On October 12, 1936, a Federal Grand Jury at Charleston, South Carolina, returned an indictment against Frank Christy Davis and others for having transported a sum in excess of $5,000 in interstate and foreign commerce, knowing said money to have been taken by fraud. Davis is the Subject of Identification Order No. 1438, issued by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

WASHINGTON, D. C. 20535

ISSUED BY THE

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

NOVEMBER 1964

The FBI LAW ENFORCEMENT BULLETIN is published by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice each month. Its material is compiled for the assistance of all Law Enforcement Officials and is a current catalogue of continuous reference for the Law Enforcement Officers of the Nation.

John Edgar Hoover, Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
United States Department of Justice
Washington, D. C.

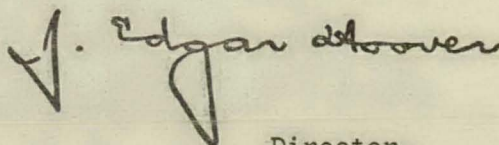

The law enforcement official frequently asks the question: "How may we effectively cope with crime and criminals?" We must follow the only rule that ever has been successful in combatting law infractions--the use of relentless, persistent, and determined methods of scientific detection and apprehension. Intelligent, well-trained, adequately paid, and properly equipped men must be available to immediately undertake investigation of crimes which are committed, with no letup until the offender is apprehended and sufficient evidence for successful prosecution amassed against him.

The criminal must be made to know that apprehension will be swift and certain and that money or influence will be valueless to him, for he will be made to stand trial.

Next the criminal must be faced with the assurance of swift and certain justice with true evidence efficiently amassed and presented without delay.

Lastly, upon conviction he must know that the punishment will be that which he justly deserves, and that while clemency and rehabilitation facilities will be made available for the person who has unwisely and thoughtlessly become involved in criminality, that hardened criminals and recidivists will not be permitted the furlough and parole on which to commit other dastardly crimes.

Crime in America can and will be lessened and placed under firm control, but that time will not arrive until we are ready to face the facts which exist, and awaken from the soothing of those who would assuage our every concern. When we in the United States are ready to demand efficiency in criminal justice, without favor, partiality or sentimental leniency--and are willing to pay for it--then will criminality fade into obscurity.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

The attention of all law enforcement officials who forward fingerprints to the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is again invited to the imperative need for the submission to the Bureau of the most legible prints obtainable under any and all circumstances.

In connection with the need for legible fingerprints, it is desired to point out that as the Bureau's files have become more extended and as more numerous subclassifications, therefore, have been rendered necessary, the need for referenced searches in subclassifications involving borderline counts or in certain transitional or doubtful patterns, has been increased. The work in this respect can be simplified when the best possible fingerprints obtainable are submitted for the files of the Identification Division. The assistance of all law enforcement officials in this endeavor will be appreciated and will, of course, redound to the mutual benefit of all concerned.

For several years the Bureau has followed the practice of returning to contributing officials, fingerprint cards which apparently do not lend themselves to accurate classification. These fingerprint cards before return are searched in all reasonable combinations and to this extent the volume of effort devolving upon the Bureau presents a rather serious problem because the Bureau's Technical Experts frequently must search doubtful patterns in numerous combinations.

A further problem is involved in this situation, however, in that oftentimes fingerprints are received where apparently the characteristics are entirely legible and these prints after acknowledgment are filed in the preferential classification. Frequently such prints are followed by other impressions where the characteristics, due to defects in inking, pressure, or the presence of foreign matter, present slightly different aspects. In many of these instances the prior fingerprints are not identified.

As indicated above, the cooperation of all agencies in the transmittal of additional records should assist the Bureau materially in affording not only more expeditious but more accurate service to police organizations.

ADDRESS OF HONORABLE JOSEPH B. KEENAN, ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
AT THE GRADUATION EXERCISES OF THE SEVENTH
SESSION, FBI NATIONAL POLICE ACADEMY,
APRIL 2, 1938.

Mr. Hoover, the Director; my friend, the Senator from North Carolina; and associates from the Department of Justice, and the graduates of the National Police Academy. I join with the Director in expressing the keen regret of all of us, as well as the Attorney General, Mr. Cummings, that his unavoidable absence makes it impossible for him to participate in these important exercises that I know are so dear to his heart. I can't permit this occasion to pass without expressing my deep appreciation for the pleasant sounding words from the Director, which, if not entirely accurate, are very charitable towards myself. I do, however, want to emphasize to this graduating class, the deep, persistent interest possessed by the Attorney General in the magnificent work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It is somewhat interesting to hear from the mouths of the various speakers, events as they portray them, from which you may draw your own conclusion, and I know those of us who have had the privilege of being associated with him, and working under his direction and guidance all join in voicing our profound admiration and respect and our deep affection for the greatest Attorney General of the United States in modern times, Homer Cummings.

His understanding has been wide and his help to Edgar Hoover and myself in our respective work has been unflinching, and I know too and I want to voice on this occasion as well, the thing which he has related to me on untold numerous occasions, the deep affection and the confidence that he has in the Director of the Bureau, Mr. Hoover.

I notice that every preceding speaker has subconsciously given vent to a hint that the closing remarks should be brief. Not a single one has failed to refer to the subject of eating, and it means, undoubtedly, that the spirit and the health of the graduates have kept pace with physical development. That and voracity go close together.

You graduates will be able to go back to your own communities and tell the real story at first hand of the work of the Bureau of Investigation and of the spirit of the Department of Justice. I take a good deal of pride in the part that I may play in these brief exercises this morning because the activities of the Bureau of Investigation have always been and will always be of keen interest to me as well as dear to my heart.

It has been well said that one of the most important qualities in law enforcement is that of cooperation and coordination. That would be important to exist in any nation in the world, and in this nation of a hundred and thirty millions of people, with a population far flung from one ocean to the other over a half continent, with a nation existing and comprising the descendants of all foreign countries melted into a single individual ultimately whom we call an American, it is of the greatest moment and importance that coordination and cooperation and mutual understanding exist.

Those things are not so important to develop in countries where dictatorships exist. They are of the gravest importance to foster, encourage, and maintain in nations like our own where democracy exists, not alone in lip-service, but in actual practice, as everyone in his right mind and moment knows in this country. We have a dual form of government. We have local communities that have preserved their own sovereignties, and we also have an association of states into the nation that we all know and love as the United States of America. That dual form of government has brought with it many problems throughout all branches of government and life in our country, but in no place did it manifest itself with greater clarity or attract and demand the attention of the American people than in the field of suppression of crime. Now to maintain that democratic form of government in contradistinction to a fascist state or the absolutism of a communistic form of government abroad, requires a great deal of work on the part of the people, and to maintain a fine balance in the matter of law enforcement, in the matter of detection and apprehension and punishment of criminals requires the acme of perfection to do the job acceptably well.

