49ERS AT CHIEFS

The San Francisco 49ers return to the Super Bowl for the eighth time in franchise history and the first time since the 2019 season as they travel to Las Vegas, NV, to take on the Kansas City Chiefs in Super Bowl LVIII. The 49ers, who are five-time Super Bowl champions (XVI, XIX, XXIII, XXIV & XXIX), look to tie the New England Patriots and the Pittsburgh Steelers for the most Super Bowl wins in NFL history.

The 49ers are coming off a 34-31 victory against the Detroit Lions in the NFC Championship Game, marking the 38th playoff win for the franchise, the most in NFL history. QB Brock Purdy led the offense by completing 20 of his 31 passing attempts for 267 yards and one touchdown to WR Brandon Aiyuk, who tallied three catches for 68 yards on the evening. RB Christian McCaffrey registered 132 yards from scrimmage and two rushing touchdowns, while RB Elijah Mitchell added four carries and a three-yard rushing touchdown.

On defense, the 49ers were led by DL Nick Bosa, who tallied two sacks of Lions QB Jared Goff. LB Fred Warner added a team-high 13 tackles on the evening, bringing his career postseason total to 84 tackles, which is the most tackles in postseason franchise history.

BY THE NUMBERS

1,088 QB Brock Purdy has registered 1,088 passing yds. in his 5 career playoff games, which are the 4th-most passing yds. in the playoffs in franchise history (QB Joe Montana - 4,758; QB Steve Young - 3,326; QB Colin Kaepernick - 1,374).

17 In last week's win vs. Det. (1/28/24 - NFC-C), the 49ers became the first team in NFL history to win a Conference Championship Game after facing a deficit of 17-or-more points at halftime.

10 Last week vs. Det. (1/28/24 - NFC-C), DL Nick Bosa's 2.0 sacks of Lions QB Jared Goff gave him 10.0 career sacks in the playoffs, making him 1 of 2 active players to have 10.0-or-more sacks in the playoffs (LB Von Miller, Buf. - 10.5 sacks).

THE HEAD COACHES

Kyle Shanahan was named the 20th head coach of the San Francisco 49ers on February 6, 2017. Over the last seven seasons, he has posted a 64-51 record (8-3 in the postseason) and led the 49ers to three NFC West Division Titles (2019 & 2022-23), four trips to the NFC Championship Game and a trip to Super Bowl LIV. He completed his sixth season with the 49ers after spending the previous two seasons as the offensive coordinator of the Atlanta Falcons. Shanahan has 20 seasons of coaching experience at the NFL level, including nine seasons as an offensive coordinator for the Atlanta Falcons (2015-16), Cleveland Browns (2014), Washington Redskins (2010-13) and Houston Texans (2008-09). In six of his nine seasons as an offensive coordinator (2008-09, 2012-13 and 2015-16), and three as head coach of the 49ers (2019, 2021-22), Shanahan has directed an offense that ranked in the top 10 in the NFL in yards gained. In 2019, Shanahan led the 49ers to NFC West and Conference titles en route to a trip to Super Bowl LIV, winning Coach of the Year honors by Sporting News and NFC Coach of the Year by the Committee of 101. Two years later, Shanahan guided the team to its second NFC Championship Game in two seasons (2021). In 2022, Shanahan led the 49ers to 12-consecutive wins after a 3-4 start, a second NFC West Division Title in four seasons and the teams second-consecutive appearance in the NFC Championship Game. Following the 2016 season, Shanahan earned Associated Press Assistant Coach of the Year honors after helping the Atlanta Falcons make an appearance in Super Bowl LI.

Andy Reid is in his 25th year as an NFL head coach and his 11th as head coach of the Kansas City Chiefs. He was hired as the 13th head coach in franchise history on January 7th, 2013. During his tenure in Kansas City, Reid holds a record of 128-51 (.715), recording nine 10-plus win seasons and making the playoffs in all but one season (2014). Reid has guided the Chiefs to six consecutive AFC Championship Games (2018-23) and three Super Bowl appearances (2019-20, 2022), winning Super Bowl LIV against the 49ers and Super Bowl LVII against the Philadelphia Eagles. Prior to his time in Kansas City, Reid spent 14 seasons (1999-2012) as head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles, where he owned a record of 130-93-1 (.583), including a 10-9 (.562) postseason record. He guided the Eagles to nine playoff appearances (2000-04, 2006, 2008-10) in 14 years and an appearance in Super Bowl XXXIX, where the Eagles lost to the New England Patriots. Reid's first NFL job was with the Green Bay Packers (1992-98), where he served four seasons (1992-96) as the tight ends/assistant offensive line coach and two seasons (1997-98) as quarterbacks coach. During his time with the Green Bay staff, Reid helped the team reach the playoffs six times (1993-98) and appeared in back-to-back Super Bowls (1997-1998), winning Super Bowl XXXI against the New England Patriots. Reid, who is the first and only coach in NFL history to earn 100 wins with two different teams, ranks fourth in wins in NFL history (283) and is second among active head coaches, trailing only Bill Belichick (333).

SAN FRANCISCO'S WINNING TRADITION

Since the start of the 1980 season, the San Francisco 49ers have established themselves as one of the NFL's most dominant franchises.

Since the DeBartolo Corporation purchased the team in 1977, the 49ers made one of the most dramatic turnarounds in sports history, rebounding from back-to-back 2-14 seasons in 1978-79 to Super Bowl Champions in 1981. The 49ers unparalleled success continued into the '90s, winning their fifth Super Bowl in 1994, becoming the first team in NFL history to win five Super Bowl titles.

GOLDMINE

- Though he grew up in Nevada, Aiyuk has roots in Northern California. He attended Sierra (Rocklin, CA) College from 2016-17, where the 49ers spent training camp from 1981-1997. Additionally, Aiyuk began supporting the 49ers at a young age, thanks to his mom. “My mom’s been a huge 49ers fan her whole life, so that kind of bled on me a little bit when I was younger,” said Aiyuk. When he got the call inform-

- ing him that he would be a member of the team, Aiyuk realized a childhood dream that he wasn’t sure would come true. “There were a lot of people telling me before today and all week that it was going to happen. So, it’s crazy that it actually did happen.”
- During his time at Sierra College and later Arizona State, Aiyuk was known for his work ethic on and off the field. Ben Noonan, who coached Aiyuk at Sierra College, found Aiyuk in the weight room constantly, improving his squat from 275 pounds coming out of high school to 500 pounds by May 2017. That drive carried over to the practice field, where Aiyuk routinely stayed for 30 minutes after every practice working on routes in the Rocklin heat. “It gets up to a good 110 degrees, and then he’s out there until the daylight is gone with the quarterbacks after a four-hour day,” Noonan said. “And demanding that the quarterbacks stay, you know, whether their arm was falling off or not.”

BRANDON ALLEN

QB × 6-2 × 209 × ARKANSAS

9.5.92 × FAYETTEVILLE, AR × 7TH YEAR × ACQUIRED FA IN '23

GOLDMINE

- Allen has deep family ties to the University of Arkansas football program starting with his father, Bobby. Bobby spent over 20 years with the program serving in a variety of roles. The elder Allen served as the position coach at points for the team's defensive line, linebackers, cornerbacks and free safeties, he served two stints as the team's defensive coordinator (1998, 2000) and later served as the director of high school and NFL relations before retiring in 2020. Allen's younger brother, Austin, followed in his footsteps by playing quarterback at the university. After Brandon left the school to enter the NFL following three years as the Razorbacks' starter, Austin took over the huddle and led the SEC with 3,430 passing yards and 25 touchdown passes in his first season under center.

ALLEN'S GOLDEN NUGGET

While at Arkansas, formed a friendship with Canaan Sandy, a Razorbacks' super fan with special needs. Sandy was a staple at all Razorback football events, everything from spring games to tailgates. It was there where the two were able to grow their bond. Sandy was voted into the ESPN Fan Hall of Fame following years of committed fandom to Arkansas athletics.

- During the 2021 NFL season, NFL players were able to support causes of their choice through the NFL's My Cause, My Cleats initiative. Allen chose to support the Alzheimer's Association as his grandmother suffers from the disease. "I'd love to find a cure so that no one has to watch the ones they love suffer with this disease," Allen said.

GOLDMINE

- In June of 2023, Armstead hosted the Kickoff for Kids 2023 gala. After founding the Armstead Academic Project in 2019, it marked the foundation's first gala and a very eventful one as Armstead received a key to his hometown. "Some might ask, 'Does it open the city treasury,'" Sacramento Mayor Darrell Steinberg joked. "The answer is 'No,' but it opens the key to the city's heart, and you have it, and we are grateful for you, man." Armstead was supported by his family as well as several 49ers teammates who attended the event, including Jauan Jennings and Alex Barrett, former 49er Patrick Willis and team owner Dr. John York. "I'm blown away really. I'm just a young kid from Sacramento," Armstead said. "I love being from here. I've been so blessed in my life. I have a lot of appreciation for my family and everything I've been able to experience growing up here. It's really shaped the person who I am."

ARMSTEAD'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Named the 49ers representative for the Walter Payton Man of the Year Award in 2020-22, which recognizes an NFL player for his excellence on and off the field.
- Lists his parents, Guss and Christa, as the most influential people in his life. He also gives credit to his grandfather, Willie B. Armstead, an Air Force veteran, for instilling the value of integrity that his parents have passed along to him. "A lot of things he instilled in my dad have carried down to me. Having a family member who is more courageous than you can imagine and who served his country is a huge honor."
- Played both basketball and football at Oregon before focusing only on football in 2014.
- During Super Bowl 50's Media Day, Armstead joined Sacramento's ABC10 sports team as a reporter to learn what it is like to cover NFL players during one of the most hectic events of the year. Held at SAP Center in San Jose, Armstead interviewed former teammates, fans, media members and Miss Universe. "It's like a feeding frenzy - everyone running around, and being part of that frenzy was a unique experience," said Armstead during the event.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- In May of 2020, Armstead donated $50,000 to Sacramento's Mercy Housing for students to be able to participate in distance learning. The donation will provide 350 Chromebooks to students, as well as one-year of pre-paid internet service for those families, many of whom have multiple students in their households. Also included in the donation were education kits consisting of learning activities, books, supplies and even healthy snacks benefiting children of all ages who remain physically at home, unable to visit their schools because of the coronavirus pandemic. "These are things that people should have access to, these are things that students in other communities do have access to, so this is just a baseline of essential needs for them to be successful in the classroom," said Armstead. Armstead took the time to personally deliver the Chromebooks to the recipients of the donation. "A lot of students had been disengaged before the pandemic, but even more so with school getting canceled and having to learn virtually and not having the technology and access," said Armstead. "I'm happy that I launched the foundation last year so that I could try to address some of these issues in my community."

- Armstead returned to his hometown of Sacramento during the 2019 offseason to host the second charity weekend for his foundation, Armstead Academic Project, which promotes equal opportunities through education. The festivities kicked off as teammates Ronald Blair III, Richard Sherman, Jaquiski Tartt and Ahkello Witherspoon joined Armstead for a charity gala and silent auction which raised more than $100,000. Armstead then led a youth camp the following morning, where the children were able to get hands-on lessons from the NFL players. Throughout the day, Armstead stressed the importance of hard work, sportsmanship and teamwork.
- During the 2020 offseason, Armstead began implementing several installments of Story time with Arik Armstead using virtual platforms. For Earth Day, Armstead surprised a virtual classroom of 20 second-grade students with a story time, Q&A and conversations about the environment. For Mother's Day, he and his mom, Christa, read "Guess How Much I Love You" on the 49ers Instagram account. Education is at the forefront of Armstead's commitment to the Bay Area, as the defensive lineman founded the Armstead Academic Project to ensure every student, no matter their socio-economic status, has direct access to a quality education through a positive learning environment and resources needed in order to thrive and be successful.

- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during Week 14 of the 2019 season. Armstead and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. In choosing the foundation Arik Armstead Academic Project which focuses on education equity, "I play for all children to have the right to quality education," said Armstead.

- Members of the 49ers defensive line spent time with 25 local youth from the Fam 1st Foundation at Shoe Palace for a special holiday shopping experience on December 16, 2019. The Fam 1st Foundation is based in Oakland and focuses on underserved youth, aiming to build new generations of innovative thinkers to create solutions for the future of Oakland and beyond.
- If Armstead wasn't in the NFL, he would be playing basketball. He was a three-year starter in basketball at Pleasant Grove High School in Sacramento and played two years at the University of Oregon before focusing solely on football for the 2014 season. He entered his high school senior season listed as the number three prospect in NorCalPrep.com's Top 40 rankings for the class of 2012. "A big part of the recruiting pitch from Oregon was they were going to let me play two sports. We only lost 5 games during my time there. I wanted to go somewhere with the chance to win and be a part of something special."

- In 2017, Armstead returned to his hometown of Sacramento to hold his Annual free youth football camp. The camp was held in Elk Grove, CA and sponsors made it possible for 200 scholarships to be offered to interested kids. The kids participated in both football and conditioning drills with the players and then were allowed to ask questions to discuss not only football, but school, healthy choices, and other topics. Armstead's goal was to provide campers with a unique experience on the football field, as well as insight into the hard work and dedication that are needed to make it to the NFL. "I want the kids to enjoy themselves while also coming away learning that they can do whatever they put their mind to," said Armstead. "I want to teach them the things that helped me get where I am now like the importance of education, work ethic, and faith."

- Armstead's brother, Armond, was forced to retire before ever playing a down in the NFL. After playing collegiately at USC, Armond became an All-Star for the Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League, helping the team win the league's 100th Grey Cup. He went on to sign with the New England Patriots in 2013, but medical issues forced him to hang up his cleats. "The biggest thing he has told me through this process is, 'at the end of the day, it's just football.' Having a brother who played at this level makes everything less overwhelming."
- In April of 2018, Armstead worked with Leataata Floyd Elementary and 916 Ink to host a trip to the Imaginarium, where the young students developed their artistic abilities, while learning how to be better at communicating. The event was in conjunction with Armstead's foundation, which focuses on assisting at-risk youth, particularly through the means of education.
- Armstead and his teammates joined Levi's in support of breast, colon and pediatric cancer warriors at the Crucial Catch Fashion Show presented by Dignity Health in October of 2018. 49ers players and cancer warriors took to the runway to show off their attire and share their stories of strength and courage with the audience.

OL * 6-5 * 325 * NOTRE DAME

9.3.97 * EL CERRITO, CA * 3RD YEAR * ACQUIRED D-2 IN '21

AWARDS & HONORS

2021: 49ers Community Relations Rookie Player Award

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Helped allow zero sacks on 28 pass attempts by QB Brock Purdy and QB Sam Darnold at Arz. (12/17).

GOLDMINE

- Originally from Hayward, Banks grew up less than an hour from Levi's Stadium. For Draft Day, Banks and his large family rented a house in Napa to wait for his name to be called. Learning his football path brought him right back to where it all started, the moment was not lost on him. "[It's] crazy how this journey brought me right back home," Banks said. The chorus of screams from his family upon hearing his name associated with the hometown team resonates with Banks and his excitement to return.
- At El Cerrito High School, Banks was a dual-sport athlete as a center on the basketball team and an offensive and defensive lineman on the football team. The basketball team won the North Coast Section championship with Banks in the paint and he also helped El Cerrito to its first-ever NCS football championship in 2013.
- Banks has three dogs, two huskies and a pitbull mix. The dogs are named Waffles, Pancakes and Beans.

BANKS' GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Was given the nickname 'The Dancing Bear' by former Notre Dame offensive coordinator Chip Long due to his energy and playing style.
- As a sophomore at Notre Dame, hosted pizza night every Thursday night in his apartment to help the offensive line bond off the field. "We have those guys every week, it's our pizza night. But it's not always at our house. We move it around a little bit," Banks said. "Pizza night has been a thing among the o-line for a long time, and it's a tradition."
- While attending El Cerrito (CA) HS, Banks, realizing that the school's weight room was limited, took it upon himself to find additional ways to train in a local gym. "Yeah, we didn't have a lot of weights," Banks said. "So myself and my little brother would go before school, at like 4:30 in the morning and go lift."

WR × 6-0 × 192 × MICHIGAN

1.28.00 × KANSAS CITY, MO × ROOKIE × ACQUIRED D-7B IN '23

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Notched 1 recept. for a 12-yd. TD vs. Bal. (12/25).
- Registered 1 recept. for a 5-yd. TD vs. LAR (1/7/24) marking his 3rd career TD recept.

GOLDMINE

- Bell comes from a football family. His brother, Kendrick, is a QB at Park Hill (Kansas City, MO) HS and a 2023 Michigan commit. His father, Aaron, is a long-time coach who currently serves as the wide receivers coach at Missouri Western. Both Ronnie and Kendrick were able to play for their father at Park Hill as he served as an assistant coach at the school prior to joining the staff at Missouri Western. "Being around my dad when he was coaching, growing up around the game... to be full circle with the draft being in Kansas City, like everything just is a surreal moment, but definitely something I've been working for my whole life," Bell said following an emotional draft weekend.
- Leading up to the week of the 2023 NFL Draft, Bell decided to give back to his community and purchase a set of brand new jerseys for the Park Hill girl's youth basketball program.

BELL'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Has a younger brother, Kendrick, who will join Michigan's football team in 2023.
- Ranks in the top three in Missouri state history in receipts., rec. yds. and TDs trailing only former NFL WR Dorial Green-Beckham and WR Jeremy Maclin.
- Originally committed to playing basketball in college and signed a letter of intent to play at Missouri State before joining Michigan.

GOLDMINE

- Participated in the 49ers Annual Community Day, helping pack more than 31,000 nutritious meals in collaboration with Feeding Children Anywhere. The meals, along with groceries and backpacks, were distributed to those most in need in East San Jose.

- Bosa's father, John, a former Miami Dolphin, encouraged sons Nick and Joey to try other sports like tennis, golf and baseball. However, Nick only had one sport in mind, and he let his parents know it. "Nick threw temper tantrums," John said. After successfully convincing his parents to let him play football, Nick gave everything he had to the sport. Even as a kid on the field, he wasn't afraid to speak his mind. Early in his football career, Cheryl watched from the sideline at practice as Nick approached a coach. "I find out later they'd put Nick with the offense," she recalled. "And he walked up to this guy, totally by himself, tugged on his shirt and said, 'I don't want to play offense. I want to play defense.'"

OL × 6-4 × 299 × UCLA

9.10.92 × PLANO, TX × 6TH YEAR × ACQUIRED FA IN '20

AWARDS & HONORS

2022: Bobb McKittrick Award, 49ers Community Relations Family Award

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Helped allow zero sacks on 28 pass attempts by QB Brock Purdy and QB Sam Darnold at Arz. (12/17).

GOLDMINE

NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during the 2018 season. Brendel represented the foundation, "Living for Zachary," named for former high school teammate Zachary Schraw, who passed away in 2009 on the Plano East High School football field. He died suddenly of cardiac arrest. "If there was an AED (automated external defibrillator) nearby, it could have saved Zachary's life, might have brought his heart back to life," Brendel said. "The foundation is trying to make sure the next time that happens, a life can be saved."

BRENDEL'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Growing up, Brendel's family was involved in local musical theater. During a production of "Annie," Brendel's dad, Bill, played "Daddy Warbucks," his mom was the musical director and Lauren and Jake played two background actors. "Jake was the dancer. The kid could dance and sing," said Bill.
- Enjoys fishing, particularly for bass, bluegills and walleye.
- Spent much of his childhood participating in various sports, such as football, basketball, baseball, lacrosse, wrestling and was a competitive swimmer in the backstroke and breaststroke.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- As a senior at UCLA in 2015, Brendel and his teammates suited up to play in their senior game at the Rose Bowl. He was joined by his entire family, including older sister, Lauren. Lauren had officially made captain in the Air Force the week before, and decided to skip her ceremonial pinning in order to watch her brother play. "It was great to have her there, especially being Military Appreciation Day," Jake said. "She loved every single aspect of it." Lauren, through her various assignments in the Air Force, was forced to miss a majority of her brother's games, but knew she wanted to be there for this one. "My feeling was, I'll be pinned for major, the next promotion, and then my family can be there," Lauren said. "Senior night was a one and only type thing for Jake. I couldn't miss that ceremony."

7.19.00 × SAN ANTONIO, TX × 2ND YEAR × ACQUIRED D-4 IN '22

AWARDS & HONORS

2022: 49ers Community Relations Rookie Award

GOLDMINE

- Burford became the 3rd Roadrunner in the program's 11-year history to be drafted into the NFL when the 49ers selected him 134th overall in 2022, joining New Orleans Saints DL Marcus Davenport and former Minnesota Vikings TE David Morgan. Morgan was the first Texas-San Antonio alum to become an NFL draft pick in 2016, while Davenport followed in 2018 when he went off the board as the 14th pick in the first round.
- During the 2022 season, Burford became a staple of the 49ers community relations department's Community Tuesdays. Nearly every Community Tuesday, Burford lent his time alongside some of his teammates to a deserving group. His efforts did not go unnoticed as at the end of the season, Burford was awarded the 49ers Community Relations Rookie Player Award.

BURFORD'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Has two cousins who played in the NFL, former Bears and Cowboys WR Sam Hurd and former Bills, Patriots and Lions OL LaAdrian Waddle.
- Is an avid fan of both making and listening to music. He plays the drums and describes music as his "gateway to get away," and that "it takes him into a whole different realm."
- Started playing football at the age of four years old with older children. "I got to know the game at a young age. That is where my love of football came from," he said.

BURFORD'S TRANSACTIONS

Originally a 4th-round (134th overall) draft choice by SF in 2022.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- Burks chose to support SCFAA through the NFL's My Cause My Cleats initiative during Week 14 of the 2019 season.

- On March 3, 2020, a tornado tore through Central Tennessee, including Burks' neighborhood in Nashville. The tornado, fortunately, missed Burks' home, but many others were not as lucky. Burks was inspired to help and offered families in need with housing support so they wouldn't be forced to sell their land.
- Burks' desire to be involved with his community didn't begin when he started his NFL career. While at Vanderbilt, he was the president of the Student-Athlete Advisory Committee (SAAC), the co-founder of REVAMP (Revitalizing and Empowering Vanderbilt's African-American Population) and a member of the 2016 Allstate-AFCA Good Works Team.

- Perhaps the cause closest to Burks is the South County Football Alumni Association, an organization he helped found. "My time as a student-athlete at South County HS allowed me to build the foundation I use today to be successful. My teammates and classmates became lifelong friends who push each other to be the best versions of ourselves. Together, we decided that we wanted to build a platform where we could give back to a program that gave so much to us," said Burks. After officially establishing 501(c)(3) status in 2019, the group has raised money for the team's State Championship hotel, awarded post secondary scholarships, provided snacks to fuel student-athletes before and after workouts and hosted a TeamBurks Football camp.

CHRIS CONLEY

84 WR * 6-3 * 205 * GEORGIA
 10.25.92 * DALLAS, GA * 9TH YEAR * ACQUIRED FA IN '23

GOLDMINE

- In addition to his NFL career, Conley possesses a hidden talent as a filmmaker and is listed as a director, writer and producer on three separate short films. In 2014, while he was studying journalism at the University of Georgia, Conley - who is an avid science fiction fan - wrote and directed a Star Wars fan film titled "Retribution", which has a total runtime of 26 minutes and features Conley as the main antagonist, Khari Vion. Conley says he got the inspiration to make the film one night in his dorm room when he was watching lightsaber duels on YouTube. "After about an hour of watching different videos, it hit me: We can do better than this. And by we, I meant myself, the friend I would be dueling and whoever we could find to film two guys hitting each other with sticks," said Conley. The initial idea was to simply film a lightsaber duel but due to his connection with the Georgia football team, it grew into something much bigger. The project snowballed into creating a film that portrays lessons relevant to both life and football, all while providing entertainment and connection for fans from two different worlds, Star Wars and college football. "That was about a month of countless emails, calls and meetings. A lot of lost sleep, just because of the fact I did a lot of it myself. I didn't have a producer. It was just us. It was a lot of work. I had to explain to people that we were shooting a film. It wasn't going to be three guys running around with a GoPro. It was a 15-man crew with cameras, a jib and a dolly," said Conley.

- In the summer of 2020 during the COVID-19 pandemic, Conley debuted a five minute short film titled "Quarantine" that he wrote, produced and directed. The film starred him and his wife, Brianna, as a newlywed couple playing themselves and experiencing the onset of the pandemic together. The film was meant to showcase a relatable viewpoint of the early days of the pandemic and the impacts of isolation on people. According to Conley, he was inspired by the ups and downs of being stuck in the house together during quarantine. "I figured that this experience was common for a lot of people and wanted to share my view of it. Shooting at home was a unique situation since the space was rather small. It made us get creative about creating angles and the illusion of space," he said. The story follows the couple, who end up reliving the same day over and over again, similar to Groundhog Day, and provides the audience with a look at the initial happiness of being together followed by the mundane and potentially heartbreaking nature of self-isolation, even when spending that time with a loved one.

CONLEY'S GOLDEN NUGGET

Growing up his father, Charles, was a member of the United States Air Force. He was born in Adana, Turkey, at Incirlik Air Base.

GOLDMINE

- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during Week 14 of the 2019 season. Dwelley and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Dwelley chose the Autism Tree Project Foundation and said, "I play for Autism awareness."

- The 49ers and their families hosted 450 underserved boys and girls from the Bay Area for the first-ever 49ers Hope for the Holidays event. Each child had a once-in-a-lifetime experience traveling through Levi's Stadium and left with a brand new bike, helmet, lock, haircut, shoes, toys, glasses, backpack, dinner and more.

DWELLEY'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Dwelley became the seventh player (WR Jamal Agnew, DE Eric Bakhtiari, WR Michael Gasperson, QB Josh Johnson, WR Matt Maslowski, WR John Matthews) from the University of San Diego to make an NFL roster, and the fourth to suit up for the 49ers.
- Dwelley graduated from San Diego with a degree in industrial systems engineering. "I've always had a fascination with space," Dwelley said. "My education is definitely important to me. I'm really proud of graduating."

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- On November 26th, 2019, the 49ers teamed up with Martha's Kitchen of San Jose to serve Thanksgiving dinner to over 300 people in need. Members of the team served food, bussed tables and refilled beverages. The team also provided toiletries and giveaways to all those in attendance.

- Fellow TE George Kittle partnered with the Jessie Rees Foundation to pass out JoyJars filled with toys and games at a local children's hospital. Dwelley attended the event and was joined by several of his teammates including, TE Garrett Celek, TE Daniel Helm, QB Nick Mullens and LB Fred Warner who helped him spread holiday cheer and lift the spirits of everyone they met.

- The 49ers hosted a flag football clinic for local first responders and their children at the team facility in October of 2018. Dwelley and his teammates taught the children the fundamentals of the game before hitting the field for drills and games. The 100-plus guests also had the opportunity to try on equipment and participate in a photoshoot.
- The 49ers worked alongside the humanitarian-relief organization Convoy of Hope in December of 2018, and hosted 1,500 guests in need from Bay Area nonprofits and schools at Levi's® Stadium for a free holiday resource fair. Dwelley and his 49ers teammates distributed groceries, toys, books, shoes and other holiday offerings to the guests. The attendees also received haircuts, utilized health resources and took family portraits or professional headshots.

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Helped allow zero sacks on 28 pass attempts by QB Brock Purdy and QB Sam Darnold at Arz. (12/17).

GOLDMINE

- In 2018, NFL Players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during a designated home game between Weeks 13-15. Feliciano and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Feliciano chose to raise awareness for gun violence and supported March For Our Lives, an organization striving for a future free of gun violence.

- When Feliciano's daughter was born in 2017, he named her Shawn Cole after his late best friend Sean Cole who drowned his rookie year. Feliciano childhood had some obstacles. Feliciano moved to King's Manor Trailer Park in Davie, FL following his parent's divorce, where it wasn't a guarantee that any the heat, water or electricity would be on. His mother, Alicia, survived two bouts with cancer, and his younger brother, Chris was born deaf. Feliciano used these obstacles as inspiration, his brother and mother dorve him to succeed. And he leaned on his friendship with Sean for support. The two had an inseparable bond, Feliciano's wife, Shannon, even jokes that she needed Sean's approval to date Jon. "Without those guys, I wouldn't have made it," Feliciano said, of Cole and thier friend Josh Palmer's positive influences in difficult surroundings. "I did a good job of staying away from the bad stuff in my life, realizing that it wasn't the norm. My friends helped me to get to that point."

FELICIANO'S GOLDEN NUGGET

AWARDS & HONORS

2015: AFC Pro Bowl

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Notched 2 tackles and 1 INT of Cowboys QB Dak Prescott vs. Dal. (10/8).
- Registered 5 tackles and 1.0 sack of Seahawks QB Geno Smith (11/23), marking his first of the season and gave him 2.5 in his career.
- Registered 6 tackles and 1 FF vs. Det. (1/28/24 - NFC-C), marking the 2nd FF of his playoff career.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS

- Gipson Sr.'s 33 career INTs are tied 3rd-most amongst active NFL players (Tyrann Mathieu, NO-33).

MOST INTS AMONGST ACTIVE NFL PLAYERS

Player	INTs
1. CB Patrick Peterson, Pit.	36
2. S Harrison Smith, Min.	34
3t. S Tashaun Gipson Sr., SF	33
S Tyrann Mathieu, NO	33
5. CB Stephon Gilmore, Dal.	31

GOLDMINE

- During Week 13 of the 2020 season, 49ers players wore custom cleats as a part of the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign. Gipson and his teammates highlighted their respective causes, with Gipson representing the Alzheimer's Association. The cause is extremely close to him as his grandmother, Phyllis, suffers from the disease.

GIPSON'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Has five siblings; Taneah, Mike, Terriyon, Marcell and Anitra. Two of his brothers also played football at Mountain West schools. Marcell played with Tashaun at Wyoming, while Terriyon played running back at New Mexico.
- Has three children, Tashaun Jr., Nala and Jett.

GRAHAM'S TRANSACTIONS

Originally the third of three 7th-round (255th overall) draft choices by SF in 2023.

DANNY GRAY

WR * 6-0 * 200 * SOUTHERN METHODIST

4.1.99 * DALLAS, TX * 2ND YEAR * ACQUIRED D-3B IN '22

GOLDMINE

- Gray and Arizona Cardinals CB Qwanterez Knight threw out ceremonial first pitches at an Oakland Athletics game over the final weekend of the 2022 offseason. The game served as a welcoming for the rookie duo to the Bay Area prior to the start of training camp. The A's went on to beat the Texas Rangers, 3-1, that evening.

- Gray has always possessed great speed. He earned his nickname "missile" at the age of 5 and was a track & field standout in addition to excelling on the basketball court and football field at James Madison (Dallas, TX) HS. That speed impressed scouts at the 2022 NFL Combine as Gray registered the fourth-fastest time (4.33) produced by a WR at the event.
- Draft day was a very emotional experience for Gray, who grew up in a single-parent home. "I grew up in a seven-person household. Mom worked as a nurse. She was a single parent doing the best that she could to take care of me and all my other siblings," Gray said. "She worked 16-hour shifts, 22-hour shifts, I feel like I owe her my life... I know I'm gonna cry no matter how tough I try to be," Gray said prior to the event. "I'm gonna be a crybaby on that day. Every tear, it exemplifies, man, I've been through this, I've been through that, but I kept going." Gray faced his fair share of adversity on his road to the NFL. He missed the majority of his freshman year of high school due to having to care for his younger siblings. An obstacle that made him initially ineligible to play DI football, forgo a scholarship at the University of Missouri and enroll in junior college. Gray pushed through and piggybacked on success at Blinn College and Southern Methodist all the way to the NFL. "It felt impossible and I just turned the impossible into possible," Gray said looking back on the journey that brought him to where he is today.

GRAY'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Also played basketball and competed in track & field at James Madison (Dallas, TX) HS, where he won state championships in the 100-meter dash and 4x100-meter relay.

GOLDMINE

• Since he was eight years old, Greenlaw had been living in group homes and shelters across Arkansas. Six years later, he met Brian Early, who was the defensive coach at Fayetteville High, while Greenlaw was getting treatment for an injury he suffered in football practice. After learning about Dre's situation, Brian and his wife, Nanci, began spending more time with him, and soon he became like a son. When they were informed that his group home was going to be shut down, they invited Dre to live with them and their two daughters, AJ and Camryn. The family later made his adoption official shortly after Greenlaw turned 21. "Even though it wasn't legal until July, he's always been my son," said Brian. "He's felt the same way. We're Mom and Dad to him. It's a pretty special relationship."

GREENLAW'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- In 2019, named the recipient of the 49ers Thomas Herrion Memorial Award, which was established in 2005 by 49ers owners Denise and John York and is presented to a rookie or first-year player who best represents the dream of Thomas Herrion. The recipient has taken advantage of every opportunity, turned it into a positive situation and made their dream turn into a reality. The award is voted on by the coaches.
- During the 2019 offseason, Greenlaw spoke to a crowd of nearly 30 Santa Clara foster youth who were honored at Levi's Stadium for graduating from High School, obtaining a GED, earning a Vocational Program Certificate, Associate Degree, Bachelor and/or a Master Degree in the 2018-2019 academic year. A former foster child, Greenlaw addressed the crowd saying, "I can survive anything. Once you get that mindset, which I know you guys have. it's just the beginning."
- Was named team captain in 2018 at Arkansas after week four of the season.
- Participated in track & field at Fayetteville (AR) HS, in addition to football.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during Week 14 of the 2019 season. Greenlaw and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Greenlaw represented the Bill Wilson Center and said, "I play for foster youth like me."

- During the 2022 offseason, Greenlaw and his fellow linebackers, Azeel Al-Shaair and Fred Warner, were invited to throw out the first pitch at a San Francisco Giants game. The trio took a few swings at batting practice and mingled with Giants players prior to throwing out ceremonial first pitches and cheering on the hometown team.

- The 49ers LBs welcomed eight foster youth from Unity Care to Levi's Stadium in December of 2019. This group received gifts and much needed resources, like bedding and new shoes, this holiday season. The linebackers chose to support foster youth to honor Greenlaw, who is a former foster youth.

- Took part in the 49ers Annual Community Day, helping pack more than 31,000 nutritious meals in collaboration with Feeding Children Anywhere. The meals, along with groceries and backpacks, were distributed to those most in need in East San Jose.
- During the 2019 offseason, members of the 49ers took part in the Second Annual Picnic on the Field, located on the Levi's Stadium field. Greenlaw and his teammates spent the day taking pictures with fans, who enjoyed music, food and games in support of the 49ers Foundation. The foundation, in conjunction with NFL Huddle for 100, partnered with Amazon to fill 1,000 backpacks full of school supplies. Fans and players joined together to assemble the packs, which were distributed throughout the community to children in need.
- Prior to Week 2's matchup in Cincinnati during the 2019 season, the 49ers spent time in Youngstown, OH, where they participated in the Community Blitz. Greenlaw and some of his teammates joined the students at Williamson Elementary School to talk about inclusion and anti-bullying. The players spoke at an assembly before helping the kids write compliment cards and discuss how to be kind to one another.

- Coming out of North Rowan (Spencer, SC) HS, Hargrave had undeniable talent on the football field, but his grades did not allow him to attract many opportunities to play at the next level. Late in the recruiting process, he was offered a scholarship from South Carolina State University, a small Historically Black College and University in Orangeburg, South Carolina. Due to his grades, Hargrave could not enroll right away, so he remained at home in Salisbury and worked at a fiberglass factory while taking virtual classes to help him qualify for the spring semester. "I was really down," Hargrave said. "It was one of my low points. I didn't know if I was going to be able to play football. That's when I gained all my weight. I was 260 in high school, (then grew to) 290-300. I sat in the house and ate. I didn't come outside, wasn't working out anymore." When Hargrave arrived on South Carolina State's campus in January of 2012, he was out of shape and struggled to make it through team workouts, but his work ethic and determination to finish each drill impressed the coaching staff. His hard work earned him playing time once the season started and he took full advantage, earning a spot on the FCS All-Freshman Team.

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Registered 5 tackles and 1 INT of QB Kenny Pickett at Pit. (9/10).
- Tallied 1 tackle and 1 INT of Giants QB Daniel Jones vs. NYG (9/21).
- Notched 7 tackles, 1 PD and 1 INT of Jaguars QB Trevor Lawrence at Jax. (11/12).

GOLDMINE

- Hufanga grew up on a small farm in Oregon where he and his family raised goats, cows, chickens, pigs, dogs and cats. The family would drive dirt bikes and tractors, but taking care of his goat was always his favorite activity.

“Growing up on a farm, it’s a different kind of childhood I didn’t have neighborhood friends to hang out with,” he said. “On the weekends it was mandatory that my brother and I were working. We weeded, cleaned the barn, fed the animals, took eggs out of the chicken coop and maintained the pig pens.”

- Hufanga’s father, Tevita, grew up in Tonga until the age of 18. In 2014, Tevita took Hufanga to the village of Pea on Tonga’s largest island, Tongatapu, to see where their family comes from. “It just kind of humbled me in the sense that I’m grateful for everything I have,” Hufanga reflected. “You go to a place like that and see how my pops was raised is very different from how I was raised. He came from living on dirt floors to where he is now, it’s a different lifestyle. It made me work that much harder just to try to do what I can do and be the better version of myself because that was the best version of himself moving and creating a better life for his family.” Hufanga brings that culture, enthusiasm, energy and unwavering work ethic to everything he does on and off the field.

HUFANGA'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His name is pronounced tal-uh-NOE-uh who-FAWN-guh.
- Comes from a family of football players, as his cousins, Marlon and Tuli Tuipulotu, are DL for the Philadelphia Eagles and USC Trojans, respectively.
- Trains with fellow Trojan alum and Hall of Fame S Troy Polamalu in the offseason.
- Plays the ukulele.

DL * 6-4 * 273 * SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

4.12.01 * CORONA, CA * 2ND YEAR * ACQUIRED D-2 IN '22

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Notched a single-game career-high 3.0 sacks of Steelers QB Kenny Pickett at Pit. (9/10), giving him 6.0 career sacks.
- With 3.0 sacks at Pit. (9/10), it marked the 1st multi-sack game of his career.

GOLDMINE

- When Jackson was born, his father, Dennis, wrote, "Drake Jackson, University of Southern California, outside linebacker, 265 pounds," on his birth certificate. Against all odds, Dennis spoke his infant son's future into existence. "When I was born, my dad said, manifested [and] praised to God that I go to USC," the younger Jackson said. "Now for me to be in my last year where I really feel like the guy and weigh how much he said, it's just crazy to me how everything really works out."

- Jackson has a unique skill that earned him a unique nickname. At 6-4, 270 lbs Jackson can perform backflips with ease, earning him the moniker "the freak" by his college teammates. That was always one of the coolest things to me when I was a kid, flipping," Jackson said. "I was always interested in gymnastics-type of things and that was probably as close as I got to it. I've always been able to do it."

JACKSON'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Was teammates with current 49ers S and 2021 5th-round draft pick Talanoa Hufanga for two seasons (2019-20) with the Trojans.
- His biggest inspiration is his late grandmother, Cynthia Cavitt, who loved to follow her grandson's football career long before others did. "Drake was her little celebrity," Jackson's father, Dennis, said. In Jackson's first game following his grandmother's passing, he hauled in his second career INT and was "happy that he did it for her" in the win over San Jose State.

7.10.97 × MURFREESBORO, TN × 3RD YEAR × ACQUIRED D-7 IN '20

AWARDS & HONORS

2021: Thomas Herrion Memorial Award

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Registered 3 recepts. for 44 yds. and 1 TD at Phi. (12/3), marking his 1st TD recept. of the season and the 7th of his career.

GOLDMINE

- When a deadly tornado hit Tennessee in March of 2020, Jennings turned his scheduled autograph session into a donation drop off benefiting those affected by the tornado. "Just to be able to go down there and help," said Jennings, "It means a lot because this is a place that helped build who I am today. I had just gotten to Knoxville from the Combine and to wake up and see that call about the tornado and see the devastation that's happened, it broke my heart." In addition to signing autographs and talking to young fans, Jennings organized donations to go toward the community. "A lot of people are contacting me and they're like, 'What can we do?'" Jennings said. "And I'm like, 'Just bring donations. I'll take care of the rest.' It just means a lot to be able to just come out here and help the community."

- Since childhood, Jennings has immersed himself in athletics. Coming from a family of athletes, Jennings grew up with a competitive spirit. Older sister, Alexis, played collegiate basketball at Kentucky and South Carolina, collecting Second-Team All-SEC honors as a senior with the Gamecocks in 2018-19. "We were always outside going to the playgrounds or to the local YMCA to play against people," said Alexis. "We pretty much played anything and everything. We just loved to be outside doing anything that had to do with sports."

JENNINGS' GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His first name is pronounced juh-WAHN.
- In addition to football, Jennings played basketball at Blackman (Murfreesboro, TN) HS.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- Jennings followed in the footsteps of his father, Bennie, who was a four-year letterman on the University of North Alabama's football team from 1987-90. The First-Team All-American registered 29 catches for 456 yards and four touchdowns as a senior. His athletic prowess earned him a spot in UNA's Hall of Fame for football.

2023 HIGHLIGHTS (LOS ANGELES CHARGERS/SAN FRANCISCO)

- Registered 4 tackles and a career-high 2.0 sacks of Eagles QB Jalen Hurts at Phi. (12/3).
- Registered 3 tackles and a 0.5 sack of Seahawks QB Drew Lock vs. Sea. (12/10).
- Registered 2 tackles and 1.0 sack of Cardinals QB Kyler Murray at Arz. (12/17), giving him 3.5 this season and 5.0 in his career.

GOLDMINE

- Joseph-Day launched Bashing Hunter, a charitable initiative that focuses on combating food insecurity by increasing food rescue, raising money and awareness of these issues. Also his initiative provides nutritional education. This initiative has partnered with St. Joseph's Center to feed 150 homeless in Venice, CA. Joseph-Day teamed up with Dine-N-Bash with Hotville Chicken and Dulan's Soul Food Kitchen. These food trucks provided the center meals. All visitors left with bags filled with fresh produce. In order to promote these local businesses Joseph-Day has hosted a series called 'Dine N Bash.' This show began as a way for him to showcase local businesses in Los Angeles during the COVID-19 pandemic. During this show, Joseph-Day shares local businesses and their origin stories.

- During his time in the NFL, Joseph-Day partnered with Meals on the Wheels to help the greater Los Angeles area. Additionally, as a player coalition member, Joseph-Day presented an $88,000 check on behalf of the coalition to a few schools in the Los Angeles area. His efforts helped united the younger generation in the community and educate them on topics related to income and educational inequality.

JOSEPH-DAY'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His nickname is 'Bash.'
- Co-host of a podcast with Mike Tyson called 'Hotboxin'. During this podcast he has interviewed Ne-Yo, Terrell Owens, T-Pain, Tony Hawk, The Undertaker and Hasbulla.

AWARDS & HONORS

- 2016: AFC Pro Bowl
- 2017: Bill Walsh Award, NFC Pro Bowl, 49ers Community Relations Youth Football Award
- 2018: NFC Pro Bowl
- 2019: NFC Pro Bowl
- 2020: NFC Pro Bowl
- 2021: NFC Pro Bowl
- 2022: NFC Pro Bowl Games, NFLPA First-Team All-Pro, Gary Niver Award
- 2023: NFC Pro Bowl, AP First-Team All-Pro

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Caught 4 passes for 26 yds. and 1 TD vs. Dal. (10/8).
- Juszczyk's 9-yd. TD receipt. marked his 1st of the season and the 15th of his career.
- Caught 2 passes for 26 yds. and 1 TD at Jax. (11/12).

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS

- Led all NFL FBs in 2015 after registering career highs in receipts. (41), rec. yds. (321) and rec. TDs (4) for a Ravens offense that set a single-season team-record in net passing yds. (4,271).
- In 2016, finished with 37 receipts. for 266 yds. and was selected to his 1st career Pro Bowl.

GOLDMINE

- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during Week 14 of the 2019 season. Juszczyk and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Juszczyk represented the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, saying, "I play to honor my wife's mother, Virginia."
- Juszczyk chose to support The Crohn's & Colitis Foundation in 2018, which is a volunteer-fueled organization dedicated to finding cures for Crohn's disease and ulcerative colitis, and improving the quality of life of children and adults affected by these diseases. Juszczyk also hosted Juice's Future All-Stars Camp in Burbank, OH, with all proceeds donated to benefit Crohn's disease research.

- Juszczyk often promotes PLAY 60, the NFL's movement to get children active for at least 60 minutes a day. In 2013, he participated in a PLAY 60 Challenge kickoff assembly at Essex (MD) Elementary School.

JUSZCZYK'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His last name is pronounced YOOZ-check.
- Named the recipient of the 2017 Bill Walsh Award, which was established in 2004 in honor of San Francisco's Hall of Fame Head Coach. The award, which is voted on by the coaching staff, is given to the 49er who has best represented the standard of professional excellence established by Walsh. Walsh served as the team's head coach for 10 seasons from 1979-88. In that time, he compiled a record of 102-63-1 and led the team to three Super Bowls. He was twice named Coach of the Year (1981, 1984) and was later named Coach of the Decade for the 1980s.
- Each offseason, Juszczyk likes to build at least one piece of furniture with his own hands. His most recent piece of furniture assembled was a farmhouse-style kitchen table.
- In search of his favorite pregame meal, Juszczyk settled on filet mignon with sweet potatoes and spaghetti with scrambled eggs, a meal he describes as, "The perfect combination of protein and the right carbs before a game."
- His great uncle, Rich "Dickie" Moore, played DT at Villanova University before being selected by the Green Bay Packers in the first round (12th overall) of the 1969 NFL Draft.

KITTLE'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- In 2019, was the recipient of the 49ers Len Eshmont Award, which is voted on by the players and is given to the 49er who best exemplifies the inspirational and courageous play of Len Eshmont, an original member of the 1946 49ers team.
- Named the recipient of the 2018 Bill Walsh Award, which was established in 2004 in honor of San Francisco's Hall of Fame Head Coach. The award is voted on by the coaching staff and given to the 49er who has best represented the standard of professional excellence established by Walsh. Walsh served as the team's head coach for 10 seasons from 1979-88. In that time, he compiled a record of 102-63-1 and led the team to three Super Bowls. He was twice named Coach of the Year (1981, 1984) and was later named Coach of the Decade (1980s).
- His father, Bruce, was an offensive lineman at Iowa where he played in the 1982 Rose Bowl before suffering a career-ending injury in training camp with Washington in 1982. Following his football career, Bruce went on to become an assistant coach at Oklahoma University (2010-12).
- Bruce spent time as an offensive line coach at Lipscomb Academy (Nashville, TN) HS under head coach and former 49ers QB Trent Dilfer.

GOLDMINE

- Kittle, along with Kansas City Chiefs TE Travis Kelce, created a TE summit near Nashville, TN. More than 45 TEs gathered to share tips, workouts and advice in 2021. The annual event nearly doubled in size it's second year with roughly 90 participants.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- During the 2020 NFL Combine, Kittle teamed up with Rich Eisen in support of the Run Rich Run event. Each combine, Eisen runs the 40-yard dash to raise money for St. Jude's Children's Research Hospital. Kittle joined Eisen, with the assistance of Von, a St. Jude's patient, and Jerry Rice, in timing his 40-yard dash. George then presented a $10,000 donation to St. Jude's on behalf of him and his wife, Claire. "I'm just such a fan of Rich and that he does that every year through St. Jude's," Kittle said. "I'm a big fan of the Iowa Children's Hospital. I'm just a fan of that, any time I can give back to help kids, they deserve it."

- Kittle partnered with the Jessie Rees Foundation to pass out Joy-Jars filled with toys and games at a local children's hospital. Kittle spearheaded the event and was joined by several of his teammates including, TE Ross Dwelley and LB Fred Warner who helped him spread holiday cheer and lift the spirits of everyone they met.

- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during Week 14 of the 2019 season. Kittle and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Kittle represented TAPS, saying, "I play for the fallen heroes and their families."

- The 49ers hosted the third annual Crucial Catch Fashion Show presented by Dignity Health in October of 2019, featuring cancer warriors representing all cancers as they modeled apparel donated by Levi's. Kittle and his teammates were paired with each of the warriors to share their stories of strength and courage with the audience and walk the runway.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- Kittle is an avid fan of the WWE. In May of 2017, he took time to visit the Black and Brave Wrestling Academy in Iowa, which is co-owned by one of Kittle's favorite wrestlers, WWE superstar Seth Rollins. At a pro wrestling event on the same weekend, Kittle got to live out one of his dreams and get into the ring, where he delivered a Stone Cold Stunner, a move made famous by his favorite wrestler of all-time, Steve Austin. "I felt like a kid," Kittle said.
- The 49ers worked alongside the humanitarian-relief organization Convoy of Hope in December of 2018, and hosted 1,500 guests in-need from Bay Area nonprofits and schools at Levi's® Stadium for a free holiday resource fair. Kittle and his 49ers teammates distributed groceries, toys, books, shoes and other holiday offerings to the guests. The attendees also received haircuts, utilized health resources and took family portraits or professional headshots. Convoy of Hope is a nonprofit organization that directs children's feeding initiatives, hosts community outreach programs and provides disaster response resources to those in need in the Bay Area and throughout the world.

- The 49ers joined forces with Martha's Kitchen of San Jose as part of their Community Tuesday kickoff event in September of 2018. Kittle and teammates took part in the event by serving dinner to nearly 200 residents in need, refilling beverages and bussing tables. Both the 49ers and Levi's Stadium partner with Martha's Kitchen throughout the year by donating excess food after stadium events. Martha's Kitchen's mission is to "feed the hungry with dignity, no questions asked, no judgements made."
- In April of 2018, along with several teammates, Kittle attended the eighth annual UCSF Benioff Children's Hospital Prom in San Francisco.
- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during a designated home game between Weeks 13-15 of 2018. Kittle and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. The Pat Tillman Foundation unites and empowers military veterans and spouses as the next generation of public and private sector leaders committed to service beyond self.

CAMERON LATU

TE × 6-5 × 244 × ALABAMA

2.24.00 × HOLLADAY, UT × ROOKIE × ACQUIRED D-3C IN '23

GOLDMINE

- After playing DE in high school and OLB as a freshman at Alabama, Latu was asked to switch to TE. At first, he was hesitant to move over to offense. "I was shocked," Latu said. "What? You're talking about me playing tight end? I don't know about that, especially at the college level, blocking and stuff. That's all I could think about. I did not wanna block. But I love blocking now. I love that."
- Latu grew up in Chisholm, MN, a town that's home to less than 5,000 people. His mother, Jill Argust-Fine, thought it was a safe environment for her three sons to grow up in, so she moved her family there when Latu was two years old despite being a Los Angeles native herself.

LATU'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Has a twin brother, Nathan, who plays DE at Oklahoma State and an older brother, Sioka, who played DL at St. Cloud State (MN). The twins played alongside each other on the defensive line at Olympus (Holladay, UT) HS.
- Grew up in Chisholm, MN, where his primary sport was rugby. Moved to Utah in 2013 where he began playing football.
- The first two catches of his collegiate career were a 9-yd. TD recept. and a 25-yd. TD recept. in Alabama's 2021 season opener vs. Miami (FL). Went on to haul in 8 rec. TDs that season, which stands as the most rec. TDs by an Alabama TE in a single season in program history.

DEONMODORE LENOIR

DB × 5-10 × 200 × OREGON

10.6.99 × LOS ANGELES, CA × 3RD YEAR × ACQUIRED D-5B IN '21

AWARDS & HONORS

2022: NFL Way to Play (Week 4)

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Tallied 9 tackles and 1 INT of Rams QB Matthew Stafford at LAR (9/17).
- Notched 5 tackles and 1 INT of Browns QB P.J. Walker at Cle. (10/15).
- Registered 3 tackles and 1 INT of Commanders QB Sam Howell at Was. (12/31), giving him 3 INTs on the season and 4 in his career.

GOLDMINE

- Lenoir grew up in a hard-working family that always stressed education and hard work. His father works in construction as his mother works at home, constantly reminding Lenoir of the sacrifices you make for success.

- Attributes his aspirations to his upbringing and community that pushed him in a competitive environment. "Growing up in South Los Angeles taught me a lot," he said. "It taught me to stay focused in order to be able to go where I want to go, and that's to the NFL. You have to stay in the classroom and do what you're told to do."

LENOIR'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His name is pronounced dee-AH-mo-door, luh-NOOR.
- Goes by nicknames 'Demo' or 'Dede.'
- Comes from a large family, as he is the ninth child of 12.
- Was coached by D'Vah Thomas in high school, a long time friend of former 49ers CB Richard Sherman. With both men serving as mentors, he considers them "family."

GOLDMINE

- McCaffrey founded the Christian McCaffrey Foundation shortly after entering the NFL. The foundation's mission is to serve as a catalyst for the community and country by supporting those who sacrifice daily for the benefit of many. We show up for our servicemen and women for standing at the front of the most critical challenges of our time. Since its inception, McCaffrey's foundation has expanded beyond the military. In addition to working to prevent veteran suicide, the foundation supports front line workers, serves underserved youth and provides support to children undergoing medical treatment.

In addition to working to prevent veteran suicide, the foundation supports front line workers, serves underserved youth and provides support to children undergoing medical treatment.

- His foundation's Logan Project strives to connect children going through medical treatment through gaming in honor of Logan Hale, a fan of McCaffrey who passed away after a battle with cancer in 2021. "I found out he had been buried in my jersey, and I just kind of broke down. That hit me like a ton of bricks. "I found out he wanted to do this while he was going through what he was going through. I was extremely determined to make that happen." After reading Hale's obituary, which mentioned his video game dream, McCaffrey decided to put his vision into action. "I know Logan would be over the moon, to see this actually come true," Hale's mother, Kristina, said. "But most of all because his favorite player, the person he admired the most, is making it come true."
- McCaffrey returns home to Denver annually each June to help staff his father's Dare to Play football camp. Dare to Play partners with the Global Down Syndrome Foundation to ensure people with Down Syndrome have the ability to play the game of football. McCaffrey has been a counselor at Dare to Play since he was a freshman in high school in 2010. Since then, the camp has given hundreds of people with down syndrome an opportunity to play.

WR × 5-9 × 190 × CLEMSON

10.15.96 × TAMPA, FL × 6TH YEAR × ACQUIRED FA IN '22

GOLDMINE

- McCLOUD credits his work ethic, not only to his family who taught him responsibility and discipline, but also to New England Patriots WR Nelson Agholor. Although almost four years apart, Agholor and McCLOUD grew up together in Tampa where they took their friendship from youth football to the NFL. The veteran receiver served as a mentor to McCLOUD. "We stay in contact all the time about life decisions. I've always stayed close with him in that way. When he got drafted I was so excited," Agholor said.
- McCLOUD recently launched his own charitable organization, the RMIII foundation, which is focused on raising awareness for ADHD and helping families with how to handle the very common learning challenge. The cause is a personal one based on his own journey with ADHD. He was diagnosed in the third grade and struggled to overcome many obstacles, yet still graduated with honors. "Before I was diagnosed, I felt pretty bad getting blamed for not being a good student or being labeled a bad kid when nobody understood that sometimes I had to work twice as hard on a simple task while other times the schoolwork came easy but sitting still did not. I turned my focus to sports to balance my hyper-activity," said McCLOUD. "Luckily, I had great support from my family. After getting help, I didn't feel alone."

McCLOUD'S GOLDEN NUGGET

- Lists his father, Raymond McCLOUD Jr., as his biggest inspiration. The elder McCLOUD played football at the University of Arkansas.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- McCLOUD chose to bring light to the topic through the NFL's My Cause My Cleats initiative during Week 14 of the 2021 season.
- The foundation was established in 2021 and is partnering with other ADHD non-profits to bring families together to provide knowledge of ADHD and available resources, to improve self-esteem for kids and to work on improving the future for kids who suffer from ADHD and their families. McCLOUD plans to hold athletic camps for ADHD youth as a way to channel their energy, something that helped him get to where he is today.

OL * 6-6 * 301 * WEST VIRGINIA

8.9.96 * JACOBSBURG, OH * 4TH YEAR * ACQUIRED D-5 IN '20

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Helped allow zero sacks on 28 pass attempts by QB Brock Purdy and QB Sam Darnold at Arz. (12/17).

GOLDMINE

- McKivitz is a lover of outdoor activities, as he frequently spends his time with his dad, Matt, fishing and hunting, for deer, ducks and squirrels. "It was really my dad that got me into it," said McKivitz. "He's got me into everything in the outdoors, really. That's me and dad's time, the outdoor time. I'm just lucky to have that type of figure to learn from and that's kind of what I love most about the outdoors." Matt is known for creating unique hats from the animals the two of them have hunted. The elder McKivitz is famous for being seen sporting one at each of West Virginia's home games.

MCKIVITZ'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- In addition to playing football, McKivitz was a four-year basketball player at Union Local (Jacobsburg, OH) HS, earning all-state honors as a senior in 2014.
- Didn't participate in organized football until he enrolled at Union Local before his sophomore year of high school in 2012.
- He caught his first fish, a bluegill, at age 3. McKivitz notes that the largest fish he's ever caught was an 8-pounder which he caught in the Summer of 2019.
- Is a fan of country music, citing Kenny Chesney and the Zac Brown Band among his favorites.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- While the Mountaineers were on a bye in September of 2019, McKivitz returned to his former high school, Union Local, in Ohio to be honored at the homecoming game. The Jets retired McKivitz's number 53 in a pregame ceremony, an honor that McKivitz doesn't take lightly. "It was huge. At the time I didn't really understand the meaning of it. But now, once you look back on it, that number will never see the field again. It's a pretty big honor for me." Former Union Local offensive line coach Brion Schiappa echoed the sentiment, saying, "We're all just so proud of what Colton has accomplished, and it meant a great deal to honor him in that way."

AWARDS AND HONORS

2021: FedEx Ground Player of the Week (Week 8)

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Registered 17 carries for a team-high 80 yds. and 1 TD at Was. (12/31), marking his first rushing TD of the season and 8th of his career.
- Registered 14 carries for a team-high 52 yds. and 1 TD vs. LAR (1/7/24).
- With 1 rushing TD last week vs. Was. (12/31/23) and 1 rushing TD vs. LAR (1/7/24) it marks the 3rd time in Mitchell's career that he has scored 1-or-more rushing TDs in consecutive games and the first time since the 2021 season [1 TD vs. Min. (11/28/21); 1 TD at Sea. (12/5/21)].
- Registered 4 carries for 7 yds., including a 3-yd. TD vs. Det. (1/28/24 - NFC-C) marking the 2nd touchdown of his playoff career.

GOLDMINE

- Mitchell has always paired his love for football with his love for those around him on and off the field. In 2020, Mitchell led his team to a win in Louisiana's final game, and dedicated the feat to the late Coach Looney, the team's offensive line coach who died of a heart attack during an August team workout shortly before the start of preseason camp. On what would have been coach Looney's 32nd birthday, Mitchell and the offense ran the ball for 265 rushing yards to cement the victory. "It was very important (to end the season with a win), man," said Mitchell. "We've been through so much with coach Looney, with just everything going on," Mitchell said, "and we just put it in our minds that we just wanted this year to be great, no matter what the circumstances."
- In November of 2016, when Mitchell and Erath HS chased its first playoff win in 12 years. Former Bobcat Ross Granger neared the end of a lengthy battle with brain cancer. Realizing that his childhood friend might not have much more time, Mitchell – then a senior – played inspired. Early in the second half, Ross' Father, Nathan informed the team that Ross had died. Mitchell continued to run with a passion and ended the evening with 331 rushing yards in a blowout victory. After the final whistle sounded, Mitchell embraced his QB, Ross' little brother, Mason. Mitchell continues to honor Ross' legacy. In the 49ers win in the 2021 NFC Divisional Round at GB, Mitchell sported wristbands that proud displayed "Team Ross".

MITCHELL'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His love for the game of football has always been palpable to those around him. "I really believe he's in love with football," UL running backs coach Jabbar Juluke said.
- Prides himself on being known as a tough, hardworking running back and earned that reputation amongst his teammates and coaches at Louisiana. "Those moments make you feel pretty good," Mitchell said. "It means that the coaches trust you with the ball when it is crunch time. It makes you feel like you are a playmaker and someone the team can count on when things get tough."

- As a senior at Erath (LA) HS, Mitchell went out of his way to create some special memories for his classmate, Eddie Armond. Armond, who was born with down syndrome, attended every Erath football game. Mitchell showed his appreciation by ensuring Armond got his own opportunity to play. In the 2nd qtr. of a game against rival Patterson (LA) HS, Armond joined the offense at the Patterson 20-yd. line, where Erath was in position to score. Mitchell showed him where to stand and got down in a three point stance in front of Armond as his lead blocker. Erath quarterback, Mason Granger, handed Armond the ball and he took off running up the middle. Armond scored and everyone, including the opposing players, congratulated him for the TD. The play even earned Armond the Gulf Coast Bank/Abbeville Meridional Co-Offensive Player of the Week. "Eddie was beyond ecstatic," said his mother, Dawn Armond. "He called himself the Erath king. Elijah was his best friend. When we were on the sidelines and Elijah made a play, he'd look for Eddie and say, 'Eddie, did you see that?,' And he would explain the play to Eddie. He would include him in the game to make sure he knew what was going on. I enjoyed that. When Elijah sat down, Eddie would sit with him. They just kind of blended."

GOLDMINE

- While at Western Michigan, Moore played behind Chukwuma Okorafor, who was drafted himself by the Pittsburgh Steelers in the 3rd round (92nd overall) of the 2018 NFL Draft. Okorafor helped Moore's transition from defensive to offensive line. Said Moore about his time with Okorafor, "He taught me a lot. Just watching him, I feel like I'm more comfortable to have seen what he's done and where he's at now, and everything that he's taught me as far as understanding coverages, understanding spacing and just getting to the right spots at the right time."
- Moore was invited and attended the 2021 Reese's Senior Bowl in Mobile, AL. He, along with former WMU teammate D'Wayne Eskridge (pictured below), were part of the National Team. Moore and Eskridge will see each other twice a year as Eskridge was drafted in the 2nd round (56th overall) of the 2021 NFL Draft by the Seattle Seahawks.

MOORE'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Gained 25 pounds his senior season at Consortium College Prep (Detroit, MI) to transition from tight end to the offensive line. Western Michigan's head coach at the time, P.J. Fleck, saw him make the transition to offensive line his senior year, leaving his impression on Fleck as a "hidden gem."
- State of Michigan football is in his family as his cousin, Timothy Ford, played at Siena Heights University.

ISAIAH OLIVER

26

CB * 6-0 * 210 * COLORADO

9.30.96 * PHOENIX, AZ * 6TH YEAR * ACQUIRED FA IN '23

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Registered 6 tackles and 1 INT of Rams QB Matthew Stafford at LAR (9/17).
- Notched 9 tackles and 1 FR vs. Cin. (10/29), marking his 1st FR of the season and the 2nd of his career [9/26/21 at NYG].

GOLDMINE

- Coming out of high school, Oliver was a highly successful two-sport athlete. In addition to being all-state and all-section in football during his career, Oliver also lettered four times in track & field, earning all-state honors his junior and senior year. He participated in the decathlon and was a state champion in the 110-hurdles, 300-hurdles and was on Brophy College Prep (Phoenix, AZ)'s state championship 4x400 relay team as the anchor.

- Oliver's track & field coach in high school was his father, Muhammad, who was a NCAA All-American. Muhammad finished 4th at the NCAA decathlon championship in 1992 with a score of 8,087 and also played CB at the University of Oregon.
- Following in his father's footsteps, Oliver continued to be a dual-sport athlete in college. He competed in the decathlon for two years at Colorado and earned All-Pac-12 honors in both seasons he competed. Oliver finished 4th in the event at the Pac-12 Championships as a sophomore and posted the highest score (7,331) by a Colorado decathlete in 43 years at the California Invitational.

OLIVER'S GOLDEN NUGGET

- His father, Muhammad, and uncle, Damon Mays, both played in the NFL. Muhammed played DB for the Denver Broncos (1992), Green Bay Packers (1993), Kansas City Chiefs (1993), Miami Dolphins (1994) and Washington Commanders (1995), while Damon was a WR for the Houston Oilers (1992-93).

GOLDMINE(CONTINUED)

- Track & field not only helped Oliver get to the NFL, it introduced him to his wife, Drianna, as she competed at Colorado in the pentathlon and outdoors in the heptathlon. Drianna registered top-ten finishes in every pentathlon she competed in and placed 13th at the Pac-12 Championships two-consecutive years in the heptathlon.

GOLDMINE

- When he's not on the football field, one of Pepper's favorite hobbies is video game streaming. After signing a contract with the New York Giants in 2018, his first purchase was video game equipment. "I got a computer and two monitors," said Pepper. "I've been watching streams on Twitch since early 2012, 2011. It's my main form of entertainment, even today." At one point, Pepper was streaming on a full-time basis, garnering a few hundred views each day playing games like World of Warcraft, Skyrim and more. "More and more people are going to be exposed to technology, which means video games will be more accessible, which will increase the competition level in e-sports," said Pepper. Following his NFL career, Pepper has considered pursuing a career in e-sports. "I also would love to find a way to join an e-sports organization," said Pepper. "The one I have my eye on is 100 Thieves. They have some really good teams, but alongside that, they have a really awesome streetwear presence and are expanding to be more than just an e-sports organization. I think it'd be a cool look to have a pro athlete be a part of it."

PEPPER'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Participated in track & field at Saline (MI) HS.
- Father, Cam, was an offensive lineman at Illinois.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- An undrafted free agent, Pepper knows that the NFL can be unpredictable. While preparing for an opportunity to sign with a team, Pepper began offering lessons to local long snappers in the East Lansing and Grand Rapids areas. The lessons were a way to help make some extra income as well as extra practice before joining a team. "You just never know when you are going to get a call," said Pepper.

GOLDMINE

- In 2022, NFL Players have the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during a designated home game between Weeks 13-15. Pryor and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Pryor chose to raise awareness for mental health and supported Kicking the Stigma, an organization striving to "Kick the Stigma" around mental health and encourage anyone battling these illnesses to seek the help they need.

2023 HIGHLIGHTS (CONTINUED)

- Purdy completed each of his 10 passing atts. in the first half vs. Arz. (10/1). His 10-straight completions mark the first time that a 49ers QB has completed all of his passing atts. in a half (min. 10 atts.) since former QB Steve Young in 1994, when he went 11/11 in the second half at SD (12/11/94), according to the Elias Sports Bureau.
- Purdy started the game with 13-straight completions, which is the most consecutive completions to begin a game by a 49ers QB since QB Jimmy Garoppolo in 2021 [12 straight completions to start game vs. LAR (11/15/21)].
- In his 10th career start vs. Dal. (10/8), Purdy completed 17 of his 24 passing atts. for 252 yds. and 4 TDs with a passer rating of 144.4, leading the 49ers to a 42-10 victory. His 10-consecutive wins as a starter are tied for the second-most wins to begin a career in NFL history.
- Completed 17 of his 24 passing atts. for 252 yds. and a career-high 4 TDs with a passer rating of 144.4 vs. Dal. (10/8).
- Purdy's 4 TD passes vs. Dal. (10/8) marked his eighth career game with 2-or-more TD passes, tying him with HOF QB Kurt Warner and then Houston Texans QB Deshaun Watson for the most games with 2-or-more passing TDs in a player's first 10 career starts.
- In his 10th career start vs. Dal. (10/8), Purdy completed 17 of his 24 passing atts. for 252 yds. and 4 TDs with a passer rating of 144.4, leading the 49ers to a 42-10 victory.
- With the win vs. Dal. (10/8), Purdy has improved to 10-0 as a starter in the regular season in his career, which ties Kansas City Chiefs QB Mike Livingston and former Chicago Bears QB Mike Tomczak for the second-most consecutive wins by a quarterback to begin a career in NFL history.

MOST CONSECUTIVE WINS BY A QUARTERBACK TO BEGIN A CAREER, NFL HISTORY

- Completed 19 of his 26 passing atts. for 296 yds. and 3 TDs with a career-high passer rating of 148.9 at Jax. (11/12).
- Completed 21 of his 25 passing atts. for 333 yds. and 3 TDs with a career high passer rating of 158.3, the highest attainable mark vs. TB (11/19).
- Purdy's 158.3 passer rating on 25 passing atts. vs. TB (11/19) made him the first 49ers QB to reach that mark (min. 20 atts.).
- With a passer rating of 158.3 vs. TB (11/19), Purdy (23-years-old) joined Baltimore Ravens QB Lamar Jackson and then Los Angeles Rams QB Jared Goff as the only QBs under the age of 24 in NFL history to attain a passer rating of 158.3.
- Purdy also became the first 49ers QB to post a passer rating of 140.0-or-higher in consecutive games since QB Alex Smith in 2012 [157.1 passer rating at Arz. (10/29/12); 143.8 passer rating vs. StL (11/11/12)].
- Completed 18 of his 32 passing atts. for 255 yds. vs. Bal. (12/25).
- With 255 passing yds. vs. Bal. (12/25), Purdy has 4,050 passing yds. this season, making him the 3rd QB in 49ers franchise history.

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS

- Became the first rookie in the Super Bowl era with at least 2 TD passes, 1 rushing TD and a passer rating of 125-or-higher in his first career start (12/11/22 vs. TB). His 134.0 passer rating is the 6th-highest by an NFL QB in their first career start since at least 1970, while his 76.2 completion percentage is the 8th-highest by an NFL QB in their first career start since at least 1970.
- Is 1 of 7 QBs since at least 1970 to register 2-or-more passing TDs and 1-or-more rushing TD in their first NFL start [Daniel Jones (NYG), Kyle Allen (Car.), Cam Newton (Car.), Jake Delhomme (NO), Jeff Garcia (SF) & Vinny Testaverde (TB)].
- Is the only rookie QB since 1950 to win his first 3 NFL starts and throw 2-or-more TD passes in each game.
- Purdy has now registered 4 games this season with 3-or-more TD passes and a passer rating 140.0-or-higher, which ties former QB Tom Brady (4 games in 2007) and New York Jets QB Aaron Rodgers (4 games in 2011) for the most such games by a QB in a single season in NFL history.
- Purdy's 5 career games with a passer rating of 140.0-or-higher in his first two seasons are the most by an NFL QB in their first two seasons in NFL history.
- Purdy's 70.4% completion percentage through his first 10 career starts mark the 2nd-highest completion percentage by a QB in their first 10 career starts in NFL history.
- Purdy's 121.1 passer rating through his first 10 career starts marks the highest passer rating by a QB in their first 10 career starts in NFL history.
- With a passer rating of 148.9 Week 10 at Jax. (11/12/23) and a passer rating of 158.3 vs. TB (11/19/23), Purdy became the youngest player in NFL history to post a passer rating of 145.0-or-higher in consecutive starts and the first NFL QB to post a passer rating of 145.0-or-higher in consecutive starts since former QB Drew Brees in 2018 [150.4 passer rating at Cin. - Purdy (15 starts) became the 6th QB in NFL history to post a passer rating of 100-or-higher in 10 of his first 15 career starts (HOF QB Kurt Warner - 11 starts; HOF QB Dan Marino - 10 starts; QB Ben Roethlisberger - 10 starts; Kansas City Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes - 11 starts; Dallas Cowboys QB Dak Prescott - 11 starts).

GOLDMINE

- When playing paintball in the desert with his Perry (Gilbert, AZ) HS teammates in May 2017, Purdy suffered a punctured left hand from a Saguaro Cactus. "It's something that everyone's done," Purdy said on the game in the desert. "It's one of those group things that you do to build chemistry." The team-building exercise forced Perry's starting QB to miss spring ball headed into his senior season. However, Purdy was largely unfazed by the injury to his non-throwing hand as the Queen Creek, AZ native threw for 4,405 yds. and 57 TDs that fall en route to winning Arizona Gatorade Player of the Year.

GOLDMINE

- Samuel, a South Carolina native, knew he wanted to stay close to home when he went to college. Growing up with eight siblings, family has been a staple in his life. Step-mom, Precious Martin, noted that Deebo and his siblings were always hanging out at the house and encouraging each other to accomplish their goals. One of her goals was to finally get her college degree after struggling in college during her youth. Deebo, like with the other members of his family, was there to support her, often helping her with her homework. “Deebo used to help me a lot with my math courses,

- A retail management major at South Carolina, Samuel is passionate about fashion and his appearances in front of the camera. His fashion flair became something he was known for during his time in Columbia, usually with help from his stepmom, Precious. Martin and Samuel would often video chat while he was away from home so she could help pick out his outfits. “I love it. It makes me feel like he needs me,” she said. “I can’t get enough of it. I don’t know if he does it more for me or more for him.” Samuel was even referred to as the best dressed player at SEC Media Day. When asked about Samuel’s style, a former coach remarked that his style doesn’t always coincide with his personality. “Coming through here he’d always be dressed to the max. It’s surprising knowing how humble he is and soft-spoken he is, but it’s almost like his clothing is his alter-ego,” said Steven Fusaro, who coached Deebo during his time at Chapman High. Following his football career, Samuel hopes to start his own clothing line. his outfits. “I love it. It makes me feel like he needs me,” she said. “I can’t get enough of it. ## GOLDMINE

- In April of 2022, Thomas joined Muslims of the World and Mercy-USA in flying thousands of miles to a small village in Somalilands, Somalia, where villagers had no access to water. Food and water in the area are very scarce as Somalilands had not seen rain in nine months, leaving the land arid and it's people thirsty. Thomas met with children of the village, distributed clean water to the villagers and even offered to match any donation of the suggested $50 a month through a social media post. "The situation is heartbreaking, but just $50 could spark a change," said Thomas, who saw the visit as the perfect way to kick off Ramadan. Thomas' efforts online paid off, as he was able to reach over 10,000 supporters to the Somaliland Water Relief campaign who raised over $500,000 within a week of the first post.

- In June of 2019, Thomas was diagnosed with colitis. He quickly lost 35 pounds and was told he would not be able to play. Thomas dedicated himself to his return throughout a 34-day hospital stay. Thomas became a leader on his team and took charge in every way he could. "I don't know how he did it," former Michigan defensive coordinator Don Brown said. "I really don't. He's a special guy, now. Some guys would have missed a lot of time. Not this guy. He didn't miss a thing. That was the thing – I would walk off shaking my head: 'I can't believe this guy is functioning as well as he is. But that's who he is.'"

- His defensive coordinator wasn't the only coach who was impressed with Ambry's determination. "One thing that really stands out, looking back on it, was Ambry's attitude, his positive attitude, his attention to detail in terms of doing everything the doctors told him," Michigan coach Jim Harbaugh said. "Right down to the rest, the diet, the fluids he was taking in. He was so mature with the attitude that he had."

THOMAS' GOLDEN NUGGETS

- After dreaming of playing together in high school, cousin Jaylen Kelly Powell joined Thomas at Michigan to be teammates on the Wolverines squad. "We've been playing with each other all our life," Thomas said of Powell. "In Little League, we played Detroit Dolphins together. We were supposed to play at the same high school together, which was (Martin Luther) King, but he went to Cass (Technical). Every time I play him I act like I don't know him."
- Won two state championships at Martin Luther King (Detroit, MI) HS, which he and his teammates cite as honoring his late high school coach, Dale Harvel.

GOLDMINE

- During Week 12 of the 2021 season, Ward traveled to his hometown of McComb, MS during the Chiefs' Bye Week to donate $10,000 worth of holiday food with help from the Boys and Girls Club and the Mississippi Food Network. "This is the place that made me who I am. Like, this is the reason why I'm in the NFL now," Ward said. "I love my hometown. This is the place that made me. I got a lot, so I just chose to give back this year and I'm making it a tradition from now on to give back every year. I just love my people and I want to give back to them." Ward, along with volunteers from The Boys & Girls Club and McComb High School, distributed turkeys and fresh produce to 290 families. Although Ward says this is just the beginning for his newly founded charity, Charvarius for Change.

- When Ward was a child, a large cyst in his hip left him wheelchair-bound for an extended period of time. During this period of his life, Ward built a strong bond with his family, his mother in particular, as they assisted him in all aspects of his daily life. Due to the injury, Ward did not play organized football until his senior year of high school, but against all odds, eventually made it to the NFL.

WARD'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- First name is pronounced char-VEAR-ee-us.
- Founded the 'Charvarius for Change' foundation in 2021. The foundation's inaugural event occurred in November and Ward says there'll be many more coming soon to his hometown of McComb, MS.
- Began his collegiate career at Hinds CC (MS) where he spent two seasons before transferring to Middle Tennessee State University.

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Notched 11 tackles and 1.0 sack of Rams QB Matthew Stafford at LAR (9/17), giving him his 1st sack of the season and 7.5 in his career.
- Notched 8 tackles, 1.0 sack, 1 FF and 1 INT of Cowboys QB Dak Prescott vs. Dal. (10/8).
- Became the first 49ers player to register 1.0-or-more sacks, 1-or-more FFs and 1-or-more INTs in a single game since LB NaVorro Bowman did so in 2013 [1.0 sack, 1 FF, 1 INT at Arz. (12/29/13)].
- Tallied 7 tackles and 1 INT of Cleveland Browns QB P.J. Walker (10/15).
- With 1 INT the previous week vs. Dal. (10/8/23), became the first 49ers LB to record an INT in back-to-back games since LB Ray-Ray Armstrong in 2017 [1 INT Week 4 at Arz. (10/1/17) & 1 INT Week 5 at Ind. (10/8/17)].
- Registered 10 tackles and 1 FF vs. Cin. (10/29).
- Warner's 10 tackles on the day gave him 704 in his career, which passed former LB Ken Norton and former LB Derek Smith for the 2nd-most tackles in franchise history.
- Tallied 7 tackles, 1 PD and 1 INT of Jaguars QB Trevor Lawrence at Jax. (11/12).
- Notched 12 tackles, 2 PDs and split a sack of Buccaneers QB Baker Mayfield with Bosa vs. TB (11/19).
- Warner also registered 1 FF on his 0.5 sack vs. TB (11/19). The FF marked his 3rd of the season and the 10th of his career. His 10 career FFs are tied for the 3rd-most by a 49ers player since at least 2000, according to the Elias Sports Bureau.
- Registered 9 tackles, 1 FF and a 0.5 sack of Cardinals QB Kyler Murray at Arz. (12/17).

WARNER'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- In 2020, was the recipient of the 49ers Len Eshmont Award, which is voted on by the players and is given to the 49er who best exemplifies the inspirational and courageous play of Len Eshmont, an original member of the 1946 49ers team.
- Named the recipient of the 2020 Bill Walsh Award, which was established in 2004 in honor of San Francisco's Hall of Fame Head Coach. The award, which is voted on by the coaching staff, is given to the 49er who has best represented the standard of professional excellence established by Walsh. Walsh served as the team's head coach for 10 seasons from 1979-88. In that time, he compiled a record of 102-63-1 and led the team to three Super Bowls. He was twice named Coach of the Year (1981, 1984) and was later named Coach of the Decade for the 1980s.
- Caught the attention of BYU coaches after a die-hard BYU fan and family friend sent Warner's highlight tape to the coaches and was later offered a scholarship.
- At BYU, was roommates with his younger brother Troy, who played cornerback for the Cougars and signed with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers as a free agent in 2021.

GOLDMINE

- NFL players had the opportunity to participate in the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign during the 2019 season. Warner and his teammates represented their respective causes with custom-designed cleats in an effort to raise awareness and funding. Warner represented Cancer CAREPOINT and said, "I play to honor my grandmother who passed from breast cancer."
- The 49ers hosted the third annual Crucial Catch Fashion Show presented by Dignity Health in October of 2019, featuring cancer warriors representing all cancers as they modeled apparel donated by Levi's. Warner and his teammates were paired with each of the warriors to share their stories of strength and courage with the audience and walk the runway.
- In 2018, became the first NFL rookie since 2000 to begin his career with 4 consecutive games of at least 10 tackles, according to Gamebook Statistics.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- During the 2022 offseason, Warner and his fellow linebackers, Azeez Al-Shaair and Dre Greenlaw, were invited to throw out the first pitch at a San Francisco Giants game. The trio took a few swings at batting practice and mingled with Giants players prior to throwing out ceremonial first pitches and cheering on the hometown team.

- In October of 2019, Warner teamed up with the St. Baldrick's Foundation, a volunteer-powered charity that funds childhood cancer research grants. During the fundraiser, they assisted in shaving the heads of volunteers as a symbol of support of the cancer warriors.
- Warner credits his mother, Laura, as the number one influence in his life. He notes that his mother raised him and his siblings all by herself while making sacrifices along the way. "She taught all of us about hard work," Warner said. On draft day, Laura was by Fred's side as he was selected by the 49ers in the third round. "She was right next to me," he said. "She got the first hug."

2023 HIGHLIGHTS

- Helped allow zero sacks on 28 pass attempts by QB Brock Purdy and QB Sam Darnold at Arz. (12/17).

GOLDMINE

- When Williams was young, he and his family lost his paternal grandfather, John L. Hawkins, due to Type 2 diabetes. It affected Williams deeply, saying, "Not being able to build that relationship with my grandfather, sometimes I still think about it." To honor his memory and expand the awareness and prevention of diabetes, Williams began to serve as an ambassador for the American Diabetes Association in 2014, and has done so ever since in order to help others focus on the importance of wellness in life. "As we all know, it affects a lot of Americans, not just around the world, but in America we have almost 30 million people living with the disease," Williams said. "It's almost catastrophic, and it can be without the right awareness. Obviously, I lost my grandfather at a young age to this disease, so I have a special interest in working with the ADA every year. To me, I feel like it's something that I have to do," Williams said. "I owe it to my family and to myself to do."

WILLIAMS' GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Was the 49ers 2020 and 2021 Garry Niver Award winner, presented annually by the San Francisco Chapter of the Pro Football Writers of America to a 49ers player for his cooperation and professionalism in helping the writers do their jobs.
- Honored in his hometown of Longview, Texas, with "Trent Williams Day" on May 12, 2010 to celebrate his selection in the NFL Draft.
- In 2016, Williams partnered with Nike in order donate over 1,000 shoes to give to each elementary school campus in his hometown of Longview, Texas, for kids who are in need.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- In July of 2022, EA Sports named Williams the first OL to be rated 99 overall in the Madden franchise since NFL Hall of Fame T Walter Jones in 2007.
- During Week 13 of the 2020 season, 49ers players wore custom cleats as a part of the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign. Williams and his teammates highlighted their respective causes, with Williams representing the DFSP Foundation.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- In May of 2017, Williams returned to his roots as he walked through the Lobo Stadium tunnel at his alma mater of Longview High School. Williams returned to Texas to partake in a ceremony held by the school for the 2006 Longview graduate in conjunction with the football team's Green-White Game in order to retire his No. 71 jersey. He became the second former player to have his jersey number retired in the school's history. "It's a surreal feeling," Williams said. "Never in my wildest dreams did I ever imagine getting my jersey retired, especially at a high school like this that's rich in tradition in football. To know that I've done enough in my career, and I feel like I've got a lot left to do, to have my jersey retired, it's a blessing."

