chantai pouille. Il me dit que j'avois bien aise de peindre à l'ancre, que j'en étois quitte pour une feuille de papier quand il me falloit retoucher une phrase, mais qu'il lui falloit des mois pour raccomoder un faux trait, et qu'il aimoit mieux recommencer. Voila l'homme; au demeurant, de l'esprit et des sentimens.

In a letter of 28.V.1750, Pompadour wrote to her brother Marigny discussing the progress of various portraits (by Liotard, Boucher etc.), adding “Il n'y a plus de ressources auprès de Latour, sa folie augmente à chaque instant.” Evidently there was already a first version of the Louvre portrait, if not an early state of that work itself. Further the Boucher portrait evolved from versions dated to c.1750, already using the distinctive profil perdu that La Tour had explored in the series of three préparations now in Saint-Quentin (J.46.257, J.46.2572, J.46.2574). Further correspondence with Marigny and Pompadour followed in 1752.

The Pompadour iconography is vast. Lemoyne exhibited a marble bust in 1761, commissioned in 1758 (Réau 1927, no. 85). The Drouais oil in the National Gallery is among the best known later portraits. See the discussion on resemblance in Jeffares 2019c.

La Tour offered just this one work at the 1755 salon. Inevitably it was discussed by the critics – at least ten of them. Initially the pastel was placed badly, and the reflections in the glass were so severe that it had to be moved overnight, onto a free-standing easel, with a newly constructed balustrade. One of the critiques (Gautier-Dagoty) contained important comments on the original glass, while the others focused on the identification of the attributes by which the marquise is surrounded. For Pierre Estève, the lack of resemblance was a problem (a fair criticism), and he disliked the profil perdu pose. Grimm thought the other critics too harsh, praising the rich composition, while acknowledging that “le total est froid; la tête est trop tourmentée et fatiguée; à force de retoucher, M. de La Tour lui a ôté ce premier feu sans lequel rien ne peut réussir en fait d'art.”

Even the brocaded polychrome silk dress worn by the sitter carries political significance if, as seems likely, it was made in Lyon; it provided the backdrop for the Rosalba pastel in Nicolas Party's temporary installation at Frick Madison (2023/24).

The nature morte of books and pictures commands our attention today just as it did for the salon critics at the time. By prominently displaying Voltaire's Henriade, Montesquieu's De l'esprit des lois and the most recent volume of the Encyclopédie, Pompadour declared herself an unconditional supporter of the Enlightenment and the philosophes. Perhaps for this reason the king did not buy the picture for the royal collection.

Instead the sitter herself acquired it, for a price of 24,000 livres. It is surely item 288 in her posthumous inventory, and passed to her brother, appearing in turn in his posthumous inventory at the château de Menars, no. 1818. It is unclear how it then passed to Auguste-Louis-César-Hippolyte-Théodore de Lespinasse de Langéac, comte d'Arlet (1759–1814) who tried to sell the work to the Museum central des arts in a series of negotiations from 1796 on, before finally consigning it to auction, Paris, Paillet & Delaroche, 11.VII.1803, Lot 335. The auctioneer Paillet added a note about the large glass sheet which seemed to be the main attraction. It attracted no bids, so Paillet himself bought it for the modest sum of 500 francs, and offered it immediately to the Louvre, who bought it without enthusiasm. It was sent to the Musée spécial de l'École française at Versailles in 1803, where it was on show for several years and then kept in storage until returned to the Louvre in 1823. There it remained until the outbreak of war in 1939 when it was sent to Chambord – unlike the other Louvre pastels, which were recognised as too fragile to travel that far.

A condition report was made at Chambord, on 13.X.1942, noting glass disease which led to the removal of the glass soon after.

Several problematic questions remain concerning the physical construction of the work. A large hole in the canvas behind the marquise's head might, as Salmon suggests, be the result of an early nineteenth century intervention, in an attempt to repair the tear around the eye, by accessing the area from behind. Alternatively the hole may have been made by La Tour himself – perhaps even during his attempt to destroy the picture in 1748 (which he may have exaggerated when he told Mme de Graffigny that he had burned it).

The second concerns the châssis à clés, which Salmon believes was a later addition, perhaps at the beginning of the nineteenth century, but before Charles Steuben painted his copy in 1838 (MV 4446), as it has exactly the same dimensions and image as the Louvre pastel. But any such reduction must have taken place by 1755: the dimensions given in the Salon livret correspond almost exactly to the present dimensions. This is reinforced by the fact that the glass examined in 1942 appears to have been the original (remarked in the inventories and 1803 sale as of particular value).

In the absence of any firm evidence to the contrary, the simpler explanation would seem to be that La Tour himself rescued the wreck of his first attempt, which he had attacked so vigorously as to penetrate the head and perhaps damage the original strainer, and that he cut it down and mounted it on the present stretcher before it was shown in 1755. La Tour himself may have patched the hole with layers of paper before attaching the present sheet with the new head. The anomalous attachment of the canvas to the stretcher with tacks on the face of the work may simply be due to the fact that the rebate of the (present or previous) frame was inadequate: rather than cutting the frame, the sides of the canvas were simply trimmed to fit. It is thus possible that the aspect of the work is exactly as it has been since 1755, if not 1748.

