A Lecture on Fish.

Fish may be divided into classes—codfish and fresh fish. The propriety of dividing them into classes will be at once apparent when we reflect that they are usually found in schools.

The mackerel is not exactly a codfish, but he comes so much nearer being a codfish than a fresh fish that he is for the present classed with the former.

Fish exist in pairs to suit the purchase, from minnows to whales—which are not fish strictly speaking. Neither is the alligator a fish; but we will not attempt to tell what are not fish. The herring is not absolutely a fish; he is a suggestion of departed fish. But the strongest suggestion of departed fish are small.

Fish are caught by trawlers and sold by weight—that is, they are caught by the gill and sold by the pound.

Contentment is the chief requisite to the successful fisherman.

Many land animals are reproduced in the sea. Thus we have the dogfish, the codfish, sea lions and sea horses, but no sea turtles. None of them have bird legs, and no manner of mile without hind legs would be a failure.

It may not be out of place to mention Jonah in this connection. He was not a fish, but was once included among the inhabitants of the deep. There has been much dispute as to the name of the fish that swallowed him, some persons arguing that the throat of a whale is not large enough to swallow a man. For such persons do not consider that Jonah might have been made in a smaller mould than other men. Moreover, it is certain that he was cast overboard being swallowed—cast over the tail of the vessel. There has been much speculation also, as to the cause of Jonah's expulsion from the whale's interior, but the theory most accepted is that he was cast on the whale's stomach.

But we have digressed. Let us return to our fish.

The codfish is the great source of all salt. The saline qualities of the codfish permeate and pervade the vast deep and make the ocean as salt as himself. Wogwood in his own scales, he is found wanting—wanting considerable freshening. He is by nature quite social, his principal recreation being balls—fish balls.

The codfish was worshipped by the Greeks; but he is only half as well treated by the inhabitants of Cape Cod—he is simply skipped. Hence the difference between the Greeks and the inhabitants of Cape Cod.

Small fish are usually harmless, but parents can't be so careful about permitting their children to play where large fish abound, as it is an established fact that big fish frequently eat up the little ones.

The jellyfish is perhaps the best understood of all the funny tribe, because, being translucent, it is easy to see through him.

The greatest number of fish is taken on Friday, and the next greatest number on Saturday, because those that are left over are warmed up for Saturday's breakfast.

Argumentative persons are fond of stating that it is grammatical to say the five fishes and three fishes were six, seven five and three were always eight.

Fish are provided with air bladders, so that they can rise from the depths of the sea by simply filling these bladders with air. If anyone asks where they get the air for such inflation, let him understand that we cannot spend time to answer petty questions, as we are always fishing.

There are many interesting reasons about fish—such as that they frequently go in pairs—but the foregoing facts may be considered as of first-class importance.

Curiosities of Dispatch Writing.

During the French "War of the Frodoe," a leading member of the popular party transmitted an important letter in a roasted crab. The order which decided the great sea fight of Solebay on the coast of Charles II. was carried by a little cabin boy, who swam through the fire of the Dutch fleet with the paper in his mouth, and that boy afterward wrote his name in history as Admiral Sir Combsby Showel. Immediately before the outbreak of the Seven Years' War, Frederick the Great's emissaries in Samsky discovered several treasonable dispatches hidden under the skin of a bologna sausage. One of the Jacobite leaders of 1745, who almost to be surprised in his own house by a party of soldiers, was warned of the necessity of instant flight by the gift of a fender from a friendly neighbor, the meaning of which somewhat ambiguous present, in his credit to it spoken he at once divined. Warren Hastings, when blockaded in Benares by Clive's troops, succeeded in communicating with the British army by a singular use of his knowledge of Asiatic customs. He inserted the rolls of parchment into the quills which his native messengers used in their work, and thus sent his dispatches safely through the very midst of the besieging force. The fall of Robespierre in 1793 was telegraphed to the prisoners in the abbey from the roof of an adjoining house by knitting up a rope and a stone (pierre) and string both down into the street. When the Russian capture of Samarcand was known to the British in India a loyal native succeeded in passing through the enemy's camp with a letter attached up in his sandals, which he reached General Knolly's army just in time to recall it to the rescue. It is even stated on good authority—although it must be owned that the statement had a strong "Munchausen" flavor about it—that a French spy in 1870 traversed the German lines with a photographic dispatch concealed in the hollow of his false teeth.—Lecturer Hear.