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- Throughout his career, Williams has made it a priority to assist and help those who shaped him in his younger years. In 2015, Williams donated $25,000 to his high school alma mater to help fund EKG screening for every member of the football program. He has also donated a new locker room, new shoes for elementary students and Christmas gifts for those in need in his hometown of Longview, Texas. "This is home," his mother, Veronica, said. "Trent loves giving back to the community here. When it's involving children, that's his first love." Williams' former high school coach, John King, added, "The money he's given our football program, our athletic program, our high school, the at-risk kids throughout the district and in this community, he's never forgotten home. He's done a lot of things that haven't gotten recognition. Just a tremendous person."
- In June of 2018, Williams hosted the 5th Life and Skills Camp, also known as Silverback football camp, at Lobo Stadium in his hometown of Longview, Texas. Williams hosted more than 100 athletes during the afternoon with assistance from Los Angeles Rams LB Travin Howard, who also attended Longview High School, as well as other volunteer coaches. Williams enjoys being able to give back to his community, and said, "This is where I grew up, the place that birthed me. Anytime I get a chance to come back and connect with the community, I love it."

GOLDMINE

- Willis' position coach at Oklahoma was Joe John Finley, a former 49ers TE who played for the team from 2008-10. "The first thing that comes to my mind when I think about Brayden is just that dog mentality. You come across a bunch of great football players in your life and one thing they all have in common is they all have that killer mentality. He took that into every part of his life, he was the hardest worker on the team, and he was a leader through his actions," Finley remarked when asked about Willis and his work ethic. "He wore out our jugs machine, I think he caught 10,000 balls the last two summers that he was here. And thats a lot of balls to catch over the summer in addition to all of those things we ask those guys to do, go to class, their workouts, and seven on seven, routes on air, all that good stuff. He actually caught 10,000 per summer which is unbelievable."

WILLIS' GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Has one sister, Grace, who plays soccer at Texas State.
- Earned the nickname "Weight Room Willy" in college for his work ethic and strength in the weight room.
- Hosts an Oklahoma football podcast with his former teammate, Jeremiah Hall, called "The Podcast on the Prairie."

GOLDMINE

- During Week 13 of the 2020 season, 49ers players wore custom cleats as a part of the NFL's annual My Cause, My Cleats campaign. Wishnowsky and his teammates highlighted their respective causes, with Wishnowsky representing the World Wildlife Fund.
- While working as a glazier, a glass installation specialist, in Australia, Wishnowsky's friends began showing him NFL games. After a couple years, he decided to leave his job and move to Melbourne to join ProKick Australia, a training academy for aspiring punters. Founded by Nathan Chapman, an Australian who once had an opportunity with the Packers, the academy has had massive success, with about 50 punters on Division I scholarships. "While Americans grow up wanting to throw the ball, we grow up trying to kick 60-yard goals," he said. "Sure, the techniques are slightly different, but the swing of your leg is pretty much the same. We have that muscle memory drilled into us from a young age."

WISHNOWSKY'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Last name is pronounced wish-NOW-ski.
- Left school at the age of 17 to take an apprenticeship as a glass installation specialist.
- Accumulated 62 punts that traveled 50-or-more yards during his career at Utah, 2nd most in the school's history.

GOLDMINE (CONTINUED)

- Prior to Week 2's matchup in Cincinnati during the 2019 season, the 49ers spent time in Youngstown, OH, where they participated in the Community Blitz. Wishnowsky and some of his teammates joined the students at Williamson Elementary School to talk about inclusion and anti-bullying. The players spoke at an assembly before helping the kids write compliment cards and discuss how to be kind to one another.
- Participated in the 49ers Annual Community Day, helping pack more than 31,000 nutritious meals in collaboration with Feeding Children Anywhere. The meals, along with groceries and backpacks, were distributed to those most in need in East San Jose.
- Wishnowsky is a naturally talented athlete, whether it is something that requires pure strength or skill. While he participated in universally popular athletics, like soccer and rugby, he enjoyed any sort of competition. When he was 12 years old, he won a major West Australian Billiards tournament. Before shifting to football in the U.S., he was a member of a local semi-pro team in the West Australian Football League. While at Santa Barbara Community College, he found that his ideal conditioning was a mix of hitting the weight room and playing beach volleyball.

CHARLIE WOERNER

TE × 6-5 × 241 × GEORGIA

10.16.97 × TIGER, GA × 4TH YEAR × ACQUIRED D-6 IN '20

GOLDMINE

- Woerner grew up in a busy household, as he was brother to six siblings: Rachel, Allen, Peter, Jack, Sally and Lucy. As the second youngest of seven kids, Woerner gained his competitive spirit by trying to keep up with his older brothers. Whether it was on the playground or out hunting, Woerner always pushed himself to keep up the pace set by his siblings. "People ask me, 'Who did you look up to when you were young?'" Woerner said. "I don't say some pro athlete or college athlete. I've always looked up to my big brothers. They're who I spent all my time with. Definitely, without a doubt, they're the biggest influences in my life."

- Growing up in a small town in Georgia, Woerner and his family love outdoor activities, as they all enjoy hunting wild turkey and other game in the area. "I think a lot of it was just being outside playing," he said. "Mom and Dad would make us stay outside for the whole day. We'd go inside to get water and they'd just shove us right back outside. We were always in the woods running around."

WOERNER'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- His last name is pronounced WER-ner.
- Has caught several sharks while fishing in the ocean.
- Woerner followed in the footsteps of his uncle, Scott Woerner, a College Football Hall of Fame defensive back who helped Georgia win a national title in 1980 and was drafted in the 3rd round (80th overall) of the 1981 NFL Draft by the Atlanta Falcons. Additionally, Woerner's father, Kent, was a fullback at Furman University.

6.22.99 * BROADVIEW HEIGHTS, OH * 2ND YEAR * ACQUIRED D-6A IN '22

GOLDMINE

- Zakelj's path to the NFL was anything but traditional. The Brecksville-Broadview Heights (OH) HS product was a zero-start recruit when he joined FCS Fordham University's football team. Once on campus, the former LB converted to OL. If it wasn't for another Fordham teammate and current Miami Dolphins RB Chase Edmonds, Zakelj may have not ended up where he is today. When NFL scouts from all 32 teams came to see Edmonds his senior year, they were struck by the potential Zakelj possessed as a freshman playing offensive line for the first time. The story came full circle when the 49ers drafted the four-year starter five years later in the sixth-round of the 2022 NFL Draft.
- Zakelj earned his Master's Degree in business analytics while at Fordham and is passionate about the subject. Zakelj said if he wasn't in the NFL he'd probably pursue a career in baseball analytics, something he explores in his free time. "Baseball reference is the coolest thing ever. Looking at Barry Bonds' baseball reference page... that 2004 season is so crazy," Zakelj said. "Sites like fan-graphs make it so much easier for a casual fan to understand that stuff. As I got further in my studies at Fordham, I was actually able to take that data and analyze it myself."

ZAKELJ'S GOLDEN NUGGETS

- Last name is pronounced zuh-CAL.
- Played LB at Brecksville-Broadview Heights (OH) HS alongside former Iowa State and current Kansas City Chiefs LB Mike Rose.
- Received All-Patriot-League honors in three consecutive seasons. Was selected to the first-team in 2021 and 2019 and the second team in 2018.
- Member of the Patriot League All-Academic team in 2021.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 10
SAN FRANCISCO 30 × PITTSBURGH 7
ACRISURE STADIUM

The 49ers started the season with a dominant 30–7 road win over the Pittsburgh Steelers at Acrisure Stadium. The 49ers defense opened the game by forcing a 3–n–out capped off by a DL Drake Jackson 10–yd. sack of Steelers QB Kenny Pickett. San Francisco’s offense followed with a 7–play, 54–yd. TD drive including a TE George Kittle 11–yd. reception on 4th–and–1 and culminating in a QB Brock Purdy 8–yd. TD pass to WR Brandon Aiyuk. The Niners defense continued to dominate when CB Charvarius Ward intercepted a QB Kenny Pickett pass intended for WR Diontae Johnson on 3rd–and–5, returning it near midfield. QB Brock Purdy led the 49ers down the field with the help of a 26–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk reception before rookie K Jake Moody tacked on three points with a 41–yd. FG. San Francisco’s defense forced another three–n–out setting up a 19–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk TD catch to start the second quarter, putting the 49ers up 17–0. The Niners tacked on another 32–yd. K Jake Moody FG to extend their lead 20–0 before the Steelers connected on a QB Kenny Pickett 3–yd. TD pass to TE Pat Freiermuth before halftime. The second half was all 49ers, starting with a 65–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run 0:58 into the 3rd qtr. Steelers LB T.J. Watt came up with a strip sack of QB Brock Purdy and the Pittsburgh offense threatened before the 49ers defense came up with a 4th down stop at the SF 8–yardline to keep the Steelers from adding points. San Francisco added another K Jake Moody 40–yd. FG after Niners LB Fred Warner tipped a QB Kenny Pickett pass for a S Talanoa Hufanga interception returned for 28 yards to the SF 48 yardline. The 49ers defense tacked on two more sacks in the final drive to seal the 30–7 Week One victory.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 17
SAN FRANCISCO 30 × LOS ANGELES RAMS 23
SOFI STADIUM

The 49ers improved to 2–0 on the season with a 30–23 win over the Los Angeles Rams at SoFi Stadium. The 49ers offense opened the game with an 11–play, 75–yd. drive including a QB Brock Purdy 13–yd. completion to WR Brandon Aiyuk on 3rd–and–7 and capped it off with a RB Christian McCaffrey 14–yd. rushing TD. The Rams offense responded with an 11–play drive of their own, but the 49ers defense held Los Angeles to a K Brett Maher 43–yd. FG. On the next drive, RB Christian McCaffrey closed out the 1st qtr. with a 51–yd. run to the Los Angeles 13 to help set up a K Jake Moody 27–yd. FG. QB Matthew Stafford and the Rams offense responded with an 8–play, 60–yd. drive ending in a RB Kyren Williams 6–yd. TD recept. After the Rams defense made a stop on the 49ers, the Los Angeles offense drove down the field with the help of an 18–yd. WR Tutu Atwell recept. and a 13–yd. WR Puka Nacua recept. and punched it in with a RB Kyren Williams 4–yd. TD run with less than two minutes left in the first half. San Francisco WR Deebo Samuel opened up the next drive with a 23–yd. recept. on a short pass from QB Brock Purdy. Purdy later connected with WR Jauan Jennings on a 20–yd. pass to get the offense into the red zone. The 49ers closed out the first half with a 1–yd. QB Brock Purdy TD run to tie the game at 17 apiece at the half. After exchanging punts to start the second half, DB Isaiah Oliver came up with an interception of QB Matthew Stafford to set up a 49ers K Jake Moody 57–yd. FG to put the 49ers back on top. The 49ers offense opened up the 4th qtr. with 7–play, 74–yd. drive including a 16–yd. WR Deebo Samuel recept. and a 31–yd. WR Jauan Jennings recept. before getting in the end zone on a Samuel 11–yd. TD run. The Rams responded with a 14–play, 45–yd. drive and a 48–yd. K Brett Maher FG to pull within one score. After punting the ball back to the Rams, the 49ers defense came up big with a DB Deommodore Lenoir interception. 49ers K Jake Moody added a 26–yd. FG to put the Niners back up by 10. The Rams tacked on a K Brett Maher 38–yd. FG with no time left on the clock, allowing the 49ers to hold on to a 30–23 victory in Southern California.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1
ARIZONA 16 * SAN FRANCISCO 35
 LEVI'S STADIUM

The 49ers earned their fourth-straight win with a 35-12 victory over the Arizona Cardinals at Levi's Stadium and improved to 4-0 on the season. The 49ers defense opened the game by forcing a three-n-out and handing the ball to the offense who drove 62 yards on eight plays including consecutive short passes from QB Brock Purdy to RB Christian McCaffrey that went for 12 and 10 yards respectively. The drive culminated in a 1-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to get San Francisco on the board first. On their next offensive drive, San Francisco put together a 9-play, 75-yd. drive resulting in an RB Christian McCaffrey 12-yd. TD run to put the 49ers up 14-0 early in the 2nd qtr. The Cardinals responded with a scoring drive of their own, tacking on a 38-yd. K Matt Prater FG to a 13-play, 40-yd. drive which included an 8-yd. QB Josh Dobbs run to convert a 4th and 7. Following the FG, QB Brock Purdy connected with WR Brandon Aiyuk on an 11-yd. recept. and a 42-yd. recept. on back-to-back plays before later hooking up with RB Christian McCaffrey for a 6-yd. TD pass. Arizona then drove the ball 87-yds. on 13 plays, resulting in a 16-yd. WR Michael Wilson TD catch to make the game 21-10 at the half. The Cardinals defense opened the half by stopping the 49ers near midfield and allowing their offense to get the ball back and drive 99-yds. for an 8-yd. WR Michael Wilson TD. San Francisco responded with a TD drive of their own, seeing QB Brock Purdy hit WR Brandon Aiyuk for 34-yds. and RB Christian McCaffrey cap off the drive with a 2-yd. TD run, his fourth TD of the game, to extend the Niners lead. The Cardinals moved the ball past midfield before DL Javon Hargrave came up with an 8-yd. sack to knock Arizona out of FG range. RB Christian McCaffrey and the 49ers offense marched down the field again, setting up a 1-yd. QB Brock Purdy TD run to take a 35-16 lead late in the 4th qtr. The 49ers defense put an exclamation point on the win with a 4th down goal line stop to keep San Francisco undefeated.

DALLAS 10 × SAN FRANCISCO 42
LEVI'S STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers improved to 5–0 with a 42–10 victory over the Dallas Cowboys at Levi's Stadium on Sunday Night Football. The Niners opened up the game on offense, driving the ball 75 yds. on seven plays ending with a QB Brock Purdy 19–yd. strike to TE George Kittle for a TD. The San Francisco defense followed up with a three–n–out, allowing just one yd. After exchanging punts, the LB Fred Warner forced a fumble on Dallas' RB Tony Pollard and DL Kevin Givens recovered it, setting up the offense on the Dallas 16 yardline. On the first play of the 2nd qtr., RB Christian McCaffrey fumbled the ball and CB Jourdan Lewis recovered on the Dallas 2. The 49ers defense forced another three–n–out with the help of a sack by LB Fred Warner to help set up the offense in Dallas territory. On the next play, QB Brock Purdy hit TE George Kittle in stride for a 38–yd. TD to put the 49ers up 14–0. The Cowboys offense responded on the next drive when QB Dak Prescott connected with WR KaVontae Turpin on a 26–yd. TD to pull back within one score. The 49ers answered back right away, driving the ball 75 yds. on nine plays, ending with a 1–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD. The Cowboys opened the second half with a 6–play, 39–yd. drive resulting in a 50–yd. K Brandon Aubrey FG. On the ensuing drive, QB Brock Purdy connected with WR Brandon Aiyuk for 23 yds. and WR Deebo Samuel for 42 yds. before hooking up with TE George Kittle for a 10–yd. TD, their third of the night. The 49ers defense got the ball back to the offense with a S Tashaun Gipson Sr. interception on the third play of the Cowboys drive. QB Brock Purdy and the offense took advantage, driving 62 yds. on 12 plays and hitting FB Kyle Juszczyk for a 1–yd. TD pass. The Niners defense continued their dominance when DB Deommodore Lenoir tipped a pass intended for WR Michael Gallup, setting up an interception for LB Fred Warner. On the next play, RB Jordan Mason took the ball 26 yds. to the end zone to put San Francisco up by 32 points. The defense sealed the win with an interception by LB Oren Burks on the next drive and the 49ers held on to win 42–10 and remain undefeated.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 23
SAN FRANCISCO 17 × MINNESOTA 22
 U.S. BANK STADIUM

The 49ers dropped to 5–2 on the season after losing 22–17 to the Minnesota Vikings at U.S. Bank Stadium on Monday Night Football. The San Francisco defense opened the game with a CB Charvarius Ward interception of QB Kirk Cousins on the third play of the game. The 49ers offense drove the ball down the field before RB Christian McCaffrey fumbled the ball deep in Minnesota territory and DE Dean Lowry recovered for the Vikings. Minnesota took the turnover and turned it into seven points on a QB Kirk Cousins 20–yd. TD pass to WR Jordan Addison. QB Brock Purdy and the 49ers offense responded by driving the ball to the Minnesota 22–yardline to set up a 40–yd. K Jake Moody FG attempt that he missed wide right. The Vikings worked their way down to the San Francisco 3–yardline before the 49ers defense came up with a goal line stop to force a 21–yd. K Greg Joseph FG. San Francisco responded with a 12–play, 75–yd. drive culminating in a 3–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run. Right before halftime, QB Kirk Cousins hit WR Jordan Addison for a 60–yd. TD to go up 16–7. The Vikings were the first to score in the second half on a 20–yd. K Greg Joseph FG. San Francisco then drove the ball 75 yards on three plays, including a 35–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD reception to pull the 49ers within one score. Vikings K Greg Joseph hit a 54–yd. FG to close out the third quarter and put the Vikings up by eight points going into the 4th qtr. The 49ers responded by setting up a K Jake Moody 55–yd. FG and forcing the first Vikings punt of the game. San Francisco was driving down the field before before S Camryn Bynum came up with an interception on a deep pass intended for WR Jauan Jennings. The Vikings set up a 50–yd. FG, but K Greg Joseph missed wide right to keep the 49ers' deficit at five points. San Francisco drove the ball into Minnesota territory with under a minute to go before S Camryn Bynum came up with his second interception of the game to seal the win for the Vikings.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 29
CINCINNATI 31 * SAN FRANCISCO 17
 LEVI'S STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers fell to the Cincinnati Bengals 31–17 at Levi's Stadium. The Bengals opened the game by forcing a 49ers three–n–out and driving the ball 85 yds. on 10 plays for a 7–yd. WR Tyler Boyd TD receipt. from QB Joe Burrow to go up 7–0 early. The 49ers offense responded with an 8–play, 75–yd. drive ending in a 2–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to tie the game. TB Trayveon Williams took the kickoff 41 yds. to set up the Bengals offense near midfield for a 6–play, 58–yd. TD drive. 49ers DL Arik Armstead came up with a bug sack on third down, forcing a 50–yd. FG try that K Evan McPherson missed wide right, setting up the 49ers offense at their own 40 yardline and leading to a 36–yd. K Jake Moody FG. At the end of the first half, the San Francisco defense came up big with DL Clelin Ferrell forcing a TE Irv Smith Jr. fumble recovered by DB Isaiah Oliver in the red zone to keep the Bengals from padding their lead. Cincinnati opened the second half with a K Evan McPherson 56–yd. FG to go up by seven points. After exchanging punts, the San Francisco offense moved the ball into the red zone before QB Brock Purdy threw an interception to LB Germaine Pratt. The 49ers defense stopped the Bengals near mid field to get the ball back to the offense, but QB Brock Purdy threw an interception to LB Logan Wilson on the next play. The Bengals took advantage on the next play with a 17–yd. TD pass from QB Joe Burrow to WR Ja'Marr Chase. On the next drive, QB Brock Purdy brought the 49ers offense down the field, culminating in a 4–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD receipt. to pull back within one score. Cincinnati responded with a 10–play, 78–yd. drive ending in a 5–yd. RB Joe Mixon TD run. The Bengals sealed their win with a strip sack with less than two minutes in the game.

SAN FRANCISCO 34 × JACKSONVILLE 3
EVERBANK STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers came out of their Bye Week with a 34–3 victory over the Jacksonville Jaguars at EverBank Stadium. San Francisco’s defense started the game with a three–n–out, including a DL Arik Armstead and DL Javon Hargrave third down sack of QB Trevor Lawrence. The 49ers offense followed up with a four play, 57–yd. TD drive including a 29–yd. TE George Kittle reception and a QB Brock Purdy 13–yd. TD pass to WR Brandon Aiyuk. The defense again did not allow a first down on the next drive which ended with a DL Javon Hargrave third down sack to give the ball back to the offense who tacked on a 39–yd. K Jake Moody FG. After exchanging punts, the Niners defense came up big again with a second down DL Nick Bosa and DL Chase Young split sack during which Bosa forced a QB Trevor Lawrence fumble and recovered it to make it 49ers ball near midfield. On their next possession, the Jaguars offense went 80 yds. on 14 plays to set up a 37–yd. K Brandon McManus FG. With 4:20 left in the first half, the 49ers got the ball and drove 61 yds. to set up a 35–yd. K Jake Moody FG before the half to go up 13–3. San Francisco opened the second half with a two–play 75 yd. TD drive including a 66–yd. QB Brock Purdy TD pass to TE George Kittle. The 49ers defense followed up with a S Talanoa Hufanga interception and a CB Ambry Thomas FF and FR on the next two Jacksonville drives. San Francisco took advantage of the turnover, driving 81 yds. and punching it in with a 23–yd. WR Deebo Samuel TD run. On the next drive, LB Fred Warner intercepted a QB Trevor Lawrence pass, setting up a FB Kyle Juszczyk 22–yd. TD reception to put the 49ers up 34–3. The 49ers defense stymied the Jacksonville offense for the rest of the 4th qtr. to seal the win for San Francisco.

TAMPA BAY 14 × SAN FRANCISCO 27
LEVI'S STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers topped the Tampa Bay Buccaneers 27–14 at Levi's Stadium for their seventh win of the season. After exchanging punts to open the game, the 49ers offense went 80 yds. on 12 plays including 15–yd. and 14–yd. QB Brock Purdy passes to WR Deebo Samuel and WR Brandon Aiyuk respectively and ended with a 4–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD receipt. On the ensuing drive, the San Francisco defense forced a turnover when DL Nick Bosa and LB Fred Warner combined to sack QB Baker Mayfield and Warner knocked out the ball which was recovered by DL Clelin Ferrell, returning the ball to the Niners offense who took the ball 46–yds. to set up a K Jake Moody 37–yd. FG. The Buccaneers answered with a 10–play, 75–yd drive ending in a 1–yd. WR Mike Evans TD receipt. With less than two minutes to go in the half, the Niners moved the ball down the field with the help of a 37–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk receipt. and set up a 28–yd. K Jake Moody FG to go up 13–7 at the half. On their first possession of the second half, San Francisco QB Brock Purdy hit WR Brandon Aiyuk for a 76–yd. TD pass. THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 23
SAN FRANCISCO 31 × SEATTLE 13
 LUMEN FIELD

The San Francisco 49ers left Seattle with a 31–13 win over the Seahawks at Lumen Field on Thanksgiving. The 49ers offense opened the game with a nine–play, 71–yd. drive resulting in a 2–yd. WR Deebo Samuel TD run. After a 66–yd. kickoff return, the Seahawks started in San Francisco territory, but the defense allowed just one yard, firing a 51–yd K Jason Myers FG. After exchanging punts, the 49ers 45 yds. on nine plays for a RB Christian McCaffrey 1–yd. rushing TD. On the next drive CB Ambry Thomas intercepted a QB Geno Smith pass intended for WR Tyler Lockett but the offense was unable to turn it into points. After punts from each side, QB Brock Purdy led the offense down the field behind a 22–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk reception and a 12–yd. pass to WR Deebo Samuel to set up an 8–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD. The 49ers recovered a Seahawks muffed punt in Seattle territory to set up a 32–yd. K Jake Moody FG to go up 24–3 at the half. The San Francisco defense came up with a big stop to start the half including a DL Nick Bosa sack on third down to force a punt, but QB Brock Purdy threw a pick–six on the next drive bringing the Seahawks within two scores. On their next drive, the Seattle offense took the ball 78 yds. on 14 plays to set up a 30–yd. K Jason Myers FG. The next points came from San Francisco on a 28–yd. TD strike from QB Brock Purdy to WR Brandon Aiyuk. The defense held on for the rest of the 4th qtr. to secure the 31–13 victory.

SUNDAY, DECEMBER 3
SAN FRANCISCO 42 × PHILADELPHIA 19
LINCOLN FINANCIAL FIELD

The 49ers went into Philadelphia in Week 13 and came out with a 42–19 win. The San Francisco offense started slow with back-to-back three–n–outs to start the game and did not get a first down in the 1st qtr. The defense allowed the Eagles to drive deep into San Francisco territory on their first two possessions, but held strong allowing only a 26–yd. and 39–yd. K Jake Elliott field goals to keep the score at 6–0 going into the 2nd qtr. After the defense forced the first Eagles punt to open the 2nd qtr., the 49ers offense drove the ball 85 yds. on 11 plays culminating in a 2–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk TD reception to take the 7–6 lead. San Francisco forced another Philadelphia punt and the offense drove the ball 90 yds. on 10 plays, including a 25–yd. strike from QB Brock Purdy to TE George Kittle to help set up a 2–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to go into halftime leading 14–6. San Francisco opened up the second half with a 7–play, 75–yd. drive ending in a 12–yd. WR Deebo Samuel rushing TD to extend the lead. On the next drive, the Eagles punched in a 1–yd. QB Jalen Hurts TD run. The 49ers responded immediately with a 48–yd. WR Deebo Samuel TD run followed by the defense forcing a three–n–out. San Francisco opened up the 4th qtr. with another TD drive, including an 11–yd. RB Elijah Mitchell run and ending in an 18–yd. WR Jauan Jennings receiving TD. The Eagles then drove the ball 71–yds to punch in a 2–yd. WR DeVonta Smith TD reception but failed to convert the two–point conversion, keeping the 49ers up by 16 points. WR Deebo Samuel all but sealed the win with a 46–yd. catch–and–run TD to put the 49ers up 42–19. The defense denied the Eagles their 4th–and–12 attempt to close out the game and seal the victory for San Francisco.

 LEVI'S STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers faced off against the Seattle Seahawks for the second time in three weeks and walked away with a 28–16 victory at Levi's Stadium. The 49ers opened the game with a RB Christian McCaffrey 72–yd. run to the Seattle 3 yardline before RB Jordan Mason punched it in on the next play. The Seahawks responded with an 8–play, 75–yd. TD drive of their own when QB Drew Lock connected with WR DK Metcalf on a 31–yd. TD pass. After exchanging punts on the next three drives, the Seahawks moved the ball down the field with back–to–back 23–yd. RB Zach Charbonnet runs to set up a K Jason Myers 40–yd. FG. On the Niners next offensive drive, QB Brock Purdy threw an interception to S Julian Love but the defense forced the Seahawks to punt and gave the ball back to the offense who took it 83–yds. in 5 plays, ending in a 54–yd. TD pass from QB Brock Purdy to WR Deebo Samuel. After exchanging punts for much of the 3rd qtr., the 49ers took the ball 75 yds. on seven plays, including a 45–yd. strike to WR Brandon Aiyuk to set up a 1–yd. WR Deebo Samuel TD run. Seattle came right back with a three–play drive culminating in a TE Colby Parkinson 25–yd. TD reception. San Francisco responded with a 30–yd. QB Brock Purdy pass to WR Deebo Samuel that set up a 44–yd. TE George Kittle TD recept. The 49ers defense held the Seahawks scoreless for the rest of the game, including interceptions from DB Deommodore Lenoir and LB Fred Warner to seal the win.

SAN FRANCISCO 45 * ARIZONA 29
 STATE FARM STADIUM

The 49ers claimed the NFC West for the second straight year with a 45–29 win over the Arizona Cardinals in Phoenix. The Cardinals went 75 yds. on 7 plays, including a 38–yd. QB Kyler Murray pass to TE Trey McBride to set up a RB James Conner TD run to open up the game. The 49ers offense responded with an 8–play, 75–yd. drive of their own resulting in a 12–yd. QB Brock Purdy TD pass to WR Deebo Samuel. On the next drive, CB Charvarius Ward intercepted a QB Kyler Murray pass and returned it 66 yds. for a TD to put the 49ers on top. Arizona opened up the 2nd qtr. with a 58–yd. K Matt Prater FG before forcing San Francisco’s offense to go three–n–out. The Cardinals then took the ball 44 yds. over 11 plays to set up a 43–yd. K Matt Prater FG to pull within one point. On the next drive, the Niners drove the ball 75 yds. for a QB Brock Purdy 5–yd. TD pass to RB Christian McCaffrey to put San Francisco up 21–13 at the half. San Francisco then opened the second half with a 4–play, 75–yd. TD drive, including a 35–yd. TE George Kittle reception and a 41–yd. TD reception by RB Christian McCaffrey. After exchanging punts, with the help of a 44–yd. RB James Conner run, the Cardinals set up a 28–yd. K Matt Prater FG. San Francisco answer back with a 6–play, 60–yd. drive to set up a 1–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run. Arizona opened the 4th qtr. with a scoring drive ending in a RB Emari Demercado 49–yd. TD run. A few plays later, QB Brock Purdy again connected with WR Deebo Samuel on a 19–yd. TD pass to go up by 20 points. On the ensuing drive, CB Charvarius Ward came up with his second interception of QB Kyler Murray to help set up a 43–yd. K Jake Moody FG. On their final possession, the Cardinals scored on an 8–yd. QB Kyler Murray TD pass to TE Elijah Higgins, but the 49ers were able to run out the clock to seal the victory.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 20 * NFC DIVISIONAL ROUND
GREEN BAY PACKERS 21 * SAN FRANCISCO 24
LEVI'S STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers hosted the Green Bay Packers in the NFC Divisional round at a rainy Levi's Stadium on Saturday night. The Packers started with the ball and drove the ball 58 yds. On 14 plays before the 49ers defense forced a 29-yd. K Anders Carlson FG. The 49ers punted the ball back to the Packers who drove the ball to the San Francisco 14 yardline before the 49ers defense forced a turnover on downs by stuffing QB Jordan Love on fourth-and-one. San Francisco took the ball 86 yds. on 12 plays culminating with a QB Brock Purdy 32-yd. TD pass to TE George Kittle. Green Bay responded by taking the ball 64 yds. down the field to set up another 29-yd. K Anders Carlson FG. Before the end of the half, the 49ers offense moved the ball to the 30 yardline of Green Bay to set up a 48-yd. K Jake Moody FG which Green Bay blocked to keep the score 7-6 at the half. After San Francisco opened the second half with a three-n-out, Green Bay drove the ball 75-yds. on nine plays to set up a 19-yd. QB Jordan Love TD pass to WR Bo Melton to take the lead. QB Brock Purdy and the 49ers offense responded with a four-play, 75 yd. drive including a 32-yd. TE George Kittle catch to set up a 39-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run. Green Bay's returner CB Keisean Nixon took the ensuing kickoff 73 yds. to the San Francisco 20 to set up a four-play drive ending in a 2-yd. TE Tucker Kraft TD catch and a QB Jordan Love to RB Aaron Jones two point conversion to put the Packers up 21-14. After going three-n-out, the San Francisco defense came up big when LB Dre Greenlaw intercepted a QB Jordan Love pass to get the ball back to the offense at the end of the third quarter. After exchanging punts at the beginning of the 4th quarter, with the help of a 53 yd. RB Aaron Jones run, the Packers set up a 41-yd. K Anders Carlson FG that he missed wide left, allowing the 49ers to take over at the San Francisco 31-yardline down by four points with just over six minutes remaining. With the help of a 10-yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk 3rd down catch and a 17-yd. WR Chris Conley completion, the 49ers set up a 6-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to take the lead with 1:07 remaining. With the Packers down three and driving, LB Dre Greenlaw nabbed his second interception of the day to seal the 49ers 24-21 win and send San Francisco to the NFC Championship.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 28 * NFC CHAMPIONSHIP GAME
DETROIT LIONS 31 * SAN FRANCISCO 34
 LEVI'S STADIUM

The San Francisco 49ers faced off against the Detroit Lions in the NFC Championship game at Levi's Stadium. The Lions opened the game with a four-play, 75-yd. drive ending in a 42-yd. WR Jameson Williams TD run to go up seven points early in the 1st qtr. The 49ers drove the ball to the Detroit 30-yardline to set up a K Jake Moody 48-yard FG which he missed wide right, giving the ball back to the Lions offense who took the ball 62 yards on 11 plays to set up a one-yard RB David Montgomery TD run. San Francisco's offense responded with an eight-play, 75-yd. drive to set up a 2-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to bring the 49ers within one score. The 49ers defense forced a Detroit punt with the help of a DL Nick Bosa sack, but LB Malcom Rodriguez came up with a QB Brock Purdy interception on the next drive to set the Lions up in San Francisco territory. A few plays later, the Lions found the end zone again on a 15-yd. RB Jahmyr Gibbs TD run. After San Francisco went three-n-out on the next possession, Detroit moved the ball 69 yards on 17 plays to set up a K Michael Badgley 21-yd. FG to go up 24-7 at halftime. The 49ers opened up the second half with a 9-play, 50-yd. drive, including a 26-yd. WR Deebo Samuel reception to set up a K Jake Moody 43-yd. FG to cut the Lions' lead to 14. The 49ers defense came up with a stop on 4th and two in their own territory to keep the Lions off the scoreboard and get the ball back to QB Brock Purdy who connected on a 17-yd. pass with WR Deebo Samuel before hitting WR Brandon Aiyuk on a 51-yd pass to set up a 6-yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk TD reception. On the next play, S Tashaun Gipson Sr. forced a RB Jahmyr Gibbs fumble and DL Arik Armstead recovered it, giving the offense the ball on the Detroit 24-yardline. QB Brock Purdy scrambled for 21 yards to set up a RB Christian McCaffrey 1-yd. TD run to tie the game at 24 apiece. On the next drive, San Francisco's defense forced a three-n-out, allowing the offense to take the ball 65 yards on 11 plays to set up a K Jake Moody 33-yd. FG to give the 49ers their first lead of the game. The defense came up big again, forcing a QB Jared Goff incomplete pass on 4th and three to stop the Lions from scoring. The San Francisco offense responded by taking the ball 70 yards on seven plays, including a QB Brock Purdy 21-yd. scramble and a 25-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey run to set up a three-yd. RB Elijah Mitchell TD run to put the 49ers on top by 10 points with just over three minutes left in the game. Detroit took the ball 75 yards on 11 plays to set up a 3-yd. QB Jared Goff. TD pass to WR Jameson Williams with less than a minute to go in the game. TE George Kittle recovered the onside kick, allowing the 49ers offense to run out the clock and cash in their ticket to Super Bowl LVIII.

NOTES: QB Brock Purdy completed 20 of his 31 passing atts. for 267 yds. and 1 TD with a passer rating of 89.0 to go along with 5 carries for a playoff career-high 48 rushing yds...With the win today, Purdy, who registered 2 playoff wins as a rookie, became the 4th QB in NFL history to win at least 4 playoff games in his first two career seasons...RB Christian McCaffrey registered 20 carries for a team-high 90 yds. and 2 TDs on the ground to go along with 4 recepts. for 42 yds. through the air...With 132 yds. from scrimmage and 2 TDs on the evening, McCaffrey became the 3rd player in NFL history to register 50-or-more yds. from scrimmage and 1-or-more TDs in each of their first 6 career playoff games...McCaffrey has scored 1-or-more TDs in each of his 5 playoff games as a member of the 49ers, which is the most consecutive playoff games by any player in franchise history...RB Elijah Mitchell registered 4 carries for 7 yds., including a 3-yd. Lions 31, 49ers 27
Western Conference Championship
December 22 at Kezar Stadium
(San Francisco, CA)

San Francisco made its first playoff appearance as an NFL team a memorable one, but came up a bit short against the Detroit Lions at venerable Kezar Stadium. QB Y.A. Tittle completed 18-of-31 passes for 248 yards and three touchdowns for the 49ers. Tittle connected with HB R.C. Owens on a 34-yard scoring toss to record the first ever postseason touchdown for San Francisco. He also had touchdown connections with RB Hugh McElhenny and WR Billy Wilson. McElhenny caught six passes for a game-high 96 yards and rushed for 82 yards on 14 carries.

NFC Divisional Playoff
December 27 at Metropolitan Stadium
(Bloomington, MN)

QB John Brodie scored on a one-yard run with just under two minutes remaining to provide the difference as the 49ers claimed a 17-14 decision over Minnesota at a frigid Metropolitan Stadium. San Francisco was trailing 7-0 in the first quarter when Brodie connected with WR Dick Witcher on a 24-yard scoring toss. Brodie completed 16-of-32 passes for 201 yards and one touchdown.

QB John Brodie passed for 262 yards and one touchdown, but it wasn't enough as the Cowboys advanced to Super Bowl V with a 17-10 win over the 49ers at Kezar Stadium. RB Duane Thomas rushed for 143 yards and scored on a 13-yard run in the third quarter to put Dallas ahead 10-3. Later in the quarter QB Craig Morton connected with RB Walt Garrison on a five-yard toss to put the Cowboys up 17-3. San Francisco would add to its final score on its next possession with a 26-yard Brodie-to-WR Dick Witcher touchdown, capping an eight-play, 73-yard drive.

49ers 24, Washington 20
NFC Divisional Playoff
December 26 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

QB John Brodie completed 10-of-19 passes for 176 yards and two touchdowns as San Francisco advanced to the NFC Championship Game with a 24-20 win over Washington at a wet and windy Candlestick Park. Brodie hit WR Gene Washington on a 78-yard play for his first touchdown of the game that helped tie the score at 10-10. On the next 49ers possession Brodie connected with WR Bob Windsor on a two-yard toss into the corner of the end zone that led to a 17-10 lead. The 49ers would insure the victory when DT Bob Hoskins pounced on an errant snap from center and recovered it for a touchdown with just under three minutes remaining in the game. LB Frank Nunley led the defensive effort with 11 tackles and a blocked field goal.

January 2 at Texas Stadium
(Irving, TX)

San Francisco and Dallas combined for just 483 yards of total offense in a low-scoring affair at Texas Stadium. The Cowboys received rushing touchdowns from RB Calvin Hill and RB Duane Thomas as they posted a 14-3 win and earned a bid to Super Bowl VI. San Francisco was paced offensively by RB Vic Washington with 86 yards of total offense. QB John Brodie completed 14-of-30 passes for 184 yards, but was intercepted three times. DE Cedrick Hardman had a big game with 12 tackles, including two sacks. DE Tommy Hart and LB Frank Nunley had 11 tackles each.

NFC Divisional Playoff
December 23 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

QB Roger Staubach came off the bench to rally the Dallas Cowboys with two touchdown passes in the closing minutes of regulation to post a 30-28 come-from-behind win over the 49ers. Staubach connected with WR Billy Parks on a 20-yard touchdown with 1:30 remaining in the game. On the ensuing onside kick the Cowboys recovered and three plays later Staubach connected with WR Ron Sellers for the game winner. The outcome overshadowed several sparkling individual efforts for the 49ers. RB Vic Washington set a club record with his 97-yard touchdown return on the opening kickoff. RB Larry Schrieber also established a then club record by scoring three rushing touchdowns. LB Ed Beard led the Niners defense with 10 tackles while DE Cedrick Hardman added three sacks.

49ers 38, Giants 24
NFC Divisional Playoff
January 3 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

San Francisco returned to the playoffs for the first time since 1972 and posted its first postseason win since 1971 with a 38–24 triumph over the visiting New York Giants. Aiding the 49ers cause was CB Ronnie Lott, who intercepted two passes, including one he returned 20 yards for a touchdown, and recorded five tackles. Offensively, the Niners were paced by QB Joe Montana, who completed 20-of–31 passes for 304 yards and two touchdowns. Montana hit TE Charlie Young on an eight-yard toss in the first quarter and connected with WR Freddie Solomon on a 58-yard strike in the second. Solomon finished the day with six receptions for 107 yards. He was joined by WR Dwight Clark who had five receptions for 104 yards.

NFC Championship
January 10 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

In the most memorable playoff game to date, the 49ers and Cowboys staged an epic battle. In what was a fitting end for some and a heartbreaking one for others, it was the 49ers who came out on top 28–27. QB Joe Montana capped a brilliant day with a six-yard touchdown pass to WR Dwight Clark late in the fourth quarter to overcome a six-point deficit. “The Catch,” as it would come to be known, capped a 13-play, 89-yard drive that took over four minutes off the clock. Montana finished the day with 286 yards on 22-of–35 passing and three touchdowns. Clark posted eight receptions for 120 yards and two touchdowns.

49ers 26, Bengals 21
Super Bowl XVI
January 24 at Silverdome
(Pontiac, MI)

QB Joe Montana accounted for two first half touchdowns and K Ray Wersching added two field goals as San Francisco built a 20–0 lead at the half and held on for a 26–21 victory over the Bengals for its first Super Bowl Championship. Montana scored on a one-yard run in the first quarter and in the second he led the team on a 12-play, 92-yard drive that resulted in an 11-yard scoring toss to FB Earl Cooper. For the game, Montana completed 14-of–22 passes for 157 yards. Wersching also had an impressive outing. The veteran kicker connected on all four field goal attempts in the game, hitting from 22, 26, 40 and 23 yards. The 49ers defense kept the potent Bengals attack in check for much of the game. Cincinnati QB Ken Anderson warmed up in the second half with three touchdowns, two of them on pass plays to TE Dan Ross, but two fourth quarter field goals by Wersching put the game out of reach. LB Jack Reynolds keyed the 49ers defense with seven tackles and one sack. LB Bob Leopold also recorded seven tackles and NT Archie Reese added six stops.

Washington 24, 49ers 21
NFC Championship
January 8 at RFK Stadium
(Washington, DC)

Mark Moseley connected on a 25-yard field goal with 40 seconds remaining to hand San Francisco a heartbreaking 24–21 defeat in the NFC Championship Game at RFK Stadium. The defeat was especially hard to swallow after the 49ers fought back from a 21–0 deficit with 21 fourth-quarter points. QB Joe Montana hit WR Mike Wilson on a five-yard scoring strike 30 seconds into the fourth, snapping the shutout. On the next 49ers possession, Montana hit WR Freddie Solomon on a 76-yard bomb to pull within seven at 21–14. Washington went three-and-out on their next possession, which led to another Montana-to-Wilson touchdown and a tie ballgame. Unfortunately for the 49ers, Washington would launch a six-minute drive that led to the Moseley field goal and the end of the season. Montana finished the game with his typically excellent numbers: 27-of–48 for 347 yards and three touchdowns. Solomon caught eight passes for 106 yards and one touchdown. DT Pete Kugler led the defensive charge with 10 tackles. He was joined by S Carlton Williamson with eight tackles and LBs Riki Ellison and Keena Turner had six stops each.

49ers 21, Giants 10 NFC Divisional Playoff December 29 at Candlestick Park (San Francisco, CA)

QB Joe Montana rushed for 63 yards, passed for 309 yards and the 49ers earned a date in the NFC Championship Game with a 21–10 win over the New York Giants. San Francisco drew first blood when Montana hooked up with his favorite target, WR Dwight Clark, on a 21–yard scoring toss just three minutes into the first quarter. Clark would finish the day with 112 yards on nine receptions. On the Giants next possession, it was S Ronnie Lott who intercepted a QB Phil Simms pass and returned it 38 yards to the New York 12–yard line. Two plays later, Montana hit TE Russ Francis on a nine–yard strike to extend the lead to 14–0. New York would pull within three following LB Harry Carson’s interception and touchdown return off a tipped Montana pass seven minutes into the second quarter. Three minutes later, the 49ers answered when Montana hit WR Freddie Solomon on a 29–yard scoring completion to put San Francisco up 21–10. DE Fred Dean recorded seven tackles and two sacks for the inspired 49ers defense. LB Jack Reynolds added five tackles.

49ers 23, Bears 0 NFC Championship January 6 at Candlestick Park (San Francisco, CA)

San Francisco advanced to Super Bowl XIX with a 23–0 win over the visiting Chicago Bears. The story of the day was the 49ers defense that recorded nine sacks and held the Bears to 186 yards of total offense. Leading the charge for the defense were DE Gary Johnson and DT Michael Carter. Neither Johnson nor Carter were starters in the game, yet they led the squad with two sacks and six tackles each. LB Riki Ellison recorded a team–high eight tackles. Offensively, San Francisco was led by QB Joe Montana and RB Wendell Tyler. Montana threw for 233 yards and one touchdown, a 10–yard toss to WR Freddie Solomon in the fourth quarter. Tyler had 68 yards on 10 carries and scored on a nine–yard jaunt early in the third quarter.

49ers 38, Dolphins 16 Super Bowl XIX January 20 at Stanford Stadium (Palo Alto, CA)

QB Joe Montana passed for 331 yards and accounted for four touchdowns to lead San Francisco to a 38–16 win over the Miami Dolphins. For his efforts, Montana was named Super Bowl MVP for the second time in his career. The game was played at nearby Stanford Stadium in Palo Alto in front of 84,059 fans. Montana’s first touchdown of the day came on a 33–yard strike to RB Carl Monroe late in the first quarter. He followed that with an eight–yard scoring toss to RB Roger Craig in the second quarter. On the next 49ers possession, Montana added his third score of the day, this time taking it in himself on a six–yard run. His fourth and final score came on a 16–yard pass to Craig midway through the third quarter. Craig also had an impressive day totaling 135 yards of total offense and added two scores. San Francisco rolled up an impressive 537 yards of total offense in the game, including 211 rushing yards. S Carlton Williamson and CB Eric Wright each intercepted a QB Dan Marino pass. LB Keena Turner led the team with six tackles.

Vikings 36, 49ers 24 NFC Divisional Playoff January 9 at Candlestick Park (San Francisco, CA)

Minnesota WR Anthony Carter and K Chuck Nelson each established NFL postseason records as the Vikings posted a 36–24 win over hometown San Francisco at Candlestick Park. Carter caught 10 passes from QB Wade Wilson for an NFL postseason record 227 yards. Carter broke the old record of 198 yards that was set by E Tom Fears of the Los Angeles Rams in 1950 against the Chicago Bears. Nelson set his record by kicking five field goals, breaking the old mark of four that was done eight times. San Francisco was led offensively by QB Steve Young, who spelled QB Joe Montana early in the second half. Young completed 12–of–17 passes for 158 yards and one touchdown. He also ran for a team–high 72 yards on six carries and had a five–yard touchdown run.

NFC Divisional Playoff
January 1 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

RB Roger Craig and WR Jerry Rice entered the NFL record books as the 49ers advanced to the NFC Championship Game with a convincing 34–9 win over the visiting Minnesota Vikings at Candlestick. Rice set a record, that he shares with five other players, with three touchdown receptions. He scored on receptions of two, four and 11 yards, all thrown by QB Joe Montana. Rice closed the day with five receptions for 61 yards. Craig entered the record book courtesy of his 80–yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter. The run was the longest touchdown run and the longest run from scrimmage in team postseason history. Craig broke the old record established by RB Marcus Allen with his 74–yard touchdown run against Washington in 1983. Craig finished the day with 135 yards on 21 carries and two touchdowns. The 49ers defense also posted a strong day, recording six sacks, two interceptions and one fumble recovery. S Ronnie Lott had a big day with four tackles, two interceptions and three passes defended. DE Larry Roberts recorded two and a half sacks.

Game time temperatures were in the teens and the wind chill was 26 below zero, but the San Francisco 49ers were hot, as they rolled to a 28–3 win over the Chicago Bears at Soldier Field. QB Joe Montana hit WR Jerry Rice on a 61–yard scoring toss in the first quarter and a 27–yard scoring toss in the second as the 49ers took a 14–3 lead into the half. In the third quarter, it was again the mastery of Montana, who connected with TE John Frank on a five–yard touchdown pass to extend the lead to 21–3. FB Tom Rathman capped a solid day with a four–yard burst into the end zone with 8:07 remaining in the fourth quarter. Rathman finished with 36 yards rushing and caught five passes for 51 yards. The San Francisco defensive charge was led by LB Mike Walter, who posted a game–high 11 tackles and forced a fumble. S Jeff Fuller recorded nine tackles and intercepted a pass. Offensively, Rice finished with 11 receptions for 133 yards and two touchdowns while Montana completed 17–of–27 passes for 288 yards.

Super Bowl XXIII
January 22 at Joe Robbie Stadium
(Miami, FL)

In what proved to be the most exciting Super Bowl game of the decade, it was the play of a collected veteran that delivered San Francisco its third NFL Championship. QB Joe Montana connected on 23–of–36 passes for 357 yards, but no completion would be more important than his last. The game opened at a stand still with neither team having any ability to move the ball offensively. San Francisco opened the scoring on a 41–yard field goal by K Mike Cofer late in the first quarter. The Bengals responded with K Jim Breech's 34–yard field goal and the teams headed to the half locked in a 3–3 tie. The third quarter began with the teams trading field goals before the Bengals broke the touchdown draught. Following a 49ers field goal, Cincinnati KR Stanford Jennings took the Cofer kickoff and returned it 93 yards for a touchdown. It didn't take long for San Francisco to respond. Montana hit WR Jerry Rice for a 31–yard completion and followed that with a swing pass that RB Roger Craig turned into a 40–yard gain. Two plays and 16 seconds later, Montana found Rice in the corner of the end zone for a 10–yard touchdown. An 11–play, 46–yard drive by the Bengals resulted in a 46–yard field goal by Breech, giving Cincinnati a 16–13 lead and leaving the 49ers just 3:20 on the clock. San Francisco received the kickoff and returned it to the 20, but a penalty moved the ball back to the eight–yard line. What happened next is legendary. Montana connected on five consecutive passes to move the ball to the Bengals 35. A holding penalty moved the ball back 10 yards, but Montana responded with a 27–yard completion to Rice and another first down. A quick hit to Craig followed by a timeout left the Niners with second and two from the Bengals 10–yard line. Following the timeout, Montana hit WR John Taylor in the middle of the end zone for a touchdown and San Francisco had its third Super Bowl title of the decade.

NFC Divisional Playoff
January 6 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

QB Joe Montana threw four touchdown passes and RB Roger Craig rushed for 118 yards as the 49ers advanced to the NFC Championship Game with a convincing 41–13 win over the visiting Minnesota Vikings at Candlestick Park. The Vikings opened the scoring on a K Rich Karlis field goal nine minutes into the first quarter, but from that point on it was all San Francisco. The 49ers erupted for 28 consecutive points before halftime to put the game away early. Just 20 seconds after the Vikings initial score, Montana connected with WR Jerry Rice for the first of his four touchdown passes of the afternoon. The play started simply enough before, in true Rice fashion, he turned a seven–yard gain into a 72–yard touchdown. Following an interception by S Chet Brooks, Montana hit TE Brent Jones for an eight–yard touchdown pass and the rout was on. Montana would add touchdown passes to WR John Taylor and another to Rice before handing the game over to reserve QB Steve Young. On the day, Montana completed 17–of–24 passes for 241 yards. The 49ers defense would also contribute a score, courtesy of S Ronnie Lott, who intercepted a QB Tommy Kramer pass and returned it 58 yards for a touchdown.

The 49ers defense intercepted QB Jim Everett three times and held the Los Angeles Rams to 156 yards of total offense as San Francisco earned its fourth trip to the Super Bowl of the decade with a 30–3 win at Candlestick Park in the NFC Championship Game. San Francisco QB Joe Montana was superb in his direction of the 49ers offense, completing 26–of–30 passes for 262 yards and two touchdowns. His first touchdown pass of the game came with 11:27 remaining in the second quarter when he hit TE Brent Jones on a 20-yard strike to give the 49ers a 7–3 lead. CB Tim McKyer intercepted an Everett pass giving the 49ers possession at the Los Angeles 27-yard line. A five-play drive culminated in a one-yard touchdown run by RB Roger Craig. It wouldn't take long for San Francisco to strike again. Gaining possession with 3:10 remaining in the second, Montana calmly directed a 14-play, 97-yard drive that ended with an 18-yard scoring toss to WR John Taylor. K Mike Cofer accounted for the final nine points on three field goals in the second half. Offensively, Montana was joined by Craig, who rushed for 94 yards on 24 carries. WR Jerry Rice caught six passes for 55 yards and FB Tom Rathman added 63 yards rushing and 48 yards receiving.

WR Jerry Rice scored three touchdowns, FB Tom Rathman scored twice and QB Joe Montana earned his third Super Bowl MVP award as the San Francisco 49ers cruised to their fourth NFL Championship of the decade with a resounding 55–10 win over the Denver Broncos. The game was played before a crowd of 72,919 at the Louisiana Superdome in New Orleans, LA. Rice scored on touchdown catches of 20, 38 and 28 yards en route to a seven-reception, 148-yard outing. Rathman scored his two touchdowns on runs of one and three yards. The real story of the game was the play of Montana. He completed a sensational 22-of-29 passes for 297 yards and five touchdowns. He was masterful in his direction of the 49ers offense, leading the team on scoring drives of 66, 69 and 71 yards. The 49ers defense proved to be as devastating as the offense. San Francisco harassed Denver QB John Elway all game, intercepting him twice and sacking him on six occasions. DE Daniel Stubbs led the way with two sacks and was joined by four others who had one sack each. DE Kevin Fagan had six tackles and LB Matt Millen added five.

QB Joe Montana completed 22-of-31 passes for 274 yards and two touchdowns as San Francisco advanced to the NFC Championship Game with a 28–10 win over visiting Washington. Washington opened the scoring on a 31-yard touchdown reception from QB Mark Rypien to WR Art Monk. The 49ers answered with a one-yard touchdown run by FB Tom Rathman that capped an eight-play, 74-yard drive to tie the score at 7–7. Washington added a 44-yard field goal by K Chip Lohmiller just before the end of the first quarter to take a 10–7 lead. That would be all of the scoring for Washington as the 49ers would reel off 21 consecutive points over the next three quarters. Montana hit WR Jerry Rice on a 10-yard strike to complete a 10-play drive, giving San Francisco its first lead of the game four minutes into the second quarter. Five minutes later, the 49ers would extend their lead to 21–10 thanks to an eight-yard touchdown pass from Montana to WR Mike Sherrard. It was the 49ers defense that would cap the scoring for the day. Following a scoreless third quarter, DT Michael Carter intercepted a Rypien pass that had been tipped by DE Charles Haley and returned it 61 yards for a touchdown. CB Don Griffin and DE Kevin Fagan had seven tackles each to lead the 49ers defense.

Kickers and defense were the story of the day at Candlestick as the Giants used five field goals from K Matt Bahr and the Giants defense held San Francisco to 39 yards on the ground to defeat the 49ers 15–13. In the first two quarters, it was Bahr and 49ers K Mike Cofer who provided all the scoring. Bahr connected on a pair of field goals from 28 and 42 yards out. Cofer added field goals of 47 and 35 yards, and the teams entered the half in a 6–6 tie. San Francisco opened the scoring in the third quarter on a 61-yard touchdown pass to WR John Taylor from QB Joe Montana to take a 13–6 lead. From that point on, it was all New York and Matt Bahr. Bahr kicked field goals of 46 and 38 yards to pull the Giants within one at 13–12 with 5:47 remaining. San Francisco took over at its own 20-yard line, but five plays later DT Erik Howard forced a 49ers fumble and LB Lawrence Taylor recovered at the Giants 43-yard line with 2:36 remaining. A pair of QB Jeff Hostetler completions to TE Mark Bavaro and WR Stephen Baker had the Giants in field goal range at the 49ers 29-yard line with 1:10 remaining in the contest. Three plays later Bahr added his fifth field goal of the day, this one from 42 yards away, as time expired. Montana completed 18-of-26 passes for 190 yards and one touchdown. Taylor caught two passes for 75 yards, including the 61-yard touchdown. WR Jerry Rice added five catches for 54 yards. Defensively, San Francisco was led by LB Bill Romanowski's seven tackles. DT Jim Burt, DT Pierce Holt and DE Charles Haley added one sack each.

QB Steve Young threw for 227 yards, including two touchdown passes, and rushed for an additional 73 yards to lead San Francisco to a hard fought 20–13 win over visiting Washington at Candlestick Park. Young tossed a five-yard touchdown pass to WR John Taylor to open the scoring at the 11:48 mark of the first quarter. The teams traded field goals, and then Young hit TE Brent Jones on a 16-yard scoring strike and K Mike Cofer added the extra point to give San Francisco a 17–3 lead at halftime. Washington answered with 10 consecutive points on a K Chip Lohmiller field goal and a QB Mark Rypien one-yard touchdown plunge to cut the 49ers lead to 17–13. The locals responded with a 14-play, 59-yard drive that resulted in a 33-yard Cofer field goal with 2:22 remaining. The San Francisco defense did the rest, sacking Rypien four times on its final drive before forcing Washington to turn the ball over on downs. DT Pierce Holt had four tackles, including three sacks, to pace a determined Niners defense. CB Don Griffin posted a team-high six stops in the victory.

QB Troy Aikman completed 24-of-34 passes for 322 yards and two touchdowns as the Cowboys claimed a 30-20 win over the 49ers. The game was played before 64,920 fans at a rainy Candlestick Park. Dallas opened the scoring with a 20-yard field goal by K Lin Elliott. The 49ers answered with a one-yard run by QB Steve Young to take a 7-3 lead after the first quarter. Cowboy RB Emmitt Smith scored the first of his two touchdowns on a four-yard run at the 5:05 mark of the second quarter to put Dallas up 10-7. San Francisco tied the score three minutes later on a 28-yard field goal by K Mike Cofer. FB Daryl Johnston scored the first points of the second half on a three-yard run at the 10:45 mark of the third quarter to put the Cowboys ahead 17-10. Cofer added a field goal for the 49ers to make the score 17-13 heading into the fourth quarter. It was a battle between Aikman and Young in the fourth. Aikman hit Smith on a 16-yard scoring strike at the 12:25 mark, extending the Dallas lead to 24-13. Young answered back with a nine play, 93-yard drive resulting in a five-yard scoring toss to WR Jerry Rice to trim the Cowboys lead to 24-20. It didn't take long for Dallas to respond. On a first and 10 from their own 21, Aikman hit WR Alvin Harper on a crossing pattern that Harper turned into a 70-yard completion. Three plays later Aikman hit WR Kelvin Martin for a six-yard touchdown to secure the win. Rice had an outstanding day receiving, finishing with eight catches for 123 yards and one touchdown. Young completed 25-of-35 passes for 313 yards and one touchdown. CB Eric Davis had six tackles to lead the 49ers defense. DT Ted Washington and DE Kevin Fagan had two sacks each.

It was a wattered down 49ers attack at Candlestick Park as RB Ricky Watters established an NFL single-game playoff record with five rushing touchdowns in the 44-3 win over the visting New York Giants. Watters scored on runs of one, one, two, six and two yards as he compiled 118 rushing yards on 24 carries. He also caught a team-high five passes for 46 yards from QB Steve Young, who finished the day completing 17-of-22 passes for 226 yards in the victory. The 49ers defense stepped up their play in the win as well. New York was held to 194 total yards, with only 41 yards rushing. DT Dana Stubblefield had two sacks and LB Bill Romanowski added a team-high five tackles. The game was marked by several milestone events: Attendance of 67,143 set a 49ers and Candlestick Park record (since broken), 44 points are most scored by 49ers in an NFC Playoff Game, Watters sets NFL single-game record for postseason rushing touchdowns (5), postseason touchdowns (5) and points scored (30).

The Cowboys broke a 7-7 tie by scoring 21 unanswered points in the second quarter and that proved to be the difference in their 38-21 win over the visiting 49ers. The game was played before 64,902 at Texas Stadium. The Cowboys opened the scoring on a five-yard touchdown run by RB Emmitt Smith at 8:14 of the first quarter. San Francisco responded with a seven-yard touchdown reception by FB Tom Rathman from QB Steve Young early in the second quarter to tie the score. That would be as close as the 49ers would get, as Dallas answered with a 21-point outburst in the final 10 minutes of the second quarter to take a 28-7 halftime lead. San Francisco scored its second touchdown of the game at the 5:47 mark of the third quarter. RB Ricky Watters capped a six-play, 43-yard drive with a four-yard scamper into the end zone. Dallas sealed the game by scoring 10 consecutive points on a 42-yard touchdown reception by WR Alvin Harper from reserve QB Bernie Kosar and adding a 50-yard field goal from K Eddie Murray. The 49ers would add another touchdown on a one-yard plunge by Young, capping a 17-play, 94-yard drive. San Francisco was paced offensively by Young, who completed 27-of-45 passes for 287 yards and one touchdown.

FB William Floyd rushed for three touchdowns and the 49ers defense held Chicago to just 247 yards in a 44-15 rout of the Bears. Floyd's three scores established him as the first rookie to hit paydirt three times in an NFL playoff game. The Bears actually took an early 3-0 lead on a 39-yard field goal by K Kevin Butler. The Niners bounced back, however, lighting up the scoreboard for 37 unanswered points to put the game away. San Francisco's first points were the result of a 13-play, 68-yard drive that ended with a two-yard run by Floyd. CB Eric Davis then intercepted QB Steve Walsh on the Bears next possession and moments later, QB Steve Young connected with TE Brent Jones for an eight-yard scoring play. The Niners continued to roll in the second quarter, increasing the lead to 30-3 at the half on touchdown runs by Floyd and Young, sandwiched around a K Doug Brien field goal. Floyd's third touchdown of the game midway through the third quarter increased the lead to 37-3 and completed the afternoon's work for many of the San Francisco starters. LB Gary Plummer led a spirited defensive effort, tying the 49ers single-game postseason record with 13 tackles. The 49ers defense also sacked Chicago quarterbacks four times, led by DE Tim Harris' two.

CB Eric Davis returned an interception 44 yards for a touchdown and forced a fumble that San Francisco converted into another touchdown. Those plays set the stage for a defensive effort that produced five takeaways in San Francisco's 38–28 NFC Championship Game win over the Dallas Cowboys. The game was played before a Candlestick Park–record 69,143 (since broken). On the third play of the game, Davis, playing a disguised zone coverage, stepped in front of a QB Troy Aikman pass and sprinted to the end zone. Three plays later, he stripped the ball from WR Michael Irvin and S Tim McDonald recovered. Five plays later, QB Steve Young hit FB Ricky Watters in the flat on a play that produced a 29–yard touchdown and a 14–0 lead. The ensuing kickoff saw 49ers RB Adam Walker jar the ball loose from Dallas returner Kevin Williams and K Doug Brien recovered the fumble. It took seven plays before FB William Floyd plunged in from the one to make it 21–0 with 7:33 remaining in the first quarter. Dallas began its comeback on the next series. Facing third and 23 from the San Francisco 44, Aikman hit Irvin for a touchdown that cut the score to 21–7. Following a Brien field goal of 34 yards, RB Emmitt Smith capped a 63–yard drive with a four–yard run that narrowed the gap to 24–14. The crucial point in the game came seconds before the first half expired. With eight seconds remaining, Young found WR Jerry Rice for a 28–yard score, giving the 49ers a 31–14 lead heading into the locker room. The teams traded touchdowns in the second half with the 49ers holding off a strong Dallas charge in the fourth quarter. Young completed 13–of–29 passes for 155 yards and two touchdowns. He also rushed for 47 yards and another score. Watters led the ground game, compiling 72 yards, while TE Brent Jones and Floyd each had three receptions. Defensively, LB Ken Norton Jr. paced the squad with 10 tackles, while Davis and McDonald added seven. Davis also had two interceptions and a forced fumble. CB Deion Sanders had an interception, along with five passes defensed, while DT Rhett Hall and DE Tim Harris each had two sacks.

Super Bowl XXIX
January 29 at Joe Robbie Stadium
(Miami, FL)

QB Steve Young set a Super Bowl record with six touchdown passes and WR Jerry Rice hauled in three scoring passes for the second time in his career in the world championship game. The 49ers stars led an offensive explosion that carried the team to a 49–26 win over San Diego. San Francisco wasted little time getting on the scoreboard as it took just three plays following the game's opening kickoff to crack the Chargers end zone. Following a FB William Floyd four–yard run and an 11–yard pass from Young to WR John Taylor, Young connected with Rice streaking down the middle of the field for a 44–yard scoring strike. Following a San Diego punt, San Francisco was back in the end zone again after only three plays as Young, once again, challenged the middle of the Chargers defense, this time with a pass to RB Ricky Watters, which netted a 51–yard score. The Chargers made things close for awhile, however, putting together a 13–play, 78–yard drive that concluded with a RB Natrone Means one–yard touchdown plunge to make it 14–7 after one quarter of play. The 49ers began to break the game open in the second quarter. They followed the San Diego touchdown with a 70–yard drive that culminated with a five–yard scoring pass from Young to Floyd. Two possessions later, following a partially blocked punt by RB Adam Walker, the Niners drove 49 yards for another score on an eight–yard toss from Young to Watters. K John Carney's 31–yard field goal with less than two minutes remaining in the half closed the margin at intermission to 28–10. The Niners put the game away in the third quarter, running the lead to 42–10 on a pair of long drives that ended with Watters' third score of the evening, a nine–yard blast up the middle, and a 15–yard pass from Young to Rice. Rice caught his third touchdown of the night on a seven–yard toss from Young in the fourth quarter, enabling Young to break QB Joe Montana's record of five Super Bowl touchdown passes. Young was named the game's Most Valuable Player, while Rice turned in the second best receiving performance in Super Bowl history with 10 catches for 149 yards, while tying his own record with three scoring receptions.

January 6 at 3Com Park
(San Francisco, CA)

Aided by a swarming defense that caused four turnovers, the Green Bay Packers defeated the 49ers 27–17 at 3Com Park. A record crowd of 69,311 saw the Packers advance to the NFC Championship Game, while the 49ers one–year reign as world champions ended with an overall record of 11–6. Green Bay took its opening drive and marched to the San Francisco 26 before settling for a field goal attempt. However, K Chris Jacke's 44–yard attempt was blocked by S Tim McDonald and the 49ers took over at their 34. On the first play from scrimmage, QB Steve Young hit FB Adam Walker in the flat, but LB Wayne Simmons jarred the ball loose and CB Craig Newsome returned the fumble 31 yards for the touchdown. Green Bay also scored on its next two possessions, a three–yard pass from QB Brett Favre to TE Keith Jackson and a 13–yard toss from Favre to TE Mark Chmura. San Francisco scored its first points of the game late in the half when K Jeff Wilkins nailed a 21–yard field goal with two minutes remaining. The 49ers took their first possession of the third quarter and marched 80 yards for a touchdown, when Young plunged in from the one, cutting the deficit to 21–10. On the 14–play drive, Young was 9–of–10 and ran the ball twice. Again, the Packers responded to the challenge, using a pair of Jacke field goals (27 yards in the third quarter, 26 yards in the fourth quarter), and boosted Green Bay's lead to 27–10. San Francisco's final score of the season came on a two–yard plunge by RB Derek Loville with 50 seconds remaining in the game. Young completed 32 passes in an NFL postseason record 65 attempts, for 328 yards and two interceptions. He also led the 49ers in rushing, gaining 77 yards in nine attempts, including a 40–yard sprint after he was flushed from the pocket. WR Jerry Rice led the receivers with 11 catches for 117 yards, while TE Brent Jones gained 112 yards on eight receptions. Defensively, DT Dana Stubblefield recorded a team–high 10 tackles and a sack for a loss of five yards, while LB Ken Norton Jr. added nine tackles.

December 29 at 3Com Park
(San Francisco, CA)

On a wet and windy Sunday at 3Com Park, San Francisco opened its 1996 postseason by defeating the Philadelphia Eagles 14–0 in the NFC Wild Card Game. Led by their marquee players QB Steve Young and WR Jerry Rice on offense, and a defense that recorded the team's first postseason shutout since the 1984 NFC Championship Game, the 49ers advanced to the NFC Divisional Playoff round. Following a scoreless first quarter, Young led the offense on a 10–play, 74–yard drive that concluded with the Pro Bowl quarterback scoring on a gutsy nine–yard run off a quarterback draw. On that play Young broke four tackles while fighting his way to paydirt. Twice in the second quarter the Eagles mounted long drives only to be denied just short of the endzone by Niners interceptions. Philadelphia's first trip ended with CB Marquez Pope intercepting a QB Ty Detmer pass on San Francisco's seven–yard line. Late in the quarter the Eagles marched 59 yards on 10 plays moving to the 49ers five–yard line. Facing third and four, Detmer's attempt to WR Chris T. Jones was picked off by DE Roy Barker, who had dropped off into zone–blitz coverage. The only scoring in the second half occurred on the Niners second possession of the third quarter. On that drive, Rice made a spectacular one–handed catch that resulted in a 36–yard gain. He scored on a three–yard pass from Young on the next play from scrimmage. Young finished as the game's leading rusher with 65 yards, while also completing 14–of–21 tosses for 161 yards. Rice had four catches for 50 yards and his 19th career postseason touchdown (17th receiving). RB Terry Kirby added 43 yards rushing. The Niners defense, which held Eagles RB Ricky Watters to 57 rushing yards, was led by LB Ken Norton Jr.'s team postseason–record 12 solo tackles. DT Bryant Young registered two sacks and LB Lee Woodall added a sack among his six total stops.

NFC Divisional Playoff
January 4 at Lambeau Field
(Green Bay, WI)

Missed opportunities, including a total of five turnovers, spelled defeat for the San Francisco 49ers in their NFC Divisional Playoff Game with the Green Bay Packers. Played before a record Lambeau Field crowd of 60,787, the 49ers fell 35–14 in a game that featured 34–degree weather (with a wind chill of nine–degrees) and driving rain. It didn't take long for the Packers to take a lead. After forcing San Francisco to punt on its first series, WR Desmond Howard took P Tommy Thompson's punt, split the coverage down the middle of the field and raced for a 71–yard touchdown. Then, with seven minutes remaining in the opening stanza, Howard struck again. He returned a punt 46 yards to the San Francisco seven, and two plays later, QB Brett Favre threw a four–yard scoring pass to WR Andre Rison to make it 14–0. San Francisco then mounted a comeback in the second quarter. Trailing 21–0, the tide began to turn when 49ers special teams standout Curtis Buckley recovered a muffed punt at the Green Bay 26. Moments later, QB Elvis Grbac, replacing the injured QB Steve Young (ribs), hit RB Terry Kirby with an eight–yard pass, cutting the deficit to 21–7 at the half. On the opening kickoff of the third quarter, San Francisco CB Steve Israel recovered a loose ball on the Packers four, setting the stage for Grbac's scamper into the end zone. The 49ers fate was sealed, however, on the ensuing Packers drive. Marching 72 yards in 12 plays (10 of which were runs), Green Bay scored when FB Edgar Bennett fumbled before crossing the goal line; but before the 49ers defenders could react, WR Antonio Freeman fell on the loose ball, giving the hosts a 28–14 advantage. Bennett scored on an 11–yard run, and two more fumbles in the fourth quarter snuffed out any hope the 49ers had in getting back into the game. Young played the first nine plays at quarterback before giving way to Grbac late in the first quarter. Grbac completed 19–of–36 passes for 125 yards with one touchdown and three interceptions and led the team in rushing with 32 yards. Backfield mates Kirby and RB William Floyd had six receptions each, while WR Jerry Rice had a team–high 36 yards receiving. Defensively, LB Ken Norton Jr. posted eight tackles and LB Gary Plummer added seven. All–Pro DT Bryant Young left the game late in the first quarter because of a neck injury. He was taken to the hospital for tests, which were negative.

(San Francisco, CA)

RB Terry Kirby rushed for a career–high 120 yards and scored two touchdowns, leading the San Francisco 49ers to a 38–22 victory over the Minnesota Vikings in the NFC Divisional Playoffs at 3Com Park. In addition to Kirby's heroics, QB Steve Young completed 21–of–30 passes for 224 yards and a touchdown, WR J.J. Stokes had 101 yards receiving and LB Ken Norton Jr. returned an interception 23 yards for a touchdown. San Francisco's first score came compliments of a Minnesota special teams miscue. P Mitch Berger's punt sailed off the side of his foot and into the crowd after going only 12 yards. The 49ers took over on the Vikings 26, and four plays later, FB William Floyd scored from the one and the 49ers led 7–0. Less than a minute later, the visitors tied the game on a 66–yard scoring pass from QB Randall Cunningham to WR Cris Carter. In the second quarter, the 49ers again took advantage of a poor kick by Berger — this time a punt of 29 yards — to take a 14–7 lead. Moving 61 yards in only four plays, and aided by three Minnesota penalties, Kirby scored the first of his two touchdowns on a one–yard plunge. The game–breaker occurred two plays later when the San Francisco defense flushed Cunningham out of the pocket and forced him to throw a pass over an onrushing DE Roy Barker and into the hands of Norton, who ran untouched into the end zone. In the third quarter, K Gary Anderson connected on a 34–yard field goal to build the lead to 24–7, but Cunningham and Carter hooked up again for a score, closing the gap to 24–14. On the ensuing series, the 49ers marched 75 yards in seven plays, highlighted by two Kirby runs of 22 and 14 yards. Young then hit WR Terrell Owens with one of the prettiest touchdowns of the year, as the second–year receiver shook off a defender then dove into the end zone for the score. Kirby finished the scoring in the fourth quarter with another one–yard run. CB Tyrone Drakeford had six tackles and a pair of passes defended to pace the defense. Barker also recorded San Francisco's only sack of the game.

RB Dorsey Levens rushed for 114 yards and WR Antonio Freeman caught four passes for 104 yards and a touchdown to lead visiting Green Bay to a 23–10 win in the NFC Championship Game. The game was played before 68,987 under windy and rainy conditions at 3Com Park. The Packers opened the scoring late in the first quarter. After San Francisco punted on its first series, QB Brett Favre led Green Bay on a 10–play, 76–yard drive that resulted in a K Ryan Longwell 19–yard field goal. Favre completed three–of–four passes for 37 yards in the series. Green Bay continued its scoring in the second quarter. S Eugene Robinson intercepted a QB Steve Young pass and returned it 58 yards to the San Francisco 28. Two plays later, Favre threw a 27–yard scoring pass to Freeman to make the score 10–0. San Francisco then broke the drought with a scoring drive beginning with 4:23 remaining in the second quarter. Following a missed field goal by Longwell, the 49ers took possession at their own 38. A pair of Young completions for 32 yards had the Niners in Packers territory, but two holding penalties brought the ball back to the original line of scrimmage. On a key third down with 26 yards to go, Young completed a 48–yard pass to WR Terrell Owens to the Packers 10–yard line. The drive resulted in a 28–yard field goal by K Gary Anderson. Green Bay answered on its next possession. Freeman returned the kickoff 18 yards to the Packers 27. Two plays later, Favre hit Freeman for a 40–yard completion to the San Francisco 25. Longwell connected on a 43–yard field goal to make the halftime score 13–3. After a scoreless third quarter, Green Bay extended its lead to 16–3 on a 25–yard field goal by Longwell. The Packers added seven more after a five–yard touchdown run by Levens to make the score 23–3. San Francisco closed out the game by scoring on the ensuing kickoff. Chuck Levy returned Longwell’s kick 95 yards for a touchdown. Levy’s return was the second longest postseason return for San Francisco, trailing the 97–yard touchdown return by Vic Washington vs. Dallas in 1972. Young completed 23–of–38 passes for 250 yards and one interception. RB Terry Kirby ran for a team–high 21 yards on six carries. WR J.J. Stokes caught six passes for 87 yards, including a long of 43. Defensively, San Francisco was led by S Merton Hanks with eight tackles. LB Ken Norton Jr., LB Lee Woodall, LB Gary Plummer and S Tim McDonald had seven tackles each.

QB Steve Young threw three touchdown passes, including a 25–yard strike to WR Terrell Owens with three seconds remaining, as San Francisco edged Green Bay, 30–27. On a crystal clear day in the Bay Area, it was the Packers who opened the scoring on a 23–yard field goal from K Ryan Longwell midway through the first quarter. San Francisco answered with help from a big play on defense. S Merton Hanks forced a fumble by RB Dorsey Levens and the ball was recovered by DE Chris Doleman at the Green Bay 19–yard line. Three plays later Young connected with TE Greg Clark from one yard out for the touchdown and a 7–3 lead. Just four seconds into the second quarter, the Packers regained the lead on a two–yard scoring toss from QB Brett Favre to WR Antonio Freeman. San Francisco tied the score on the first of three K Wade Richey field goals, this one from 34 yards out with 6:53 remaining in the half. The Packers surged back ahead with 36 seconds remaining when Levens bowled into the end zone from two yards out to take a 17–10 halftime lead. The third quarter opened with Favre being pressured into an errant pass that was intercepted by LB Lee Woodall. Five plays later, the score was tied for a third time when Young hit Clark from eight yards out for the score. The 49ers reclaimed the lead midway through the quarter on a team postseason record and career–long 48–yard field goal from Richey. In a game that saw five lead changes and three ties, the fourth quarter became particularly dramatic. Longwell answered Richey’s 48–yard kick with a 37–yard effort of his own to tie the game at 20–20 at the beginning of the fourth. On the ensuing possession, San Francisco marched 51 yards in 10 plays and capped the drive with a 40–yard field goal by Richey to reclaim the lead at 23–20. With 4:19 remaining in the game, Green Bay took over at its own 11–yard line. From there, Favre would lead his team on a nine–play, 89–yard scoring drive. The drive was capped when Favre hit Freeman from 15 yards out for the touchdown and a 27–23 lead with 1:56 remaining in the game. The Packers touchdown set up one of the most memorable sequences in 49ers history. San Francisco took possession at its own 24–yard line with 1:50 remaining and three timeouts to its credit. On the final play, Young dropped back, stumbled and threw a 25–yard touchdown strike to Owens who was sandwiched in the end zone by S Pat Terrell and S Darren Sharper.

Falcons 20, 49ers 18
NFC Divisional Playoff
January 9 at Georgia Dome
(Atlanta, GA)

With San Francisco’s NFL–leading run game a mere shell of itself, the Atlanta Falcons forced three turnovers and held off the 49ers, 20–18, in the NFC Divisional Playoff at the Georgia Dome. San Francisco’s hope of controlling the game on the ground came to a screeching halt on the first play of the game when RB Garrison Hearst fractured the tibia in his left leg on an inside run that had gained seven yards. With Hearst out and RB Terry Kirby hobbled with a bruised leg, the 49ers managed just 46 yards on the ground. Atlanta’s rushing attack flourished in the first half thanks to the power running of RB Jamal Anderson, who scored on a two–yard run in the first quarter to give the Falcons a 7–0 lead. Atlanta increased its lead to 14–0 when Anderson finished off a 34–yard run with a spread eagle dive into the end zone with 3:12 left in the second quarter. The touchdown run capped a seven–play, 82–yard drive. San Francisco snatched the momentum from the Falcons by putting together a pair of scoring drives just before the half. The 49ers answered Atlanta’s second touchdown march with a nine–play, 80–yard drive that concluded with the familiar end zone combination of QB Steve Young to WR Jerry Rice from 17 yards out. It was Rice’s 20th career postseason touchdown. With just under one minute to play in the first half, DE Charles Haley chased QB Chris Chandler and deflected his pass into the waiting arms of DT Junior Bryant, who returned it four yards to the Atlanta 36–yard line. K Wade Richey made it a 14–10 game at the half with a 36–yard field goal as time expired. The 49ers carried that momentum into the third quarter, nearly tripling Atlanta’s offensive output in the second half (187 yards to 68). But turnovers did not allow them to complete the comeback. The Falcons thwarted two drives with a pair of interceptions, including one by S Eugene Robinson that was returned 77 yards to set up a K Morten Andersen 29–yard field goal. Leading 17–10, Andersen added another 32–yard field goal to give the Falcons a 10–point edge with 10:33 remaining. San Francisco responded to Atlanta’s three pointer with a 13–play, 87–yard drive that Young finished himself with an eight–yard touchdown run. A two–point pass from QB Ty Detmer to TE Greg Clark made it 20–18 with 2:57 left. After Atlanta used up 2:19 of the clock, the 49ers got the ball back at their own four–yard line but were only able to move to the 26 before Young’s hail mary attempt was intercepted as time expired. After rushing for 83 yards on 13 carries in the first half, Anderson was limited to 30 yards on 16 carries in the second half by San Francisco’s defense. LB Winfred Tubbs made a game–high 10 tackles, while DE Chris Doleman made six stops and one sack.

NFC Wild Card
January 13 at Lambeau Field
(Green Bay, WI)

In their first postseason appearance since 1998, the 49ers dropped a hard-fought 25–15 decision to the Green Bay Packers in the NFC Wild Card Game at Lambeau Field. With a game-time temperature of 28 degrees, the 49ers won the opening coin toss and elected to receive. The two teams traded punts until Green Bay marched 40 yards in seven plays to score the first points of the game when QB Brett Favre hooked up with WR Antonio Freeman on a five-yard touchdown pass. DT Dana Stubblefield blocked the extra point to keep the score 6–0. After another 49ers punt, the Packers began their third possession of the game from their own 19-yard line. On the second play from scrimmage, Favre was intercepted by CB Ahmed Plummer, who returned it to the Green Bay 22. San Francisco K Jose Cortez had his 34-yard field goal attempt blocked and the score remained 6–0. After the Packers were forced to punt, San Francisco took possession at its own 14 with 7:06 remaining in the half. QB Jeff Garcia went 6-of-9 for 61 yards and RB Garrison Hearst had a two-yard touchdown plunge with 15 seconds remaining in the half, to cap off a 15-play, 86-yard drive. After a Cortez extra point, the 49ers went in with a 7–6 halftime lead. On their first possession of the second half, the Packers moved the ball down to the San Francisco eight-yard line where K Ryan Longwell nailed a 26-yard field goal for the 9–7 lead. After the 49ers couldn't get anything going on offense, they punted back to Green Bay. It took only four plays for the Packers to take advantage with a 19-yard touchdown pass from Favre to TE Bubba Franks. The two-point conversion failed and the score remained 15–7. Two series later, the 49ers marched 61 yards in six plays, culminating with Garcia hitting WR Tai Streets on a 14-yard touchdown strike and again on the two-point conversion to tie the score at 15. The Packers answered on their next possession with a 10-play, 45-yard drive as Longwell connected on a 45-yard field goal to push the score to 18–15. With 5:03 remaining in the game, the 49ers had moved the ball down to the Green Bay 41, when Garcia's pass intended for WR Terrell Owens was tipped by CB Mike McKenzie into the hands of CB Tyrone Williams at the Green Bay seven-yard line. Favre led the Packers on an eight-play, 93-yard drive ending with an RB Ahman Green nine-yard touchdown run and the 25–15 lead. RB Paul Smith took the ensuing kickoff on the 13-yard line and ran it back 16 yards before being hit by WR Cory Bradford and fumbling. The Packers recovered the fumble and ran out the clock for the 25–15 victory.

(San Francisco, CA)

Buried in a 24-point playoff hole, the 49ers exploded to record the second largest comeback in postseason history with a dramatic 39–38 victory over the New York Giants in the NFC Wild Card Game. The 49ers trailed 38–14 with four minutes left in the third quarter, but scored 25 straight points on two touchdown passes and a scoring run by QB Jeff Garcia, as well as two, two-point conversion catches by WR Terrell Owens. The game ended just as exciting. After Garcia drove his team 68 yards in just over two minutes for the winning score, QB Kerry Collins got New York to the San Francisco 28 with six seconds left. LS Trey Junkin, signed earlier in the week, made a low snap that P Matt Allen couldn't handle. Allen then threw a desperate pass that fell incomplete. The 49ers rally was the biggest in NFC playoff history. Garcia finished the day 27-of-44 for 331 yards and three touchdowns. He rushed for 60 yards, including a 14-yard score on the first play of the fourth quarter. Two of Garcia's touchdown throws went to Owens, who had nine catches for 177 yards. Collins was 29-of-43 for 342 yards and four touchdowns, and expertly guided New York to a lead that seemed insurmountable. WR Amani Toomer caught eight passes for 136 yards and three touchdowns and RB Tiki Barber added 115 yards rushing and 62 yards receiving. San Francisco rallied with purpose and poise. Owens caught a 26-yard touchdown pass late in the third quarter to start the rally and made big catches on every drive—right up to the final minutes, when Garcia found WR Tai Streets for the winning score. After Owens caught a 26-yard touchdown pass and a two-point conversion with 2:03 left in the third, Garcia rushed for a 14-yard score and threw another conversion pass to Owens five seconds into the fourth quarter. K Jeff Chandler added a 25-yard field goal with 7:49 left. Collins responded and drove New York 38 yards, but Bryant – kicking out of a poor hold thanks to a poor snap by Junkin—missed a 42-yard field goal with 3:01 left. Garcia took over, converting two straight third downs for the NFL leaders in that category. TE Eric Johnson caught a 25-yard pass to the New York 25 and Garcia scrambled 12 yards to set up his winning pass to Streets.