All of those things, you may write any number of laws--and I had perhaps some part to do with the laws expanding to some extent the Federal jurisdiction,--but the vital thing and the important thing has to do at all times with the personnel of those who are directing and enforcing these activities. No matter how accurate and sound the theory, if in this tender business of association of a central agency with representatives in different parts of the country and their relationships with the peace officers, whom I think Mr. Hoover described to be about seventy thousand in number throughout the United States, if that function is not directed with great care and attention, its entire usefulness could be destroyed. Indeed, if it hadn't been for the magnificent heart and soul and mind, as well as the long hours that I know Mr. Hoover spent in this work--if it hadn't been for the fact that you yourself gave an example of prodigious hard work and patience and study to your men, you could not have made this organization what it is today, the envy of all law enforcement agencies of the entire civilized globe.

These are no mere effusive words on a formal occasion. These come from my heart to your heart, and they are the true sentiments of those who have had to do actually with the functioning of the Bureau of Investigation. I have had the privilege of trying a few cases, and if I did have to work hard and travel fast and go far, I got my compensation in watching the efforts of the criminal lawyer, sometimes of the lower class, in attempting to break down a G-Man when he was telling his story on the witness stand. It reminds me of the story I heard of a criminal lawyer who was trying a case, and in his defense he couldn't shake the story of the Government witness, so he tried to break down his character. And he said to him: "Your name is John Jones?"

"Yes."

"You haven't any job?"

"No, sir."

"Well, you are what we call a lazy loafer around here, aren't you?"

"Well, maybe you'd call me that."

"And isn't it a fact that your father before you was a lazy loafer?"

He said, "Well, I don't know sir. You'll have to ask him. He's sitting on the jury."

I have often thought as I have watched these magnificent young men with their fine minds evidencing their excellent training, and I have thought of the slogan of the Director, that the real job of the Bureau of Investigation is to get the facts and not to get the man. I know that you will understand the technique of the Department, and that is important. You will understand perhaps some of the later methods that have been developed in more closely attaching yourself to the details of the investigation. But more important than all, or at least as important, you will bring back to your people the word that the Bureau of Investigation functions in the manner and fashion that it does by reason of the fact that it is truly a merit organization. It is an organization where each man has only to do his job and he has no worry then about keeping it. It is free from every subversive influence and to that extent, perhaps, the members of that organization enjoy a privilege that is not accorded to all local law enforcement agents.

But that message will come back, and these matters of improvement in government do not come about over night. They take work and time for development, and it was with great individual and personal joy that I see the beginning of this small army of some 229 or 239 men already marching back and filtering out into the open spaces again and into the cities and rural sections of our country so that we can get together, shoulder to shoulder. It has been truly said, "When thieves fall out, just men get their due," and the reverse of it is true. If the law enforcement agencies fall out, then the people do not get their just dues and it is the criminals who profit. So that the key word is cooperation, and this particular function leads towards that important co-relation and coordination which is so important to the one hundred thirty millions of people in our country. I look forward to the day when from the germ and the seed of this school will ultimately grow the tree of life of our entire nation in law enforcement with deeply imbedded roots in integrity and honor and efficiency.

I congratulate you upon your graduation. I hope that you and the members of your community will have great fruit from the hard work that I know you have put in, and that all of us will mutually benefit by the short but rich experience that I know that you have had.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is continuing its program of cooperation with foreign law enforcement organizations. At the present time fingerprints are being exchanged with eighty-three foreign countries and territorial possessions. It is interesting to know that twenty-nine identifications were effected in 258 fingerprints which had been submitted to foreign countries. During this same period 369 identifications were effected in a total of 2,042 fingerprint cards received from foreign contributors.

ADDRESS OF DIRECTOR J. EDGAR HOOVER, FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION, UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, AT THE GRADUATION EXERCISES OF THE SEVENTH SESSION, FBI NATIONAL POLICE ACADEMY, APRIL 2, 1938 AT THE GREAT HALL, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE BUILDING.

Mr. Keenan, Mr. Reynolds, Representative Connery, Graduates and Friends: We always look forward to an occasion of this kind, I believe, with some anticipation; yet I also feel a note of sadness. These gentlemen who have been with us for three months, become really a part of our organization, and certainly have stolen a part of our heart and our affections. As they leave today, there naturally must be that note of sadness of their departure and of their separation from daily contact with us. But I think it is gratifying for you gentlemen to realize the fact that in going back to your home communities today, while the physical contact with us will be terminated, there has been that bond of friendship and comradeship which will endure through the years, and which I hope will not only lend support to you, but I know that it will lend support to those of us in the FBI and in the field of Federal law enforcement.

You have been here for some months applying yourselves to the study of the fundamentals of instructions in law enforcement work. They have not been easy months; they have been hard months and you have sacrificed many things. As we bring to a termination the Seventh Session of our National Police Academy, we think that you can go back feeling proud of the fact that you are now one of that group of two hundred twenty-three graduates who have been graduated since 1935 as pioneers in the field of scientific law enforcement and training. With graduation of this class, there will be represented throughout this country, in advanced scientific training 70,000 police officers, representing a total population of our citizens of a little over eighty-two million persons, and that has been accomplished in a little less than three years. That carries with it a tremendous responsibility because the purpose of our National Police Academy was not the intention of training a man to be a police officer. All of you gentlemen graduating here this morning, came here as officers of your departments. Many of you had served some years and some of you had attained the highest rank in your organizations. But you go back today carrying with you the elementary foundation for the instruction and training of the men in your departments and that primarily was the purpose for which the National Police Academy of the FBI was inaugurated; to train men to go back and to instruct officers in their local communities in scientific law enforcement and crime detection.