The Use of Tea.

Like alcohol and all other poisons, tea is a stimulant for no other reason than that it is a poison, at least its alkaloid tannin and its tannic acid. It stimulates just to the extent that it irritates, the nerves being the special objects of its attacks. The chemical, poisonous stimulant acts only because it is in antagonism, at war with every function of the human body, like the whip and spur exciting increased activity, arousing an unnatural activity, acting on the offensive, never creating any real power, no real strength and endurance. The nerves seem to have a perfect aversion to this tea alkaloid, manifested by a decided attempt to eject the invader whenever it comes in contact with them. This violent expulsive effort, this rousing of the powers of the system to eject a foe in the shortest possible time, to avoid harm, is but another name for stimulation. Its well-known power to induce wakefulness while watching with the sick, is attributable to this irritating influence over the nerves, this goading, rousing excitation to an extent to preclude the idea of rest, quiet, comfort and sleep. The watcher is kept awake as she would be by any other form of confusion, commotion, any other form of discomfort and pain. I am at a loss to decide what can be said in favor of the use of tea and coffee, as beverages, beyond the idea of sensual gratification, whatever may be claimed for them as medicines, as stimulants, always to be followed by a depression, a loss of power. No one will claim that they were used in the earlier ages of the world, when man was at his best, when he lived for centuries, when his body was a grand magazine of vital force.

During the two centuries in which these artificial drinks have been to some extent known to the civilized world, the increased consumption of tea has been quite rapid, particularly for the last half-century, previous to which our forefathers knew but little of its general use, being equally ignorant of neuralgia, though there were rare cases of nervous attacks resembling it, generally confined to the nerves of the face and head, instead, as at present, attacking all parts of the body, the women, the more especial votaries of the heathen herb, being the special sufferers. It is now estimated that the annual consumption of tea is 3,000,000,000 pounds; of coffee, 1,000,000,000; cocoa and chocolate, 1,000,000 pounds, while similar drinks are used by less civilized nations and tribes. It is the favorite drink of Russia, Holland and England, the last country annually importing 100,000,000 pounds, or several pounds to each man, woman and child.—Journal of Commerce.

Hugh Conway.

Many who knew Mr. Fergus personally have to regret the loss of a gifted and attractive friend. The far greater number who were familiar with the name and writings of Hugh Conway will feel deeply the removal from contemporary literature of a name associated with great success, and attended by the promise of even better things. There is something profoundly melancholy in the thought that Mr. Fergus had for so many years worked on patiently and persistently almost unknown, until on a sudden success and popularity came to him, and gave to him not merely money, but the position and reputation which are far dearer to a literary man. Mr. Fergus's success was startling, but it was not undeserved. He could tell a story to a generation that were very eager to have stories told them, and were beginning to get a little weary of the purposeless and bloodless pamphlets which had of late been usurping the place of romance. A useful, honorable, and even brilliant literary and dramatic career was opening out before Mr. Fergus. His prose style was maturing and improving; and his last work, appearing in the pages of The English Illustrated, was a marked and striking advance on anything he had hitherto done. We earnestly hope that the story was completed before Mr. Fergus's untimely death. We can remember few instances in which bright promise was so suddenly and so sadly marred.—Whitell Review.

A Giant Rose.

At the new gardens, Whitty, there is now growing a champion rose tree, a Maréchal Niel. It was planted in 1865, so that it is actually twenty years old. For many years it produced regularly enormous quantities of roses, but it was not till 1882 that the full number of blooms was counted, when no less than 2,500 roses were recorded. In 1883 there was a falling off in the number of roses grown of about 1,000, and last year there was a still further diminution, as only 850 blooms were plucked. It was then thought that the tree had seen its best days, and that, considering its age, its vitality was on the wane. There is, however, more than sufficient reason to believe there is life in the old tree yet. Since last year the proprietor has devoted considerable attention to the tree, and there is now a chance of his industry being rewarded, for, early though it is, there are now many hundreds of buds in various stages of forwardness, and there is every reason to believe that the tree this year will be more prolific than ever, the proprietor estimating the number of blooms at not less than 3,000.—London Life.

Some Historical Information.