NFC Divisional Playoff

January 12 at Raymond James Stadium
(Tampa, FL)

San Francisco's Super Bowl hopes ended with a 31–6 loss against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the NFC Divisional Playoff Game on the road at Raymond James Stadium. The 49ers trailed 28–6 heading into halftime and although the defense held Tampa Bay to only three points in the second half, San Francisco was held scoreless en route to the Buccaneers victory. Tampa Bay started the scoring with a two-yard touchdown run by FB Mike Alstott on a 12-play, 74-yard drive. San Francisco answered with a 12-play, 63-yard drive capped by a 24-yard field goal by K Jeff Chandler. The highlight of the drive was a 30-yard pitch and catch by WR Tai Streets from QB Jeff Garcia. Tampa Bay exploded for 21 points in the second quarter, highlighted by two touchdown passes by QB Brad Johnson. Johnson connected on a 20-yard pass to WR Joe Jurevicius and a 12-yard pass to TE Rickey Dudley. In between the two scores, Chandler kicked his second field goal of the game for San Francisco, this time from 40 yards out. Alstott added another two-yard touchdown run to end the first half and K Martin Gramatica added a 19-yard field goal to close the scoring for both teams. LB Derek Smith led San Francisco with a game-high 14 tackles. LB Julian Peterson and LB Jeff Ulbrich added 11 tackles apiece. CB Rashad Holman led a banged up secondary with one interception. The unit was minus starting CB Jason Webster, who was inactive with an ankle injury. CB Ahmed Plummer left the game when he separated his right shoulder and did not return. FS Zack Bronson left the game in the third quarter when he aggravated his broken foot and SS Tony Parrish played the contest with a dislocated elbow. LB Shelton Quarles led Tampa Bay with nine tackles and Defensive Player-of-the-Year Derrick Brooks added seven tackles and one interception.

NFC Divisional Playoff
January 14 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

A 14-yd. TD pass from Alex Smith to TE Vernon Davis with 0:09 left in the game capped off one of the most memorable games in postseason history, as the 49ers defeated the New Orleans Saints, 36–32. Powered by Smith, who threw for 299 yds., three TDs and added another one on the ground, the 49ers triumphed in its first playoff game in nine years, moving within one win of the Super Bowl. The Niners scored on their second drive of the game, on a 49-yd. TD pass from Smith to Davis. On the Saints next drive, QB Drew Brees committed his first postseason INT in five years, thanks to S Dashon Goldson, giving San Francisco the football deep in New Orleans' territory. Scoring on a TD pass to WR Michael Crabtree, Smith took advantage of the costly turnover, making the score 14–0. On the ensuing kickoff return, S Madieu Williams stripped the ball away from Saints WR Courtney Roby and the loose ball was recovered by LB Blake Costanzo. The takeaway led to a 25-yd. FG by K David Akers. The Saints answered, scoring two TDs before half time, on a 14-yd. pass to TE Jimmy Graham and a 25-yd. pass to WR Marques Colston, making the score 17–14 at the half. San Francisco scored the only points of the 3rd qtr. on a 41-yd. FG by David Akers. The 4th qtr. started out with each team trading FGs. Then would come the four lead changes in the last five minutes of the game. New Orleans struck first on a 44-yd. TD pass to RB Darren Sproles, with 4:02 left on the clock. With the 49ers trailing 24–23, down for the first time in the entire game, Smith scored on a 28-yd. rushing TD. A missed two-point conversion put the 49ers up 29–24 with just 2:11 remaining. Brees took the lead back on a 66-yd. score to TE Jimmy Graham with 1:37 left. RB Darren Sproles then made a catch out of the backfield for the two-point conversion to give the Saints a 32–29 advantage. Facing elimination, Smith connected with Davis twice on their final drive, with the last throw jetting through double coverage for a game-winning 14-yd. TD.

Giants 20, 49ers 17 (OT)
NFC Championship
January 22 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

When asked what his message was to his players after falling short to the New York Giants in the NFC Championship game, Harbaugh stated, "As Sir Andrew Barton said, 'Fight on my men, we're hurt but not slain. We'll lay down and bleed a while. Then we'll rise and fight again.'" Harbaugh, of course was referring to his team's blue-collar mentality after the Giants escaped rain-soaked Candlestick Park with a 20–17 overtime victory. Harbaugh got the Niners to the brink of the Super Bowl in his rookie year, taking over a 6–10 team and going 13–3 to win the NFC West. The extra minutes at Candlestick Park went in favor of the opponent in a year where most didn't expect a storybook season. The 49ers defense played stoically, recording six sacks on Giants QB Eli Manning, which ranked t–2nd for the most sacks in a postseason game in franchise history (6 – four times, last vs. Den. – 1/29/90). TE Vernon Davis gave the 49ers a 7–0 lead with 7:11 remaining in the 1st qtr. after running a pattern down the right sideline and outracing the secondary for a 73-yd. TD recept. from QB Alex Smith. On their ensuing drive, the Giants drove from their own 31 to the San Francisco 34-yd. line. On 3rd-and–1, Manning and the Giants failed to get a first down despite two opportunities. The Giants eventually evened the score on a 10–play, 69-yd. drive when TE Bear Pascoe caught Manning's short pass at the 6-yd. line and stepped into the end zone for the TD. The Giants added a FG with two seconds remaining in the 2nd qtr. to give them a 10–7 edge going into the locker room. Davis' second TD of the game, gave the lead back to the Niners at 14–10 with 5:18 remaining in the 3rd qtr. San Francisco's 3–play, 54-yd. TD drive was set up by a short pass to RB Frank Gore, who turned it into a 24-yd. gain. On the next play, Davis went in motion from right to left and caught a lofted pass to the end zone by Smith. The Giants took the lead back after the ball inadvertently glanced off WR Kyle Williams on a punt, giving the ball back to the Giants on their 29 yard line. Manning connected a 17-yard pass to WR Mario Manningham to give the Giants a 17–14 lead with 8:41 remaining. Williams' 40-yd. return on the ensuing kickoff enabled the 49ers to start their next possession at their own 45. On consecutive plays, Smith scrambled for 17 yds. and RB Kendall Hunter ran for 18 more, resulting in a K David Akers game-tying FG with 5:39 to go, 17–17. After both teams went 3–and–out on their first overtime possession, a Giants takeaway on a Williams fumble, forced by LB Jacquian Williams on a punt return, gave the Giants possession at their own 36 with 9:32 remaining. After converting one first down, K Lawrence Tynes sent the season-ending 31-yd. FG through the uprights.

49ers 45, Packers 31
NFC Divisional Playoff
January 12 at Candlestick Park
(San Francisco, CA)

With the win against the Green Bay Packers, the San Francisco 49ers advanced to the NFC Championship Game for the second year in a row, marking the first time San Francisco has reached the NFC Championship Game in consecutive seasons since 1992–94. The Packers got off to a quick start after QB Colin Kaepernick threw an INT on just the fourth play of the game that was returned for a TD by Packers CB Sam Shields. Kaepernick responded immediately like he had all season and turned in one of the best performances by a 49ers QB in franchise history. Kaepernick led the offense on an 8–play, 80-yd. drive that he capped off with a 20-yd. TD run to tie the score at 7 apiece early in the 1st qtr. The team converted on two 3rd and longs on the drive, setting the tone for the day by finishing 8 of 13 on 3rd down (62%). With 11:52 remaining in the 2nd qtr., Green Bay WR Jeremy Ross muffed a punt that was recovered by S C.J. Spillman at the Packers 9-yd. line. The takeaway led to a 12-yd. TD pass from Kaepernick to WR Michael Crabtree just three plays later. On the ensuing Green Bay possession, CB Tarell Brown picked off QB Aaron Rodgers pass and returned his 2nd career postseason INT. The Kaepernick to Crabtree connection continued to be successful as they connected for a 20-yd. TD strike, making the score 21–14. Crabtree led the team with 9 recepts. for 119 yds. and 2 TDs on the day. On the third play of San Francisco's second possession of the 3rd qtr., Kaepernick kept the ball on a zone read around the right side and dashed 56-yds. to the end zone for his 2nd rushing TD of the game. The 56-yd. TD run marked the longest run by a QB in franchise postseason history and the 3rd longest overall. Kaepernick also set the NFL single-game record for a QB with 181 rushing yds. on 16 carries. RB Frank Gore finished off the following drive on the first play of the 4th qtr., punching it in from 2 yds. out, stretching the 49ers lead to 38–24. Gore notched his first career 100-yd. game in the postseason, rushing for 119 yds. on 23 carries. The 49ers became the first team in NFL history to ever have two, 100-yd. rushers [QB Colin Kaepernick (181 yds. rushing), RB Frank Gore (119 yds. rushing)] and one, 100-yd. receiver [WR Michael Crabtree (119 yds. receiving)] in a playoff game. RB Anthony Dixon found the end zone on a 2-yd. TD run to finish off the 11–play, 93-yd. drive to make the score 45–24. San Francisco rushed for 323 yds. on the night, setting the franchise single-game postseason rushing record.

49ers 28, Falcons 24
NFC Championship
January 20 at Georgia Dome
(Atlanta, GA)

The 49ers started slow, spotting Atlanta a 17–0 lead after the Falcons scored on their first three possessions. On San Francisco's third possession the 49ers offense began to click. TE Vernon Davis hauled in a pinpoint pass from QB Colin Kaepernick for 27 yds. down to the Atlanta 15–yd. line. Davis had 3, 25+ yd. receipts. in the game, giving him 9 in 4 postseason games, which ranks 2nd in 49ers postseason history, trailing only WR Jerry Rice (14, 25+ yd. receipts. in 23 games). Two plays following Davis' catch, the 49ers got on the scoreboard with a 15–yd. TD run by RB LaMichael James. It was James' first–career TD. The 49ers next possession began on their own 18–yd. line with 6:24 remaining in the 2nd qtr. Vernon Davis stepped up once again, accounting for 48–yds. on 3 receipts., including a 4–yd. TD catch to finish the drive and pull the 49ers within 3, as the score read 14–17 at the 2–minute warning. Davis' 5 career postseason TDs rank 1–4th in franchise history. With the Falcons scoring right before the half, it was important the 49ers came out of halftime with an answer, and answer they did. Kaepernick marched the 49ers offense right down the field, driving 82 yds. on 7 plays capped off on a 5–yd. TD run by RB Frank Gore to make the score 21–24 with 10:51 remaining in the 3rd qtr. The San Francisco defense also had answers, forcing turnovers on the Falcons first two possessions of the 2nd half. CB Chris Culliver picked–off QB Matt Ryan and LB Aldon Smith recovered a muffed snap to stymie the Falcons offense during the 3rd qtr. With 11:59 left in the 4th qtr. WR Ted Ginn returned a Matt Bosher punt 20 yds. to the Atlanta 38–yd. line, giving the 49ers offense good starting field position. San Francisco's physical offensive line began to take over and wear down the Atlanta defense, opening big holes for Gore, James and RB Anthony Dixon as they gained all but 8 yds. on the go–ahead drive. Gore registered his 2nd TD run of the game on a 9–yd. burst to the end zone to give San Francisco the lead 28–24 with 8:27 remaining in the game. The Falcons took over after the Gore TD and sustained a 14–play drive down to the 49ers 10–yd. line. On the 14th play of the drive, the Falcons faced a 4th and 4 with 1:13 remaining. WR Roddy White was unable to hang onto the ball due to LB NaVorro Bowman's blanketing defense. The Falcons got the ball back following an Andy Lee punt and had one last shot with :06 ticks left on the clock, but CB Perrish Cox tackled WR Julio Jones at San Francisco's 35–yd. line before he could attempt a lateral as the clock struck :00. The 17–point comeback led by Kaepernick was the 2nd largest deficit overcome to win a conference championship (2006 – Indianapolis trailed New England by 18 points).

Ravens 34, 49ers 31
Super Bowl XLVII
February 3 at Superdome
(New Orleans, LA)

The San Francisco 49ers and the Baltimore Ravens squared off in one of the most extraordinary Super Bowls where two brothers squared off as head coaches. The 49ers found themselves facing an early deficit, which would eventually be too much to overcome. Early in the 1st qtr., San Francisco answered a Ravens TD drive with a scoring drive of their own as QB Colin Kaepernick engineered a 12–play 62–yd. drive that was finished off by K David Akers' 36–yd. FG, making the score 7–3. After 2 more TD passes by QB Joe Flacco, the 49ers found themselves in a 21–3 hole with 1:45 left in the 2nd qtr. Kaepernick showed poise and led the 2–minute drill efficiently by completing 4 of 5 pass atts. for 56 yds. to move the 49ers into FG position. Akers added 3 more points with a 27–yd. FG as time expired in the half with San Francisco trailing Baltimore 21–6. Following a Ravens kickoff return for a TD to open the 2nd half, the Superdome went dark with 13:28 remaining in the 3rd qtr. A power failure at 7:38 p.m. CT caused a 30–minute delay and was not resolved until 8:08 p.m. On the Niners' next possession, Kaepernick tossed a 31–yd. TD pass to WR Michael Crabtree, making the score 28–13. San Francisco forced Baltimore into a 3–and–out with a sack by LB Ahmad Brooks on 3rd–and–10. P Sam Koch's 43–yd. punt was returned 32 yds. by WR Ted Ginn Jr., setting up the 49ers offense to takeover at the Ravens 20–yd. line. Two plays later, RB Frank Gore capitalized on the short field with a 6–yd. TD run. On the second play of Baltimore's ensuing possession, CB Tarell Brown forced and recovered a fumble that he jarred loose from RB Ray Rice on the Ravens' 24–yd. line. The takeaway led to a 34–yd. FG by Akers, his 3rd of the game. With their next possession, WR Randy Moss hauled in a 32–yd. receipt., followed by a 21–yd. run by Gore, which led to a 15–yd. TD run by Kaepernick. An incomplete pass on the 2–point try made the score 31–29 with the Ravens still hanging on as San Francisco continued its fierce comeback. Kaepernick's 15–yd. TD run marked the longest TD run by a QB in Super Bowl history. With 4:23 remaining in the game, Baltimore's K Justin Tucker tacked on a 38–yd. FG to extend their lead to 34–29. A 24–yd. completion to Crabtree and a 33–yd. rush by Gore put the 49ers offense in position for the go–ahead TD with 2:39 remaining, on the Ravens' 7–yd. line. The 49ers were unable to get into the end zone and turned the ball over on downs. After taking a safety to run the game clock down to :04, the Ravens were forced to punt to the 49ers. Ginn returned the kickoff 31–yds. to the 50–yd. line as time expired for the last play of the game.

49ers 23, Packers 20
NFC Wild Card
January 5 at Lambeau Field
(Green Bay, WI)

The 49ers defeated the Green Bay Packers, 23–20, in the NFC Wild Card round of the NFL playoffs. The game went down as one of the coldest games in NFL history, with a kickoff temperature of 5 degrees and a wind chill of –10. The 49ers won the coin toss and deferred to the second half. The 49ers defense forced a three–and–out by the Packers on their opening series of the game. QB Colin Kaepernick and the 49ers offense drove 69 yds. in 13 plays as K Phil Dawson made a 22–yd. FG to give San Francisco an early 3–0 lead. The Niners then forced another three–and–out by Green Bay. On the ensuing possession, Dawson made a 25–yd. FG to cap off an 11–play, 42–yd. drive, making the score 6–0 with 2:20 remaining in the 1st qtr. Two possessions later, the Packers took a 7–6 lead when QB Aaron Rodgers completed a 5–yd. TD pass to WR Jordy Nelson to cap off a 14–play, 70–yd. drive. San Francisco responded with a 5–play, 68–yd. drive, including a 42–yd. run by Kaepernick, setting up a 10–yd TD run by RB Frank Gore two plays later to regain the lead 13–7. On the ensuing possession, the Packers got a 34–yd. FG by K Mason Crosby as time expired, making the scoring 13–10 at halftime. The second half began with the teams exchanging multiple punts as neither team was able to put points on the board in the third quarter. FB John Kuhn ended the scoring draught for Green Bay, putting the Packers on top 17–13 early in the 4th quarter. The 49ers responded immediately with a 4–play, 63–yd. drive as Kaepernick connected with TE Vernon Davis for a 28–yd. TD pass to regain the lead 20–17 with 10:37 remaining. The Packers countered with an 11–play, 61–yd. drive as K Mason Crosby tied the score at 20–20 with a 24–yd. FG. With 5:06 remaining, the 49ers were able to hold onto the ball for the rest of the game, picking up five first downs en route to the GB 15–yd. line where K Phil Dawson connected on a game–winning 33–yd. FG as time expired.

49ers 23, Panthers 10
NFC Divisional Playoff
January 12 at Bank of America Stadium
(Charlotte, NC)

The 49ers defeated the Carolina Panthers, 23–10, at Bank of America Stadium and advanced to the NFC Championship Game for the third consecutive year. The 49ers received the opening kickoff and drove 49 yds. in 13 plays as K Phil Dawson connected on a 49–yd. FG to give San Francisco an early 3–0 lead. On the fifth play of the ensuing drive, Panthers QB Cam Newton’s pass was deflected into the air and intercepted by LB Patrick Willis. San Francisco turned the takeaway into points when Dawson made a 33–yd. FG with 4:38 remaining in the 1st qtr. The Panthers put together an 8–play, 65–yd. drive before the 49ers made a spectacular goal–line stand and forced a turnover on downs at the SF 1–yd. line. On the first play following a San Francisco punt, Cam Newton found WR Steve Smith in the end zone for a 31–yd. TD pass to give Carolina a 7–6 lead. On the Panthers next possession, they drove 73 yds. in 13 plays and K Graham Gano made a 24–yd. FG to extend their lead to 10–6. San Francisco then engineered a 12–play, 80–yd. drive and TE Vernon Davis caught a 1–yd. TD pass from QB Colin Kaepernick with just 5 seconds remaining in the first half. The teams went into the locker rooms at halftime with the 49ers leading 13–10. The 49ers forced a three–and–out on the opening possession of the first half. On the ensuing possession, Kaepernick completed 2 of 2 pass atts. to WR Anquan Boldin for 61 yds. and scored on a 4–yd. TD run to extend the Niners lead to 20–10. The 49ers extended the lead to 23–10 on their next possession when Dawson made a 34–yd. FG to cap off a 13–play, 73–yd. drive. With 4:34 remaining in the game, 49ers S Donte Whitner intercepted a pass by Cam Newton at the SF 9–yd. line and San Francisco proceeded to run down the clock before turning the ball over on downs with just 12 seconds remaining. Carolina then came up empty handed in their last–ditch effort to add points to the scoreboard.

Seahawks 23, 49ers 17
NFC Championship
January 19 at CenturyLink Field
(Seattle, WA)

The 49ers dropped a hard–fought battle with the Seahawks in the NFC Championship Game, 23–17. On the first play of the game, 49ers LB Aldon Smith sacked Seahawks QB Russell Wilson, forcing and recovering a fumble. The takeaway led to a 25–yd. FG by K Phil Dawson to give San Francisco an early 3–0 lead. After a punt by each team, the 49ers engineered an 8–play, 86–yd. drive, including a 58–yd. run by QB Colin Kaepernick, which was capped off with a 1–yd. TD run by RB Anthony Dixon. Kaepernick’s 58–yd. rush is the longest run by a quarterback in NFL postseason history. On the ensuing possession, the Seahawks drove 62 yds. in 9 plays and K Steven Hauschka connected on a 32–yd. FG with 5:47 remaining in the first half to make the score 10–3. With neither side able to score on their final possession of the 2nd qtr., the teams entered the locker rooms at halftime with a score of 10–3. The 49ers punted on the opening series of the second half. Seattle then drove 60 yds. in 4 plays, including a 40–yd. TD run by RB Marshawn Lynch, to tie the game at 10–10. San Francisco responded with a 6–play, 83–yd. drive that was capped off with a 26–yd. TD pass from Kaepernick to WR Anquan Boldin, giving the Niners a 17–10 lead. Seahawks WR Doug Baldwin took the ensuing kickoff 69 yds., which set up a 40–yd. FG six plays later to make the score 17–13 with 3:55 remaining in the 3rd qtr. Following a punt by the 49ers, Seattle put together an 8–play, 62–yd. drive that resulted in points when QB Russell Wilson found WR Jermaine Kearse in the end zone for a 35–yd. TD pass to give Seattle a 20–17 lead. Following a turnover on each of the next three series, Seahawks K Steven Hauschka made the score 23–17 with 3:37 remaining in the game by connecting on a 47–yd. FG. San Francisco proceeded to drive down the field before Kaepernick’s pass intended for WR Michael Crabtree in the corner of the end zone was deflected and intercepted.

January 11 at Levi’s Stadium
(Santa Clara, CA)

In the first 49ers postseason game at Levi’s Stadium, San Francisco defeated the Minnesota Vikings, 27–10, in the NFC Divisional Round. After forcing a 3–and–out on the Vikings opening drive, QB Jimmy Garoppolo engineered an 8 play, 61–yd. drive that was capped off on a 3–yd. TD pass to WR Kendrick Bourne, giving the 49ers a 7–0 lead. Minnesota answered on the following drive, as Vikings QB Kirk Cousins connected with WR Stefon Diggs for a 41–yd. TD recept. to even the game at 7–7. After the teams traded possessions, the 49ers offense put together a 10–play, 53–yd. drive that was punctuated with a 1–yd. TD run by RB Tevin Coleman to put San Francisco on top, 14–7. Following a turnover by San Francisco, Vikings K Dan Bailey connected on a 39–yd. FG to cut the 49ers lead to 14–10 at halftime. On the opening drive of the second half, K Robbie Gould connected on a 35–yd. FG to extend the lead to 17–10. On the ensuing possession, CB Richard Sherman picked off Cousins, giving the 49ers offense the ball at the Vikings 44–yd. line. The offense responded with 8 consecutive running plays, including a 2–yd. TD run by Coleman, his 2nd TD of the game. Following a punt by P Mitch Wishnowsky, RB Raheem Mostert recovered a muffed return by CB Marcus Sherels on special teams, giving the 49ers the ball back on the Vikings 10–yd. line. The turnover led to a 21–yd FG by Gould and a 27–10 lead. The 49ers defense registered 6.0 sacks of Cousins and held the Vikings to 147 net yds. (21 rushing and 126 passing). The 147 net yds. allowed were the fewest in a postseason game in franchise history. With the win, San Francisco advances to the NFC Championship Game for the 14th time since 1980 and the first time since 2013.

NFC Championship
January 19 at Levi's Stadium
(Santa Clara, CA)

The 49ers defeated the Green Bay Packers, 37–20, in the NFC Championship Game to advance to Super Bowl LIV. This marks San Francisco's seventh trip to the Super Bowl in franchise history and the first since 2012. RB Raheem Mostert led the way for the 49ers as he rushed for 220 yds. and 4 TDs on 29 carries. His 220 rushing yds. were most rushing yds. in a single game in franchise history, regular season or postseason. The 49ers opened the scoring as RB Raheem Mostert scored on a 36–yd. TD to give San Francisco a 7–0 lead early in the 1st Qtr. On the Packers following possession, DL Nick Bosa brought down Packers QB Aaron Rodgers for a 9–yd. loss on third down, forcing Green Bay to punt. The 49ers extended their lead, as K Robbie Gould connected on a 54–yd. FG, the longest postseason FG of his career and in franchise history. The 49ers defense forced the Packers to go 3–and–out, as CB K'Waun Williams tallied a strip–sack of Rodgers on third down. On the ensuing possession, Mostert registered his 2nd TD of the game, this time on a 9–yd. TD run, extending the lead to 17–0. The Packers were moved the ball to the 49ers 25–yd. line before Rodgers fumbled the snap, which was recovered by DL DeForest Buckner. The turnover led to a 27–yd. FG by Gould to make the score 20–0. With under 2:00 to play in the 1st half, CB Emmanuel Moseley intercepted Rodgers, marking his first postseason INT. The takeaway led to an 18–yd. TD run by Mostert, his 3rd TD of the game, giving the 49ers a 27–0 lead at halftime. The Packers got on the board in the 3rd Qtr., as Rodgers connected with RB Aaron Jones for a 9–yd. TD receipt. to cut the lead to 27–7. The 49ers answered immediately, as Mostert recorded his 4th rushing TD of the game, this time on a 22–yd. TD run, to make the score 34–7. The Packers responded again, as Jones scored on a 1–yd. TD run, cutting the score to 34–13. Following a 49ers punt, Green Bay found the end zone again, as Rodgers connected with TE Jace Sternberger for an 8–yd. TD receipt., trimming the 49ers lead to 34–20. QB Jimmy Garoppolo and the 49ers offense put together a 10–play, 49–yd. drive that was capped off by Gould knocking in a 49–yd. FG to extend the lead to 37–20. On the Packers final drive of the game, DL Arik Armstead registered a strip–sack of Rodgers and, two plays later, Rodgers picked off by CB Richard Sherman, his 2nd INT of the postseason, to seal the win.

In Super Bowl LIV, San Francisco fell to the Kansas City Chiefs, 20–31. After forcing a 3–and–out on the first drive of the game, QB Jimmy Garoppolo engineered a 10–play, 62 yd. drive that was capped off by a 38–yd. FG by K Robbie Gould to give the 49ers and early 3–0 lead. On the following drive, DL DeForest Buckner and NT Earl Mitchell combined to sack Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes and DB Jimmie Ward forced a Mahomes fumble, but Kansas City was still able to get on the scoreboard as Mahomes scored on a 1–yd. TD run to make the score 3–7. Following a 49ers turnover early in the 2nd Qtr., the Chiefs extended the lead as K Harrison Butker knocked in a 31–yd. FG, making the score 3–10. The 49ers responded, as Garoppolo led the team on a 7–play, 80–yd. drive, that was punctuated on a 15–yd. TD receipt. by FB Kyle Juszczyk to tie the score, 10–10 at halftime. San Francisco began the 2nd half with a 9–play, 60 yd. drive that was capped off by a 42–yd. FG by Gould, as the 49ers took a 13–10. On the Chiefs next possession, DL Nick Bosa registered a strip–sack of Mahomes, but the Chiefs were able to recover. On the next play, Mahomes was intercepted by LB Fred Warner, marking his first career postseason INT. Warner's INT led to a 6–play, 55–yd. TD drive, as RB Raheem Mostert scored on a 1–yd. TD run, making the score 20–10. To open the 4th Qtr., Mahomes was sacked by Buckner, who registered 1.5 sacks on the night and DB Tarvarius Moore intercepted a Mahomes deep in 49ers territory. After the 49ers were forced to punt, Mahomes connected with WR Tyreek Hill on 44–yd. pass that helped set up a 1–yd. TD pass from Mahomes found TE Travis Kelce to cut the 49ers lead to 20–17. The Chiefs took over the lead on their next possession as Mahomes found RB Damien Williams for a 5–yd. TD receipt. to make the score 20–24. Kansas City sealed the victory as Williams scored on a 38–yd. TD run, making the score 20–31.

The 49ers defeated the Dallas Cowboys, 23–17, at AT&T Stadium in the NFC Wild Card Round. After receiving the opening kickoff, QB Jimmy Garoppolo led the 49ers on a 7–play, 70–yd. drive that was capped off by a 4–yd. TD run by RB Elijah Mitchell, giving San Francisco an early 7–0 lead. The 49ers defense immediately forced a 3–n–out, returning the ball to the 49ers offense and helping set up a 53–yd. FG from K Robbie Gould to make the score 10–0. San Francisco stood tall again, forcing Dallas to punt on the following possession, which led to Gould connecting on a 40–yd. FG that put the 49ers ahead 13–0. The Cowboys responded with a 9–play, 67–yd. scoring drive of their own. The drive was punctuated by a 20–yd. TD pass from Dallas QB Dak Prescott to WR Amari Cooper, narrowing Dallas' deficit down to 13–7. On the ensuing drive, Gould nailed his 3rd FG of the half, this one from 52 yds., making the score 16–7 at halftime. After the teams traded punts to begin the 2nd half, CB K'Waun Williams picked off Prescott, setting up the 49ers offense on the Dallas 26–yd. line. On the following play, WR Deebo Samuel scored on a 26–yd. run that put San Francisco ahead 23–7. Following a pair of punts, Dallas K Greg Zuerlein made a 51–yd. FG, making the score 23–10 at the beginning of the 4th qtr. On the ensuing possession, Garoppolo was picked off by Cowboys CB Anthony Brown, which set up a 5–yd TD run by Prescott, making the score 23–17. The 49ers defense held the Cowboys scoreless on their final two possessions, securing the victory. With the win, the 49ers advanced to the NFC Divisional Round for the 17th time since 1970 and the first time since 2019.

49ers 13, Packers 10
NFC Divisional Playoff
January 22 at Lambeau Field
(Green Bay, WI)

The 49ers defeated the Green Bay Packers, 13–10, at Lambeau Field in the NFC Divisional Round. After receiving the opening kickoff, Green Bay QB Aaron Rodgers engineered a 10–play, 69–yd. scoring drive that was capped off by a 6–yd. TD run by RB A.J. Dillon, giving the Packers an early 7–0 lead. Following a 49ers punt, LB Fred Warner forced a fumble by Packers TE Mercedes Lewis and the loose ball was pounced on by LB Dre Greenlaw, giving the ball back to the offense. After the teams exchanged punts, San Francisco threatened to score following an 11–play, 68–yd. drive, but QB Jimmy Garoppolo was picked off by S Adrian Amos on the GB 4–yd. line. On the ensuing possession, Rodgers connected with RB Aaron Jones on a 75–yd. pass with under 20 seconds left in the 2nd qtr. The 49ers defense held strong as DL Nick Bosa sacked Rodgers on the next play, forcing a FG attempt. On the final play of the 1st half, DB Jimmie Ward broke through the line and blocked the 39–yd. FGA by Packers K Mason Crosby, keeping the score 7–0 at the break. On the opening drive of the 3rd qtr., Garoppolo led San Francisco on a 10 play, 39–yd. scoring drive as K Robbie Gould connected on a 29–yd. FG, making the score 3–7. In the 4th qtr., the Packers extended their lead as Crosby connected on a 33–yd. FG to make the 10–3. On the next possession, the 49ers deep into Packers territory, but were stopped on 4th–n–1, giving the ball to Green Bay. The 49ers defense held strong forcing a 3–n–out. On the ensuing punt, DL Jordan Willis was able to block the ball off the foot of P Corey Bojorquez. S Talanoa Hufanga picked the loose ball and returned it 6 yds. to the end zone, tying the game at 10–10 with 4:41 remaining. San Francisco forced another 3–n–out on the following drive, getting the ball back to offense with 3:20 left on the clock. Garoppolo led the 49ers on a 9 play, 44–yd. drive that included a key 3rd down run by WR Deebo Samuel, to set up a game–winning FGA. Gould nailed a 45–yd. FG as time expired to propel San Francisco to the NFC Championship Game.

January 30 at SoFi Stadium
(Inglewood, CA)

The 49ers fell, 17–20, to the Los Angeles Rams in the NFC Championship Game at SoFi Stadium. After the two teams traded punts to open the game, the Rams went on a 9–play, 64–yd. drive into the red zone. On 3rd–n–3 from the 49ers 3–yd. line, CB K’Waun Williams deflected a pass from Rams QB Matthew Stafford and DB Jimmie Ward quickly intercepted it in the end zone and broke out on a 23–yd. return. Following a 49ers punt, the Rams responded with an 18–play, 97–yd. scoring drive that was capped off by a 16–yd. TD pass from Stafford to WR Cooper Kupp. On the ensuing possession, San Francisco orchestrated a 5–play, 75–yd. scoring drive of their own that was punctuated by a 44–yd. TD pass from QB Jimmy Garoppolo to WR Deebo Samuel, tying the game at 7–7, Los Angeles threatened to score on their next possession, but K Matt Gay missed a 54–yd. FG. Just before halftime, Garoppolo engineered an 8 play, 36–yd. drive that was capped off with a 38–yd. FG by K Robbie Gould that made the score 10–7 at halftime. After a 49ers punt to open the 2nd half, San Francisco’s defense stood tall forcing a turnover on downs and returning the ball to the offense at their own 43–yd. line. Garoppolo then led a 10–play, 58–yd. drive that resulted in a 16–yd. TD pass from Garoppolo to TE George Kittle, making the score 17–7. The Rams answered with a 7–play, 75–yd. scoring drive that was punctuated by an 11–yd. TD pass from Stafford to Kupp that narrowed Los Angeles’ deficit to 14–17 at the start of the 4th qtr. After a 49ers punt, the Rams tied the game at 17–17 when K Matt Gay connected on a 40–yd. FG. San Francisco was forced to punt on their next possession. On the Rams next drive, Stafford again led the team into FG range as Gay hit a 30–yd. FG that made the score 20–17 with 1:49 left to play. On the ensuing possession, Garoppolo was picked off by LB Travin Howard, ending the game.

The 49ers punched their ticket to the NFL Divisional Round with a 41–23 win over the Seattle Seahawks at Levi’s Stadium in the Wild Card Round. The San Francisco defense opened the game with a three–n–out of Seattle’s offense, including a 10–yd. DL Arik Armstead sack of QB Geno Smith. The offense then put together a 7–play, 48–yd. drive, including a 19–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk recept. and a 22–yd. WR Deebo Samuel run to set up a 34–yd. K Robbie Gould FG. The 49ers defense followed up with another three–n–out to get the ball back to the offense who took it 85 yds. in 5 plays, including a 68–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey run, to set up a 3–yd. TD pass from QB Brock Purdy to McCaffrey. The Seahawks offense responded with a 14–play, 78–yd. drive resulting in a 7–yd. RB Kenneth Walker III TD run. San Francisco opened up the next drive with a Purdy 23–yd. completion to Aiyuk and continued on a 10–play, 60–yd. drive to set up a 33–yd. Gould FG. Seattle came back with a 5–play, 71–yd. scoring drive ending in a Smith 50–yd. TD pass to WR DK Metcalf to take their first lead. On their last drive of the first half, the 49ers offense set up a 46–yd. Gould FG with the help of a 31–yd. Aiyuk catch and a 18–yd. Samuel recept. Prior to halftime, K Jason Myers hit a 56–yd. FG to put Seattle up 17–16. The 49ers opened up the second half with a 13–play, 75–yd. drive culminating in a 1–yd. Purdy TD run. The Seahawks threatened on the next drive, moving the ball to the San Francisco 19 before DL Charles Omenihu came up with a strip–sack of Smith that DL Nick Bosa recovered for the 49ers. The 49ers offense took advantage, driving the ball 70 yds. in 7 plays to set up a 7–yd. RB Elijah Mitchell TD run and a successful 2–pt. conversion from Purdy to TE George Kittle. The San Francisco defense came up with another big stop, not allowing Seattle past their own 32–yd. line and getting the ball back to the offense. Samuel took advantage, taking a short Purdy pass 74–yds. for a TD. On the next drive, DB Deommodore Lenoir intercepted a Smith pass intended for WR Tyler Lockett and returned it 6 yds. to the Seattle 37–yd. line. The 49ers tacked on a 31–yd. Gould FG to pad the lead. The Seahawks went 76 yds. in 15 plays for a 3–yd. Metcalf TD recept. with just under 2 minutes left. San Francisco RB Jordan Mason secured the win with back–to–back 8–yd. and 4–yd. runs for a first down to allow the 49ers to run out the clock.

The 49ers advanced to the NFC Championship with a 19–12 win over the Dallas Cowboys in the NFC Divisional Round at Levi's Stadium. After exchanging punts on the first 3 drives of the game, San Francisco DB Deommodore Lenoir intercepted a Cowboys QB Dak Prescott pass intended for WR Michael Gallup and returned it to the Dallas 27–yd. line. The 49ers offense moved the ball down to the 8–yd. line before putting points on the board with a K Robbie Gould 26–yd. FG. The Cowboys offense responded with a methodical 14–play, 74–yd. drive resulting in a TE Dalton Schultz 4–yd. TD receipt. to take the lead. After 49ers DL Samson Ebukam blocked the PAT, the 49ers offense drove the ball down the field and tied the game at 6 with a Gould 47–yd. FG. On the next drive, the Cowboys threatened in the redzone before LB Fred Warner intercepted a pass intended for WR CeeDee Lamb and returned it 16 yds. to the San Francisco 28. QB Brock Purdy connected with WR Deebo Samuel for a 10–yd. completion and WR Jauan Jennings for a 21–yd. completion to set up a K Robbie Gould 50–yd. FG to go up by three points at the half. After the 49ers defense halted the Cowboys near midfield on their first drive of the second half, Dallas recovered a WR Ray–Ray McCloud III muffed punt at the San Francisco 21–yd. line. The 49ers defense held the Cowboys to a 25–yd. K Brett Maher FG to tie the game at 9. Late in the 3rd qtr., the 49ers drove the ball 91 yds. on 10 plays, including a 30–yd. TE George Kittle receipt. to set up a 2–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run. The Cowboys moved the ball 32 yds. on 8 plays to set up a 43–yd. Maher FG to pull within 4 points with 11:00 minutes left in the game. With the help of 26 rushing yds. from RB Elijah Mitchell, the 49ers offense set up a 28–yd. FG by Gould to extend the lead to 7. San Francisco held tight for the last 3:00 minutes, including an Ebukam sack to secure the win and move on to face the Philadelphia Eagles in the NFC Championship Game.

The San Francisco 49ers hosted the Green Bay Packers in the NFC Divisional round at a rainy Levi's Stadium on Saturday night. The Packers started with the ball and drove the ball 58 yds. On 14 plays before the 49ers defense forced a 29–yd. K Anders Carlson FG. The 49ers punted the ball back to the Packers who drove the ball to the San Francisco 14 yardline before the 49ers defense forced a turnover on downs by stuffing QB Jordan Love on fourth–and–one. San Francisco took the ball 86 yds. on 12 plays culminating with a QB Brock Purdy 32–yd. TD pass to TE George Kittle. Green Bay responded by taking the ball 64 yds. down the field to set up another 29–yd. K Anders Carlson FG. Before the end of the half, the 49ers offense moved the ball to the 30 yardline of Green Bay to set up a 48–yd. K Jake Moody FG which Green Bay blocked to keep the score 7–6 at the half. After San Francisco opened the second half with a three–n–out, Green Bay drove the ball 75–yds. on nine plays to set up a 19–yd. QB Jordan Love TD pass to WR Bo Melton to take the lead. QB Brock Purdy and the 49ers offense responded with a four–play, 75 yd. drive including a 32–yd. TE George Kittle catch to set up a 39–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run. Green Bay's returner CB Keisean Nixon took the ensuing kickoff 73 yds. to the San Francisco 20 to set up a four–play drive ending in a 2–yd. TE Tucker Kraft TD catch and a QB Jordan Love to RB Aaron Jones two point conversion to put the Packers up 21–14. After going three–n–out, the San Francisco defense came up big when LB Dre Greenlaw intercepted a QB Jordan Love pass to get the ball back to the offense at the end of the third quarter. After exchanging punts at the beginning of the 4th quarter, with the help of a 53 yd. RB Aaron Jones run, the Packers set up a 41–yd. K Anders Carlson FG that he missed wide left, allowing the 49ers to take over at the San Francisco 31–yardline down by four points with just over six minutes remaining. With the help of a 10–yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk 3rd down catch and a 17–yd. WR Chris Conley completion, the 49ers set up a 6–yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to take the lead with 1:07 remaining. With the Packers down three and driving, LB Dre Greenlaw nabbed his second interception of the day to seal the 49ers 24–21 win and send San Francisco to the NFC Championship.

The San Francisco 49ers faced off against the Detroit Lions in the NFC Championship game at Levi's Stadium. The Lions opened the game with a four-play, 75-yd. drive ending in a 42-yd. WR Jameson Williams TD run to go up seven points early in the 1st qtr. The 49ers drove the ball to the Detroit 30-yardline to set up a K Jake Moody 48-yard FG which he missed wide right, giving the ball back to the Lions offense who took the ball 62 yards on 11 plays to set up a one-yard RB David Montgomery TD run. San Francisco's offense responded with an eight-play, 75-yd. drive to set up a 2-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey TD run to bring the 49ers within one score. The 49ers defense forced a Detroit punt with the help of a DL Nick Bosa sack, but LB Malcom Rodriguez came up with a QB Brock Purdy interception on the next drive to set the Lions up in San Francisco territory. A few plays later, the Lions found the end zone again on a 15-yd. RB Jahmyr Gibbs TD run. After San Francisco went three-n-out on the next possession, Detroit moved the ball 69 yards on 17 plays to set up a K Michael Badgley 21-yd. FG to go up 24-7 at halftime. The 49ers opened up the second half with a 9-play, 50-yd. drive, including a 26-yd. WR Deebo Samuel reception to set up a K Jake Moody 43-yd. FG to cut the Lions' lead to 14. The 49ers defense came up with a stop on 4th and two in their own territory to keep the Lions off the scoreboard and get the ball back to QB Brock Purdy who connected on a 17-yd. pass with WR Deebo Samuel before hitting WR Brandon Aiyuk on a 51-yd pass to set up a 6-yd. WR Brandon Aiyuk TD reception. On the next play, S Tashaun Gipson Sr. forced a RB Jahmyr Gibbs fumble and DL Arik Armstead recovered it, giving the offense the ball on the Detroit 24-yardline. QB Brock Purdy scrambled for 21 yards to set up a RB Christian McCaffrey 1-yd. TD run to tie the game at 24 apiece. On the next drive, San Francisco's defense forced a three-n-out, allowing the offense to take the ball 65 yards on 11 plays to set up a K Jake Moody 33-yd. FG to give the 49ers their first lead of the game. The defense came up big again, forcing a QB Jared Goff incomplete pass on 4th and three to stop the Lions from scoring. The San Francisco offense responded by taking the ball 70 yards on seven plays, including a QB Brock Purdy 21-yd. scramble and a 25-yd. RB Christian McCaffrey run to set up a three-yd. RB Elijah Mitchell TD run to put the 49ers on top by 10 points with just over three minutes left in the game. Detroit took the ball 75 yards on 11 plays to set up a 3-yd. QB Jared Goff. TD pass to WR Jameson Williams with less than a minute to go in the game. TE George Kittle recovered the onside kick, allowing the 49ers offense to run out the clock and cash in their ticket to Super Bowl LVIII.

John Lynch

Getting 49ers' sixth Super Bowl title motivation for GM John Lynch

By Nick Wagoner
December 15, 2022

The San Francisco 49ers were less than 24 hours removed from their 2021 season ending in devastating fashion, and coach Kyle Shanahan's tank was running low.

In the minds of Shanahan, general manager John Lynch and the Niners coaches and players, the season ended a game too early, as they coughed up a fourth-quarter lead to eventual Super Bowl champion Los Angeles Rams in the NFC Championship Game. Now, it was up to Lynch and Shanahan to pick up the pieces before the Niners went their separate ways. Shanahan asked Lynch to address the team with encouraging words for the months ahead.

As a Hall of Fame safety, Lynch had come up short before eventually breaking through by winning Super Bowl XXXVII with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. With that experience in mind, he wanted to deliver a message centered on the fortitude it takes to push through the pain of losing and come out on the other side better for it.

Everyone listening at the 49ers' facility knew the faces would change in the offseason, with many players scheduled for free agency and coaches ticketed for other opportunities. Behind the scenes, Lynch was already pondering if he, too, would be on the way out.

In the weeks before the season ended, Lynch had been made aware that Prime Video, which would begin exclusively airing "Thursday Night Football" in 2022, was looking to fill out its broadcasting booth and willing to pay big money for recognizable names.

Lynch, who spent nine years as a color analyst at Fox, was near the top of the list. But as he stood before the assembled players and coaches on locker room clean out day, he couldn't shake the same feeling of everyone in the room: unfinished business.

"I remember vividly being up there and saying, 'I can't leave these guys here,'" Lynch said. "I'm telling them here's what it's gonna take ... Right then is when I knew."

What Lynch knew was that regardless of the money, he couldn't leave because his mission -- to bring the 49ers a sixth Lombardi Trophy -- was incomplete.

In nearly six years as general manager, Lynch has rarely talked at length about how his time on the job has been. He doesn't love talking about himself, but recently sat down for a long conversation about the many hats he's worn as general manager. Yet, he always comes back to the one he wants the most: world champion.

From the moment Shanahan and Lynch arrived in 2017 and reaffirmed with contract extensions in 2020, it's been their obsession.

"I feel like it's a demand," Lynch said of winning a Super Bowl. "It kills me. Like, I can't even tell you."

In 2019, the Niners lost Super Bowl LIV to the Kansas City Chiefs. In 2012, before Lynch and Shanahan arrived, they fell to the Baltimore Ravens in Super Bowl XLVII. They again knocked on the door last year, coming up short but holding out hope they're on the verge of kicking it down.

All of which is why Lynch, even after going through what he calls "the mechanics" of meeting with Prime Video executives and learning what the job might pay -- reports indicate it could have roughly tripled

Lynch's salary to somewhere between $12 million and $15 million per year -- wasn't ready to walk away from what he and Shanahan had built.

It's why Thursday night, when the Niners will try to clinch the NFC West with a victory over the Seattle Seahawks at Lumen Field (8:15 p.m. ET, Prime Video), Lynch will be watching from an owner's box rather than a broadcast booth. And why Shanahan, who encouraged Lynch to consider the broadcasting job given its massive payday, is happy Lynch is still around to pursue the Lombardi Trophy.

"All I tried to tell him was when you have opportunities like this, like that's too much to not make the right decision for you and your family," Shanahan said. "Don't just do something because you feel loyal to the Niners or loyal to me. It never was about the money really for John ... it's because he really loves being a part of a team.

"We love him here. I think he loves being here and hope he's here for a long time."

IN MANY WAYS, Lynch and Troy Aikman are kindred spirits. Both enjoyed Hall of Fame-playing careers before going on to success in the broadcast booth. What they didn't know is that each aspired to run an NFL franchise, as they missed being part of a team and going home with a result -- good or bad -- each Sunday.

Which is why Aikman, who's the color analyst for "Monday Night Football," likes to joke with Lynch and Shanahan that had the Fox broadcasting schedule been a little bit different in the 2016 playoffs, Aikman, not Lynch, would be the Niners general manager.

At the time, Aikman worked on Fox's top broadcasting crew with Joe Buck while Lynch was on the No. 2 team. When the playoff assignments were doled out, Lynch drew the Atlanta Falcons in the divisional round. It was in those production meetings and previous weeks of Lynch covering Falcons games that he and Shanahan, then Atlanta's offensive coordinator ticketed for the Niners job, began discussing the idea of Lynch coming to San Francisco.

By the time Buck and Aikman were in a production meeting with Shanahan the following week for the NFC Championship Game, they had a good idea Lynch was going to San Francisco with Shanahan, who had been linked to the Niners as head coach for multiple weeks and would take the job as soon as Atlanta's season ended.

"My first question to Kyle when he came into our production meeting, I asked him, 'Kyle, are you telling me that if Fox had assigned me the divisional game for Atlanta that I'd be your GM right now?'" Aikman said, laughing. "But John Lynch is an all-time great person. He's an old-school football guy. A great fit for those two. They've had enormous success."

Lynch's hiring came with plenty of questions. He would be a first-time general manager who had no formal experience on the personnel side and was joining Shanahan, a first-time head coach.

Shanahan didn't care about going the unconventional route. He wanted someone who was honest, who could work well with people and would work hard so he could pick up things without direction.

It was an outside-the-box hire for a team that needed a massive rebuild both from a roster and culture standpoint after cycling through three coaches in as many years. At the time, Niners CEO Jed York emphasized the importance of having a tandem that could work through decisions and find the right solution even if they initially disagreed.

Lynch and Shanahan knew each other a bit from Lynch's four seasons playing for Mike Shanahan with the Denver Broncos. They also shared a common affinity for the 49ers, with Shanahan loving the team as a kid when his dad was offensive coordinator and Lynch playing college ball at nearby Stanford for legendary coach Bill Walsh.

They quickly discovered a shared passion for restoring the franchise to greatness.

"He was the perfect guy to build a team with," Shanahan said. "Not just the players, but the whole coaching staff, the whole personnel department ... You had plenty of guys with experience who could do stuff and he hadn't had that. But I think most people in that situation, they have a hard time admitting that they don't know stuff."

NEAR THE START of every 49ers practice as players go through stretching and individual drills, Shanahan and Lynch play catch. For Shanahan, it's an opportunity to loosen his right arm before taking his spot as the quarterback opposite the starting defense during group game plan install.

It's also a chance for Shanahan and Lynch to stay connected. The pair rarely talk business as they toss the ball around, but their daily routine has roots in a piece of advice Lynch received from former Bucs and Indianapolis Colts coach Tony Dungy when he first took the general manager job.

Lynch, who played for Dungy with the Bucs, remembers Dungy telling him to create opportunities to spend time with Shanahan so necessary discussions can come up organically.

"The general manager kind of impacts the front office and the staff," Dungy said. "The head coach impacts the coaching staff and the players. And when you get everybody with the same message on board thinking alike, it's really important. And then in the decision-making process, you want to be together, too. I told John I thought that was really important and I really think he and Kyle have that."

While Shanahan and Lynch have developed a close bond, Lynch is the eternal optimist that Shanahan jokingly calls "Captain America" while Shanahan is a natural skeptic who prefers to be described as realistic over pessimistic but acknowledges both traits.

When a potential roster move arises, it's not unusual for Lynch to be met with Shanahan's immediate cynicism. Shanahan likens the process of big roster moves to buying a house with his wife, where he will point out everything wrong with it to her as a means to determine whether those things can be worked past.

That push and pull, with neither side taking disagreements personally, is necessary. Dungy recalls the Colts' picking wideout Pierre Garcon in the sixth round of the 2008 draft.

Colts GM Bill Polian viewed Garcon as an intriguing developmental prospect, while Dungy believed the wideout from tiny Mount Union College was too raw. It was the classic battle of long-term versus short-term. The long-term won out and Garcon went on to play 11 years with 628 receptions for 7,854 yards and 38 touchdowns, coincidentally ending his career with the Niners after becoming one of Lynch and Shanahan's first free agent additions.

WHEN LYNCH ARRIVED in 2017, he and Shanahan set out on a teardown and a plan to play it conservative on the rebuild. And for the most part, they did. Until October. That's when they traded for quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo, effectively scuttling their initial plan to try to sign Kirk Cousins in free agency the following March and giving Garoppolo the first shot at becoming their franchise quarterback.

It was the first significant pivot from the Niners' initial team-building plan and a harbinger of things to come.

After making what Lynch called the easiest decision of his tenure to draft end Nick Bosa with the No. 2 pick in the 2019 draft, then landing receiver Deebo Samuel in the second round, Lynch and Shanahan took stock of what was happening around them. Like the NBA, the NFL was becoming an increasingly star-powered league.

They've since made big trades for the likes of left tackle Trent Williams, running back Christian McCaffrey and up the draft board for quarterback Trey Lance.

"It feels like in all of these sports right now, it takes these superstars [to win]," Lynch said. "You understand those guys are essential to winning. The whole team is, every person out there is, but you need those guys. I think we've got as many of those guys as anybody. And that's why we have a chance."

Those moves have been supplemented by finding some superstars -- such as Bosa, Samuel, linebacker Fred Warner and tight end George Kittle -- in the draft. And the Niners have found a way to keep most of those players, even when it seemed unlikely. That's most notably true in the case of Garoppolo.

After a long offseason unsuccessfully spent trying to trade Garoppolo, it seemed there was little chance he would be back. During an August practice, Lynch strolled up to Shanahan and suggested bringing Garoppolo back at a reduced rate. Per custom, Shanahan said "no way," not because he didn't want to retain Garoppolo but because he didn't think the quarterback would go for it.

Lynch preached patience, encouraging Shanahan to let it all play out. Eventually, much to the surprise of many, Garoppolo stayed. Just as Samuel, running back Raheem Mostert and kicker Robbie Gould all had after at one point requesting a trade.

"When [guys like that] come in and say, 'Hey, I wanna be someplace else,' you just go, 'No, you wanna be here,'" Lynch said. "You rely on that good foundation of a relationship you have because you understand those guys are essential to winning."

That's not to say, of course, that every move Lynch and Shanahan have made has worked out. Far from it.

Lynch has called trading defensive tackle DeForest Buckner the hardest move he's made. The trade for end Dee Ford and signing of linebacker Kwon Alexander were big whiffs, and the draft is littered with selections, even near the top, that haven't worked out.

Even an under-the-radar move like losing cornerback D.J. Reed on waivers still stings. Reed was a fifth-round pick in the 2018 draft whom the Niners believed had starter potential. Heading into his third season, Reed was dealing with a torn pectoral.

After exploring options to keep him, they waived Reed with an injury designation believing he would clear waivers and revert to their injured reserve list. The Seahawks claimed Reed, who became a starter and earned a three-year, $33 million deal from the New York Jets in the offseason.

Lynch acknowledges the misses but doesn't wince at their mention. He knows mistakes come with the job and likens it to playing safety, where you're the last line of defense and if you give up a big touchdown everyone knows it's your fault.

The choice Lynch sees is to dwell on it or learn from it.

"Take note when you really covet a player, don't try to be cute," Lynch said. "Those things stick with you but when you're aligned and you do things together, like everyone's gotta own it, you know? And I think we all learned from that one."

After a one-year delay, Lynch's family relocated to the Bay Area from San Diego, much to the chagrin of his daughter Lindsay. He jokes that telling your teenage daughter she has to move before her senior year of high school is a bolder move than anything he could do as general manager.

More than anything, he's sure to credit his family for supporting his decision to leave the broadcast booth.

"I look back, it's been fun," Lynch said. "It's been an adventure. It's been worthwhile. It's been fulfilling, I'm very appreciative of my family, very appreciative for the opportunity."

One of the first things Lynch said after taking the job was that he didn't know what he didn't know. In order to learn, he took another cue from Dungy and surrounded himself with people he believed in.

Paraag Marathe, the Niners' executive vice president of football operations, and Brian Hampton, the team's vice president of football operations, have been instrumental in handling salary cap and contract issues, an area Lynch says is a work in progress for him.

Assistant general manager Adam Peters is his top lieutenant and player personnel director Ran Carthon has been key in assisting with scouting talent.

Both have interviewed for general manager jobs elsewhere in the past year. Either would be a candidate to replace Lynch if he left.

"We have a lot of people on the staff that we're always trying to groom," Shanahan said. "Not just to replace one of us someday but also to help them get opportunities in other places. We've got lots of good guys here that we feel confident in but John's our guy and I hope that we don't have to deal with that for a long time."

By his own admission, Lynch is almost too focused on the here and now, rarely looking beyond the 24 hours in front of him. Which means he's spent little time considering when he might be done in San Francisco's front office.

Lynch works in a building with constant reminders of the Niners' five world championships. He admits he doesn't see himself walking away until he's added at least No. 6.

"I'm still very motivated to get up and come to work every day," Lynch said. "I'm challenged and I'm enjoying myself. I'm still motivated to get this place back to where it once was. And that's on the top."

49ers: How John Lynch's tough-love 'teddy bear' dad propelled him to Canton

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
August 6, 2021

John Lynch was on his back, gasping for air, looking up at a group of concerned teammates and coaches.

But then the scenery changed for the Pop Warner quarterback of the Torrey Pines Falcons who'd had the wind knocked out of him. The only person the middle-schooler could see was his dad, John Sr., also known as Big John, a hulking 6-foot-5 former linebacker with size-15 feet who was a 13th-round pick of the Steelers in 1969.

"My dad said, 'You know, guys, I think he just needs some space,'" Lynch said. "So everybody backs up and he said, 'Johnny,' — he called me Johnny back then — 'if you ever lay on the field again for anything other than your neck, it's going to hurt a lot worse when you get home.'"

The message stuck. Lynch, a hellacious-hitting safety, would spend the rest of his football career stubbornly trying to get to his feet when told otherwise by trainers or doctors, as if his father was, again, about to enter the picture. Yes, Big John had a huge impact on his son, the 49ers' general manager who will be enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, on Sunday in recognition of a 15-year career that included nine Pro Bowl berths with the Buccaneers and Broncos.

Lynch, 49, was a high school QB who was recruited by powers such as USC and Notre Dame. And he was a Stanford pitcher who was a second-round pick in the 1992 Major League Baseball Draft. He owes much of his ability to his mom, Cathy, a runner and golfer known as the family's best athlete. But the man who once knocked out his brother-in-law, Bears tight end John Allred, and was placed among the 10 most feared hitters in league history by NFL Films, is known more for his on-field intensity than athleticism. And that defining quality was transferred from Big John.

His dad was his Little League manager ... who was ejected from multiple games (John Sr. didn't dispute the charge: "I'm still chagrined. What was I thinking? But at the time it was damn important to us.") And his dad once chartered a jet to Pullman, Wash., hours after his son verbally committed to Washington State on a recruiting trip and had pointed words for Cougars coach Dennis Erickson (His reaction when this was mentioned: "Oh my Lord.")

And his dad was livid with Stanford quarterbacks coach Ron Turner after his son, a backup QB who was never given a start, was moved to safety. (Explained John Sr.: "I used to get really pissed off at Ron Turner for not playing him and I'd give him the evil eye.") And his dad had a supporting role in what Lynch terms the best performance of his football career. That was in Stanford's upset win over Notre Dame in 1992 in which Lynch's helmet was taken away after he suffered a concussion.

Recalled Lynch of his dad's message from his seat near Stanford's sideline in an era where concussion protocols were nonexistent: "It was something like, 'Get your helmet and get back in the you-know-what game.'"

Lynch laughs as he relays such stories, but he also has reflected deeply on his influences while preparing for induction weekend. And he wants to place his dad in proper context.

Yes, Big John began taking his three children to 5:30 a.m. workouts at a San Diego gym when John was 8, Kara was 10 and Ryan was 5. But then he'd take them to Mass at St. James in Solana Beach, followed by a trip to Solana Donuts because he also was passionate about faith and fun. And, yes, he'd occasionally lose his cool with teenage Little League umpires. But the businessman who built a radio empire, selling Noble Broadcast Group for $152 million in 1996, never missed his children's sporting events despite his grueling travel schedule: He'd regularly arrive just before those Little League games after an East Coast flight — and then take the team to a Mexican restaurant or pizza joint afterward.

“My dad was tough, but tough in a good way,” Lynch said. “Tough in that he had expectations. He was also incredibly loving, as was my mom. They both taught that you have to dream big. And you have to set your goals high. And everything you did, you did your best. And they were such great examples because they always taught us that it was not just a nice thing, but it was responsibility to give back to your community. ...”

“But, yeah, I’d go 4-for-5 in a Little League game and he’d say, ‘What happened on the fifth one?’ He did it in such a way that he pulled it off. And my mom was always there to pick me up when he was a little ticked off and I had to walk home because I was 3-for-5.”

Kara, 51, who runs a health and wellness company, says her dad “expected greatness” from his children but is a “teddy bear.” And Ryan, 46, a former minor-league pitcher who is the co-CEO of a real-estate investment company, terms his dad — who regularly woke him for 5 a.m. backyard batting-cage sessions — a “softy.” And John Sr. was warm, self-deprecating and funny during a recent 30-minute phone interview. Asked about his anticipated emotions during his son’s induction speech, he cracked: “First of all, we’re Irish, so we cry when they mow the lawn.”

Lynch notes his dad never even spanked his children. And Big John, asked about his reaction when John was laying down on the field with the wind knocked out him, said some of his rhetoric was for effect.

“I never would have put John in harm’s way,” he said. “But, yeah, basically it was, ‘You get your ass back in there.’”

There’s no question Big John forcefully directed some of his son’s steps on his path to Canton.

In eighth grade, Lynch began regularly surfing with a new group of friends. His dad noticed a change in his attitude, which included an occasionally disrespectful tone with his mom. One morning, Lynch couldn’t locate the surfboard he was certain he left in the garage. He called his dad at work.

“He said, ‘I’ve got your surfboard,’” Lynch said. “‘You can have it back after high school. And you’ll thank me later.’”

As a senior at Torrey Pines High School, Lynch took his recruiting visit to Washington State, a trip that preceded his visit to Stanford. During his trip, he excitedly called his parents and told them he’d verbally committed. His mom mentioned he’d yet to see Stanford. His dad was mostly silent. The next morning, his dad arrived unannounced at a brunch for recruits at Erickson’s house.

“My dad walks in and asks coach Erickson and me to come into a room for a moment,” Lynch said, laughing. “I mean, it’s not his house. I’m like, ‘Dad what are you doing here?’”

Big John explained to the coach that his son would not sign until he’d visited Stanford. Erickson ended up leaving WSU for Miami a few weeks later.

At Stanford, Lynch couldn’t crack the starting lineup at QB and strongly considered turning his full attention to baseball. But head coach Dennis Green convinced him to transition to safety as a junior. This time, Lynch, who knew his dad would be irate, called his parents and explained that he’d made the decision and it was final. In other words: Dad, don’t intervene.

“That was kind of symbolic of me becoming a man,” Lynch said. “I was like, ‘I appreciate everything you’ve done for me, but I’ve got this now.’”

If not for the position switch, Lynch wouldn’t have been stunned by a knock at his house in Rancho Santa Fe in January. Hall of Fame president David Baker delivered the news that Lynch, an eight-time finalist, had finally been voted into the Hall of Fame. In the emotional ensuing celebration, Big John raised a toast to the son he’d loved deeply, pushed hard and, finally, let go — while clinging to a long-held belief.

He said, 'Cathy and I are so proud of Johnny,'" Lynch recalled, "although I still think he would have made it as a quarterback.' I'm like, 'Dad, give it up!'"

Why is John Lynch doing this? Inside new 49ers GM's crash course

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
February 17, 2017

Former NFL safety John Lynch recently detonated his idyllic life as though it was a wide receiver crossing the middle. The impact sent him to Santa Clara while his wife and four children stayed in San Diego.

The separation is temporary. His family will join the new 49ers general manager at the end of the school year. But the months apart will be arduous.

That became clear earlier this month. Lynch, 45, in a suit and tie after his introductory news conference, was asked, as he leaned against a counter in the media room at Levi's Stadium, why he'd swapped serenity for stress. All GM jobs are demanding, but Lynch's could be particularly grueling, at least initially: He has no executive experience and is in the midst of a front-office crash course.

Before joining the 49ers, the 15-year NFL veteran spent eight years as a well-respected Fox broadcaster, and his work-half-the-year gig let him stay close to family as well as football. So why accept an all-consuming job he didn't need? The GM suggested Linda Lynch had posed the same question.

"My wife keeps on saying, 'Are you sure?'" Lynch said. "I said, 'Well, this has already started. We're in.'"

His response inspired laughter. Lynch was smiling, too, but then the grin faded and his eyes pooled with tears.

"I tell you, I've never been apart from my family," said Lynch, his voice cracking with emotion he didn't anticipate. "So it's been gut-wrenching already."

His tears, of course, make his recent decision even more perplexing.

Why is John Lynch doing this?

The answer involves the craving for competition that fuels countless athletes and often can't be satisfied after the final whistle.

As a Fox analyst, Lynch quickly ascended to the No. 2 broadcast team, but he found success without a scoreboard unsatisfying. At the end of a telecast, the nine-time Pro Bowl player and four-time Hall of Fame finalist often fist-bumped his play-by-play partner and then ... nothing. No anguish or elation.

"He really missed someone winning and losing at the end of a game," 49ers head coach Kyle Shanahan said. "He enjoyed doing the announcing and being a part of the NFL. But the fight to go through something with a group of guys and what we go through together — it's not easy, and it's a grind for everybody, but it's worth it."

Indeed, the grind-loving competitor that lurks within the charismatic and composed Lynch has re-emerged after spending the past decade in post-playing limbo.

It's fitting that Lynch rejoined the NFL by signing his contract with the 49ers on a Sunday. During his playing career, that was typically when he transformed from mild-mannered to maniacal.

For his first five NFL seasons, cornerback Champ Bailey knew Lynch only from afar as a bone-rattling enforcer who punctuated hits with screams. In 2004, however, they became teammates with the Broncos and Bailey saw there was far more to the madman than met the eye.

Lynch is the Stanford-educated, San-Diego-bred son of a successful businessman. His father, John Lynch Sr., is the president and CEO of the Broadcast Company of the Americas, which owns three radio stations, and was the CEO of the San Diego Union-Tribune. In 2006, Lynch won the Bart Starr Award, which is given to the NFL player who best exemplifies outstanding leadership and character.

Bailey was shocked: He didn't expect the thumper to be so thoughtful.

"Man, that's what fools you about him," Bailey said. "If you meet him before you see him play, you'd never think he'd play the way he does. But, for me, I saw him play before I met him and immediately it was like, 'Dang, this is not what I expected.' I expected some nut case wanting to run through every brick wall he sees. But he wasn't. Calm, collected, he had great values, focused."

Bailey gives Lynch, who is seven years older, much of the credit for his longevity. The 12-time Pro Bowl pick also played 15 seasons — partly because he noticed how Lynch cared for his body and how his obsessive film study compensated for declining late-career skills.

"I don't really know anyone personally that would be better suited to run a team than John Lynch," Bailey said. "I believe he could be the general manager and the head coach. That's how competitive he is and how much he prepares before he does anything."

Before becoming a GM, Lynch prepared for the job by learning from his close friend, Broncos general manager John Elway. With the Hall of Fame quarterback, Lynch discussed front-office intricacies and the emptiness that was prompting him to consider an executive role.

The ultra-competitive Elway returned to the NFL in 2011 when he joined Denver's front office. During Elway's tenure, he has asked Lynch to evaluate college prospects, asked him to attend draft meetings and asked him this: Why stay in TV if you can get back in the trenches?

"I think one thing that was a common denominator (between us) was what fills up your balloon?" Elway said. "Obviously, John did a tremendous job with TV. But I think — that's what I told him — I don't know how much TV fills up your balloon, but being in this position to where you're putting a football team together, a football staff together, is very satisfying. And, obviously, it's a great challenge. The next thing to playing is being in that position."

Lynch's challenge is daunting: He's a novice who has inherited a 2-14 team with serious quarterback issues.

However, the man ranked the 10th-hardest hitter in league history by NFL Network specialized in obliterating obstacles during his football career.

At Stanford, he spent his first two seasons as a never-used quarterback, transitioned to a hybrid linebacker role as a junior and didn't start until he moved to safety his final season. The result: He left Palo Alto as a second-team All-American.

"What it really comes down to is he's extraordinarily competitive," said Tom Holmoe, a former 49ers safety who was Lynch's position coach during his senior season. "It was real early in his transition to free safety that you said, 'Oh boy, he's going to take it to the limit.'"

In the NFL, Lynch was a third-round pick of the Buccaneers whose inexperience at safety partly explained why he didn't start more than six games in any of his first three seasons.

Tampa Bay head coach Sam Wyche had been encouraged to draft Lynch by Stanford's Bill Walsh, under whom Wyche had served as an assistant with the 49ers. Lynch was a project, but Wyche was wowed by the rookie's off-the-chart intangibles, which forecast future success.

“There are players that come in and you notice their competitive spirit right away,” Wyche said. “Well, with John, it just oozed out of him. He couldn’t hide it. The really great players only know one speed.”

Lynch earned his first Pro Bowl berth in 1997, his fifth season, and was a captain of the 2002 Buccaneers, who won a Super Bowl on the strength of one of the best defenses in NFL history. However, Tampa Bay released Lynch in a salary-cap move after the 2003 season, and the then-32-year-old underwent surgery to remove bone spurs in his neck.

It was his last significant challenge. And Lynch responded by morphing from injured and unemployed to seemingly indomitable. He signed with the Broncos and immediately had an I’m-back hit on Chiefs wide receiver Dante Hall, who was impaled by Lynch in the 2004 season opener. It set the tone for a career-ending, four-year run with Denver that featured four Pro Bowl berths.

“He absolutely came in (in 2004) with something to prove,” Bailey said. “He didn’t talk about it a lot, but you could see the fire in his eyes. ... The guy was a presence. He knew it. He just had to prove it over again that he could play.”

Now, Lynch hopes to conquer perhaps his greatest challenge.

With the 49ers, he’ll attempt to resurrect a franchise while maintaining a normal life with a family that includes a 17-year-old son and daughters Lindsay, 16, Lilly, 14, and Leah, 9.

Lynch said his children and Linda, his wife of 23 years, eventually reached the point where they shared his excitement over his new job. But it will take some adjustment.

His son, Jake, might stay in San Diego and live with Lynch’s parents in the fall to play his senior season of high school football. In addition, the complications of their temporary separation were clear when plane-grounding fog in San Diego prevented his family from surprising him at his introductory news conference.

Lynch, who said he’s been getting little sleep, joked that he’s still trying to locate his new work-life balance when asked about contacting quarterback Colin Kaepernick.

“I got chewed out for not calling my daughter before she went to bed last night,” he said. “So I’m trying to get a lot of things in.”

Moments later, the former NFL tough guy was fighting back tears and the moment illustrated the anguish involved in his latest task.

So, again, why is John Lynch doing this? He clearly agrees with Shanahan: It won’t be easy, but it will be worth it.

The Unconventional Career Path of 49ers GM John Lynch

By Albert Breer

February 16, 2017

Behind John Lynch's desk in Santa Clara, there are a number of bottles of wine, each one wishing him luck in his new venture as the 49ers general manager. That he got them from agents is one surprise from his first three weeks on the job.

"I'm telling you, I didn't think agents were this nice," he said over the phone on Wednesday afternoon, laughing before conceding, "They're buttering me up."

The haul of reds hasn't been the only things to catch Lynch a little off guard with this move that set the football world back on its heels at the outset of Super Bowl week. There's the breadth of the work, which goes well beyond scouting. And related to that, there's how a GM gets pulled in so many different directions during a given day.

But there's good news here, too. With a couple weeks to spare before the Niners staff packs up for Indianapolis and the scouting combine, this very much feels to Lynch—the former player and broadcaster—like what he's supposed to be doing.

"It does," he said. "I'd caution you, one thing Monte Kiffin always said to us was that the worst three words any football player can say are, 'I got it.' I'm right at the beginning stages. We're right at the beginning stages. We're taking on challenges every day. But I can tell you, I'm not overwhelmed, each day I come in and there's a routine."

"A priest once said to me, 'Think about eating a huge steak, you can't eat it all in one bite. You gotta take one bite at a time.' And that's the way we're going through it. You can get overwhelmed in this job, particularly coming in late. I got all this to do, how do I do it? Instead, we're just going about our business each day and taking things as they come. It does feel very natural."

In this week's Game Plan, we'll look at how the 2018 quarterback crop could affect the Mitch Trubiskys and Deshaun Watsons of this year, the Redskins' Kirk Cousins quandary, how the use of the franchise tag has changed dramatically over the past five years and a lot more.

But we start with the Niners' new GM, his first few weeks on the job, and why he hardly feels like a fish out of water—despite the fact that he landed in his new role without taking the traditional path to it.

Lynch's precursor to one of 32 jobs running the personnel side of an NFL franchise is comprised of 16 years as a player and some eight-and-a-half seasons working his way up in the world of football broadcasting. He, in fact, never left pro football, having been involved for the past 24 years running. And this is where, in these stories about him, you point out where he was never a scout.

That's where we'll take our left-hand turn. Let's explain why, through his words, his start has proven Lynch to be more prepared than most of the skeptics expected, and how he already has a pretty evolved vision.

His playing experience. That's beyond just having played for Denny Green, Bill Walsh, Sam Wyche, Tony Dungy, Jon Gruden, Mike Shanahan and, briefly, Bill Belichick. It also goes past figuring, between the lines and through endless film study, what makes a great NFL player. And it goes to his first experience in the pros, and being part of the 1990s Bucs' transition from doormat to dominant force.

"There's a lot of parallels," he says, comparing those Bucs with these 49ers. "There'd been constant change, so the thought process as a rookie was 'don't get close to the guy next to you, because he may not be here in a couple weeks. Don't let your wives make friends, because they're not gonna be here.' That was the culture. Everybody talks about Tony [Dungy], and Tony was certainly integral."

“But before that, Rich McKay came in and brought some stability—we’re gonna draft good winning players that have certain traits, and football character. Then Tony came in and gave it more stability—these are the schemes we’re gonna play. We’re not deviating in Week 1 or Week 2 if it’s not working. We’re sticking to them.”

His TV experience. Lynch settled in Denver after his playing career and grew close to John Elway. So when Elway took the Broncos’ job in 2011, he’d get after Lynch about leaving broadcasting to work for a team. To that end, in 2012, Elway had him write reports on safeties in the draft. In 2013, Lynch sat in Denver’s draft meetings for a month.

Now, Lynch maintains that he followed advice he got from Mike Tomlin in Tampa: Be where you’re at. He was focused on his job with Fox, and was moving up in the ranks there. Still, he knew, as he puts it, “What was missing was a scoreboard.” And so Elway’s poking, plus working to be prepared as a broadcaster, opened the door to Lynch subconsciously developing team-building beliefs in the course of his work.

“I wasn’t out there soaking up information from organizations as I went in their buildings, I was trying to be the best broadcaster I could be,” he explains. “But you’re meeting with the quarterback, you’re meeting with the head coach, the GM usually comes and finds you, you’re meeting with coordinators on both sides, you’re meeting with finest players in the league. ... So it challenges your mind.”

His Broncos experience. At one point, Elway discussed hiring Lynch before deciding he didn’t have the right role for him. In the end, the Broncos GM may have given him something more valuable than a job—an open-door to his own experiences growing into the role without the traditional career path behind him. Two pieces of advice stuck with Lynch. First, Elway said “hire some good people around you,” which Lynch now jokes was to Elway’s detriment, since Lynch’s first hire was one of Elway’s best people—new 49ers VP of player personnel Adam Peters. Second, Elway told Lynch that he had to learn to close his door, which seems simple, but relates to time management as a boss.

“Day 1, all I wanted to do was turn on the tape of the San Francisco 49ers to see what we have,” Lynch says. “And it wasn’t until 4:30 that I finally turned the tape on, because I was meeting people, meeting the trainer, going through the office. But that was very important too. That’s how it is. ... You also have to learn to close your door. You need your quiet time to yourself where you can just get stuff done.”

His life experience. Lynch says that, at the end of his playing career, “You’re always saying, ‘I haven’t come close to knowing it all, there’s always something I can improve on.’” He took that thirst to learn into broadcasting, and he plans to take that humility into his new job, too. “I think that’ll be the case 15 years from now,” he says.

Early on, it’s been small stuff. At the Super Bowl, both college and NFL players would approach him, and he’d wonder, Is this tampering? He’s leaned on Peters and fellow new hire, and former Lions GM Martin Mayhew, for help in those areas. And he knows he has a lot to learn elsewhere. So yes, he’ll delegate some. But what’s as important is that he maintains that quest for knowledge in all areas.

“Part of the interview process was, 10 characteristics of a GM, go 1-10 on what you’d be strongest at,” he says. “And I just followed my heart. Setting the tone and vision for a building, that was 1. Negotiating salary cap and contracts, right off the bat, I had that as 10, because I haven’t done it. So listen, I’m gonna have to rely on some people. But I will learn that, because I think to be good at it, you can’t just say, ‘that’s my guy over there.’ You gotta learn it and be a part of it.”

So why will this work? I don’t know if it will, because these are hard things to forecast. But I do think that Lynch and head coach Kyle Shanahan have a chance, and not just because both are competitive, smart and driven football junkies. My feeling is it’s more because Shanahan has a very defined vision for a football team, and Lynch has a clear-headed idea of how to build that, and they share a lot of ideals.

Getting that alignment was a stated goal of CEO Jed York's during the GM/coach search, and it looks like San Francisco has that at this early juncture. On Tuesday, Shanahan gave a lengthy, detailed presentation for the scouts on what his staff would be looking for at each position. And that adds detail to the character traits Lynch has talked to his scouts about seeking.

One that Lynch calls "critical" is football character. "You gotta live it and breathe it," he says.

The 49ers GM certainly does, and he's gotten to work in surrounding himself with others that do, too. Which is probably why none of this feels unnatural to him at all.

Paraag Marathe

The fall and rise of Paraag Marathe: How the maligned ‘numbers guy’ endures as 49ers front-office force

By Dan Brown
The Athletic
October 30, 2019

He’s still here. Paraag Marathe, the whiz kid hired nearly 20 years ago to lead the 49ers’ analytics revolution, is sitting in a gorgeous executive office overlooking the 49ers practice field on a recent autumn afternoon.

He’s still here, having outlasted both of the executives who hired him, the coaches he helped hire and the pitchforks that tried to run him out of town.

Marathe, and he alone among the 49ers’ top decision-makers, proved impervious to the free-swinging axe of the tumultuous early 2000s, thriving even as three general managers (Terry Donahue, Scot McCloughan and Trent Baalke) and six head coaches were cut down. The GMs and coaches all fell. Marathe rose.

He’s still here, in his 19th season, having endured the outrageous slings and arrows of sports-talk radio. For a spell a few years ago, criticism turned so vicious that one of his most famous supporters considering going incognito to defend him on the radio dial. Go ahead, Billy from Oakland, you’re on the air ...

“I’ve never called a sports-talk radio show, but I remember hearing it and I wanted to disguise my voice and call in,” A’s executive vice president Billy Beane said in a recent phone interview. “I knew Paraag personally and I knew him professionally. He’s an infectious personality and a high-energy guy.”

Beane, the foremost expert when it comes to resistance to data-driven roster-making, said he’s met four young intellectuals in his life whose smarts, personality and creativity wowed him from their very first meeting: current A’s GM David Forst, former Dodgers GM and current Cleveland Browns executive Paul DePodesta, Giants president Farhad Zaidi ... and Paraag Marathe.

“My first impression? I wanted to hire him,” Beane said. “And then as time went on, I realized the more likely scenario was that he would hire me.”

Not everyone was on board from the start of Marathe’s 49ers career in 2000, however, especially not within 49ers headquarters. Former staffers from that era recall a near mutiny among coaches when they got a load of the newly hired Marathe and his data-harvesting staff evaluating game tape. As one former assistant coach said by phone recently: “These guys didn’t even know the plays. They didn’t know what a shovel pass was. They didn’t know what a screen pass was. They didn’t know any of that.”

In those days? Critics saw Marathe as a numbers nerd whose lack of football acumen played a damaging role in plunging a proud NFL franchise into a prolonged abyss. Multiple sources interviewed earlier this month still recall, with more than a trace of bitterness, what they describe as a reckless naiveté that infuriated coaches, insulted veteran players and had NFL agents threatening to no longer do business with the 49ers. Detractors rankled at the idea that the young Stanford MBA held sway in the coaching booth, where he weighed in on replay challenges while actual NFL coaches sat idly by.

Particularly galling to several sources was the way Donahue and Marathe orchestrated a purge of high-priced veterans that essentially severed the lineage of a Super Bowl dynasty. The ensuing leadership void in the 49ers locker room left the franchise adrift for years. “That falls on the Terry Donahue and Paraag Marathe,” one former executive said. “They destroyed the 49ers way.”

And now? Marathe is the chief contract negotiator and salary-cap architect for an undefeated franchise that is stable, healthy and trending straight-arrow up. Additional sources interviewed this month described Marathe as an affable and respected NFL mind with a reputation for both diplomacy and financial creativity.

John Lynch, now in his third season as general manager, said Marathe has been instrumental in helping the front office transform the 49ers into a 7-0 juggernaut.

“I really wasn’t privy to a lot of the preconceived notions. So when people talk about ‘perceptions,’ I don’t know that,” Lynch said Tuesday. “All I know is what I know from working with him: And I would say he’s been great. He’s been invaluable to me.”

Marathe has fans outside the building, too.

“He’s one of the most talented front-office executives I’ve dealt with in my 32 years as a certified agent in the National Football League,” super-agent Drew Rosenhaus said by phone.

Said another high-profile agent, David Mulugheta, who represents superstar players such as Aaron Rodgers and Deshaun Watson: “From a professional standpoint, it’s refreshing. He’s super intelligent and straight forward. He does his homework. He’s someone you can trust.”

Marathe, after months of requests from The Athletic, recently sat down for an extended conversation about his evolution from mysterious numbers cruncher to franchise power broker to enduring figure in the front office. Initially hired as a draft consultant, his exalted job title these days barely squeezes onto a single business card: He is the President of 49ers Enterprises and Executive Vice President of Football Operations.

He’s not only still here, and he’s kinda everywhere. There is a football in his office, but also a soccer ball (Marathe guided an effort by 49ers Enterprises to purchase a minority ownership in the Leeds United Football Club). There’s also a cricket bat (Marathe was unanimously elected as the Chair of the USA Cricket Board last October).

Still youthful looking at 42, he’s one of a handful of people inside 49ers headquarters whose front-office career spans from Bill Walsh to Lynch.

Marathe spoke unflinchingly of his tumultuous early days and also explained why the new guard, Lynch and Kyle Shanahan, have him “probably the most excited I’ve ever been about this team.”

Mostly, Marathe helped answer the question of how, against all odds, he’s still here.

He was hired, quite literally, to figure out if a computer could do the same thing as Walsh’s brain. The 49ers wanted a data expert to analyze the value of specific draft spots and create a handy value chart. The chart would serve as a quick reference guide for potential draft-day trades for teams looking to move up or down the board — is it worth it to trade the 27th overall pick for the 48th and 61st?

Such charts had been around forever, but the 49ers figured they could get an edge with a modern deep dive from a prestigious market analyst. The team reached out to the Bain & Co. consulting company — Marathe says Walsh himself made the call — and asked for help. Internally, Bain tapped Marathe for the task because the third-year man already had a few sports-related projects on his résumé.

Marathe jumped at the chance. He’d been a 49ers fan since he was 6, back when his parents owned and operated a Round Table Pizza in Saratoga. In a way, he’d been waiting for the call. Whenever he filled out business school applications, he always answered the question about his career aspirations with: “I want a chance to run a sports team.”

Cracking the code to draft day was an ideal place to start. His analysis proved so incisive that Donahue hired him shortly after they met.

“Bill always did it on instinct, so my job was to figure out, ‘How did they arrive at this chart, this curve from pick No. 1 to pick 250?’ Then I had to figure out: What was a better way to do it?” Marathe said.

After he finished devising what he calls the “exchange rate” for draft slots, he went back and applied them to Walsh’s old draft trades to see how the system paired up. And old school and new school matched up essentially to a “T”.

“The ‘aha!’ moment was that we were trying to replicate the genius of his mind,” Marathe said.

Repeating the art behind Walsh’s actual draft-day triumphs, however, proved to be a challenge. And it was a bumpy changing of the guard. By the early 2000s, Walsh’s influence was fading. He’d come back as kind of a quick-fix GM in 1999, then remained in the fold in lesser roles, including as a team consultant through 2004. It appeared as if ownership was nudging him toward the door, intent on starting a fresh legacy.

