HEADLINE: Big PAC a player in state races;
National group backing DFLers for state House

BYLINE: BY PATRICK SWEENEY; Pioneer Press

BODY:

A big national political fund-raising group is playing a significant behind-the-scenes role in Minnesota this year, registering young voters and trying to help the Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party win control of the state House.

The 21st Century Democrats, which is based in Washington, D.C., and is the 18th-largest political action committee in the country, has longtime ties to Minnesota and has been a player in St. Paul city politics for more than a decade. Wrestling control of the state House from Republicans is the group's primary goal, but the organization also expects to help Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry in a battleground state.

The group's spending in Minnesota this year, especially on behalf of the House candidates, is remarkable because so much of the money comes from outside the state.

Less than 1 percent of the donations to the 21st Century Democrats subsidiary that is paying the salaries of about 20 campaign workers helping DFL candidates -- mostly House candidates -- came from Minnesota contributors, according to a Pioneer Press review of campaign reports.

Two big donors in Pennsylvania and California contributed nearly half the money that the subsidiary collected over the past two years and is spending to try to elect Democratic legislative majorities in Minnesota and three other states.

In all, 21st Century Democrats has spent more than $210,000 so far this year in Minnesota, although the group operates largely outside the public's notice.

"Most people sort of don't know about them," said Jay Benanav, a St. Paul City Council member who got campaign staffers from 21st Century Democrats when he ran for mayor three years ago. "They really fly under the radar."

21st Century Democrats officials say their spending is both legal and proper. But it is unusual to have a large political action committee, not directly affiliated with either major political party, pay so much attention to the makeup of the Minnesota House of Representatives.

"That is an exceedingly high amount of money for an out-of-state PAC to be giving in Minnesota," said David Schultz, a Hamline University professor who teaches an election law course.

Republicans questioned the propriety of big out-of-state donors contributing so heavily to state elections.

"This is not the way Minnesotans run elections," said Corey Miltimore, executive director of the state Republican Party. He said he did not know about 21st Century Democrats' role in the election until he was questioned by the Pioneer Press.

"I have a problem with all this money flowing in from out of state," Miltimore said.

Miltimore also questioned whether 21st Century Democrats properly disclosed its contributors to state campaign finance regulators. "I will certainly leave open the option of asking for a formal investigation of this," he said.

Rep. Matt Entenza of St. Paul, the House minority leader who is directing the DFL campaign to win control of the House, said Democrats need all the help they can get to match campaign spending by Republican-oriented groups.

"They've got money coming in from all over the place as well," Entenza said of the Republicans. "When the NRA is doing independent expenditures here in Minnesota on behalf of Republican candidates, which is who they exclusively support, their money is coming in from all over the country. The NRA is not funded locally."

In 2002, the National Rifle Association's political action committee spent $62,000 helping Minnesota candidates, about $11,000 more than 21st Century Democrats gave to the DFL Party that year.

Minnesota pro-business, anti-tax and anti-abortion groups spent more than $500,000 helping mostly Republican candidates. The political action committee of Education Minnesota, the state's main teachers union, also reported more than $1 million on independent expenditures that year -- spending that benefited mostly Democrats.

PAC HAS STATE TIES

The 21st Century Democrats -- then called Democrats 2000 -- was founded in the mid-1980s by U.S. Sen. Tom Harkin of Iowa, U.S. Rep. Lane Evans of Illinois and Jim Hightower, the former Texas agriculture commissioner.

The PAC supports "progressive" candidates, people who support civil rights and economic justice.

From the start, the group's goals were not just to elect Democrats to national offices but to build a farm team of progressive Democratic officeholders, beginning with school boards, city councils and legislatures. The group also aims to affect future elections by training young campaign organizers.

Former St. Paul Mayor Jim Scheibel, who now is chairman of the 21st Century Democrats board of directors, got involved with the group when it backed his mayoral bid in 1989.

Since then, the group has helped other Minnesota candidates, including Benanav, St. Paul City Council Member Lee Helgen and the late U.S. Sen. Paul Wellstone.

Jeff Blodgett, Wellstone's campaign manager in 2002, said 21st Century Democrats funded more than a dozen campaign staffers who worked to elect Wellstone and other Democratic candidates.

Twenty-first Century Democrats has two components:

A federal political action committee that does extensive direct-mail fund raising and collects most of its money in donations of less than $200 that has raised some $5.5 million over the past two years.