The reason for that, I think, is very evident. The Attorney General, in inaugurating the National Police Academy in 1935, had very definitely in mind that the United States was not a place for a national police organization. There have been many individuals, many groups, which have advocated the establishment of a national police. Those of us in the United States Department of Justice, have always vigorously opposed such a program because we have recognized and realized that the matter of law enforcement was a purely local problem in many respects, and that the Federal Government could only aid and assist and coordinate in general matters and in those crimes which are national in scope, and it was with that idea in mind that we decided to lend aid and to lend assistance to the local authorities of the country who were anxious and desirous of trying to improve their activities in the field of scientific crime detection. And so, the National Police Academy was called into being in July of 1935. It has been built upon that fundamental principle of cooperation, and that is the best technique that can apply in any effort, certainly in the field of law enforcement. The Federal Bureau of Investigation had proven through its Identification Division, now totaling eight and a half million fingerprints, that cooperation could be secured and maintained, and then again came the crime laboratory and the crime statistics, and the fourth great project, the establishment of the National Police Academy, all of them predicated upon that basic principle of cooperation; a thing upon which only a man can advance by giving all that is in his heart and soul to cooperate with the other fellow, and that has been the keynote of the program of the United States Department of Justice in its efforts to aid local law enforcement agencies. Therefore, you gentlemen can feel very proud that you were selected by your communities to be among the first to act as pioneers in that new field, and carrying back with you that great responsibility which is so necessary for you to make a success in the work which you are about to enter on in those communities.

Now I do want to say a few words relative to the problems and the difficulties--some of the things that you are going to face when you return to take up this work. The qualities of an investigator or law enforcement officer seem to me to be very simple and very few. They are observation, common sense, and hard work. There is no "Sherlock Holmes" to law enforcement work. There is no false whiskers to the accomplishment of success in the field of law enforcement, and you gentlemen, as you go back to your respective communities, know that you carry back with you the basic foundational training to enable you to instruct in the new field now of police training, emphasizing the effect of brain more than brawn in the carrying forth of your work.

We want to be practical in carrying on this program. You want to be practical when you initiate your local training schools. We have tried to organize the training school of this Bureau, which you have just attended, upon practical lines, bringing before you not theorists, not men steeped solely in academic training, but men who have been able to combine both--the academic training with practical experience. Keep your own training courses free from those academic pitfalls and from those academic chisellers who too often try to attach themselves as barnacles to any popular movement. You have fought along the battle-front of law enforcement and you know what it means to face a gun and to take a dangerous criminal. Combine that experience with the academic training that you have now received, with the study that you must carry forth in all the years to come, and you will succeed in your local projects.

You are in a new profession. I have said that you are pioneers. That is actually true. You are pioneers, carrying forth new ideas and new standards, and those ideas and standards should be upon a very high plane.

The unethical tactics that so often attach themselves to law enforcement work should be at once discounted and discouraged by you gentlemen who are now going back to initiate training programs. I think it is basically the theory, and certainly the idea of the Sherlock Holmes type of detective, that there are three things that an investigator must always do; wear a disguise, tap a telephone, and shadow somebody; and yet, we know in the field of law enforcement that those three things are seldom if ever resorted to. It requires brains, tenacity of purpose, application, and plan. It is not something that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle has written into Sherlock Holmes' life that is used by the intelligent and progressive mind in law enforcement today.

Take up your leadership in the field of crime prevention. That is a most important field and a most important element in enabling those of us in law enforcement to make a success of our work. The youth of the country today is going to be that voting generation of tomorrow, and when we stop to consider the fact that over eighteen percent of all the crime committed in the United States today is committed by persons under twenty-one years of age, we can truly see what a real problem we have in the youth situation of today. And therefore, I appeal to the officers of law enforcement to take leadership in crime prevention; to be a friend to the youth; to realize the fact that that boy of today is committing thirteen percent of all the murders committed in this country annually; that he is committing fifty-one percent of the auto thefts each year; that he is committing twenty-four percent of the rapes that occur every year in the United States. Those are staggering facts. They are not theories. They are the things that you and I face in our everyday problem of dealing with law enforcement; and so I say that the officers of law enforcement should today take leadership in initiating movements of crime prevention and keep them from being submerged again by the chiselers and the theorists who have learned their facts of life sometimes from behind mahogany desks in academic halls. The boy of today is a virile boy and he needs virile leadership, and you gentlemen have the opportunity of giving that to him and making him your friend, becoming his hero so that he may be a better citizen tomorrow.

Now I do want to touch upon some of the obstacles that you are going to face, because I think it is best for a man to be prepared for the brickbats rather than for the bouquets that may come to him. Success always brings brickbats from jealous individuals. Green eyes often create bitter tastes, and as you go back and take up your work, there are going to be officers in your department, there are going to be citizens in your city who will resent that leadership which you are going to start; and as success comes to you, you are going to be the victim of those little minds and little men. But again, I think if a man realizes that he is doing the right thing and that he is carrying forth a real crusade, he is going to win out, because the decent people of this country, while slow sometimes to express their approbation and support, are fundamentally sound, and you can count upon the fact that the great mass of American people believe in the things which you are going to do in bettering local conditions and making the American family at home safe for the children as well as for the adults. It will require you to develop some intestinal fortitude because the venal politician is going to make efforts to interfere with what you are going to try to do. He lives upon graft and corruption and inefficiency, and it will be your job to fight that influence--and it is a real fight. Some of you gentlemen have already passed through experiences of that before you came here, and others will experience it when you return. The odds are always in favor of the criminal. When we stop to consider that fifty-five percent of all the persons arrested in this country each year have previous police records, and twenty-nine percent of those records have been previously convicted, we can certainly realize the tremendous volume of repeaters that occurs in crime today; and when we stop to consider that of all the 3,731 persons convicted of homicide last year, only 149 were given the death penalty and were executed. I cite those figures to prove to you that your job is going to be something more than that which is glamorous. You are going to have to give everything that is in you to make headway and to make success in the projects that you want to carry forth.

And there is another obstacle that you will face, and that is the matter of parole. You will be misrepresented, as I have been misrepresented on many occasions, as being an opponent to parole, as belonging to the machine gun school of criminology, and a lot of other choice phrases and epithets will be hurled at you by the ostrich-like attitude of some of these fiddle-faced reformers. It is your place and your duty to speak on parole. You will be told, as I have been told, that it is not your place and not your function to say what you think about the parole system in this country. I think that a man who goes out and faces a dangerous criminal and effects that criminal's apprehension; that a man who faces the machine gun fire of the underworld, or the man who risks his life day in and day out under many handicaps to carry forth efficient law enforcement, is far better qualified to speak upon the subject of parole than these educational royalists who talk much, say little, and do less.