Donahue, who worked under Walsh as the director of player personnel, took over as full-fledged GM in 2001. But it got awkward as early as the first round of his first draft, according to an assistant coach who was in the room that day.

The 49ers wanted Andre Carter, a ferocious defensive end from Cal, with the No. 9 pick. The problem, the assistant coach said, is that Donahue had dropped too many hints in the media about the 49ers’ interest in Carter. That piqued the Chicago Bears’ interest, and they started making noise about swiping Carter at No. 8. According to the former assistant coach, Donahue began to panic that the 49ers would miss their guy by one pick.

The room sensed his fear.

“And then Bill Walsh stood up and said — and these were his exact words — ‘Shut the fuck up. I’m taking over,’” the assistant recalled by phone.

The witness said that Walsh immediately dialed his old friend, Seahawks coach Mike Holmgren, and swung a trade that allowed the 49ers to leapfrog the Bears to No. 7, where they could safely get their man.

“And then Walsh turned around and said: ‘That’s the way you run a draft. You don’t open your fucking mouth at all about anything that we want to do,’” the former assistant said.

Marathe also got a glimpse of Walsh’s draft-day edginess, according to another former staffer who witnessed the scene. The exact details of the deal are lost to memory, but the staffer recalls Walsh reaching agreement on the parameters of a trade involving multiple draft picks. But before Walsh pulled the trigger, Marathe approached the Hall of Fame coach and handed him a printout of his data. Marathe’s numbers on the sheet argued that the 49ers weren’t getting proper value.

“Bill kind of glanced down at the sheet, pretending like he was really paying attention to it. Then he kind of spun the page away, pointed at (John) McVay and said, ‘Make the move,’” the witness said. “It was pretty alarming. He basically scoffed in Paraag’s face. ... Walsh did not follow the same path that Donahue was trying to follow.”

Marathe smiled wide upon hearing the story. He said he doesn’t remember a thing about that exchange with Walsh, per se, but said it’s typical of any NFL draft room — where pressure-packed decisions are made quickly and where sensitivity is an afterthought. It’s worth noting that there’s a framed photo of Walsh in his office.

“I hope that happened, and I can tell you it still happens today,” Marathe said. “It’s not, ‘Let’s just refer to the chart. Does it say yes or no?’ It’s just one more piece of information.

“If you really value a player or think this player is going to be better than his draft slot, by all means you disregard (the chart) and do what you think is right. I hope it will continue to happen that way.”

Marathe repeated a similar sentiment several times over in the conversation, eager to dispel the myth that the 49ers ever planned to rely on statistics to the exclusion of all else.

“Maybe in other sports it works, but there’s so much human element to (football) that it’s never been that,” he said. “It’s more like, ‘Let’s add one more piece of fuel to the fire and see if it helps us.’”

As the draft-day dustup with Walsh showed, Donahue had reason for unease. He was taking over the GM reins from someone with a pair of the most distinguished eyes in football. The stories remain legendary. Walsh discovered Jerry Rice while flipping channels in a hotel room and stumbling across a game from Mississippi Valley State. He fixated on Dwight Clark after traveling to work out a Clemson quarterback named Steve Fuller and instead got a load of the magnetic roommate who’d tagged along to catch passes. And, of course, Walsh looked at a skinny kid with a so-so arm from Notre Dame and saw the magic of Joe Montana within.

That’s a tough act to follow for anyone, and Donahue was realistic about his challenge. As a former 49ers staffer recalled: “Donahue was obviously out of his depth and obviously didn’t have the confidence that Bill did in terms of selecting players. ... And so he was visualizing: ‘How can I develop an edge?’”

Donahue, in the vein of his friend Beane, embraced the idea of a “Moneyball”-style approach to football, especially since salary-cap problems left the team with little wiggle room. By using analytics to spot undervalued assets in the draft and on the free-agent market, the 49ers could get a Silicon Valley-style edge while the rest of the NFL was still sleeping.

Donahue turned more and more to Marathe, a plan that had the full backing of the York family. This was when John York, not his son, was still in charge and the licensed pathologist loved the concept of making decisions based on proofs and statistical models. In those early days, according to sources, York often referred to Marathe as “our secret weapon.”

But “Moneyball” proved to be a tough sequel for football. In baseball, you can isolate performance — batter vs. pitcher. But a football play like, say, an interception might depend on the defensive line getting pressure, a free safety sticking to his assignment and a tipped pass by a linebacker.

The 49ers’ early forays into creating useful metrics were so divisive within the organization that they have taken on an air of mythology. A Marathe-led system called “ticking” still gets a rise out of those who remember the unusual method for evaluating college prospects.

“Oh, what a labor-intensive effort that was,” said Terry Tumey, who started as a 49ers player personnel assistant in 2001 before becoming the team’s director of football administration.

Tumey, now the athletic director at Fresno State, remains a Marathe fan and credits him for helping push the 49ers into a more sophisticated way of decision making. But he chuckles at a mention of “ticking.” The system called for analysts to watch film and make notations for every player on every play. “You’re trying to capture data that went beyond traditional,” Tumey said. “He was trying to get to the point where he had enough data to really evaluate a player.”

The problem? Tumey said ticking led to dubious choices like receiver Rashaun Woods, a first-round pick in 2004 who showed up with all the competitive fire of a wet rag. Looking back, a former general manager from another team still can’t believe it: “By their analytics, he was the No. 1 receiver. Throw that stuff away because he’s not even close. He was gone! ... I said, ‘What in the world are you guys doing taking him in the first round?’”

But another former 49ers employee, otherwise critical of Marathe, defended the ticking system in this case. He said old-school scouting was the culprit, recalling that Bill Rees, the 49ers director of player personnel at the time, pushed hard for Woods.

Regardless, Tumey doesn’t recall hearing about ticking anymore after that Woods pick.

“The tracking system could tell you nothing about the intrinsic nature of the players. It couldn’t tell you about his resilience,” Tumeay said. “It couldn’t tell you about how he handled adversity. It couldn’t tell you about his heart. It couldn’t tell you about any of that stuff. At the end of the day, it didn’t capture the true essence of the player.”

Beyond that, critics said, Marathe’s army of young interns lacked the football expertise to make a proper evaluation even with the on-field stuff, much to the exasperation of Dennis Erickson’s mostly old-school staff. Genial offensive coordinator Ted Tollner, who had been a head coach at USC, stumbled upon a “ticking” session one day and blew a gasket.

“Ted Tollner was one of the most mild-mannered and kind coaches that I’ve seen. He blew up one time. I mean cussin’ down the hallway,” a former staffer said. “You just never saw Ted respond that way, but he got so animated ... I think Ted walked in and said, ‘What are you guys doing?’ They explained, and he lost his mind because he thought, ‘We’re relying on these motherfuckers to save our jobs?’”

Such was the conflict during that era. Multiple sources said Marathe wasn’t respectful enough of what football lifers brought to the table.

“He was definitely a smart guy. But his flaw is that he’s a smart guy, too,” one said. “Because he believes that he’s the smartest guy.”

Such resistance, though, has been a familiar phenomenon over the sports landscape as the new generation takes hold. As the influence of Beane and other statistically-minded people grows, traditionalists often grumble or push back. But there’s no question as to who is winning that war. Just check out baseball’s reliance on shifts and spin rates and launch angles or the NBA’s evolution to positional fluidity, corner 3s and discouraging the mid-range jumper.

To Beane, the resistance to Marathe’s vanguard approach seems familiar.

“Totally. Absolutely,” Beane said. “He was one of the early adopters, especially in that sport, and those early guys face a lot more headwinds. They get beat up. ... So it’s been great to see his success. He blazed a trail for a lot of the guys behind him. It’s a credit to his intelligence.”

Marathe now oversees an entire 49ers analytics department. And in the NFL, the “ticking” system no longer looks so wild, even in retrospect.

“It was like what Pro Football Focus is doing now,” Marathe said. “Back then, no one was really doing much with offensive line players, giving out run-blocking, pass-blocking grades.

“(Ticking) was us hiring a bunch of interns to do what PFF does today, which is go down the whole decision tree of all the things an O-lineman does — on a pass, did he successfully block his guy or did he allow pressure or a hit or a sack? On a run block, did he block at the first level or the second level? Was he successful? Did he keep his guy away from the ball?”

“There are a thousand snaps per offensive lineman across the league, so it’s a lot of intern work to start quantifying it and use it as another tool. There’s a lot of nuance to it, so the thought was that over a thousand plays over time across all teams, it sort of averages out. It’s not the answer, it’s just one piece to add to it.”

Marathe also dismisses the suggestion that “ticking” duped the 49ers into picking Woods, who amassed a mere seven career catches in his lone season. For one thing, Marathe said his staff never ranked receivers from top to bottom as part of an evaluation. They just compiled raw numbers. Passing their data from ticking was akin to providing a list of a player’s vertical leap from the scouting combine.

“I’ve always looked for wherever I can add empirical evidence to help the case, that’s what I want to do,” he said. “The landscape has changed, probably because there’s easier and better access to data and information. Doing the tick thing sort of sounds like such an esoteric, surreptitious way. But now when I say, 'It's like a PFF,' you go, OK, I get it."

The current 49ers regime certainly seems to be a more receptive audience. Lynch, who also went to Stanford, has embraced analytics as part of the 49ers' overall evaluation process, and so has his head coach.

"The previous regime wasn't really using them. I figure as long as they're here, we'll see what they can bring," Lynch told ESPN Radio in March 2018. "And we found that it's been incredibly valuable. And we've tried to kind of intertwine them in our scouting process. Kyle's bought into that."

The 49ers fired Donahue and Erickson after the 2004 season, but Marathe remained unscathed by the 2-14 record that year. In fact, his responsibilities kept growing: Marathe, York and Turney helped lead the committee that hired the next coach — Mike Nolan.

It helped that Marathe had shown himself to be smart, ambitious and forward-thinking; he was finding his footing as an NFL executive. And it also didn't hurt that he'd become personally close to Jed York, who would soon be handed the keys to the kingdom. About the same age, the two hung out socially, played poker together and found a kinship as they shared a vision for the 49ers franchise. As one former high-ranking 49ers official put it: "Paraag was best friends with Jed York — everybody knew it. So he could do no wrong."

Turney continues to see the friendship as a positive for the organization.

"Both Jed and Paraag wanted to take this industry that was basically being run by old coaches and they wanted to be vanguards and the new renegades. 'Let us show you some new tools that can teach some old dogs some new tricks,'" he said.

"It kind of brought them together. They were the two young bucks. .... It basically made (Marathe) part of the family."

Marathe dabbled in lots of areas over the years, and to some extent it was trial and error as he learned to focus on his strengths. He spent some time in the coaching booth helping Nolan figure out when to throw the challenge flag for a replay review. This, perhaps above all else, served as a hot-button issue among fans. As the talk-show airwaves made clear during that time, it was an awkward look having an egghead making crucial football decisions while surrounded by a handful of coaches. Never mind that Nolan once said: "He's always right on it. He's probably the best I've ever been around."

To be clear, Marathe was never in charge of challenging calls. It was his job to offer recommendations to Nolan, who held the red flag. Marathe had read the NFL playing rules five times and impressed Nolan with his understanding of even the most arcane details. Nolan had gone only 2 for 5 in his challenges as a rookie coach. So he started kicking around other options.

"He talked to the coaches. Then talked to Paraag about it," a former front-office staffer during that time recalled. "And Paraag was cool with it — he was right there. Because some people don't want to do it, but Paraag was cool with it."

In the two full seasons with Marathe in the booth under Nolan, the 49ers went 10 for 20 (.500) on replay challenges. Comparing that with some notable names, Bill Belichick is 48 for 120 in his career on challenge flags (.400), Andy Reid is 57 for 122 (.467) and Pete Carroll is 39 for 85 (.458).

Marathe also tried to use analytics to teach Nolan the best time to call a timeout, with mixed success. ("Paraag loved that stuff," a source said. "And it was good because Mike Nolan was all over the place with timeouts. Holy smokes.")

But Marathe really found his groove as a salary-cap specialist, not only in helping the 49ers carve out a path for responsible long-term planning but for personally negotiating deals that left the 49ers plenty of wiggle room. Gone are the days when Donahue would work the phrase “salary cap hell” into every sentence. As of Monday, the 49ers had $8.74 million in salary-cap room.

They have several of their big names signed to extensions (Jimmy Garoppolo through 2022, Joe Staley through 2021) and appear armed with the financial flexibility to work out extensions for other cornerstone pieces, such as tight end George Kittle and defensive lineman DeForest Buckner.

Above all, the 49ers seem to have a responsible vision for team-building, showing a knack for avoiding the burdensome contracts that can haunt a franchise for years. Lynch, who essentially went from television analyst to the GM job, said he told Marathe upon his hiring that he was going to need some lessons from the cap professor.

“That was one thing I was committed to when I took this job,” Lynch said Tuesday. “I said, ‘Look, Paraag, I can’t do this job and just say you’ve got the cap. If we did that, then we couldn’t make decisions. You have to teach me this.’”

“He said, ‘absolutely,’ and he’s been tremendous with that.”

Lynch said that Marathe’s mastery of the cap includes knowing the back channels that allow for creative contracts. In that regard, he reminds Lynch of Leigh Steinberg, his agent during his playing days.

“I always thought he was incredibly invaluable to have as an agent because I felt like he understood it better than anybody — the loopholes and all those things,” Lynch said. “I kind of feel the same way with Paraag. It’s a great asset.”

For all the intricacies, however, Marathe said the fundamental shift was a fairly simple concept.

“We went from looking at the cap ‘this year’ to always looking at the cap on a three-year basis. That was the big change,” Marathe said. “‘Salary cap hell’ might have happened because we were looking just at today — You have $20 million in room now, but you don’t realize that you’re $20 million over in each of the next two years. The big fundamental change now is with every decision we make, we’re always trying to look at it on that three-year window.”

The other part of the equation is still being able to lure top talent while staying under budget. One former 49ers employee said Marathe initially alienated agents with a ferocious approach to negotiations. He said because of his youth and outsider status, Marathe tried to “win” every deal. “It was an everybody-doubts-me-type of attitude. It’s like short-man’s syndrome,” the source said. The thinking goes that it’s OK to “lose” a deal every once in a while, because the give and take often pays off over the long run. An agent who feels like he got a good deal for his client is going to want to do business with that team again.

But no agent reached for this story recalls any such dynamic, not even from Marathe’s early days. And Marathe said it would have been nuts to do anything but work collaboratively with the agents, especially when 20 percent of the top negotiators represent 80 percent of the players.

Rosenhaus has made numerous deals with the 49ers over the years, including contract extensions for running back Frank Gore and linebacker NaVorro Bowman, two of the most notable players of Marathe’s tenure. He’s also worked with Marathe on a first-round pick (Anthony Davis) and a recent unrestricted free agent (Kwon Alexander).

“My first impressions were always very positive. He’s been very consistent,” Rosenhaus said. “He’s not trying to embarrass the player or the agent, because he has an inherent sense of fairness and equity. He has integrity: If he tells you something, you can put your trust in what he’s telling you.”

Joel Segal, one of the NFL’s most powerful agents and Buckner’s representative, said in a phone interview that he really likes Marathe and has from the start. “Even initially, Paraag was a likable guy who commanded respect,” Segal said. “His way is not to bully you; he’s affable but tough.”

Mulugheta, meanwhile, remains grateful for Marathe’s kindness when he was an unknown agent first starting out. Other NFL executives sometimes ignored Mulugheta in those early days, but Marathe was a notable exception. Mulugheta also found it inspiring to be working with another minority in the NFL power structure.

“When I first got into the business, he always treated me the same. Even when I didn’t have a lot of clients, here was a guy who was responsive and returned my calls,” he said. “In my business, my clients are relying on me to give them the right information. And if I tell them something wrong, they’re not going to blame the executive — they’re going to blame me. Paraag is one of those people I can count on to always shoot straight. He’s someone I can trust.”

Marathe’s job title changed in 2015, a reassignment widely seen as a demotion. In 2015, after he was their team president for two years, the 49ers moved him out of that role to make room for chief operating officer Al Guido. Marathe never lost his role as the lead contract negotiator, but the change in his job description meant an increased focus on the team’s outside business interests.

As the president of 49ers Enterprises, the work essentially falls into four buckets: sports consulting (such as for Sacramento Republic FC), investments in other teams or leagues (such as Leeds United), launching new businesses (WellStrong, VenueNext) and small strategic venture capital investments.

“We have the people, we have the know-how, we have the ability to do other things,” Marathe said. “It’s a way for the York family to grow their brand, not dissimilarly from the Yankees, Cowboys and Manchester United. We have, without a doubt, one of the most powerful sports brands in the world. We’re looking at ways to extend that brand.”

He’s still with the 49ers having survived yet another round of snark during the last regime change. As the 49ers looked to replace coach Chip Kelly and GM Trent Baalke, questions arose anew about Marathe’s meddling. A Yahoo Sports column reflected upon Kelly’s firing by writing that he never stood a chance against to turn around the 49ers, arguing that doing so would mean overcoming “a jagged union of personalities and agendas. It meant working for an impetuous and involved owner in York; sitting in football meetings with head of football operations Paraag Marathe, a numbers guy whose influence over ownership was unparalleled.”

ProFootballTalk went so far as to write in 2017 that Marathe’s presence was scaring away potential GM and coaching candidates. According to the report, multiple candidates for the GM job either declined an invitation to interview or withdrew after interviewing, including Chiefs director of player personnel Chris Ballard and Patriots director of player personnel Nick Caserio.

“The impediment to attracting their preferred candidates isn’t owner Jed York; apparently,” PFT wrote, “it’s Chief Strategy Officer and EVP of Football Operations Paraag Marathe. ... Put simply, Marathe has influence, along with the ear of ownership. He’s been there for 16 years, and he has transcended the bubble of accountability in which coaches and General Managers reside. And that’s precisely the kind of dynamic coaches and General Managers try to avoid.”

Lynch certainly did not avoid it. Instead, he embraced it.

“Particularly coming from a different background. I was going to need a support system,” Lynch said. “I was very confident in my ability to do it (the GM job), provided I had that. And he’s been a tremendous asset to both Kyle and I and our entire team as we’ve tried to instill our vision for this team and how we’re going to be successful. That’s been the best compliment I can pay to him.”

There’s no sign of that criticism now. Marathe is no longer talk-show fodder. He’s no longer “Senior Associate Lightning Rod,” as the San Jose Mercury News once called him. The 49ers are rolling, and suddenly the analytics guy is no longer the source of mystery or distrust. He can laugh a bit about the days when his Stanford Business School education was viewed as a negative.

“Back then, MBA were like the scarlet letters I wore across my chest.”

The team is robust and fun to watch, and Marathe has happily avoided the spotlight as Shanahan and Lynch get their proper due for the 49ers' renaissance.

But Marathe hasn't forgotten the criticism, either.

"Externally, I can't say it didn't hurt," he said. "You pay attention to stuff like that. If you try to ignore it, your mom or dad or good friend says, 'Oh, my gosh, I was driving home and Ralph Barbieri said this about you.' I didn't even know who he was, but you obviously internalize that.

"At first, it was frustrating. There was this perception that because I was this mysterious figure, that I must be in a dark, windowless office wearing a pocket protector and couldn't have any conversations with people. Any of my friends would tell you that is the opposite of who I am. ... Internally, as long as I have earned the trust and respect and I'm valuable to the people I work with, then I'm good. The moment I don't, all good, I'll do something else."

It helps that there's nothing to complain about. The 49ers are 7-0 and in terms of yardage per game, they rank sixth in offense and first in defense. They have outscored opponents 207-77 this season.

It's unlikely that fans will start calling KNBR soon to praise Marathe for his long-term vision. But that's fine with him. He defers credit, too.

"It's almost exclusively about what John and Kyle have built," Marathe said. "It's the culture here. They make it a fun place to work but also have everyone held to such a high standard and accountability. Everyone looks to them for it. I've never seen anything like it. It's really awesome. It's inspiring, and I think a lot of people feel it here.

"Kyle is as smart as anyone I've ever been around and so is John, and the way they get everyone believing is a different feeling."

Beane, meanwhile, is happy that he no longer has to ponder calling into a radio show with a fake voice. He talks to Marathe often, and the conversation would actually be a killer sports-talk show: They jump from football, to baseball, to soccer, to cricket (really) and kick around trends in the sports business industry. "Whenever I talk to Paraag," Beane said, "we're both just looking for the next big thing."

"First off, he's brilliant. There are a lot of bright people, but what's incredibly rare are the people who have the quantitative mind and the creative mind. A lot of people are just one of those. To have both is rare," he continued. "But the other thing is, you genuinely like him from the moment you meet him. He's like Farhan in that regard.

"I stayed on him for a while. I figured I could hire him if the 49ers thing didn't work out."

Forget it, Billy.

Paraag Marathe is still here. It's the 49ers who are going places.

Paraag Marathe and his back story are a slice of 49ers intrigue

By Mark Purdy
San Jose Mercury News
August 7, 2017

Do you know Paraag Marathe? You don't know Paraag Marathe.

"Hey, it's the same oven!" he exclaimed.

We had just entered the front door of Mountain Mike's pizza parlor. Marathe grew up blocks away. But this was far more than Marathe's old stomping ground. This was much more.

"I don't know how long it's been since I was here," Marathe said, gazing around. "I helped my dad set up this place. I hired the first employees, I picked out this furniture. I picked this color scheme."

Yes, it turns out there is a lot that all of us don't know about Paraag Marathe. I used to think that was exactly how he and the 49ers wanted it. But as we sat down for a nearly two-hour lunch at the restaurant that this family once owned, a lot of insightful doors opened up into the team's mystery man.

Marathe's official title with the 49ers is "Chief Strategy Officer And Executive Vice-President of Football Operations." His unofficial title is "Senior Associate Lightning Rod." As basically the right-hand man of owner Jed York, Marathe has been given credit for helping the Levi's Stadium project come together and blamed for . . . well, just about everything else. Fans and various media voices have accused him of meddling in the college draft, lurking in the coaching booth on Sundays, spying on behalf of York and/or undermining the operation in just about any conspiracy theory you want to offer.

Do you know Paraag Marathe? You don't know Paraag Marathe. Through all the lightning bolts, the man himself has been polite whenever encountered but mostly silent, very rarely granting interviews. But he agreed to sit down with me when I suggested that we do the interview at one of the pizza places that his immigrant father and mother operated on Saratoga Sunnyvale Road throughout his childhood. We talked about his family's back story, one that may go against the image many 49ers fans have of him as a privileged intellectual with degrees from Cal and Stanford.

Marathe does indeed own those degrees. But his upbringing was hardly one of privilege. His parents immigrated from India and pursued the American dream from the ground up. They endured disappointment and tragedy as their two children pitched in to help the family succeed. It provides good insight into what makes Marathe tick and propelled him to the second most powerful executive on the business side of the 49ers organization—though he might argue that point, as we'll see in a few paragraphs.

Actually, Mountain Mike's was the second restaurant owned by Vijay and Seema Marathe. The first was a Round Table Pizza just up the street, in a building that's now a savings and loan. At the Round Table, Paraag would often stand behind the counter and work the cash register. Nothing unusual about that — except that he was only 12 years old at the time and slightly under five feet tall.

"I could barely see above the register," Marathe said. "It was almost like a gimmick for customers at first because I looked really young back then. It was a like a little kid was running the restaurant. But we would churn out 200 or 250 pizzas on a Friday evening and there were times I really would run the whole operation. It's crazy now when I think about it."

Marathe worked long hours at the pizza businesses while attending Lynbrook High School. That way, his father could keep his other job as an electronics engineer—a job that Vijay ultimately had to quit, anyway, because the pizza business was so labor intensive and many of the teenagers they employed didn't always show up. Marathe's dad needed to be there just in case.

"Which is why all my guilt came in," Marathe said. "It was like, why would I be with my buddies in the evening when I should be working to give my dad a break?"

It's the story of hundreds of immigrant Silicon Valley families. But this one had a new twist. After Vijay and Seema pushed themselves so hard to send their children through college, they wondered why in the heck Paraag wanted to pursue a career with a NFL team. It was a dream he'd had since he was ringing up those pepperoni specials while the 49ers games played on the projection big screen TV.

"In Indian American culture," Marathe said, "everyone's got to be a doctor or engineer . . . or maybe a lawyer. Like, working in sports, my whole family, the ones who are in India and everywhere else, they just thought this was a hobby."

Reading between the lines, you can see that Marathe was out to prove a point—both to those folks who chuckled at the kid behind the register and to the family members who were mystified why such a bright young man was so obsessed with . . . a football salary cap?

Do you know Paraag Marathe? You don't know Paraag Marathe. He's a competitive guy who, while pitching for his high school baseball team, sparked a brawl in a game when he followed his coach's orders to throw at an opposing batter. But it was Marathe's obsession with front office NFL matters that fueled his rapid rise in the 49ers organization after he joined it 17 years ago as a jack-of-all-trades numbers guy who knew finances and statistics and how the NFL dealt with both. He became expert in negotiating contract terms. Marathe eventually became Chief Operating Officer and finally team president. He and York were considered hotshot young wizards when the 49ers went to the Super Bowl following the 2012 season.

Then came 2014. A clumsy offload of coach Jim Harbaugh led to the 49ers losing 25 of their next 32 games. And the two young wizards conjured up only loathing among the fan base. Marathe lost his president's title—but is still a major front office presence.

So what does Marathe do, exactly? If you ask around the league, the people who deal with him tend to respect him and his intelligence. Yet some of those people ask the same question. So could he please enlighten us? He could.

"The lion's share of my job," Marathe said, "is what it's been for a long period of time — chief negotiator, monitoring the salary cap and figuring out our Collective Bargaining Agreement compliance with the league. The other part of my job has evolved over time. In the beginning, I was a troubleshooter looking at things where we could make things more efficient and better. And then I was finding a location for a new stadium and doing the stuff for the Levi's project."

With Levi's complete, Marathe dipped into other branches of the 49ers multi-tentacled operation, including a stadium-technology startup and a piece of Sacramento's pro soccer team. So why do 49ers fans think he's to blame for so much of the team's recent misery? Probably because he has participated in the coaching searches that resulted in Jim Tomsula and Chip Kelly's miserable seasons — and remains involved in day to day elements of the operation under new general manager John Lynch and new head coach Kyle Shanahan.

"I'd say 75 of my job is football related," Marathe said, "because the cap goes up and up and up and now we're at $165 million and accounting for every dollar and penny takes a lot of time."

Is criticism of him fair when the team does a faceplant?

"Yes, absolutely," Marathe said. "We're measured by wins and losses . . . We haven't won and we have to get that straightened out . . . (but) I'm not the spokesperson for football. That's John and Kyle's job and they're really good at it. And that's not my job. My job is to do my job and do it so I can be useful and a utility player for them."

Which is where things get foggy. How, exactly, does Marathe define the term "utility player?" He says it means that he takes orders from Lynch and Shanahan if they need him to research a potential player's expected compensation and whether it fits into the 49ers template—or anything else they might ask.

"I support those guys in everything football," Marathe said. "I'm our chief contract negotiator and manage our salary cap and help them in all our player personnel decisions. And you'd better have your 'A' game because they're going to challenge you. It's their show and I'm here to support them . . . The only time I do something with football is because someone wants me to do it. There are certain things within game management that I've done, but only at the request of the head coach."

Out of respect for the York family and coaches, Marathe also keeps his mouth shut in public. The practical effect, however, is that Marathe becomes an empty vessel for fans and media to fill up with castigation for things that he might or might not have actually done. At some point, he surely must want to speak up and clarify whether that's true.

"Is it frustrating?" Marathe said. "That's one of the things I learned from Round Table when I was 12 years old. People were counting me out because they thought I couldn't do that job. I learned how to just focus on doing the best I can. I can't sit here and tell you that it doesn't hurt. My wife and my daughter, my in-laws and my parents do live a stone's throw away from where we are right now. They hear and read things. That hurts. I'm still human. But all I can do is know that the sun rises and sun sets— and focus on doing the best job I can."

Do you know Paraag Marathe? You don't know Paraag Marathe. He gained the best perspective, sadly, when his sister died in 2005 after years in the grip of anorexia. That was the Marathe family tragedy. As the condition of Shilpa Marathe progressed, Paraag had difficulty dealing with her situation. He considered it grim irony that his family was in the food service business while at home, Shilpa had an eating disorder that made her so thin and weak, Vijay had to carry her upstairs to bed every night.

"Because I was really into my job at the time," Paraag said, "I became good at blocking it out of my mind, compartmentalizing. I probably didn't get at peace with it until 2012, 2013, 2014 . . . and then I kind of had that moment where I felt like I had this voice because I'm in this industry where . . . no one talks about mental illness that often. And being in an immigrant family, there's no such thing as mental anxiety or mental issues. You should just do or not do. There's nothing else. And being a male, to be able to talk about anorexia . . . I felt I had a really good platform to be heard. So I started to get involved and there's a couple of boards that I joined."

The two organizations, Andrea's Voice and Project Heal, have websites to consult for those dealing with anorexia in their own families. But Marathe says the first step is "to talk about it because I kept it inside for many years."

By now, the lunch was almost over. Marathe kibitzed a bit with the restaurant's current owner, Eil Abbasi, who bought the Mountain Mike's outlet place from Marathe's parents a while ago. Looking back on it, Marathe said, his pizza experience was exhausting but invaluable.

"I honestly felt like my third parent was Round Table Pizza," Marathe said. "It was more influential in my life than anything I can think of, including school and graduate school . . . You know, I was interviewing prospective employees when I was 13 or 14 years old, hiring delivery drivers . . . Knowing I was being counted out but knowing if you keep your head down and focused on what's doing right and not listen to the noise, that's what you need."

As we wrapped up our interview, he asked: "How'd you like the pizza?"

Marathe then told one final story. Both his family's pizza places were not far from Saratoga High School, so the football team often showed up for postgame meals. One of the Saratoga High players that Marathe served was a frosh-soph wide receiver named Kyle Shanahan.

Shanahan is the new 49ers' head coach. Does he know Paraag Marathe? Shanahan didn't then. He does now. After lunch at Mountain Mike's, maybe we all do.

Kyle Shanahan

Is 49ers' Kyle Shanahan the coolest coach ever?

By Ron Kroichick
San Francisco Chronicle
January 30, 2020

On the eve of the NFC Championship Game, at the team hotel in Santa Clara, head coach Kyle Shanahan delivered a memorable speech.

The 49ers were preparing to play Green Bay, an opponent they had steamrolled 37-8 in November. Shanahan, known among his players as a smooth and confident public speaker with anecdotes at the ready, did not disappoint.

He told the story of a UFC fighter who, faced with a rematch against a foe he previously had beaten, decisively won again. Shanahan also explained how he had talked to a Navy Seal about not letting the enemy reach the water's surface.

Shanahan's essential message, through these colorful yarns: Don't take the Packers lightly and don't let them come up for air. The next day, the 49ers jumped ahead early and won 37-20.

"They were some crazy analogies, but he made the point," wide receiver Kendrick Bourne said.

The larger point: Shanahan, a onetime 49ers ball boy who returned as an Xs-and-Os wizard with unproven leadership ability, quickly figured out how to connect with his players. And this, maybe even more than his much-lauded play-calling acumen, helps explain why San Francisco will play Kansas City in Sunday's Super Bowl.

Shanahan's people skills were an open question when the 49ers hired him in February 2017. Even general manager John Lynch has since acknowledged that he wondered how Shanahan would turn out as a leader and communicator.

But nobody really knew three years ago, when Shanahan and Lynch took over the team. Shanahan, after nine seasons as offensive coordinator for four teams (Houston, Washington, Cleveland and Atlanta), had a reputation as a creative, borderline-brilliant play caller ... with a smug, know-it-all personality.

One not-exactly-objective person disputed this reputation. Mike Shanahan, a two-time Super Bowl-winning head coach and Kyle's father, insisted he knew his son could handle the human demands of being a head coach.

"I could see as a kid that he connected right away with everybody," Mike Shanahan said in a phone interview this week. "So I was surprised he had that reputation. Those opinions that he didn't relate well (to players), I kind of laughed. I thought he was just the opposite. That's the way he's been his whole life.

"But when you're in a situation and you're young, sometimes those are the perceptions. ... He's a lot better than I was at relating to almost everybody in the room. He always had a natural ability to relate to everybody, whether they were white or black, anyone."

Kyle Shanahan's career arc, in a way, began in Santa Clara. Twenty-five years ago, as the 49ers of Steve Young and Jerry Rice rolled to the franchise's fifth Super Bowl championship, he was an eager, curious 14-year-old ball boy prone to wearing a Deion Sanders T-shirt all day and night.

Shanahan roamed the practice field, did laundry, ran errands. Sometimes, he hung out with Sanders or tackle Harris Barton. During training camp, Shanahan shared a room with his dad, then the team's offensive coordinator, and offensive line coach Bobb McKittrick.

A quarter-century later, Shanahan roams the field in a decidedly different role. If the 49ers win Sunday, this would be their first Super Bowl title since that 1994 season, when Mike Shanahan called the plays and Kyle fetched footballs.

The younger Shanahan's duties now stretch a bit deeper. And they include a forthright and direct manner with his players, many of whom pointed out how this distinguishes Shanahan from some peers in a cold, cutthroat business.

"He's the most honest coach I've been around," said wide receiver Jordan Matthews, who also has played for the Eagles, Bills and Patriots. "That's one of the things I appreciate about Kyle. It's not like my situation here has been roses and rainbows."

The 49ers signed Matthews on Oct. 4, cut him Oct. 26 and signed him again Dec. 11.

"But, every single time," Matthews said, "he never hesitated to tell me, 'Here's the deal, here's what's going on. Here's why we're having to let you go. Here's why we're bringing you back.' And I appreciate that about someone."

Matthews made another salient point on Shanahan's uncommon candor with the media about player injuries. That resonates loudly in the locker room, where players often feel pressure to return even if they're not physically ready.

"If a coach comes out (publicly) and says, 'Hey, it's going to take some time,' then it's like, 'OK, now I have the space to breathe and get healthy,'" Matthews said. "So if this injury takes longer to come back from than we expect, it's not like I've got the fans and media down my throat about getting back out there."

Shanahan's honesty is a thread running through his three years with the 49ers. In his initial interview with chief executive officer Jed York, he bluntly told York the roster needed an overhaul. Shanahan then did exactly that — and guided his team to the Super Bowl in his third season.

York, in an interview last week with Bay Area reporters, described Shanahan as being "very, very direct." And, yes, York meant it as a compliment.

This all traces to Shanahan's teenage years, in many ways, when he routinely joined his dad at work. That meant playing catch with Young or Rice, and learning from some of the best players ever. Shanahan later was a wide receiver at Duke and Texas before pursuing coaching.

His simmering intensity as a player, and earlier in his coaching career, has since morphed into a more balanced approach.

"I truly believe the locker room reflects the personality of your head coach," said guard Mike Person, who also played for Shanahan in Atlanta. "When we're on football, Kyle is always focused on talking ball. But he's such a laid-back personality, I think it rubs off on us in a good way. Everyone enjoys being around each other. We're not constantly looking over our shoulder."

Matthews suggested Shanahan's coaching style has persuaded some players to consider coaching as a career option after their playing days. That's unusual, because most NFL players see the long hours of coaching and want no part of it.

Shanahan, contrary to his pre-49ers reputation, is changing perceptions.

"I think he's the coolest coach ever," guard Laken Tomlinson said.

Now that's high praise.

Kyle Shanahan at 40: The 49ers coach reflects on the forces that shaped him, including that damn wrought-iron fence

By Matt Barrows
December 12, 2019

Nothing changes your career path quite like being impaled by a sharp, unforgiving, wrought-iron fence. Today, Kyle Shanahan looks like the smartest guy in the NFL, one whose beautiful mind was on full display Sunday while directing the 49ers to beat Saints coach Sean Payton at his own game and on Payton's own turf. But 18 years ago, on a warm summer night in Denver, the thought that kept running through that mind was this: I am such an idiot.

Shanahan, 21 years old at the time, had gone to retrieve a ball for his black lab, Magic. He went to hop the fence that surrounded his parents' home, something he'd done hundreds of times and something a 6-foot-3, 185-pound University of Texas athlete could do with a bit of momentum and a casual swing of the legs.

Not this time. Shanahan's hand slipped and his left thigh plunged down on the decorative tip of the fence. He braced for his fall, expecting his head to strike the ground. But he never got there; the spear point snagged him and left him suspended in mid-air.

The metal, like a hook, was in so deep that Shanahan had trouble extracting himself. His parents, Mike and Peggy, were in Greeley, Colo., because Mike's Denver Broncos were spending training camp there. So Kyle called out to the only person inside the house, his friend, Zach Zucker.

"Kyle was literally hanging from the top of the fence. He was hanging by his leg," Zucker recalled in a phone interview. "So I'm in a complete panic. I ran out to him as he's trying to get himself off the fence. I pick him up, put him in the car and drive as fast as I possibly can to the nearest hospital. And yeah, man, that was that was one of the scariest moments of my life. I didn't know what the heck to do."

Doctors soon were plucking chips of black metal from deep in Shanahan's thigh. The gash was so extensive it required a two-hour surgery, three layers of stitches and left a nine-inch scar.

Until then, Shanahan had put all his efforts on becoming an NFL wide receiver. He had transferred from Duke to Texas the previous year and was slated to be the No. 3 receiver in a high-profile offense that featured Chris Simms at quarterback, Roy Williams at receiver and Cedric Benson at tailback.

Would he have been drafted? Maybe, maybe not. He had had a strong spring practice, was in line to get plenty of snaps and was intriguing enough to at least be invited to a training camp if not make an NFL roster. The fence incident changed all that. It forced him to take everything he had used to become a receiver — his singular focus, his hyper-competitive nature, all of his energy — and shift it to Plan B.

He joined the UCLA coaching staff a year and a half later and five years after that became the NFL's youngest offensive coordinator with the Houston Texans. Now he has the 49ers on the verge of sealing a playoff berth for the first time since 2013.

There's a perception around the NFL that Shanahan is a savant when it comes to calling plays. His players don't disagree and they rave that the adjustments he makes at halftime are football-genius level. But they also recognize that the 49ers' success this season begins with how hard their head coach grinds.

Tackle Joe Staley, who is nearing the end of his 13th season with the 49ers, says he's been on teams in which the playbook doesn't vary from Week 1 through Week 17.

"We might have run a couple of different plays, but we weren't adding anything," he said. "We weren't attacking anything differently. And it's completely the opposite here. Every week is a brand-new game plan. So there's no way to get a bead on what we're doing. He's doing so many different things all the time."

Those game plans seem to be growing more expansive as the season grows in importance.

The plan Shanahan used against the Saints began with endless cups of coffee and an 18-hour cram session with his top offensive lieutenants, Mike McDaniel and Mike LaFleur, in Bradenton, Fla., during the 49ers' stay between the Ravens and Saints road games. When they arrived home from New Orleans, the trio immediately were back in the lab, and they have an even bigger plan in store for the Falcons, the team they all were a part of before joining the 49ers in 2017.

"The amount of plays we had installed today was insane," fullback Kyle Juszczyk said on Wednesday, his eyes widening for emphasis. "It might have been a season high. Those guys just absolutely grind. And they don't back off even though we're 14 weeks into the season. If anything, it seems like they've been working harder recently."

One of the NFL's sharpest minds and most diligent workers wasn't exactly a star student. Asked the subjects at which young Kyle Shanahan excelled, his mother laughs. None? Her son was one of those kids who never studied until the night before a big exam.

He lost his homework. He routinely misplaced his wallet. He couldn't find his keys. The Ph.D. play caller was more absent-minded professor away from the football field.

"He was a moron," said Zucker, his high school friend. "It's funny because at work he's so prepared and there are certain things he's great about. But other things? I mean, the kid lost his cell phone, his keys every two seconds."

When Kyle was still in grade school, Peggy warned him he'd never get into college if he didn't take his schoolwork more seriously. He looked up and explained that he wasn't worried. He was planning to get a football scholarship. They regularly had so many similar exchanges in the years that followed that it became a running joke, a smile spreading across the son's face as he spoke, a mix of adoration and exasperation in the mom as she heard the familiar rationale.

He may have been a B- student, but he was an A+ arguer.

"He ended up being right," Peggy Shanahan said. "He got a scholarship — to Duke, no less — without studying at all. Of course, it was because of football. Yup, it just kind of worked out for him."

When Kyle was young, he cared about two things. One was clothing. Peggy said she never had to lay an outfit on his bed for school. He wouldn't let her. In fact, Kyle knew precisely what he was going to wear two weeks before his first day of kindergarten.

"I mean, he was so picky," Peggy said. "I couldn't even dry his shirts. Because they had to just fit in a certain way and if I dried them, then they might fit a little bit different. I had to hang them up. I mean, it was just weird. And he's still that way."

His other obsession was football.

You might think someone who moved from town to town as a kid, who enrolled at a different school every few years, who barely saw his father some weeks, might end up resenting his dad's profession. For Kyle, it was the opposite. He gobbled up X's and O's and talked for hours about how he wanted to be part of the sport.

Was he good?

Maybe not immediately. His friend when the Shanahans lived in Los Angeles, KC Freer, remembers 10-year-old Kyle being their team's "mayday" quarterback.

"That means if we were up by enough, we would put the backup, backup quarterback in," Freer said. "To be fair, he did play some other positions. But that was the one I remember."

Freer didn't recall the story to be mean — they've been close friends for three decades — but to illustrate a point: Kyle wanted so badly to be an NFL player that by the time he was finished with high school the one-time "mayday" quarterback had colleges asking him to attend for free.

"It's a pretty good combination when you're smart at something and then you also outwork everyone," Freer said. "It's tough to beat."

In 1995, a new kid enrolled at sprawling Cherry Creek High outside of Denver. Zucker, a linebacker on the football team, remembers the first time he saw Kyle Shanahan, whose dad had just been hired as the Broncos head coach. He looked like a California skater.

"Kyle came in and we were doing speed camp for football and just getting started on the offseason," he said. "And funny enough, he had a red hat on with the 'S' on it for Saratoga. He came from Saratoga High. It looked just like the one he wears today. And you could hardly see his face. He had it pulled down so low. That's the first memory I had of Kyle."

The years in Denver ended up being the most formative for Kyle's career, although he didn't know it at the time. He spent his Sundays literally a step or two from his father; he was the guy who made sure the head coach's communication cords — there were no WiFi connections then — didn't get tangled up on the sideline. During the spring and summer, he would work out with Terrell Davis, Ed McCaffrey, Rod Smith and the other Broncos players. And Mike Shanahan allowed his son to invite his friends along, too. No one took it easy on the boys.

Pickup games were treated with the gravity of overtime at the Super Bowl. While Davis, a future Hall of Fame running back, was serving as quarterback in one of the games, he fired a pass that Zucker thought was intended for someone else.

"So I ducked and I didn't catch the ball and we didn't win," Zucker recalled. "I'm telling you, I got more shit that day than I did my whole life."

Another one of Kyle's high school teammates got a black eye after taking a Brian Griese pass to the face. The coach's son didn't escape the rough stuff, either. During a 1-on-1 drill, a defensive back struck Kyle in the face so hard it drew blood.

"I tried to hold it together out there, then I went inside and didn't want to show my face," Kyle recalled. "It was so embarrassing. My dad wouldn't have it. He made me go out there and I had to walk around with a busted up face."

At the time, Kyle was intent on sharpening his skills and becoming an NFL receiver. He wanted to be the next McCaffrey. It turned out to be the ideal lesson for what turned out to be his actual career. He learned the practice-field patter, what a championship team looked like, who were the winners and who were the loafers.

Mostly, he realized that an NFL player would be able to sniff out a fraud from a mile away. His last name might allow him to step into the NFL coaching ranks. But he'd still have to work harder than everyone else to accelerate through them.

"I knew what I was getting into before I got into it," Shanahan said. "That's why I worked so hard and stuff — I wanted to make sure I did know what I was talking about. If you ever get around a group of NFL guys and you don't know what you're talking about, I can't imagine how insecure you'd be. Because it's at a very high level, it's very intense and that's why I never wanted to get into coaching until I absolutely knew that I put in the work, I put in the hours. I never wanted a player to ask me something I couldn't help them with. Knowing what their expectations were before I got into it was what helped me be so ready."

After the surgeons cleaned out his wound and stitched up his thigh, Shanahan was told it would take a full season to recover from the fence gouging. That was unacceptable, and he pushed himself to be back on the field in 18 days.

But it was still too late. He had missed Texas' version of training camp, never fully regained his speed that year and slipped down the depth chart. He finished the season with just seven catches. He got an invitation to attend the NFL scouting combine when he left Texas but didn't go. By that point, he had already changed course, already was speeding ahead.

Shanahan, known in NFL circles for his youth and precociousness, for his energy and swagger, turns 40 on Saturday.

"I guess I have to change everything," he said.

Don't worry. He's only joking. He's not going to retire the red, wide-brimmed hat that's become his signature, turn the music he blasts at practice to a more reasonable volume or start wearing a sensible pair of brown loafers. After all, what other gig would allow him to marry his two lifelong passions?

"I love that I come to work and I'm almost in my pajamas every day," he said. "I don't have to come in dressed in a suit. I sit in a chair every morning, get a cup of coffee and turn out the lights and watch film, then I walk out onto the field and coach guys. I think it's pretty cool that I'm in a line of work where you can be yourself."

Sometimes, the grass really is greener on the other side of the fence.

Of Will Ferrell, Jerry Rice and Drake: How Kyle Shanahan is rebuilding 49ers culture

By Nick Wagoner
ESPN
September 5, 2017

To find the ultimate answer for creating a successful culture on a NFL team, why not go to a guy with an economics degree from the Ivy League?

Luckily, the San Francisco 49ers have fullback Kyle Juszczyk (Harvard, '13).

"You didn't know that Will Ferrell is the key to building a football franchise?" Juszczyk said with a grin creeping across his face. "I thought everyone knew that."

Juszczyk, of course, was joking. Well, sort of. The real answer to building a culture that can lead to sustained success in a league full of parity is far more complicated. It's an answer the 49ers are currently seeking under first-time head coach Kyle Shanahan and general manager John Lynch.

Believe it or not, Ferrell is part of the equation, and so are Jerry Rice and Drake. In San Francisco, it requires striking a balance between pulling from a rich tradition and finding ways to evolve.

For Shanahan, it also means mixing in various things he picked up during his years around his father, Mike, when Mike was the head coach of the Denver Broncos. Those are things Kyle carried through a collegiate playing career at Texas and through 13 seasons as an NFL assistant.

"I think the most important thing is getting the right people," Shanahan said. "Everyone can talk about the culture and what you're trying to build, but you have to get the right people who are capable of being a part of the culture that you want because it's got to be natural. It's got to be real. It can't be fake, so what we try so hard to do is get people in here where football means everything to them. It means just as much to them as it does to me and it does to everyone in this building, to where our No. 1 priority in everything we do is to win on Sunday."

Majoring in football

Sitting in his spacious office at the SAP training facility on a recent afternoon, Shanahan has his shoes off and feet up on the desk as he ponders the origins of his culture-building philosophy. It's clearly something he has thought about a lot.

When Shanahan says he wants people who care as much as he does, he offers examples. For instance, when he was playing at Cherry Creek (Colorado) High, anytime he suffered an injury, he ditched class so he could go to the Broncos training facility for treatment so he could play in the next game.

"I obviously grew up in a football house, and it's not like my dad told me to be that way," Shanahan said. "It's just playing high school football was the most important thing in my life, and when I got to college, playing college was, and then when I got into coaching the pros, being successful as a coach was the most important thing. Every decision I made was that way."

Take when Shanahan sat out his redshirt season at Texas after transferring from Duke. In December 2000, the Longhorns held a scrimmage for the redshirt players in the midst of bowl practices. In one of Shanahan's classes, the final was scheduled for the day of the scrimmage.

A seemingly meaningless practice or an important final? The decision for the seven teammates Shanahan had in the class was easy: take the final.

"I was the only guy who showed up to the scrimmage," Shanahan said. "They were like, 'Don't you have a final?' I was like, 'Yeah, I'll just take an F. I'm here for football, and there's no way I'm missing a scrimmage to go to this class.' I had a B in the class, and I ended up getting a D-minus because I skipped a final. They thought I was crazy. I wasn't doing it to show off to the coaches. I was doing it because I came to Texas to play football. I'll be all right with my grades, but I came here because that was how my mindset was. That's how it is in coaching, and that's how I expect players to be."

Shanahan and Lynch have driven that message home from the day they arrived in the Bay Area in January. When the Niners approached free agency armed with nearly $100 million in salary-cap space, they didn't intend to spend money for the sake of spending. Shanahan wanted players who wouldn't be changed by big paydays. He wanted players who would set examples for younger players about what is required of them if they want to get a big payday.

Much of that money was spent on players such as Pierre Garcon, who Shanahan already knew would be the same guy, regardless of the extra zeros on his check. Lynch dug deep to make sure players he had never coached had his same ethos, which they found in Juszczyk.

Niners CEO Jed York immediately was on the same page in that regard.

"I go back to something that Bill Parcels told me a long time ago. He said, 'Jed, this is kind of a cheat sheet for owners. If your coach can't explain how they're going to use a player, don't sign the check,'" York said. "I think that's so true. You look at some of the guys we brought in, and either they have a connection directly or indirectly in the past, and Kyle knows how he wants to use people. He knows what they do well. And when you have that mentality, it helps set that tone from the beginning. Right now we're trying to build a foundation, and that doesn't mean we're not trying to win, but you can't consistently win unless you have a strong foundation. If we can get that done, the sky is the limit. Whether it's this year or in the future, we want to make sure that we have that foundation built, and I think Kyle and John have done an unbelievable job of identifying, 'This is what we want 49ers football to be about, and we're going to find people to fit that mold.'"

'There's not a bear in the building'

Early in the Niners' first preseason game against Kansas City, Shanahan's first game as a head coach, cornerback Rashard Robinson was on the wrong end of a long completion to Chiefs receiver Tyreek Hill. Soon after, he missed a tackle that would have forced Kansas City to kick a field goal. Robinson was upset as he returned to the sideline, until he heard a familiar bit of 49ers' jargon.

"There's not a bear in the building," Juszczyk said. "It's an obscure reference, but it makes sense when it comes to football. Just summing it up, there's no need to panic out there. There's not a bear in the building. Jump offsides, you have a bad play, whatever happens out there, there's no need to panic. Nothing is worse than a bear actually being in the building. That's not what we're dealing with."

Even for the most fervent fans of Will Ferrell movies, the bear in the building might not immediately jump to mind. It's a reference to the 2008 movie "Semi-Pro," in which Ferrell plays an ABA basketball owner/coach/player named Jackie Moon. During one scene, Moon is forced to wrestle a bear, which eventually escapes into an arena full of people. Once the bear breaks free, Moon shouts into a microphone, "EVERYBODY PANIC!"

Early in his tenure as coach, Shanahan showed the clip to his team. It's one he picked up from Atlanta coach Dan Quinn when he was the Falcons' offensive coordinator. Quinn, whom Shanahan notes is a big proponent of culture, likes to find ways to keep it light while offering an important message.

Shanahan has also been known to make frequent references to the Catalina Wine Mixer, a fictional helicopter leasing event in the movie "Stepbrothers," again with a lesson for his players to not let a moment get the better of them.

"Some things you have to realize it's just not that big of a deal," defensive tackle Earl Mitchell said. "It's not the Catalina Wine Mixer. Those are the two big messages: There's not a bear in the building, and it's not like we're at the Catalina Wine Mixer."

When the Niners turned the ball over five times in a preseason loss to Denver, both of those phrases were tossed around liberally on the Niners' sideline.

"You start fumbling, and guys are coming to the sideline, and everyone is freaking out," Shanahan said. "Everyone wants to freak out after the game, and like, 'We suck. We can't do anything,' and it's like, guys, there's not a f---ing bear in the building. We had five turnovers. They had zero. Go look at the stats. It's probably 0 percent win percentage. Let's not reinvent the wheel. Let's not panic. Let's learn how to not have five turnovers, and then we'll talk about how to play football after that. It kind of brings perspective to everybody."

'If Jerry Rice wants to practice, go ahead and practice'

For four straight years, Shanahan has made it a point to find a young running back and ask him if he knows who Marcus Allen is. He has yet to get a positive ID. As a lifelong student of the game, it drives Shanahan crazy.

So when Shanahan and Lynch took over the Niners, one of their top priorities was to make sure that every player on the roster knows about the franchise's storied past.

"I think of San Francisco like people think of the Yankees," Shanahan said. "Just me growing up, that's what the Niners were just throughout the '80s and early '90s. They were the team, and I know my generation saw them that way. I don't know how all the players now feel. Half these guys don't know a lot of players that would surprise the hell out of you if you ask them. You want people to understand the expectations of something like that and the standard that they set.

"You want players to understand that and respect it and grow from it. But that's about where it ends. You have to do everything else on your own. You just want people to understand the importance of where you're at."

Lest any of the Niners forget, Shanahan and Lynch have made sure that there are visual cues almost everywhere you look. Levi's Stadium now has banners of current and former stars, with other pieces recognizing great moments in team history. On the walk into the locker room, the wall to the right is adorned with a mural featuring Joe Montana, Ronnie Lott, Patrick Willis, Roger Craig and Steve Young, with the words "It won't be easy, but it will be worth it" underneath it. Shanahan also changed how the lockers are arranged, eschewing the usual position group formation and mixing players from all facets of the team.

Along with that, any time there's an opportunity to bring one of the franchise's legends into the building, the Niners haven't hesitated. Before one training camp practice, Young and Rice spoke to the team. During that day's workout, the 54-year-old Rice appeared in shorts, a T-shirt, cleats and receiver gloves and went through individual drills with the receivers. When team drills started, Rice lined up about 5 yards behind the play and ran through every rep, offering an example of what went into making him the most prolific receiver in league history.

"It's almost like a cheat sheet," Lynch said. "This is the way it should be. And these guys know when we walk by those Super Bowl trophies that they don't come free. You've got to go earn them, but why not take advantage of guys like that, and why not invite them? And if Jerry Rice wants to practice, go ahead and practice. That's good for us. And Steve Young up here, I've always respected Steve. The stories they told, I think, better than we ever could, they told them what the 49er way is, and it was awesome."

To be sure, Shanahan and Lynch are well-aware that they can't use the past as a crutch.

"Our past is something that we want to celebrate, but we can't rest on what people did in the past," York said. "We have to build our own present and make our own future, and I think that's what Kyle and John understand. I think it's really important that those guys know this is what Bill Walsh was about, this is what the great 49er teams were about, and that's part of their fabric, but they've also made it their own. I think that's the thing that's important. You can't be Bill Walsh. You can't be George Seifert, you can't be somebody else, but that's a part of their fabric, and I think it makes it a lot easier for me to communicate with those guys because the 49ers run in their blood."

Age as an advantage

In addition to his duties as Shanahan's administrative assistant, Nick Kray is known as DJ Kray Kray, the man responsible for the practice music. Kray has his own pop-up tent near the practice field where he spins a variety of cuts -- mostly hip hop -- during every workout. Behind closed doors, Kray handles plenty of other daily tasks, including putting together the aforementioned video clips.

Kray's musical stylings aren't limited to the practice field, either. Before every team meeting, music is playing. The artist most often heard? Drake. More often than not, that comes at the request of Shanahan, not because he's actively trying to relate to his players but because he genuinely likes it.

"I play Drake because I like Drake," Shanahan said. "That's still what I listen to. I'm still close with the music. Now it's starting to be different, but I still know the main guys. I don't know some of the weird stuff. But Drake is what I would be playing because that's what I like."

At 37, Shanahan is older than every player on the Niners' roster, but he's close enough in age that it's not that difficult for him to relate to his team. Veterans such as Mitchell and center Daniel Kilgore emphasize that Shanahan sets a standard of what is expected of each player, and so long as those players meet that standard, there is time for fun.

But Shanahan has long viewed his relative youth as an advantage when it comes to connecting with players of all backgrounds. He is quick to point out that none of that matters unless he can first earn every player's respect as the coach. That's why he emphasized being able to provide answers to any and all questions. If not, players will pick up on it right away.

"I think that's been one of the first things that kind of jumped out to me is just, like, he understands the younger culture and the lingo," Juszczuk said. "I think he can use it to his advantage to be able to get the point across. It's not just the same old banter that you have earned from older coaches your whole career. He kind of puts it into our perspective and understands it a little bit better."

Plenty to prove

The idea of measuring culture is nearly impossible. For now, Shanahan will only allow that he is happy with his team's work ethic. The real tests will come after the Niners go through a losing streak. Shanahan knows that such tests are on the way.

For a team that was 2-14 a year ago, fixing everything in one offseason is almost impossible. These Niners still have plenty of holes, but there seems to be a genuine belief that things are headed in the right direction, especially once they get the right people in place.

"We want 53 guys who realize this is what I do to support my family, this is what I do for a living, and this will come over everything -- except, obviously, your family and life-and-death decisions," Shanahan said. "But [otherwise] this is the No. 1 important thing in my life."

In other words, 53 players who are willing to skip the final.

'I could feel the pole coming out of my leg': Freak injury sped up Shanahan's career

By Matt Barrows
Sacramento Bee
August 25, 2017

Kyle Shanahan's dog needed to go to the bathroom. It altered the trajectory of his career.

It was about 5 p.m. on a summer day in 2001. Shanahan was a 21-year-old receiver at the time, one day from joining his University of Texas teammates for the upcoming season. He was at his parents' house in Denver when he took his dog out in the backyard and went to jump over a four-foot-high fence with decorative, iron prongs at the top.

Shanahan, 6-3 and 185 pounds, had been training furiously all year and was in prime physical condition. He'd leaped the fence hundreds of times. But this time, his hand slipped as he went to propel himself and he came crashing down.

"I thought I was going to hit my head on the ground and I just stopped," Shanahan recalled. He found himself dangling upside down, his left thigh impaled on one of the fence's spear points. His father, Mike, was the Denver Broncos' head coach at the time and already was at the team's training camp in Greeley, Colo. His mother wasn't home.

"No one was out there," he said. "So I had to reach to the ground and push myself off it. It was nasty. I could feel the pole coming out of my leg. And I was so upset because I knew right then, 'Man, I've just messed this up for myself.' Because I was going to training camp the next day."

In 2008, Shanahan became the youngest coordinator in the NFL at age 28 when he was picked to run the Houston Texans' offense. In February, at age 37, the 49ers made him the NFL's second-youngest head coach behind the Los Angeles Rams' Sean McVay. Everything about him and San Francisco's new regime smacks of energy and youth.

But he never would have gotten such a quick start at coaching if his hand hadn't slipped that summer afternoon.

Shanahan's dream at the time was to play in the NFL and it was realistic. A strong spring earned Shanahan the role of No. 3 receiver on a loaded Texas squad that featured Roy Williams and B.J. Johnson at receiver, Major Applewhite and Chris Simms at quarterback and Cedric Benson at tailback.

"I've never seen a guy work as hard as he did to prepare himself," said Darryl Drake, Texas' wide receivers coach at the time who now has the same job with the Arizona Cardinals.

"He wasn't the fastest guy in the world, he wasn't the most gifted guy, but he understood the game," Drake said. "He had a great feel for the position. He was a guy that I was counting on – and we were counting on – to have a big-time role."

Shanahan said when he removed himself from the fence he found he couldn't walk. So he crawled to the back door.

"And I promise, it didn't hurt that bad," he said. "It was like the worst deep thigh bruise you could ever have. There wasn't a lot of blood, but I could see my muscle. And I could see it twitch."

He got a friend to drive him to the hospital. His initial instinct was to have it stitched up and to play through any pain. But it quickly became clear that the wound was too deep, too ripe for an infection – there were paint chips from the fence inside – and that he needed to have surgery.

He called the Broncos' team doctors and soon underwent a two-hour procedure that required three layers of 21 staples to close. Shanahan has a white, nine-inch scar to remind him of the event.

Today he freely talks about the incident and even offers to reenact how it happened using a chair in a Levi's Stadium office as a prop. When it's suggested to him that he has the same proud wound an ancient Greek warrior might have picked up in battle, he frowns.

"It's not really bad-ass," he said. "I was walking my dog. But it was gruesome."

At the time, he was crushed.

Doctors told Shanahan he wouldn't play that season. They were wrong. He missed only one game and was back on the field in 18 days. But he lost his prime spot in the rotation, never regained his former speed or quickness and finished the year with seven catches.

Drake says he doesn't know where Shanahan ultimately would have been drafted but that he had the ability to play in the NFL.

"It was devastating," he said. "Not only for him but for me personally because he's a guy that I loved dearly and wanted to see him go out and show what I knew he was capable he was doing."

Shanahan had an invitation to the scouting combine after his senior season but didn't go. He stopped lifting weights. His NFL aspirations slipped away.

"I went through depression for a while over it," he admits. "My whole life, my whole world was playing (football). It was tough on me. It took me a long time to get over it."

A few months into 2003, he got a job on UCLA's coaching staff. Six months later, he was hired by the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. He's been in the NFL since.

"I always knew I would eventually coach," he said. "But the work I put into the scholarship to Texas – I lived and died for playing at the time. I had aspirations to try to play in the NFL. I knew when it was all done and I'd made my run – whenever that was – that I would coach. But I always joke with players; I say it sarcastically: 'If I never had this injury I'd probably taking one of your guys' job.' Then they all laugh at me. Because obviously I wouldn't have."

A little more than halfway through his rookie season, San Francisco 49ers receiver Brandon Aiyuk has flashed plenty of potential even if it hasn't always showed up in the numbers.

With the Niners ravaged by injuries, especially at the skill positions, there's plenty of reason to believe Aiyuk will be one of the top reasons to watch the 49ers over the final seven games. Don't believe it? Take it from legendary wide receiver Jerry Rice.

"He's going to get much better," Rice told ESPN. "I think, as he gets older, he's going to continue to develop, and I'm expecting big things from him, to be honest with you. Because I think he has everything where he's got the route running, where he's got the hands, that awareness on the football field, and he's one of those guys that he knows he's a playmaker and that he could put points on the board at any time."

That's high praise from perhaps the greatest to ever do it. Thus far, Aiyuk has appeared in seven of nine games, missing one with a lingering hamstring injury and one because of close contact with wideout Kendrick Bourne, who had tested positive for COVID-19.

Aiyuk has 28 receptions for 371 yards and two touchdowns in addition to four carries for 69 yards and two more scores. With Deebo Samuel working his way back from a hamstring injury and tight end George Kittle out for about eight weeks with a fractured foot, all eyes turn to Aiyuk to pick up the slack.

In his two most recent games, he was up to the task, ringing up 14 catches for 206 yards and a score. That left coach Kyle Shanahan impressed and ready to put more on Aiyuk's plate. In fact, before Aiyuk was added to the reserve/COVID-19 list last week, he was in line to be prominently featured in the offense against Green Bay.

Those opportunities eventually went to Richie James, who finished with career highs in catches (nine) and receiving yards (184) to go with a touchdown. It's not hard to envision Aiyuk having numbers every bit as good or better had he been able to play.

"I've been very proud of Brandon these last few weeks," Shanahan said. "Just like we did to Deebo his rookie year, we're putting a little bit more pressure on him earlier than I would like to. You don't like to put all that on a guy coming in and especially a guy who missed most of training camp and didn't have an offseason. What I've loved about him is the pressure that he's had, you don't get to learn, you think you do good from, the standard of your whole life and then you get into a meeting with us on Monday and you have no idea how we see it. A lot of guys don't react totally the right way. Just us challenging Brandon and putting that pressure on him, I see a guy who's responded in the right way."

Despite not having a full offseason program and training camp to get acclimated because of the COVID-19 pandemic and then a hamstring injury, Aiyuk has taken to Shanahan's playbook quicker than expected. He has also endeared himself to veteran teammates through his attention to detail and willingness to learn.

Recounting a recent chat with Aiyuk, quarterback Nick Mullens said the rookie wideout has grown and adapted as the season has gone along. Mullens said Aiyuk has begun to understand what it means to be a pro.

"It's a funny conversation," Mullens said. "He was telling me about how in college you kind of know what opponent you're going to get that week so you might not have to practice as hard because you already know that you're better than them. But, once you get to the NFL, you realize any team can beat any team at any week. And so, he's starting to figure that out, figuring out that the way you practice is the way that you play each and every single week. And so, he's balling out in the games, but he's balling out in practice too. And that just comes with rookie maturation, and it's really cool to watch."

For Aiyuk, that maturation includes a better understanding of how to take care of his body, especially when things like treatment aren't on the team's schedule. In the classroom, Aiyuk has also taken to the lessons of receivers coach Wes Welker, who hammers home the idea of going into every game with a plan.

Early in the season, Aiyuk said he would go into a game and get caught up in what the route or his job was on certain plays. He didn't pay much attention to what the defense was doing and didn't understand how to attack it.

Now, Aiyuk said things have slowed down.

"When I'm lined up where I'm supposed to be and in the right spots, I think it just plays out a lot better that way," Aiyuk said.

With so many injuries around him, it's reasonable to expect Aiyuk's role will continue to grow. Which means more opportunities to get involved in the offense in unique ways and set himself up to be an offensive centerpiece for years to come.

"You can tell he's really starting to come in into his own," Rice said. "I'm expecting big things from him -- he's going to continue to grow and get better."

49ers believe they have another Emmanuel Sanders in Brandon Aiyuk

Seek out a scouting report on San Francisco 49ers wide receiver Brandon Aiyuk and you're likely to get a lot of similar descriptions.

Aiyuk's ability to gain yards after the catch is a staple, as are his wingspan and route running. But the biggest common denominator has to do with what he could become.

"I still feel like I haven't even scratched the surface of what I can do as a football player and at the receiver position," Aiyuk said. "I just think that for me, the ceiling is limitless. I don't think there's a ceiling to my game."

The 49ers fell in love with Aiyuk during the pre-draft process after a senior season at Arizona State in which he posted 1,192 receiving yards, averaged 31.8 yards per kickoff return and averaged a whopping 10.5 yards per reception after the catch.

That home run ability caused Niners coach Kyle Shanahan to view Aiyuk as one of the two best receivers in the draft, along with Oklahoma's CeeDee Lamb. In fact, San Francisco liked Aiyuk so much it considered taking him with the No. 13 overall pick. That choice was eventually traded for No. 14 and became defensive tackle Javon Kinlaw.

But as Aiyuk continued to slip closer to the Niners' second first-round pick at No. 31, they decided to get aggressive. They moved up in a trade with the Minnesota Vikings and selected Aiyuk at No. 25, the highest pick they've used on a wideout since Michael Crabtree in 2009. The idea is to pair Aiyuk with emerging star wideout Deebo Samuel, who, like Aiyuk, is known for his ability to evade and run through tacklers.

In Aiyuk, Shanahan sees a player who can help fill the void left by Emmanuel Sanders, the veteran wideout acquired in the middle of last season who departed for the New Orleans Saints in free agency. Although Aiyuk specializes in taking short passes and turning them into long gains, Shanahan said he believes Aiyuk can play any of the team's receiver positions and, like Sanders, has the ability to be a threat at all levels of the field.

"It didn't matter where you put him and it didn't matter what the play was, and that's what we got a little bit with Emmanuel when we traded for him, and that's what I think we're getting with Brandon," Shanahan said.

"This guy wants to be great. I want someone like that. And I think he has the tools to be great. I think he has the mindset to be great, and I promise you schematically we're going to give him every chance to do that."

Aiyuk's journey to the 49ers as a first-round pick was far from traditional. Coming out of McQueen High School in Reno, Nevada, Aiyuk had played all over the field, including running back, but most of his film was of him playing cornerback. In 2016, Aiyuk landed at Sierra College in Rocklin, California, the former home of the 49ers' training camp.

There, Sierra coach Ben Noonan recognized Aiyuk's potential as a wide receiver, even though he was mostly recruited as a defensive back. Noonan said it seemed like every time Aiyuk got his hands on the football, whether that was as a returner or on defense, he managed to turn it into a touchdown.

"It's like the dude always ended up in the end zone," Noonan said. "It's just like we have got to get the ball in this guy's hands a lot."

It wasn't until the fourth game of his freshman year that Aiyuk broke into the starting lineup, but by the final game of the season, he had emerged as a star. In that last game, Aiyuk started at wide receiver and cornerback -- assigned to cover the opponent's top receiver. Aiyuk finished with six catches for 121 yards and two touchdowns and, according to Noonan, held his man to one catch for 20 yards.

That performance jump-started an offseason in which Noonan saw Aiyuk devote himself to football. Noonan found Aiyuk in the weight room constantly, improving his squat from 275 pounds coming out of high school to 500 pounds by May 2017. That work ethic carried over to the practice field, where Aiyuk routinely stayed for 30 minutes after every practice working on routes in the Rocklin heat.

"It gets up to a good 110 degrees, and then he's out there until the daylight is gone with the quarterbacks after a four-hour day," Noonan said. "And demanding that the quarterbacks stay, you know, whether their arm was falling off or not. And then the other thing that gives you perspective on his personality and work-ethic type of kid he was: He insisted on being on special teams."

In a game against Santa Rosa College during his sophomore season, Aiyuk showed off his special-teams abilities with a 76-yard kickoff return for a touchdown and four punt returns for 110 yards (with a pair of touchdowns called back for penalties) to go with six catches for 82 yards and two more touchdowns.

"It was the most dominant junior college game I'd ever seen by anybody," Noonan said.

By that point, Aiyuk began drawing attention from top programs, including Arizona State. Herm Edwards had just taken over as the Sun Devils coach and needed a wideout with some experience. Aiyuk spent his first year in Tempe biding his time behind N'Keal Harry, whom the New England Patriots selected with the 32nd pick of the 2019 NFL draft.

While Aiyuk's production was limited to 33 catches for 474 yards and three touchdowns as a junior, Edwards saw his NFL potential and physical gifts. Aiyuk has almost 10-inch hands and an 81-inch wingspan, which is almost unheard of for a player who's 6 feet tall. For the sake of comparison, former Detroit Lions wideout Calvin Johnson had an 82-inch wingspan and was 6-foot-5.

"All those things were, you check the boxes, and then I just think his competitive attitude," Edwards said. "He loves to compete, you know. I mean, everything is about trying to compete and win. I mean he's about that. That's his DNA."

Replacing Sanders from a production and leadership standpoint is probably too big of an ask for Aiyuk as a rookie, but Edwards believes he can be a difference-maker as a returner or a wideout with a limited route tree. The lack of a full offseason to get acclimated won't help Aiyuk's cause, but Edwards has faith.

"He never stops learning, and that's the one thing that good football players understand," Edwards said. "No coach in the history of coaches has ever given a player talent. They give them information. He's an information gatherer. He's not naive, by any stretch of the imagination."

"You have to be very disciplined and very focused, and he understands those things."

Arik Armstead

Arik Armstead, fueled by family, has silenced critics as the 49ers enter another NFC title game

By David Lombardi
The Athletic
January 26, 2022

It was all on the line, and it was the defensive line's time.

Green Bay, leading the 49ers by a touchdown, faced third-and-8 with just over five minutes to play. Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers was gunning to convert a first down that could begin salting the snowy game away.

Arik Armstead had other ideas. So did 49ers defensive coordinator DeMeco Ryans, who dialed up a safety blitz with the hopes of briefly discombobulating Green Bay's offensive line.

Confusion only lasted for a second, but Armstead has the burst to exploit even the smallest of openings. All 290 pounds of the defensive lineman ripped through the front. His 6-foot-7 strides corralled Rodgers, whose attempt to shuffle away was futile, a mere 2.6 seconds after the snap.

The sack was an excellent example of proactive coaching on Ryans' part and an awesome display of athleticism from Armstead — all rolled into one destructive burst. It set up The Block, which came on the next play as the 49ers preyed on the Packers' punt and scored the game-tying touchdown.

The 49ers' furious endgame sequence was suddenly in full swing, and Armstead's family went wild up above frigid Lambeau Field.

"We were in a heated suite, with Green Bay people," Guss Armstead, Arik's father, said in a phone interview this week. "That's Arik, always thinking about others, he made sure we were taken care of. So we were with all these Packer people, going crazy."

It was Armstead's second sack of the game and third of this postseason, which the 49ers hope is only at its halfway point. Just like Armstead's sack dance, which comes with a roar and a hearty rub of the belly, their team — and especially its D-line — seems hungry for more.

The next chance to eat comes in Sunday's NFC Championship Game against the Rams, a team that the 49ers defeated just over two weeks ago on the fuel of five sacks and 14 QB hits. Armstead also delivered a huge chunk of that production in that one, racking up 2 1/2 sacks and hitting L.A. quarterback Matthew Stafford three times.

With six sacks this month, the 28-year-old lineman is on perhaps the most productive tear of his career. It's extended into this string of elimination games, and that seems to be generating a newfound sense of outside appreciation for Armstead's play.

The lineman has long been a popular target for detractors, so his family has certainly appreciated the recent upturn in positive recognition.

"Sometimes, people don't understand and see what's going on in football," said Guss, who works training professional basketball players (Arik played both football and basketball in college at Oregon).

"Everybody gets caught up in sacks. In basketball, everybody is into 3-pointers, everybody is into scoring. But the guys that are doing all the work don't get the credit.

"Arik has a basketball background, and he's always been like that. It's just something he has to deal with. He gets doubled by 350-pound guys and then someone makes a play, but no one gave him credit for that."

Until now, since those sacks are rolling in just when the 49ers need them most.

To fully appreciate what Armstead is doing now, it's necessary to understand the trajectory of his seven-year career. It certainly hasn't been linear.

Previous 49ers general manager Trent Baalke took Armstead with the 17th pick in the 2015 draft. Armstead spent his first two seasons as a third-down pass-rushing specialist on a bad team, but a torn labrum ended his 2016 campaign. Then, in 2017, the current 49ers regime helmed by coach Kyle Shanahan and GM John Lynch implemented a 4-3 defensive scheme under new defensive coordinator Robert Saleh and asked Armstead to cut weight for a move to the speed-rushing LEO position — but his season again ended prematurely, this time with a broken hand.

In 2018, the 49ers took a beefed-up Armstead and experimented with him at several spots. He posted a good year, but an earnest breakout didn't come for the first-rounder until D-line coach Kris Kocurek came aboard in 2019.

"I think Arik was penalized because he is so versatile," Guss Armstead said. "So they weren't able to figure out what to do with him. That's why I really value the guys that came in, Saleh and Kris. They were able to get a read on the two things that Arik really does well."

Kocurek was quick to declare Armstead's two strong suits: anchoring the strong-side defensive end position with stout run defense on base downs and working from an interior tackle alignment to pass rush against guards in nickel spots.

"I remember meeting with him on Day 1," Armstead said of Kocurek during his breakout, 10-sack season in 2019. "He said, 'I believe in you. You're a dominant player. This year is going to be your best year yet. I truly believe that.'"

"Everything he said has been consistent. He's been pushing me to be better. Working hard in practice, cutting it loose and playing free. You play like that when you have a coach that believes in you and believes in your abilities."

Armstead signed a lucrative five-year, $85 million contract extension shortly thereafter. The 49ers clearly valued him, and it appeared that his early-career struggles to earn a strong foothold in the court of public opinion had faded to the past.

But just two days after Armstead signed that deal, the 49ers traded defensive tackle DeForest Buckner to the Colts. This was jarring, perception-shattering news. Though the move was part of a complex salary-cap shuffle that the team deemed necessary for longer-term financial stability, critics characterized it differently.

They claimed the 49ers chose Armstead over Buckner. Those assertions, regardless of their accuracy, pressurized the subsequent 2020 season for Armstead.

The fact that Buckner logged 9 1/2 sacks and earned first-team All-Pro honors for playoff qualifier Indianapolis while Armstead managed only three sacks for the 6-10 49ers in 2020 made for poor optics. Matters further devolved early this season, hitting a nadir when Buckner delivered a sack on the final play of the Colts' Week 7 win over the 49ers.

Armstead, meanwhile, had only one sack on the season at that point. The 49ers were 2-4. Detractors lambasted the front office. Many of them re-solidified their pre-2019 takes on Armstead, with "overpaid" replacing "draft bust" as the chief pejorative.

For Armstead's family, the onslaught was a callback to earlier days, when Armstead so often found himself in the crosshairs of criticism.

"I think that there were times that just because of his stature, people have always taken shots at him, and this goes back a long way," Guss Armstead said. "Arik was 6-8, 300 pounds — he was literally that big in high school. People would say, 'oh, he's not that good, he's just big.'

"And then moving to the NFL, that's the kind of stuff that's always been a part of it. Professional athletes, it's very frustrating, so you have to try to separate yourself from it and remind yourself that the people who really make the decisions — John and Jed (York) and those people — I think they value Arik. "We live in a negative world where everybody is always taking shots."

Armstead has spoken of how he deals with some of the toxicity. He hasn't been shy about occasionally firing back at critics on social media or even reposting denigrating talk about him that didn't age well. But Armstead has often repeated that, above all else, he's intrinsically motivated. Family drives him.

Armstead and his wife, Mindy, welcomed a baby girl last year. His first child is his central anchor point. According to Guss, his son's sense of ingrained drive stretches to childhood. He remembers Arik, even at a young age, waking up and insisting on joining dad's early-morning training sessions for NBA players in Sacramento.

"I thought he'd want to sleep in," Guss said. "But he wanted to go. So he saw Matt Barnes, Bobby Jackson and Mike Wilks, all these guys that I trained. He saw them every day as they trained." Wilks even lived at the Armstead's house while he was training with Guss.

"So Arik actually got to see a pro guy in his house that was dialed into working hard and being humble," Guss said. "So Mike was like Arik's bonus brother. He got to see all of that. It makes it easier when you have that blueprint. You can see that this is possible."

Arik's actual brother is Armond Armstead, who played defensive line at USC before playing one year for the CFL's Toronto Argonauts. Armond is three years older than Arik, was roughly the same size during his playing career (6-5, 305 pounds) and played a similar mix of D-line positions as his younger sibling does now.

"Armond showed Arik that he could do it," Guss said. "And he took it and ran with it."

As Armstead rose through the ranks, first at the Sacramento area's Pleasant Grove High School and then in college at Oregon, Guss reminded him to stay grounded — especially in the event that he ever run into criticism that he deemed unfair.

"For us, it was always — that's always going to happen to you," Guss said. "Consider the critic, first of all. Because a lot of people have a lot of stuff to say, but they may not necessarily know what they're talking about.

"You take the good with the bad. You get a lot of praise, you stay at one level, and you get a lot of the negativity, and you've gotta still stay at that level. And when you're compensated well, people start taking shots at you for that — that's all part of it."

It's certainly been a backdrop this season, but Armstead did manage to keep an even keel through 2021's low point, and that made him a central point of the 49ers' turnaround.

Following that Week 7 loss to Buckner and the Colts, during which Indianapolis rushed for 148 yards on 4.5 yards per carry, Ryans and Kocurek made a big adjustment. They moved Armstead to defensive tackle on more than just a situational rushing basis. He played inside for the majority of the game.

That shift to tackle paired Armstead with 49ers nose tackle D.J. Jones, and the two have since developed into perhaps the best interior run-stopping tandem in the league. Jones and Armstead finished the regular season ranked Nos. 1 and 3, respectively, of all defensive tackles in ESPN's run-stop win rate.

“He’s the most important piece on this team to me,” Jones said after the 49ers’ wild-card round win over Dallas. “Arik Armstead is a force. He can play outside, inside, 3-technique, 2i. He’s a Swiss Army knife, and I love it when he’s inside with me.”

Collectively, per EPA and DVOA numbers, the 49ers’ run defense has been the league’s best since Armstead’s move. The 49ers have allowed only 3.1 yards per carry over the past three games against potent Rams, Cowboys and Packers offenses, and that’s been the defense’s key ingredient toward earning pass-rushing opportunities.

In that way, Armstead has benefited through sack opportunities from the run-stopping that he’s helped provide.

“I think our run defense improved drastically because of the unselfish play by Arik Armstead,” Ryans said last week. “I think people forget we lost our starter in (Javon) Kinlaw early in the year, and we were trying to figure that out inside. When you want to play good run defense, you have to have two really good interior defensive linemen. And Arik unselfishly moving inside helped, and D.J. Jones has been outstanding all year.”

Armstead and Jones, teammates since the 49ers drafted the latter player in 2017, have become even closer friends this season after assuming the role of run-stopping pillars in the defense’s middle.

Jones, along with linebacker Fred Warner and Armstead’s family, was on hand to surprise Armstead and inform him that he was the 49ers’ Walter Payton Man of the Year nominee for the second straight season in December.

That honor came as a result of Armstead’s continually diligent community work in both his native Sacramento and the Bay Area. It shined a light on another aspect of Armstead’s unselfish nature, which the 49ers value greatly.

“That’s just my parents, growing up in my family,” Armond Armstead said in a phone interview this week. “There’s four of us. My mom and my dad made it work for us, being sacrificial. Arik just loves serving. It’s a big motivator for him. Our family cultivated a culture of unselfishness.”

Armond has been particularly excited about the pairing of Arik’s 6-7 frame with Jones, who’s 6 feet and 305 pounds, since it reminds him of his own college playing days. At USC, he was paired with future NFL Pro Bowler Jurrell Casey — a 6-1, 305-pounder — on the inside.

“It creates a unique matchup ability,” Armond said. “And that’s what you want. When I played with Jurrell, we’d ask each other, ‘how’d you do that?’ Because he’s 6-foot. ‘How’d you get that leverage? I’m 6-5. How you doing that?’

“So when the 49ers have a combination of someone like D.J., with his acceleration and strength, and Arik, it’s tough. Everyone has their strengths and weaknesses. Some guy who matches up with Arik might match up better with D.J. But when you’ve gotta go against both of them, then you switch ‘em out, one time it’s D.J., one time it’s Nick (Bosa), one time it’s Arden (Key), it’s tough, man. It gives them unique matchup abilities.”

Those advantages, so many of them unlocked by Armstead’s athletic versatility, have been on increasingly clear display lately. While Armstead’s second sack at Green Bay was impressive due to his raw explosiveness, his first one — which also came on a critical third down and held the Packers to a field goal — showcased pure power.

Armstead drove straight through Green Bay right guard Lucas Patrick into Rodgers. That sight of such a tall D-lineman overpowering such a relatively compact guard made Armond smile, because he remembers how Arik developed the unique skill set that he’s now consistently showcasing.

“Arik has a natural gift of people-moving, and a lot of the movement skills go back to training basketball,” Armond said. “If you’re playing on the post, you can’t back a guy down standing straight up. You can’t box out for a rebound standing straight up. Long levers make strong levers, but if you’re not taking the right levers, you’re not using your length to your advantage and you’re not going to be able to create that push.”

That, of course, hasn’t been a problem for Arik Armstead. He’s unleashed the full potential of his physical gifts. Opposing run games are hitting brick walls as a result. Sacks are pouring in.

And all that criticism that seemed to pervade the first several years of Armstead’s career, even if it might not have been fair? It seems far back in the rearview mirror now, both for Armstead and for his 49ers’ D-line, which enters this NFC Championship Game again surging as one of the league’s best fronts.

“(Kocurek’s) getting it out of them boys,” Armond said. “It felt like a lot of the year, they were still jelling. Guys would run into each other, but by the time they got to the end of the year, they were really jelling. Teammates were learning how to work together. Now, things are firing on all cylinders. They’re executing.”