The pastel remained unknown and unreproduced until its return to the Louvre in 1823, since when it has been central to the museum's collection of pastels. Virtually no commentary has failed to mention it, usually at far greater length than any other work in the medium.

Le comte de Provence 1763

Louis-Stanislas-Xavier, comte de PROVENCE, futur Louis XVIII (1755–1824), roi de France. The elder of Louis XVI's younger brothers, the comte de Provence was not formally reçu as chevalier de l'ordre du Saint-Esprit until 7.VI.1767, but by convention was allowed to bear the insignia from birth. He became chevalier de l'ordre du Toison d'or on 26.VII.1767, and grand-maître de Saint-Lazare et de Notre Dame du Mont Carmel in 1773. A very rich iconography includes pastels by Blanchard de Farges; Boze; Brandon; F.-H. Drouais; Drague; Ducreux; Frédou; Hall; Hoin; Isabey; Labille-Guiard and Éc. fr.; oils by Callet; Gros; Le Clerq; Robert Lefèvre; Louis-Michel Van Loo; Vigée Le Brun; miniatures by Augustin; Dumont; Sicardi; Sompsois; and a bust by Boizot.

The pastel is unusual in La Tour's œuvre as being oval, and of depicting a child. It is the only oval among the nine La Tour royal portraits shown in Durameau's Inventaire des tableaux du cabinet du roi...à Versailles (1784).

In 1940 the Louvre pastel was noted as “assez détendu”; the canvas has been transferred from its strainer to card.

Mlle Puvigné c.1750

Mme Jean-Baptiste d'Albessard, née Louise-Claire Hamoche-Puvigné, dite Mlle PUVIGNÉ (1735–1779), danseuse à l'Opéra. Her biography is rather obscure (the spellings Puvigné and Puvigny are both found, the latter as inscribed by La Tour on his préparation), but the family background as established by Jeffares 2021a (q.v. for full discussion and references) is of some interest and relevance to La Tour's clientele.

Louise-Claire, “Mlle Puvigné” was the daughter of a danseuse at the Opéra who used the same name (and with whose early performances the records are confused); her biological father was the actor Jean-Baptiste Hamoche. Her close relations included an uncle, Vincent-François Martenne de Puvigné, an infantry officer and commandant de l'île de Rodrigues, and half-sister Julienne-Nicole Sabatier, the actress Julie, who married Louis-Gabriel Cabre de Bercaville, lecteur to the maréchaux de Saxe and then de Löwendal. Her great-grandfather, also Vincent Martenne de Puvigné, was a chantre and ordinaire de la musique du roi, and one of her great-uncles was baptised at Saint-Germain-en-Laye in 1678 with the Grand Dauphin and queen, Marie-Thérèse d'Autriche, as godparents.

Brought up in Lyon, she débuted in Paris as a danseuse à l'Opéra-Comique at the Foire Saint-Laurent in 1743 at the age of 8 in Favart's L'Ambigu de la folie, dancing with Noverre in a production in which her father was the lead actor. A pupil of Marie Sallé (q.v.), she was première danseuse in Rameau's Les Indes galantes 1749 and in Les Fêtes de Polymnie. She was also “l'une des étoiles du théâtre des Petits Appartements à la cour” according to the file in the Bibliothèque de l'Opéra.

She made a sufficient impression for Mme de Graffigny to call her “ma petite merveille” in a letter of 12.VI.1744. Voltaire mentioned her, rather obscurely. The scandal sheets of the day (e.g. Capon, Les Vestris, 1908, passim) reported romantic liaisons, but it is police inspector Meunier's reports (Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal) which provide the most detail of a succession of lovers. Her mother is said to have sold her virginity for a few louis and a gold watch to the marquis de Courtenvaux; he was succeeded by Mazade, the prince de Soubise, the marquis de Voyer, the duc de Luxembourg, Graf Kaunitz, comte Mnizech, Fontanieu père et fils and Masson de Maisonrouge.

Eventually, on 8.VIII.1760, in Paris, Saint-Eustache, she married Jean-Baptiste d'Albessard (1716–1794), avocat général au parlement de Bordeaux, having already borne him two children; two more followed, one of whom received preuves de noblesse from Chérin in 1787. Louise-Claire died and was buried at Versailles (paroisse saint-Louis, 29.VIII.1779); among the witnesses was the cellist and composer-Pierre Talon.

A date of c.1750 is plausible for La Tour's préparation, which conforms to Meunier's description of her “agée d'environ dix huit ans, petite, brune, bien faite, le nez acquilin, assés jolie.” Nothing is known of the circumstances of its execution, nor is there anything to indicate that La Tour progressed to a finished portrait.

A costume drawing by Louis-René Boquet (Bibliothèque-musée de l'Opéra, inv. 14514, D2160-4) shows Mlle Puvigné in an elaborate taffeta dress with paniers.