The ultimate goal of criminal justice in this country, I think, was in the minds of our forefathers predicated upon the fundamental principles of the protection of society; and so far as I am concerned, I think that the life of a little child to be protected from the hands of some vile kidnaper is far more important than the wishy-washy moo-cowish efforts of sentimentalists to save some misguided, deficient, gland-infected boy and make him into a better citizen. But you are going to be faced with that situation, and you should speak about the principles and what the parole situation of law enforcement is. We believe in parole. We believe that it is an integral part of the system of penology in this country, but we also believe that men should not be paroled two, three, four, five, eight, and ten times, and that sex criminals should not be turned loose to again carry on their depredations against the youth of this country two, three, and four and five times. Those are not isolated instances. They all too commonly occur in every community of this country today.

As you have occasion to meet with your citizens in your local communities, resist the effort to gag you from speaking your mind upon those things about which you know more than some individual who has acquired his knowledge of such activities in a swivel chair behind some mahogany desk in an academic stratosphere.

Now in closing, I do want to say to you gentlemen, that you go back to your communities with the one hundred percent support of every facility and every energy that we can give you in enabling you to make a success in the carrying forth of your work. The Federal Bureau of Investigation, itself personally, and all of its facilities, are available to you. We want to help you, as we want you to help us. You are now a part of a great organization, embarked upon reaching the goal of making this country a safer place in which to live, and as I close my remarks, I want to give to you the motto which is the motto of the FBI--Fidelity, Bravery, and Integrity. Those three qualities will enable a man to succeed in any profession and we know that it will enable him to succeed in law enforcement. I give that to you, knowing that you will not let us down nor the people to whom you are sworn to be a humble servant. I thank you.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

AMPUTATIONS AND BANDAGED FINGERS.

Instances have been noted recently in the examination of fingerprints being received currently in the Bureau's Identification Division wherein the officials forwarding the prints have failed to indicate the fact of amputated fingers. Appropriate space has, of course, been provided for these entries on the fingerprint cards furnished by the Bureau to interested law enforcement officials. The earnest cooperation of all contributing agencies is invited in this matter to the end that when amputations exist they may be entered properly on fingerprint forms before they are mailed to the Bureau. It is, of course, well understood that where amputations are not indicated through some oversight, the searching processes are prolonged and furthermore it is quite possible that a fingerprint may be placed in an incorrect classification.

In the case of a bandaged finger or in a paralysis condition, that fact should be noted on the card. It should be indicated further whether the paralysis or similar condition is believed to be temporary or permanent. Where a finger is bandaged and the circumstances warrant, it is sometimes possible for the operative taking the impressions to observe the type of impression and the sub-classification therefor. In these instances, if such information could be entered in the proper space on the fingerprint card, such as ulnar loop, 12 counts, the Bureau will accept that classification as indicative of the type of print and the number of counts appearing on the impression cited.

It is believed that compliance with the foregoing suggestions will insure the proper handling of records of the type described.

FEDERAL EXTORTION STATUTE

On July 8, 1932, there was approved an Act of Congress to punish the sending through the mails of certain threatening communications, including demands for ransom or reward. The Act, which is covered by Section 338a, Title 18, United States Code, in part, reads as follows:

"Whoever, with intent to extort from any person any money or other thing of value, shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited in any post-office or station thereof, or in any authorized depository for mail matter, to be sent or delivered by the post-office establishment of the United States, any written or printed letter or other communication with or without a name or designating mark subscribed thereto, addressed to any other person, and containing any threat (1) to injure the person, property, or reputation of the addressee or of another, or the reputation of a deceased person, or (2) to kidnap any person, or (3) to accuse the addressee or any other person of a crime, or containing any demand or request for ransom or reward for the release of any kidnaped person, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both."

The essential elements of this Act, then require that a letter or other communication must be deposited in the United States mails, containing a demand for something of value, either money or any other article having some value. In extortion, like other crimes, there must be the element of intent--the intent to extort from any persons any money or other thing of value. This intent to extort will usually be evident from the contents of the letter and is considerably strengthened when the extortionist appears at or in the vicinity of the pay-off scene. In addition to the use of the mails coupled with the intent to extort, the extortion letter or communication must contain any one of the following elements:

- (1) A threat to injure the person, property or reputation of the addressee or of another or the reputation of a deceased person, or
- (2) A threat to kidnap any person, or
- (3) A threat to accuse the addressee or any person of a crime, or
- (4) Any demand or request for ransom or reward for the release of any kidnaped person.

Certain phases of the Extortion Statute come within the investigative jurisdiction of the Post Office Department, and relate to blackmail cases in general, such as threats to injure the reputation of the addressee or of another, or the reputation of a deceased person, or those cases involving threats to accuse the addressee or any other person of a crime. To illustrate the above, assume that a letter has been transmitted through the mails to Mrs. John Jones, demanding $1,000.00 under threat of revealing to the citizens of a certain town the relations which existed between Mr. Jones and another woman prior to his death. As another example, assume that a letter has been sent through the mails to Dr. Smith, in which the writer thereof threatens to disclose to the community in which Dr. Smith resides, that he had performed illegal abortions over a period of years, unless he pays the writer of the letter $500.00. The above hypothetical cases are commonly referred to as blackmail and such cases are investigated by the Post Office inspectors. In these illustrations, it will be observed that there is no threat to injure the person or property of the addressee. On the other hand, where the extortion communication contains threats of physical violence to the person or property of the addressee or of another, the matter is one for the investigative attention of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The FBI has exclusive investigative jurisdiction over the following types of cases where an effort has been made to extort money or other thing of value:

- (1) Mailing of threats to injure the person or property of any person.
- (2) Mailing of threats to kidnap any person.
- (3) Mailing of any demand or request for ransom or reward for the release of any kidnaped person.

The following supposititious cases are set out to illustrate these three types of violations of the Extortion Statute:

- (1) A letter is mailed in Chicago, Illinois, addressed to Howard Brooks, a Chicago banker, in which there is contained a demand for $10,000.00 under threat of killing Mr. Brooks if he should fail to deposit the demanded sum of money at a specified place. Likewise, a violation would exist if the extortionist had informed Mr. Brooks in this supposititious letter that failure to pay the sum of $10,000.00 would result in injury or death to his son or other member of his family. In addition in many cases coming to the attention of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the extortionist has attempted to extort money from his intended victim by inserting in the extortion letters threats to bomb or otherwise damage or destroy a victim's home, place of business or other property unless certain demands, ordinarily demands for money, were complied with.
- (2) A letter is deposited in the United States mails, addressed to John Jones, of New York City, in which the writer thereof demands the sum of $5,000.00 and threatens to kidnap the young son of John Jones for failure to pay this sum of money.
- (3) The son of John Jones was actually kidnaped following which a letter is sent through the United States mails to the family of the kidnaped person, demanding $50,000.00 for his release.