And Armstead’s family, of course, is cheering.

“What can you say?” Armond said. “For Arik: keep going.”

Community work of San Francisco 49ers' Arik Armstead an 'inspiration'

By Nick Wagoner
December 23, 2021

On a recent fall day, San Francisco 49ers defensive lineman Arik Armstead was penciled in for a quick visit to Sunnydale, one of San Francisco's largest housing projects.

Ashlei Hurst, the director of resident services at Mercy Housing and a longtime friend of the Armstead family, invited Armstead to tour Sunnydale, which was built in 1940.

What he saw was what he now calls a "lack thereof," a place full of people in buildings that weren't suitable for living. He saw police cars driving past with four officers inside armed with shotguns hanging out the window as they cruised the neighborhood.

Armstead was only supposed to stay for about 30 minutes, but he couldn't just make a cameo appearance. For two and a half hours, Armstead walked around the neighborhood, speaking to residents, business owners and local leaders about what they need and asked how he could help. Quietly, Armstead listened and absorbed his surroundings. He could see the struggle and hear the desperation.

"I saw a community that just has been kind of thrown off by the wayside and kind of a place that's been forgotten and hasn't been nourished," Armstead said. "It was real eye-opening for me. ... I don't know if a lot of people really know about Sunnydale and what's going on up there. Just seeing the conditions that people are living in and just the lack of a lot. That always inspires me and keeps me going knowing that there's a lot of work."

Indeed, for Armstead the work that needs to be done never truly ends. In fact, it's only beginning. That applies to what he's doing on the field as one of the Niners' starting defensive tackles, but there are plenty of significant projects to do off the field as well.

He has the means to help. Armstead is in the second year of a five-year, $85 million contract, and as a former first-round pick (No. 17 overall in 2015), he's earned a little more than $46 million in his career so far.

For Armstead, making the world a better place starts in his home community of Sacramento and extends to the Bay Area.

What started as the inaugural (and free) Arik Armstead Football Camp for kids back in 2015 has grown into the establishment of the Arik Armstead Academy in September, which came with his $250,000 donation to Mercy Housing California. The Armstead Academy serves more than 400 students in the Sacramento City Unified School District, offering academic support, after-school programming and career exploration opportunities.

At 6-foot-7, 290 pounds, Armstead cuts an imposing figure that belies his soft-spoken nature. His passion for helping others has led him to a second consecutive Walter Payton Man of the Year Award nomination and, more importantly, left a lasting impact on those who have witnessed his evolution as a philanthropist and how that has mirrored his growth as a man.

"In terms of what he does off the field, for his community, for our community, it's insane," 49ers linebacker Fred Warner said. "It's an inspiration to not only me but the entire team. All of us see it. It makes me only want to work harder at being better for the community and doing stuff for other people."

'He didn't forget'

Armstead's own inspiration comes from a combination of conversations, life experiences, reading and studying the world around him.

Over the past few years, those factors have led Armstead to make childhood education and social justice his primary focus. That wasn't necessarily how he always planned it, but the more he read and heard and reflected on his own experiences, the more it made sense.

Armstead remembers being in second or third grade and struggling with his reading, specifically when reading aloud. He still remembers arriving at school an hour early to work on it.

Armstead eventually got the hang of it thanks in part to teachers and family who were willing to help. Christa Armstead, Arik's mother, would even take him to pick out something from Dollar Tree in exchange for doing well in class that week.

Nearly two decades later, it's not lost on Armstead that many kids don't have that same support system to keep them from falling behind.

"I'm sure he can relate, and when you can relate, it makes you relatable, and I think that's why he's so great at what he does -- the work he's doing today with kids because he can relate," Christa Armstead said. "He didn't forget that he was a kid once upon a time and he had some struggles and he had a lot of support to help him overcome any obstacle he would have in life. And he realizes not every kid has that. So, his work today is to somehow try to level that out."

Given that, it's no surprise that one of Armstead's primary initiatives is called "Storytime with Arik Armstead," a project that allows Armstead to visit schools in person and via Zoom and read to classrooms of various ages.

Armstead has distributed books emphasizing the importance of diversity and inclusion to more than 2,000 students in the San Francisco Unified School District and another 2,000 plus members of the Boys & Girls Club. Since May 2020, Armstead has reached kids from first to fifth grade via 25 virtual classrooms in 21 school districts from his hometown of Sacramento all the way to Qatar. Each book has a message, covering topics such as equality, Black history and sustainability.

"I think back like 'Another kid in that situation might lose his confidence and be like I'm not reading; I'm not even going to try it,'" Arik Armstead said. "And then they're behind and they continue to fall behind. Because if you can't read, how are you going to read your math problem? Or your history lesson? It's just a spiral effect."

When the COVID-19 pandemic hit in 2020 and virtual learning became the norm, Hurst received a call from Armstead asking what was needed to bridge the digital divide for kids who didn't have the devices or internet access to learn remotely.

Armstead donated $50,000, the beginning of the growing partnership between Armstead and Mercy Housing, which develops and operates low-income housing all over California and offers resources that range from basic needs like food and clothing to academic support. Armstead himself delivered Chromebooks and paid Wi-Fi hotspots to the Upper Land Park neighborhood of Sacramento.

"Often people who want to give come with a directive of like, 'I want to do this, I'm going to give money to you to do this,'" Hurst said. "He came to me saying 'What do you need?' And he was able to be open and say, 'This is the need, I'll get to that need.' Versus coming in with his agenda. He said 'Oh, kids need laptops, Chromebooks, that makes sense, I got it.'"

A 'fabric woven' throughout his life

For Armstead and his three siblings, the idea of helping others was never far from their minds. Christa and Guss Armstead ran a tight but encouraging household, reminding their children that even though they weren't the wealthiest family around, they were more fortunate than many kids.

Guss Armstead, a former college basketball player and well-known trainer for athletes in the Sacramento area, helped spur Arik's sports career. Christa pushed education, often reminding her children that all things were possible through school. It's something she learned from her own mother, who used to take her grandchildren to visit the USC campus and remind them that maybe one day they, too, could go to school at a place like that.

Armstead's siblings set a similar example. His older brother Armond was an accomplished football player whom Arik badly wanted to emulate. And his sister Alexis has been instrumental in having deep, meaningful conversations with her brother about the importance of childhood education and how it ties directly into the justice system.

"We tried to teach them, 'Don't take this for granted,'" Christa Armstead said. "And it's something I think you instill in kids when they're young but when they become adults, when they go to college, their eyes kind of come open. ... So, education and [helping others] have been kind of the fabric woven throughout their lives."

Through it all, Armstead has never lost sight of where he came from. He remembers all the people who helped him get to where he is, including Hurst, who first met the Armstead family 14 years ago at Midtown Church in Sacramento. She now counts Christa Armstead as a mentor and Arik Armstead as a valued partner in helping to make change in the Sacramento area.

That Armstead was drafted by the 49ers -- the team closest on a map to Sacramento -- almost feels preordained, as though he was put here in part so he could pay back the place that raised him through his own philanthropy.

It's why Armstead still makes his offseason home in Sacramento and why it's not unusual for him to pop back into town for meetings with Mayor Darrell Steinberg to lobby for more support for his various projects or pitch new ideas.

"God always works in mysterious ways and has a plan and a purpose for everything," Armstead said. "I think in a lot of ways I was meant to be here and meant to create change where I'm from."

'Prayers answered'

Arik Armstead has made reading to children a priority, whether that's reading books in a virtual classroom as far away as Qatar or in person to kids just minutes from the 49ers' facility. San Francisco 49ers Much like chasing down a quarterback on his 25.5 career sacks, Armstead has no intention of slowing down his charitable pursuits. He and Hurst have a shared dream of opening a 10,000 square foot community center in Sacramento. They already have a building in mind complete with floor plans.

Armstead wants to turn it into a place for students to have tutoring and academic advisors as well as a STEM lab and a teaching kitchen for kids with an interest in culinary studies.

Armstead's future plans also involve his growing family. He married his wife Mindy in June 2020 and the couple welcomed daughter Amiri in February. Becoming a dad to a daughter has added even more layers to Armstead's ever-growing list of off-field pursuits.

To that end, Armstead has taken advantage of his proximity to Silicon Valley. He's working with humanly.io, which creates software to bring equity to the job hiring process, and Syndio, which creates software for companies to evaluate whether they're paying their employees equitably and not based on gender, race or age.

"I'm living for my child now and it gives me a new sense of purpose, a new sense of drive to create change for her," Armstead said. "She's going to be living in this world much longer than me hopefully, and how can I have impact and make her life better, not only through being her dad, but how can I create change to make the community better for her and create more opportunities for her?"

On Dec. 6, Armstead hosted a "Read for Justice" for third- through fifth-graders from the Boys & Girls Club of Silicon Valley. Sitting comfortably in front of about 50 kids, Armstead read the book "The Day You Begin," by Jacqueline Woodson. It's a story about children from different backgrounds finding the courage to connect by sharing their own stories.

As Armstead read the book aloud and led a discussion on diversity and inclusion, his mother looked on with the unmistakable feeling that her son, all grown up, was exactly where he was supposed to be, doing the exact thing he was supposed to be doing.

"I just think, 'Wow. Arik you're doing it. You're doing what I dreamed or prayed or hoped you'd do,'" Christa Armstead said. "But I'm actually seeing my prayers answered."

Elk Grove's 49er goes from a giant on the field to a giant in the Sacramento community

By Chris Biderman

Arik Armstead is one of the more unassuming giants. The 49ers defensive lineman doesn't have the audacious energy of his teammate George Kittle, the bellowing voice of Fred Warner, the movie-star looks of Jimmy Garoppolo or the mountainous biceps of Nick Bosa.

The Elk Grove native — who stands out at 6-foot-7 and nearly 300 pounds — is carefully quiet and observant. He's one of the longest-tenured players on the 49ers, yet his personality is mysterious to those who don't interact with him daily. He didn't reveal much in the often-awkward news conference settings with the media who would pry into matchups with Sunday opponents. The 2015 first-round draft pick — No. 17 overall — has never been considered a go-to for reporters looking for quotes that would define a game or stoke controversy.

That just wasn't his style as a young player. He wasn't after attention. He'd keep opinions largely to himself. But there's something that's become apparent about Armstead as he's grown into a man, an NFL veteran and a father. He lets his actions speak. With that comes a beneficiary: the Sacramento community he grew up in that he's working to help — continuously. "It's just always just a mindset of always striving to do more," Armstead said.

Doing more started by Armstead volunteering with members of his church when he was in high school at Pleasant Grove, then creating a free football camp for kids when he first broke into the NFL, to using social media to encourage people in Sacramento to keep restaurants afloat when COVID-19 hit, to creating a reading program for students, to donating $50,000 to help kids buy computers for distance learning, leading to over $200,000 raised by Bayside Church, where his mother, Christa, has been a worship leader.

Always striving for more is the genesis of Armstead's celebration every time he sacks a quarterback. He'll lean back and rub his stomach telling the world he's hungry for more. "It's kind of where 'stay hungry' comes from," Armstead said. "Just striving to be better and not being satisfied."

ARMSTEAD'S CHARITY WORK

The latest example coincides with big steps in Armstead's life. In the spring of 2020 he signed a five-year contract with the 49ers that could pay up to $85 million. He got married that summer and welcomed his daughter, Amiri, earlier this year. On Tuesday, Armstead announced a $250,000 pledge in conjunction with the Mercy Housing Project in Sacramento to bolster the Armstead Academy, created to help under served youth in the area with after school enrichment programs, tutoring and leadership coaching. That effort was applauded last week by the NFL Players' Association, which named him the community MVP of the week.

During the pandemic, when social justice issues were pushed back to the forefront following the police killing of George Floyd in 2020, Armstead used his virtual news conferences with reporters to address issues outside of football. He began by speaking out against hate crimes. Next he highlighted education inequality, noting schools with predominately Black and Latino students often received less funding than those that are predominately white. Education is a sticking point and focus of Armstead's philanthropy.

Roughly 37% of children raised in poverty in the United States don't finish high school, according to Child Fund, making them seven times more likely to remain poor as adults. And according to the National Center for Education Statistics in a 2019 study, 30% and 23% of Black and Hispanic families with children 18 or younger, respectively, live in poverty, compared to just 10% of white families. The San Francisco 49ers' Arik Armstead fist bumps Sacramento Mayor Darrell Steinberg on Tuesday, Sept. 28, 2021, after Armstead announced the launch of the Armstead Academy Project, his new partnership initiative with Mercy Housing California. Armstead presented a $250,000 donation and unveiled plans for a wide range of academic programming for K-12 students in his hometown of Sacramento as well as college trips and enrichment activities for youth in San Francisco.

"I feel education, in the way society is today, is a big determining factor for life trajectory," says Armstead, who played football at the University of Oregon. "Things are moving towards tech and services. Obviously, to get a good job, the standard is having a good education. So it really starts there for the masses of people. "Looking at that, I feel like a lot of people don't have opportunities and don't have really a chance to be as successful. That starts when they're young. A lot of things get decided for their life before they even know it. So that's why I wanted to have an impact in making sure that if society today, if that's how it operates, try to put young people in the best position to be successful in the future."

CHARITY FROM THE HEART

Armstead made the two-plus hour drive from his South Bay home last week to announce his quarter-million dollar investment in conjunction with Mercy Housing in Land Park, just south of downtown Sacramento. The event included a speech from Sacramento Mayor Darrell Steinberg. "It makes me very proud and I don't take it for granted that this man who is a star and has a bit of celebrity is investing in the kids of Sacramento. That means everything," Steinberg told The Bee.

"There's some who do it out of some obligation because it looks good. Arik is the exact opposite of that. He does it from the right place, from the heart. And he's just starting, too, which is what's really exciting." Steinberg indicated the city plans to partner with Armstead on future philanthropic efforts. "I think the sky's the limit," Steinberg said. "We've been talking about bigger and broader things. ... I think he wants a long-term presence in the city."

What that is remains to be seen. Armstead said one of his biggest influences is NBA megastar LeBron James, who helped create the I Promise School, which opened in Akron, Ohio in 2018 to help at-risk children. Armstead's other influences: late rapper Nispey Hussle and former 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick, who became a pillar in philanthropy and the social justice movement for his protest of police brutality and racial injustice in 2016.

"They inspire me to continue do more and more," Armstead says. "Beyond that, my family and how I was raised (inspire me) and I owe a lot to my parents and my family instilling those characteristics in me." Eventually Armstead will pass along those characteristics to his daughter, who dramatically changed his worldview, his father Guss said. "I think it gave him a different perspective," Guss Armstead said. "I think he's seeing a whole other side of it, and I think he's embracing it. I see him smile a lot now. He's always smiling, but he was really smiling a lot with his daughter." Added Arik: "Everything I do, I work with kids, I support and help kids. There's going to be those things that I want for my daughter, I want for these kids as well."

ADDING TO THE CAUSES

Since Amiri was born, Armstead has added gender equity to his causes. He's become a board member for a startup, Syndio, that creates software for companies to evaluate their own employment practices and identify discrepancies in pay surrounding gender and race. "Having a daughter and thinking of working in a company that helps with women's rights and women's equity, is really cool for me too," he said. "I wasn't even necessarily thinking like that before having my daughter." Armstead was the 49ers' Walter Payton Man of the Year nominee for last season which recognizes players for their excellence in community service and play on the field. He should be the favorite to repeat as the nominee for 2021. Many of his teammates this week posted about his $250,000 donation on their social media feeds.

"He for sure inspires me," Warner, the All-Pro linebacker, said. "He's just so consistent and diligent about wanting to give back and help in the community. He leads by action. ... That's why he is one of our captains and why we all look up to him so highly." Indeed, the once-unassuming Armstead has become a giant in the Sacramento community. And not because he stands 6-foot-7.

49ers' Arik Armstead seizing media platform in 2020 to spread word on social injustices

By Cam Inman
Bay Area News Group
August 22, 2020

Arik Armstead took a seat in front of a microphone after 49ers practice, advised reporters to hold tight and insisted on having the first word.

So Armstead launched into what he said will be a routine before his media sessions this season. He's reserving that time to speak out against social injustices and hopefully create unity through dialogue.

"We have to think about why this is happening and what biases and stereotypes are we continuing to allow to be a part of society," Armstead, a sixth-year defensive lineman said. "How can we stop spreading hate and start spreading love in a society where everything is divided black and white, rich and poor, gay/straight, immigrant/citizen?"

"How can we knock down those walls instead of dividing our people and bring people closer together?"

Friday's opening pitch was about America's rise in hate crimes, and Armstead cited the New York Times and FBI in stating that hate crimes were at its highest point in 16 years, such as those against Asians in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic and against Latinos because of immigration strife.

"I challenge all of us to continue to spread love and understanding to people who don't look like us and maybe have a different language than us," Armstead said. "That's what I wanted to shed light on today. Let's talk football."

Armstead's ensuing media session did just stick to football, and the most relevant aspect of that end is his back feels fine and not so tight after missing the first four sessions of training camp.

"My plan throughout the season is to continue this and bring up different topics, new things each time, things I've been reading and educating myself on and try to create dialogue and educate people with this platform and opportunity."

Armstead was the 49ers' 2015 first-round draft pick, and, in the ensuing years, the Elk Grove native supported Colin Kaepernick and other teammates during protests against social inequality and police misconduct.

"I'm trying to find ways to push the needle and educate people with my platform," Armstead said. "That's my responsibility and my duty as a citizen, to be a better part of society, add value to society and the people around me."

"Playing in the NFL gives me a platform. People look up to me and care about what I say, so I decided to use that voice for good and positive things, and to continue to push that needle and try to educate people with my voice."

Richard Sherman, perhaps the most outspoken of all 49ers on myriad topics, is all in favor of Armstead's approach.

"It's one of the most important things in the world, especially during this time," Sherman said. "It's past due time to arrest Breonna Taylor's killers but that hasn't happened. It's time for everybody to speak up and put pressure on things they see is wrong. It's been too long of everyone casting a blind eye. "These are wild times," Sherman added, "and the more we can speak up and shed light on it, the better the world will be for our kids."

Armstead capped off his media session with advice on how to eliminate stereotypes and create a more harmonious society:

“It’s simple encounters you can have with people walking down a street, in a store, saying hi, going out your way to be polite and nice, knocking down that invisible wall that may be there when someone doesn’t know you,” Armstead said. “People can be pleasantly surprised. ‘That’s a nice person.’ Showing genuine care or want to learn about other people instead of being so self-absorbed. Try to show interest in other things you don’t have experience on.

“Those are simple ways you can knock down walls and create unity.”

Aaron Banks

How 49ers' Aaron Banks developed using hoops, jump rope and 'calcium cocktails'

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
January 27, 2023

Aaron Banks weighed 188 pounds when he was in third grade, which meant the San Francisco 49ers left guard had to trek 30 miles from his home in Alameda to play in a no-weight-limit youth football league in Pleasanton.

The 8-year-old, of course, was bigger than the rest of his teammates. And opponents. And others.

"Aaron," said his mother, Teresa, "was bigger than the coach."

Banks was an anomaly on the field. But not at home. His older sister, Dalisia, 30, who is 5-foot-10, and his brothers, Lamont Jr., 27, and Franklin, 22, all grew up bigger than their peers.

And that inspired their parents, Lamont, who played high school football, and Teresa, a former bodybuilder, to ensure they stayed active and healthy.

Aaron, 25, now 6-5 and 325 pounds, smiled Wednesday in the 49ers' locker room as he recalled their before-bed routine: 150 made free throws and 2,000 jump-rope skips in their backyard. And Teresa said that was followed by vitamins and a blended "calcium cocktail": two cups of nonfat milk, four scoops of Ovaltine and six scoops of dry milk.

"We like food," Teresa said. "We like the way it tastes. We like to eat. And so it was, 'OK, you've got to stay in shape.'"

Seventeen years after Banks dwarfed his youth-football coach, he's standing tall in the NFL thanks to a body transformation — this one wasn't supervised by his parents — that has made him a key part of an offensive line that will face its toughest test Sunday in the NFC Championship Game in Philadelphia.

After a disappointing rookie season, Banks, a 2021 second-round pick who was an All-American at Notre Dame, has started 18 games (including playoffs) for an offense that allowed the NFL's sixth-fewest sacks and ranked eighth in rushing.

Now the 49ers' line will be tasked with handling its most formidable front.

The Eagles had an NFL-high 70 sacks, which was 15 more than any other team and matched the third most in NFL history. Philadelphia has four defensive tackles, Fletcher Cox, Javon Hargrave, Ndamukong Suh and Linval Joseph, who have combined for 16 Pro Bowl berths.

"They are very good across the board," Banks said. "They have depth on the interior. So it's not just the first two guys and you get past that and get some scrubs. It will be a big task for whoever is out there. But I think we're looking forward to it."

Banks will be out there a year after he was inactive for the 49ers' loss to the Rams in the NFC Championship Game.

That marked the end of a rookie season in which he played just five snaps. And it was the beginning of an offseason in which he trained at the team facility, lowered his body fat, increased his functional strength and sharpened his focus.

“There are no gimmes at this level,” Banks said. “There’s no, ‘Hey, you’re going to come in and be a starter.’ You’ve got to work for it. It definitely humbled me. I had to take a step back, look at myself and examine what I wasn’t doing right.”

Banks wasn’t the only lineman with plenty to prove. He is a member of an interior-line threesome — a group that includes center Jake Brendel and rookie guard Spencer Burford — that entered the season surrounded by skepticism.

Banks, Brendel and Burford had combined for three career starts, all by Brendel, 30, who wasn’t drafted and is with his fifth NFL team. Burford was a fourth-round pick from Texas-San Antonio and Banks spent his first year as a spectator.

It looked like a potential disaster. But offensive line coach Chris Foerster said enough talent was evident to provide belief.

“It wasn’t like we rolled it out there and said, ‘We hope,’” Foerster said. “We hoped, yes. But we also talked about they all had a skill set that said they could do it.”

Banks’ skill set includes nimble feet that he credits to his basketball background, a sport that was also played by his siblings. Teresa, despite never playing the sport, coached some of their teams: She laughed about placing a cover over her “Basketball for Dummies” book to conceal her initial lack of knowledge.

Banks, whose agility earned him the nickname “Dancing Bear” by one of his Notre Dame coaches, was part of part of a basketball program that won back-to-back North Coast Section titles at El Cerrito High. And his hoops helped develop some qualities that belie his size.

“It helped me with footwork, hand-eye coordination and understanding angles,” Banks said. “And ‘OK, I have something I need to protect. I need to protect the rim so how do I get in the way of you getting there?’ It just provided a real understanding of where I need to put my body to get in front of guys.”

Banks’ earliest basketball memories were in his backyard, before bed, when he and his siblings would launch their shots and skip rope. Teresa estimates Aaron was around 5 when he was gradually “grandfathered” into the family program he credits for much of his success.

“They both understood the body and how to build strength,” Banks said. “How to feed us as kids so we’d be big, but not so big that we couldn’t move. A lot of it is a testament to them for building that foundation.”

Basketball feet, football power: 49ers rookie Aaron Banks began his athletic rise on the El Cerrito hardwood

By David Lombardi
The Athletic
June 25, 2021

East Bay native and Notre Dame product Aaron Banks picked up the phone on the second day of April's NFL Draft.

"Hey, this is John Lynch from the 49ers," the voice on the other end of the line said. "Are you ready to come back to the Bay Area, buddy?"

Celebratory yells and screams followed. For several seconds, Banks didn't have a chance to give Lynch an audible answer. That's how wildly the offensive lineman's extended network of family and friends, huddled around him at a house in Sonoma rented for the occasion, reacted the second Lynch's words crackled through the phone.

Kenny Kahn, Banks' football coach at El Cerrito High School for three years, was among the elated throng that was making all that noise.

"Aaron playing for the San Francisco 49ers is a dream come true," Kahn said in a phone interview last week. "I'm an '80s baby, so it's hard not to love Bay Area teams and what they did then, the A's, the 49ers. So to see Aaron, a Bay Area kid, wear the red and gold is something special.

"You have a kid who has a good head on his shoulders, great support. And people want to see him do well. Him coming home is one of the greatest things."

For Kahn, it's even better than the summer 2013 moment when he met Banks, who was an incoming freshman at El Cerrito playing on the school's summer basketball team.

And that was a good memory.

"Whenever a freshman kid first comes up to talk to me, it's always, 'Coach Kahn, I want to play football for the Gauchos,'" Kahn said. "And I see this 6-5, 330-pound specimen and I just can't make words come out of my mouth.

"I'm just giving him the eye test. I'm grabbing his arm. I kind of start grunting, and my assistant head coach Donny Davis was next to me and I literally started doing the Ric Flair 'woo!'"

Banks' father, Lamont, is a former football player, and his mother, Teresa, is a former bodybuilder. Even as a teenager who hadn't yet hit the gridiron, Banks looked the part.

Given his size, it didn't take Banks long to start dominating much smaller competition on the football field. But it was Banks' ability to move his massive frame that truly differentiated him. He fielded 30 college scholarship offers, eventually choosing a Notre Dame program that valued his spatial-blocking capabilities.

The 49ers, also enamored of Banks' dexterity, were willing to select him with a premium second-round pick — even though coach Kyle Shanahan's regime hadn't selected an offensive guard in four-plus drafts up until that point.

Banks' agility is rooted in his AAU background on the hardwood.

"A lot of people don't realize this, but when Aaron came to El Cerrito, he didn't play football," Michael Booker, Banks' high school basketball coach, said in a recent phone interview. "He was a basketball player. He was a big kid as a freshman, but his footwork was incredible. His skill on the basketball court — he was cerebral, he knew where to be, he knew how to use his body, knew how to position it to be the scorer, to play defense.

“He wasn’t a dump truck. He had really quick feet. He was really agile, and he could really move. That was really surprising for a kid that big.”

Banks consistently scored in the double digits for El Cerrito. His top performances came against his best competition. Booker said Banks was one of the best big men at the Torrey Pines Holiday Classic basketball tournament in late 2015. El Cerrito knocked off host Torrey Pines, Lynch’s alma mater, in that tournament. The Gauchos advanced to the 2016 Northern California Division II championship game, where they lost narrowly to San Mateo’s Serra High.

In that contest, Banks more than held his own against Serra 7-footer Jack Wilson, who later played at Oregon State and Idaho.

“Aaron was just abusing him and going to work on him,” Booker said. “He was really intuitive in terms of playing the game. He knew where the other people should be. He knew all the positions, from the point guard to the five-spot. In fact, he would tell people where they should be. And defensively, he anchored us. So we could do a lot of things defensively that a lot of high school teams couldn’t do, because he could quarterback that.”

Banks’ mastery of nuances carried over to the football field, where the intricacies of timing and footwork are vital to the success of trench play — especially in the type of outside-zone system the 49ers run.

“Once he learned how to play offensive guard and tackle, he wanted to be a long snapper, he wanted to play defensive tackle and defensive end, he wanted to learn everything and play everything,” Kahn said.

“He always had a knack for learning and getting better. He’s a savant in that sense.”

When Banks first joined El Cerrito’s football team in 2013, the program was coming off an illustrious 2012 season that finished with a 13-1 record. The Gauchos’ only loss had come in their final game, a 31-28 defeat at the hands of Marin Catholic — led by future Cal and NFL quarterback Jared Goff — in the North Coast Section Division III title game.

A number of future college Division I players from that El Cerrito team, including defensive back Adarius Pickett (who’d play for UCLA and is now in the CFL), linebacker DJ Calhoun (who’d play for Arizona State) and receiver Marquis Pippins (who’d play for Weber State), remained with the Gauchos when Banks enrolled as a freshman.

“He got to come into that,” Kahn said. “I think with the basketball background and being able to step right in and play in football, he was learning with that baptism-by-fire mentality. He’s always shown he’s an incredible competitor. He looks at it as: The opponent helps facilitate your growth.”

Banks’ football highlight reel at El Cerrito showcases an early look at the skill set that would sell the 49ers several years later.

“We thought that this is a guy that was quick enough to attach to defenders on the second level,” 49ers offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel said earlier this month. “He had a lot of skills. And yeah, we like that he’s big. He’s just gonna have to run fast while being big and we felt like he was a candidate to do that.” Long before Shanahan’s staff nabbed him, Banks’ play in high school drew the hot pursuit of a former 49ers head coach.

Michigan coach Jim Harbaugh, two years after he finished his four-season stint with the 49ers, returned to the Bay Area to pursue two high-profile recruits in fall 2016. One was Antioch High running back Najee Harris, who went on to star at Alabama before the Steelers picked him in the first round of the 2021 draft. The other was Banks. Harbaugh made headlines by announcing Antioch’s homecoming queen at one of Harris’ games and by volunteering on the sidelines for one of Banks’ games.

“Those were two of your top Bay Area recruits,” Kahn said. “Harbaugh was working the chain gang at an El Cerrito football contest followed by him announcing homecoming royalty at Antioch football. I thought it was hilarious. It showed both humility and a great way to show I’m willing to do everything and anything so you’ll play for the Michigan Wolverines. And Michigan was a big option for Aaron at that point in time.”

Along with Oregon and Notre Dame, the Wolverines were one of three finalists in Banks’ recruitment. But the lineman ultimately opted to join the Irish. Banks entered as a freshman when 49ers right tackle Mike McGlinchey, his new teammate and likely neighbor on the right side of the 49ers’ front (Banks projects as the starter at right guard), was a senior at Notre Dame.

“The family, the faith and (former Irish offensive line) coach Harry Hiestand had a big impact on him at the time,” Kahn said.

Banks’ four seasons at Notre Dame set the table for this past April’s Bay Area homecoming — the joyous scene on the other end of the line of that draft-day phone call with Lynch.

The mass of family members and friends gathered at the draft house in Sonoma and bubbled with excitement, ready to explode whenever Banks was picked. They were eager to celebrate one of their own, who’d earned respect with the helpfulness and modesty he’d shown on his rise through the football ranks.

“If there was a freshman kid having a hard time, it was hard not to take Aaron’s help or listen to him,” Kahn said. “A lot of times in high school, you see kids who have that level of success start to big league people, but he was always humble, appreciative and supportive of other people. He was accessible.

“So to witness that, it couldn’t have happened to a better person. El Cerrito is like a small town with a big-city feel. That’s the beauty of the Bay Area, right?”

Of course, the fact the 49ers picked Banks only added to the electricity of the moment. With the ties between franchise fandom and the coaches who developed Banks — Booker’s family has even had 49ers season tickets since 1979, Bill Walsh’s first year as coach — this process culminated in fitting fashion.

Kahn couldn’t help but note the 49ers will wear jersey patches honoring their 75th anniversary this season, which he deems an apt coincidence. Kahn wore No. 75 when he played at El Cerrito High, as did the late George Austin, a longtime fixture around the school who coached Banks in his 2016 senior season before dying in summer 2017.

“You see Aaron’s phone light up, you start to see Roger Goodell do his slow walk to the podium, you hear Aaron talking to Lynch and Shanahan,” Kahn said. “It was that starstruck ‘my dreams are coming true’ moment. Just to see him wrapped around his family, close friends, high school football coaches. “It was a special moment. I’ve been joking that it was my Woodstock because you don’t see that happen every day. And I’ll never see it again, right?”

Meet Aaron Banks, the 49ers' hometown protector here to 'bully bullies'

Sometimes your trip home lasts longer than you expect. That was the case for Aaron Banks.

Banks became the man after the man on April 30. Selected 48th overall, he followed the 49ers' slightly more high-profile pick, Trey Lance. He was brought in as one of the men who will be tasked with protecting that franchise-altering investment for the long haul.

The call

The whole Banks clan was on hand that Friday night in Napa, not too far from where Aaron had grown up, in El Cerrito. They'd rented a house to watch the draft, and Banks invited those closest to him and those who'd helped him get to that point; his immediate family, girlfriend, high school football coaches and close friends.

While the celebration wasn't expected to be abbreviated, there was an expectation that it would have to be cut short at some point. Banks had his bags packed in the garage for whichever team picked him and sent him flying to some new part of the country. He'd have to report to wherever that was within three days.

There were a couple of times when he thought he got the call, which instead turned out to be people figuring out how to get to the house. His heart raced, then dropped, and he got back to waiting.

"Please don't call," he texted back.

But eventually the call did come in. Suffice it to say, it wasn't welcomed with golf claps.

General manager John Lynch and head coach Kyle Shanahan both got a kick out of their struggle to hear Banks through the roar that came from a room full of overjoyed friends and family.

It's hard to ask people to contain themselves at a time like that; especially when most of the room, including the majority of Banks' old coaches, were 49ers fans.

"We tried our best to not just mess that up for him," Aaron's father, Lamont, told KNBR. "But once we were shut off... man."

Aaron being drafted by the 49ers meant those bags could stay packed. He popped a bottle of champagne in the backyard and had time to breathe with those who mattered most to him. A surprise bonus came from the owner of the home, who was watching the draft with his son — both 49ers fans — who realized that the Aaron Banks they just watched get drafted was the same Aaron Banks who was renting their house.

The owner called Lamont to ask if he could stop by and congratulate them. The homeowner and his son got some autographs and he gave the Banks family a wine tasting, donated some pork from his pork farm next door, and extended their stay for another three days to allow them to soak in the moment.

"It was like a once in a lifetime moment," Lamont said. "To see my family, and see my son just, in a pick, move to another level, to another high. His life is gonna change, and what a dude that deserves it."

Lamont was not a 49ers fan. He's trying to come around to it, though. When the pick came in, the lifelong Raiders fan said he reached into his pocket for his Raiders mask and had a moment with it, briefly lamenting that his team, which had traded up five spots with the 49ers from 48 to 43, had wasted its chance to draft his son.

“Raiders, it was your pick, but I think I gotta put you back in my pocket,” he said.

Lamont says he’s softening his stance though, and always respected the success of the 49ers. He’s already bought a 49ers hat, and that’s a real step.

At a family birthday when Banks’ kids were younger, his older brother, Ronnie, brought a haul of 49ers gear to his house for a birthday party. Ronnie could stay, but Lamont said he told him, “the gear has to go.” That gear’s no longer off limits.

Homecoming

That return home can be tricky to navigate. Players who get drafted where they grew up have to face a layer of pressure that’s impossible to prepare for. It’s a burden of your newly-earned wealth being very public, and the inevitable ask for favors.

Aaron’s former and now current teammate Mike McGlinchey warned him.

“There’s a little pressure that comes with that and there’s a lot of people that you know that are still close to you and you gotta learn how to be a pro and manage all that,” McGlinchey said on KNBR on May 4. “I know for me, if it was me in Philadelphia, it’d be a whole different story. So it’s definitely something that’s a really cool blessing for him but it’s also something that’s going to present a challenge, and he’s gonna have to learn to be a pro and be a grown man pretty quick.”

Aaron, though, has said he’s not concerned about those potential distractions.

“I haven’t thought twice about it,” he said. “When I can help some of my family, I will, but if I can’t, I’m gonna say no. I don’t think that has been on my mind at all.”

Aaron is one of four kids: his older sister, Dalisia, 28, his older brother, Lamont Jr., 25, himself, 23, and his younger brother, Franklin, 20.

He has myriad people to thank for getting to this point; his parents, Lamont and Teresa, his high school football coach Kenny Kahn, his offensive line partners and offensive line coach at Notre Dame, Harry Hiestand — but in talking to Banks, his father and Kahn, it’s clear much of it comes back to his sister.

Anyone with sisters knows how tough they can be, and Dalisia reigned supreme over her younger three brothers. With both parents often busy, she was in charge. And she could hold her own.

“She was the alpha,” Aaron said. “Huge shout out to her. My parents were often pretty busy. Coming up, she did a great job of stepping in, taking care of us when she had to.”

“[She] ruled in my house until she was maybe 13, 14,” said Lamont. “It took three of them to take her down. She ruled, which was the best thing in the world for them because they were the boys that didn’t actually get into a whole lot of stuff because she was always on their butts. Plus, she’s heavy-handed.”

“She kind of instilled in them boys that they’re not going to be any punks. They were tough on each other, but being tough on each other made them stronger. And they felt that and they always had confidence because of it.”

Aaron was humbled early. His father, a former football player, and mother, a former bodybuilder, made sure their kids, who were extremely competitive with one another, were active. That meant literally 1,000-2,000 jump ropes and/or a couple hundred free throws every night before bed.

Get in trouble? You’d be jumping rope “for a while.”

Part of that routine came from the fact that the Banks children were so large for their age growing up that they weren't allowed to play in football until they got older. That's where basketball and jump rope came in, laying the groundwork for Aaron to be agile and crafty with his footwork.

Lamont described his kids as a goofy bunch. When he had to bring them with him to work on his contracting jobs, he'd leave them with masking paper and tape to come back to now-mummified children, wrapped up and sometimes sliding around the room in rolling chairs.

That dynamic set the foundation for Aaron. It was a competitive, but goofy family that prioritized work ethic.

Lamont said he rarely had to worry about his son. In high school, Aaron was proactively helping other students who found themselves in trouble. He was part of a program at El Cerrito called the Culture Keepers, which sought to provide help to students who were struggling, via mindfulness practices.

That allowed students to feel like they could get help and reach out to their peers without the fear or uncomfortability of talking to a school administrator. As his high school football coach Kahn — who will start as principal at Redwood High School next year in Castro Valley — put it, it was difficult not to accept help from Aaron.

"It's really hard [to say no] when the biggest, most physical athlete on campus is giving you that olive branch and saying, 'Hey, let's take a walk, let's talk about it, tell me what's going on. How are you feeling?'" Kahn said. "He's such a supportive person in so many capacities."

That continued at Notre Dame, where Lamont said his son quietly built a bond with a young, neuroatypical fan, spending time with him on the sidelines, giving him autographs, gloves and other memorabilia.

Kahn's bond with Banks continued while he was at college. His son, Theo, was the first baby Aaron — a bit hesitantly, asking Kahn, "you're trusting me with this?" — ever held. Whenever he got home from school, Kahn said Aaron always checked in with his family.

He said Aaron has a relationship with him and his wife, and that Theo, bless his heart, brags that Aaron is his best friend.

"He'd show up, grab some sandwiches, watch a movie or two," Kahn said. "I remember watching the women's NCAA tournament when Notre Dame went off a couple years back. It was just fun to have him at the house hanging out. He always wants to stay connected to the people who put on for him."

And as a protector, well, Kahn does not recommend poking the "Dancing Bear" — the nickname his college offensive coordinator Chip Long gave him. He took a page out of the Zach Randolph book.

"I wouldn't mess with his quarterback or his backfield," Kahn said. "Because, when I talk about him not being a bully, he'll bully bullies."

Room full of alphas

It was at Notre Dame where Lamont says his son became the man he is. He enters the NFL with a draft class of four other Notre Dame senior offensive linemen in Liam Eichenberg (Round 2, Pick 42 – Miami), Robert Hainsey (Round 3, Pick 95 – Tampa Bay) and Tommy Kraemer (undrafted free agent – signed with Detroit).

That group learned from McGlinchey's class as freshmen, and will be challenged to match what that group has already accomplished in the NFL. Banks came into Notre Dame under a group of seniors that were, as Long called them, "a group of alphas."

There was McGlinchey, Quenton Nelson (arguably the best interior offensive lineman in the NFL), Alex Bars (starting right guard for the Bears), Sam Mustipher (starting center for the Bears) and Hainsey, who was starting as a freshman.

All Aaron had to do was take over for Nelson, who, again, might be the best interior offensive lineman in the NFL. But he'd spent that first year being able to learn from Nelson and Bars, so, when Bars got injured against Stanford in Week 5 and his opportunity came, he wasn't harrowed by the pressure of slotting into a starting spot as a redshirt freshman on an undefeated team.

After a game during their freshman year, Lamont said he met Nelson and asked a favor of the now three-time All-Pro guard.

"I said man, would you please look out for my son?" Lamont said. "He says, 'Man, I'm gonna take him, and I'm going to show him as much as I can. And you can best believe' — and he put his arm around Aaron's shoulder — 'I got him.' And you know what? I knew that kid was telling me the truth. And he never failed him."

It's that part of Banks' experience that he, and everyone around him, could feel shaping him. Those offensive line rooms were especially close-knit, in part due to the culture of Notre Dame and the way Hiestand hand-picked his offensive linemen, but also because they all came in at the same time and grew together.

"Them dudes were down for each other and that's what makes the difference," said Lamont. "To me, that's why my son became the man that he is."

That's not a gimmick. As the 49ers went through the draft process, McGlinchey, who was one of the few 49ers players still around the team facility at that time, was stumping for his Notre Dame teammates.

Kyle Shanahan said McGlinchey begged the 49ers to grab another golden domer, and was understandably ecstatic to see that come to fruition. Asked if he was really campaigning for his teammates to the extent Shanahan said he was, McGlinchey told KNBR: "Absolutely."

"It wasn't just Banks, it was the rest of the Notre Dame haul, too," McGlinchey said. "I was excited about all four of those guys with Liam Eichenberg, Tommy Kramer and Rob Hainsey. The four of those guys, I played with, I knew them, I know what is coached at that school, I know what they look like, I know who they are as workers, I know who they are as teammates. And I think the sky's the limit for all of them and especially for Aaron. And so I made sure that we were going to get one of them."

Not the right fit? 'That criticism is crazy to me'

That's all well and good. Aaron Banks, the local kid, comes home and gets to play with his former Notre Dame teammate on a team that's ready to compete now and for the future. Everything looks bright.

But it's all got to happen on the field, and there has already been some criticism of Banks, or at the least, his fit with the 49ers. That criticism seems only slightly insane given that he hasn't even had a day of training camp under his belt, but hey, if you don't get your takes in early, you can't claim you were right later.

The criticism of Banks is that he isn't a good zone blocking fit, and would fit better in a power or gap system. Again, he's yet to start training camp, let alone play a preseason snap, let alone play in a regular season game.

Those critiques seem tethered more to the fact that the 49ers have had Mike Person and Daniel Brunskill at right guard, who weren't as massive as Banks, and had solid short-area quickness in zone runs. Basically, the criticism goes, Banks, at 6'6" and a listed 325 pounds, is very large, and very large guys tend to not move as well as smaller guys.

Some of that, too, is based on scheme. Notre Dame started to run more zone blocking runs under under offensive coordinator Tommy Rees in 2020 than under Long. Long said he thinks some of the criticism may stem simply from the fact that Banks was asked to gap block often in his offense.

But you don't get the nickname "Dancing Bear" for being heavy on you feet. Long gave him the nickname in practice one day as a compliment to his agility for his size and flexibility. At that time, Banks was playing tackle, too, and proficiently.

It is patently impossible to watch Banks' tape and come to the conclusion that he doesn't move well, or is incapable of fitting into a zone system.

If you have questions about Banks' athleticism, let's amend that. He was a back-to-back North Coast Section champion at El Cerrito in basketball, and helped El Cerrito to its first-ever NCS football championship in 2013, too. You see him in the clips below working in the post, showing off baby hooks with either hand, up-and-unders, spinning out of the low block, facilitating off the dribble, and blocking a couple of shots.

When you see his high school football tape, you feel simultaneously awed and bad for the kids he was facing. He played both offensive and defensive tackle, and it's on the defensive side where you really see that explosiveness and short area quickness.

But there are a couple plays on this reel at offensive tackle that are pure bulldozer material. In the first clip, he sends a kid to his back with ease, and that kid stays there for... a while.

The second play is etched in Lamont Banks' mind. As he remembered it, his son drove another player for about 25 yards, but it was a fuzzier memory for Aaron.

When draft day rolled around and media were looking for tape of Aaron in high school, Kahn obliged. And there it was, just as Lamont remembered it; Aaron Banks literally driving another player straight back from his own 38-yard-line to the other team's 42. Only a mere 20 yards (0:48 mark in the video below).

Still, there's that criticism out there, and even if Banks is perfect from the moment he sets foot on the field, there will be new critics with new criticism. It's the name of the game when you're playing professional sports.

McGlinchey was criticized as harshly as anyone last season, and acknowledged his role in that, in what was an immensely difficult season for the 49ers behind the scenes.

But criticizing a player who has yet to take the field? McGlinchey said he can't understand that especially for a guy he described as a "nasty player," who has obvious, above average athleticism.

"Just because someone's size is what it is, doesn't mean he isn't a scheme fit," McGlinchey said. "Kyle Shanahan is as good — and so is John — at identifying talent and things that fit within our ballclub. If people truly believe that about Aaron Banks, they're obviously not watching film, they're obviously not watching football and they obviously don't really know what they're looking for because no matter how big he is, no matter how he looks, Aaron can move. Aaron is an exceptional athlete. You watch him in space, you watch him coming off the ball, he's a perfect fit for what we do and the more he's coached here and the better that he gets to unleash his athletic ability and fine tune that technique, he's going to be a force for us.

"To critique a guy and question an offensive coach who has proven time and time again that he's always right, is pretty astounding to me. I don't know how people could do that... That criticism is crazy to me."

One area that Aaron excelled at Notre Dame was as a blocker in the screen game. Long told KNBR that he would actively look for Banks in practices and games and try to run screens to his side.

“He’s one of the best screen offensive linemen I’ve ever seen, being able to get out in space and stay on defenders and he’s just so massive and so talented, with his athleticism,” Long said. “Every time I’d try to run a screen I’d always go, ‘Where’s Banks? Run it to him,’ because he’d always be able to get it going.”

To some extent, Aaron said he understands the criticism. People who haven’t seen him play will see his size and assume, as a bigger player, that he won’t move as well.

He shot back at that criticism, but made clear he’s not concerned with those opinions.

“Obviously coach Shanahan had a vision and saw something he liked and I hate to say it like this, but sometimes people who write these articles haven’t played the game, and aren’t in and out of the facility every day to see what these coaches see,” Banks said. “I don’t give a damn what these people say, if they’re talking bad or talking good. If it’s not going to make me better, or help me be a better player, or do whatever I need to do on the field, then it doesn’t matter.”

We’re still about three months away from the start of the NFL season and Banks’ debut, but Kahn said his growth as a person and player, and homecoming is already meaningful to other kids growing up in the Bay.

“It’s awesome to see in the Bay Area so many Black and brown men continuing to grow,” Kahn said. “Because I think that’s a hard narrative sometimes that we have to push and so to see Aaron on the platform that he is now, I think, is a message to so many young Black and brown kids that hard work, potential, taking in advice, coaching and mentorship, actualizing potential, anyone can do it... it’s different for every person, but he’s such a beacon of light.”

Nick Bosa

49ers star Nick Bosa has a burst fueled by sweat, sacrifice and a personal chef

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
September 7, 2022

Once upon a time, Nick Bosa ate like a college guy.

He subsisted on Chipotle during the day. When the bars closed in the wee hours, he and his crew hit McDonald's. His go-to order: a McGriddle, 550 calories of sausage, egg, American cheese and gooey goodness.

When he went home to South Florida, Sunday dinners consisted of penne, gravy, short ribs and meatballs. Absolutely scrumptious, but ...

"If there was one place where there was a weakness, it was my diet," the 49ers star said.

Not anymore.

Chipotle is out and ceviche is in. Short ribs have been replaced by tuna poke. And early morning McGriddles have been washed away by freshly squeezed fruit juices — lots and lots of fruit juices.

"You should see my kitchen on juice(-making) days," Bosa said. "It's like the produce section of a grocery store."

The results are written all over his face. His cheeks are leaner than when he entered the league in 2019. And his abs? You could do a few baskets of laundry on his washboard, which was on full display during summer practices. Bosa said he's dropped to around 9 percent body fat, one of the lowest on the team.

Most significant, he's shaved fractions of seconds from the time it takes him to fire out of a three-point stance and crash into the pocket.

"I make my money in 10-yard bursts, for sure," the 49ers defensive end said.

Those 10-yard bursts are interesting. Before he was drafted, Bosa's 10-yard split was 1.55 seconds, a strong time for a 266-pounder like him. This offseason, his splits were routinely below 1.5 seconds, which is squarely in the oh crap range if you're an NFL quarterback.

Just how absurd are those times for someone of Bosa's size? According to The Athletic's Dane Brugler, only eight cornerbacks had sub-1.5-second splits prior to the most recent draft and just one pass rusher, 249-pound Amare Barno, was under that mark with a 1.49-second split.

And Bosa's have been faster than that.

"My starts — if I'm not under a 1.50 on my 10-yard starts, then my nervous system probably isn't on it that day," Bosa said. "I'm in the 1.4 range every time."

Tackle Mike McGlinchey can give a first-person account of Bosa's annual progress. He recalled his initial pass-protection snap of the summer when No. 97 zipped by like a blur.

"It was like, 'Oh, he got even faster,'" McGlinchey said. "I don't know what's in the water down in South Florida with him and his brother. But the two of them, they're so meticulous, they're so professional. They understand training and nutrition and all that kind of stuff better than just about anybody I've ever been around."

When players skip OTAs and other non-mandatory workouts, NFL teams often react like they've gone AWOL. When Bosa's not around in the spring, the 49ers merely shrug and know what he's doing off-site is extremely valuable.

"You see it in his work, in how he looks, in how he plays," McGlinchey said. "He maximizes everything about himself. And it's the reason he gets better every single year he goes home."

The two major changes in Bosa's training methods have been born of big injuries. The first occurred in 2018 after a core muscle tear ended his final season at Ohio State. He went to live in Southern California with his older brother, Chargers pass rusher Joey Bosa, who got Nick working with his personal trainer, Todd Rice.

Two years earlier, Rice had been part of the Chargers strength and conditioning staff and had given a presentation to the team's rookies on the importance of flexibility. Rice had studied Olympic weightlifters in Sweden, Poland and Bulgaria and had marveled at their scientific approach to training.

"It was, what makes Olympic lifters stay healthy even though they're lifting, minimally, 2 1/2 times their body weight in a clean and jerk?" Rice said in a phone interview. "And yet they don't have the injuries that a lot of college and NFL athletes have."

The difference was their pliability, which was what Rice explained to the Chargers rookies following a hot practice in Southern California. He wasn't sure if any had paid attention until Joey approached him afterward and said he'd been having pain in his knees, back and hamstrings. He thought Rice's half-hour stretching routine might help.

"And Joey came in and did it later that day," Rice recalled. "And it was not easy. We evaluated his flexibility, which was not good. And definitely not where it needed to be."

Rice said most football players would rather concentrate on the bodybuilding aspect of training, the one in which you pump yourself up and then preen in front of the mirror. Flexibility? It's boring. It takes time and concentration. Many players come in for an initial session and never come back.

Joey, however, didn't just stick with the routine. When the season ended, he hired Rice to be his year-round private trainer. After all, his knee and back pain had gone away and suddenly the stiff-legged edge rusher was bending like a ballerina. Joey can lie on his back and bring his legs as far back as his head. Little brother Nick has quadriceps like oak stumps, but he can reach 10 inches past his toes with his legs locked in a sitting position.

Today, Nick is just as big a convert as his brother. He likes to torment Rice by sending video clips of college weight room scenes where a player squeezes out a personal best in, say, the squat and then is mobbed by frenzied teammates. The joke, of course, is that the lifts aren't technically correct, that the flexibility needed to do them safely and productively is missing. The college guys are lifting like meatheads when they should be doing it like eggheads.

"I have a library of all the videos Nick and Joey have sent me knowing that it makes my stomach turn," Rice said with a laugh. "Nicky sends 'em to me all the time. Then again, it kind of makes me smile because it tells me they know what's not right."

It's easy to see why the Bosas speak about Rice's routine with near-religious zeal. The brothers are the type of people who want to know the science behind what they're doing, and Rice gives them plenty of material. Everything they do in South Florida from February to July is timed or measured, even the warmups. That's allowed Nick to keep track of his progress. He's gotten quicker every offseason — even last year when he was recovering from an ACL tear. The most recent offseason has been the best yet, which makes you wonder how high his sack total might soar in 2022.

"I've upped my maxes in squats and benches this past year pretty substantially," he said. "My sprinting numbers are better than they've ever been. My agility drill numbers are better than they've ever been."

The 2022 offseason also included a twist to the routine in the form of a 4,000-square-foot warehouse that Joey bought and converted into a private gym. How private? There are two members: him and Nick.

Training got tricky in recent years because of COVID-19. The new gym essentially makes their sessions pandemic-proof and was custom built with a full kitchen, hot and cold therapy sections and a basketball court-like suspended floor that's easier on the joints.

Nick said the one-time warehouse is in a nondescript commercial area and there's a mechanics shop next door.

"They're definitely confused, I think, when they see us pull up in our Teslas and walk out," he said. "And they're all working on cars. There's no signs or anything. We just keep it low-key."

The final piece of Bosa's training regimen also followed an injury, a 2020 ACL reconstruction that included a torn MCL and torn lateral meniscus.

During his rehabilitation, he reasoned that he already had a workout routine that was rigid and science-based and that his diet ought to match. So he hired a chef, Ana Machado, who's been executive chef at restaurants and taught culinary arts at local universities and who immediately began drawing up a menu for a defensive end who devours quarterbacks.

Bosa grew up in an Italian American household, loved pasta — the richer, the better — and equated carbohydrates with energy. Suddenly those were out, largely replaced by fish that Machado finds at a market near his Fort Lauderdale house.

"It's a ton of raw fish," he said. "Raw salmon and tuna. She does a ceviche with grouper and sea bass, which is unreal. And then a chef's salad. She makes a ton of variety. It never really gets boring. It's tasty. It's not a chore."

Bosa said he starts the day with a green juice. Machado will come in one day with bags full of fruits and vegetables, which she chops, slices, squeezes and turns into six big containers that go into his refrigerator. He'll wake up, drink one of those and go for a run.

For breakfast, it's egg-white frittatas with ground bison — "Bison is leaner," he says — with turkey bacon, chorizo and a pile of spinach, peppers and onions.

Then it's another meal every three hours or so, perhaps a ceviche at 1 p.m. followed by a salmon crudo at 4 p.m. and tuna poke for the last big meal of the day.

"I think there was kind of an adaptation period for my body," he said. "But now my body operates better and I don't really need as much. I'm never feeling overly full. And I feel plenty of energy during my workouts."

The 49ers defensive end wants everyone to know he's not completely monastic.

He'll have a glass of wine on Saturday nights during the offseason. Everyone celebrated Joey's 27th birthday in July at a fancy restaurant and Nick admits he indulged in a dessert. His cheat meal no longer is a McGriddle, but it's not exactly health food, either.

"It's a steak, like a fatty steak," he said. "On the weekends I'll have a ribeye. Because when I do fatty things, it doesn't affect me nearly as bad as eating a pizza."

But sodas and sugars are either out or are extreme rarities. His beloved pastas are, too. And now he feels quicker, stronger — better — than he's ever felt.

"I've had a few injuries," he says, letting that statement sink in. "I know that football is what I want to do for a long time. So I felt like I have to maximize everything."

49ers' Nick Bosa, after emerging from 'dark places,' aiming for Week 1 return

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
July 29, 2021

Nick Bosa noted Thursday he has felt “on the top of the world” and his mind also has traveled to “some dark places” in his brief NFL career.

The question that’s crucial to the 49ers’ season: How is the Pro Bowl defensive end currently feeling?

“Right now,” Bosa said, “I’m feeling pretty close.”

Bosa, speaking publicly for the first time since he suffered a torn ACL in his left knee in September that included cartilage damage — a “big injury,” he acknowledged — struck mostly positive notes as he discussed his current rehab and his ability to play in the season opener Sept. 12 at Detroit.

“Everything right now is trending toward that,” Bosa said. “So I’m hoping to ramp it up as I go and be ready to give it all I’ve got Week 1.”

However, Bosa, 23, also provided details that help explain why the 49ers are bringing him along slowly this summer. Bosa will participate only in individual drills for at least the first week of training camp. After suffering his injury more than 10 months ago, Bosa said he was still experiencing knee soreness after workouts before camp, but he has emerged from his first two practices feeling better than expected. Bosa has appeared explosive during drills and the only noticeable sign of his injury is a black sleeve that has covered his left knee.

“Since I’ve been out here, it’s responded amazing,” Bosa said. “We’re going to take it slow. But I’m very encouraged.”

The anticipated quarterback competition between Jimmy Garoppolo and rookie Trey Lance is the biggest story of the season. But Bosa’s ability to return from his injury ranks second. In 2019, the rookie No. 2 pick resembled a generational talent as he was named the NFL’s Defensive Rookie of the Year and became the 49ers’ first rookie since Patrick Willis to be voted to a Pro Bowl. Bosa was a two-time NFL Defensive Player of the Week and his four postseason sacks rank second among rookies in NFL history.

His dominant start, however, was followed by his devastating injury in the first quarter of a Week 2 win against the Jets on Sept. 20.

“You come off 2019 and you’re on top of the world and then start off well in your next season and it’s all taken away really quick,” Bosa said. “And it was tough. Mentally, it’s really rough. When your body feels terrible, your mind kind of goes to that place.”

But “as my body started to feel better, my mind followed. And then once you’re walking around, working out — I mean, all I really know how to do is work hard. So once you get (through) the initial pain of it, then there’s really no other option than to come back better.”

Instead of living in relative isolation in Santa Clara during the middle of the pandemic, Bosa spent the rest of the 2020 season in Southern California with his older brother and best friend, Joey, the Chargers’ Pro Bowl pass rusher. Nick Bosa also cited the support he received from his mom, Cheryl, as he dealt with the biggest physical setback of his football career. Bosa tore his ACL as a senior in high school and had surgery for a core-muscle injury in his final year at Ohio State.

“My mind did go to some dark places — especially when football’s a really big part of your life,” Bosa said. “And now it just makes you appreciate your family more. I have a girlfriend now. So she definitely occupies my mind a lot, which kind of helped me through this year.”

The next step for Bosa will come when he joins team drills and lines up against Pro Bowl left tackle Trent Williams. Their head-to-head tussles last year were the highlight of training camp.

“You won’t really know how it responds until you take a real rep and have a big offensive lineman pushing on you and all of that stuff,” Bosa said. “We’re trying to simulate it as much as possible right now. My body’s responding really well, so once I get out there and go against Trent a few times, I think it’ll be a pretty quick confidence boost.”

How Nick Bosa went from 'one of the darkest moments' of his life to a top NFL prospect

By Chris Biderman
Sacramento Bee
March 2, 2019

Nick Bosa's junior season with Ohio State was off to a promising start.

The talented defensive end logged four sacks in his first three games of 2018 as he hoped to solidify himself as the best defensive player in the country. Doing that, of course, would also help cement his future in the NFL, when he was widely expected to be the first prospect drafted in 2019 even before the season began.

But then on the third play of the second half against TCU in September, Bosa felt a sharp pain in his abdomen and hit the deck, requiring attention from the medical staff. It didn't take long for him to realize his college career might be over sooner than expected.

"I knew my season was in jeopardy and I had a doctor confirm that. It was tough, but it had to be done," Bosa told reporters at the NFL scouting combine Saturday in Indianapolis.

He required months of rehab in order to rejoin his teammates and complete a bid for the College Football Playoff. But Bosa roughly a month later elected to sit the remainder of the season out in order to focus on preparing for the NFL draft when his professional future, and millions of dollars, would be on the line.

"When it happened, when I got home from that TCU game I was lying in bed, I could barely get it. It was one of the darkest moments of my life so far," Bosa said. "For me to talk to my family and let them bring me up and let me know that my life is still good and I still have amazing blessings and a bright future, that's what helped me get through it."

The story of the combine from the 49ers' perspective has been the rise of Oklahoma quarterback Kyler Murray, whose height was questioned heading into the week despite having supreme athleticism that help him win the Heisman Trophy last season.

Murray was measured at 5-foot-10 1/8, 207 pounds and 9 1/2-inch hands. Those marks are widely considered strong enough to clear the thresholds for quarterbacks, and the buzz has been increasing that Murray will be the first player taken in the draft April 25 either by the Arizona Cardinals or a team they trade the top pick to.

Of course, that scenario means the best defensive player could fall to the second pick owned by San Francisco. And it's widely believed that Bosa would be the selection to help solve the team's longstanding issues at defensive end.

Bosa – who measured at nearly 6-foot-4, 266 pounds and had 29 reps on the bench press – is headlining a talented group of defensive-line prospects which could allow the 49ers to trade down to acquire a different pass rusher while accumulating more draft picks.

"I would tell you that it's a great year to be looking for D-linemen in general," general manager John Lynch said this week. "This is as strong of a class as the last eight years at the defensive line."

Bosa is planning to be a full participant in combine workouts Sunday despite only recently getting back to top capacity. He told reporters he had scheduled meetings with the teams holding the top eight picks of the first round, including Arizona.

"I've been training at full speed for a couple months, but actually feeling like myself, not feeling soreness after, probably a few weeks," he said. "The toughest part is the beginning. It's such a unique injury in that it's literally the muscle used to breathe, to cough, to go to the bathroom. It's your core muscle, it's something different than I've dealt with before. It's really gradual, small steps. Once you get through it, I'm feeling better than I've ever felt right now."

Bosa logged 17 1/2 sacks and 29 tackles for loss over three seasons at Ohio State. He's a stout, powerful prospect and a mirror image of his brother, Joey, who has 28.5 sacks in 33 games since being taken with the No. 3 pick by the Chargers in 2016.

Nick Bosa was widely expected to be a top NFL prospect dating to his high school days. But the groin injury, on top of a partially torn ACL that ended his high school career early, might cause concerns about his durability.

Injuries have been such a pressing issue for 49ers coach Kyle Shanahan and Lynch over the past two seasons that the club fired its head athletic trainer Jeff Ferguson and strength coach Ray Wright. The 49ers recently hired Ben Peterson run the club's medical and training staffs under one title in order to create more continuity than the previous staffers. Peterson's evaluation of Bosa could wind up deciding if Bosa wears a 49ers helmet next fall.

Injuries aside, Shanahan said this week he's had trouble in the past identifying defensive linemen in the past (which includes 2017 first-round pick Solomon Thomas, who hasn't become a difference-making player with San Francisco during his two seasons).

"I've asked some of the best D-line coaches that I could ever imagine, and they say he's a slam dunk, and he doesn't make it," Shanahan said. "And then it's got another direction, too. Every story can contradict anything you say is the right answer ... That's why we over talk it, over think it, over do everything because you have to because there are so many variables."

Other pass rushers – such as Josh Allen (Kentucky), Brian Burns (Florida State), Montez Sweat (Mississippi State) and Clelin Ferrell (Clemson) – could fill San Francisco's needs.

Allen is widely considered a top-five prospect and is expected to test extremely well Sunday. He measured 6-foot-4 7/8 and 262 pounds with 33 1/2-inch arms, half an inch longer than Bosa's. Allen logged 17 1/2 sacks last season for the Wildcats despite spending more time in coverage as a linebacker.

Still, most evaluators believe there's a sizable talent gap between Bosa and Allen – and perhaps Bosa will tap into his disappointment from last fall to motivate him to make his mark early on in the pros.

"(My season) just got torn away from me," he said. "It's something that I'll always think back to."

OL Jake Brendel

After six-year wait, 49ers center Jake Brendel finally gets the call to start

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
September 4, 2022

San Francisco 49ers center Jake Brendel was certain he would be selected during the final two days of the 2016 NFL draft.

Several teams told his agent, Ryan Downey, they had interest in taking his client in the middle rounds. In fact, the Colts mentioned using a third-round pick on Brendel, who was a four-year starter and three-time co-captain at UCLA.

However, Indianapolis instead used its first-round pick on Alabama center Ryan Kelly. And then six other centers were drafted in the final two days, while Brendel kept waiting for a call that never came.

“Draft weekend,” Brendel said, “was a little bit of a surprise for me.”

It was also a little bit of foreshadowing. Brendel has spent most of the six years since that draft weekend waiting for an opportunity that would not materialize. Until now.

In a career that has included five teams, three starts and 250 offensive snaps, Brendel, who will turn 30 on Saturday, will serve as the 49ers’ starting center when they open the season Sunday in Chicago. The 49ers’ first play will mark Brendel’s seventh offensive snap since Dec. 2, 2018, when he made the last of three fill-in starts with the Dolphins.

Brendel has learned patience, which wasn’t required in college: He owns UCLA’s record with 52 career starts.

“I’ve appreciated every single year in this league as just a steppingstone towards my goal, which is to sign a multi-year contract,” Brendel said. “Going in here as an undrafted guy, you kind of do have to fight for everything you get, which is fine. I’ve been doing it forever. So it’s really, just make the best of the opportunity that you have.”

Brendel’s opportunity finally arrived when Pro Bowl center Alex Mack retired in the offseason and the 49ers ultimately decided the best candidate to replace him was in-house.

Their bet on Brendel isn’t unique. He will likely be flanked by rookie right guard Spencer Burford and left guard Aaron Banks (zero starts). The unproven threesome makes the interior line the 49ers’ biggest question mark, just ahead of Trey Lance, the 22-year-old quarterback they are charged with protecting.

Offensive line coach Chris Foerster expects Brendel to reward the faith placed in him. And that’s not surprising: Foerster has advocated for Brendel since they connected with the Dolphins in 2016, their first of two seasons together.

Foerster was quickly struck by Brendel’s smarts. Brendel had a 4.0 GPA at Plano East (Texas) High School and was an economics major who graduated with a 3.49 GPA at UCLA. And his facility with numbers translated to Xs-and-Os as he easily picked up Miami’s system.

Brendel wasn’t a starting option with the Dolphins, who had Pro Bowl center Mike Pouncey. But Foerster was intrigued by Brendel’s potential. Foerster is the reason the 49ers signed Brendel in 2020, a year in which he opted out due to the pandemic, and why Brendel returned to the team as Mack’s backup last season.

Brendel, 6-foot-4 and 299 pounds, doesn't overwhelm defensive linemen with size or power, which helps explain his journeyman resume. But his acumen and athleticism are must-have qualities in head coach Kyle Shanahan's zone-based schemes, which require linemen with strong movement skills.

Foerster noted Brendel's testing numbers from the 2016 combine are comparable to those of Chiefs center Creed Humphrey, a second-round pick last year who had an impressive rookie season.

"The measurables with Jake aren't that different," Foerster said. "... And I'm not putting him in that category today. But I'm just saying that you can see the measurables and say, 'Wow, this guy has these traits.'"

Added Foerster: "Everything translates to him being able to do it. But you've got to do it ... The skill set and the person (he is) say this guy should be able to play."

Brendel is confident he's ready to play, partly because of the players he learned from throughout his career. Before he spent a season with Mack and two seasons with Pouncey, he began his career in 2016 with the Cowboys, who had Pro Bowl center Travis Frederick.

"So year after year after year after year I'm kind of looking at the difference between the starter that I'm backing up and me," Brendel said. "How big of a difference is that?"

The 49ers hope the drop-off from Mack is negligible or nonexistent. That's a high bar for Brendel, but the 49ers are encouraged after he had a strong training camp. And that came after his 2021 performance in the shadows: Brendel, the scout-team center, battled in practice against players from one of the NFL's best defensive lines.

In late April, after the final round of the NFL draft, general manager John Lynch offered the first public sign that the undrafted, unproven Brendel was a legitimate starting candidate.

He's "not a household name," Lynch said. "But we have a lot of confidence in his ability."

For his part, Brendel is ready to answer the call, six years after waiting for a call that never came.

"It means a lot for the front office, for coach Shanahan and Foerster to have the confidence in me to give me that shot and not look outside the building for a replacement for Alex," Brendel said. "It's a great opportunity to do what I was doing all last season. And now do it Sundays this season."

How Brendel defied odds to earn expected starting center job

By Matt Maiocco
NBC Sports Bay Area
August 27, 2022

The preseason had unceremoniously come to a conclusion on Thursday night in Houston.

Jake Brendel stood in front of his locker, fully clothed, roller bag at his side, and ready to get on the bus to the airport. He was stopped for what might have been his first media interview since his arrival with the 49ers in February 2020.

He did not hesitate when asked if he is expecting to line up Sept. 11 as the 49ers' starting center for the regular-season opener against the Chicago Bears.

"Yes, I am. For sure," Brendel answered. "We'll see how that goes and make the best of it."

Brendel turns 30 years old on Sept. 10. The next day, he could very well establish himself as a full-time starter for the first time in his NFL career.

He has been given an opportunity this summer after the retirement of veteran center Alex Mack. And, thus far, Brendel has made the best of it.

It has been quite a journey for Brendel. He entered the NFL as an undrafted rookie with the Dallas Cowboys in 2016. He appeared in 37 games, mostly on special teams, over the past six years with the Miami Dolphins and 49ers. He also had opportunities with the Denver Broncos and Baltimore Ravens but failed to catch on.

"Anyone in my inner circle probably three years ago never would've thought I'd be here," Brendel said. "So it's honestly a blessing. I take every single day as that and try to make the best of it."

In early August 2020, Brendel decided to opt out of the season due to concerns — and uncertainty — related to COVID-19. For a player struggling to find some semblance of stability in the NFL, it easily could have ended his career.

"After the COVID opt-out, I think a lot of people thought I'd be done," Brendel said. "But I didn't take a day off. I stayed in the weight room and stayed out on the field, and I made sure I was in the best shape of my life coming off that year.

"Really, I think a lot of people wrote me off at that point, but I didn't allow it to happen."

Brendel said his sister was one of the first individuals in the United States to get COVID-19. Back when tests were not precise, she tested positive for three months, he said. When teams reported to training camp in 2020, the NFL presented players with the option of sitting out the season.

Brendel had to make a quick decision. Then, he said he did not look back.

He returned to the 49ers last season, and won the backup job.

Now, he appears to be in line for the first NFL starting role of his career.

Brendel has been reunited with offensive line coach Chris Foerster. They were together with the Dolphins in 2016. Foerster remembers being immediately impressed with Brendel after seeing him on the field.

"This guy has some quickness and balance and strength, and he started a ton games at UCLA," Foerster said. "Then, I met the kid, and really liked him. He's very serious-minded, hard-working, played with good strength. He's a player."

He lacked in height (6-foot-3, weight (286 pounds) coming out of college, which were the reasons he went undrafted after starting a school-record 52 games.

But he makes up for it with his athleticism and smarts. He earned the nickname “Coach Jake” at UCLA, and he rated highly among all offensive linemen at the NFL Scouting Combine in the 40-yard dash (5.01 seconds), 20-yard shuttle (4.27) and three-cone drill (7.31).

Brendel is a good fit for the 49ers’ system, which counts on its offensive linemen to explode out of their stances and create running lanes with their outside zone concepts.

The 49ers open the season with uncertainty at their interior offensive line positions in front of first-year starting quarterback Trey Lance.

Second-year left guard Aaron Banks and rookie right guard Spencer Burford are going through the ups and downs of learning on the job.

Brendel has three starts in his career.

Daniel Brunskill started every game for the 49ers over the past two seasons. He has the versatility to play any of those three positions. Brunskill has been out since Aug. 12 with a hamstring injury.

Right now, Brendel appears to be the most steady option among that group.

“This offense really needs three athletic offensive linemen,” Brendel said. “A lot of people would think I’m a little bit undersized for center. Really, that’s my strong suit. I can get to the second level pretty quickly and use my athleticism to my advantage. So that’s really why I fit this offense.”

Ji' Ayir Brown

Why do the 49ers think Ji' Ayir Brown could be the future? Check out his past

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
May 20, 2023

Shortly after he was hired as the head football coach at Trenton (N.J.) Central High School in 2017, Greg Hyslop was given a tour of the facilities.

It was June. The end of the school year. Classes were done for the day and Hyslop wasn't expecting to meet his new players as the school's athletic director showed him around the quiet, empty campus.

But the football field wasn't deserted. It was dotted by about 30 teenagers being led in workouts by a junior with a megawatt smile who immediately approached Hyslop, introduced himself and firmly grasped his hand.

Hyslop had yet to see Ji' Ayir Brown play a snap. But he was convinced within seconds that the young man who had been serving as his new team's unofficial interim coach was special.

"You could tell right away that he was the man among boys," Hyslop said. "He spoke and those guys followed."

Six years later, Brown, the San Francisco 49ers' rookie safety, still doesn't require much time to make an arresting initial impression.

Last month, the 49ers made their only in-draft trade in the past two years — moving up 15 spots in the third round to get Brown — because they were bullish on the Penn State safety as a player and blown away by him as a person.

Brown moved up the 49ers' board after he came to Santa Clara for a pre-draft visit and wowed coaches and executives with his magnetic personality, passion and positivity. Brown's position coach at Penn State, Anthony Poindexter, heard from a few members of the franchise who had the same question after the Nittany Lions former team captain returned to New Jersey.

"They couldn't believe it," Poindexter said. "It was like, 'Is this kid really like this?'"

General manager John Lynch said that after Brown's visit "everyone in the building wanted that guy." And perhaps no one was more smitten than defensive coordinator Steve Wilks.

Moments after Brown was selected with the 49ers' first pick, No. 87 overall, the team website captured his you've-been-drafted phone call that included Wilks discussing the "instant connection" he felt with his new pupil.

"We saw everything we needed to see on tape," Wilks told Brown. "But just having the opportunity to be able to talk to you and meet you in person, you sold me, bro. You sold me."

Brown was available 24 picks into the third round because he has a solid bio that doesn't scream NFL stardom. He was a third-team All-Big 10 pick in each of his two seasons as a Penn State starter and ran a below-average 40-yard dash (4.65 seconds) for a player at his position.

But earlier this month, Wilks said Brown "can be the future for us," which seems a bit hyperbolic for the just-arrived rookie who was the 44th defensive player drafted.

Lackawanna (Pa.) College head coach Mark Duda gets it. When Brown was a just-arrived freshman in 2018, Duda, 62, a defensive lineman who played five seasons with the St. Louis Cardinals, recognized elite NFL intangibles in the lightly recruited defensive back.

Brown attacked Tuesday practices like Saturday games. And his perma-grin didn't fade as he logged endless hours lifting weights and devouring film.

Duda knows football, which can exact a severe physical and mental toll, isn't for everyone. Plenty of his NFL teammates dispassionately endured it because it could provide fat contracts and fame. But Brown arrived at Lackawanna and acted as if all aspects of the sport were part of an all-expenses-paid vacation.

"I've been here for 31 years and every once in a while you'll come across a player who is super positive all the time," Duda said. "Not fake positive. But is a positive human being. He wakes up in the morning and just loves being part of a football program. That kid loves football. That sounds kind of cliché, but it's not. Because there are guys in that league who don't love football. That is not given. So if you paid him money to play, or you didn't pay him money to play, he'd play.

"Let's put it this way: If we had 60 of him attitude-wise, we'd have nothing to do. We could take up golf. Because we'd have no problems in the dorm. We'd have no preparation problems. We'd have no motivation-for-practice problems. These kinds of kids just don't come around that often."

Duda recalls Brown making multiple one-handed interceptions in his two seasons at Lackawanna. But the coach's favorite memory is an all-out effort play that demonstrated Brown's desire: In 2018, in a game against ASA Brooklyn, he improbably prevented a long touchdown run with a length-of-the-field sprint that turned out to be a game-saver.

The memory Lackawanna defensive coordinator Bill Reiss chooses when asked for a moment that captures Brown? He once approached Reiss during a blowout win over the New Jersey Warriors, a team composed of post-graduate players, looking despondent due to the lack of competition.

"He asked me, 'Man, can we just go home and practice?'" Reiss said. "He was upset. 'I can get great work in practice, but it's not happening here.'"

Duda invokes two Hall-of-Fame players when detailing Brown's level of preparation and depth of passion: His former teammate, Cardinals offensive lineman Dan Dierdorf, and a contemporary, 49ers safety Ronnie Lott.

"There are no sure-fire guys in the league," Duda said. "So he may come in and — knock on wood, God bless him — maybe there's an injury or whatever. But, in general, this kid is NFL ready. Not only on the field. But off it. And that's the key to all this."

At Penn State, Brown had 10 interceptions in his final two seasons and was at his best in the biggest games. Last season, he was named the Defensive MVP of the Rose Bowl, a year after he had two interceptions in the Outback Bowl.

But Poindexter raved about how he still shined when the bright lights flipped off.

"He wanted to go as hard as he could in practice and he wouldn't stop," Poindexter said. "On game days, he'd be playing in front of 107,000 people, but he was acting like he was playing on his Pop Warner team. He has a very kid-like love for the game."

Brown, who began his college career at Lackawanna due to poor grades, pointed to his difficult childhood when asked about the origins of that love.

Brown and his three siblings were raised by a single mother, Joy Ingram, in the Donnelly Homes projects in the north section of Trenton, a particularly dangerous area of the gritty city.

"It wasn't the best life," Brown said. "But it was good enough."

And his mother's devotion and football allowed him to endure. Brown had 10 cousins in the area and many began playing in Trenton's Pop Warner league around ages 7 or 8. Family members filled the stands during their games and those memories provide a warm glow. Brown acknowledged that football is dangerous, but he always has associated it with safety and love.

"We were all playing together on the field as a family," Brown said. "That sparked my love for football. Just being out there with family, surrounded by family, trying to be the best person you can be, just to make the family smile. I do have a different love for football. But I think I have more love for the people I play with."

Hyslop quickly sensed special qualities in Brown six years ago. But after they spent his senior season together, he had a better appreciation for what made him unique.

Before Brown inspired an NFL team to trade up for him, Hyslop says the man among boys inspired his teammates to rise above their circumstances, providing leadership marked by love.

"Trenton is not the easiest place to be," Hyslop said. "There's a lot going on besides getting to school and getting to practice and all that. And I'll say this, for all those other guys on our team, he gave them that structure. He wasn't their father. Not a father figure. But that was another male for them to look up to that was chasing something good."

Tyrion Davis-Price

In Tyrion Davis-Price, 49ers found a RB hungry for carries: 'You can feed him'

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
June 3, 2022

The video was recorded nearly a decade ago. At the six-minute mark you see 12-year-old Tyrion Davis-Price stepping off the school bus into ... well, there's a look in his vibrant, hazel eyes that says he's not sure what he's stepping into. All of the boys seem apprehensive.

And for good reason. An hour earlier, they said goodbye to their moms in Baton Rouge, La., handed over their cell phones and took a ride east to the tiny town of Amite City, La. For the next three days, they were put through the paces by their coach, Aaron Sutton, a former Marine who brought a distinct boot-camp flavor to the outing.

"We've got a long day ahead of us, fellas," he barks as the boys struggle to hold down-dog poses, the first of a series of sweaty drills that includes burpees, sand workouts, pushing ancient, creaky blocking sleds and running up the side of levees.

By the end of the three-day camp, one of the boys falls asleep while eating dinner. The excursion was stern, grueling, relentless and, as it turned out, good preparation for the type of camps Davis-Price and several others would experience through college.

"When he got to LSU, he was laughing at the type of stuff they did there," Sutton said of the 49ers' third-round draft pick. "It was, 'Man, I've been doing this since I was a little bitty kid.'"

The experience provides a peek at the seriousness of youth football in Baton Rouge. Parents don't chit-chat from lawn chairs scattered along the sideline. No, not there. Davis-Price's youth team, the South Baton Rouge Jaguars, filled their stadium and made it shake.

The squad had four different uniforms and three different helmets. Each year, they set aside their most special combination for their rivalry game against the South Baton Rouge Rams — yes, Davis-Price has been battling the Rams since he was in second grade — a matchup that would begin with hours of tailgating and end with a heartstopper that usually was decided by a touchdown or less.

"Have you ever been to a 7-year-old's football game and you see well over a thousand people in attendance?" Sutton asked. "This is what you would see on any given Saturday."

The crowd knew there was talent on the field.

One of Davis-Price's Jaguars teammates, linebacker Damone Clark, was drafted by the Cowboys in the fifth round two months ago. A South Baton Rouge Rams rival, linebacker Christian Harris, was taken 75th by the Texans. Another who played in their youth league, Derek Stingley Jr., went No. 3 to the Texans. Another, linebacker Chris Allen, was signed by the Broncos after the draft.

Then there was Davis-Price, who was running with a ball in his hands almost as soon as he could stand.

"His favorite words were ball and juice," his father, Tyquincy, said in a phone interview.

His mother, Stacie, said her sister-in-law started calling the boy "Tiger" when he was 18 months.

"He was just so much bigger than the other kids at that time," she said. "And he would be aggressive. A lot of people thought he was older than he was."

It turned out to be an appropriate nickname for someone who grew up less than a mile from Tiger Stadium.

Tyquincy said he never liked LSU game days. The streets would fill up, the traffic would be unbearable and there'd be noise all day long. His son, however, heard the marching band in the distance, saw his neighborhood lit up by the massive stadium and at age 6 announced that he was going to play there one day.

He was right, although there were some bumps initially.

Davis-Price always been a running back. As a little boy, he had no issue with the other boys trying to catch him and bring him to the ground. But lowering his shoulder and knocking his friends down? That just didn't seem right.

Tyquincy: "He felt like if he hit 'em, he would hurt 'em."

Stacie: "Because he was so strong."

Tyquincy: "And that's when we really started his training. I said, 'Look, Ty, this is football. This is what you have to do.' And once I got out there with him and showed him and then showed him again, he fell in love with it."

Then there was the time Davis-Price, who doubled as a linebacker on his youth team, scooped up a fumble and took off toward the end zone. The problem: It was the wrong end zone.

"Everyone in the stands was standing up screaming, 'Go the other way!'" Tyquincy said. "He was so excited to have that ball."

Said Sutton: "He ran the opposite way with the ball. Everybody was like, 'Nooooooo!'"

Yes, Davis-Price ended up scoring two points for the opponent. But the larger takeaway was that no one could catch him, a theme throughout his youth. Davis-Price also served as his team's kicker back then. On kickoffs, he'd boot the ball, then invariably outrace his teammates to make the tackle.

At the same time, he took up football he started running track. He never lost his speed even after a ninth-grade growth spurt sent him zooming past the 200-pound mark. Wasp-waisted sprinters might have watched the brawny, big-boned kid settle into the blocks beside them and figure they'd have an easy heat. A few seconds later, the gun would go off and they'd be staring at his backside as he motored away for the win.

Davis-Price said his personal best in the 100 meters was 10.6 seconds and that he ran it when he was more than 230 pounds.

"If you ever watch him run, his knees are naturally very high," said Sutton, who said Davis-Price reminds him of one-time 49ers runners Roger Craig and Ricky Watters. "There's not a lot of juking. He's never been trained to do that. He just accelerates. It's, 'I'm not going to hesitate, I'll outrun you.' He has no trouble trusting his speed."

The 49ers saw that zip on film, particularly during LSU's game against Alabama on Nov. 6. On the 63rd play, Davis-Price broke across the line of scrimmage and within 15 yards hit his highest speed of the season, which according to the 49ers, was among the top five speeds of any of the runners in the draft.

The burst caught their attention.

"A lot of times, guys reach higher speeds because they have the opportunity," assistant general manager Adam Peters said. "They maybe aren't as fast as other guys, but because they have the opportunity to run 60 yards in a straight line they reach a high speed. (Davis-Price) reaching his top speed in a short amount of space is more impressive.”

The 49ers also liked that the play occurred midway through the fourth quarter. Since Kyle Shanahan arrived in 2017, the 49ers’ running back rooms has had plenty of speed and it’s had stretches of brilliance. But it’s lacked staying power. Injuries have bitten deeply into the group in each of those five seasons and the hope is that a bigger-bodied runner like Davis-Price will bring some old-fashioned thud and resilience to the mix.

That’s what he showed in his most famous game to date, a 49-42 win over then-No. 20 Florida on Oct. 16. By game’s end, LSU literally had handed the offense to Davis-Price and the offensive line, running the ball on 23 of the final 25 offensive snaps. He responded with touchdown runs of 18, 40 and 25 yards and set a school record with 287 yards on 36 carries.