Following is an exact copy of a composition in history by a little ten-year-old girl attending one of the secondary schools of this city. The thoughts, dates, punctuation and spelling all prove that the little lady is endowed with striking originality.

1. William Penn was born in Boston in 1607. His father was a soap and candle maker. But William did not like that trade. Then the government owed his father a large sum of money and when he died it was given all to William Penn. He was the first white man who founded Pennsylvania. He founded Pennsylvania because his name was William Penn. William Penn joined the Quakers but his father did not like it. And he discovered America in the year 1492.

2. George Washington is the first president of the United States born in Virginia in the year. When George was a little boy he would never tell a lie. Because he thought it was not nice. It is not nice neither. He studied all kinds of things to be a president.

3. Abraham Lincoln was born in Wales in 1799. His father was a wool comber, but Abraham did not like that trade. One day Abraham was standing on the railroad and a man by the name of Gittie came behind him and shot him. Then he got put in jail for it. But it was not nice for him because he shot him on the railroad.

4. Rodger Williams discovered America 1492.—Lowester Intelligence.

Peculiar Enforcement of Sunday Laws.

During the great floods on the lower Mississippi last year, the country around Modoc landing, in that State, was for miles under water, except one small island where John McGuire had a store. Thither the hungry and starving people came in boats for provisions. With John McGuire the rations sent by the Government for the relief of the destitute had been deposited, and that person, in disregard of the Sunday law of Arkansas, occupied himself actively on Sundays in distributing the rations. For this act of charity he was indicted, tried, found guilty and fined.—Missouri Sentinel.

A Low Valuation on his Life.

I remember upon one occasion that Boyton was called upon by the frantic cries for help of a man who had got beyond his depth, and plunged into the breakers, followed by a surf-boat. The treacherous undertow, setting strongly seaward, had caught the unfortunate swimmer, and he was being rapidly carried out of the reach of assistance. Boyton seized him just as he was about to sink for the last time, and had him hauled into the boat. The man was utterly exhausted, and it was nearly an hour before he was fully restored. He took off his bathing suit, dressed himself and then with rare magnanimity took from his vest pocket a fifty cent note (silver half dollars were not as plentiful then as now) and handed it to Boyton saying:

"I owe you my life, sir, and I hope you will call upon me when you want a favor. Take this money and treat yourself and your assistants to a good stiff drink. You certainly must be chilled through."

Boyton is of Irish extraction and as quick-witted as Phillip Oatran. "I think you have made a mistake," he said. "You put too much value on your life. Permit me to give you your change," and before the crestfallen miser knew what to reply, Boyton had thrust into his hand forty-nine cents in pennies, three cent pieces and ten cent notes. "I will keep this note as a souvenir of the value of human life," said Paul, coolly putting it into his pocket. He has it to this day.—Philo News.

Bagle Calls.

All military matters are brought nowadays much more frequently to the eyes and ears of the general public than was the case formerly, and perhaps hardly a family exists in village or town but has some connection with members of either the regular army, the militia or the volunteers. During the summer months, when camps of instruction are so frequently formed, the sound of the bagle testifies to the presence of the civilian army throughout the length and breadth of the land, and the inhabitants of a garrison town are in the same way continually reminded of the presence of regular troops by notes of the bagle.

Considering the length of some of the calls, it may surprise the reader to hear that there are only five different notes played on the bagle, and though that is the case, the language of the instrument is not at all limited. A language with only five words might be thought easy to learn, and yet the different arrangements of those words, (sentences as I may call them) are endless. It is, indeed, a very necessary part of a soldier's training to learn the language of the bagle, and even un-musical men soon acquire it. For, in the first place, the same calls sound much about the same each day—a hungry recruit, for instance, does not take long to recognize the dinner bugle, nor does the careless soldier forget the summons to extra arm, much as he might wish to do so. The men in their barrack-room, too, often associate words with the notes of the bagle, and that is a help to remember the meaning of the sounds heard.

P. DALTON

No. 92 King Street.
Once more solicits the patronage and support of those who for twenty years knew and dealt with him.

Plain Talk Pays Always

DALTON has for many years worked for and endeavored to please every class of the community from the highest in the land down to the humblest of the working classes, and he can say that during that time he never made an enemy or lost a customer. Now he has again put his hand to the plow, and it is as well able and willing to give honest work, good material, and fair value for money as ever yet was done in the Hawaiian Islands.