In illustrations 1, 2, and 3 there has been a violation of that part of the Extortion Statute coming within the exclusive investigative jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

There was approved on May 18, 1934, by the President an Act of Congress applying the powers of the Federal Government under the commerce clause of the Constitution to extortion by means of telephone, telegraph, radio, oral message, or otherwise. This Act is covered by Section 408d, Title 18, United States Code and reads, in part, as follows:

"Whoever, with intent to extort from any person, firm, association, or corporation any money or other thing of value, shall transmit in interstate commerce, by any means whatsoever, any threat (1) to injure the person, property, or reputation of any person, or the reputation of a deceased person, or (2) to kidnap any person, or (3) to accuse any person of a crime, or (4) containing any demand or request for a ransom or reward for the release of any kidnaped person shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than twenty years, or both."

To constitute an offense under this Act, there must be the intent to extort money or other thing of value, coupled with the transmission of a message in interstate commerce by any means whatsoever and, in addition, the interstate message must contain any one of the following enumerated elements:

- (1) A threat to injure the person, property or reputation of any person or the reputation of a deceased person, or
- (2) A threat to kidnap any person, or
- (3) A threat to accuse any person of a crime, or
- (4) Any demand or request for a ransom or reward for the release of any kidnaped person.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has exclusive jurisdiction to investigate all violations pertaining to the interstate transmittal of extortion communications which contain an intent to extort money or other thing of value under threats of kidnaping, personal injury, property damage, or blackmail. It will be recalled that where the United States mails are used to perpetrate blackmail schemes, the matter falls within the investigative jurisdiction of the Post Office Department. If the mails are not used for the purpose of blackmailing a person, but the communication is sent in interstate commerce, investigative jurisdiction is under the Federal Bureau of Investigation. If some person sends a telegram from Miami, Florida, to an intended victim in Atlanta, Georgia, demanding a certain sum of money under threat of exposing illegal practices or illicit relations on the part of the victim, purely a blackmail matter, investigation would be made by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. In the example, it will be observed that the mail was not used but that the message was transmitted in interstate commerce by telegram.

Additional instances of violations under this Section (Section 408d, Title 18, United States Code) are pointed out below by means of hypothetical cases:

James Buck received an anonymous telephone call from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at his residence in Newark, New Jersey, instructing him to place $2,000.00 in old bills at a designated spot in Newark, New Jersey, by a certain date, under threat of bombing his home and place of business if he failed to do so. As the message contained the necessary elements of extortion and was transmitted in interstate commerce from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to Newark, New Jersey, a violation of this Act had been committed.

As a further example, assume that a telegram had been sent from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to James Buck in Newark, New Jersey, demanding that the sum of $2,000.00 be sent to some fictitious person in Philadelphia, under threat of kidnaping some member of the Buck family. Again we have the elements of extortion present and also the interstate angle, thus the case falls within the Extortion Statute covered by Section 408d, Title 18, United States Code.

There is one other statute which has been used by the Government in prosecuting extortionists when the efforts used to extort did not constitute a violation of either Section 338a or Section 408d, Title 18, United States Code. The statute in question is covered by Section 250, Title 18, United States Code, which reads as follows:

"Whoever shall, under a threat of informing, or as a consideration for not informing, against any violation of any law of the United States, demand or receive any money or other valuable thing, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

The hypothetical case mentioned below is set out to illustrate the applicability of this Section.

Nick Davis, a racketeer, approached a physician in Baltimore, Maryland, stating that he had information and records to show the physician had been violating the Federal Income Tax Law. Davis threatened to report the physician to the authorities of the Internal Revenue Bureau unless the physician agreed to pay Davis the sum of $500.00. In this instance, it will be observed that there has not been a use of the mails nor were the demand and threat transmitted in interstate commerce. However, there was a threat to report this physician for an alleged violation of a Federal law. The violation is complete, even though the physician did not pay the money to Nick Davis, and it would not be necessary to allege in the indictment charging Davis with violation of this statute that the intended victim had actually violated any Federal law.

A great majority of extortion cases coming to the attention of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are those cases in which the United States mails have been used in an effort to extort. Where such is the case, the extortion letter and envelope should be immediately obtained from the victim and encased, preferably, in a cellophane envelope to prevent eradication of any latent fingerprints which may appear on the letter. In many instances a lone latent fingerprint developed on an extortion letter has been the means of solving the case. The Technical Laboratory of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is well equipped to analyze extortion letters and to process them for latent fingerprints by chemical treatment, in view of which all extortion letters, regardless of whether the extortion case originates in Los Angeles, California, or Baltimore, Maryland, are immediately forwarded to the Technical Laboratory in Washington, D. C., for appropriate examination by Laboratory technicians.

Whenever there is any doubt as to whether an extortion letter constitutes a violation of the Federal Extortion Statutes, the nearest Field Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation should be immediately notified to determine the applicability of the Federal Statutes to the particular communication.*

ADVANCED AGE PROVES TO BE NO BARRIER TO FINGERPRINT IDENTIFICATION

The Police Department at Fort Worth, Texas, on January 22, 1936, arrested on a charge of investigation an Indian by the name of Fred Harras. The age indicated on the fingerprint card is given as 101 years. At the time this card was received, it was searched through the files of the Identification Division. However, no previous record was found.

It is of interest to note that on January 13, 1938, Fred Harris was committed to the County Jail at Fort Worth, Texas by the Sheriff's Office on a charge of being drunk. The fingerprint card submitted for this arrest indicated that Harris was 102 years old, having been born May 30, 1835. Upon search of this fingerprint card through the files of the Identification Division, it was determined to be identical with the fingerprint card of Fred Harras which had been received from the police at Fort Worth on January 27, 1936.

It is interesting to note that fingerprint identification is effective even though individuals be of advanced age.

*All names related in hypothetical cases are fictitious and do not refer to any persons.

MATTSON KIDNAPING CASE

Shortly after 9:00 P. M., on Sunday, December 27, 1936, Charles Fletcher Mattson, the ten-year-old son of Dr. W. W. Mattson of Tacoma, Washington, was kidnaped from his home at 46th and North Verde Streets, Tacoma, Washington. The masked kidnaper disappeared with his victim, leaving behind a note demanding the payment of $28,000.00 in ransom.

Law enforcement officers stood aside in order that the family might do anything desired in negotiating for the payment of the ransom. The reward was never paid and the body of the victim was found about six miles south of Everett, Washington, on Monday morning, January 11, 1937.