Sutton and Davis-Price’s parents said the running back was made for exactly that type of feast.

Said Sutton: “It was: feed the beast, feed the beast. It was the Tyrion Davis show that day.”

Said Tyquincy: “He’s the type of player who needs snaps. I’ll be honest with you, the more he plays the better he’s going to be.”

Said Stacie: “You can feed him. He’s a running back.”

Davis-Price, meanwhile, said that the linebackers and defensive backs who seemed eager to take on a big back like him in the first quarter never seemed quite as excited by the fourth.

“I love bringing the contact to them so that they don’t want to tackle you,” he said. “In the first, second quarter they might take it a little bit, but eventually they don’t want anymore of it. That’s always my mindset: to go and attack the defender and wear them out, make them quit.”

Danny Gray

49ers' Danny Gray received a boost when his father figures sprang into action

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
June 17, 2022

Scott Nady, the director of recruiting at SMU, is eager to explain just how immensely popular youth football is in Southeast Dallas. He gives an example.

Every Thursday before SMU home games, he walks around and hands out tickets. He hits barber shops and barbecue joints, street corners and Boys & Girls Clubs. One day he was at the opening of a boxing gym on South Second Avenue and started telling one of the trainers about an exciting new recruit SMU had on the line, a guy who'd played youth football in that part of town.

"I said, 'Hey, I think Danny Gray's going to come to our place,'" Nady recalled.

As soon as the name left his lips the rattle and hum inside the gym came to a halt.

"This old guy was probably 5, 6 feet away sitting at a table talking to a bunch of other old guys," Nady said. "And he turned his chair all the way around and his eyes were as big as saucers: 'You guys are about to get Danny Gray?' I said, 'Yeah, I think so.' And he said, 'Man, y'all gonna win some games.'"

It turned out the old-timer had been watching Gray, whom the 49ers drafted in the third round in April, for the past decade. The receiver, after all, is a favorite son. Nobody in Southeast Dallas was faster. He's been challenged to races since he was 7 years old and hasn't lost one yet. His nickname back then was "missile."

"He was a really quiet kid," one of Gray's youth coaches, Keldrick Barron, said. "Really quiet — until he got on the field. And then he was like a bomb just going off."

What set him apart from the other speedsters who've come from that part of the city, Barron and others said, is that he wasn't afraid to mix it up in the trenches, either. They'd put him at running back, linebacker, safety, cornerback. It didn't matter. Wherever he lined up, Gray made an impression.

"I've been in this city for a long, long time," Nady said. "If your name comes out of that part of town, then you're legit. Danny is kind of a Southeast Dallas legend."

What makes Gray's legend more compelling is that it went silent for a stretch.

When what should have been Gray's freshman year of high school began, he wasn't in school and he wasn't on the field. Track season came around and he wasn't there, either. No one knew what had happened. It was as if he'd vanished.

The mystery was solved one August day when another youth coach, Willie Lawrence, got a phone call. It was Gray, and he began to share where he'd been. His mother was a nurse working 16-hour shifts. There were seven others in the house, including two young siblings. Gray's father wasn't around and, well, Danny had been home taking care of the kids. He was a 14-year-old stay-at-home brother.

"He had to grow up a little bit faster than everyone else," Lawrence said.

Gray essentially told his former coach he felt his future was slipping away. He wanted to get back into school and back on the field. He had dreams of playing in college. He needed help.

The first thing Lawrence did was call the other youth coach, Barron. The two discussed the situation, spoke with the boy's mother and picked him up the next day. Lawrence bought him clothes, shoes, supplies — everything else he needed for school. Barron opened the door to his home.

"Me and my wife, we had him enrolled the next day," Barron said.

Neither Barron, 42, nor Lawrence, 47, is related to Gray. Both have large families of their own. In fact, the Barrons had five other kids ranging from 2 to 13 years old when Gray moved in. Gray, however, refers to both men as uncle — Barron is "Uncle Kel" and Lawrence is "Big Unc" — and you'd never be able to convince him they aren't family.

"I've got a lot of love for them," Gray said this week. "I'd do anything for them."

Both men brush off what they did. Lawrence notes that Gray wasn't the first or the last child they took in in that way. He sees it as part of his duty as a youth coach.

"We help kids," he said. "That's what we do."

Barron agreed the decision to take in Gray was easy. He noted that when Gray first joined the youth league he and some of the other boys would stay over at the Barrons' house on Friday nights.

"That way we could make sure that we could get 'em to the game on Saturday," he said with a laugh. "So when he moved in in the ninth grade it was just a continuation of the relationship. Only now it was every day."

Others are quick to point out just how critical their save was.

"You don't know what Danny's life would look like if those guys hadn't gotten involved," SMU head coach Sonny Dykes said. "It would look a lot different than it does now. Kel came in and gave him a stable home life and gave him some resources and just gave him a place to lay his head every night. I think that relationship really gave Danny a chance to become what he is."

Of course, adjustments had to be made as Gray got ready for his freshman year. To that point he had been, at best, an indifferent student. The first thing Barron told him was that there were rules he'd have to follow, the biggest of which was making the B honor roll.

"Because my wife doesn't care about football as much as she does grades," Barron said. "And if you don't make the B honor roll, then we'll take football away from you. And it was a challenge, man."

In recent years one of the inside jokes between Gray and Barron has become the phrase "Have I lied to you yet?" When he first moved in, it was a way of building trust. If you study like we want you to, you will graduate high school. Trust me on this. Have I lied to you yet?

Barron also told Gray that playing football collegiately ought to be a bare-minimum goal. If he added hard work — staying after practice, studying film, etc. — to his considerable physical gifts, he could make it to the NFL.

When Gray heard his name called at the end of the third round, he immediately turned to Uncle Kel. The older man's response: tears, a big smile, a shoulder shrug and, "Have I lied to you yet?"

The house rules on academics had a similar conclusion. Gray's delayed start to high school meant he couldn't take part in sports as a senior. He'd been the fastest high schooler in Texas as a junior, running the 100 meters in 10.7 seconds. He'd been eager to defend his title and, of course, badly wanted to play football. When he couldn't, he was devastated.

Barron's response? He told Gray that if he diverted his energy to academics he could make the A honor roll. He did. In fact, he came in with the highest GPA in the house that year, right around 3.9.

“He just needed something else to compete in,” Barron said.

Nobody thinks Gray is a finished product, not even close.

Dykes noted that the same delayed start to high school that affected his senior season also scuttled Gray’s initial acceptance to Missouri and forced him to spend the 2018-19 seasons at Blinn Community College.

“We only had him for two years at SMU and he’s just scratching the surface,” he said. “He can become a much better player than he was for us.”

Nady estimates that Gray is 55 percent of what he’ll become.

“The instruction he’ll get — it’s like you’re pouring water on a seed in very fertile soil,” he said. “It’s going to be crazy to see.”

He and the others envision not just ultimate success, but also brilliance, from the receiver from Southeast Dallas. His combination of speed and toughness is unique. His grit and perseverance are what will set him apart.

“Typically those speed guys have a different route,” Dykes said. “They’re very coveted at a very young age. And the result of that (is) sometimes they become a little bit — a little soft, I think. And Danny is exactly the opposite. He’s had to fight for everything. He’s one of those kids who realizes that no one’s going to get you anything in life. You’ve got to go earn it and take it. He’s got that mentality.”

Barron, meanwhile, isn’t content that the boy he took in at age 14 has made it into the NFL. He’s still delivering the same messages — get into your playbook, catch 100 balls after practice, be available — he’s doled out since he coached Gray in the youth league. He saw greatness on the field back then. He sees more in the future.

“I’ve always told him, ‘You’re going to be a much better pro receiver than you were a college receiver,’” Barron said.

He hasn’t lied to him yet.

Dre Greenlaw

His group home was closing, so they stepped in: 49ers rookie Dre Greenlaw's story will break your heart and fill it with love

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
May 17, 2019

You can call it luck or fate or divine intervention or anything you want. But there seemed to be something nudging Dre Greenlaw and the Early family together in Fayetteville, Ark., in the fall of 2011.

Greenlaw, the inside linebacker the 49ers selected in the fifth round last month, was 14 at the time and playing cornerback and running back for the local junior high team. Brian Early was a defensive coach at Fayetteville High. There was no reason for them to cross paths at that point.

Except Greenlaw was experiencing back spasms one day and because the junior high had no training staff, he and another player were sent to the high school for treatment. Early usually would have been teaching class at the time that Greenlaw stopped by. On that particular day he wasn't. He was hanging out at the training facility where he ran into the boys.

He asked them the standard questions: Where do you go to school? Where are you from?

Greenlaw's answers, however, weren't typical. He told Early he lived at the Methodist Family Boys Home. In fact, he had been living in group homes and shelters across the state — one after another — since his mother lost custody of him when he was 8 years old.

"He asked me why I was there," Greenlaw, who turns 22 later this month, recalled in a recent interview with The Athletic. "And I kind of said, 'It's because I don't have anywhere to go right now.' When we were talking — it was kind of weird. He had never met me. I had never met him. But you could just tell when we were talking that he was really interested in me and the whole group home deal."

"I realized how good of a dude he was," Greenlaw continued. "I could really talk to him, talk to him like any other guy. He was young, I think in his mid-30s. He just understood. I've never met somebody where it felt so right, so perfect at the moment. I could really talk to him."

Early had the same connection. There was something about the 14-year-old — a warmth, a brightness, a magnetism, a shine — that drew him in.

After Greenlaw was drafted, a man named Gerry Daly took to Twitter to tell a story about how Greenlaw had helped his daughter when they were freshmen attending a keg party at a fraternity at the University of Arkansas.

Somebody had spiked the woman's drink with a date-rape drug. When Greenlaw — he had gone to high school with her — realized she was acting strangely and being ushered out the door by an aggressive male student, he stopped them from leaving and helped her find her friends.

"I didn't ever tell this story," Daly wrote on April 27, "because maybe someone would say, 'Oh, he shouldn't have been at that party.' Maybe not. But he had my daughter's back, and for that I will always owe him. So, do me a favor. Root for Dre. He's a good kid with a good heart."

Brian's wife, Nanci, said she'd never heard about the episode until Daly tweeted about it. But she wasn't surprised.

"He's a real good friend," she said. "But not just that. He would have done that for anybody. That was absolutely, 100 percent his personality to do that for somebody. No, I'm not surprised at all."

Back in 2011, Brian Early figured he'd serve as Greenlaw's mentor. He attended one of the boy's junior high games, then brought him to a football game at the University of Arkansas. The family — Nanci and Brian had 7- and 3-year-old daughters — took him to church one Sunday, to dinner at P.F. Chang's on another occasion and to the mall. They bought him a couple of shirts and some jeans at American Eagle.

Nanci admits now that the idea of adopting Greenlaw crept into her mind during these brief outings. But the Earlys didn't seriously consider it until they dropped the teenager off at the group home one day and a worker there pulled them aside to tell them the Fayetteville facility would be closing. The boys would be sent to another group home in Alma, Ark., 50 miles away.

"I probably had thought about it and talked myself out of it many times," Nanci said. "Just saying, 'He's fine. We'll mentor him and take him to church and buy him clothes and that'll be good. We've got these two little girls. We can't do that.'

"But when the boys home came and said, 'We're shutting down,' to me that was God saying, 'You're not doing enough. He's not OK. He's going to move again. He's going to change schools again.'"

No one else seemed to think adopting Greenlaw was a good idea. Like everywhere else in the nation, babies and young children in Arkansas are far more likely to be adopted or taken in by foster families than teenagers, who rarely thrive as adults. Nationally, as many as 20 percent of teens who age out of the system become homeless at some point. They are more likely to struggle with substance abuse, commit a crime and become incarcerated. Only a small percentage go on to earn four-year college degrees, according to national studies.

"I can remember having a conversation with our pastor and saying, 'We felt like we're being called to help this kid,'" Brian said. "But we'd been advised, with young daughters, to be careful with that — bringing a teenage boy into the house. And we kind of got (the pastor's) thoughts on the situation. And he discouraged it. And he said, 'I'm not discouraging you from helping the kid. Let's see if we can't help him find another home somewhere else.' And I remember him saying, 'Brian, I don't think it's a good idea that you guys adopt him.'"

Did the pastor have a point?

It wasn't as if the Earlys had known Greenlaw all his life, after all. Their relationship spanned only a few months and there had been just a handful of interactions. Nanci said that one day Brian suggested they take Dre to dinner but thought that his last name was Green.

"He said, 'How about the Earlys and the Greens go eat?'" she recalled. "And I said, 'Who's Green?!'"

That's how little they knew about the boy.

Greenlaw doesn't want to over-dramatize what life was like in the boys home in Fayetteville. In some ways, it was the best place he had been up to that point. He learned to love football when he was living there and he made lifelong friends at school. Three of the boys on his junior high team played alongside him in high school and later at Arkansas.

Still, it wasn't easy and it certainly wasn't carefree.

Something as simple as a bowl of cereal had to be precisely measured out at every sitting. Boys received a single allotment of food for each meal, and that was it. If you were an athlete who craved extra calories, you had to sneak your snacks from the kitchen to your room.

"I definitely learned how to do that," he said with a grin.

Greenlaw's modest haul from American Eagle also caused problems when another boy tried to take his clothes. At the boys home, jeans came from Walmart and the boys didn't get to pick them out. When Greenlaw returned one day with fancier-than-normal pants, it triggered a fight.

“He hit me three times,” Greenlaw said. “And finally, I hit him back, so he stopped when he took that punch. There was nothing else after that.”

Greenlaw stayed at the facility, which housed boys aged 10-18, for about a year. One day, one of the boys threw a brick through a car window. On other occasions, a boy tried to run away. Whenever that happened, the police were called and the home essentially went on lockdown.

The Earlys twice stopped by to pick up Greenlaw for an outing but couldn't because none of the boys were allowed to leave. How could he flourish in that environment? What would happen to him after he turned 18? Every instinct they had told them he needed more — more stability, more care, more love.

“It's just something you felt from him,” Brian said. “You felt like he wanted a family. He wanted to be a part of a family and have people that loved him and looked out for him and give him warmth. He found that with us.”

So against the advice of their pastor, and contrary to the statistics, the Earlys decided to make Greenlaw their son. They began taking the necessary classes and initiated the proceedings.

Even though their minds already were committed to it, Nanci said she and Brian wanted their daughters to be part of the decision. After dropping Greenlaw off at the boys home one day, they discussed the proposition on the drive back to their home. AJ is their oldest daughter. Camryn — “She's the sassy one,” Nanci said — is the youngest.

“We talked about it with them and said, ‘We just really feel like Dre needs a family and that he needs a mom and a dad and he needs sisters and we just really feel like God is wanting him to come live with us,’” Nanci said of their conversation. “And we got in the car the next day. We were picking them up from school. And my 7-year-old is like — this is AJ — she said, ‘Mom, I've been thinking about it. And God's been speaking to my heart and he wants Dre to come live with us.’ And I said, ‘AJ! That makes me feel so good!’ And I'm kind of looking in the rear-view mirror and I look at Cam in her car seat and she says, ‘Don't look at me. God's not been speaking to my heart.’”

It didn't take her long to warm up to her new big brother.

Greenlaw moved in with the Earlys a few days before Christmas that year. Nanci said they knew their first night together would be awkward for everyone, so they decided to make popcorn and watch a movie so no one would feel obligated to make conversation.

“And I look over, and my 3-year-old has her arm around him and was touching his hair because she had never touched a black kid's hair before,” Nanci said. “And I said, ‘Cam! What are you doing?!’ And we all just busted out laughing.”

Said Greenlaw: “All I remember is laughing because my little sister, Camryn, she didn't say nothing to me for a couple of days. Didn't look at me. But she'd sit there and rub my head like this (rubs the top of his head). And I told them, ‘You need to bring her around more black people!’ Because she's like, ‘Why's his hair like this?’ And I'm thinking, ‘Oh my God!’ while she's rubbing my head. But it was a real family thing and real funny. Everyone was laughing.”

Greenlaw's story is no fairytale.

The Arkansas Department of Human Services said it could not disclose why he was taken away from his mother, but a story last year in the Arkansas Democrat-Gazette cited drug use in the family and a prison sentence for a family member.

Greenlaw lived for a short time with his biological father. His stepmother already had children of her own, however, and they ultimately did not keep him. He has at least eight half-siblings and is particularly close to two of his younger brothers. Brian says that all of the siblings were taken in by a relative when they were growing up; Dre was the only one who wasn't.

But he never became embittered, never resentful that he'd been abandoned. He never shut down. Instead he maintained the openness and optimism that initially drew the Earlys toward him and continues to impress them. Nanci said that each time her girls turned 8 she was struck that it was the same age at which Greenlaw became a ward of the state.

"And I'm thinking, 'At 8! I'm still rinsing shampoo out of my girls' hair at 8. How did he survive this and still have this attitude?'" she said. "He has done it and he has done it with the most amazing attitude. It's crazy. Because so many kids would have been bitter or hurt or feel like they're owed something. And that's just not him at all. That's not his personality. Somehow his ordeal didn't steal that from him. And we are awed by that."

After their movie-night icebreaker, Greenlaw quickly and easily became a member of the family, so much so that the Earlys — eight years later — say they can't imagine what their lives would be like without him.

The 14-year-old Greenlaw was like any other teenage boy. He aggravated his mother by watching television with the volume on full blast. Nanci said that there were worries when they first took him in that he would be listening to loud music with cuss words in earshot of the girls. The TV indeed was loud, but Greenlaw's favorite shows were Disney flicks and "Hannah Montana" — to the delight of his little sisters.

Before he started living with the Earlys, Greenlaw communicated with them by logging onto Facebook on a school computer. On their first Christmas morning together, he was given his first cell phone. Greenlaw was ecstatic when he was drafted last month. His reaction to getting his own phone was nearly as emotional.

It turned out to be a gift for Nanci as well.

Like a lot of young men, Greenlaw wasn't great at sharing his feelings with his mom in face-to-face chats. Instead, his deepest thoughts and most heartfelt words have come via text, often from an adjoining room.

Nanci said she received one in the wee hours after the 49ers had selected Greenlaw in the fifth round. They had had a celebration that day, invited friends and family members. The house had finally grown quiet when her phone buzzed on her bedside table.

"I can't explain how much ya'll mean to me," the text read. "I love you all so much. I don't think anyone has a more caring and loving support system than I have. I just want you to know how much I appreciate you."

Javon Hargrave

How 49ers' prize free agent Javon Hargrave went from hoops prodigy to NFL stardom

By Jerry McDonald
San Jose Mercury News
March 26, 2023

There was a time when Javon Hargrave envisioned himself dominating the paint like Charles Barkley instead of sacking quarterbacks like Charles Haley.

Everything changed when Hargrave, playing on the junior varsity at North Rowan High in Spencer, N.C., in 2007, had an epiphany borne of performance.

"I didn't really care for football," Hargrave said Friday morning in a phone interview following a workout. "Basketball was my way. But I had like five or six sacks in my first game and it just came kind of natural to me. I had a few bad games in basketball – sometimes against taller people. In football, in high school, I didn't have many bad games."

Given that Hargrave was a conference player of the year in basketball as a junior and helped lead North Rowan to the Division I (small school) state title as a senior, it wasn't as if bad games came with regularity.

Andrew Mitchell, Hargrave's high school basketball coach, gave the following scouting report:

"He was hard-nosed, a bruiser, but had a nice, soft touch and great feet," Mitchell said. "Once he realized when he put his big body on people there was nothing they could do, he became a force. We won a state title because of Javon."

Mitchell realized Hargrave's basketball days were numbered the first time he saw him play football.

"He made a tackle, the ball hit the ground, and he picked it up with one hand and ran it all the way into the end zone for a touchdown," Mitchell said.

Hargrave, 30, is the 49ers' prize free agent, a defensive tackle whose speed and athleticism have never computed with his build whether it was as a youth, in high school, college or the NFL.

"I was trying to race all the small kids, and most of the time I could beat 'em," Hargrave said.

A dominant career at South Carolina State led to Hargrave being a third-round pick by the Pittsburgh Steelers, which begat a three-year, $39 million contract with the Philadelphia Eagles and finally a four-year deal worth a maximum of $84 million with $40 million guaranteed from the 49ers.

The contract validated what anyone who has tried to block Hargrave already knew – he has few peers as an interior game-wrecker at 6-foot-2, 305 pounds. The burst and athletic ability that were apparent early have been refined every year through diet and training.

It was the latest example of the 49ers going all-in when it comes to big-time talent, something they did when making trades for tackle Trent Williams and running back Christian McCaffrey. Like both men, Hargrave considers himself an ascending player and still a work in progress despite an 11-sack season for the NFC champion Eagles.

"This league is not based on what you did last year," Hargrave said. "It's more like 'what have you done for me lately?' I challenged myself to make the most out of my career. That's my big goal – to see if I can get better every year and really make the most of it."

Jalen “Scoot” Simmons, a former teammate at South Carolina State and one of Hargrave’s closest friends, believes the best is yet to come.

“That’s his personality,” Simmons said. “He thinks he can get better and he’s the most humble person I know. He’s just scratching the surface in my eyes.”

While Hargrave dominated in high school and in his first two seasons at South Carolina State, it wasn’t until a six-sack game against Bethune-Cookman as a junior that he realized he had a real shot.

“That’s when I started hearing the whispers,” Hargrave said. “It dawned on me – I’ve got a chance to do this thing.”

South Carolina State is a historically Black university in Orangeville, S.C., with a football history that includes Hall of Famers such as New York Giants linebacker Harry Carson and Rams defensive end Deacon Jones. Given North Rowan’s status as a low-enrollment Division I high school combined with Hargrave not having a qualifying ACT score, the Bulldogs were the only team to school to offer him a scholarship.

As a freshman, Hargrave entered mid-year after successfully earning his qualifying score and subsequently went into his first spring practice out of shape.

David Blanchard, the defensive line coach at South Carolina State, watched a winded Hargrave fail to make it through his first conditioning drill.

“He ran extremely well, but he couldn’t run for long,” Blanchard said. “He couldn’t finish, but you could see the burst he had. You could see him jump. He was just an unbelievable athlete to be that size.”

South Carolina State defensive coordinator Mike Adams, now an assistant at Mercer College in Macon, Ga., said Hargrave got in shape by doing everything that was asked and then taking on even more.

“He’s out there at 5:30 in the morning doing these circuits,” Adams said. “He made himself finish those drills. Besides all his skills, my first impression was this kid has actually got something to him in terms of making himself physically better.”

Hargrave has no fond memories of the experience but understands the impact was profound in that he’s remained in shape ever since.

“That was a rough time for me,” Hargrave said. “It was the first time I’d been off so long, six months at home, eating, gaining a lot of weight. I didn’t see the light at the end of the tunnel. I think it just woke me up. Never wanted to feel like that again. Never.”

Hargrave, then and now, is good-natured and low-key. Other than an instance where Mitchell thought his power forward was being too nice in a regional playoff game, Hargrave hasn’t needed a lot in the way of motivation.

Mitchell was a college roommate of Tim Bates, Hargrave’s father. Bates was a North Rowan assistant coach and Hargrave’s brother, T.J. Bates, was the point guard.

North Rowan was being dominated by Monroe, the defending state champ whose star player was Jamison Crowder, now an NFL wide receiver. Crowder had his way in the first half and then Mitchell laid into Hargrave.

“He cussed me out pretty bad and it really made me mad, but I think that helped get me going,” Hargrave said. “I ended up having a big second half and we won.”

Mitchell, now an assistant women’s coach at Winston-Salem State, said teammates liked Hargrave because he didn’t draw attention to himself despite superior physical gifts.

“The guys love him. He’s a gentle giant,” Mitchell said. “He’s humble – but he can be a character – funny in his own little way. He was a true leader.”

Behind closed doors, Hargrave would occasionally display an edge, like the time he failed to make the All-Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference team despite a solid sophomore year.

“He was so mad. That ate him up, and that pushed him to conditioning himself even more and he absolutely destroyed the league from that point on,” Blanchard said.

Adams, who bestowed the name “Gravedigger” on Hargrave based on former Packers nose tackle Gilbert Brown as well as his last name, said he saw a big change as a sophomore.

“His first year, he was kind of wildly moving around and he was so athletic at that weight, he could outmaneuver people, but it wasn’t until his second year you started to see his true in-gap power and ability to just wreck the interior of an entire offensive line.

“We knew he was good, but I don’t know if we ever saw this, where he’s widely considered maybe the best interior defensive lineman in the world,” Adams said. “That’s insane.”

Hargrave credits his father, who is a pastor, and his mother for keeping him grounded and focused on improvement even as he has become wealthy beyond his wildest dreams.

“It’s never been the easiest road for me, like I was this five-star athlete or big-time guy,” Hargrave said. “Everything I had to get I had to work for, so to keep getting the things I want, I’ve got to work at it. I’m not happy just because I’ve got the money. I actually love football and make the most out of it for me and my family.”

Mitchell joked that Hargrave is so frugal “he’ll probably still have $80 million of the $84 million when he retires.” That prompted a laugh from Hargrave, who said “I spend a little more now, but I’m not about to go crazy.”

In the next breath, Hargrave said he was dreading the tax rate in California as well as apartment prices in San Francisco.

The beginning of those riches became possible after 29 ½ sacks in his last two seasons at South Carolina State and a 4.93 time in the 40-yard dash at the NFL scouting combine. Still, Hargrave lasted until the third round, with Pittsburgh taking him at No. 89 overall.

Four solid years in a read-and-react scheme led to a three-year, $39 million deal with the Eagles, who turned him loose more often, and then to the 49ers, where Hargrave will disrupt at will and look to expand his game.

“He’s not ready to pat himself on the back. That’s not him,” Blanchard said. “When I reach him, it’s always, ‘I’ve got to work out. I’ve got to get a massage.’ That’s his deal. He has a home here in the Carolinas but his home is really where his workout facility is.”

Simmons, a college teammate and running back who spent three NFL seasons as a practice squad player with Arizona and the New York Giants, sees no difference in terms of personality from the guy he first met at the South Carolina State dorms.

“He’s loyal, he’s giving, and he always wants the best for people around him, especially his family and friends,” Simmons said. “He’s still the same guy, man, the same ol’ Hargrave to me.”

Talanoa Hufanga

The 49ers' breakthrough revelation of 2022? Talanoa Hufanga

By Mike Silver
San Francisco Chronicle
November 19, 2022

He is becoming a star before our eyes, a second-year sensation who seemed to materialize out of thin air. San Francisco 49ers safety Talanoa Hufanga has been one of the NFL's most prolific playmakers during the first half of 2022, a conspicuous presence on a talent-rich defense that is the league's stingiest. Simply put, he has been a revelation.

The 23-year-old is seemingly headed for the stratosphere — and not merely because the Niners practiced this week at a field that sits 6,700-plus feet above sea level, part of a plan to get Hufanga and his teammates acclimated to the altitude for Monday night's game against the Arizona Cardinals in Mexico City. And yet, for all his sudden success, there's little concern that the first-year starter's head is in the clouds.

"I don't think I've arrived yet," Hufanga said Thursday after the Niners' practice at the Air Force Academy. "It'll probably be 12 years down the line — God willing, if I can play that long — before I even say it. And, really, you can never have that mind-set that you have arrived."

Hufanga's humility runs deep, a product of the mentorship he has received from Hall of Fame safety Troy Polamalu, and from the way he was raised. He grew up on a farm outside Corvallis, Ore., doing many of the same chores that had been assigned to his father, Tevita, who spent his first 18 years in a Tongan village.

"Being raised with a pops that grew up on dirt floors, it really makes me appreciate the little things in life — hot water, electricity, having a roof over your head," said Hufanga, who fiercely values his Polynesian heritage. "I was fortunate to go back (as a teenager) and see where he grew up; he would do chores and farm work all day. I definitely understand what it takes to have a work ethic like that, regardless of what you have."

At times, he learned the hard way. As a freshman in high school, Hufanga was handed back a math exam that didn't pass the smell test — and, shortly thereafter, neither did he.

"I didn't pass a math test, and my dad picked me up from football practice, after I'd changed back into my school clothes," Hufanga recalled. "When we got home he sent me straight into the barn to clean it out. I had to do it in my school shoes; he wouldn't let me change.

"I had a shovel and a wheelbarrow, and it was pitch black, and I had to clean out the whole barn. Because if this was how I was gonna act with my grades, those were the consequences."

Hufanga had to throw away his shoes, but the stench of misplaced priorities lingered.

"I never failed a math test after that," he said, smiling.

As a high school senior, Hufanga passed another test: convincing Polamalu to guide him on his journey to potential football greatness. After committing to play at USC, Polamalu's alma mater, Hufanga was connected with the former Pittsburgh Steelers great by another former NFL player, Vai Sikaheima. Hufanga was on his way back from Hawaii, where he'd just played in the Polynesian Bowl, when he called the number Sikaheima had given him.

Polamalu "answered right away," Hufanga recalled. "I was starstruck. We talked about a bunch of different things that we needed to handle in order for me to be successful on the field and off the field.

And later, when I followed through with them, I (called back) and told him I'd done everything he asked, and he decided to work with me."

When Hufanga arrived at Polamalu's house in San Diego for their first training session, he was greeted by another reality check.

"We started warming up, and three hours later we're finishing up and I'm like, 'Man, that was a good workout,'" Hufanga recalled. "And Troy was like, 'That was just the warm-up. And then we went to work. That was a lesson for me.'"

The learning curve continued for Hufanga when he got to USC. "My freshman year in college, I was a fifth-string safety before I ended up starting," he said. "I really didn't understand defenses, 'cause I came from a defense in high school where they just let me roam and just find the ball. So, that's where my very instinctual feel of the game comes from. But I really didn't understand defenses."

He wasn't handed anything in the NFL, either. Partly because of a relatively slow 40-yard dash (4.64 seconds), and partly because of the slew of injuries during his first two seasons with the Trojans (two broken collarbones, a shoulder sprain and a concussion), Hufanga wasn't drafted until the fifth round.

As a rookie, he didn't make a ton of noise in the regular season during three fill-in starts. However, Hufanga announced his presence resoundingly in January in the Niners' 13-10 divisional-round playoff upset of the Packers at Lambeau Field, scooping teammate Jordan Willis' blocked punt out of the snowy darkness and racing into the end zone for a game-turning touchdown with 4:41 remaining.

Coach Kyle Shanahan has since told reporters, "We should have played (Hufanga) a lot more last year." Hufanga, however, didn't mind his apprenticeship, saying, "I definitely needed to be on the sideline and see it from a different perspective, 'cause I needed that time to grow and mature. There was a lot of growth from Year 1 to Year 2."

After the season, the 49ers made no attempt to re-sign starting strong safety Jaquiski Tartt, whose dropped interception in the fourth quarter of the NFC Championship Game defeat to the Rams shall live in infamy. Hufanga seized the starting job — and, once the games began, has gotten his hands on just about everything.

Simply put, he has been a revelation.

"You could see flashes of it" last year, Pro Bowl linebacker Fred Warner said. "But he's putting it together now. Consistency is the truest measure of performance."

Hufanga has four of the 49ers' seven interceptions, including his 52-yard pick-six of a Matthew Stafford-to-Cooper Kupp screen in the Niners' 24-9 victory over the Rams in early October, and his diving interception of a Justin Herbert pass to clinch last Sunday's 22-16 victory over the Chargers.

He also has seven passes defensed and, according to NextGen stats, ranks first among all NFL safeties in three metrics. For the analytics crowd, those metrics are Ball-Hawk Rate (35.0), Receptions Over Expected (minus-5.5) and Target Expected Points Added (minus-19.5) — and please don't make me clean out the barn in my school shoes if I can't provide any additional explanation.

Be it against the run or pass, Hufanga — like Don Henley's protagonist in the Eagles' "Life in the Fast Lane" — seems to be everywhere, all the time. He's third on the 49ers with 36 tackles, behind linebackers Warner and Dre Greenlaw; among those are five tackles for loss — a product of his exquisitely timed run blitzes — tied for second among NFL safeties. He also has a sack, and he and veteran Tashaun Gipson have formed a seamless partnership on the back end.

On a defense full of decorated disruptors, including Warner, edge rusher Nick Bosa (a defensive player of the year candidate) and cornerback Charvarius "Mooney" Ward, Hufanga has proved he belongs. He's having a Pro Bowl-type season — at least — and he isn't close to satisfied.

“The standard is set,” he said. “It’s a high level. We swarm. We love it. And if you’re under that standard, you won’t be playing. You might not even be on this team.”

Hufanga, by his own standard, might not have arrived — but he isn’t going anywhere. In his eyes, this is just the warm-up. For that, the Niners are profoundly grateful.

The key to 49ers' Hufanga's early success? Getting answers before the test

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
October 3, 2022

It's common for college football coaches to rave about former players, but the men who mentored Talanoa Hufanga at USC are particularly passionate about the San Francisco 49ers' strong safety.

Craig Naivar, Hufanga's position coach in his final season at USC, tweaked a cliché about players with impeccable character to illustrate his affection.

"He's a young man that if my daughter said she was going to date him," Naivar said, "I would tell my daughter: 'You better not screw it up.'"

Clancy Pendergast, a 32-year coaching veteran who was Hufanga's defensive coordinator in his first two seasons at USC, termed him one of his "all-time favorite guys" and fondly recalled how he fell for him immediately: His recruiting visit at Hufanga's home in Corvallis, Ore., was perhaps the best in his 14 college seasons.

Ronnie Bradford, Hufanga's position coach when he was a USC freshman, said his instincts and physicality are reminiscent of 49ers general manager John Lynch, a Hall of Fame safety whom Bradford coached with the Broncos.

"But he's a better person than he is a football player," Bradford said. "He's such a good, good, good kid, man."

How impressive has Hufanga been early in his first season as a starter? So good that Naivar, Pendergast and Bradford have been joined by thousands on the 2021 fifth-round pick's suddenly stuffed bandwagon.

On a team dotted with A-listers, defensive coordinator DeMeco Ryans said Hufanga was "probably everybody's favorite player" based on his electric and effective playing style.

After three games, Hufanga ranks second on the 49ers in tackles (21), shares team-high honors in tackles for loss (four) and pass breakups (three), has an interception and might unofficially lead the NFL in exquisitely timed run blitzes.

Last week, in an 11-10 loss in Denver, Hufanga nearly took the handoff from quarterback Russell Wilson before dropping running back Melvin Gordon for a 6-yard loss.

"Well, it's only about the 50th time I've seen it so far," NBC's Cris Collinsworth said after Hufanga's latest backfield raid. "You would think someone would account for him."

The hair-on-fire Hufanga, hailed by his USC coaches for his passion, work ethic and drive, is a reason that last season's third-ranked defense has been slightly more suffocating in 2022. The 49ers entered Week 4 ranked second in total defense and had allowed the fewest yards per play and fewest first downs in the NFL.

Still, they are 1-2 due to an offense that has scored 10 points in each of their losses. And with quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo discussing the lack of offensive rhythm after he didn't practice until late August, the 49ers might need to lean on their defense to steady their season when they host the Rams on Monday night.

The 49ers kick-started 2021 after a 3-5 start with a 31-10 prime-time romp over the Rams at Levi's Stadium, when Hufanga made the last of three fill-in rookie starts. This past week, head coach Kyle Shanahan reviewed that game and noticed Hufanga played a key role in a defense that limited the Rams to 278 yards, their second-lowest total of the season.

Said Shanahan: “We should have played (Hufanga) a lot more last year.”

His college coaches would echo that.

Hufanga fell to the fifth round partly due to a medical file that included two broken collarbones. But his lack of speed was the biggest reason he wasn’t more coveted after he was a first-team All-American and the Pac-12 Defensive Player of the Year in his COVID-shortened final season.

It appears NFL evaluators didn’t give enough consideration to Hufanga’s other qualities — harder to measure than his 40-yard dash (4.64 seconds) — that have allowed him to flourish at every level.

“That’s what people don’t realize about this kid,” Bradford said. “If he has any deficiencies, he’s going to work as hard as he can to fill those, to make sure they became strengths.”

Hufanga’s instincts, which help compensate for his so-so wheels, are primarily a product of maniacal preparation.

A linebacker, wide receiver and wildcat quarterback in high school, Hufanga wore out his coaches when he arrived at USC with endless questions about his new position.

He began his freshman season as a fifth-stringer. But injuries, along with his classroom work, allowed him to enter the starting lineup by the Trojans’ fourth game.

Spotlight on QB Jimmy Garoppolo: A week removed from resembling an off-the-bench savior, he returned to being a polarizing figure after he was the leader of an abysmal offensive performance in Denver. He has spent a week being scrutinized by social-media lip readers, questioned about his accountability and even being criticized for smiling while greeting an old Patriots teammate following the defeat to the Broncos. Garoppolo has typically responded well to adversity during his 49ers’ tenure. He’s 11-3 after losses, the only defeats coming during last season’s four-game losing streak.

Injury notes: 49ers - WR Danny Gray (hip) is doubtful; DTs Javon Kinlaw (knee) and Arik Armstead (foot) are questionable. Rams - C Brian Allen (knee) and G David Edwards (illness) are out.

THREE THINGS TO WATCH

- Rams WR Cooper Kupp had 29 catches (34 targets) for 382 yards and 3 TDs in three games against the 49ers last season. The rest of the Rams: 50 catches (85 targets), 438 yards and 3 TDs.
- The 49ers have scored one offensive touchdown in the fourth quarter of their past six games dating to last season’s playoffs. The TD came on Garoppolo’s 1-yard QB sneak in a Week 2 win against Seattle.
- The 49ers averaged 3.6 yards per carry in their three games against the Rams in 2021. They averaged 4.4 yards per carry in their other 17 games.

“If he had free time, he was in the building studying,” Pendergast said. “That separated him from a lot of people. I used to joke with him: ‘No questions on game day. You ask so many questions. Let’s just get to the game and just let it go from there, you know?’”

“There would be times he would be walking towards me and I would say, ‘Nope, nope, nope.’ And we would just start laughing.”

Said Hufanga, smiling: “It was a joke because all the seniors on the team would be like, ‘Talanoa has all these questions. Does he know what he’s doing?’”

Naivar arrived in 2020, Hufanga's final season, and became accustomed to his pupil quizzing him about the opponent's potential counter moves. What if they do this? Or that? Or ...

"Sometimes," Naivar said, "it would be like, 'Talanoa, there's no way they are going to do that.' ... But that was him. No stone unturned. He's everything you want in a football player. If there were 84 more of him at USC, (fired coach) Clay Helton would still be there right now."

It was telling that Naivar, now at SMU, Pendergast at UCLA and Bradford at Montana, quickly granted interview requests to discuss Hufanga in the middle of their seasons.

Bradford was on the phone less than two hours after Montana's sports information director was contacted. And Pendergast made time Friday afternoon, about five hours before UCLA's game against Washington.

Meanwhile, Ryans, a Pro Bowl linebacker, has been similarly eager to gush about Hufanga. His praise is unusual considering Hufanga is a 23-year-old with six career starts. His words, however, are familiar.

"He's always asking questions, trying to figure out just how many nuggets can he get to get another step to see what the offense is doing," Ryans said. "When you see guys show up on Sundays, it's because of the preparation that they're doing behind the scenes. And Huf is one of the best guys at prepping throughout the week that I've been around."

“The perfect pupil”’: 49ers’ Talanoa Hufanga is learning at the foot of Troy Polamalu, his Hall of Fame idol

By Jerry McDonald
San Jose Mercury News
October 3, 2022

Ryan Clark has heard the buzz about 49ers safety Talanoa Hufanga and watched the film with interest.

NBC analyst Cris Collinsworth invoked the name of Hall of Fame safety “Troy Polamalu” more than once during the Sunday Night Football broadcast in Denver. Charles Woodson and Richard Sherman made the comparison on Twitter, as did former 49ers defensive back and Hall of Famer Ronnie Lott on a local radio station.

Clark, an NFL analyst for ESPN, played free safety for the Pittsburgh Steelers for eight seasons, all with Polamalu at strong safety. The two are so close that when Clark flew to California this weekend to watch his son play for Arizona State against USC, he stayed at Polamalu’s home.

When the conversation turned to football Thursday night, Polamalu brought up Hufanga’s name unprompted.

“Troy’s words to me last night were, ‘He’s the perfect pupil,’ ” Clark said in a phone interview. “He does everything right. Anything you tell him that can make him better, he implements it, whether it’s the amount of sleep he gets, the amount of film he watches, the workouts he does, what he eats and the way he takes care of his body.

“Literally everything I’ve told him to do that could make him better, he’s been willing to put 100 percent effort into it.”

Comparisons between Hufanga and Polamalu were inevitable. They both have long-flowing hair and are of Polynesian descent. Hufanga is Tongan, Polamalu’s family is from American Samoa. They each went to high school in Oregon before playing collegiately at USC.

“I can’t call it a lazy comparison, because it all fits,” Clark said.

Hufanga has been mentored by Polamalu since college. The two train together in the offseason, and Polamalu offers advice and critiques after every game.

“It’s an honor for me just to be able to train with Troy,” Hufanga said. “It makes sense that I play like I do because I train with him. You try to mimic someone’s game as much as you can, and you hope to see the results. By no means am I comfortable where I’m at. I’ve got a lot of room to grow and have to continue to grind. I’m very blessed to be around him.”

Off the field, Hufanga is like Polamalu in that he’s earnest, soft-spoken and humble. But there’s a passion underneath the surface that is unleashed on game days. Hufanga’s 21 tackles are second to Dre Greenlaw (23) on the team, and he leads the 49ers in solo stops with 17, is tied with Nick Bosa with four tackles for loss and has three passes-defensed and an interception.

Not that Polamalu, inducted into the Hall of Fame on the first ballot in 2020, is delving deeply into stats with his protege.

“He critiques everything, and is a harsh critic,” Hufanga said. “He sees the game from a different perspective and he’s never really satisfied with my performances. Training with him is very different. A lot of it has to do with your mind. He’s a different cat, for sure. He not only understands the game, but what life is all about.”

Hufanga, Clark believes, is impacted by Polamalu’s sincerity.

"If you're around Troy, you understand how passionate he is about the game," Clark said. "Talanoa knows Troy does not need to be doing this with his life. This is not something he charges for. The respect level and the way he understands what he's being told and who is telling him is one reason there is such a level of maturity in him."

With Pittsburgh, Polamalu did the requisite studying of tendencies and scheme while at the same time letting his instinct and passion take over. He rarely does interviews, as is noted on his foundation website, but gave a glimpse into his soul during his Hall of Fame induction speech.

"I come from a culture where discipline, humility, and respect are not only the foundation to our survival, but the key to our existence," Polamalu said.

Lott, another USC product, invoked the Polamalu name and raved about Hufanga's play in an interview with KNBR.

"What's great is that here's a guy that looks like he's moving faster than everyone else," Lott said. "And what I mean by that is his anticipation of understanding the moment."

A sixth-round draft pick, Hufanga's big moment as a rookie was a scoop-and-score touchdown with a blocked punt in a playoff win over Green Bay. Looking back on last season, coach Kyle Shanahan said Hufanga may have been short-changed by starting only three times in 15 games.

"We should have played him a lot more last year," Shanahan said.

DeMeco Ryans, the 49ers' defensive coordinator, said Hufanga is serious about the mental game.

"He asks questions and I'm like, bring it on," Ryans said. "You want guys who want to know why. Like, 'Why are we doing this?' instead of 'I'm doing something just because the coach told me to do it.' That's what separates Huf and why he's sticking out amongst everybody because he's asking those questions."

There's a delicate balance between playing the position by the book and going off script as Polamalu did so often to make a play on instinct enhanced by preparation.

"He's a guy that played 12 years," Hufanga said of Polamalu. "I'm only in Year 2, and I've got a lot of room for improvement. There are some risks you take within the game. You've got to see the game. But you've got to do your job. You do that, and you'll help other guys make plays as well."

While Clark is reluctant to compare Hufanga with a first-ballot Hall of Fame player in terms of pure talent, he has watched film of all three 49ers games so far and came away impressed.

"He's getting his hands on footballs, making plays behind the line of scrimmage and making impact plays," Clark said. "This is a production-based business and right now he's producing at a high level."

Drake Jackson

Drake Jackson's 49ers journey began with the tutelage of his father, Dennis

By David Lombardi
The Athletic
May 18, 2022

The year was 2001. Dennis Jackson filled out his newborn son's birth certificate. Without hesitation, he made the name a loaded one.

"Drake Jackson, University of Southern California, outside linebacker, 260 pounds," the document read.

Dennis, an avid USC fan, handed the birth certificate to nurses at the hospital in Los Angeles. In a phone interview last week, he remembered their reaction to the name.

"They said it was too long," Jackson said.

So Dennis settled on a shortened version for his son's name. Now, over two decades later, the original version of that birth certificate is merely a story of the past — but a notably prophetic one. Drake Jackson, after all, would indeed go on to play outside linebacker for USC at around 260 pounds.

What's happened after might've strayed from Dennis Jackson's script, though.

The 49ers drafted Jackson — whom they see as an edge-rushing complement to star defensive end Nick Bosa — with their top 2022 pick, No. 61, last month.

But unlike USC football, the 49ers aren't dad's team.

"Dennis is a diehard Raider fan," Matt Logan, Drake's former coach at Centennial High (Corona, Calif.), said in a phone interview last week. "We were teasing him before the draft: 'What happens if Drake doesn't go to the Raiders? Will you get a jersey?' He goes, 'Nope, I'm gonna wear the Raider jersey.'

"I think there's no way. So, we'll see if he gets a 49er jersey."

Drake Jackson's NFL journey began this past weekend at the 49ers' rookie minicamp. He and undrafted signee Kevin Atkins were the only two defensive linemen partaking in practice. That meant especially focused attention from fiery 49ers D-line coach Kris Kocurek, who's now tasked with helping Jackson realize his potential.

There seems to be an immense amount of it, and the 49ers — when considering Jackson's modest total of 12 1/2 sacks through his three seasons at USC — believe that it's relatively untapped.

"I'd say he's incredibly disruptive," general manager John Lynch said after the draft. "He played in a bunch of different schemes and they moved him around a lot, so we think his best football is in front of him. But things such as quick disruption — something we study a lot — he was tops in the country. We liked the film."

The 49ers were enamored with Jackson's springy bend. He can land a standing backflip at 275 pounds, and his broad jump (127 inches) and vertical leap (92 inches) both rank well above the 90th percentile for defensive linemen.

The 49ers also believe that Jackson will fit well into their locker room.

"He can be a senator or a congressman," Logan said. "He's such an outgoing personality, always has a smile on his face. Everybody in the building likes him. That's just the way he is."

Kocurek should have moldable clay to work with as he takes over the job of developing Drake Jackson, the project that Dennis Jackson started so many years ago.

“He’s the best in the league,” the elder Jackson said of Kocurek. “I’m a D-line coach, too, so I follow a lot of these D-line coaches. I’ve always taught Drake to be like a sponge and be able to absorb everybody. I think he’ll be a sponge and soak up what they have to offer.”

Dennis Jackson played defensive end for Missouri Western State University and even got a tryout with — you may have guessed it — the Raiders.

So Dennis isn’t a small man, and that’s why a 10-year-old Drake astounded him with precocious strength.

“I remember to this day, we were in my room and we were going over some D-line drills,” Dennis said. “And I was just showing him how you flip your hips, and he pushed me in the chest and he pushed me into the back of the bed. And I was like, ‘Oh my gosh, if you push anybody like that, you’ll never have a problem in football, ever.’”

“And from there on, he was a monster.”

Drake had been training under Dennis’ guidance from a young age. He’d been lifting weights since age 4 and doing agility drills since age 7.

“Dennis has been a huge influence,” Logan said. “He’s offered that not only to Drake but to a lot of kids. A lot of kids will go lift over there and train with Dennis. All out of the goodness of his heart. He’s not the guy who’s out there trying to seek money and telling kids a bunch of BS. He’s training kids to help them with their future because a junior college coach saw him on campus one day and said, ‘Hey, why aren’t you playing football?’ Brought him to the weight room and it totally changed his life.

“I think that’s what he feels like is his way of giving back.”

Drake started his first game at Centennial as a sophomore against IMG Academy, the preparatory boarding school based in Florida that churns out Division I football talent. The 2016 IMG offensive line featured tackles Evan Neal, who’d go on to Alabama and be drafted No. 7 by the Giants this year, and Daniel Faalele, who played college ball for Minnesota and was a fourth-round pick to the Ravens.

“Everybody on their O-line is 6-3 and above and 300-something pounds,” Dennis said. “In the first half, Drake’s getting dominated. I think it was a mentality thing. I told him, ‘I’m telling the coaches to take you off.’ He said, ‘No, Dad — I can do this, just give me a chance.’ He wanted to impress me.

“And in the second half, he really took it to another level. Once I saw that, I knew he could play with the best. I knew at that point he could play at SC.”

No opponent came within single digits of undefeated IMG that season except for Centennial, which nearly overcame a two-touchdown halftime deficit that night in a wild 50-49 loss.

It proved to be a turbocharger for Jackson’s football career.

“Drake really started to turn it on his sophomore year,” Logan said. “At first, he was a little unsure of himself in situations. Then he really started to light it up.”

Jackson’s blossoming athleticism commanded attention. He lit up a summer passing league session when Logan, indulging the D-lineman’s wishes, allowed him to line up at wide receiver for a snap.

That’s around when Jackson’s backflipping hobby began taking full flight. As he progressed through high school, what had started as a fun stunt on trampolines moved to the beach, where the sand’s incline from the water gave Jackson extra landing space.

Eventually, Jackson overcame the final mental barrier and began backflipping without fear on the practice field.

"I think his freakiness started to come around eighth grade," Dennis said. "Then, in high school, he started doing freakier stuff. He would do these flips, about 10 in a row and he was 270 at the time. Somebody was like, 'Who taught him that?' I was like, 'I didn't.'"

Jackson splashed onto the scene as a freshman at USC in 2019, leading the Trojans with 11 1/2 tackles for loss and earning freshman All-America honors. He played a standard defensive end position at around 275 pounds.

But USC fired defensive coordinator Clancy Pendergast after that season, and his replacement Todd Orlando had different plans for Jackson, especially after a pair of injuries had thinned USC's defense on the second level. Orlando wanted Jackson to play a hybrid outside linebacker role that featured pass coverage responsibilities. That called for a significantly lighter playing weight of only about 250 pounds.

Dennis says that USC's staff did give Jackson the choice to stay at defensive end, but his son made the position switch anyway. He cut the 20 or so pounds that the move required in 2020. So after playing stout football at over 270 pounds as a freshman, Jackson was noticeably weaker at the point of attack in the subsequent two seasons.

"I said, 'Son, you need to stay at defensive end instead of linebacker. Defensive ends make a lot more money than linebackers. If you go from (Nos.) 1 to 10 (in the draft), you'll make $20-40 million,'" Dennis said. "He goes, 'Dad, I don't need that much money. ... I want to help my team out.'"

Said Lynch: "Once you kind of get his story, he was only doing what the coaches at that time were asking of him."

Said Drake Jackson: "Everything was for the team when I did that. We had gotten a new coaching staff as well. They told me to lose weight so I could run around a little more, so I said, 'All right coach, let's get it.' I'll do anything for the team. As long as we win, that's all that matters."

The Trojans did initially win. They went 5-1 in 2020's abbreviated season, but fell to 4-8 in 2021. USC fired head coach Clay Helton after Week 2. Jackson, meanwhile, continued playing at that lighter weight (he'd also dropped a few more pounds due to a preseason illness) and through a lower leg injury.

Jackson still managed to lead USC with eight tackles for loss in 2021, but all the turmoil undoubtedly hurt his draft stock. In fact, The Athletic's Dane Brugler had actually projected Jackson would be the No. 7 pick in his early mock draft immediately following the 2021 draft. But once this year rolled around, it was clear that Jackson stood very little chance of being drafted that high.

Jackson's tumble was costly. For reference, the No. 7 pick is slotted for a fully-guaranteed contract worth more than $28 million with a $17.7 million signing bonus. But since he was taken at No. 61, Jackson's rookie deal is set to be worth just $6.2 million over four years — and only a $1.7 million signing bonus is guaranteed.

Jackson will truly have to earn his keep at the NFL level. But a story that Dennis shared from Drake's teenage years suggests that the 49ers rookie has the mentality to embrace his current situation.

"He said, 'Dad, can you give me some money to go to the movies?'" Dennis said. "So I give him $30 and he goes to the movies and comes back and hands me $30. And I go, 'I thought you went to the movies.' He said, 'I did, but one of my friends paid for it.' And I said, 'Well, keep the money.' And he said, 'Aw, no Dad, you got it.'"

"He's just that type of kid."

Jackson's agent, Drew Rosenhaus, called Drake and Dennis around 6 a.m. on the morning of the draft. Rosenhaus told the family that the 49ers were hoping to pick Jackson. The caveat, of course, was that the 49ers didn't own a pick until No. 61, which was late in the second round — and Rosenhaus also predicted that Jackson would be a surprise first-round pick.

The first round came and went without a selection of Jackson, so anxious times carried over into the second day of the draft.

"The whole time, it was really nerve-wracking," Dennis said. "The Texans said they were gonna pick him, the Minnesota Vikings said they were gonna pick him. (Both Houston and Minnesota ended up making two second-round picks each). So when it got to the 49ers, all these other teams have passed."

When Jackson fell to them, the 49ers kept their word and nabbed him.

"Didn't think he'd be there at 61," Lynch said. "And he came there, so we were happy to grab him and make him a part of the Niners."

Dennis remembers the minutes before his son was drafted.

"My daughter made a bet, she said, 'Dad, you're gonna cry,'" Dennis said. "I said, 'I'm not gonna cry, I promise you.' Drake gets the call and my daughter goes, 'Dad, let me see your eyes.' And she looks at my eyes and she goes, 'OK.'"

"As soon as Arik Armstead comes up and says, 'With the 61st pick, the 49ers select Drake Jackson,' I couldn't control it. Emotions just spilled. Me and him crying like babies. We got the hug, got the embrace. We hugged for a minute. It was an amazing, unbelievable feeling. I've never felt this way before."

The waterworks continued in grand fashion minutes later, when Drake planted one of his signature backflips into the pool. Dennis was the first of many partygoers to also hop into the water, as evidenced by the video below.

After he dried off, Drake was still beaming as he spoke to the Bay Area media for the first time via Zoom. Jackson wore a chain that featured a replica of the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum — his home stadium at USC — as he answered questions. Jackson was so excited that he even expressed audible disappointment when the 49ers' PR staff wrapped up the interview session.

"Ah, man," Jackson said.

Over the next several hours, Jackson would field phone calls from several of his new 49ers teammates. Bosa, Armstead and Trey Lance were among the players who reached out.

"Watching the whole D-line, I cannot wait to get out there with those guys and just turn up with them," Jackson said. "I wanted to text (Bosa) that night and pretty much figure out the answers to the test."

Less than two weeks later, Jackson's turn to be a sponge at the NFL level began in earnest. As he soaked up that first visit to the 49ers' facility during rookie minicamp, he reached out to Dennis.

"I was just walking through the halls and I had to call my dad," Jackson said. "It's crazy to just be standing here in this spot. I can't explain, it's just a blessed feeling."

There's just the final issue of Dennis' allegiance to the Raiders, but the entire Jackson family is laughing about it now.

"We've all been saying 'Bang Bang Niner Gang,'" Drake said, smiling. "It's the song by E-40, 'Bang Bang Niner Gang.' That's (my dad's) favorite song. He probably won't switch over fully, but we got him."

There is an inflection point to force a firm decision from Dennis now on the calendar. The 49ers are scheduled to play the Raiders in Las Vegas on New Year's Day. Dennis has yet to miss a single game at any level of Drake's football career, and he'll certainly be in attendance for that one.

So, what about the 49ers jersey that Dennis insisted that he'd never purchase?

It turns out that there's been a reversal on that front. Dennis has indeed purchased a 49ers jersey, with the realization of his son's NFL dream being the impetus.

"I have one coming," Dennis said. "Jan. 1 will be very hard for me. I guess I'll have two teams until that day."

What skill makes 49ers top pick Drake 'The Freak' Jackson so unique?

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
May 4, 2022

Like many of the top pass rushers in last week's NFL draft, Drake Jackson can burst off the line and bend around the edge en route to blasting quarterbacks.

But how many of those defensive ends can perform backflips? Standing backflips. For perspective: Jackson stands 6-foot-3 and weighs 270 pounds.

"That was always one of the coolest things to me when I was a kid: flipping," Jackson said. "I was always interested in gymnastics-type of things and that was probably as close as I got to it. I've always been able to do it."

Jackson, dubbed "The Freak" by his USC teammates, celebrated being drafted in the second round by the San Francisco 49ers on Friday with the same move he often used to punctuate the Trojans' wins. With his back to the water, he flipped and landed feet-first in the backyard pool at the house he rented with friends and family in Las Vegas, the site of the draft.

Tariq Ahmad, the 49ers' director of college scouting, didn't spend a second studying Jackson's ability to channel Simone Biles before the 49ers selected him with the No. 61 pick. But the skill speaks to the lower-body burst Jackson possesses that belies his size.

"That's just a cool way he can show everyone how explosive he is," Ahmad said. "But we see that on his get-off (from the line). He's a highly talented mover with special length for someone who is 6-3, and he can do all this at 270-plus pounds. So it's all very exciting."

The 49ers are thrilled about pairing Jackson, 21, blessed with raw ability, with defensive line coach Kris Kocurek, who has worked wonders with lesser talents in his three-year tenure.

But perhaps no one is more enthused than Jackson. During a phone interview Wednesday, he laughed about comparing notes with his college teammate, cornerback Chris Steele, who signed with the Steelers as an undrafted free agent.

Steele was giddy about defensive end T.J. Watt, the NFL's reigning Defensive Player of the Year, being his teammate. Jackson was equally excited that another Pro Bowl pass rusher, Nick Bosa, was now on his side.

Jackson noted he was interested last month when he heard about 49ers wide receiver Deebo Samuel's trade request. Now? He's invested.

"I'm telling (Steele), 'Man, we need Deebo back,'" Jackson said. "A couple (of weeks) ago, I would have been like, 'Dang, Deebo wants to leave the 49ers.' That's crazy. Now, it's like, 'That my teammate.' So it's like, 'C'mon, Deebo. C'mon back.' ... It's just crazy how life changes."

Jackson's physical ability is part of package that includes 34-inch arms and a wingspan of 82  $\frac{5}{8}$  inches. Jackson has a larger wingspan than all but one of the 10 pass rushers drafted ahead of him, falling short of Georgia's Travon Walker (84 $\frac{1}{4}$ ), the No. 1 overall pick. Only Walker (35 $\frac{1}{2}$ ) and Penn State's Arnold Ebiketie (34  $\frac{1}{8}$ ), selected 38th overall, have longer arms.

Jackson's college production was relatively puny: He had 12.5 sacks and 25 tackles behind the line of scrimmage in his three-season, 28-game career.

Part of that was tied to his fluctuating weight and positions. In his first season, when he weighed 275 pounds, he played defensive end, had career highs in sacks (5.5) and tackles for losses (11.5) and was named a Freshman All-American. In his second season, under a new defensive coordinator, he also played outside linebacker and weighed around 265 pounds.

Then, before his final season, Jackson's weight plummeted to 218 pounds after a series of medical issues: He tested positive for the coronavirus, had a tonsillectomy and also underwent turbinate reduction surgery, a procedure in which nose cartilage is removed to improve breathing.

After playing at 245 pounds last year, he's now around his freshman weight. And he's poised to play his freshman position, defensive end in a 4-3 defense, with the 49ers.

Jackson will arrive at next week's rookie minicamp unpolished, but his high-end draft status makes him unlike most of the edge rushers Kocurek has coached since he was hired in 2019. Bosa, the No. 2 pick in 2019, is the only other edge rusher the 49ers have selected among their 30 picks in the past four drafts.

"We have the best D-line coach in the NFL," Ahmad said. "So if you give him someone who has that type of explosiveness, movement and lower-body looseness, it's going to be fun to watch."

Jackson admits he didn't have fun watching the start of the draft, when his hopes of being selected in Thursday's first round were extinguished. And his mood didn't improve when he wasn't among the first 28 picks of Friday's second round.

But then the 49ers ended his wait, setting off a celebration that included his flip and series of congratulatory texts that included a message from one of his new teammates, Bosa.

"That was wild right there," Jackson said. "I almost jumped back in the pool after that one."

Kyle Juszczyk

Why fullback Kyle Juszczyk says 'there's no better fit' for him than the 49ers

By Chris Biderman
March 18, 2021

Many NFL players dream of hitting free agency. It's a chance to test the open market and have multiple teams bid for your services. It can often drive up a player's price, which is welcome news to the player and his bank account. Just ask left tackle Trent Williams, who early Wednesday morning landed a six-year, $138 million deal with the 49ers as multiple teams coveted him.

But San Francisco's fullback Kyle Juszczyk didn't need to hit the open market. The unrestricted free agent knew where he wanted to land from the outset. So he agreed to a new five-year deal with San Francisco on Sunday evening, hours before the league's negotiating window opened Monday morning. It would have allowed Juszczyk to field offers from other teams like the New York Jets, who hired San Francisco's former passing game specialist Mike LaFleur as offensive coordinator, and potentially drive up his asking price from the 49ers.

"Honestly, there's no better fit in the league for me than San Francisco, just to be completely honest," Juszczyk said on a Zoom call Wednesday. "Kyle (Shanahan) ... he puts together the perfect system for me to play in. And for me to go anywhere else, have to uproot my life, really, sell my house in California, find a new spot, have all new teammates, (and) begin the whole process over again ... this late in my career, there was a certain part of me that didn't want to do that. And so if I could get that number I was happy with in San Francisco, I was just going to roll with it and just continue in a place that I'm so happy to be in."

The number was a five-year contract worth up to $27 million with $10 million in guarantees. It made Juszczyk, who turns 30 in April, the highest paid fullback in history for the second time since 2017. If he plays out the life of his deal, the five-time Pro Bowler will have made $50.5 million over his 13-year career.

Paying a fullback that kind of money is a complicated decision that not many agree with. A number of teams have axed the position altogether, and some would prefer only to have fullbacks signing minimal contracts and not getting eight figures guaranteed.

Shanahan, of course, is an exception. He made adding Juszczyk a priority when he first got hired in 2017 by making him a key member of the team's first free agent class weeks after he was hired. Four years later, that belief hasn't changed.

Juszczyk's versatility makes him emblematic of Shanahan's offense. He can line up outside, catch deep passes downfield, play in the slot, rove as an H-back and line up in the backfield as a traditional fullback. For a team that wants to run the ball effectively as the foundation of its scheme, to set up play action and make things easier on the quarterback, Shanahan has come to view Juszczyk as an essential piece.

"I don't think it's a secret. I think we use the fullback more than anyone in the league," Shanahan said at the 2019 owners meetings in Phoenix. "I'm always going to use the fullback. I believe in it strongly."

Shanahan is considered one of the game's premier offensive minds. But he has zagged against the trend of a league becoming more pass happy. He had no problem calling just eight pass attempts, and 42 runs, during the 37-20 thumping of the Green Bay Packers in the NFC Championship Game after the 2019 season. The 49ers went to the Super Bowl that year running the ball at the second-highest clip in the league, only behind the Baltimore Ravens, who ran quarterback Lamar Jackson 176 times.

For Shanahan, using a fullback is all about dictating things to the defense.

“If you put three receivers out there, then (the defense) can run certain blitzes and stunts where you cannot run the ball,” Shanahan said. “And they can force you to pass and they can force you to do things. When you have a fullback out there, it doesn’t matter how many guys they have in the box, which is nice because if they put a lot of guys in the box it makes it easier to throw.”

The agreement of Juszczyk’s new contract was finalized Sunday, but the parameters came together Saturday, when 49ers CEO Jed York was celebrating his 40th birthday with a party attended by general manager John Lynch and Shanahan, which led to a series of Tweets indicating alcohol might have been flowing.

FaceTime calls were made, of which Juszczyk wasn’t willing to share too many details from out of respect for his bosses. But he said the celebratory mood was emblematic of the reasons he wanted to stay with the 49ers.

“They were very stoked, I was stoked,” Juszczyk said. “They were at Jed York’s 40th birthday party, so the phone got passed around, a lot of congratulations, a lot of cheers, and all those sort of things.

“Honestly, it’s so cool to be a part of that, to get FaceTimes from your owner and your GM and your head coach, and speak with their families and be comfortable. It’s like I’m speaking to my own family, you know? It’s not one of those awkward conversations that’s just, ‘Yes, sir. Yes, sir. We’re going to do great.’ It’s just real conversations and real genuine joy. That’s why I feel so connected to this program.”

49ers fullback Kyle Juszczyk runs on 'drive from within'

By Matt Kawahara
San Francisco Chronicle
February 1, 2020

When 49ers fullback Kyle Juszczyk was a sophomore at Cloverleaf High in northeast Ohio, former teacher and coach Dave Ward said his player would arrive for football film sessions, quietly reach into his gym bag and take out a stack of notecards.

“He was taking notes on every player that would affect his play the next night,” Ward said. “He was making notes about steps they’d take, tendencies they had, tells they had.”

When Juszczyk was a senior, the team held a banquet. And Juszczyk, former Cloverleaf coach Kevin Gault recalled, showed up carrying a full filing cabinet drawer.

“He’d taken notes on every player he’d played against,” Gault said, “and he passed them down to the underclassmen. They were better than the scouting reports we had.”

Now in the NFL, Juszczyk’s cerebral approach is a gift that keeps giving — allowing the 49ers to use the versatile so-called “offensive weapon” in a variety of alignments and formations as a linchpin of the running game that has helped carry them to the Super Bowl on Sunday.

How extensive are Juszczyk’s responsibilities in the offense from week to week? Before the NFC Championship Game against the Packers, 49ers head coach Kyle Shanahan said coaches need to be mindful at times of not overloading Juszczyk in the game plan.

“We put a lot on him — and we haven’t put too much on him yet,” Shanahan said. “He’s been able to handle it each time. I’ll say that’s because of his Harvard education. But he’s a hell of a football player who doesn’t get nervous about anything. And he works very hard throughout the week to understand everything.”

Juszczyk’s contributions aren’t exactly unsung — he was voted to the Pro Bowl for the fourth time this season — but they can go unquantified. Juszczyk does not have a rushing attempt or a catch in these playoffs. This season, he totaled three carries for 7 yards and 20 receptions for 239 yards.

Given the 49ers’ affinity for two-back sets, though, Juszczyk has been on the field for 90 of 126 offensive snaps in the postseason. And he has often been lead blocker for a rushing attack that gained 471 yards in wins over the Vikings and Packers.

Last week, Juszczyk, a former high school wildcat quarterback who had 22 touchdown catches at Harvard, was asked if he ever feels unfulfilled playing 50 snaps in a game without touching the ball.

“No,” Juszczyk said. “Because usually we’ve won that game.”

Those who knew a younger Juszczyk might recognize the resolve.

Gault met Juszczyk long before coaching him. As a third-grader, Juszczyk began showing up to Cloverleaf practices “every day” to watch his older brother. So Gault made him a manager.

“He wasn’t like a normal third-grader,” Gault said. “He was just such a mature kid.”

When Juszczyk reached high school, Gault said, Cloverleaf football would hold training sessions at 6 a.m., five days a week, in the offseason. Juszczyk also played basketball and was a thrower in track and field. But he didn’t skip the early morning workouts.

Basketball “game day or not, he was there at 6 o’clock in the morning,” Gault said.

Ward taught Juszczyk at age 12 and describes him as having “a sense of determined purpose.” A few years later, Ward said, Juszczyk visited his classroom carrying several early college recruiting letters.

“He said, ‘Hey Coach, you got a minute? I got some stuff in the mail and I’m not sure exactly how we should go with this.’”

Ward, an influential figure for Juszczyk who officiated the fullback’s wedding last summer, said that began a custom of weekly visits while Juszczyk was at Cloverleaf that expanded into “just talking about life stuff.”

“He was already there so this has nothing to do with me, but we’d talk about integrity, what it means to be a man as far as being a husband and a father, what your word means, those kinds of things,” Ward said.

By his senior year, Juszczyk had grown from a 135-pound freshman to nearer his current listed size (6-foot-1, 235 pounds) and was playing multiple positions on offense as well as linebacker. Going into that year, Cloverleaf had never made the playoffs. In its regular-season finale, Cloverleaf faced undefeated Highland High with a playoff spot on the line.

In double overtime, with Cloverleaf in position to try a game-winning field goal, Gault called a direct snap to Juszczyk to place the ball in the middle of the field.

“He says, ‘I’m going to score, coach,’” Gault said. “We said, ‘No you’re not.’”

Juszczyk took the snap and ran for the winning 16-yard touchdown.

“I shook my head and said, ‘I’ll be damned, he’s going to succeed no matter what,’” Gault said.

In a bit of foreshadowing, Juszczyk’s versatility caught the eye of Harvard head football coach Tim Murphy, who works with the program’s tight ends and H-backs.

“You could see his physicality, you could see his athleticism,” Murphy said. “You could envision he would make a sort of perfect H-back for us.”

Juszczyk received few Division I offers and said other schools wanted him to play linebacker. At Harvard, Juszczyk moved around the offense, lining up as an in-line tight end, a fullback, in the slot and out wide. Murphy said players who fill that role at Harvard often don’t grasp the full skill set until their junior season.

“He took to it right away,” Murphy said. “He was such a perfectionist — a tough, physical kid, but also a perfectionist — that he mastered all of those positions for us at a very young age.”

While Juszczyk spent his first four NFL seasons with Baltimore, the lineage to the 49ers is clear. According to Sharp Football Stats, the 49ers this season used a fullback on 26 percent of their offensive snaps, most in the NFL. But Juszczyk played nearly 37 percent of the offensive snaps and said he views his hybrid capacity with the 49ers as “the same thing I really did in college.”

Juszczyk said Shanahan’s game plans “count on me to make a lot of adjustments,” and acknowledged “there are tougher weeks than others.”

“But after a day or two of getting to absorb it, usually I don’t have a problem with it,” he said.

In attending Harvard, where he majored in economics, and adopting a fullback position that has phased out of many NFL offenses, Juszczyk said he “actually did” see a route to an NFL career.

“I wasn’t going to tell people that early on,” Juszczyk said. “I just wanted to get my foot in the door in any way possible. ... I (thought), as long as I can get eyes on me, I know that I can show something that someone in the NFL is going to say, ‘This guy can be valuable for us.’”

Those words would likely resonate with Ward, who will be on hand in Miami on Sunday to see Juszczyk play in his first Super Bowl.

“Kyle’s drive from within was what set him apart from a lot of people,” Ward said.

“I always thought he had a vision in his head that maybe only he could see at that point. And he was always working toward that, quietly.”

Javon Kinlaw

49ers' Kinlaw, big man with small ego, good-naturedly explains growing pains

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
August 19, 2020

Ask the 49ers for their initial impressions of rookie defensive tackle Javon Kinlaw and a theme emerges.

Let's see if you can pick up on it.

"Oh, man, he's just a specimen," guard Laken Tomlinson said.

Pass rusher Nick Bosa: "He's one of the biggest humans I've ever seen in person."

And running back Jerick McKinnon: "He has a big upper body. Big lower body. Big quads. Everything on him is just big."

Kinlaw, the No. 14 overall pick, is listed at 6-foot-5 and 319 pounds on the 49ers' roster, but maybe they are using his measurements from middle school?

Kinlaw should be measured in square feet. He weighed 10 pounds, 8 ounces at birth and noted Tuesday that's he always been bigger than his peers. However, the man with gas-hose arms (34  $\frac{7}{8}$  inches) and oil-drum thighs figured he'd finally blend in when he met his NFL teammates at training camp last month.

"Honestly, coming in, I thought I was going to be like another guy," Kinlaw said. "But I'm coming in and I'm looking like, 'OK, dang, I'm the biggest guy.' But just because I'm big that doesn't always mean (much) because everyone is strong. Everybody is big. It's all about technique."

As Kinlaw hinted, he has yet to have an outsized performance during the first four practices of training camp. He hasn't consistently flashed while working with the second team, although there have been moments when it's clear why the 49ers coveted him.

On Tuesday, for example, he twice faced Tomlinson, the 315-pounder who's one of the 49ers' strongest players, in a one-on-one pass-rushing drill. The result, which probably registered on the Richter scale, had Tomlinson giving up significant ground against Kinlaw's bull-rush.

Right guard Daniel Brunskill has likened blocking Kinlaw to "hitting a wall." However, Kinlaw also has hit a wall during steamy practices against an offense that stretches out defenses with outside-zone runs.

"Like every rookie, it's just a different feel when you get on the practice field, especially when you go against an offense like ours who moves at such a fast pace, who make you run as a defensive line," defensive coordinator Robert Saleh said. "It's not a power game that you've got to play. It's more of a speed game. For him, he's like every rookie. It's the fourth day of camp. Legs are probably getting a little bit heavier. But we're excited to have him."

Kinlaw's assessment of his performance?

"I'd be lying if I thought it was good," he said. "But I'm making improvements. That's the main thing."

Say this: Kinlaw has made great strides as an interview subject.

On Tuesday, his first meeting with the media since his buttoned-up Q&A session on his draft night in April, Kinlaw was funny, engaging and displayed a humility not often displayed by college All-Americans and first-round picks.

His thoughts on facing Tomlinson?

"I'll tell you what, the other day he wore me out," Kinlaw said. "I'm used to playing bully ball in college, but it's like everyone here is strong. And then they're playing with good pad level. ... (I'm going after Tomlinson) and his head is below my sternum."

When asked if defensive line coach Kris Kocurek has eased him in by limiting him in individual drills, Kinlaw laughed: "Coach put me in the fire off the rip. He threw me in the fire since Day 1. ... It isn't a limiting thing."

And his impressions of the profane and high-decibel Kocurek? "He's a mad man," Kinlaw said, smiling.

George Kittle

Me and my robot: George Kittle and his unique offseason training partner

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
February 18, 2021

George Kittle has a sweet, new, 75-acre spread outside of Nashville that will have a little bit of everything: A weight room, an indoor field, an outdoor field and a recovery room. Oh, and a football-throwing robot.

He's actually been working with that last item for a while. The 49ers tight end first came across the device, called the Seeker and produced by Monarc Sport, when he was a junior at Iowa and the machine was in its infant stages. Back then, there were wires and motors hanging off of it, and the interface was through a laptop computer.

Today, it's portable and sleek, there's a touchscreen and GPS-like tracking, and it can throw — including some wicked fastballs — to all corners of a football field. Kittle liked it so much, he became an investor. Perhaps it's no coincidence that a handful of NFL tight ends, including the Chargers' Hunter Henry, the Steelers' Eric Ebron and the Lions' T.J. Hockenson are among the early adopters. Hockenson, who also played at Iowa, will be training with Kittle in Nashville this offseason.

"I don't have to drive somewhere," Kittle said during a call from his new offseason home. "I don't have to wait on a quarterback to show up and get warmed up. I can get out of bed and go downstairs and just turn it on. And I can catch 150 footballs before breakfast."

Kittle initially got a Seeker to augment his training. But it became essential when the pandemic hit last year. Gyms closed, local fields were off limits, social distancing was encouraged. Kittle was living in a neighborhood home in Nashville at the time with his wife, Claire, his parents and his sister. He lifted weights in a makeshift gym in the garage and caught passes in the backyard.

Kittle made the throwing sessions a family affair. Unlike a traditional JUGS machine, which is fed footballs one at a time, the Seeker can fire six in one clip and discharge them in 10 seconds. But the balls still must be loaded into the magazine, which is where Kittle's family came in. It was as if the Kittles were manning the cannons on the side of the frigate during the Napoleonic Wars.

"We got pretty efficient at it," he said. "We got 150 footballs in under 30 minutes a couple of times. We were flying. And that was really fun."

Kittle said his favorite program is called the gauntlet, one in which he's standing still and the Seeker fires passes to various points on his body.

"It's randomized," he said. "I'm in a stationary spot, but I can get a ball that's three feet above my head and a ball that's on my toes, a ball that's on the right side of my knee, a ball that's in my stomach, that's at my face. It's just an entire array."

His new home will give him the space to experiment with other features, including a route-running mode. If the 49ers tight end wants to work on breaking to the outside and catching passes just before the sideline, the Seeker can handle that, too.

During the 2011 scouting combine, soon-to-be 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick edged out Cam Newton by throwing a football 59 mph. Now and then, strong-armed NFL passers like Patrick Mahomes and Aaron Rodgers might launch passes that exceed 60 mph.

The Seeker is capable of producing 100 mph passes, although Monarc Sport co-founder Igor Karlicic said the company has dialed back the maximum speed to 75 mph for safety's sake.

“We were actually training with Danny Amendola one day in Austin and he was asking to receive passes at 61 (mph),” Karlicic said. “And 61 is terrifying. If you’re standing right in front of it 30 yards away and you’re anticipating a 61 mph, it’s sensational. And Danny wanted it in stride, in a route at 61 mph and it was really next level. We’re in awe of what these athletes are doing and we’re trying to enable what their unique minds come up with.”

Kittle said his Seeker is usually throwing passes at 50 to 55 mph, but he’ll crank it up past 60 mph before he calls it quits for the day.

“And that’s for hand strength right at the end,” he said. “The 60-plus (mph) is very seldom. But it’s fun sometimes just to see who can do it.”

Both Karlicic and Kittle said the goal isn’t to replace the quarterback. Kittle, after all, is best friends with fellow Nashville area resident C.J. Beathard, and the ultra-gregarious tight end always prefers to train with others. Beathard, in fact, also was an early investor in the device.

But Kittle also noted that human quarterbacks aren’t always available on a whim and that their arms will get tired over time. If Kittle is working out on his new outdoor field with buddies like Hockenson, 49ers tight end Charlie Woerner and Packers tight end Robert Tonyan, it might be tough for any flesh-and-blood quarterback to deliver the 150 passes that Kittle tries to get in a day.

The Seeker also enables a second person to determine the placement of the throws, a function that allows Kittle to engage the prankster side of his personality.

“It’s fun,” he said. “If I want to mess with my boy Rob Tonyan, I can throw at his feet four times in a row, then two at his face and just have a good time with it.”

The Saints recently became the first NFL team to get a Seeker and the company last week delivered one to Northwestern, the alma mater of Karlicic and co-founder Bhargav Maganti. Iowa, SMU, Oklahoma, LSU and Virginia are among the other programs that have one. Some of these teams have agreements with Monarc. Otherwise, the device costs $62,500.

Karlicic noted that the Seeker can produce left- and right-handed passes, can launch a ball end over end and, with the velocity up to 75 mph, can mimic punts and kickoffs. There’s a video of receiver Mohamed Sanu, who was briefly with the 49ers in 2020, setting up his Seeker in his front yard so he can catch punts in his backyard.

What it can’t do is feather passes between linebackers and defensive backs, put nuance into the spiral or perfectly mimic the characteristics of specific quarterbacks. Well, it can’t do those things yet. Developing a robotic Tom Brady or Russell Wilson is the ultimate goal, Karlicic said.

“That’s the dream, right?” he said. “If you’re somewhere down the roster on the Seahawks, how valuable would it be to immediately be able to emulate that chemistry with Russell Wilson, your starting quarterback? To be able to get those reps when Russell himself isn’t going to be wanting to throw them? Absolutely. That’s really what we’re trying to do.”

How George Kittle transformed from 200-pound Iowa tweener to All-Pro tight end

By Scott Dochterman
The Athletic

Once a year, usually when the leaves turn colors and the temperatures fall, the Krieger family gathers at a log cabin in southeast Iowa and its number of attendees approach the population of many nearby communities.

Bub and Lucky Krieger had 10 daughters — no sons — and almost all of them and their children return to a site called “Kamp Krieger” every year for a day of fellowship. For Bub and Lucky’s grandchildren, Kamp Krieger often was filled with day-long battles of whiffle ball that included some of the region’s best athletes.

Among the cousins smacking the plastic ball include San Francisco 49ers tight end George Kittle and former Los Angeles Rams tight end Henry Krieger-Coble. They were Iowa football teammates for four seasons. There’s Brad Carlson, who is the University of Iowa’s career leader in home runs and former all-state baseball brothers Jesse and Levi Ney. Older than all of them is Jess Settles, the Big Ten freshman of the year in 1994, who scored 1,611 points in his Iowa men’s basketball career.

“They just love it, and they play it every time they get together,” said Settles, now a basketball analyst with Big Ten Network. “And they talk a lot of trash. They just smash the ball around.”

“At the last one, they got the H-O-R-S-E game going and the shooting competitions, and I had to humble all of them in that. The old gray mare isn’t what she used to be, but she’s still got it.”

Settles brought that up on Twitter in the spring, and immediately Kittle, his younger cousin by 20 years, responded.

“Jess I’m pretty sure you won the first game and lost the next four,” Kittle wrote. He ended his tweet with a pair of laughing emojis.

It’s a tight-knit extended family despite its size held together by the patriarch and matriarch. Bub Krieger, who died in 2011, gave up a pro football career with the Chicago Cardinals in 1940s to run his 160-acre family farm near Mount Union, Iowa. Lucky Krieger, now 97, still lives on the farm. They empowered their daughters to succeed in all facets and definitely in sports.

Kittle’s mother, Jan, was an All-American basketball player at Drake, where she also played softball. Krieger-Coble’s mother, Amy, played softball at Iowa. Every sporting event became a family reunion of sorts when the grandchildren had games. Settles coached Krieger-Coble’s high school basketball team in Mount Pleasant. The family traveled to watch Kittle’s older sister, Emma, play volleyball in high school and college at Iowa and Oklahoma.

It was the same way for a while with Kittle, the San Francisco 49ers’ charismatic All-Pro tight end. As an eighth-grader, his middle school football team played at Mount Pleasant. And the Krieger caravan came to watch him.

“He was just lanky and not a lot of muscle on him,” Settles said. “But he had good hands, he had good quickness. It was just kind of fun to sitting there in the bleachers with Henry and the family, because we basically show up to any event in the area if one of 150 family members is playing in it. It’s kind of a family tradition.”

Family matters to the Krieger family, of which Kittle is a product. So does Iowa, a place where Kittle partially grew up as a youth and then as a man in college. His path to NFL fame wasn’t easy. He was a low-level recruit who wasn’t offered a Division I scholarship until Iowa’s Kirk Ferentz offered him on signing day in 2012.

It took a lifestyle change to elevate Kittle from a mid-level college player three years into his Iowa career to set him on an NFL course. Yet he remained true to himself and those around him to become the star he is today.

“One of my greatest joys as a coach is seeing George be himself and having fun living life and having fun playing football,” said Iowa assistant LeVar Woods, who served as tight ends coach for Kittle’s final two seasons.

Family, football and fun

One constant in Kittle’s five years at Iowa, was his devotion to his family. Before every home game, Kittle would leave one of the Iowa team buses and immediately search for his parents. Once he found them, he gave Jan and Bruce a hug and kiss before tapping the 12-foot bronze Nile Kinnick statue on the way into the stadium.

Also apparent was Kittle’s attraction to fun. One summer day, he was eating in downtown Iowa City when he noticed a wedding party taking pictures.

“Someone screamed at me, ‘Hey Kittle, come take a photo with us for our wedding,’” Kittle said. “So I was in between a bunch of bridesmaids. I enjoyed it. I had no idea who any of them were, but it was fun.”

