Marine aviation enters 76th year

Beginning in 1912 Corps keeps soaring as aviation leaders

Story by
Sgt. Stephen Frank

When it all started 75 years ago, there was one man and one plane he had bought himself. But in the relatively short time since then, Marine Corps aviation has grown to be among the world's leaders in combat aviation, with tens of thousands of Marines, both officers and enlisted, flying and servicing some of the most technological advanced aircraft in the world.

Along the way, Marine Corps Aviation has "racked up" an impressive number of "firsts," pioneering ways to advance the art of aerial warfare.

Marine Corps Aviation was born on May 22, 1912, when 1st Lt. Alfred A. Cunningham reported for flight training to the Naval Aviation Camp in Annapolis, Md.

Eager to fly, but without a plan to do it in, Cunningham used his own money to buy a Curtiss Pusher plane. And on Aug. 1 of that year, after a total of two hours and 40 minutes of instruction, soloed for the first time earning his designation as Naval Aviator Number 5, and Marine Aviator Number 1.

With this beginning, Marine Aviation grew until January 1918, when the 1st Marine Aeronautical Company sailed from Philadelphia to the Azores to become the first American flying unit of any service to go overseas completely trained and equipped. During the next year, they would fly submarine patrols watching for and battling German U-boats.

Marines again took on the role of aviation pioneers in Central America in the 1920s and '30s, when they developed the close-air support concept

News in Brief

Essay contest to be held

The U.S. Naval Institute is sponsoring an essay contest open to all Marines, which is an excellent opportunity to present their views on professional issues and have them published in the journal "Proceedings."

Essays can be on any Marine Corps subject, air, ground, or amphibious, whether past, present or future. Entries should be approximately 3500 words, typewritten on 8 by 11 inch paper, double-spaced.

First, second and third place winners will win $1,000, $750 and $500 respectively, and will have their work published. Entries that do not win cash awards will also be considered for publication.

Entry deadline is July 1. Mail entries to: Editor-in-Chief, "Proceedings", (USMC contest), U.S. Naval Institute, Annapolis, MD, 21402.

New cammies authorized

The new Woodland Camouflage Pattern Hot Weather Utility Uniform will be authorized for wear on June 1.

This new 100 percent cotton uniform, according to Exchange Uniform Shop officials here, will be on the shelves sometime during June at the same price as the current "bag" issue of $28.40 per set.

With the introduction of this uniform, the Corps will have three camouflage utility uniforms authorized for wear: the Temperate, a 50 percent cotton/50 percent nylon woodland camouflage uniform (bag item in 1982); the Poplin, a 100 percent cotton camouflage uniform (bag item in 1970); and the new 100 percent cotton camouflage uniform which will become an issue (bag) item for recruits starting Oct. 1.

The new hot weather utility caps will not be available for approximately one year and will be phased in on a size-by-size basis. Except for the utility cap, the temperate, poplin and hot weather uniforms are not to be mixed.

MCX accepts Discover Cards

The Marine Corps Exchange is now accepting Discover Cards for purchases. The card can be used for all purchases in the exchange and its franchises, except for purchasing gasoline.

Dominates safety mishaps

Motorcycle fatalities on rise

The number of motorcycle related fatalities continues to dominate the summary of mishaps for both the Marine Corps and Navy.

There aren't many injuries, just deaths. When a motorcycle tangles with a car, truck, or guard rail — the motorcycle loses. Here are a few things to remember:

Motorcyclists have about 14 times the fatality rate as automobile drivers. In 1985, the motorcycle death rate was 36 per 100 million miles traveled, while the overall death rate was 2.58 for the same distance.

Riding without a helmet triples the probability of fatal head injuries in the event of an accident.

Fifty-one percent of all motorcycle accidents occur when other drivers violate the motorcyclists' right of way. In most cases, the other driver neither sees the motorcycle nor perceives it to be conflicting traffic until it is too late.

Riding a motorcycle after drinking is even more dangerous than driving a car after drinking. Just a small amount of alcohol adversely affects the coordination and special skills required to operate a motorcycle.

Unfamiliarity with the handling characteristics of a particular motorcycle dramatically increases the risk. A high percentage of motorcycle accidents involve new or borrowed bikes, particularly when driven by an inexperienced operator.