While the above facts do not indicate that the victim was transported in interstate commerce, yet after being held for seven days, the Federal kidnaping statute raises a presumption of interstate transportation, whereby the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, is given investigative jurisdiction.

The horror of this crime, breaking the eighteen months' freedom which the United States had enjoyed from major kidnapings since June 1, 1935 when George Weyerhaeuser of Tacoma, Washington, was returned to his parents unharmed and for which all three perpetrators of that crime were apprehended and convicted, aroused the entire nation.

Every resource of the Federal Bureau of Investigation was immediately put into action towards the solution of this kidnaping, and from the day the boy's body was found until the present time, there has been no letup on concentrated effort and determination that the Mattson kidnaper be apprehended and brought to justice.

In succeeding issues of this publication, space will be devoted to informative aspects of this crime which will serve to better acquaint all law enforcement agencies with the facts of the kidnaping and the investigation being performed. It is believed that until it is solved, the Mattson case will remain one of the cases of paramount importance in every police department in the United States because of the effect its solution would have towards curbing the crime of kidnaping in America. It is accordingly hoped that through the information contained in the subsequent issues of this Bulletin, the facts of the crime may be refreshed and the lead suggested which will result in its solution.

THE TRANSIENT CRIMINAL AND THE REPEATER

The law enforcement profession has continually been confronted with the increasingly difficult problem of coping with the transient criminal and the recidivist or criminal repeater. The extent of the problem of the transient criminal is indicated by a tabulation recently prepared by the Federal Bureau of Investigation which showed that 49.4 per cent of the persons arrested and fingerprinted in the United States during 1937 were arrested outside of the state in which they were born.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation examined 520,153 fingerprint records representing arrests for violations of state laws during the year 1937. Of this number there were 478,640 records which contained information concerning the nativity of the persons arrested and it was found that 236,266 of these individuals (49.4 per cent) were arrested in jurisdictions other than that of their native state. In contrast with the 49.4 percentage of predatory nomads, the 1930 decennial census reveals that only 23.4 per cent of the native population of the United States reside in a state different from the state of nativity.

Making due allowance for a normal amount of interstate movement of population, the fact still remains that at least one-fourth of the persons arrested and fingerprinted throughout the United States are transients in the sense that they have moved from one state to another. Obviously, the percentages noted indicate only partially the true extent of the problem of the transient criminal due to the fact that many criminals move from one city to another without crossing state lines. To attain maximum efficiency not only in controlling crime but in apprehending criminals after crimes have been committed it is important for police agencies to know the whereabouts of those who are known to have previously committed offenses against society. The importance of this phase of the problem of law enforcement is indicated by the fact that more than 55 per cent of the persons represented by current fingerprint cards received in the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation are found to have previous fingerprint records on file.

The recidivist or repeater has always caused the police officials throughout the entire nation a great deal of anxiety. From the study of the criminal histories contained in the files of the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation several factors can be readily determined.

It was noted that 149,091 of the persons arrested and fingerprinted last year had been previously convicted for the commission of 356,675 criminal violations, 160,253 of which were convictions of major crimes and 196,422 were convictions of less serious violations. These figures place further emphasis upon the well-known fact that efforts of police organizations must be constantly directed toward the reappréhension of individuals who have at some former time unsuccessfully come into conflict with a law enforcement agency.

The proportion of previous convictions was generally greater among those arrested for offenses against property than among individuals charged with offenses against the person. In this connection it is interesting to note that more than one out of four of the persons arrested and fingerprinted during 1937 had prior to that time been convicted of some type of violation, but only 14 per cent of those charged with murder or manslaughter and 24 per cent of those charged with assault had records showing previous convictions. This perhaps is partially explainable on the theory that many murders and less serious attacks on the person are not premeditated and are committed in the heat of passion, whereas offenses against property are more or less carefully planned and are frequently the product of the professional criminal.

In breaking down the criminal histories of the 149,091 persons with previous convictions on their records it was ascertained that more than 50 per cent have been convicted of serious offenses against the person or against property. They included 1,234 convicted murderers, 5,600 robbers, 7,336 convicted of assault, 16,228 burglars, 34,930 thieves, (including persons convicted of similar violations), 180 arsonists, 4,410 forgers and counterfeiters, 1,067 rapists, 2,684 violators of the narcotic drug laws, 1,683 potential killers who had been convicted of unlawful carrying of deadly weapons, and 3,258 convicted of driving while intoxicated. This makes a total of 78,610 individuals whose records showed previous convictions for major violations who were again arrested during 1937, the majority of them being charged with violations equally vicious in character.

During 1937 there were 29 persons arrested for criminal homicides who had previously been convicted of murder or manslaughter in some degree. The tendency of criminals to repeat the same type of crime is further indicated by the fact that 632 persons charged with robbery in 1937 had been previously convicted of the same type of offense, and 2,922 persons arrested in 1937 for burglary had been previously convicted of burglary.

THE FBI TECHNICAL LABORATORY

During the month of March, 1938, a total of 725 examinations was made in the Technical Laboratory of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, assistance being rendered to government agencies other than the Bureau in 30 instances, and to state and municipal law enforcement agencies in 185 cases. It is noted that during the month covered by this report there were received more cases from law enforcement agencies other than the Bureau than have been received in any one month heretofore. During the same period last year there were eleven examinations made at the request of other government bureaus and 121 were conducted for state and municipal authorities.

A QUESTIONABLE PATTERN

The finger impression reproduced below is of a very distinctive type.

At first glance, this impression would seem to be a whorl. However, a whorl pattern, by definition, must have a minimum of two deltas with ridges recurving at approximately right angles past both. The accompanying fingerprint has all of the necessary whorl characteristics with the exception of one delta (the left). The formation at "A" is caused by the divergence of the type lines but the obstruction in front of that point is the recurving ridge in the core of the pattern. At "B", however, there is a delta past which there are two ridges, one recurving and the other tending to do so. Therefore, in the Bureau's Identification Division, this fingerprint is classified as a two-count loop, radial if in the right hand, and ulnar if in the left.

REVIEW
YOUTH IN THE TOILS

by
Leonard V. Harrison and Pryor McNeill Grant

Mr. Harrison and Mr. Grant in the volume, "Youth in the Toils," have recognized the increasingly serious problem presented by homeless boys and the lack of specialized services for meeting their needs. The authors have attempted to draw a picture of youth in the act of violating the law, follow him in his arrest, through imprisonment, trial, and finally the serving of the penalty imposed.