Kittle was into traditional golf and frisbee golf, often shot pool in the colder months and tried to bowl but was terrible at it. During his junior year, former teammate and current pro wrestler Steve Manders (aka “The Cornbelt Cowboy”) turned Kittle into a WWE fan. Just hours after the Hawkeyes’ Outback Bowl appearance on Jan. 1, 2017, Kittle attended a WWE event in Tampa, Fla., that night.

No matter the environment, Kittle was friendly and outgoing. Settles — and others — have called Kittle “the life of the party.” It didn’t matter if it was a family reunion or an upscale greeting, Kittle was comfortable in any environment. That included dinner with his coaches.

“One of the first times I had the tight ends over when I became tight ends coach, my wife left saying, ‘Who is that skinny kid? He’s a really nice kid. He kept talking to me the whole time. Who is that guy?’” Woods said. “‘That’s George Kittle.’ And the rest is history.

“Now I think everyone sees how he’s able to connect with people and talk with people and leave people with a great impression. Whereas other guys are a little bit more quiet when they’d come over to the coach’s house, a little bit more reserved. George was not that way.”

Kittle’s outgoing personality also was on display his first fall at Iowa. As he approached Hillcrest dormitory where the majority of freshman athletes reside, he saw women’s basketball player Claire Till climb on her moped. She was tall, wore long, black hair and flashed a smile that stopped Kittle at the moped rack.

“She had a helmet and a pink Hawkeye on the front of her moped,” said Claire’s mother, Shelley Till, who is a women’s basketball analyst with Big Ten Network. “And he was giving her crap and said, ‘Oh, hey, nice helmet.’ And she just kind of looked back at him and said, ‘Thanks,’ and made a smirk and drove away.

“According to him, he was really interested in her the moment he saw her, and she wanted nothing to do with him. He will laugh and say that he was in the friend zone for a good eight months.”

They became friends and Kittle regularly asked her out. Claire always shot him down. Finally, on Feb. 3, 2013, a few hours after the women’s basketball team lost a two-point home heartbreaker, they reached a crossroads moment.

“She knew he liked her,” Shelley said. “It’s Super Bowl Sunday and the 49ers are in the Super Bowl, not that he was a 49ers fan at the time, but it’s just the irony of the story. So he’s texting her and so she’s like, ‘Fine, I’m hungry. If you want to take me out for sushi.

“So, he left from watching the Super Bowl and took her out downtown in Iowa City to dinner on Super Bowl Sunday. That was kind of their first official going out together/doing something together where she finally said, ‘Yeah, OK. I’ll let you take me out to dinner.’ It just happened to be she pulled him away from the Super Bowl. So that must mean he really liked her.”

Throughout Kittle’s Iowa tenure, the university ranked either No. 1 or No. 2 in Princeton Review’s annual party school rankings. Kittle helped enhance those rankings. He was active in the Iowa City party scene and it impacted his football trajectory. He wasn’t completely immersed in Iowa’s rigorous offseason training, and it prevented him from seeing the field.

“I think this is well-documented, and George would say all these things to your face, that he struggled early on just adapting to college and college life,” Woods said. “The aspect of being a Big Ten football player he struggled with early on and the kind of the commitment it takes off the field to do that.

“There’s a turning point. He documents it as a conversation he had with (former Iowa linebacker) Pat Angerer as a time when he made a decision, and I think it’s kind of a perfect storm for him.”

Angerer and Kittle are two of Iowa’s biggest personalities over Ferentz’s tenure. Both are engaging and personable. Their college career paths followed a similar wavelength. Angerer was a well-known partier and barely saw the field in his first three seasons at Iowa. In his final two seasons, Angerer developed into an on-field ass-kicker and second-team All-American in 2009, a year when Iowa finished 11-2.

Kittle, a lifelong Iowa fan, knew of Angerer’s exploits and also was aware the linebacker considered quitting midway through his career. Angerer told him the difference was he cut down on the partying and threw his life into football. At the time, Kittle saw his career circling the drain and heeded Angerer’s advice.

“After my freshman year, I got up to about 225 pounds and I got stuck there,” Kittle said. “Leading up to the TaxSlayer Bowl, the HawkSlayer Bowl (a 45-28 loss to Tennessee on Jan. 2, 2015), I got stuck about 225. That was the offseason where I just figured some stuff out.”

Wheel routes

In a family filled with well-known and successful athletes, Kittle had one trait none of his cousins did. “We were all fortunate to have good hands,” Settles said. “We had a passion. Good work ethic. We had that motor that you can’t really teach. But we always came up short for probably one main reason and George finally got it, which is world-class speed. That blows my mind because we don’t have the speed gene in our family.”

When Kittle arrived at Iowa, he weighed 200 pounds and looked like a wide receiver. Ferentz wasn’t sure exactly which position Kittle would play. Defense was a possibility, but the plan was set for him to grow as a tight end.

“George was incredibly fast,” said Woods, who coached linebackers when Kittle arrived before shifting to tight ends coach in 2015. “I remember telling staff on defense, and I kind of got laughed at a little bit by one of the coaches when I said that George Kittle might be one of the top five fastest guys on this football team. Because he would run down on scout kickoff to service that kick return team, and we couldn’t block the guy. He was certainly skinny and wiry like everyone talks about but he was incredibly fast, incredibly athletic and explosive.”

Kittle was fifth on the depth chart as a redshirt freshman in 2013, yet his speed allowed him to reach the field for a few offensive plays per game. He grabbed five passes for 108 yards running one primary pattern, and the defense quickly caught up.

“It was always funny,” Iowa tight end Jake Duzey said. “They probably knew what was coming but George was faster than the guy anyway.”

Through the end of 2014, Kittle played sparingly but brought a new dedication to the field for 2015 spring practice. Krieger-Coble, his cousin, was ahead of him, as was Duzey, both of whom had pro potential. Woods' shift to tight ends allowed Kittle to hear a fresh perspective and a new voice. But the challenge remained the same. It started with run blocking, which former strength coach Chris Doyle impressed upon him on his first day at Iowa.

"I'll never forget it," Kittle said. "It just kind of changed my mindset on the whole thing. I was not a physical player coming into college at all. It's hard to be a good run blocker if you're not physical. When he said that, it kind of changed my whole mindset."

Still, he had to prove it.

"From a run-blocking standpoint, I don't know if a lot of guys really respected George coming off the ball at the time," Woods said. "Whether we're talking about defensive ends or linebackers, I think everyone kind of viewed George as not dominant. Some of that had to do with (the fact) he's a little bit light and then also some of it had to do with maybe not finishing his blocks as much. But I think that changed that spring going into his junior season."

Kittle's fundamentals, along with his growing size and strength, led to dramatic improvement. His explosiveness off the ball coupled with his ability to bring his elbows and knees to drive defenders became apparent. And he put it on full display against stalwart defensive end Drew Ott.

"That spring, going into his junior year, there were a couple of pictures I have burned in my brain of George Kittle," Woods said. "As an offensive staff, we were watching and we were rewinding it. And no one could quite believe it. He was going up against Drew Ott in a 9-on-7 inside run drill, and George comes rolling off the ball and basically — he didn't put Drew on his back — but put Drew off the field. And then he came back and did another one in the same practice. I think that sort of let everyone know this is real, what we're seeing out of George Kittle."

It wasn't an aberration. In his first game against Illinois State, Kittle earned his first pancake block when he drove a defender more than 10 yards off the ball. He did that consistently over his next two seasons, including to his teammates, too.

"I was on scout team and I had to go against George," said current Iowa defensive end Chauncey Golston. "I would try to go as hard as I possibly could and I would just see my cleats. I could just feel my cleats like just sliding in the ground going back."

In 2015, Iowa won its first 12 games, and Kittle caught a team-high six touchdown passes. Krieger-Coble and Kittle combined for 55 catches that year. On Krieger-Coble's senior day, each scored a touchdown. Kittle said playing alongside his first cousin "is still the most fun I've had in football."

"Henry Krieger-Coble has some of the best hands I've ever seen in my life at any level," Woods said. "George is a little bit different in the fact that he could frickin' fly, and he's a matchup nightmare. Some of the things that George has learned and refined, I think more so came with improving his hands, and his hand-eye coordination. He had the physical tools to run and separate from defenders, but just refining some of those things."

Entering his senior season, Pro Football Focus named Kittle, standing 6-foot-4, as college football's best tight end. He maintained his speed and he carried his weight well. In the seventh game that year, a midfoot sprain cost Kittle two games and rendered him ineffective for most of the rest. He struggled to walk but he refused to sit out of the regular-season finale against Nebraska. Kittle caught two touchdown passes that day.

Kittle finished with 47 catches for 737 yards and 10 touchdowns at Iowa. He started 18 games and played in 49.

'He made Claire laugh'

From their Super Bowl sushi dinner onward, Kittle and Claire began to date. They endured one big breakup that coincided with Kittle's major party phase. They reconciled when Kittle became more serious with football and in life. He may have changed his lifestyle but not his personality.

Kittle and a few football friends traveled to Claire's home in Dubuque, Iowa and ate the family completely out of food during one Independence Day weekend. During Claire's final three years of college, she traveled with Kittle to his parents' condo on South Padre Island every May.

"I saw right away that he just he made Claire laugh," Shelley said. "To me, the greatest thing that I noticed right away is they did start out as friends first. And quite frankly, that's why she didn't want to date him because they were such good friends. She didn't want to mess that up.

"I definitely knew she was smitten. But she tried to fight it for a while. But that's good. You've got to make him earn it."

Claire graduated three months after her basketball career concluded prematurely because of knee surgery. She opted to remain in Iowa City for fall 2016 as Kittle finished his final season with the football program. They grew closer.

For the 2017 NFL Draft, Claire's parents joined Kittle's parents and several family members at the Kittles' Coralville home. The 49ers selected Kittle in the fifth round, and Claire moved to California a few months later.

On an off day during training camp in 2018, Kittle and Claire walked down the Twin Lakes State Beach outside of Santa Cruz, Calif. He knelt on the beach. She gasped. Kittle proposed. They married on April 10, 2019, in a small family ceremony.

"If I would put it in a sentence, they make each other better," Shelley said.

Finishing strong

Just 25 miles from Settles' hometown in the mid-1990s, requests often would flood sporting goods stores for his No. 4 Iowa basketball jersey. Settles was a Big Ten star before a back injury derailed two of his seasons and ended his NBA hopes. At the time, Settles' fans would ask for any Iowa basketball artifact just so they could tie themselves to the affable local hero.

Fast forward 25 years. At a mall in Coralville, Iowa, Settles walked in one of the state's largest sporting goods stores and saw a rack full of Kittle jerseys and T-shirts.

"I thought, I've got a couple of my nephews. I've got my daughter," Settles said. "They might not have them back in (stock). I don't want to bother Jan with it. I bought the whole rack.

"I take, let's say, 15 of them up to the cash register. And the lady goes, 'Oh, you're getting some gifts for some people?' I typically don't do this, but I said, 'Yeah, George is my cousin, I want to take care of the family with these.' And man, her face lit up like you wouldn't believe.

"Then the kid next door came over and said George is the starting tight end on his fantasy team. We have this 10-minute conversation about George. So that's kind of what it's become with this celebrity that he has now."

Kittle remains the toast of Iowa City. He has returned on bye weeks to watch games from the sidelines. He recorded a football hype video that resembled a WWE promotion. He watched Claire's younger brother, Riley Till, play basketball at Iowa and received standing ovations from the crowd.

When the 49ers played at Seattle in last year's regular-season finale, Kittle invited Woods and his son, Mason, to join him on the sidelines just two days after Iowa's Holiday Bowl victory in San Diego. Kittle still sends texts to Iowa City-based reporters and treats his extended family members as he did during their whiffle ball tournaments.

“Nothing has changed,” Settles said. “You’re just one of the crew.”

Amid his status as one of the nation’s most interesting and energetic pro athletes, Kittle provides plenty of lessons from his Iowa days. He grew as a player and a person. His persistence was rewarded. He didn’t let adversity hold him back. All of those intangibles resonate.

“George Kittle loves life, and George Kittle loves football,” Woods said. “Those are the things that I think you take away from George. It’s not how you start; it’s how you finish. And it doesn’t necessarily matter where you come from, but it’s what you end up doing with it.”

Free beer, wrestling and Super Bowl memories: Inside George Kittle's garage

By Tory Zawacki Roy

August 1, 2020

Inside the bright sunlit garage of George Kittle's offseason Nashville home is a makeshift gym comprising the usual suspects: a bench in the center, plates, bands and mirrors strung up against the walls.

The interior of his garage -- Kittle's personal air-conditioned bubble, perfect for pandemic social distancing -- is adorned with flags from the University of Iowa, the 2019 Pro Bowl and the United States of America. They're an expression of who the San Francisco 49ers tight end is.

Then, there's the unmistakable crown jewel:

"I've got a StairMaster if you wanna work out," Kittle says, not kidding.

Mixed in with dozens of bottles of Gatorade in the corner of the garage is the occasional Bud Light or Bud Light Seltzer box. And there are plenty more throughout the house.

"You guys want a beer to take home or anything?" Kittle asks the masked and gloved members of the camera crew who have arrived to film the interview. "You guys like seltzer? I get it for free."

That's George Kittle. He is incredibly authentic while simultaneously generous with his time, and with his stuff. Like everyone else, he's just trying to stay safe and keep busy during the pandemic while also, in his case, maintaining his mantra on the field: cero miedo.

Wrestling and the Super Bowl

Underneath the rack station in the corner of the garage are folding chairs from WrestleMania 35 -- literally, Kittle's actual seats from the event -- which he attended in New York last year. On the cushions are collages of the faces of some of its stars, like Ronda Rousey and Dave Bautista.

It's a nod to Kittle's love of WWE, one he professes regularly on Twitter. But one wrestler is missing, the one who inspired Kittle's mantra and his first-down celebration: Mexican superstar luchador, Pentagon.

The gesture is simple, and Kittle encourages everyone in the room to try it: Extend your arm and put three fingers in the air -- your middle finger, ring finger and pinkie -- form an "O" with a closed circle of your thumb and pointer finger. Then swing it down.

If it seems familiar, that's because, of Kittle's 85 catches last season, 53 of them went for first downs. Sitting in the garage and shaking out his first haircut of the pandemic, Kittle recalls exchanging gifts and mutual respect with Pentagon at WrestleMania 34 in New Orleans.

When asked about his gift from Pentagon, Kittle jumps out of his chair quickly to go get it. Two minutes later, he returns to the garage with a bright red and gold luchador mask.

"This is his mask, but he customized it," said Kittle, who gave Pentagon a jersey. "There's a dragon on the side. It's in the 49ers colors. He threw up the number 85 on there for me. It's definitely one of my favorite items that I own."

"Don't ask my wife, but I definitely walk around the house in this thing."

For Kittle, cero miedo -- "zero fear" in English -- isn't just a flashy gesture to annoy his opponents after a first down. It's his attitude. It's an audacious mindset that enables Kittle to see only the positive, especially in how his 2019 campaign ended: the 49ers 31-20 loss to the Chiefs in Super Bowl LIV. A loss, he says, that could be considered the "lowest of lows."

Still for Kittle, there's always an upside.

"The fact that I got to meet The Rock was pretty special," he says.

The pregame introductions for Super Bowl LIV had The Rock, former WWE superstar Dwayne Johnson, introducing players to the crowd and the TV audience with some swagger and some trash talk -- WWE style.

"Straight from the People's Champion himself," Johnson began, while gesturing for Kittle to join him on stage, "allow me to introduce you ... to the People's Tight End."

Kittle pauses to remove the hair tie from the man bun that's been sitting on top of his head, and shakes out his hair again.

"I felt like a little kid meeting a superhero," he says. "That was one of the coolest things about the whole Super Bowl. I took his one bottle of tequila that he had. It was delicious."

The season ahead

George Kittle demonstrates the "cero miedo" sign from his garage in Nashville. Justin Fredericks/ESPN
This offseason hasn't been the best of times for anyone, but Kittle's personal gym -- StairMaster included -- has been a haven during quarantine, his own bubble of safety and isolation where he immunized his body and his mind for the field.

It's a big year for Kittle, who, after back-to-back seasons of 1,000-plus receiving yards, is due for a new contract in the spring.

This week, as he finds himself more than 2,000 miles away in Santa Clara, contemplating what could be a complicated football future, he's already prepared to face whatever comes next.

"When you're playing football, you have to have that zero fear," Kittle says. "Because if you're scared, you're going to maybe not reach out for a ball, because there's a safety in the middle of the field. Or you might not want to make a play because you're going to be hit really hard."

"You have to have zero fear."

The Secret to George Kittle's Creative Destruction

By Kevin Clark
The Ringer
December 19, 2019

George Kittle decided to be a badass one day and never stopped. It happened in the summer of 2017 when his tight ends coach, Jon Embree, told him to stop getting tackled. Everyone agreed this was ludicrous, including 49ers head coach Kyle Shanahan. “He’d say, ‘You can’t go out of bounds there, they can’t tackle you.’ And I’d say, ‘OK, Jon, we get it, but this is kind of ridiculous. You’re going to lose him if you keep saying that when it’s impossible.’”

Embree did not relent. Kittle was, at best, skeptical. “One of the first things he said was never run out of bounds. ‘Turn upfield. They will get out of your way. If they don’t get out of your way, run them over,’” Kittle said. “So I said to him, ‘Well’—he paused—“they are going to tackle me?” But Embree persisted. Again, everyone was quite confused.

“Jon never wavered, because he was doing it to the right guy,” Shanahan said. “George, at some point, thought, ‘You’re right, they can’t tackle me.’”

That “some point” has an exact date: August 19, 2017, in a preseason game against the Denver Broncos. “I turn upfield, and there’s a guy standing there. I said, ‘Screw it, I’m just gonna run,’ and the guy just kind of fell over,” Kittle said. “I ended up in the end zone, and I probably should have been pushed out of bounds. So I thought, ‘Wow, I get it. If you just run at people they just kinda tend to get out of your way.’”

The NFL is one of the most competitive places in human history. Each of its teams is worth a billion dollars. Coaches spend hundreds of hours each week looking for an edge. No sport is as scrutinized or overanalyzed. And sometimes, the league changes when a fifth-round draft pick from Iowa says, “Screw it, I’m just gonna run.”

The guy standing in Kittle’s way in that Broncos game was cornerback Chris Lewis-Harris, whom Kittle trucked right before brushing off a shove from safety Orion Stewart. The names and numbers of the players keep changing, but the play is usually the same: Kittle charging straight ahead and a defender failing to reckon with this fact. I explain that this moment in August 2017 sounds a bit like a superhero origin story. “Learning how it all works,” Kittle said. “Like Spider-Man jumping off a building.”

“Yeah. It does,” Kittle continues as he nods. “And it clicked even more my second year. They do get out of your way. It’s pretty fun.”

It’s outrageous to think that Kittle decided to start breaking tackles and then became the best at it. It’s as if Steph Curry had decided to start launching 3-pointers only a few years ago because a coach told him he might be good at it. Kittle is not only good at avoiding tackles—he is the absolute best in the NFL.

Kittle plays with a frantic energy that has made him the league’s best tight end. Last season, he set an NFL record for receiving yards by a tight end. He blends athleticism and destruction so seamlessly that he’s earned comparisons to Rob Gronkowski, including from the man himself. This year, Kittle is a major part of the offensive engine of the 11-3 Niners, one of the best teams in the league. It is a triumph of self-belief and also a triumph of being 250 pounds, 6-foot-4, and running over 20 mph.

“I just had the sense that people were going to struggle to tackle him,” Embree said. “There is something in him that makes people not want to tackle him.” Well, he was right: According to Pro Football Focus, Kittle had more yards after the catch last season than any wide receiver or tight end the site has ever tracked. In the past two seasons, Kittle has averaged 8.8 yards after the catch per reception. This is not only the most—it’s 1.6 yards per play more than anyone else. Since Kittle entered the league in 2017, no player has more yards after the catch above expectation, according to Next Gen Stats.

“His mind-set is not, ‘I’m going to score,’ or, ‘I want to get as many yards as possible.’ It is, ‘I want to destroy whoever is in front of me,’” receiver Dante Pettis said. “That’s why he stiff-arms and runs people over. He wants to destroy whoever is in the path.”

Niners tackle Mike McGlinchey can speak for everyone: “I have never seen anything like it.”

Kittle can make defenders look like they’ve never attempted a tackle before. When they miss, they sometimes react as if it is the most frustrating thing in the world—perhaps because it is. The last decade of football has featured smaller defensive players, adjusting to faster, spread offenses. Strict limits on tackling in practice, and practice time, has led to, at least anecdotally, worse tackling. Kittle has taken these trends and run them over. He said he wants to run in a way that forces defensive backs into “creative angles.” This is code for an angle in which Kittle will destroy them.

Creative angles led Kittle to a 2018 game against the Broncos. “All of their DBs took creative angles. I don’t think I really got hit at all, and I had like 200 yards,” he explains. Kittle talks about owning defenders in a nonchalant tone, the way most people describe ordering something from Amazon. “You can tell if a guy is running full speed at you at a downhill angle. Yeah, he’s going to bring it on me, and I’ll lower my shoulder, and we’ll see who wins,” Kittle said. But the Broncos, despite being dunked on twice already in this story, are not Kittle’s Washington Generals. He does this to everyone. This brings him to this season’s Saints game in Week 14, which has become his most famous moment on the field. “In the Saints game, I caught the ball, turn upfield. I run at the guy, and he slowed down instead of coming at me. So I knew he was just going to try to push me out of bounds and not be very physical at it. So you run at him and then just kinda run past him. He’s lucky he got my face mask.”

McGlinchey said that Saints game was “Peak George.” If Kittle’s broken-tackle story started against Denver in 2017, it was perfected in New Orleans. On a fourth-and-2, with 39 seconds left and the Niners scrambling to get in position for a game-winning field goal attempt, Kittle not only converted the first down but gained 39 yards, most of which came after the catch. Kittle said he knew the Niners still had timeouts, so he could stay in bounds—that, of course, is all he needed to know. “[The safety] slowed down, and I knew I was going to bring some pain.” He was such a force on the play that Saints safety Marcus Williams grabbed Kittle’s face mask in a bid to bring him down, leading to a 15-yard penalty. The Niners calmly kicked a field goal to win 48-46 in one of the best games of the year.

“He got lucky he held on,” Kittle said of Williams. “Cause I was going to throw him to the ground.”

Watching the play from the backfield was quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo. “Once I saw he had about 2 yards on the guy, it was over, so I just wanted to get him the ball as fast as possible,” he said. “I literally saw him turn it up the field, and I know it sounds crazy, but in my head, I said, ‘Oh, that’s game.’”

On September 22, 2007, Iowa lost 17-13 at Wisconsin. Pat Angerer, a sophomore linebacker, didn’t play despite a long list of Hawkeyes injuries. The coaches burned a freshman’s redshirt instead of playing Angerer. He was devastated. “The next day, I looked in the mirror and said, ‘It’s not their fault, it’s not his fault, it’s your fucking fault.’ I took ownership of where I was at in life and on the field,” said Angerer, who eventually developed into an All-Big Ten selection and a second-round pick in 2010. This game—played by a forgettable Hawkeyes team five years before Kittle even stepped foot on campus—helped change the course of the NFL in 2019.

In 2015, Angerer was back at Iowa working out in the Hawkeyes weight room when Kittle, then a junior, approached him. Even though he played a different position, Kittle was in the same scenario that Angerer had been in. The Hawkeyes had played Tennessee in a bowl game a few months prior, and younger players got reps ahead of Kittle. He felt uncertain about his career and asked Angerer what changed for him. “I stopped being an asshole,” Angerer told him. “I quit getting drunk and getting in fights downtown. I made Iowa football the most important thing in my life.” Kittle said that was the moment when he started to focus on football. “Whether it was the partying stuff, or whatever, just chilled out on that,” he said.

Embree said he likes players who have been on a “journey.” If they’ve struggled or failed at some point in their careers, they can handle his coaching style. “And the pressure of trying to not get cut,” Embree said, which he finds crucial to motivating players. Kittle has been on a journey. I asked him what he considers to be the biggest moments in that journey, and he pointed to Angerer's advice, Embree's directive, and his first day on Iowa's campus, when strength coach Chris Doyle told him that if he couldn't run-block, he would never play at Iowa.

"I didn't see this as a seminal moment," Doyle told me. "It was just, 'Hey, George, you're going to have to be a better run blocker if you're going to be a tight end, like the guys who came before you. Dallas Clark, C.J. Fiedorowicz. I don't think he quite understood what it was going to take."

Doyle said he'll never forget Kittle's weigh-in as a freshman on June 8, 2012. "He was 200 pounds," Doyle said. "When he left, he was 6-4, 250." Doyle said Kittle was offered a scholarship to play at Iowa based on his potential—he was undersized, and his high school didn't feature him a lot in the passing game. Kittle's father, Bruce, is a former Iowa captain who taught George at an early age how to block and worked in pads with George as early as elementary school. But it wasn't until Iowa that it all came together. Once Kittle became an adept run blocker, and after the conversation with Angerer, he finally learned to love contact. "I used to be so soft in high school. I avoided contact. I played free safety in a Cover-1 and was back all the time. It was my decision to change that," Kittle said. "I realized if I kept playing soft, I was never going to see the field. I have choice words for my 18-year-old self."

In his first start in 2015, against Illinois State, he started hitting people. And he loved it. "I had a base block of a guy who was an [FCS] All-American the year before. I drove him 15 yards back and planted him on his back, and I said, 'Well, I'm just going to do that every single time now.'" He learned at that moment how much he enjoyed inflicting damage. He thought that very few players played physically for the entire game, and there was an inefficiency that he could exploit.

"I might get got once or twice. But you're going to get got the whole game," Kittle said.

Embree said Kittle loves wrestling, and Embree previously coached a wrestling fan in Browns tight end Gary Barnidge. "If you like wrestling, you like contact and physical things, and I wanted to play into that," Embree said. "If you're saying, 'Hey, this is cool, this [wrestler] flipping,' then it's about unleashing that. Unleashing the wrestler and bringing it out on the field. You have to give guys the latitude to be who they are. When you see George with the ball, he's being who he is."

Embree thinks three plays describe Kittle: Denver in 2017, the Saints catch from this season, and a 2018 Rams game in which Kittle briefly carried one Ram on his back and stiff-armed cornerback Marcus Peters. "Now, I think, 'Just run through them, and they'll avoid you.' It's OK. They don't have to tackle me," Kittle said. "I'm going to make them tackle me, and if they want to tackle me, I'm going to make it as hard as I possibly can on them to see if they want to keep tackling me." 49ers fullback Kyle Juszczyk said he marvels at how often Kittle approaches what appears to be a "nice collision" and keeps running without receiving much of a hit. And when there is contact, he's OK with that.

"There are times when a receiver flinches before he's about to be hit. George never does that," said tight end Garrett Celek. "He never flinches. He's never afraid to put himself in a vulnerable position to make a play. George is a savage."

Bruce Kittle, a former assistant at Oklahoma, told me he did not see his son progressing this quickly. "He's almost a completely different guy from OTAs in 2017 until now. No one saw this coming." I heard George's mom, Jan, through the phone, so Bruce corrected his previous statement that no one saw this coming. "Except his mom," Bruce said.

You'll often hear about Kittle's relentless positivity. It's mostly true, except I did see him get upset once in our limited time together, when a 49ers employee brought up Game of Thrones, a show he adores. "I completely ignore Season 8 ever happened—worst season in the history of television. That was awful," Kittle said. He said he was pissed off just talking about it.

Kittle has a lot of takes. "I'm a Lord of the Rings junkie. Sam and Frodo are the two best, their whole journey, everything they go through. Love Aragorn. I just like the mystical part of it—the huge battles," said Kittle, whose father read him the books at least three times. “I’m a diehard Harry Potter guy. Not really the movies. The books are the best.”

Kittle’s wife, Claire, loves Madam Secretary, but he doesn’t. After a back-and-forth about popular television shows, we get to Homeland. “Oh, Homeland,” Kittle said, exasperated. He brings up the show’s main character, a CIA agent named Carrie Mathison, played by Claire Danes. “Everytime I watch an episode I say, ‘OK, she should be fired. I can’t get through it.’”

Given Kittle’s strong opinions about television, it should not be much of a surprise that Garoppolo said Kittle often says things that have nothing to do with football on the sideline. “There are times I say, ‘What the hell?’” Garoppolo said with a smile. Fellow tight end Ross Dwelley said Kittle could not stop speaking in a faux-Canadian accent on the sideline for a time because of his love of a viral YouTube video from Pardon My Take. “He does it a lot. He really thinks he’s Canadian,” Dwelley said.

Kittle has a massive tattoo of Heath Ledger’s Joker on his arm. (He loved the most recent Joker starring Joaquin Phoenix. “Super dark and depressing. I don’t know if I can ever watch it again, but it was incredible.” He says he thinks Mark Hamill was a great Joker, and he stores the classic Batman cartoons on his phone for road trips.) He slaps the tattoo when he’s on the field to get focused. He plans to get an even bigger, Halo-themed tattoo on his back in 2020. He’s become fanatical, he said, about his routine in the past few years and has to spend his nights on Friday and Saturday flipping a switch to get focused for the game. “I headbutt a wall, I puke, and the Joker tattoo is kind of a switch for me. I slap it before plays. I’m big into the visual parts,” Kittle said.

At Iowa, he used to put a piece of red tape on his arm as a “reset” button that he’d hit after a mistake. He thinks that football is 90 percent mental and that everyone who makes the league is talented, so the difference between greatness and mediocrity is in a lot of small edges, most of them mental. He spends three hours by himself the night before games. He meditates, he takes a salt bath, and he visualizes—his father, Bruce, said George has been doing that since about fifth grade. Bruce said it’s easier to, say, go into New Orleans in front of a loud crowd and dominate if you’ve already been there in your head.

SomeSome marriages seem to be created in the football heavens. It seems impossible for anyone but Andy Reid to coach Patrick Mahomes and that perfectly designed Chiefs offense. It boggles the mind that Drew Brees was ever coached by someone other than Sean Payton, who masterfully maps out the Saints’ efficient offense. Kittle and Shanahan are in that category: No one creates space like Shanahan, and no one does more with space than Kittle. Shanahan uses play-action effectively, and Kittle is open on a surprisingly regular basis for such a dominant player.

“I always mess with him that he can improve so much more on his routes, and he can, but most of the time, it doesn’t matter with George,” Shanahan told me. “He’s proven me wrong on that. It’s like, ‘Yeah, I could run a better route here, but just give me the ball in my hands because I care what happens after the catch.’ A lot of times, that doesn’t work out, but with George, it does. He’s willed his way into a lot of situations. The harder it gets, the more clutch he ends up being.”

Shanahan was looking for a pass-catching tight end in 2017 when he saw Kittle on tape. “He didn’t do that a lot in college, but he looked good when he did,” Shanahan said. “We couldn’t believe how good of a run blocker he was. Then we realized that everyone was calling him a run blocker because he didn’t have the passing stats. We were impressed with how all-around he was.”

“He’s willed his way into a lot of situations. The harder it gets, the more clutch he ends up being.” —Kyle Shanahan

Kittle, Shanahan said, “allows us to do stuff in the run game we haven’t done before because of how much he can handle on his own, whether it’s gap schemes or outside zone schemes.”

Having a huge person running very fast on the field is not an accident for the Niners. They have exploited a trend: As the league has gotten smaller, they’ve emphasized size.

“Defenses are always trying to compensate for the offenses, which means smaller, faster linebackers. There are three-receiver sets; teams are spreading the ball out. We put two running backs out there a ton, 22 personnel, two tight ends. Those linebackers have to match up with us in smaller spaces, and we feel like that gives us an advantage to push us around,” the team’s fullback, Juszczuk, said. “As the game progresses, I think it wears teams down. With George, it’s basically pick your poison. Guys good at the run game and blocking like that usually can’t run routes like that.” The Niners proved their commitment to size when they signed Juszczuk to the biggest-ever deal for a fullback in March 2017.

This dovetails nicely with the Kittle family’s size and offensive line background. Bruce said he was influenced, in part, by his former Hawkeyes coach Kirk Ferentz’s mentor, longtime offensive line coach Joe Moore. Bruce cites Moore’s famous quote: “There is no greater joy in life than moving a man from point A to point B against his will.”

This, of course, has shown up in George. I asked him the best he’s ever felt on a football field. “My senior year against Nebraska,” Kittle said. (He tells me that he has “choice words” for Nebraska football in general, but did not expand.) “We were winning 33-10, all the seniors on the field. We ran eight plays, ran [two tight ends, two running backs] and we ran 23 breeze—which is an inside run zone—toward me eight plays in a row, down the field, at 8 yards a pop, through their face. And on play nine, we ran power load, and I pancaked two guys on the play. That was one of the most satisfying moments for me. We completely physically broke them the entire game. One of my favorite parts was that their defensive end had a big curly mustache, because he thought he was really cool, and I put him on his back like three times. So that was very fun for me.

“I enjoy football,” he said. He talked a bit about the lessons his dad taught him about enjoying the game. Bruce, George said, taught him that “football is its own living, breathing organism. You don’t cut corners and you don’t cheat football, because it will always come and get you. Football is the ultimate truth.”

We know that George does not cut corners to get where he is going. He runs directly through people.”

Does George Kittle ever have a bad day?

By Nick Wagoner
August 19, 2019

It takes George Kittle a full 14 seconds to answer what seems like an easy question.

Two days before the 49ers would end their offseason program this spring, the tight end is lounging in a sleeveless hoodie and athletic shorts, his feet propped on the desk of a PR staffer. One of the breakout stars of the 2018 NFL season has been riffing about his whirlwind rise to fame, his love of professional wrestling, his recent wedding and an upcoming trip to the U.S. Open at Pebble Beach.

Then, a simple question brings him to a screeching halt: Have you ever had a bad day?

Kittle takes his feet off the desk, leans down and thinks about it longer than you'd expect. Finally, he looks up and says, simply: "No."

Sure, he acknowledges, there's been the occasional disappointment, a minor injury here or there, but nothing reaching the level of a full-fledged bad day. In the end? "I'm just grateful I get to play football every single day of my life," Kittle says. "So I'm never really in a bad mood."

Go ahead and groan. The notion of a Ripken-like streak of non-bad days -- that'd be 9,000 and counting for the 25-year-old -- seems impossible. But Kittle might be one of the few who can say it and mean it. Those closest to him struggle to answer the same question. His dad, Bruce, can't remember even one ... maybe that time a girl didn't like him back early in elementary school? Mom Jan says George was disappointed to miss Iowa's 2016 game against Michigan with an injury ... but stops short because the Hawkeyes won, leaving George feeling just fine. Kittle's wife, Claire, draws a blank. College coaches such as Iowa's Kirk Ferentz and Chris Doyle and high school coach Greg Nation? Stumped, stumped and more stumped.

Only close friend and former Iowa teammate Steve Manders manages anything close to a real answer. He points to a rough spring practice between Kittle's sophomore and junior years, when the Iowa coaching staff laid into Kittle for not being serious enough about football. Manders tried telling him later that anybody can have a bad practice, but Kittle jumped out of his chair and vowed to cut back on the partying and go all-in on football. "The lightbulb kind of hit on, and ever since then it just took off and he never looked back," Manders says. "He just kind of created his own destiny."

Now, entering his third season in professional football, Kittle has become one of the league's most unlikely rising stars. The 2017 fifth-round pick had 48 catches in four years at Iowa -- then last year exploded for 88 receptions and 1,377 yards, an NFL record for receiving yards by a tight end in a season. It also included 855 yards after the catch, the most of any player since ESPN started tracking the stat in 2006. Combine that game-breaking ability with a fun-loving, larger-than-life personality and it's little wonder Kittle is already drawing comparisons to another exuberant tight end: Rob Gronkowski.

Like Gronk, Kittle enjoyed every second of his breakout season, which included wearing a Deion Sanders Falcons jersey for a postgame interview with Prime Time himself, crushing the local Panda Express every Monday with receiver Trent Taylor and safety Adrian Colbert (he ordered the same thing every time: orange chicken, chow mein, fried rice and crab Rangoon, unless the honey walnut shrimp looked strong that day -- "when it's good, it's really good"), and the week he finally followed through on a promise to Claire to dress nicer on game days ... by switching from wrestling T-shirts to a Hawaiian shirt adorned with toucans.

49ers quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo had a locker near Gronkowski in New England and now finds himself in the line of vision of the Stone Cold Steve Austin figure that sits atop Kittle's locker. He doesn't shy away from the idea that Kittle has some Gronk-like traits.

"It's one of those things that's contagious," he says. "Both of them are the guy in the room that is picking everyone up, getting everyone laughing and feeling good and everything. I'm glad we've got a guy like that."

EVERY SATURDAY DURING the season, a letter for George Kittle arrives at 49ers headquarters. The next day, Kittle makes reading it his top priority. The letters are from his father, usually three or four pages long with a mix of notes about the upcoming opponent, observations from the previous week's game, a photo or two and what Bruce calls "significant" (and often vulgar) trash-talk. The letters are themed-things like staying focused on the moment and savoring the opportunity to play football -- and usually feature a cameo from comic book heroes like Batman or Spider-Man.

"That dude is Ric Flair on the football field. When the lights come on and he comes out of the locker room, he flips that switch and he's in that same place until the end of the game. And then he goes back to being George Kittle."

On the team bus, George works his way through the week's letter, feeding off every word. Bruce, a big proponent of sports psychology, has taught George the importance of having an alter ego. There's George, and then there's Football George, agent of on-field chaos -- and the bus ride gets him where he needs to go in more ways than one. "That's kind of like the first step to my switch," Kittle says. "I read that and I know, 'Hey, it's game day, lock in.'"

George has kept every letter since his father began writing them eight years ago, storing them in his nightstand. His favorite came last season before a Thursday night game against the Raiders. That letter emphasized the importance of ending the Bay Area rivalry on a high note before the Raiders move to Las Vegas. Kittle finished with four catches for 108 yards and a TD, including a one-handed grab, in a blowout win.

Bruce's letters began as a somber remembrance of former Oklahoma linebacker Austin Box. In 2011, Bruce was Oklahoma's tight ends and tackles coach when Box died of a painkiller overdose. In the aftermath, Bruce found out that Box's dad had written his son a letter before every game since Austin was in seventh grade. He decided to do the same for George. George calls Bruce his best friend, and the letters remain integral in keeping them connected when distance gets in the way.

On the way to the field, Kittle puts his helmet on, delivers a head-butt to a wall -- no, really -- and the transformation is complete. George is a die-hard Batman fan but considers his game-day self to be more like the Dark Knight's archenemy. "I don't try to channel all the Joker, obviously, because he has some issues," Kittle says, unleashing a diabolical laugh of his own. "Creating a little bit of chaos is just kind of what I try to do. I'm just trying to be the most outgoing, craziest person on the field."

In an October loss to Green Bay, Kittle delivered a crushing block on a rushing play, planting a Packers defender on the ground. When he got back to the huddle, he was laughing so maniacally that center Weston Richburg turned to him and asked, "What the f--- is wrong with you, dude?"

Kittle says his favorite thing to do in football is move a man from point A to point B against his will. "That dude is Ric Flair on the football field," says Nation, his high school coach. "When the lights come on and he comes out of the locker room, he flips that switch and he's in that same place until the end of the game. And then he goes back to being George Kittle."

KITTLE'S STARDOM HAS always felt like a genetic fait accompli; sports are woven into the Kittle fabric. Bruce played at Iowa and was a co-captain of the 1981 squad that went to the Rose Bowl. Jan was a standout basketball player at Drake who was also on the softball team. Sister Emma played volleyball at Iowa and Oklahoma. Cousins Jess Settles, Henry Krieger-Coble and Brad Carlson are, respectively, one of the top 10 scorers in Hawkeyes basketball history; a standout tight end at Iowa who has spent time in the NFL; and Iowa's career home run king.

That tight family bond is also at the heart of Kittle's unrelenting loyalty to the many friends he considers family. Kittle's first move after he received his signing bonus in 2017 was to pay for the medical expenses of a friend's mother in Oklahoma. More recently, Kittle sent a signed Pro Bowl jersey to his tight ends coach at Iowa, LeVar Woods, thanking him for his help.

In the offseason, Bruce, Jan and Emma all moved from Iowa to Nashville to be close to George and Claire's offseason home. The move was hard on Jan because it meant leaving their farm and many family members behind. "He called me and he goes, 'Mom, you have always told us that wherever we are together as a family, that's what home is, and we're all gonna be together, so it's going to be OK,'" Jan says. "He always sees the positive. Sometimes you want to say, 'Come on, George,' but he really does."

Before their departure, the Krieger family reunion took place with 113 of a possible 128 relatives attending. And after the extended Kittle family arrived in Nashville, George and Claire threw an impromptu housewarming party to celebrate the move. On short notice, 70 people from all over the country showed up, including current and former NFL players, as well as friends from as far back as George's ninth-grade basketball team in Iowa.

"We're all just hanging out, like very low-key in our backyard," Claire says. "And he's hopping around to everybody, talking to them, laughing. It's just everybody has a good time when he's around, honestly."

FOR A GUY who has never had a bad day, Kittle's offseason contained a bunch of very good ones. From his first Pro Bowl to the Super Bowl -- he was a pitchman for a credit card company -- to the U.S. Open to his honeymoon, Kittle lived the fantasy offseason of a 20-something NFL player, with a truly epic week sandwiched in the middle of it all.

It started with WrestleMania -- his second straight year attending; Kittle is a huge wrestling fan -- and ended with his wedding, which he calls the best day of his life.

Kittle and Claire met in 2012 as freshmen at Iowa. Claire was on the basketball team and one day was getting ready to hop on her moped to head across campus. She had just pulled on her bright pink helmet when Kittle walked up and said, "Nice helmet." A few months later, Kittle and Claire were inseparable; by last year, they were engaged and Claire was planning a 2020 wedding, before they made a very George Kittle decision: Why wait?

Just two days after George, Bruce and Manders got back from WrestleMania in New York City, the Kittle and Till families pulled together the type of intimate, family-only wedding Claire had often dreamed about. They reserved space at M.C. Ginsberg, a custom jewelry store in Iowa City owned by some of Claire's family friends. A local florist came through with a small bouquet; Bruce, an ordained minister, would marry the happy couple; and Jan, a photographer, would handle photos and videos. The day before the wedding, however, a little bit of Football George spilled into Everyday George.

Kittle had been wanting to get a tattoo of his alter ego -- the Heath Ledger version of the Joker -- and he wanted to do it at Neon Dragon Tattoo in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, his preferred purveyor of ink. With scheduling conflicts both ways, the day before the biggest day of his life was the only option.

While Claire's brother Riley and Bruce were in favor, Claire, Jan and Emma hated the idea. But Kittle was insistent, and he spent seven hours in the chair while the Joker, complete with bold, red lips, took over most of the inside of his left forearm.

The next morning, surrounded by their inner circle -- just seven other people attended -- Claire married George with his left forearm covered in saran wrap under his long-sleeved white shirt to prevent the tat from bleeding through.

"He's so goofy," Claire says. "At first, I thought he was joking -- he has a lot of ideas that are out there and he doesn't actually go through with them. So at first, I was like, 'Oh my gosh, that's the worst idea you've ever had. I hate that.'"

"But then after he had explained to me all of the meaning behind it and then seeing it in person, it's actually really cool. So I do really like it now. That's just George."

How 49ers' George Kittle will benefit from offseason yoga sessions with sister

By Jennifer Lee Chan
NBC Sports Bay Area
July 27, 2019

Along with speed and strength training, 49ers tight end George Kittle practiced yoga with his sister, Emma, as part of his offseason workout program in Nashville, Tenn.

"I actually hit about three straight weeks of yoga, which was really fun," Kittle said this week as 49ers training camp opened. "Slightly more flexible. Can't you tell I'm limber now?"

Kittle believes that increased flexibility could help as a preventative measure in regards to injuries during the season.

"[It's better] the more flexible you can get, because sometimes when you get tackled, you land in awkward positions and stuff like that," Kittle said. "I have learned that when you're more flexible, stuff like that doesn't happen sometimes, where you just kind of tweak something. Hopefully, that will help me to stay healthy."

While yoga was a new addition to Kittle's offseason program, he has practiced with his sister for a few years.

"It's just something that I've done in the past that I feel has worked for me," Kittle said. "My sister is a yoga teacher, so it makes it pretty easy for me. It's in house."

"I wanted to add something. I don't like to do the same thing over and over. If you stay the same, you're not getting better. So I just tried to add something in, and I think that helped me out a little bit."

"We've been doing yoga together since he was a senior at Iowa," Emma said. "At this point, it's pretty easy to see what's going on with his body. Based off how he is feeling in a particular day, we modify our sessions accordingly."

Emma worked alongside Josh Cuthbert, her brother's strength coach, and Jeremy Holt, who worked on his speed. With the combined regimen, Emma noticed that after a few weeks, her brother's flexibility had increased.

"I definitely saw a change in George's body over our time together in Nashville," Emma said. "Three weeks is kind of quick to notice a big change in flexibility, but he left for camp saying he felt better than he ever had before."

"George's strength and speed coaches were great about including me in their workouts. George's entire training process was coordinated between the three of us to make sure we maximized our time with him."

Emma teaches a sports performance variation of yoga, but the challenges for many of her clients are still about them taking their speed down several notches.

"George's biggest challenge in his yoga practice is probably the same as every other athlete I work with — making time to slow down and be in a relaxed environment," Emma said. "But one of his skills is being present in everything he does. He's a pro, so he is always locked in."

"There are so many benefits for any athlete who incorporates yoga to their training routine. Finding ease in stressful situations is what I focused on with George. We did a lot of breathwork and long prop supported holds. Slowing down movements is a great way to enhance mobility and also target core strength and stability."

It all sounds like serious work, but the two still enjoyed their time training together. “He’s still my little brother, so we laugh a lot during our sessions,” Emma said.

49ers' George Kittle might have surprised observers, but not his family

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
December 30, 2018

George Kittle's parents, Bruce and Jan, both two-sport Division I athletes, quickly realized their oldest child had athletic gifts.

Based on his memories of touch-football games, Bruce recalled the kid "had nice hands. Could run a pretty good route. Wasn't afraid to mix it up."

That scouting report isn't surprising, considering the youngster grew up to be the 49ers' Pro Bowl tight end, right? But here's the thing: Bruce was describing his daughter, Emma, George's older sister, his first opponent and one of an endless parade of accomplished athletes in their family.

"Back in the day, I was able to kind of dominate George," said Emma, a former volleyball player at Iowa and Oklahoma who is three years older than her only sibling. "I was taller, way faster and just reached above him. It was great."

George evidently learned from those beatdowns: In 2018, Emma's little brother often has treated linebackers and safeties in the same way his sister used to abuse him.

Kittle, 25, set the NFL record for most receiving yards by a tight end, finishing with 1,377. He needed 100 yards Sunday to break the league record set by New England's Rob Gronkowski in 2011 and finished with 149 to pass not only Gronkowski, but Kansas City's Travis Kelce who had 62 against the Raiders and finished with 1,336.

Few saw this coming.

Crowds arrive early on opening day of the Golden Gate International Exposition. Feb. 18, 1939.
Kittle was the seventh tight end on the depth chart early in his career at Iowa. He was a fifth-round pick in 2017 after he had just 48 catches in college. And he had a rookie season (43 catches, 515 yards) that didn't suggest second-year stardom.

But George's family is accustomed to seeing him rapidly ascend great heights. They have bonded over the years on summer trips from Iowa to Colorado, where they have scaled some of the more than 50 mountains in the state that are at least 14,000 feet.

One of those, Quandary Peak, was no problem for George.

"I've seen George do the craziest stuff with his body: I have this vivid memory of George running up a mountain and running down it," said Emma, who sprained both ankles trying to catch him. "When I think about those memories I'm like, 'Oh, my God, you're such a freak.' He's just built to perform."

"So, yes, some of (this season) has been surreal. But at the same time, we've been waiting for him to do it. We've been waiting for other people to see it."

The belief George would have huge success was rooted in the history of a family used to making history.

Bruce was a wrestler and offensive tackle at Iowa, where he was a co-captain on their 1981 team that reached the program's first Rose Bowl in 25 years. Jan is a member of the Iowa High School Sports Hall of Fame in basketball and softball. She played both sports at Drake, where the basketball team reached the Elite 8 of the NCAA Tournament in 1982.

Spotlight on: WR Kendrick Bourne. Who guessed that the 2017 undrafted free agent would lead 49ers receivers in catches this season? Correct answer: no one. Bourne's 37 catches are a nod to his development, but also a reflection of injuries to Pierre Garcon, Dante Pettis and Marquise Goodwin, none of whom will play against the Rams. Bourne figures to have a role in 2019, but a strong performance in a leading role will further cement his status.

Injuries: 49ers — TE Garrett Celek (concussion) is out. Rams — RB Todd Gurley (knee) is out.

Things to watch

Rams DT Aaron Donald needs 3.5 sacks to break Michael Strahan's record set of 22.5 in 2001. Donald had four sacks in a 39-10 win over the 49ers on Oct. 21.

The 49ers have a league-low seven takeaways and are poised to break the record of 11 held by three teams. Their two interceptions are two fewer than the league record held by the 2009 Lions.

The 49ers promoted DL Ryan Delaire and WR Max McCaffrey from the practice squad to the 53-man roster Saturday. They placed Pettis (knee) and RB Matt Breida (ankle) on injured reserve.

Jan is one of 10 sisters, seven of whom played a college sport. One sister, Barbara, was a basketball player who was the first female to receive a full athletic scholarship at Indiana.

George's cousin, Jess Settles, was an Iowa Mr. Basketball who was the Big Ten Freshman of the Year at Iowa. Another cousin, Brad Carlson, is Iowa's career home run leader.

On Sunday, George will reunite with his cousin, Henry Krieger-Coble, a tight end on the Rams' practice squad.

There is more. Plenty more. In fact, the family has so many big-time athletes that George can't keep track of some details. He recently couldn't recall how he was related to Xavier Nady, a Cal alum who had a 12-year major-league career (Nady is a second cousin).

George played several sports growing up, but football was the passion he shared with his dad, who was also an assistant coach at Iowa (1982-1985) and Oklahoma (2010-2012). They packed a football for every family vacation.

"We'd be on the roadside for an hour playing football," Bruce said, "and would forget about the trip."

George didn't just get his dad's genetics. He got his time.

Bruce, a criminal defense lawyer, worked for a firm in Madison, Wis., when George was born. But he switched to careers that were less demanding — and less lucrative — to spend time with his children.

He earned a master's in divinity at Chicago Theological Seminary and worked as a pastor. He was an assistant law professor and later used his degree at several nonprofits: He provided legal services to inmates in state prisons and served as a mediator between criminals and the victims of their crimes.

"Sometimes he was making almost no money," George said. "But he said, I'd rather hang out with you guys than make a bunch of money. That's one of the biggest things I learned from him: Family is more important than really anything else."

Bruce's career change allowed him to coach his children in youth sports, with Jan also leading many of Emma's teams.

At Northwest Junior High in Iowa City, Bruce led an undefeated team that allowed six points during George's seventh- and eighth-grade years (Bruce terms these the "dynasty years").

George laughed when recalling his dad's video sessions and their middle linebacker, who wore a wristband covered with play calls. Bruce adds the Vikings also had playbooks, which, he notes, his wife thought was "a little over the top."

"We had four different (defensive) fronts," Bruce said. "We played three different coverages. We did go man-free if we needed to. We played a three-deep (zone) and a two-deep and had a pretty good blitz package, as well. (Opponents) didn't have any idea what was happening."

Years later, the same has appeared true of teams trying to cover Kittle. He's been wide open on the two longest touchdowns by a tight end in franchise history, 82- and 85-yard scores he finished by outracing the secondary.

His long catches have led to his glamour-guy numbers this season. But he's also hailed as a hard-nosed blocker, a reflection of the old-school education he received from his dad.

Bruce, who coached tackles and tight ends at Oklahoma, doesn't discuss catches or touchdowns when talking about his son's achievements. In college, Bruce was proudest of the fact that George never missed a workout, allowing him to add about 60 pounds of bulk. This season, he's proudest that his son was voted a captain by his teammates.

George has strayed in one area: Bruce jokes about his son recently purchasing a Gucci backpack. But that horror has been offset by the lunch-pail mentality George still packs despite his newfound fame.

49ers' Joe Staley in no hurry to leave — or retire

"In run blocking, when he climbs to the second level, that's hard," Bruce said. "People don't appreciate the level of athleticism it takes to keep your hips down and hit a Mike 'backer coming over."

Bruce's career change led to more family time — and plenty of moving vans. George has lived in three states, six towns in Iowa and he attended three high schools as a sophomore.

The myriad moves helped foster the Kittles' closeness. They banded together navigating new experiences, and their bond is symbolized on their bodies: They each have a tattoo of a bear paw.

"It's about our tribe," Bruce said.

It's also a nod to their outdoor activities, which include their regular treks up 14,000-foot mountains.

The rocky terrain is hard on feet and ankles. And that's why George, now a professional athlete, will join his family in Colorado this summer but won't sprint up Quandary Peak.

He'll rejoin them at the summits when his career is over, after he's done adding to the family legacy by reaching great heights.

'He acts like a WWE wrestler': 49ers' George Kittle has gone into second season as if sprung from the top rope

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
October 15, 2018

George Kittle's week of preparation at Iowa began with a trip to the local arts and crafts store. As a redshirt freshman and a member of the scout team, his job was to mimic the upcoming opponent during practice. Kittle, however, took the role a step further by taking markers and colored tape from his shopping bag and altering his all-black practice helmet so that it looked like that of the next foe. Consider it the gridiron version of method acting.

"Nebraska was my favorite because I did my whole helmet in white duct tape," Kittle said of his various masterpieces. "I was going to do my face mask in red duct tape but it was a little too much."

The elaborate process speaks to the mundane life of a redshirt freshman. Kittle didn't get to play in games or even travel with the team that year. There was plenty of toil but no glory.

"The week of practice was like my game," he said. "I got — what? — three and a half practices a week where it was really high effort, high intensity. It was fun for me."

It also says plenty about what's percolating inside the 49ers' tight end. Kittle was colorful as a rookie last year but his personality — gregarious, brash, mischievous and most of all BOLD — has come alive even more in Year 2.

"It's a personality now where I say, 'Oh, that's just George,'" said long-time friend C.J. Beathard, who also was a member of that Iowa scout team. "It's like he's got his own category of personality. There's 'happy' and then there's 'George.' He's like a kid in a grown man's body."

Said Kyle Shanahan: "He acts like a WWE wrestler and I don't think that's an act. I think that's who he is 24-7, which is fun to watch. But you've always got to watch out for him. He's pretty rowdy all the time." Kittle indeed has entered his second NFL season as if sprung from the top rope. He entered Monday's Week 6 game against the Packers with the third-most receiving yards among the league's tight ends and his 82-yard catch-and-run touchdown in Week 4 remains the longest offensive play in the NFL this season.

His blocking, a sacrosanct discipline at Iowa, has been just as conspicuous. In last week's game against the Cardinals, for example, he engaged a defender at the Arizona 13-yard line and didn't stop churning his legs until they were in the end zone, at which point Kittle drove him into the turf.

"My favorite quote ever was, 'Moving a man from Point A to Point B against his will is the greatest feeling to ever feel,'" Kittle said last year. "And so I take that to heart. Just being able to do that and bury somebody is a pretty good feeling."

It wasn't always like that.

Kittle played wide receiver in high school in a system that didn't even utilize a tight end. He arrived at Iowa in 2012 with the necessary height for his new position, but he weighed about 200 pounds. That put him at an 80-pound deficit against some of the senior defensive linemen he'd try to block in practice.

"He would jump in there and get his tail handed to him," Greg Davis, the team's offensive coordinator at the time, recalled in a recent phone interview.

No one seemed too worried about the mismatch.

“Over years of doing this, you always find yourself having to look around and ask players, ‘Hey, have you gotten your reps?’” Davis said. “That wasn’t George. He never hid. He was right back up (saying), ‘Give me another chance! Give me another go!’ He was that kind of guy.”

Kittle remembers the daily battles a little differently. Yes, there were plays that ended with him on the ground, he said. But the roughest moments came when he got the better of his older, established teammates.

“It was fun going against those guys every day,” Kittle said. “And whenever you put a good block on them they’d swing on you and try to fight you and tell you not to go so hard and stuff like that.”

Kittle may not have had the size and strength to be a dominant blocker at that age, but he already was well-versed in technique. After all, he and his sister grew up with blocking sleds in their backyard.

Their father, Bruce, is a former Iowa offensive lineman who was co-captain of Iowa’s 1982 Rose Bowl team and who also coached offensive linemen at Oklahoma.

He was George’s childhood coach and had him working on sleds and blocking dummies when he was 10 years old. Bruce Kittle wanted his son to be an offensive lineman the way mothers dream about their kids becoming doctors.

“On the first day of practice my dad convinced — true story — convinced the kids that offensive line was the best position on the football field,” George said of his fifth-grade team. “And so he had little kids fighting over the positions. All of them wanted to play offensive line.”

All except George.

He liked having the ball in his hands and always was faster than the boys on his team. He played running back that year.

Another roadblock to his dad’s dream: George’s physique looked nothing like an offensive lineman’s. At first he was small. Then in high school he grew tall and skinny. When he went off to college, no one would have guessed he’d be a future NFL draft pick.

“He was real long, kind of gangly,” Bruce said by phone of his son. “He had big hips but he didn’t have very much meat on him. He was pretty scrawny looking when you saw him.”

There also was the matter of George’s energy and enthusiasm.

He loved practice. He loved his teammates. He loved to stick it to the upperclassmen during the week. And he loved college life, perhaps a little too much.

“He really enjoyed his redshirt year to the point where, somewhere around the building, he was classified as a social butterfly. You know, life of the party,” Davis said. “To the point where I called him in and I said, ‘George, you really have a gift. You can really run, you’ll be a matchup nightmare and you are tough. But are you really serious about being a great football player?’”

There was nothing too troubling in the reports Davis heard. It was typical college-guy stuff. But there was a concern that so much of the young tight end’s energy — as abundant as it was — was being spent off the practice field. After their meeting, it never became an issue again.

“But I don’t know if he ever changed,” Davis said. “I think he just kept it off my desk.”

Later in the season, Kittle had another meeting with an Iowa coach about his energy. This time head coach Kirk Ferentz wanted to tap into it.

Iowa had lost four games in a row and hated rival Michigan was next on the schedule.

Ferentz wanted more intensity in practice that week and called on Kittle, Beathard and the rest of the scout-team players to provide it. He showed them film clips of previous squads that had doctored their helmets and asked if the current group could do the same.

Kittle and the others took the assignment and ran with it, not just re-creating Michigan's unique helmet with rolls of maize and blue duct tape but altering the jerseys and pants as well. To the Iowa starters, it was like waving a red cape in the face of a bull.

"It was really fun," Kittle recalled. "We definitely got in a lot more fights that week with the defense. We talked a lot of smack the whole time."

Did Iowa beat Michigan that week? No, they lost 42-17. But the practice was as rowdy and electric as Ferentz was hoping for and everyone has fond memories of that season's makeshift fashion shows. Well, maybe everyone but the Iowa equipment staff.

"They hated it," Kittle said. "Because the tape wouldn't come off. They were like, 'Hey, we're not doing this anymore. You have to take it off yourselves because we're not going to do it anymore.'"

Christian McCaffrey

Christian McCaffrey turned the 49ers' season around. Here's where he got his football 'obsession'

By Jerry McDonald
San Jose Mercury News
January 14, 2023

Christian McCaffrey was 7 years old, deep enough into his first season of tackle football that he knew how to put on his equipment.

The Parker Hawks faced the Cherry Creek Bruins in Colorado's Arapahoe Youth League, and to McCaffrey, the game held an importance he didn't understand until it was over.

"We had lost bad earlier in the year to Cherry Creek in what we called the Super Bowl," McCaffrey told this news organization in a recent exclusive interview. "In my head, it's a big game. It's like a blizzard, with just parents on the sideline. My dad was coaching my older brother on another field.

"I remember my mom was there. Long story short, it comes down to the end and I tip the ball away on defense to win the game. I started crying. I'd never had an emotion like that in my life. I was 7 years old. I didn't even know what emotions were yet. Joy to the extent of crying? I just knew right then I wanted to do this for my life."

Nineteen years later, the real Super Bowl beckons on Feb. 12 with McCaffrey as the versatile offensive star for the 49ers. The road to Super Bowl LVII begins Saturday when the 49ers (13-4) host the Seattle Seahawks (9-8) at Levi's Stadium at 1:30 p.m.

A lot of things have gone right for the 49ers to run the table on the regular season after a 3-4 start, but none are bigger than the Oct. 20 trade with the Carolina Panthers that brought the former Stanford star back to the Bay Area.

Coach Kyle Shanahan and general manager John Lynch served notice they were all-in for a run at the title when they shipped a sizable chunk of draft capital (second-, third- and fourth-round picks in 2023 and a fifth-round pick in 2024) to Carolina in exchange for McCaffrey.

After playing a bit part in a 44-23 loss to the Chiefs two days after arriving, McCaffrey became a featured back the following week against the Los Angeles Rams. He rushed for 94 yards on 18 carries and a touchdown, caught eight passes for 55 yards and a touchdown and even threw a 34-yard touchdown pass to Brandon Aiyuk.

The 49ers haven't lost since.

McCaffrey has scored 10 touchdowns during the 10-game win streak, rushed for 749 yards on 159 carries and caught 52 passes for 464 yards with the 49ers. When you add in his pre-trade Carolina numbers, he's having one of his best seasons since being the No. 8 pick in the 2017 NFL Draft.

Given McCaffrey's injury history — he missed 22 games in the 2020 and 2021 seasons after heavy use in 2018-19 — there wasn't anything close to acclamation for the 49ers' deal when it was made.

There was never doubt, however, about McCaffrey's willingness to work and prepare. Teammates at every stop consider it legendary — traits born of an emphasis on school and multiple sports with four boys who all went on to play college football.

Ed McCaffrey played at Stanford and 12 years in the NFL with the Giants, 49ers and Broncos. Lisa McCaffrey, Ed's wife, was a soccer player at Stanford. Her father was an Olympic sprinter.

Lynch, a teammate of Ed McCaffrey at Stanford, saw the dynamic up close when he and his family were invited to a McCaffrey barbecue after he joined the Denver Broncos in 2004. The McCaffrey boys – Max, Christian, Dylan and Luke ranged in age from 10 to 5. They were well-mannered but also hyper-competitive.

Lynch's son Jake, who later played football at Stanford, grew up with three sisters and was in no way prepared for the McCaffrey experience during playtime.

"When it was time for dinner, Eddie and I went to get them, and Jake looked like he had seen a ghost," Lynch said. "I said, 'Jake, what's going on buddy?' He said, 'Dad, they're killing each other!' It was dog-eat-dog."

Christian went on to be one of the most celebrated high school athletes in the Denver area at Valor Christian in nearby Highlands Ranch and accepted a scholarship to Stanford like his father. David Shaw, the Stanford coach and a teammate of both Ed McCaffrey and Lynch at the school, learned quickly that McCaffrey's special gifts included rocket fuel in terms of competitive nature.

When Stanford assistant Tavita Pritchard went on a recruiting visit for a Valor game, he called Shaw and told him he'd just seen a player who got mad every time he was tackled.

"He didn't think anyone should be able to tackle him," Shaw said. "His parents taught the kids to be the best kids they could be, to do well in school and compete like crazy. It's a competitive family. But there's also some nature in there. This guy's a killer. He's not faking it. He's not putting it on. It's just who he is."

While Christian jokes "we were bred to play football," in reality the boys were urged to play all sports growing up.

"He played football, basketball, baseball and lacrosse. He ran track. Played soccer at a real young age. Lisa was his coach when he was 3, 4 and 5," Ed McCaffrey said in a phone interview. "He would fall in love with whatever sport he was playing at the time, but I think football was always his true love."

But while Christian had varied interests, he wasn't always open to new ideas.

"When Christian loves something, he's all-in. That's true in sports, it's true in the classroom, it's true in life," Ed McCaffrey said. "But if he's not interested in something, it's like pulling teeth to get him to participate. He knew we wouldn't allow him to play sports if he didn't do well in the classroom, but he was miserable if it was a topic he didn't care about."

As a youth, Christian began piano lessons and was having none of it. The idea was aborted. But lo and behold, when a neighbor Christian's age moved in and played the piano, his interest was piqued.

Maybe it was, as Christian later said, he was told "piano players get the girls." Or that he realized he could play without the tedium of learning to read music. Either way, McCaffrey was hooked.

"He became obsessed with the piano," Ed McCaffrey said.

"I started to develop a realization that piano is a lot like running back in a way," McCaffrey said. "I can't read music, so I just kind of listen to the sound and there's a lot of synching and coordination with your brain and your body and reacting to noises the same way as a running back. You're reacting constantly."

The piano McCaffrey purchased remains behind in his Charlotte home and he said he doesn't have a keyboard in his Bay Area residence. He's all-in on football, every minute of every day. He has a famous girlfriend, Olivia Culpo, who is a former Miss USA, but even that is kept, as Lynch said, "low key."

Besides the physical gifts, it is McCaffrey's total immersion into football that makes him special.

“You look at the top golfers, the top tennis players, they’re all people who didn’t just start doing it in high school,” Shanahan said. “They’re usually guys who have been obsessed with it at a young age.”

Shanahan said McCaffrey and Nick Bosa, the 49ers star defensive end, are similar in the way they basically set up their life to maximize their ability to play football and achieve greatness.

“I’ve never been around a guy who cares more about performing,” Bosa said. “It’s literally his livelihood, and adding a guy like that to the team, especially at a position that is super important in Kyle’s offense, was a very important addition.”

When McCaffrey arrived in Santa Clara and needed to learn the offense as soon as possible, he was set up with quarterback Brock Purdy, at the time the backup to Jimmy Garoppolo.

“He wanted me to read every single play. He would say where he’s lining up, what he’s doing, his assignment,” Purdy said. “To see how fast he learned when he got here and how fast he knew our playbook was crazy to see. He’s so serious with everything he does. I’m thinking, ‘Man, this is what greatness looks like. This is why he is the way he is.’”

Yet McCaffrey has gradually shown his humorous side as he’s gotten to know his teammates, zinging fullback and Harvard grad Kyle Juszczyk last week.

“It is wild to have a Stanford guy and a Harvard guy in the backfield at the same time, I don’t know if that’s ever happened before,” McCaffrey said. “I have to talk slow.”

McCaffrey displays virtually no pretense or sense of celebrity, to which he credits a home life that wouldn’t allow it and brought a sense of perspective to go with his football obsession.

“I’ve never looked at anyone as more important than anyone else,” McCaffrey said. “I come from a family that if you were to do that, they’ll humble you pretty quick. Plus this game is very humbling. It takes constant work to be great and you never have it all figured out.

“I mean, we play football for a living. If I go into a quantum physics class, I’m no longer the celebrity there. I’m an idiot.”

Colton McKivitz

Interior decorator: 49ers' Colton McKivitz aiming to enhance offensive line

By Eric Branch
San Francisco Chronicle
November 26, 2020

Colton McKivitz has had to carry shoulder pads, pick up sandwiches and order pizzas as part of his duties as the lone rookie offensive lineman on the 49ers' roster.

Last month, the fifth-round pick was given his most daunting task when his position mates explained his latest assignment: Decorate their spacious meeting room extravagantly for Halloween.

"I haven't been tied to a field-goal post," McKivitz said, laughing. "So I'll take decorating all day long."

Indeed, the right guard has had a mild first-year initiation from his teammates that pales in comparison to what his coaches have asked him to do: Play a foreign position in a complex offense after an abbreviated offseason that didn't include OTA practices.

How McKivitz handles that challenge makes him one of the young players to closely watch as the 49ers (4-6) finish a season that's unlikely to end in the playoffs. As attention figures to turn increasingly to 2021, McKivitz's performance in the final six regular-season games will help determine how much the 49ers will need to invest in a problem area — their interior offensive line — in the offseason.

McKivitz, who had played only offensive tackle since high school, has been eased into action to see if he could be an answer. He's played his first meaningful offensive snaps in the past two games when he has rotated at right guard with Tom Compton, 31, a ninth-year veteran who has started the past two contests.

McKivitz has played 44 snaps in losses to the Packers and Saints, 40 fewer than Compton.

"We'll see how this year keeps going with both of them," head coach Kyle Shanahan said. "They've been competing really well and we'll see if one gets ahead of the other. But I've been happy with their progress."

Given his youth and their draft-pick investment, the 49ers are hoping McKivitz emerges as the winner.

They drafted McKivitz, 6-foot-6 and 301 pounds, after a senior season at West Virginia in which he was named the Big 12's Co-Offensive Lineman of the Year and a third-team Associated Press All-American as a left tackle.

The 49ers were attracted to his grit — NFL.com's scouting profile on McKivitz labeled him a "bonafide dirt dog with a chippy demeanor" — and the intangibles of a player who made 49 straight starts in college.

McKivitz was a team captain, a member of the school's academic honor roll and was a three-time winner of the "Iron Mountaineer" award for his excellence and dedication in the weight room.

The 49ers gave McKivitz a "gold helmet" designation, given to only a handful of their draft prospects each year.

"The gold helmet is essentially, 'This is the ideal 49ers person and player that we want to bring in,'" director of college scouting Ethan Waugh said. "He fits exactly what we're looking for demeanor-wise and on the offensive line."

McKivitz is unusual among NFL rookies, who are understandably eager to prove themselves, in that he's refreshingly candid about his first-year growing pains.

For example, he was largely pleased with his 23-snap performance against the Saints, but he didn't hesitate to volunteer this: He missed a block on one of the game's biggest plays, a 4th-and-1 attempt in which running back Jerick McKinnon was dropped for a 2-yard loss in the second quarter.

And McKivitz didn't hide what happened when asked about his welcome-to-the-NFL moment — he was bulldozed by rookie defensive tackle Javon Kinlaw in training camp — or when queried about his first offensive snap in the NFL, which came near the end of a blowout win over the Jets in Week 2.

"I think it was inside zone left and I kind of let my guy get off late and he made the tackle," McKivitz said. "And we probably would have had a 30-yard gain. I got a little earful on the sideline. But it still felt good to get out there and be playing in the NFL."

McKivitz's willingness to share his lows suggests he's confident those moments don't define him.

His more memorable moments have inspired some of that belief. In his first extended action, against the Packers, he successfully pulled off a difficult run block against Pro Bowl defensive tackle Kenny Clark.

"I think that was kind of the moment where it was, 'OK this is just football,'" McKivitz said. "And it's back to the basics and just having fun out there. That was one play that just solidified that, 'Hey, you're meant to be here. And this is what you can do.'"

McKivitz is excited about the chance to play after logging just 14 snaps in the first eight games. And, off the field, things also are looking up.

McKivitz noted the NFL's recently mandated intensive COVID-19 protocols mean the offensive linemen won't be using their meeting room as all such interactions will be done virtually for the rest of the season.

The result: McKivitz didn't have to shop for Thanksgiving decor and Christmas isn't a concern.

"That," McKivitz said, "will save me some money."

49ers rookie Colton McKivitz is a Renaissance man with a country spirit

By Matt Barrows

Colton McKivitz, the offensive lineman the 49ers drafted in the fifth round, is the type of guy who hits the golf course with a 12-gauge instead of a 9-iron. After all, the fairway ponds are positively lousy with corn-fed Canada geese in the winter and the course managers don't mind one bit if a few go missing.

He has eight white-tailed deer, including the 160-pounder he bagged when he was 6 years old, mounted on the wall of his bedroom in Southeast Ohio. When he'd head back on the 90-minute drive to the University of West Virginia his mom would send him off with hugs and kisses while his dad would send him off with huge Ziploc bags bursting with goose jerky.

"He'd take them down to Morgantown and give them to all the trainers and athletes," his father said. "Some of the football players never tasted it before. And they loved it. They just begged and begged for more of it."

If you're picturing a mountain man with an unruly beard and a raccoon cap, well, you're close. That's a dead-on description of Matt McKivitz, Colton's dad. He became a bit of a celebrity at his son's games because of the homemade raccoon hats — every now and then he'd switch it up with a coyote chapeau — he wore in the stands. Matt is an avid hunter, a skilled taxidermist and he can turn anything he shoots, snares or hooks into a tasty meal.

"If the big one drops and you're out in the woods, you want Matt McKivitz around you," said Brion Schiappa, Colton's first offensive line coach and a close friend of the family. "He'd keep you alive for a long time."

Colton definitely is his father's son. He caught his first fish — a bluegill — at age 3. Three years after that, Matt was strapping him into a tree stand for his first deer hunt. Their preferred quarry in recent years is ducks and geese, which descend on their area in the fall and stay through the winter.

During the football season, Colton would play for the Mountaineers on Saturday afternoon, drive to his family home in Centerville, Ohio, that evening, get up before dawn for a duck hunt with dad and be back at school Sunday afternoon for treatment and meetings.

"It wasn't like he was going out to party after games," his mom, Wendy, said during a phone interview. "He was driving home to get ready to go sit with his dad and the duck blind. I think that was important to him because he would spend so much time away with football."

"I think he liked being able to talk — the camaraderie," adds Matt, who was on the same call. "Because (with) deer hunting, you've gotta be real quiet."

The 49ers' fifth-round pick is a country kid through and through, but the team believes they've landed a bit of a Renaissance man. Last month vice president of player personnel Adam Peters revealed that the 49ers had given McKivitz a "gold helmet" designation heading into the draft, something only 15 or so of the hundreds of draft prospects earn each year.

To get it, you have to meet an array of criteria, from durability to leadership to character to intelligence. General manager John Lynch and coach Kyle Shanahan are adamant about creating a specific culture on their team and in their locker room, and McKivitz seems to embody what they're looking for.

"Gold helmet is not something we give out a lot," Peters said. "The person really has to be exemplary, really has to stand out."

In talking to those who know McKivitz best, you start to understand why the 49ers think so highly of him. He was a National Honor Society student in high school who went on to become a team captain at West Virginia. He started 49 straight games for the Mountaineers — some while playing hurt — and last year, with a new coaching staff taking over, he acted as somewhat of a player-coach on an otherwise young offensive line.

He doesn't drink. He doesn't party. Schiappa, the family friend, said he's the type of guy any father would want his daughter to marry.

"You're not going to find a better human being as far as moral conduct is concerned," he said. "He will never embarrass the 49ers. Ever."

Smart guy, devoted son, avid outdoorsman. That's all great. But does he have the requisite nastiness to grapple with Aaron Donald and Jarran Reed in the NFL trenches? Asked about that, Schiappa recalls a game against Kansas State last season. At one point, he saw one of Kansas State's linebackers, No. 58, hit McKivitz across the side of the helmet. A little later he did it again.

"The third time it happened, Colton drilled the guy into the ground," Schiappa said with a laugh. "It was such a great block. And that's the last we saw of 58. There's a lot of fire inside that guy. A lot of fire. You wouldn't want to piss him off."

Schiappa first encountered McKivitz before his sophomore year of high school. McKivitz had been a baseball and basketball player, and he stood out in both sports. He threw a no-hitter as a freshman. At 6-foot-6, he could dominate the paint in basketball.

Schiappa immediately was impressed by the boy's size and didn't bother with pleasantries. Instead, he went straight to the point, fixing his eyes on McKivitz's and telling the high schooler that he could get a college scholarship if he decided to play football, which McKivitz never had done up to that point.

"I didn't tell him my name and I don't know if I even asked him his name," Schiappa said. "I just walked up to him (and said): 'You can have the big house on the hill. You can name your college. You can have it all. You just focus on this game.'"

That's exactly what McKivitz did. Four years later, he was suiting up for his first game at West Virginia. He had redshirted the previous season, adding 45 pounds of bulk to what had long been a basketball player's taut frame. The opening game that year was against Missouri, and McKivitz was told he'd get a few snaps at right tackle to spell his teammate.

He ended up getting a lot more work than that when the starting left tackle went down with a torn ACL early in the second quarter. The injury meant McKivitz would face defensive end Charles Harris for the rest of the contest. Harris finished with nine sacks that season and later would be drafted by the Miami Dolphins in the first round. But he didn't get any against McKivitz, who put a big block on Harris on the game's opening touchdown run and who never left the lineup from that point on.

That was the start of McKivitz's career at West Virginia. His biggest jump may have come at the end.

The Mountaineers not only brought in a new coaching staff for 2019, but many of the upperclassmen had also moved on after the 2018 season. They would be a young team learning new schemes. In other words, they wouldn't be very good. McKivitz considered skipping his senior season and entering the draft. The new coaches convinced him to stay, and both parties were glad he did.

Until that point, McKivitz had been a hard-working, dependable overachiever. But he wasn't overly athletic, he didn't have the long arms NFL teams prefer and, aside from his redshirt freshman season, he'd mostly played right tackle. If he had tried to make the leap to the NFL last year, he might have gone undrafted.

The incoming offensive line coach, Matt Moore, switched him to left tackle, which signaled to NFL teams he was versatile. Moore and the rest of the West Virginia staff also asked him to play with more of an edge on the field and to become a more vocal and visible leader off of it.

Moore knew McKivitz had taken the challenge seriously when he arrived for an offensive line meeting one day to find that the senior left tackle already was conducting one with all of his younger teammates studiously taking notes. The players-only meetings became routine.

“He’d get the running backs in there. He’d get the rest of the O-linemen,” Moore recalled. “And I’d slide in there to get ready for my meeting and he’d be quizzing them on, ‘All right, who’s the Mike (linebacker), who’s the blitzer?’ all of that stuff. When you’re teaching other people, you’ve taken your football knowledge to another level. And that’s what he did that year.”

After his junior season, McKivitz didn’t collect many accolades. Following his senior year, he was named the Big 12 conference’s co-offensive lineman of the year, made the Associated Press’ All-America third team and was given an invitation to the Senior Bowl.

“And I see him continuing to develop,” Moore said. “He is not tapped out. He’s one of those guys who is just now hitting his stride.”

While the 49ers have their “gold helmet” guys and other team awards, the Mountaineers’ version is something they call the “boss man.” It pays tribute to the state’s coal-mining roots. At a mine, the boss man is the one who has worked his way up through the ranks, who has done everything right and who gets to be in charge. He’s part of the management, but in spirit he’s still one of the crew. McKivitz was named boss man in each of the last three years.

“It’s part of the school’s identity and the history of West Virginia in general,” the school’s longtime strength coach, Mike Joseph, said. “And it’s a mentality that we as a team try to maintain — that blue-collar mentality. And he really embraced that.”

After all, it’s an ethos McKivitz instantly recognized. The Southeast Ohio region where he grew up used to be coal-mining country and Matt McKivitz spent nine years as a miner. He doesn’t do it anymore: Gas and oil have taken over as the main industries in recent years. But the coal-mining work ethic is ingrained in the region. The landscape bears its marks, too. The ponds and small lakes where the McKivitzes fish and hunt mallards are the remnants of the strip mining that occurred in that region.

Colton McKivitz could tell you all about the ecology. Staying for his senior season also allowed him to get his degree in wildlife and fisheries resources, which he plans to use when his football career is over.

Some former players try to get into broadcasting. Some become coaches. McKivitz’s dream is to buy a ranch or maybe a lodge and offer a guide service on the property. He’s already figured out what crops he’d plant and which fish he’d stock in the lake. He also knows the approximate location — somewhere west of his home region so that he’s a little closer to main waterfowl flyways.

“Colton is a man with a plan. He’s always planning,” Wendy said. “He’s been thinking about this for a long time. He’s already looking at properties — dreaming and planning.”

The one thing he couldn’t plan: Which team would take him in the draft. The 49ers spoke with him at the Senior Bowl in January, but that was it. Other teams were calling him in the run-up to the draft and throughout the three-day process. The 49ers weren’t one of them. Shanahan, Lynch and Peters were laying so low in the weeds that it was a complete surprise to McKivitz when they bagged him in the fifth round.

Is he worried about being out of his element in the Bay Area?

Not at all. His parents note he’s been training with former NFL offensive lineman LeCharles Bentley in Chandler, Ariz., since the winter and has been staying at a Residence Inn in the area. The hotel is surrounded by a shallow pond and, well, McKivitz has discovered that it’s full of fish.

“If there’s a way to fish, he will find it,” Wendy said.

Added Matt McKivitz: “The first words out of his mouth when he was drafted were: ‘I’m going to go out there, and the first thing I’m going to do is catch a great white.’”

Elijah Mitchell

49ers' Elijah Mitchell, the 'big brother' of Erath, shaped by his tiny hometown

By Connor Letourneau
San Francisco Chronicle
January 28, 2022

As 49ers running back Elijah Mitchell appeared on the TV, Nathan Granger leaned forward in his seat: Is that what I think it is? Could it be?

There, wrapped around Mitchell's right wrist, was a blue band with "Team Ross" in white letters. Granger fought back tears. Eight months earlier, after going to the 49ers in the sixth round of the NFL draft, Mitchell asked Granger for one of those wristbands so he could honor Granger's late son, Ross, who died in 2016 from brain cancer. He was 19.

Granger couldn't have known that Mitchell, Ross' close friend and high school teammate, would wear the band during the NFC divisional round. As Granger watched from his Erath, La., home Saturday as Mitchell warmed up on Lambeau Field, he reflected — if only for a moment or two — on all Mitchell means to a one-stoptlight town of 1,983.

The rookie's rise from late-round afterthought to the 49ers' featured running back has been a major source of pride for Erath. As Mitchell prepares to start against the Rams in the NFC Championship Game on Sunday, loved ones, friends and acquaintances back home are brainstorming new ways to celebrate him.

An electronic sign outside Champagne's Supermarket, Erath's only grocery store, proclaims Mitchell as a "Hometown Hero." Posters emblazoned with his likeness sit in families' front yards. On Friday, students at the local elementary, middle and high schools will swap their usual uniforms for 49ers gear.

"It's the reason why I do what I do," said Mitchell, who flew back to Erath during the bye week in October to serve as grand marshal of the town's homecoming parade. "Just being from a small town and to have all that support, it's just amazing to me. They just make me who I am, really."

Erath's adoration for Mitchell goes well beyond the fact that he's its first NFL player. In Mitchell, locals see the ideal person to represent this tight-knit community, 140 miles west of New Orleans, on a national scale.

Many Erath residents still remember him as the polite, friendly teenager who defied the "jock" stereotype. As an all-state running back at Erath High, Mitchell spent his free time with students from every clique: athletes, goths, brainiacs.

When addressing teachers, coaches or parents, he said "sir" or "ma'am." Seldom, if ever, did Mitchell discuss his NFL aspirations. Often when his Erath High team was close to the end zone, he switched places with the fullback unbeknownst to his coaches so his less-touted teammate could score the touchdown.

"With a lot of high school kids nowadays, it's all about them," said David Comeaux, Mitchell's head football coach at Erath High. "But Elijah was so humble that, seeing him walk around campus and interact with his fellow students, you would never know how gifted of a player he was. He was like a big brother to people."

No one felt that more than Eddie Armond, a classmate of Mitchell's with Down syndrome. Mitchell, like many Erath High students, came to appreciate Armond's reliably amiable spirit.