Minnesotans contributed less than 3 percent of the donations over $200 that the group is required to itemize on its federal campaign finance reports.

A 527 organization, so named because of the section of the federal tax code that covers such groups, has collected about $850,000. Most of the money came in big contributions from wealthy individuals and big labor unions. Minnesota donations to the 527 group add up to $2,170, about one-fourth of 1 percent of the group's total revenue.

The federal political action committee is paying for the registration drive targeting young voters in Minnesota. The 527 organization is paying campaign workers whom 21st Century Democrats is providing to the DFL Party.

WEALTHY BENEFACTORS

The biggest single donor to the fund paying those workers in Minnesota has been Peter L. Buttenweiser, a Philadelphia man who has given millions of dollars in recent years to Democratic causes.

Buttenweiser, an heir to an investment banking fortune, gave $205,000 to the 21st Century Democrats' 527 group over the past two years, according to campaign-finance records.

The second-largest donor is Andrew S. Rappaport, a venture capitalist from Woodside, Calif., who donated $200,000.

Other than Scheibel, officials of 21st Century Democrats refused to comment on where their money came from or say how much will be spent in Minnesota by Election Day. Early this fall, Scheibel said he expected the group to spend $750,000 to $1 million in Minnesota by Election Day. More recently Kelly Young, the group's executive director, said that had been group's goal, but total spending will be significantly less.

So far, state and federal campaign-finance records show the group's Minnesota spending has come in two chunks:

More than $65,000 the group told the Federal Elections Commission it spent in May through August to pay dozens of young, mostly part-time or occasional workers to register and mobilize 18- to 34-year-old Democratic voters across the Minnesota.

Some $146,000 from the 527 group that 21st Century Democrats reported to Minnesota's Campaign Finance and Public Disclosure Board it spent between Jan. 1 and Aug. 23 to assist the Minnesota DFL by paying campaign workers.

In addition to Minnesota, 21st Century Democrats is financing and directing young-voter registration drives in Oregon and Ohio. Through its 527 group, the PAC is waging campaigns to elect Democratic legislative majorities in Oregon, Michigan and Vermont, as well as Minnesota.

"We really do look at states where we can make a difference in turning the chamber," said Young, referring to the group's goal of turning Republican legislative majorities into Democratic majorities.

All those states, other than Vermont, are so-called "battleground" states that polls suggest could go for either President Bush or Sen. John Kerry in this year's presidential campaign.

"One reason we're interested in Minnesota is that a high DFL turnout and DFL vote is going to affect, as I said, the congressional and the Kerry campaigns," Scheibel said. "But the primary goal of the organizers here is to win the local races."

21st Century Democrats is also assisting 10 congressional candidates, none in Minnesota.

Scheibel said he had no qualms about using money from Pennsylvania or California to try to win House races in Minnesota.

"I think it's fine for national people to say 'We want to invest in young organizers,' just like some people are investing millions of dollars in very questionable commercials that I don't think do the electorate any good," Scheibel said.

Entenza reveals $260,000 donation

GOP criticizes DFL Party contributions

BY PATRICK SWEENEY
Pioneer Press

In the final weeks of the just-completed election campaign, House Minority Leader Matt Entenza and his wife, Lois Quam, donated more than $260,000 to the Minnesota Democratic-Farmer-Labor Party and to the House campaign that Entenza led.

The donations, which Entenza disclosed Friday, are in addition to nearly $340,000 in previously reported donations — placing the couple among the top individual donors to state campaigns. Quam is an executive at UnitedHealth Group, a Minnetonka-based company that is the largest health insurer in the country.

While there is nothing illegal about the contributions as Entenza described them Friday, they were strongly criticized by Republicans, who are considering filing state and federal complaints against Entenza regarding his donations to a national Democratic group that was active in Minnesota this year.

"There was a need," the St. Paul lawmaker said of the DFL Party's and the House DFL campaign committee's spending in the final days of the campaign. "I was proud to be able to help."

State Republican Party Chairman Ron Eibensteiner questioned the propriety of the latest donations, and he said the party is planning to file state and federal complaints accusing Entenza of violating campaign finance laws through his $300,000 in donations this year to the national campaign committee called the 21st Century Democrats.

"We will be filing a complaint — we still are working on it — probably in a week or so," Eibensteiner said. He has been threatening to file state and federal complaints since Entenza's $300,000 contribution to the 21st Century Democrats was revealed in early November.