The aims of criminal justice are reformation. Society as a whole gains no benefit from inflicting punishment as a matter of retribution, even though a few individuals may enjoy a satisfaction in knowing that the culprit will be made to suffer in return for suffering inflicted. The severe punishment of some offenders is not a decisive factor of deterrence to others, rather it is their fear of being caught and controlled for an unspecified period of time. The criminal law, legal procedure and court organization, insofar as these relate to offending minors, should be revised and adapted primarily to the end of stopping a potential career of crime by rehabilitation.

After ten centuries of contending with criminals, we find that there is no more sensible way of stopping a youthful criminal career than to follow this ancient practice of first undertaking to rehabilitate the offender by means of a mild form of compulsion which seeks to enlist his willing cooperation. Failing in that endeavor, it obviously becomes necessary for society to coerce the individual.

In the administration of criminal justice today there arise situations which were not contemplated when our system was developing. An example of that is the case of four boys, one an Italian, one Irish, one Scotch, and the fourth English. One of the boys stole some money from his employer, all the boys were under twenty, purchased a seventy-five dollar automobile, and set out to see the world. But night had a disturbing effect. The boys gave up their plans, and shortly were overtaken. The $500.00 had been stolen--and they were arrested. Their bonds were fixed and they awaited trial in the usual manner.

Delinquency may be seen as an opportunity for society to deal constructively with some minor offenders. At present, he frequently goes unperceived and misinterpreted. To do this properly, there is required not only a shift in the philosophy of law but also men of imagination and purpose capable of dealing with such situations.

In the case of the two boys who broke into a store and were successful in evading punishment, they emerged from their experience as "big shots" twisted and warped in their estimate of social values, the purveyors of false ideals to other boys. If they had been charged with delinquency and efforts had been made to give them needed guidance, their burglarizing exploit might have been turned to good account. But the penal code defined their offense as a felony which called for too much punishment under the circumstances. Accordingly they were turned loose, victors in their first major contact with the criminal law. The punitive code had been administered with mercy, and the boys unquestionably made worse by it, as one too readily described the procedure as "baloney."

So the story continues, there are others who violate the provisions of our laws and suffer the consequences. There is the arrest, the first hours in prison, the examination, the line-up, arraignment before a magistrate, and detention.

Upon arrival at the jail, the youthful prisoner is guided by other prisoners. Here, there is no program of education, recreation, or social rehabilitation, because, theoretically, persons in it are there only for short periods. The newcomers are taken to the second floor, handcuffs removed, and their pedigrees taken. They are then assigned their cells, where the prisoner settles with his blankets, two tin bowls, cup and spoon. Meals are served quite unceremoniously, and what is left is generally consumed by the vermin. Free periods are twice a day, and while lifeless, are welcomed. Visitors are limited, and are conducted amid shouting and bedlam without satisfaction to the visitor or prisoner.

This is a poor beginning for the reform process; it is a senseless prelude to probation; and it is a barbarous treatment of the considerable number of persons who are eventually found to be innocent. Instead of subjecting all offenders to the present indignities connected with detention, on the ground that some may be found deserving of imprisonment, all should be protected against practices that are outrageously unfair to the innocent and detrimental to the guilty whom the criminal justice system will later seek to reform. By shielding all against the hardening effects of detention prior to final adjudication, society would forfeit no opportunity later to coerce those who can be managed in no other way; it would gain much in smoothing the way for rehabilitation of others, and it would obviate the cruel injustice which befalls the innocent.

There are two kinds of training in a penal reformatory, namely, that intended by the institution's officials and that gained from inmates in the yard and cell block. Even though education takes hold, to some extent, so that the mind is improved and the hands given skill, it is nevertheless imparted in an atmosphere heavily charged with resentment and unhappiness and accompanied by deteriorating effects on character. The work habits established at reformatories are, in the mind of the youth, habits associated with a temporary, abnormal, and despised existence. Life, work, and play, the inmate hopes, will be vastly different when he is released; he will certainly wish to make his life of freedom differ as much as possible from his life of punishment. Although it is extremely difficult for the state to succeed in education which is viewed as one of the forms of punishment, it is easy for the released prisoner to turn his back upon the whole training experience.

It is one of the anomalies of the legal system that genuine help --parole--begins at this point, which means almost at the end of the road. All of the devastating experiences of arrest, detention, trial, sentencing, incarceration have been gone through; months or years of impressionable possibilities have been filled with bars, chains, and unremitting distrust, and spirit-breaking repression; the severance of family and social ties has forced retreat into a welter of false loyalties. After all this, a service is made possible that is primarily in terms of helping. For the first time the individual is individualized, is dealt with on a man-to-man basis, and given the sense that someone is sharing the load with him and not making him bear it alone.

In dealing with juveniles, every youthful offender should come up for a searching examination and test of his capacity for rehabilitation before selection is made from those who can be managed only by segregation. In order to accomplish this there should be a special delinquency code for minors between 16 and 21 years of age, known as the Delinquent Minor Court, to be so organized as to provide for the exercise of two separate functions, (1) a judicial function of determining guilt or innocence of offenses charged and, (2) a dispositional function of determining the form of treatment to be imposed upon those found guilty. The disposition of offenders should be based on a diagnostic examination by experts comprising a disposition board, and the delinquent be under the control of this board until formally discharged from its supervision, or until an order for indefinite segregation is made by it following a decision that rehabilitation is unattainable.

The authors have summed up that the principle implied in these suggestions is one of a variety of treatment facilities to meet the needs and conditions of the variety of young persons, discovered by their acted announcement of unadjustment and failure at being in need of help. In place of rigid inflexibility on the part of society, put flexibility; in place of anger and primitive impulse at retaliation, put understanding and patience; in place of a desire to punish, put a will to help. Society can well afford, by reason of its might and age, to do all this. It has nothing to lose, and one generation of youth really served would go a long way in solving the crime problem. Responsibility for crime is now placed fully and solely upon the ill-equipped youths brought up under the most adverse conditions, and adjudged "criminals."

With the apprehension of Harold Zack Thompson by Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation it becomes of interest to note statistics relative to the case as reflected by examinations performed in the Technical Laboratory. One hundred ninety-one checks have been identified as having been passed by the subject by means of impersonation, forgery, or false pretenses. Operations extended from the Gulf States to the Pacific Northwest and to New England, including twenty-six states and the District of Columbia. The identified checks amounted to a total of $7,117.57, the average approximating $37.26. The largest amount negotiated by one check was for $475.00, the smallest for $12.00. The name card for Harold Zack Thompson reflects that he has used forty-four aliases.