On numerous occasions, Mitchell sought out Armond on the sideline after scoring a touchdown. For several minutes, Mitchell detailed how the play had unfolded, taking Armond through the nuances of run-blocking schemes or defensive coverages.

The chats helped Armond feel more connected to the team. Still not fully satisfied, Mitchell found more ways to give Armond a normal high school experience.

In the fall of his senior year, after his classmates elected him “Powder Puff King,” Mitchell handed his crown to Armond and told him, “This belongs to you.” For the rest of the night, Armond, grinning, shouted again and again, “I’m the Erath King!”

“It’s something that you hope happens for your child with special needs,” said Dawn Armond, Eddie’s mother. “But when it actually does happen, there are no words. It’s a moment we’ll never forget.”

Less than a week later, Dawn received a call from a school official. The Erath High football team had crafted a plan to ensure that Eddie experienced the thrill of scoring a touchdown. That Friday’s opponent, Patterson High, had agreed to play along.

When Dawn expressed safety concerns, the school official eased her worries with eight words: “Elijah will be with him the whole time.” Eddie was given a helmet and a uniform. When the time was right, Mitchell showed his friend where to line up. Then, as the crowd roared, Mitchell guided Eddie 20 yards into the end zone.

The ensuing scene — Eddie yelling in jubilation as players from both teams congratulated him — remains more vivid in many Erath residents’ memories than any touchdown Mitchell scored. In that moment, Mitchell and his teammates had epitomized the type of family-oriented atmosphere Erath tries to foster.

This is a place where people don’t just know almost everyone; they know their birthdays, too. Erath’s crime rate is less than half of the national average. Thanks in large part to hands-on faculty and parents, Erath High (enrollment: 572) ranks among Louisiana’s top high schools annually.

“You know that old saying, ‘It takes a village to raise a kid?’” Erath High principal Marc Turner said. “Well, that’s really true here. And I think that’s why Elijah’s success means so much. In a community like ours, everyone knows him on a personal level. Everyone played some part in him getting to this point, so there’s a collective pride.”

Mitchell’s humility traces back to his upbringing in a modest home surrounded by sugarcane fields. Penny Mitchell, a cosmetologist, raised five sons with her husband, Milton Mitchell, a welder, on a one-acre plot of land on the outskirts of Erath.

While playing pickup basketball at a young age, Elijah — already the best athlete in the family — was often selected for a team before his older brothers. When he asked his dad why he was routinely picked first, Milton told him, “You’re good, but don’t brag. Treat everyone like a friend.”

The message resonated. As Mitchell blossomed into a standout running back, he was sometimes uncomfortable with all the newfound attention. Erath, like many small towns, revolves around the athletic exploits of the local high school. And on fall Fridays for four years, local businesses shuttered as fans packed the Erath High stands to watch Mitchell break records for the Bobcats.

Many in the area had never seen a homegrown player with such speed and power. Until recently, the most famous athlete from Erath was 1980s and ’90s horse-racing jockey Randy Romero, whose name can be found on a highway sign welcoming visitors to town.

But what most impressed former NFL quarterback Jake Delhomme, who sometimes made the 30-mile drive from his Breaux Bridge, La., home to see the local high school sensation, was how Mitchell comported himself. After Bobcats games, Delhomme remarked to friends how rare it was for a teen to hand the ball back to the referees after every touchdown.

To help Mitchell stay focused, his dad attended many of his high school practices and met often with his teachers. Turner knew to expect a call from Milton if Elijah scored poorly on a test. On multiple occasions, Milton threatened to keep Elijah home for games if his grades didn't improve. They always did.

In the summers, Mitchell spent many days dragging a huge steel sled back and forth across 50 yards of grass near the family house. His dad had welded it together to help his son train for college football.

At the time, Mitchell was a two-star recruit with only one FBS offer, from nearby Louisiana-Lafayette. Some in town encouraged him to wait on interest from bigger schools. But when Ragin' Cajuns head coach Mark Hudspeth made a home visit to Erath in a helicopter the summer before Mitchell's senior year, he committed that day.

As he rushed for 2,900 yards and 41 touchdowns during his final season with the Bobcats, Mitchell received a defensive-back offer from LSU and a running-back offer from Missouri. No matter. Those SEC programs, with their state-of-the-art facilities and lucrative TV contracts, couldn't compete with Louisiana-Lafayette's best asset: It was only 21 miles from Erath.

"He wanted to make sure everyone in town could see him play in college," Milton said. "Going anywhere else wouldn't have felt right."

After the 49ers took him with the 194th pick of May's NFL draft, Mitchell moved away from south central Louisiana for the first time. He had just turned 23 years old. Accompanying Mitchell were his fiancée and high school sweetheart, Jasmine LeJeune, and their two young sons.

As injuries to other running backs hastened Mitchell's rise up the depth chart, his iPhone flooded with texts from old teammates, coaches and teachers back home expressing how proud Erath was of him. Such messages only continued as Mitchell cemented himself as the 49ers' top ball-carrier.

With 963 rushing yards this season, he shattered the rookie franchise record of 811 set by Vic Washington in 1971. That Mitchell did it in just 11 games only adds to his burgeoning lore.

But almost every time someone in Erath tells him all he means to a rural outpost just north of Vermilion Bay, Mitchell is quick to remind them: "Erath has done more for me than I could ever do for it." Without his support system there, he wouldn't be one win away from the Super Bowl.

When Nathan Granger saw Mitchell wearing his "Team Ross" wristband during the NFC divisional round, he recognized it for what it was: a sign that he hasn't forgotten where he came from.

On the night of Nov. 11, 2016, Erath High chased its first playoff win in 12 years. Miles away, surrounded by friends and loved ones, Ross neared the end of a lengthy battle with brain cancer. Realizing that his childhood friend might not have much more time, Mitchell — then a senior — played inspired, breaking tackle after tackle. Early in the second half, Nathan informed the team that Ross had died.

Those who witnessed what happened next recall Mitchell running with a passion that felt almost spiritual, on his way to 331 rushing yards. After the final whistle sounded on the Bobcats' blowout win over the favored Eunice High, Mitchell embraced his quarterback, Ross' little brother, Mason.

"To this day, Elijah and I talk pretty regularly," Nathan said. "Just the other night, he told me, 'I'm so blessed to be in this position I've been put in.'"

"That's the person he is. I pray that he remains that way, but I know he will."

49ers' country boy' Elijah Mitchell is a product of his Southern Louisiana environment

By Jerry McDonald
San Jose Mercury News
January 7, 2022

Life may be slower in his hometown of Erath, Louisiana, but that hasn't prevented Elijah Mitchell from getting places in a hurry.

Mitchell has rushed for more yards than any rookie in the history of the 49ers, all the while adhering to the values instilled by his parents in what his high school coach calls "a one-stop-light" town with a population of just over 2,000 in Southern Louisiana.

Milton and Penny Mitchell raised five sons in a home surrounded by sugarcane fields.

"My mom and dad, they raised me right," Mitchell said Thursday in a phone interview. "They taught me right from wrong and I never had a problem getting in trouble. They were definitely strict on me — if I wanted to go somewhere, they were going to meet who I was going with and their parents."

With 878 yards rushing, Mitchell, 23, broke the franchise record of 811 set by Vic Washington in 1971. He did it in just 10 games, and his per-game rushing average of 87.8 trails only veteran established backs Derrick Henry (117.1), Johnathan Taylor (108.4), Nick Chubb (92.4) and Dalvin Cook (90.0) in the NFL. Mitchell returned to action in a 23-7 win over Houston, gaining 119 yards on 21 carries.

It was Mitchell's fifth game of more than 100 yards rushing after being a sixth-round draft pick out of Louisiana, where he had 3,267 career rushing yards and 41 touchdowns. That came after three seasons at Erath High School (pronounced EE-rath) where Mitchell rushed for 4,045 yards and 50 touchdowns in three seasons, averaging 8.9 yards per carry and a touchdown on every ninth attempt.

Although Mitchell may have been the big man on campus at a school with an enrollment of about 500, he never acted like it.

"I've coached for 27 years and Elijah did some amazing things," former Erath coach David Comeaux said in a recent phone interview. "But beyond that, Elijah was just the kind of kid that took care of everybody. Of all the players I've ever coached, he's the most humble. No doubt."

The play that sticks with Comeaux more than any other didn't even count. Mitchell befriended Eddie Armond, a student with Down syndrome, and helped stage a play where Armond was able to score a touchdown of his own.

The opponent, Patterson High, agreed to play along. Eddie was fitted with a helmet and a jersey the day before the game and ran the play at practice. When the big moment came, Mitchell showed Eddie where to stand, then led him 20 yards into the end zone for a "touchdown" as the crowd cheered. Both teams met Eddie in the end zone to congratulate him.

"Here is Elijah, guiding this kid to a touchdown," Comeaux said. "It was pretty special stuff."

The week before, after Mitchell had been elected "Powder Puff King" by his senior classmates, he handed Eddie his crown.

"Eddie was beyond ecstatic," said his mother, Dawn Armond. "He called himself the Erath king. Elijah was his best friend."

During games, Eddie would join the Erath team on the bench, with Dawn close by to make sure he stayed out of harm's way.

“When we were on the sidelines and Elijah made a play, he’d look for Eddie and say, ‘Eddie, did you see that?’” Dawn said. “And he would explain the play to Eddie. He would include him in the game to make sure he knew what was going on. I enjoyed that. When Elijah sat down, Eddie would sit with him. They just kind of blended.”

Mitchell was drawn to Eddie’s innocence and outlook.

“Eddie was always a happy person, his personality is just awesome,” Mitchell said. “As a team we just wanted to see him have that moment, and I think it was the best day of his life. It was awesome.”

Recruited by mostly Sun Belt schools, LSU was interested in Mitchell but as a defensive back. He instead stayed close to home and accepted a scholarship to Louisiana in Lafayette, just 21 miles from home.

Billy Napier, the head coach at Louisiana who recently took over the program at Florida, believes family and community are at the core of what Mitchell is all about.

“You go back to how he was raised, the community,” Napier said in a phone interview. “Just a terrific family. They know who they are and know what they believe in with conviction. There is something about that part of the country and the Cajun culture that is unique. It’s hospitality, caring for other people, service and a lot of pride in doing things the right way. There’s a give-the-shirt-off-your-back mentality there. I think Eli reflects that with how he’s lived his life for sure.”

Mitchell played in a three-back system at Louisiana along with Trey Ragas and Raymond Calais and never uttered a word of complaint.

“He embodied everything we tried to build our culture around when it comes to being selfless, accepting their role,” Napier said. “We knew he was gifted. I thought the 49ers got a steal relative to where they got him in the draft.”

Mitchell missed some training camp time with an adductor injury, but quickly passed third-round draft pick Trey Sermon of Ohio State on the depth chart. When Jeff Wilson Jr. and Raheem Mostert were injured, Mitchell showed the power, speed and ability to finish runs which meshed perfectly with the 49ers’ outside zone run scheme. He gained 104 yards on 19 carries in his first NFL game, a season-opening win against Detroit.

Listed at 5-foot-10 and 200 pounds, Mitchell’s power shocked 49ers left tackle Trent Williams. Mitchell once ran into Williams’ back, and the Pro Bowl left tackle said the only time he was hit so hard with friendly fire was playing with perennial Pro Bowler Adrian Peterson in Washington. Coach Kyle Shanahan said Mitchell often left him believing he was facing a challenging down-and-distance, only to be informed by coaches in the press box Mitchell had made something out of nothing.

Napier knows the feeling.

“He’ll make you a better coach,” Napier said. “He’s an offensive line coach’s dream and best friend. He’s going to make your team better. Not only with his ability but his approach as a person.”

Quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo said Mitchell has come out of his shell somewhat but has retained the same core values.

“E was very quiet when he got here. He was humble, hard-working,” Garoppolo said. “He’s become more open and talkative, but as far as the humble and hard-working stuff, that hasn’t changed a bit. For a rookie to have as much success as he’s had and still remain the same, that’s a rare combo right there. That’s why you love him as a teammate, love him as a friend. He’s everything you could want.”

Mitchell, a self-described “country boy” who went through high school and college in the same area, conceded moving to California was a culture shock.

“But I grew into it, and it’s going well,” Mitchell said.

Mitchell’s values are ingrained to the point where his parents don’t need to warn him against getting a big head with all the recent success.

“They don’t really tell me that because they already know how I’ve always been,” Mitchell said. “I always think about how things can be taken away so fast. I’ve always been a humble guy and I’m going to stay that way for the rest of my life.”

Brock Purdy

Who is San Francisco 49ers rookie quarterback Brock Purdy?

By Nick Wagoner
ESPN
December 10, 2022

To understand why nobody in his orbit is surprised that Brock Purdy has quickly ascended from the final pick in the 2022 NFL draft to the starting quarterback of the San Francisco 49ers, you have to know two stories: the one about mono, and the other about the saguaro cactus.

The tales are separate but linked in that they were the biggest obstacles in Purdy's early football career. He contracted mononucleosis entering his junior year of high school in 2016 and was on the losing end of a hand fight with a cactus playing paintball with his teammates and coaches the following year.

Those events didn't completely prevent colleges from noticing Purdy, but they made it difficult for him to get scholarship offers, despite a prolific high school career. That is until the NCAA, for the first time, instituted an early signing day in December. That created a frenetic late market for Purdy before the traditional February signing period, as coaches who didn't sign a quarterback early flocked to him to prevent being shut out at the position.

Purdy was arguably the most desirable quarterback in the country between Dec. 2017 and Feb. 2018, with offers from Boise State, Alabama, Illinois and Texas A&M before choosing Iowa State. It was the first time he had quickly jumped from something of an afterthought to center stage.

It also set him on a path to where he is now, preparing to start Sunday for the 8-4 49ers against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers and legendary quarterback Tom Brady (4:25 p.m. ET, Levi's Stadium, Fox), becoming the first 'Mr. Irrelevant' (the final pick in the NFL draft) to start a regular-season game at quarterback.

"I think there's always been an edge to myself," said Purdy, the ninth quarterback picked in the 2022 draft. "I've always believed that I don't care what slot, what round, what pick that I get picked or if I was undrafted, my whole thing was I just want to go out and prove to myself that I can play at this level. And so that's always been my mentality."

Purdy's rise to 49ers' starting quarterback has also been the result of unfortunate circumstances, namely injuries to quarterbacks Trey Lance and Jimmy Garoppolo. But his relentless work habits have led him to this moment.

"He doesn't have to change much," coach Kyle Shanahan said. "He had to prepare a ton. It's real hard to do that week in and week out ... I couldn't imagine studying all week for a test and then not being allowed to take the test. Do it a few weeks in a row and some guys eventually roll the dice and they're like, 'all right, it's not happening' and then the first quarter it happens and then they can't handle it."

"Brock was ready."

AS THE HEAD varsity football coach at Perry (Arizona) High School, Preston Jones was aware of Purdy from his exploits on the freshman team before working in a quarterback timeshare as a sophomore. He was also the backup punt returner, and when Jones would have Purdy practice fielding punts, his job was to throw it back.

Jones would stand 35 to 40 yards away, with a hand near his ear or next to his hip, and ask Purdy to hit either target. According to Jones, nearly every throw would hit within six inches of Jones' hand.

Purdy was the unquestioned starter entering his junior year until he contracted mono about two weeks before the season. He lost 20 pounds and had zero physical activity for six weeks. Passes that used to hum out of his hand floated and wobbled.

When Purdy returned four weeks into the season, Jones planned to ease him in as part of a rotation. Purdy, nowhere near back to full strength, went in on the second series against O'Connor High and never exited, going 25-of-28 for 361 yards and five touchdown passes while running for another 45 yards on 10 carries.

"He was throwing these rainbow bloopers because he had nothing in the tank," Jones said. "He had no strength but he was the most accurate guy I've ever seen."

Purdy continued to pile up numbers, raising Perry from perennial playoff participant to legitimate state championship contender, but his recruitment didn't take off because of the floating, wobbly passes.

During the spring football period prior to his senior season, Purdy joined his fellow seniors and coaches on a retreat to play paintball. In a battle of seniors versus coaches, Purdy found what seemed to be a good hiding spot behind a cactus.

Upon taking evasive maneuvers, Purdy put his left hand up and a cactus spine went directly into it. He ended up in the emergency room and had to have the spine surgically removed. The injury cost him precious time on the spring ball circuit that could have helped with recruiting.

By the time his senior season rolled around, Purdy was finally back to full strength. His throws were up to normal velocity and he regained the weight he'd lost with mono.

Purdy averaged 314.6 passing yards and 72.6 rushing yards per game to go with 67 total passing and rushing touchdowns, leading Perry to within eight points of a state title.

"He was kind of like an old man in a kid's body," Jones said. "He kind of took it like he was playing in the NFL. He was extremely serious in his preparation."

FOR IOWA STATE coach Matt Campbell, the normal opening recruiting call lasts roughly 10 minutes. When Campbell talked to Purdy for the first time, the two chatted for about an hour.

When he ended the call, Campbell couldn't believe Purdy, who was in the throes of a suddenly intense recruiting battle, was so humble and mature. Pairing that with high school tape that reminded Campbell of Baker Mayfield only made Purdy more appealing.

Iowa State didn't have the glitz of some of the other schools recruiting him, but that was part of its appeal to Purdy, who viewed it as a place where he could build something.

Any doubt that Purdy could take the Cyclones to new heights was erased in his first extended playing time at Oklahoma State as a true freshman in 2018, when Purdy replaced starter Zeb Noland in the first quarter. After throwing an earlier touchdown pass, Purdy pulled the ball on a zone read and raced 29 yards for a score, ending with a mini high step as he crossed the goal line.

"At that moment, I'm like, 'Oh, buddy, everybody better get ready,'" Campbell said. "This guy's got a chance to be really special. And from that point forward, he was as big of a transformational figure in the history of Iowa State football as anybody that's ever played here."

And much like after his first post-mono high school performance, Purdy never again relinquished the job at Iowa State. He started 46 games and broke or tied 32 school records while winning more games than any Cyclones quarterback ever. He led Iowa State to its first-ever Big 12 championship game as a junior in 2020, a season in which it finished 9-3 and defeated Oregon in the Fiesta Bowl.

"I think his greatest toughness is his mental toughness," Campbell said. "This was a program that really had never had consistent success. ... From Day 1, I feel like this community and the people around this community put Brock on the pedestal. ... And I think how he handled himself through the journey of those highs and lows [was] really powerful."

LEADING UP TO the NFL draft in April, Purdy believed he could be picked as early as the fourth round or potentially go undrafted. He had all the intangibles, but there were questions about his size (6-foot-1, 220 pounds) and arm strength.

Those questions pushed Purdy to the last pick in the draft, a selection that comes with the "Mr. Irrelevant" title. The Niners loved Purdy's extensive college experience and were inundated with endorsements about his work ethic and moxie. They made the pick, with general manager John Lynch immediately noting Purdy was "relevant to us."

Make your picks throughout the playoffs and compete for $48,500! Make Your Picks Each year, Mr. Irrelevant is welcomed to Newport Beach, California, for a week of activities he helps choose. Purdy wasn't too familiar with all the title entailed but, after some initial reticence, embraced the opportunity.

His week included a banquet -- where he was awarded the "Lowsman Trophy" instead of the Heisman -- surfing and sailing lessons, a trip to Knott's Berry Farm and comfort-food meals like fried chicken. The tradition, started by founder Paul Salata, a former NFL receiver, is meant to be celebratory and fun. But Purdy was once again a quick study, getting up on his surfboard and riding a wave and winning a race in his first sailing attempt.

More than anything, he earned a bunch of new fans in Melanie Fitch -- Salata's daughter and the CEO of Irrelevant Week -- and the many volunteers who make the week happen. There have been other Mr. Irrelevants, such as Bucs kicker Ryan Succop and New York Giants linebacker Tae Crowder, who have gone on to successful careers.

But there's never been a Mr. Irrelevant who suddenly became extremely relevant like Purdy.

"This is the story now," Fitch said. "He's the last guy drafted in the draft and he's playing, he's going to start. That's a long journey in the NFL because there's a lot of really good players that never do start or never really get to get in the game. We just want him to stay healthy, play well, stay poised and, well, be relevant."

AFTER THE 49ERS acquired running back Christian McCaffrey on Oct. 20, McCaffrey went through a crash course on the offense. Among his tutors were assistant coaches like Anthony Lynn and Bobby Turner. Perhaps the most unlikely resource, however, was Purdy.

Coming from the Carolina Panthers, McCaffrey knew little about Purdy, but it was the rookie quarterback who stepped up to help McCaffrey learn the offense. On Saturday nights before McCaffrey's first couple of games, the pair would sit down and recite the play sheet. It gave McCaffrey a chance to commit them to memory and helped Purdy practice verbalizing the plays like he would in a huddle.

They even went out to the field one Friday and did a walkthrough together.

"The first couple days I figured out a lot about him and his mentality and his work ethic and wanting to be great and wanting to help out," McCaffrey said. "He jumped at the opportunity and I really appreciate for it."

Similar stories popped up in San Francisco's locker room this week. Left tackle Trent Williams and tight end George Kittle compared Purdy to a 15-year veteran, noting his willingness to take control of a huddle and tell an unnamed teammate to be quiet when he's trying to call a play.

Linebacker Fred Warner and other defenders have raved about Purdy's willingness to take chances against their defense when running the scout team, with Warner citing the same "competitive excellence" Campbell saw in Purdy's high school tape.

Don't expect Purdy to put up the big numbers he did in high school and college. The 49ers won't ask him to. He has plenty of help, meaning his job is to take care of the ball and get it to the playmakers.

And Purdy hasn't deviated from what got him here. On road trips and other select nights, the Niners offensive linemen and tight ends get together for low-stakes poker games, buy-ins never exceeding $100 a person. When Purdy plays, he doesn't let being relatively new to poker stop him from being aggressive. Guard Daniel Brunskill also knows better than to get his hopes up about Purdy joining when he extends the invite.

"He prepares all the time," Brunskill said. "Brock says 'No, I gotta go study.'"

After all, in staking their Super Bowl hopes on Purdy, the 49ers are placing the biggest bet of all.

The night Brock Purdy convinced the 49ers he could be their 2023 starter

By Matt Barrows, The Athletic

It was almost game time on a crisp, 39-degree night in Seattle. The San Francisco 49ers players were in the midst of a pregame prayer in the visitors locker room. And Kyle Shanahan was frantically changing his opening plays.

Just minutes earlier, Shanahan had been on the field to watch Brock Purdy warm up and, well, there hadn't been much to see. The rookie had attempted a couple of wobbly passes ahead of his first NFL road start. But he'd quickly shut it down — the pain from a broken rib on his left side was too intense.

The 49ers offensive coaches were watching. The Seattle Seahawks coaches were eyeballing him, too. "Brock goes to throw a ball and it's, 'Oh, s—!'" Shanahan recalled recently. "And then we go into the locker room where we have 15 minutes. I start looking at my openers. And no one's around, and I start changing the plays. Because I realize that Brock's not going to be able to do it."

In a normal situation, the 49ers would have turned to their backup long before pregame warmups. The Dec. 15 game in Seattle, however, was anything but normal. The only other healthy quarterback on the roster, Josh Johnson, had arrived just nine days earlier and wasn't well-versed in the offense. The 49ers were playing on a short week in which they'd had one walk-through practice. And they were playing on national television, in the NFL's loudest, most inhospitable stadium and with a division title on the line. Shanahan had resisted going with Johnson with the expectation that Purdy would start feeling better on the day of the game.

"Everyone acts like Josh had been in our system before," Shanahan said. "Josh had come in when we were in Arizona (in 2020) during COVID. He hadn't been in our system at all. ... We didn't really have a No. 2 (quarterback). And I don't mean that against Josh. It was that he had just got there."

Still, Shanahan felt like he had no choice but to go with Plan B. As his players were getting ready to spill onto the field, he was changing the plays to something Johnson could handle.

The ordeal had begun four days earlier in a home game against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Purdy's first NFL start.

Most assume he was hurt on the opening snap, when Buccaneers safety Keanu Neal clobbered him for an 8-yard sack. It may have been Purdy's worst play of the season because he'd changed the call at the line of scrimmage — "Hey! Can! Can! Can!" — to something he shouldn't have. Shanahan remembers being both furious at the decision and panicked that he might have turned over his offense to a rookie who couldn't read the defense.

"I didn't see the hit, either," Shanahan said. "Once he changed the play, I'm looking down the field to see who he's going to throw to. I didn't know how hard he got hit. That's the worst part for a coach. I'm yelling in his headset, 'What did you just do?' I didn't know he's on the ground being murdered by somebody. I can't imagine how irritating that is as a player."

The injury happened on the next series on a third-and-11 play in which Purdy scrambled to his right. He's never been the type who safely slides for the first down. He's always dived.

"He did it all the time," said his father, Shawn, who was watching from the stands that day. "In fact, he would tell his brother (Nebraska quarterback Chubba Purdy), 'You need to dive — get that extra yard.' And then last year, his brother, in the Michigan game, sort of got caught in between a dive and a slide and broke his ankle."

Brock Purdy committed to a full dive against the Buccaneers, and it ended up costing him, too. Just as he extended his body at the sideline, Neal arrived and thumped him in the lower left side of his back. The blow left Purdy with a broken rib, though no one suspected it at the time, including Purdy.

The quarterback immediately popped up and pumped his fist because he thought he'd picked up a first down. (A holding penalty on Trent Williams wiped away the gain.) The 49ers coaches didn't know anything was amiss. Neither did Purdy's parents.

"I didn't see any body language that indicated that he was hurt," Shawn said.

Adrenaline masked the problem. Purdy quickly recovered from his first-snap lapse, and the 49ers jumped out to a 28-0 lead on Tom Brady and the Buccaneers. The halftime locker room was as elated as it had been all season. But as Purdy started to cool down during the intermission, he realized something was wrong.

"I could feel it getting a little tighter in the back," he said. "That's when the pain started kicking in."

He had a harder time loosening up for the second half, though it was still impossible to tell he was hurting because the 49ers were so comfortably ahead. He attempted just three passes after halftime before being relieved by newcomer Johnson midway through the fourth quarter.

At dinner that night, Purdy mentioned he was uncomfortable. But everyone was still buzzing about the big win, and the consensus was that it couldn't be a serious issue — he'd played so well, after all — and that the pain would start to fade the next day.

Instead, it got worse.

"I could tell when Brock came in on Monday and Tuesday he was shocked about how bad it hurt," Shanahan said. "I could tell how tough he was and how badly he wanted to play. But I could see in the back of his mind that he was thinking: 'Maybe this is going to hurt too much. And maybe I can't do it.'" Shawn Purdy said: "His agent called in the middle of the week and said, 'Hey, have you talked to Brock?' He said, 'We think he's got a broken rib.' ... That's how I found out. Because Brock doesn't race to tell us those things."

The 49ers held one practice that week, an evening session Tuesday under the lights of Levi's Stadium, and Purdy didn't attempt a pass. At that point, Shanahan began leaning on quarterbacks coach Brian Griese, who'd been quarterback for 11 seasons and had plenty of experience with playing with injuries. "You play long enough, you get hit enough times and you're going to have a lot of those situations," Griese said. "And probably most applicable, I've played in certain situations where maybe I shouldn't have played."

Griese wasn't sure how Purdy would react. After all, he'd started a single NFL game and was facing a blizzard of challenges as the team prepared for Seattle. He hadn't practiced and knew he wouldn't be 100 percent physically. He'd be playing on an artificial surface, on national television and in a rowdy stadium that had been a decade-long nightmare for the 49ers. On top of that, Purdy felt a heavy responsibility to veterans like Williams, George Kittle and Christian McCaffrey to continue the momentum the team had built in the second half of the season.

It was a daunting mix that would mentally test even a 10-year starter. Purdy was a seventh-round pick who was 12 days away from his 23rd birthday. How would he deal with that mountain of doubt? "For somebody — anybody — to be able to handle that situation, to be able to mentally put aside how you feel and to be able to focus amidst all of those swirling issues and doubts and fears — that's just not normal," Griese said.

Griese was trying to read his pupil throughout the week and up until game time. As Shanahan was scribbling plays for Johnson, a mix of adrenaline and pain-blocking medication took over, and Purdy told Griese he thought he'd be able to play.

"Right when I'm going out, Griese comes and tells me: 'He's feeling better. He thinks he can do it,'" Shanahan recalled. "But I don't believe it because he didn't feel this way 15 minutes ago. And I don't know how this works, either. And Griese does because he has a history with it. So Griese's like: 'No, he thinks he can do it. Let's give it a shot.'"

So Shanahan went back to his original openers, albeit with all sorts of caveats and edits: Don't roll Purdy to the left; he can throw better to his right; keep everything short.

"I'm a rotational athlete," Purdy said. "The way I throw, you've got to use everything — left, right. You're doing everything. You can feel both sides. There were just some throws that if I got in a certain angle I could feel it more."

None of Purdy's first-quarter pass attempts traveled more than 12 yards. And he said he had to be careful not to fall on his left side, something that came into play when he was hit by a blitzing Seahawks safety following a quick toss to McCaffrey.

But the game ended up being the opposite of the one four days earlier in that Purdy began feeling looser and more confident as the contest wore on. Shanahan's play calls, in turn, grew more bold.

After the Seahawks cut San Francisco's lead to 21-13 late in the fourth quarter, the 49ers had to burn off the remaining 3 minutes, 35 seconds. Facing third-and-1, Shanahan knew Seattle would overload the line of scrimmage. So he called a play he wouldn't have considered at the start of the game, one that required Purdy to scramble to his right.

This time, Purdy didn't dive. He slid — inbounds, so that the clock kept running — while extending the ball just beyond the first-down marker.

"I was like, 'Slide!'" said Shawn Purdy, who was watching on television. "I was hoping he wouldn't dive. I was holding my breath on that one. And he sort of slid while holding the ball out to get that first down, which was smart."

Griese said: "I think (sliding) was on the forefront of his mind, to be honest with you. I think he learned his lesson."

The Seahawks used their final timeout to challenge whether Purdy had crossed the first-down marker on the play. He had, which meant the game essentially was over.

The quarterback's final numbers were modest. He was 17-of-26 for 216 yards and two touchdowns. But the outing turned Griese into a believer, and he suspects it had the same effect on Purdy's teammates, who donned red "Conquered the West" T-shirts in the raucous visiting locker room that night.

"To go out and perform the way that he did under all those stressors and all the unknowns — that was really eye-opening to me," Griese said. "I think the rest of the offense — and really the entire roster — kind of resonated around him that night, and it certainly helped him as the rest of the season went on, too. Because now the guys in the locker room know exactly what they're getting in him."

Shanahan said Purdy's first three games — relieving injured Jimmy Garoppolo against Miami, his first start against Tampa Bay and playing injured in Seattle — told him the rookie could lead the team to the playoffs. When he sat down in February and rewatched all of Purdy's starts, Shanahan was convinced he had his quarterback for the 2023 season.

For him, the game in Seattle wasn't just about grit or toughness. The situation also brought out Purdy's calm and maturity. He said a young quarterback might tell his head coach anything to get on the field. Purdy was straightforward throughout.

In short, there was a sense that those four grueling days in December revealed who Purdy was at his core.

"He talked to me the whole way through it and was accurate the whole time," Shanahan said. "And he didn't make excuses for himself, either. He did have bad plays in there and you never heard, 'Oh, it's because I'm hurting.' He wasn't that type of guy. And I think that's why the players really believed in him, too. The poise, the competitor, everything. It was all real. To me, it was, 'All right, this dude you can trust.'"

Deebo Samuel

San Francisco 49ers' Deebo Samuel created his own position: 'Wide back'

By Nick Wagoner
ESPN.com
January 20, 2022

During a standard San Francisco 49ers practice, receiver Deebo Samuel has no shortage of things to do. With one notable exception.

Soon after the Niners wrap up stretching and transition to a special teams period, Samuel finds himself with the only opening in his daily practice schedule. With that time, Samuel sidles up to coach Kyle Shanahan for a chat.

It happens before every practice, and the topic of conversation ranges from how Samuel is feeling to the upcoming session to the next opponent. On a recent afternoon, Samuel brought up his son -- Tyshun Raequan Samuel Jr. -- who was born on Dec. 27 but is apparently already showing signs of following in his father's footsteps.

"He's 3 weeks old and he's already holding his bottle by himself," Shanahan said. "So, [Deebo] is just convinced that means he's going to be a top pick in the draft."

In those conversations, Shanahan and Samuel talk about, well, everything. Which is only fitting because everything is what Samuel does for the 49ers and it's also what he's meant to them this season.

In his third NFL season, Samuel has emerged as a supernova, forcefully inserting himself into a different discussion about the game's best offensive weapons. At times, he has also put the 49ers on his back, carrying them to the NFL divisional round of the playoffs against the Green Bay Packers on Saturday (8:15 p.m. ET, Fox).

The thing about Samuel isn't the amount of success he's had but the number of ways he's left opposing defenses in his cosmic dust.

While playing receiver, running back and, occasionally, quarterback, Samuel accounted for 15 total touchdowns on his way to earning first-team All-Pro honors for the first time. Samuel is aware of the unique job he has, even creating a name for it: wide back.

His 1,770 yards from scrimmage ranked third in the NFL.

He led the NFL in yards per reception (18.3) and was fourth in yards per rush (6.2) among players with at least 50 receptions or rushes.

His eight rushing touchdowns are the most by a receiver in a season since 1970, and he's the only receiver in the modern era to lead his team in rushing touchdowns.

He became one of four players -- alongside Roger Craig, Marshall Faulk and Christian McCaffrey -- to have at least 1,000 receiving yards and five rushing touchdowns in a season.

In a wild-card win over the Dallas Cowboys last week, Samuel set an NFL record for most rushing yards (72) by a primary receiver in a playoff game during the Super Bowl era, including his ninth rushing touchdown of the year.

Whenever the 49ers needed an offensive jolt, Samuel and his unique mix of hard-charging physicality and blazing speed provided it no matter how big the moment.

"That's just naturally who he is," Shanahan said. "He'll be asleep right before kickoff and he'll come out and not hesitate on the first play. When you're like that, it allows your heart rate to be level, your breath to be level, and you have a certain point to you, so you can kind of do the more instinctual stuff and yet still be violent enough to play at the level he does. It's not something you see in a lot of athletes."

'A natural football player'

During the 2021 regular season, Deebo Samuel caught 77 passes for 1,405 yards and six touchdowns. He also rushed 59 times for 365 yards and eight more scores. Tim Heitman/USA TODAY Sports
Before a pair of early-season games, Samuel was asked if the Rams' Odell Beckham Jr. or Seahawks' DK Metcalf were receivers he studied. Samuel shook his head and said no.

Samuel meant no disrespect. It's just that what he's asked to do on a weekly basis means there's only one wide receiver worth watching closely: himself.

"I know you can learn from other guys, but not if you're not kind of built like them," Samuel said. "For myself, it's to see how I come in and out of breaks, what a certain guy's matchup is or the things that guys like to do when they are facing guys like me even though there's not that many."

For most of his football-playing life, Samuel has played a hybrid role. He did it at Inman Chapman (South Carolina) High and again at the University of South Carolina.

Receiver has always been Samuel's primary position, but running back was not new to him when the Niners first started using him there as a rookie in 2019.

Still, most of Samuel's work during his first two seasons came as a receiver. In his first 22 games, Samuel had 22 carries. Of those, six came from a true running back position.

When the injury bug began to bite Niners running backs this year, Shanahan and offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel turned to Samuel to help pick up the slack. After gaining 22 rushing yards -- compared to 882 receiving yards -- in his first eight games this season, Samuel surged to 343 rushing yards and seven rushing touchdowns during his final eight regular-season contests.

Including the wild-card win in Dallas, Samuel has played in 17 games, rushing from a true running back position 64 times for 421 yards and nine touchdowns. On those nine touchdowns runs, Samuel has averaged 16.44 yards per carry, which is only slightly less than the average distance (16.76 yards) of the 840 receiving touchdowns in the NFL this season.

San Francisco is 7-0 when Samuel gets six-plus carries in a game.

Considering how complicated the Niners' outside-zone-heavy run scheme can be, it's fair to assume Samuel spent time in the meeting room with running backs coach Bobby Turner. That would be wrong.

"He spends almost no time with that," fullback Kyle Juszczyk said. "He's never in the running back room. That's what's so impressive is what a natural football player Deebo is."

Turner takes Samuel aside between practice periods, offers a few tips on the correct footwork, running path and timing, and Samuel picks it up.

In some cases, Samuel hasn't run a play at all during the week, but Turner will give instructions (the path, where to line up and where to aim, for example) in the walk-through the day before a game. Samuel takes care of the rest.

"You kind of know what running plays you're gonna get, so it's not too much stress," Samuel said. "At first it was kind of hard, but as time goes it just gets easier and easier."

Evolution of the 'wide back'

Against the Cowboys last week, Deebo Samuel set an NFL record for most rushing yards (72) by a primary receiver in a playoff game during the Super Bowl era. Richard Rodriguez/Getty Images
Percy Harvin last played in the NFL in 2016, but at 33 he feels like he still has some football in him. That belief bubbles to the surface when Harvin turns on games and sees more players doing many of the things he once did for the Vikings, Seahawks, Jets and Bills.

Looking back, Harvin says his football prime came too soon, as more all-purpose playmakers like him now dot the NFL landscape. He sees Tavon Austin in Jacksonville, Cordarrelle Patterson in Atlanta and, of course, Samuel.

Ask NFL evaluators for a comp for Samuel and Harvin's name comes up the most.

"I thought for a year or two, Tavon kind of kept it going and then Cord, but other than those two, I felt the position was going to kind of fall off until last year and the year before that," Harvin said. "It kind of picked back up with Deebo. I'm kind of like, 'OK, they realize you can really do some things if you've got a guy who can really do it and knows what he's doing.'"

The weekly toll of playing in the NFL is already high for receivers who are often asked to make catches over the middle and log multiple miles running and hoping for the ball to come their way.

What happens when you move to running back, one of the most physically demanding positions in sports? In addition to learning plays from a different spot on the field, running backs are subjected to more collisions than any other skill position.

For someone like Austin, who entered the league in 2013 at 5-foot-8 and 175 pounds, taking care of his body wasn't as much of a factor early in his career because he was so used to the dual role. He wouldn't even use the cold tub after games.

"With age I've got to spend a little bit more time on my body," Austin said. "I've always been a guy that takes care of my body, but now it's really to the extreme. I feel like when I do that, when I come out here, I see that I'm still running fast. So that's the most important thing."

For Patterson, the move has been more drastic. He played more snaps at running back (290) than receiver (150) in 2021. The Chicago Bears first asked Patterson to play running back in 2020. It took Patterson, who also entered the league in 2013 and had only done spot duty at running back, some time to get used to it.

"I was like, 'Oh Lord, this is different,'" Patterson said. "But at the end of the day, I just do whatever I can."

The one thing each hybrid player has in common: a level of physical and mental toughness that belies his size.

At 6 feet, 220 pounds, Samuel is built differently than many receivers. He views it as an advantage, and that mentality shows up often with his ability to plow through defenders. Samuel led all receivers in yards after catch per reception (10), with the closest wideout coming at 8.53.

"When he gets the ball in his hands, it's just different," tight end George Kittle said. "He has a different mindset -- he's trying to run people over, he's trying to knock mouthpieces out, he's trying to body guys. It's a physical game, and he's out there embarrassing fools."

'A good stress'

Considering what Samuel has done this season, the idea he could take his game to another level might seem surprising, but the 49ers believe his ceiling is limited by the depths of their imagination.

"It's something that you really dream of as a coach in terms of being able to utilize people in different ways to try to find advantageous looks for the offense in general," McDaniel said. "We challenge ourselves to open our mind and really see how we can do our best to stress a defense out, but don't get it twisted -- it's a good stress. Something that you're challenging yourself with because all he does is alleviate stress on game days for his teammates and coaches alike.

"It's a lot easier to figure stuff out on Monday and Tuesday when the problem that you're trying to solve is how do I get this guy the ball? And on game day, 'Hey, Deebo, here's the ball.' That's the best thing for a coach that you could possibly imagine."

For other coaches and personnel evaluators around the league, McDaniel's words should resonate. Perhaps the definition of what a No. 1 receiver looks like is changing. At minimum, the emergence of Samuel and his contemporaries should open some eyes to players who might otherwise fly under the radar.

Patterson would like to see the Pro Bowl add a spot for hybrid offensive players, noting "we're just trying to set trends."

After all, prototypical receivers have to rely on quarterbacks to get them the ball, and defenses can take them away with scheme. However, if the Niners want to put Samuel in the backfield and hand him the ball, there's nothing anybody can do.

"When you talk about touches and ways to affect the game where you don't have to get 10 catches as a receiver and you can go and still get touches out of the backfield, your chances of making a big play are high," Harvin said. "You can still affect the game in a big way."

Which is why in the ultimate copycat league, everybody is seeking a wide back of their own.

"Anytime people kind of approach some uncharted territory, it kind of opens people's minds," McDaniel said. "But if you've watched any of the draft coverage the last couple years, people have been trying to find the next Deebo. The problem is, there's one Deebo."

On the contrary, as Shanahan can attest, there actually is another Deebo. He's already holding a bottle on his own, but he won't be draft-eligible until about 2043.

How Deebo Samuel's Chosen Mother Saved His Life

By Deebo Samuel
GQ.com
May 9, 2021

My stepmother Precious Martin, my biological mother Felicia Winn, and my grandmother Kathy Winn are the three main ladies of my life. When I was a child, Felicia kind of got into the street life. I'm not gonna go too deep on it, but it was clear that something had happened to her. She wasn't able to provide for us the same way anymore. Where we grew up in Spartanburg, South Carolina, wasn't the best. I lost a friend to guns when I was 11. My cousin, Amir, was shot last year, too.

Precious and my father Galen Samuel have been together since I was six or seven years old. As a kid, you aren't really thinking about the nuances of stepmom vs. mom. You just wanna play ball. You just wanna be a kid. But even though Precious had kids of her own, she made time for me and my older brother, Tyquan. She became the first person I call no matter what. And I began thinking of her as my mom.

At one point I was living with my grandmother, we call her Kat. Around the ninth grade, she started getting sick. At that moment, I had nowhere to live. Nowhere to go. No one, I felt like, I could turn to. But then there was Precious. She took me in. I moved with my dad to her house in Inman, South Carolina. Man, I'm gonna be honest: without her, I wouldn't have made it to college. My grades weren't the best, but she clamped down on me and forced me over the finish line. I really think she saved my life. Shit, she raised me.

I didn't really know what to do when I was younger, but I knew I wanted to change my circumstances. Times were rough, but I kept saying to myself, when I make it to the NFL, I'm gonna get my biological mom some help. When I got to that life, I sent Felicia to a rehab facility to get her mind straight. When she completed her stint there, I bought her a house. I got her up on her feet and now she's back, she's working at a regular restaurant, she's good. She's doing the things she's supposed to be doing.

And let me make something clear....that's my mom! That's my dawg! I could never resent her for the way our lives turned out. She's special to me. Just like Precious is. What's funny is those two are cool. They don't have a problem with each other. I love them both the same. Shit, sometimes, I feel like they both gave birth to me. Precious doesn't care if I call her "mom" or "stepmom" and neither does Felicia. They both just get along. Of course, I've shown Precious a similar level of appreciation that I showed Felicia. I won't say too much, because that'll stay between us.

I bought a house for my older brother Tyquan, too. He's like my role model. He taught me the ins and outs of the streets, school, sports, everything. I still remember how he'd always yell at me wherever we were, "I'm gonna turn you into an animal!" "I'm gonna turn you into a player nobody can stop!" We went out to the front yard of my grandmother's house one day. I'll never forget it. I put my pads on, I wasn't worried about nothing! Until he put his pads on, and he was knocking....my....head off! I'm talking about I was crying, screaming. My grandmother was upset!

Growing up, just like my momma, Tyquan was in the streets. In and out of jail. But without him, I wouldn't be the athlete I am today. And I'm not just saying this because he's my brother. Go to Spartanburg and ask anyone you see who the best athlete they've ever seen is. They'll all tell you the same thing, "It's a dude named Squirt." That's his nickname back home. He kept me out of the way of trouble, though. I was around him, of course, but he wasn't doing the shit he was doing when I was there. He was that big brother that you need.

I take pride in him for that. But when he went to jail, you can ask him, when he called from jail those first few times, I didn't answer the phone. Hearing him in there, it did something to me. It made me mad, upset. I couldn't bear it. He got out when I was already in college and started coming to my games at South Carolina. Then it was like nothing changed. There was my brother: My family. One of the only things I really care about in this world. When it came to sports or being in the streets, he was still the guy that I leaned on. He tried to set a better example for me, because he saw something in me he didn't see in himself.

But Precious was the person who saved me. My real name isn't Deebo, it's Tyshun. They called me Deebo because when I was younger I used to always wreak havoc, bullying folks and stuff. And Precious, it's like she read a manual on the best punishments moms could give out. When I had to buckle down for school, she stopped me from going back to Spartanburg to see friends and family because there was only a lot of pain there. Her and Galen threatened to take ball away from me. Yo, I wasn't having that! Ever since then, I was on the up and up.

When I got to college, you get mentors, tutors, everything to help you succeed. Then, it was just the mental part. Coming out of high school, to be honest, I thought I was that guy! I had a rude awakening. I had to redshirt my freshman season. It took a massive toll on me. As college went on, I pulled both my hamstrings, broke my left ankle, broke my foot. Man, I wanted to quit. I couldn't do this anymore.

Precious changed from my tutor to my life coach. She wouldn't allow me to give up on everything I was fighting for. An injury couldn't prevent me from doing the thing I love when it was worse than this just trying to grow up. She would remind me that God put me in certain situations to test me, to see how strong I was and see how I overcome adversity in life. And it would just go up from there.

We went to the Super Bowl my rookie season in San Francisco. I had a great season and there was plenty of hoopla and success to go with it. Right before OTA's my second year, I broke my opposite foot. I thought I was past these injuries in college. And I remembered what Precious told me about adversity. This was just another test. It had to be. I called her as soon as I left the stadium that day, and we got through that test. Even now, I call her when I leave the stadium. I call her every day. It doesn't matter if she wants to talk to me, or I don't feel like being bothered, if she's sick, or I'm off, I'm gonna call her.

When my life was on the line, it was Precious who saved me. When I had nowhere to go, it was Precious who got me out of that dark place. She took me under her wing even though I wasn't her child. She pointed me in the right direction of life to get me where I am today. I thank God that He put her in my life and in my father's life, because she changed his life around, too. She refused to let me go back to what I grew up under.

I just applaud her for being the best mother figure I could imagine. When you're stuck in those circumstances, that endless spiral, thinking life will never get better, thinking that you're stuck forever, you stop believing that the sun will shine tomorrow. Unless you have someone like Precious that'll hold your hand as you walk through the storm.

Charvarius Ward

Charvarius Ward's journey from shy kid with engineering dreams to 49ers' star

By Ron Kroichick
San Francisco Chronicle
December 31, 2022

Long before Charvarius “Mooney” Ward landed a $40 million contract, before he became the top cornerback on the NFL’s best defense and tangled with DK Metcalf on national television, Ward barely even dreamed of playing professional football.

He wanted to become an engineer, or pursue a career in computer science. Football was an afterthought into his teenage years, not an obsession.

Ward figured a non-sports path was his best way out of McComb, Miss. He didn’t play high school football until his senior year, partly because a childhood surgery left him shy and anxious around other kids. So he usually stayed home in his free time, reading books or hanging out with his mom, Tanya.

He spent two years at a community college, two years at a below-the-radar Division I program (Middle Tennessee State) and didn’t hear his name called in the 2018 NFL draft. Now, less than five years later, Ward counts as a big reason the San Francisco 49ers roll into the new year with an eight-game winning streak and Super Bowl ambitions.

His improbable journey includes a dad in prison and a single mom working diligently, mostly in factory jobs, to support her family. Ward also weathered an uncommon scare in second or third grade, when he jumped off a porch, landed awkwardly and complained of pain in his hip.

X-rays revealed a cyst, leading to surgery and a long recovery, including two to three months in a wheelchair and extended time on crutches.

“The doctors weren’t really sure — they said it could be nothing but they also said it might be cancer,” Tanya Ward said. “I was scared. They showed me the X-ray and his bone was paper-thin. He was very skinny.”

Charvarius Ward couldn’t play football, ride a bike or swim for more than a year, inactivity that helps explain why he became a homebody. That’s also when he grew “super tight” with his mom and grandma, who helped him with simple daily tasks such as taking a bath.

He wanted to repay them, fueling his simmering motivation for years to come. But the aftermath of Ward’s hip surgery also created imposing social obstacles.

“It kind of disconnected me from society,” he said Thursday in a Chronicle interview. “At 9 or 10 years old, that’s when you’re learning a lot of people skills. I was scared to be seen in a wheelchair and on crutches, so I never went outside. Once I got off crutches, I stayed in the house.”

Football would wait.

McComb, Miss., is a town of 12,000-plus people, about 80 miles south of the state capital in Jackson and 110 miles north of New Orleans. McComb’s history includes violence sparked by white supremacist groups during the civil rights movement in the 1960s, and a 1977 plane crash that killed members of the rock band Lynyrd Skynyrd. Also, singer Britney Spears was born in McComb.

Ward, 26, grew up in what his mom called the ghetto, known as Community Park Apartments. He sports an elaborate tattoo spread across his chest, depicting the apartment complex, his old street address of 120 Gillis Circle and a replica food stamp.

He wants to remember the hard times, when food was scarce and he didn't know what the future held. He sees how many people in McComb are satisfied simply to survive. Ward wanted more.

"I was going to find a way to make it," he said.

Ward — whose first name is a creative derivation of his dad's (Charles), though neither he nor his mom could recall the genesis of the "Mooney Man" nickname — figured his computer skills might help him make it. He excelled enough in school to skip 11th grade.

He was tall and lean and fast, but Ward didn't heed the call of football until the summer ahead of his senior year (he previously ran track). His older brother Charvoun had played well at McComb High, motivating Charvarius to follow suit.

On the second day of summer workouts, "Mooney" made his mark. Marquis McFarland, the wide receivers coach at the time, was supervising the ladder and cone drills on a muddy field drenched by rain.

Most players repeatedly slipped and fell, given the conditions. Ward, despite not having cleats, kept his footing and completed the drills like a seasoned veteran.

After practice, McFarland said, he went into the head coach's office and asked, "Who is this dude with the tennis shoes? He's got the best feet of anybody out here."

Ward pestered McFarland about playing wide receiver, but McComb was stacked at that position and short on cornerbacks. That's where Ward thrived in his lone high school season.

His late start in football dissuaded major-college recruiters, so he spent the next two seasons at Hinds Community College in Raymond, Miss. Dwiki Wilson, the secondary coach at Hinds during Ward's time there and now an assistant at South Alabama, recalled Ward's eagerness to learn the nuances of playing cornerback.

He approached Wilson at one point and bluntly said, "Coach me." That was not a common request among junior college players.

"He acted like a 40-year-old," Wilson said. "He was just an older soul, always on top of his business. He wasn't a needy kid."

Ward started to realize football could land him a college education, which still interested him more than the fantasy of reaching the NFL. But he also held his own against Hinds' collection of skilled wide receivers.

Larry Williams, then Hinds' defensive coordinator and now the school's head coach, remembered one game in which he flatly told Ward he needed his desire to catch up with his abundant athletic ability.

"He played hard, but his passion was really reading a lot and becoming an engineer," Williams said.

Still, the athletic ability — swift and strong, with long arms and huge hands on a 6-foot-1 frame — was tantalizing. Ward started to smother opposing wide receivers in his time at Hinds, sparking interest from TCU, Minnesota and Ohio University.

He eventually landed at Middle Tennessee State, a Conference USA program in Murfreesboro, Tenn. And there's a story behind the Blue Raiders' interest in Ward.

Then-defensive backs coach Steve Ellis went to McComb to recruit Ward, at the suggestion of two other McComb alums whom Ellis knew. They went to a local park to meet Ward and came upon him playing in a pickup basketball game.

Ellis watched in wonder as a shot caromed off the rim and one player — Ward, it turned out — jumped over two other players, caught the ball with one hand and slammed it home. The spectators went nuts.

Ellis was smitten.

“I swear he was in the air for two seconds,” he said. “That just shows you his leaping ability, his explosiveness, his hand-eye coordination. I fell in love with him playing basketball.”

Even so, Ellis also knew Ward needed some work. He arrived at Middle Tennessee State weighing no more than 170 pounds, so the coaches all but locked him in the weight room, fed him and watched him gain 20-plus pounds in a year.

They also watched him blossom into a lockdown cornerback, smart enough to study opposing offenses and now strong enough to handle big receivers. Head coach Rick Stockstill marveled at Ward’s work ethic and fearlessness.

He also showed off his hands, to the point where Ellis made an exception for him during the team’s end-of-practice Hail Mary drill. Ellis told other defensive backs to knock down passes during the drill.

He told Ward to try to catch the ball — and he once snatched a pass out of the air with one hand.

Fittingly, the final steps on Ward’s journey to NFL acclaim took time. He signed with the Cowboys as an undrafted free agent, was traded to the Chiefs and played sparingly as a rookie in 2018.

Then, after soaring to prominence in his three seasons as a full-time starter in Kansas City, the 49ers lured Ward away with a three-year, $40.5 million free-agent contract, including more than $26.6 million guaranteed.

He has given San Francisco’s defense exactly what it needed: a No. 1 cornerback equally adept in coverage and as a tackler. Ward typically lines up on the left side, though he shadowed Metcalf in the Dec. 15 win in Seattle — defiantly grappling with his fellow Mississippi native, even while giving up 3 inches and 40 pounds — and similarly could follow Davante Adams in Sunday’s game against the Raiders.

“Mooney brings confidence to our entire defense,” said defensive coordinator DeMeco Ryans. “When you have a guy who can match up against a top receiver in this league, like Metcalf, it’s just confidence for everyone.”

Ward, who was named a Pro Bowl alternate this season, carries himself with a quiet swagger. He embraces the responsibilities of being the team’s top cornerback, and the challenging matchups that title brings.

He also remains fully aware of how his journey shaped him. Ward mused about possibly playing 12 to 15 years in the NFL (this is his fifth season), because he saved wear and tear on his body by playing only one season in high school.

His journey also includes remembering his roots. Ward returned to McComb this fall, passing out turkeys ahead of Thanksgiving. Kids swarmed him, seeking autographs and photos. He received a key to the city on an earlier visit.

Ward already has one Super Bowl ring (with the Chiefs) and now is chasing another. He also has a massive contract, allowing him to buy a house for Tanya outside Dallas. So, yes, he’s come a long way from his days in McComb — even if he didn’t become an engineer.

“I’m motivating a lot of people back home,” Ward said, “because I really made it out.”

Fred Warner

Why 49ers' Fred Warner is the prototype for today's elite middle linebacker

By Ron Kroichick
San Francisco Chronicle
October 20, 2023

Beyond his teammates and opposing offensive coordinators, Fred Warner also has seized the attention of previous San Francisco 49ers linebackers.

They understand how the middle linebacker position has evolved throughout NFL history. That spot once was the province of hulking, menacing characters, from Dick Butkus to Mike Singletary to Ray Lewis. Now it demands speed and quickness, as Warner routinely illustrates.

He's become the shining example of an elite, modern-day middle linebacker — still physical, sure, but shrewd and mobile above all else.

"What I love most is he's seldom out of position," five-time All-Pro Patrick Willis said of Warner in a Chronicle interview. "What I like even more, and I've told him this, is the way he plays the pass, the way he floats. I really admire how well he plays in open space."

Gary Plummer started at middle linebacker for the 49ers on their last Super Bowl championship team, in the 1994 season, but he once struggled to watch 21st-century NFL games. There were exceptions, such as Willis and running mate NaVorro Bowman from 2010-13, but Plummer didn't especially like the way linebackers played.

Warner helped flip the equation.

Plummer, a former 49ers radio analyst, now makes sure to catch all of his former team's games on television at his San Diego home. He savors seeing Warner and teammate Dre Greenlaw roam the field, chasing down ball carriers and shadowing fleet receivers.

"These two guys are really a joy to watch," Plummer said. "You can see what they're thinking, almost anticipate it as you watch the game. It's impressive. It can be a game for Neanderthals, but it's also a thinking man's game at that position."

Greenlaw's emergence makes historical sense in some ways, because outside linebackers traditionally are smaller and swifter than their interior counterparts. Plummer recalled Lee Woodall, a 225-pound rookie, filling the role for San Francisco during that '94 title season.

But middle linebackers once spent most of their time stuffing the run, dating to Hall of Famers Butkus and Ray Nitschke in the 1960s and '70s. Not anymore, in today's pass-happy NFL. Warner mostly played defensive end/outside linebacker in high school and was a hybrid safety/linebacker in college at BYU. So he was built for the job in many respects, even if scouts were skeptical about his size (6-foot-3, 230 pounds) entering the 2018 draft.

Now, in his sixth season and soon to turn 27, Warner stirs little skepticism. He's a two-time All-Pro who anchors the 49ers' stout defense and seems to be getting better and better.

Warner offered his signature game against Dallas on Oct. 8, when he forced a fumble, collected a sack and snagged a deflected pass for an interception. Call it a defensive trifecta, which no 49ers player had achieved since Bowman in 2013. Warner intercepted another pass in Sunday's loss to Cleveland. Plummer noticed. Coaches in his day chided defensive players for "loafing," not turning and running to the ball on every play. Warner doesn't loaf.

“You saw that in the Cowboys game,” Plummer said. “The ball caroms off the wide receiver and, bam, Fred is right there (for the interception). That stuff doesn’t happen by accident, it happens because you train yourself to do that.”

In Warner’s case, the training traces to his upbringing in San Marcos (San Diego County). He grew up as the oldest of Laura Warner’s three kids; she and Warner’s dad divorced when he was young. So she was a single mom who worked long days as a secretary at a law firm in Solana Beach, about a 45-minute drive away.

Fred Warner couldn’t help but appreciate his mom’s work ethic and dedication to her kids. And, in many ways, he couldn’t help but become responsible as an adolescent, knowing younger brother Troy and younger sister Maya were watching him.

Maybe it’s no coincidence his 49ers teammates praise Warner’s leadership as much as his football skills. “Growing up with my mom as the breadwinner, that shaped me in every way,” he said. “I can probably attribute the leadership to that. Some people are natural-born leaders, but I think it’s usually something you have to develop over time. That’s exactly how it worked for me.”

Or, as longtime friend and high-school teammate Nate Ostrom put it, “It made Fred grow up at an early age. He knew right away he had to be the man of the house. I think that gave him the confidence to be a leader on the field, because he had to be one off the field.”

His football evolution took time. Warner played on the freshman team at Mission Hills High, then on junior varsity as a sophomore. He didn’t reach varsity until he was a junior.

Then, as a senior, he was tall, slender and uber-productive. Head coach Chris Hauser often put Warner at defensive end and watched him harass quarterbacks and chase down ball carriers, much as he does now.

Warner led his team to its first CIF San Diego Section championship in 2013.

“Fred was always laser focused on the details,” Hauser said. “He saw what would transpire in front of him through film study. Many times teams would try to fool him with the option or bootleg, and he wouldn’t get fooled. He’d come up and wiggle his index finger, like, ‘I’m not taking the bait.’”

As the finger waggle suggests, Warner has a joking, fun-loving side. Ostrom recalled a snowboarding trip they took with friends as freshmen, to the mountains northeast of Los Angeles. They spent the whole day crashing, falling and laughing, covered in snow.

But mostly Warner was mature and responsible, avoiding parties and staying out of trouble. He wanted to play football in college and ultimately in the NFL. When he saw he had a realistic chance, as Ostrom put it, he buckled down even more.

And he always sought ways to cause havoc on the field. The seniors on the 2013 team had never beaten Oceanside High, before they met that year in the regular season. Mission Hills trailed until Warner forced a fumble by punching out the ball (sound familiar, Cowboys?), sparking his team’s comeback victory. Buoyed with confidence, Mission Hills subsequently went on its playoff run and beat Oceanside again in the title game at Qualcomm Stadium.

Fast forward to 2023 and Warner sits on a lofty perch. He’s durable: Sunday’s game in Cleveland marked his 87th of a possible 88 regular-season starts in his five-plus seasons with the 49ers. He’s productive: Warner is on pace for his sixth consecutive season of 118 or more tackles.

And he carries cachet among his teammates. Consider the framed photo of Warner resting on a shelf in safety Talanoa Hufanga’s locker, a remnant from media day last year. Hufanga keeps the photo there, he said, because of his deep respect for Warner.

Warner and Hufanga occasionally work out together in the offseason, including some boxing and jiu-jitsu in the East Bay. Those sessions gave Hufanga insight into his pal's focus, diligence and relentlessness, the same traits he displayed in his high-school days.

Then, on Sundays, Hufanga sees firsthand how Warner fits the modern prototype at his position. Witness the way he tracked speedy wide receiver Brandin Cooks 55 yards downfield on one play during the Dallas game.

"He can fly around and cover," Hufanga said of Warner. "That's what linebackers weren't able to do back in the day. There's so much speed in the game now, you need someone who can cover like that. ... It's awesome to have him in the middle."

That's exactly where the 49ers want Warner — right in the middle of things.

What's a 49ers practice like? We followed Fred Warner during longest session of camp

By Matt Barrows
The Athletic
August 8, 2023

Early to bed, early to rise?

Well, that's half right for Fred Warner.

During training camp, the San Francisco 49ers linebacker is under the covers at the team hotel by 10 p.m. and tries to remain there until 7:30 the next morning.

"I'm huge on sleep," Warner said. "So I try to maximize the hours, especially during training camp."

Three hours after that, he's chasing down Christian McCaffrey, crashing into George Kittle and doing everything he can to antagonize his offensive teammates.

I thought it would be interesting to give readers a different view of a 49ers training camp session — a blow-by-blow of what occurs on a given day — by following one player from start to finish. I got lucky and picked Friday's practice, which turned out to be the most grueling of any so far this summer. It lasted more than two hours on a day when the temperature reached 82 degrees.

The focus of the reporting wasn't happenstance. Warner is the most consistently animated of all the 49ers, the guy who rallies teammates — and the fans — before, during and after practice. That is, if you want action, watch Warner.

The following is a tick-tock of what happened Friday. I interviewed Warner the following day after practice.

9:58: Warner walks onto the field for the first time, helmet in hand, and is immediately spotted by some of the three dozen Marines from Bridgeport Marine Corps base who are seated in the bleachers.

"There's Fred! Fred! Freeeeeee!"

That will be a refrain throughout the morning. Deebo Samuel, Kittle, McCaffrey and Warner seem to be the most popular 49ers, and there is more than one "All-Pro Fred!" shoutout while Warner kneels on the sideline between series. He raises his hand in acknowledgment but doesn't turn around.

"I'm starting to see some 54s out there," he says. "Usually it's just the Deebo Samuels and the Christian McCaffreys. Now I've got people showing up, buying my jersey. It means I'm doing something right."

9:59: Warner stops by the so-called hydration station, a tent-and-table setup just outside the team's weight room. It's not a quick pit stop for some Gatorade. Warner spends a full three minutes there, longer than any other player. The station includes everything from collagen shots to beta alanine tablets, and Warner takes advantage of all of it. It's like he's at a hydration buffet table.

"They have different powders — pre-workout powders — over there," he says. "Gotta get a scoop of that. I drink some of the electrolytes. Yeah, I'm trying to get all those little things in before practice and make sure I'm setting myself up to do my best."

10:03: The 49ers go into what they call their activation period. Warner does everything from planks to wall sits to working with bands. It's not quite time for the team's formal stretch. This period might be considered the pre-stretch stretch.

10:15: In an effort to pump up the crowd, Warner runs from the west practice field where the Marines are located to the east side stands where most of the fans are situated. He wants maximum energy for practice. This is a daily occurrence.

10:17: The 49ers begin their walk-through. They had a decidedly light practice a day earlier, and a number of defensive starters didn't take part. Aside from Nick Bosa, every defensive starter is present Friday. Warner takes a few swigs of water when the equipment manager walks by. He has to be the most hydrated player on the squad.

10:28: The formal team-wide stretch begins. Warner throws his long hair back and puts on his helmet for the first time. For the last four years, the stretch has ended with Warner running at full speed and then doing what he calls a "jump flex" with Bosa. It's just what it sounds like — two guys bumping each other while they flex. With Bosa currently holding out, Warner instead does a daily chest bump with defensive tackle Javon Kinlaw.

10:32: The team gathers briefly in the middle of the field before practice begins in earnest. This is when someone delivers a quick message to the team. That someone is usually Warner.

"I let them know we're in that point of camp now — a full three sets of (padded practices)," Warner says. "Now guys are starting to get sore legs, their minds might start wandering. And this is where you really have to put your head down and grind through the hard days. ... So I wanted to emphasize the competition part of it. There's always going to be a winner and a loser. Even though it is a team, it's still competition at the end of the day."

49ers linebackers Fred Warner and Dre Greenlaw have begun juggling to work on their hand-eye coordination.

10:33: "Welcome to the Jungle" blasts over the loudspeakers. If you're hearing classic rock at a 49ers practice, you know it's a special teams period. Kyle Shanahan is obsessed with Lil Wayne and loves hip-hop, but special teams coordinator Brian Schneider leans toward the hair band era. Think Guns N' Roses and AC/DC.

Because Warner and fellow starting linebacker Dre Greenlaw aren't core special teamers, this is when they practice their juggling. Linebackers coach Johnny Holland has them juggle footballs or softballs for five minutes each day in effort to sharpen their hand-eye coordination and, in theory, boost their interceptions.

"I think it's pretty close depending on the day," Warner says when asked which linebacker is the better juggler. "We're neck and neck. We'll see. We've gotta start incorporating a fourth ball in there."

10:46: During individual drills, Warner and the other linebackers practice firing out of their stance from beneath an awning-like contraption the team calls "the chute." It's only 5 feet high, which means a 6-foot-3 linebacker like Warner is forced to get low.

It's a special emphasis for the 49ers because so many of their linebackers are tall. Oren Burks and Curtis Robinson also are 6-3. Rookie Jalen Graham is 6-2.

"Pad level is everything," Warner says. "That's just a basic start of every single rep."

10:56: One-on-one drills begin with the linebackers taking on the running backs and tight ends. The youngsters get most of the repetitions, and Warner is tapped for just one snap, the first one in which he's matched against McCaffrey.

In a previous practice, Warner felt he "opened the gait" — got out of his stance and started running downfield — too early and gave McCaffrey an easy release off the line.

"I told myself this time I was going to be real patient at the line," he says. "And once he committed I was going to get hands on him to disrupt him. And I did that. I played it perfectly, the way I wanted to."

Despite the close coverage, however, McCaffrey still makes the catch on a short crossing-route throw from Brandon Allen, which has Warner stomping mad. He's still miffed a day later. He doubts whether Allen, who had to pump because Warner initially had good coverage, would have stuck with the play in a game situation. This is a theme with Warner: Never capitulate to the offense, even when you're talking about a snap from the day before.

"In real life, (Allen is) coming off that route once it's disrupted," he insists. "He's going to his next read. But, of course, in one-on-ones he was trying to make it look as pretty as possible."

11:04: The group install period begins. This is the only time Shanahan works with the defense during practice. He takes on the role of quarterback, throwing half-speed passes while the defenders work on new play calls and alignments. This is another period in which the coaches mostly are focused on younger players, and Warner takes a moment to chat up former 49ers safety Dashon Goldson, who is one of this year's coaching fellows.

"He was asking me if I was doing MMA in the offseason," Warner says. "I told him I just stick to the boxing because in MMA you get rolled up with your knees and stuff. And he said he did MMA back when he was playing. I've heard too many stories of guys tearing their ACLs and blowing their knees out 'cause you get in a weird, awkward position on the ground."

11:13: The 49ers have their first snap in an 11-on-11 situation. Warner and the first-team defense will take 31 such snaps during the practice, which is roughly half a game's worth of action. Warner takes on Kittle on one snap and center Jake Brendel on his next. It's a good day for McCaffrey and the team's other running backs, and Warner concedes that the offense may have won the day on first and second downs.

But it wasn't quite as one-sided as it looked.

"Kyle's big on wanting to protect the team and that kind of stuff," he says. "So sometimes running backs get to the hole and it seems like they're gashing us. But really there's a guy there kind of tagging him off. And I'm like, 'Can we just lay a hat on 'em and let 'em know they're not running through our defense?'"

That is, sometimes there's a perception there's been a long carry when there really isn't. "Hate it. I hate it. It's horrible," Warner says. "If DeMeco (Ryans) was here he'd be livid. But that's just the linebacker in me."

Fred Warner is one of the most animated and active players at any 49ers practice.

11:53: The offense begins a move-the-ball drill. Warner blitzes on the first snap, forcing Brock Purdy to throw the ball away. A few plays after that he whips rookie tight end Cameron Latu to the ground. Four plays later, Purdy throws a 20-yard touchdown pass to Samuel, who is slow to get up. Warner is the lone defensive player who walks over to see if Samuel is OK. He is and eventually rejoins practice.

12:29: Backup linebacker Marcelino McCrary-Ball puts a huge hit on rookie fullback Jack Colletto that knocks Colletto to the ground and dislodges the ball. The starting linebackers on the sideline appear to enjoy the collision. Shanahan isn't pleased.

12:32: Three horns blast and what will likely be the longest practice of the season is over. Warner takes off his jersey and shoulder pads and goes into public relations mode, signing autographs and taking selfies with fans. He also meets with players from Real Betis of the La Liga soccer league and presents them with a jersey.

12:52: There are eight players still on the field. One of them is Warner, who is eager to get tips from cornerback Charvarius Ward on what to do in man-to-man situations like the one he had with McCaffrey earlier in the day. Warner practices his coverage against receivers Willie Snead IV and Ray-Ray McCloud III.

"If I'm working against receivers after practice, that's only going to make it easier when I'm going against running backs or tight ends in games," he notes. "And Ray-Ray is one of the shifتيest cats out there."

1:09: Warner walks off the field and into the weight room.

The rest of his day will include lifting weights, eating lunch, meetings and a late afternoon walk-through session. He usually leaves the team facility at 6:30 p.m. and drives home to check in with his wife and to eat a dinner prepared by his personal chef. Then it's back to the hotel in time for curfew.

On Friday, however, there was a wrinkle. The longest practice of the year left him so tired he fell asleep on the sofa and had to wake himself up to get back to the hotel in time.

If he had been late?

"I'm sure I'd be all right," he says. "But I don't want to be the guy who's missing curfew. It's a bad look to the rest of the team."

Trent Williams

49ers' Trent Williams return to being NFL's top tackle powered by gratitude after terminal cancer diagnosis

By Adam Maya
NFL.com
December 22, 2021

Trent Williams plays football with such physical and technical dominance that it looks easy for him. For his opponents, it might feel unfair. For everyone else merely watching, it can seem scary.

Such descriptions make Williams laugh, but he wouldn't dare say the game is easy. Not even when he's playing as well as anyone at his position, or perhaps the sport (his Pro Football Focus grade of 98.5 through Week 15 is the best in the NFL). And especially not after the journey the San Francisco 49ers left tackle has been on the past three years, where concepts like unfair and scary paled in comparison to his reality.

"I take so much pride in the product that I put out there. I'm always concerned, I'm always nervous, I'm always anxious about football and playing. I don't feel like that part of it gets easier," Williams said in a phone interview last week. "But when it comes down to actually going out there, every time I can tie my cleats up, I can strap my shoulder pads up and my helmet, just taking advantage of that. I do know how it feels for that to be snatched away."

Williams is talking about football, sure. But he's really talking about life and death. He's talking about cancer. It's a conversation no one wants to have, but one Williams is bound to. On Dec. 14, he debuted "Silverback: The Trent Williams Story" -- a documentary detailing his recent battle with cancer and return to the gridiron.

"My agent talked me into doing it," Williams admitted. "I wasn't a huge fan of doing it at first. He just kept working on me, just knowing that maybe I could help someone in my same position or reach somebody just to give them a little more motivation."

When Williams received a terminal diagnosis in January of 2019, the 6-foot-5, 320-pound giant never felt smaller. Neither did the game he'd dedicated his entire life to.

"The football player, the sport, all that was kind of out the window at that moment in time," Williams said. "I really felt helpless. It felt as vulnerable as you could feel as a human, just not knowing what the next day might bring, not knowing how much longer you got left on Earth."

A mass, in fact, had formed on Williams' head back in 2013, just a few years into his storied tenure with the Washington Football Team. While he and the franchise have since disputed how the illness was subsequently handled, Williams was prepared to undergo what he was told would be a simple extraction following the 2018 season. Instead, he soon received a gut-wrenching diagnosis: He had Dermatofibrosarcoma Protuberans, a rare form of cancer that develops deep in the skin and was creeping toward his brain. He was 30 years old.

Doctors didn't give Williams a timetable for how much longer he'd live, only communicating that these could be his "last days."

"Six weeks or six months, I didn't think (there was) a big difference in that," he said. "I was told to get my affairs in order, so I didn't have much fight after that. It was unbelievable. I felt like it was a dream that I just couldn't wake up from. I didn't want to believe it."

"Twelve months ago I felt blessed, I felt lucky, I felt like I was cheating. There's overcoming what I overcame, and then being able to do what I still love, I feel like I was cheating."

The blindside protector had been blindsided. But he never stopped protecting. Williams said he withheld the news from daughters Micah and Makayla, who were 9 and 5 at the time, to spare their thoughts, while exploring candidates to raise them in his expected absence.

"While I wanted them to understand what I was going through, I also feel like my first role as a father is protector, and you never want your kids to worry about you," he said. "I wasn't as concerned with my time here for myself. I was more so concerned about having young daughters without a father figure."

In February of 2019, Williams underwent the first of several scalp reconstruction procedures. His cancerous tumor was successfully removed just weeks before it would have metastasized through his skull. The surgeries incorporated about 30 percent of his scalp, skin grafts from his thigh and a few hundred stitches. But he'd survived cancer, he was able to circumvent chemotherapy, which he was told would have put a 15-year cap on his life, and the incisions in his head did not require him to retire from football.

Williams was sidelined about eight months, a period in which doctors urged him to avoid so much as perspiring. When he reported to Washington, he had issues wearing a helmet as well as with his contract, and he was placed on the non-football injury list against his wishes. Though Williams' longstanding relationship with the team effectually deteriorated, Washington honored its star's trade request by sending him to his favored destination -- the 49ers, coached by Kyle Shanahan, Williams' offensive coordinator for the first four years of his career.

"I think that part of my life I learned the most about myself," Williams said. "When tragedy strikes, everybody always thinks about the impact and whether you survive or not. Hardly ever do you think about how it feels to start from square one. I feel like that's exactly where I was starting from, after going through those surgeries and taking the time off to recover and just mentally what I had went through just even having to think about dying at such an early age. When all the smoke clears, here I am, I haven't lifted weights, I haven't run, I haven't even broken a sweat in eight or nine months. There was no easy way to go about it. There only was the hard route, that was to bust my butt and get into elite football shape and being the elite player that I once was, and having to hear all the doubts. I wasn't very open with what I went through, so I know a lot of people doubted. They thought it was more so contracts, and I understood that, but the human nature of being criticized, it has an effect sometimes."

The perennial Pro Bowler was soon thrown another curveball in the form of the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, which prevented Williams from working alongside his new teammates and learning Shanahan's evolving offense hands-on. After sitting out an entire season, the aging tackle also had to prove himself while entering the last year of his deal. The Niners weren't ready to commit long term, but they did agree to rework his contract so that he could not be placed on the franchise tag after the season. "Twelve months ago I felt blessed, I felt lucky, I felt like I was cheating," he said. "There's overcoming what I overcame, and then being able to do what I still love, I feel like I was cheating."

Powered by gratitude, Williams went out and earned his eighth consecutive Pro Bowl nod, setting him up for a six-year, $138 million pact that reset the OT market last March. Never content with his performance, the 12-year veteran is playing at an All-Pro level in 2021 for the surging Niners. He can improve his case for his first All-Pro first-team selection Thursday night against the Titans, in a game that will have major playoff ramifications for both conferences.

It's the type of game Williams believed he'd be in by joining San Francisco, which he said has become "home" for him over the last year. Last year also saw the arrival of his third daughter, Marley. The 33-year-old views fatherhood and football as his "second chance in life."

"They didn't even know what I was dealing with," said Williams, who still requires bi-yearly checkups to ensure sarcoma cells haven't returned, of his girls. "Every day I see them, I talk to them. It does go through my mind that just a couple years ago, this conversation wasn't even supposed to be possible. I'm just thankful that I could be here in their lives and be an influence and be a father."

"I definitely do give thanks for every day that I'm here because I know how fragile life is. Regardless of your age, it all could change in the blink of an eye. But for the most part, I just feel like I'm maxing out my potential. I think it would be hard for me to sleep at night, knowing that I was abundantly blessed with an ability and with a physical set of traits and I didn't take advantage of it. That's all I want to do. I just want to be a vessel of what God has blessed upon me and just show others, whether you're a young offensive lineman or whether you're somebody having to battle with cancer, I just want you to be able to look at me and draw some motivation or relate to me in some type of way and see my battle and draw some strength from it."

49ers determined to win one for Trent Williams: ‘Whatever you’ve got, bring it’

By Matt Barrows, The Athletic

SANTA CLARA, Calif. — Trent Williams’ locker is like a living entity — one that’s been expanding and contracting all season.

When the regular season began, the locker looked like any other. Williams had a teammate to the right and to the left of him. Those players, however, were cut early on, and for a time Williams’ sprawl took over both spaces, though now practice squad cornerback Terrance Mitchell has taken the auxiliary locker next door and Williams is down to a mere two lockers.

There are jerseys from after-game exchanges with opponents hanging in one, street clothes in another. The custom-made golf bag Christian McCaffrey handed out to offensive players at Christmas is in the vicinity. So is a boom box, an electric scooter and an entire rack of shoes — 20 pairs of size-14 sneakers and sandals.

There’s even a cordon and stanchion — what you might find forming the line at a bank or post office — that divides Williams’ ever-expanding zone from the rest of the locker room. It’s as if he’s been roped off or that his area is a museum display: Behold the 2-meter tall blockus pancakeus, the most dominant left tackle in all of the land.

But that’s not to suggest Williams discourages visitors. It’s very much the opposite. His twin lockers aren’t in the middle of the locker room. They make up one half of an island on the end of the space, and they’re on the way to the showers, cold tubs and other recovery areas. That makes it a natural stopping-off point for teammates.

Nick Bosa, McCaffrey and others often meet there after games to debrief and decompress. During the week, it’s a spot where younger players gather to learn from Williams about everything from workout advice to financial advice. He’s like the locker room’s well-traveled uncle who has terrific stories and insight from his 13 years in the trenches.

Postgame locker room summits with Trent Williams and Nick Bosa: A 49ers fixture

At 35, he’s the San Francisco 49ers’ oldest player. He’s also their most decorated and perhaps most indispensable. Williams hasn’t allowed a sack since Week 13 of the 2022 season, per Pro Football Focus, and it’s no coincidence the 49ers lost the three contests this season in which he was injured or absent.

He’s the 49ers’ oracle, their wise elder, their protector, their Silverback, a nickname Williams embraced early in his career — he got a massive tattoo of a mountain gorilla on his back in 2012 — and which appears on the nameplate above one of his lockers. No one carries more clout than Williams, which is why he’s allotted an extra locker.

That veneration is also why everyone snapped to attention when Williams spoke up before the 49ers’ final drive in Saturday’s divisional-round playoff game against the Green Bay Packers. There was 6:18 remaining and the 49ers trailed by 4 points. He looked around the huddle and announced that it likely would be the last time they had the ball. If they were going to win, it had to happen on that drive.

“So whatever you’ve got, bring it,” Williams recounted. “Bring it the next play and then bring it the next play after that.”

The offense, which had been hot and cold to that point, did just that, embarking on a 12-play drive that ended with a McCaffrey touchdown run. Teammates said they knew what was on the line before the drive began. Williams’ words underscored the gravity.

“When Trent speaks, you listen,” said receiver Chris Conley, who was in the huddle as the drive got underway. “Not just because of who he is but the way that he plays, the way that he carries himself, you believe it. But stepping up and really putting his foot down like that at the start of that drive was important.”

49ers overcome Packers, rain and their own mistakes: 'It was gut check for everybody'

Fullback Kyle Juszczyk said Williams spoke up again at the two-minute mark, when the 49ers were at the Green Bay 15-yard line.

“He said something like, ‘We have 15 yards for our season,’” Juszczyk said. “He put it as simply as could be. When Trent speaks, everyone definitely listens. Because we all have such respect for him and what he’s been able to do. And he’s not always barking. So you know it means something when he does speak up.”

Now the motivation is to play a full game with the focus shown on that final touchdown drive and to win one more for the Silverback. The 49ers have been to the Super Bowl once, during the 2019 season, under the current regime. But their trip to Miami occurred two months before they traded for Williams.

“Me, personally, I’m 0-2 in NFC Championship Games,” he noted. “So this is the one we’ve got to get. I’m not getting any younger. I definitely want to get to the top of the mountain.”

The last two championship games were especially challenging for Williams. He was dealing with a high ankle sprain two years ago. And following the 20-17 loss to the Los Angeles Rams — one in which the 49ers mustered only 50 rushing yards — Williams questioned whether he should have been playing at all.

“I really had no business out there,” he said at the time. “It’s so hard for me not to be out there, knowing the position we were in and what we’re trying to accomplish. But looking back on it, I probably shouldn’t have pushed it that far because I feel like (then-backup tackle) Colton (McKivitz) could have done a better job on two healthy ankles than I did on one.”

Last year, he didn’t even finish the contest in Philadelphia. He was ejected late in the fourth quarter after flinging Eagles safety K’Von Wallace to the ground during a scrum. The 49ers were without a healthy quarterback at that time, and Williams’ disqualification had no bearing on the outcome.

But he was clearly upset by the way the season ended, and two days later he caused a stir when he was asked about retirement and didn’t give a definitive answer.

“You do kind of think about what life’s like after football,” he said.

A few days later, he announced that he’d be back, and he’s been far more clear on his intentions after this season. Williams was voted to his 11th Pro Bowl earlier this month and said his goal is to push that to 12, something former greats like Anthony Muñoz, Willie Roaf and Jonathan Ogden, all of whom are in the Pro Football Hall of Fame, never achieved.

“I want to break the record for tackles, and that’s a big thing for me,” Williams said.

For now, as the 49ers are set to host the Detroit Lions on Sunday, he wants to take advantage of his health and the 49ers’ unique abundance of talent.

That was a theme as the 49ers trailed the Packers late Saturday. There was an anxiety among the players, a sense that they couldn’t lose — that they’d worked too hard to secure the top seed, that they were too talented, too tight-knit for the season to end in rainy Levi’s Stadium that night.

That sentiment was evident in their body language after Dre Greenlaw grabbed the interception that sealed the win. Instead of leaping around in exaltation, for example, Bosa collapsed to his knees in near anguish, then looked up as if he was giving thanks that the 49ers had escaped with a win.

Juszczyk said the 49ers have become so close that no one wants to let their teammates down.

“And especially guys who have been at this for a while like Trent,” he said. “We know how much it means to him and how much he deserves something like this. It just carries a little bit more weight when you do care about each other so much. It provides that little bit of extra motivation, that little bit of extra spark to really get it done.”