Eibensteiner, who himself contributed $125,000 to the state Republican Party in 2000, said he thought there was something vaguely improper about Entenza contributing money to help elect DFL lawmakers whom he will lead in the upcoming legislative session.

"It's very disconcerting to have someone who is the leader of a caucus contribute this money out of his own pocket, because now these legislators are beholden to him and not to their constituents," Eibensteiner said.

David Schultz, a Hamline University professor who teaches election law, said Entenza's and Quam's contributions to the DFL Party and to the House DFL campaign committee appeared to be "perfectly legal" if Entenza did not influence how the money was spent. Entenza said Friday he did not.

But if Entenza, as the DFL caucus' leader, directed how his money was to be spent, he perhaps could be in violation of a law that bars donors to party campaign committees from "earmarking" their gifts to benefit specific candidates, Schultz said.

Beyond that, Schultz agreed with Eibensteiner that Entenza's large donations to the House campaign committee perhaps could buy the loyalty of the DFL candidates who won close races with the help of his money.

"He's spending an incredible amount of money in ways that I almost think are making it possible for him to buy the speakership of the House," Schultz said. If DFL candidates had won a majority with two more House seats in the November election, Entenza would have been in line to be elected speaker.

Entenza said Friday that he and Quam each gave $75,000 to the DFL Party and $75,000 to the DFL House campaign committee this year. Those donations put both of them in the top 10 individual donors to state campaign committees since 2000.

During that period, only eight other people — Eibensteiner, U.S. Sen. Mark Dayton, Edward Hamm, Vance Opperman and Dayton's ex-wife, Alida Messinger among them — have contributed $75,000 or more to a state party or legislative campaign committee, according to records maintained by the campaign finance board.

Most of those very big donors gave to Democratic campaigns.

Entenza told reporters Friday about his and Quam's latest donations, which have not yet been reported to the state Campaign Finance and Public Disclosure Board. He was responding to a Republican legislator's call for him to release campaign contribution and spending records for the last weeks of the campaign.

Entenza said he was happy to provide the disclosure that Rep. Jeff Johnson of Plymouth sought. He said he had nothing to hide about the campaign contributions, which he and Quam would have been required by law to reveal in February.

The 21st Century Democrats, the national group that this year received three $100,000 contributions from Entenza, funded two major election efforts in Minnesota. One was a young-voter registration drive; the other trained and paid more than $250,000 in salaries and expenses for about 20 campaign field workers who assisted DFL House candidates.

Eibensteiner said Friday, as he has in the past, that he suspected Entenza's $300,000 contribution to 21st Century Democrats paid for those field workers. And Entenza insisted, as he has in the past, that his money went only to the voter registration part of the group's work.

Entenza also gave reporters a copy of a canceled $100,000 check to 21st Century Democrats to support his assertion that his donations to that group went to the young-voter registration drive. The check showed a "young voter" notation on the line provided on the check for listing its purpose.

In addition to the money they gave to the two Minnesota campaign committees and to 21st Century Democrats, Entenza and Quam also gave about $40,000 to candidates for Congress and national political action committees over the past two years.

Quam told Pioneer Press business columnist Dave Beal this week that she has realized net proceeds of $4.2 million through the sale of UnitedHealth stock since the beginning of 2002.

Entenza said the political contributions he made came from "our" money. Quam said she and Entenza have joint accounts.

House DFLers this year picked up 13 seats, moving into a near-tie with Republicans for control of the House.

Entenza, wife gave $600,000 to DFL groups

Dane Smith

Star Tribune

Published December 4, 2004

House Minority Leader Matt Entenza disclosed Friday that he and his wife gave a combined grand total of about $600,000 in political contributions to DFL Party groups, to a national "527" organization and to various Democratic candidates in the 2004 election cycle, an amount that could make the Entenza household one of the larger overall contributors in Minnesota.

The revelation added fuel to a controversy over the postelection discovery that Entenza gave $300,000 to 21st Century Democrats, an advocacy group based in Washington, D.C., that spent more than $200,000 in Minnesota turning out young voters and helping DFL House candidates, who almost regained the majority.

Republicans contend that the arrangement was illegal or improper and that the latest disclosure fits a pattern of Entenza trying to conceal the full extent of his personal giving and influence, at least until after the Nov. 2 election. On Election Day, DFLers made a net gain of 13 seats in the Minnesota House, one of the best showings by legislative Democrats in any state.