MURDER ON GOVERNMENT RESERVATION;
ROY WEATHERS, with aliases; VIRGIE WEATHERS, with aliases;
JAMES C. REVELS, VICTIM.

On August 16, 1937, the mutilated body of James C. Revels was found in the Chickamauga - Chattanooga National Military Park in Catooga County, Georgia, and an investigation was immediately instituted by Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Department of Justice, to determine whether Revels had been murdered on the Government Reservation. Special Agents, assisted by soldiers of the United States Army, located an area in the park where blood spots and other evidence were found, indicating that Revels had probably been murdered at this point which was within the Reservation.

Investigation revealed that Revels left his home in Chattanooga, Tennessee, driving an Oldsmobile Roadster on the morning of August 15, 1937, and was last seen alive in Lytle, Georgia, that evening. Early the following morning his automobile, destroyed by fire, was found in Chattanooga, Tennessee. On the day Revels' body was recovered, Roy Weathers and his wife, Virgie, were picked up in Chattanooga, Tennessee by officers of the Chattanooga Police Department. Roy and Virgie Weathers were questioned at intervals for several days by Special Agents and local officers and on August 21, 1937 confessed that they had murdered Revels and thereafter had driven his automobile to a point in Chattanooga, Tennessee, and set it afire. While no true motive for the murder was ever revealed, Roy and Virgie Weathers testified the reason for the murder was because of immoral relations between the victim and the subject, Virgie Weathers. The confession was subsequently repudiated in part by the defendant, Virgie Weathers, and it became desirable to complete the investigation in every detail and prepare all the laboratory and other scientific examinations so that the Government would be in a position to present its entire case in full in the prosecution of the defendant.

In the subsequent investigation conducted by Special Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, soil specimens were obtained from various points within the Chickamauga-Chattanooga National Military Park and transmitted to the Bureau's Technical Laboratory in Washington for examination with a view to determining if the specimens contained evidence of human blood. The results confirmed the fact that the victim had been struck over the head and on falling to the ground had left these bloody deposits. The clothing of the defendants in the case, together with a pocket knife in their possession, was submitted to Washington for examination as to blood stains. There was also transmitted an automobile crank which had been removed from the partially burned automobile and which had been subjected to considerable fire. Of six specimens of soil so submitted, five were found to contain blood of human origin. It was possible to establish traces of blood on several of the articles of wearing apparel and in spite of the fact that the automobile crank had been subject to fire and heat, small stains were nevertheless detected adhering thereto. These minute stains responded to preliminary tests indicating that they were possibly blood. Due to the insufficient quantity thereof, however, it was not possible to run confirmatory tests. All of these findings tended to verify the statements made by the defendants, which included the fact that the automobile hand crank had been used as a weapon with which the victim was struck on the head and the pocket knife had been used to administer the coup de grace. This knife was found to fit tears through a portion of the overalls worn by the victim, through which he was wounded.

Roy and Virgie Weathers were indicted by a Federal Grand Jury at Rome, Georgia on November 16, 1937 for the murder. They were tried in the United States District Court at Rome beginning December 8, 1937. The laboratory technician of the Federal Bureau of Investigation became an important witness in furnishing the evidence and testimony concerning the blood stained soil, the clothing, and the automobile crank. Subsequently the jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree without capital punishment and the defendants were sentenced to life imprisonment.

ANNOUNCEMENT CONCERNING THE CONDUCT OF DOCUMENT EXAMINATIONS

Due to the unusually large amount of material in the form of questioned documents presently pending examination in the FBI's Technical Laboratory, it becomes necessary for the present to discontinue making such examinations for law enforcement agencies in cases which are not under the primary investigative jurisdiction of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The limited size of the Bureau's present staff of technicians precludes handling this additional work and due to the inavailability of appropriations it is not possible at this time to add to this staff sufficiently to handle these cases.

The Bureau's Technical Laboratory is in a position to continue making its staff and facilities available to law enforcement agencies generally in all types of examinations other than that of questioned documents. As heretofore, it is necessary that the evidence be transmitted to Washington for examination and that it be evidence obtained by the law enforcement agency in connection with the investigation of a crime in which prosecution is contemplated and which is within the investigative jurisdiction of the agency submitting the same. These other types of examinations are generally in the field of firearms identification, biochemistry, microscopy, and spectrography, and they include the examination of such substances as fired bullets and cartridge cases, blood stains, fibers and miscellaneous debris.

CIVIL FINGERPRINTS IDENTIFY UNKNOWN DECEASED

Realization of the safety factor in personal identification by use of fingerprinting has attached a new significance to this positive means of recording personal identity. That the reputable citizens throughout the country are giving careful consideration to civil fingerprint identification is evidenced by the continued growth of the Civil Identification Section of the Identification Division of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

From its humble inception in 1933, the Civil Identification Section has grown in size until it contains at this time almost 700,000 fingerprint cards of honest citizens who have become cognizant of the many uses and advantages that civil identification offers. To them, there need be no fear of loss of identity through accidental death or misfortune. They are safe from the potter's field and should they fall victims of amnesia, the loss of their memories will not prevent their true identity from becoming known. The patent advantage of civil identification is best exemplified by a recent inquiry received in the Federal Bureau of Investigation regarding an unknown deceased person. On April 18, 1938, a fingerprint card was received in the Identification Division from the New York State Police at Oneida, New York, showing the finger impressions of an unknown deceased individual. The information on the card indicated that this unfortunate person had been killed in an automobile accident at Elbridge, New York, on April 16, 1938.

This fingerprint card was searched against the Bureau's criminal files without result. It was, however, searched through the personal identification files and was found to be identical with the finger impressions of one Nicholas Aliprantis. The civil fingerprint record of this person had been forwarded to the FBI by the Civilian Conservation Corps located at Sheds, New York. Upon effecting this identification, a telegraphic summary of the information appearing on the record of Nicholas Aliprantis, was transmitted to the New York State Police at Oneida, New York, for the purpose of assisting that Department in locating relatives of the deceased individual.

Numerous instances appear in the daily newspapers reporting cases in which tragedy and grief have resulted from a lack of identification and the inability to establish individual identity and good standing in the various communities of the nation. The registration of fingerprints for civil purposes is a margin insuring safe protection, not only in cases involving unknown deceased persons, but also is of inestimable assistance in locating amnesia and drug victims, missing persons, suicides and others whose exact identity cannot readily be determined.

The strange prejudice that exists in the minds of many of our citizens against this indisputable and infallible means of permanent identification is destined to rapidly vanish in view of the increasing number of instances in which the science of fingerprinting has served such useful humanitarian purposes.