"This latest revelation strengthens our argument that Entenza violated Minnesota campaign finance disclosure laws in order to obscure the true extent of his contributions to his own caucus," said Republican Party chairman Ron Eibensteiner.

But Entenza, who disclosed the larger amount in response to questions from reporters who were seeking his reaction to a Republican attack earlier in the day, said there was nothing illegal or improper about his level of giving, enabled in large part by his wife's income as the head a major health-care company.

Entenza's base salary as a legislator comes to about $30,000, and he also has a part-time law practice. His wife, Lois Quam, is chief executive officer of Ovations, a major division of UnitedHealth Group.

"Lois and I both come from very humble beginnings. This state gave us a lot, and we're very, very proud to be able to give a little back to help keep the state we believe in," Entenza said.

Republican Party officials say they intend to file a complaint, perhaps at both the state and federal levels, alleging that the 21st Century contributions circumvented limits and disclosure laws. Republicans contend that the Entenza money paid directly for field staff workers who were working primarily on DFL House candidate campaigns.

Entenza and 21st Century officials insist that his contribution was confined to a Young Voter Project, aimed at turning out college students, and that other 21st Century funds were used for the House races. Entenza on Friday released a photocopy of one of three $100,000 checks he wrote to the 21st Century Democrats. On the memo line, there is the notation "Youth Voter."

Legal, but...

National campaign reform advocates generally have described the huge and unlimited flow of money to and from 527s as questionable and bad for public trust, but apparently legal. Giving to such groups, named for the section of tax law that authorizes them, soared in the 2004 presidential campaign, which produced such potent 527s as Americans Coming Together for the Democrats, and Swift Boat Veterans for Truth for Republicans.

The Entenza contributions appear to be "strictly legal, but the bigger ethical question is the very fact that an individual can give this much," said David Schultz, a Hamline University professor who teaches ethics and election law.

Neglecting to immediately inform the news media about contributions is certainly not illegal, Schultz added, although Entenza may have violated the spirit of the principle of "transparency." Another of the "multiple ethical questions," Schultz said, is the degree to which Entenza has "so deeply indebted so many DFL legislators to himself."

Eibensteiner said: "Will those newly elected legislators take their marching orders from the voters of their districts or from Matt Entenza, who paid their way to the Capitol?" A Republican House member, Jeff Johnson, R-Plymouth, called on Entenza Friday to fully disclose all details of his giving, including answers to questions such as why the DFL caucus didn't hire its own field workers. Entenza's estimates of his total contributions came in response to questions from Capitol reporters who were seeking his answer to Johnson's request.

Until then, Entenza had officially divulged only the $300,000 to the 21st Century Democrats, and his own contribution of about $75,000 to his own caucus. Much of the remaining amounts he and his wife contributed is not yet recorded on campaign finance records because the money was given after the last disclosure deadline but before the election. The reporting period for the last preelection disclosure ended Oct. 18, and final campaign reports aren't due until Feb. 1.

'There was a need'

Asked why he gave so much so late in the election and after the last preelection disclosure, Entenza said: "Because there was a need." Polls showed that Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry and President Bush were very close all through October, and DFL House campaign organizers sensed toward the end that they could take more seats than anyone expected.

Entenza said he would be happy to sit down with Johnson and Republicans to show them how his caucus financing and the structure of state party coordination was similar to past years. "That would probably be easier than talking through press conferences," Entenza said.

DFLers released statistics showing that Republicans also used large transfers from national party units to state party units, including about $663,000 from affiliated party units under the Joint State Victory Fund to a federal account for the Minnesota GOP.

Large as Entenza's contributions are, he is not the champion, even among DFLers, in total giving in Minnesota. Statistics compiled by the Center for Responsive Politics, a campaign finance watchdog group, show that Alida R. Messinger, a Minneapolis philanthropist and perennial big giver, contributed at least $2.5 million to seven liberal or Democrat-connected 527 groups.

Entenza noted that candidates such as U.S. Sen. Mark Dayton, a Democrat, and Republican businessman Brian Sullivan have spent millions of dollars on their own campaigns in recent years.

Entenza gave this informal accounting of his and Quam's contributions: $300,000 to the 21st Century Democrats from Entenza; $75,000 to $80,000 each to the DFL Party and DFL House caucus from Entenza; $60,000 to $65,000 each to the DFL Party and the DFL House caucus from Quam, and miscellaneous smaller amounts to other groups and candidates, including Dayton (up for reelection in 2006) and Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S. D., who was defeated for reelection.