These grim facts are not meant to discourage motorcycle riding, only to drive home the point that far greater attention and self-discipline are needed in this area, if this fatal trend is to slow down.

Armed Forces Day

PFC Don Frey, Charlie 1/3, paints a "cammy face" on pretty Kathryn Arnold during Armed Forces Day Activities at Pearl Harbor. Kathryn Arnold is the daughter of LtCmdr. Dick Arnold, the executive officer of the USS Leftwich (DD 984). The ship is named after and honors Lieutenant Colonel William Groom Leftwich, a highly decorated Marine who was killed in action in Vietnam. More on Armed Forces Day in next week's Hawaii Marine.

Commandant's Memorial Day message

"Memorial Day evokes many thoughts of heroes and brave men who fought our Nation's battles. Silently, we praise their heroic deeds and pay tribute to the memory of those valiant Americans whose lives paid the price of freedom.

"The flag raising at Iwo Jima, which took place over 40 years ago, is one of the most unforgettable events and images in Marine Corps history. It symbolizes the human struggle for freedom and the indefatigable spirit of the fighting man whose cause was more important than his own life. The flag raising at Mount Suribachi has given a special meaning to the words courage and patriotism.

"For all Americans, steadfast courage and unheralded patriotism epitomize the meaning of Memorial Day. We honor those men and women who served their country so faithfully and whose ultimate sacrifice has enabled our cherished values and ideals to live on.

"Semper Fidelis, Marines."

President's Memorial Day message

"This Memorial Day we remember with solemn pride and gratitude America's sons and daughters who have paid the ultimate price for the preservation of freedom. "From "the shot heard 'round the world" that marked our birth as a nation, Americans have time and again taken up arms in liberty's defense. Knowing the ferocity of war and the immensity of the sacrifice it exacts, they have nonetheless followed the spirit of our Founders who pledged their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor to the support of freedom. "The debt we owe to those who have left home and family to serve this cause is beyond measure, but our greatest debt of all is to those who fell in battle. Their ranks are legion, the stories of their heroism countless. Many of them lie beneath the soil of distant lands, and many here at home.

Their final bivouac may be a well-kept cemetery or an unknown, unmarked field or lane or shore, but glory guards each one well, these heroes who fought with all the faith and valor that free men can muster. "Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr. expressed a fitting thought when he said, "At the grave of a hero we end, not with sorrow at the inevitable loss, but with the contagion of his courage." I join all of you who proudly share that spirit in your own service to our Nation as you pay tribute to these brave Americans. May we always walk in the light of their memory, the light of liberty which shines from age to age and still illumines the way forward. "God bless you, and God bless America." Ronald Reagan President

A tribute to the 'better half' of the military

Go to the Exchange on any military base, where they sell t-shirts, and you're likely to find one that says: "The only thing harder than being a Marine (or sailor, or soldier) is being a Marine's (or sailor's, or soldier's) wife (or husband)." All humor aside, there's a lot of truth to that. People in the military service deal with long hours; cold, wet days and nights in the field; long separations from loved ones; frequent moves; and a thousand other things that make a military career the challenge that it is. But what about the spouses? They endure all that, aside from the responsibility of raising children while the spouse is away; or having to deal with emergencies during separations. Being a military spouse whether a homemaker or a service person is a tough job by any account; but, hopefully, not entirely thankless. As a way of saying thanks, tomorrow has been set aside as "Military Spouse Day," in honor of those women and men who support those who have chosen the military service as a profession. They're the ones who patiently endure the long separations, and are anxiously awaiting when we finally come off that 18-hour MAC flight, or disembarking a ship, laden with a seabag, from a deployment. During separations, military spouses take care of our homes, our families, our finances and everything else that's part of family life. They learn how to face challenges alone and make decisions, becoming self-reliant but always wishing we could be there to help. They're also the ones who make sure our children grow up to be someone we can be proud of; a job we wish we could be more a part of, but sometimes can't. And they're the ones who patiently listen as we gripe about all the things military people have always griped about.

That's only part of the job they do. In these tough economic times, many spouses have jobs outside the home helping to make ends meet, or just volunteering their time to help others. They deserve a day of recognition. There won't be any parades, or firework displays, but they probably wouldn't mind being taken out to dinner, or just having dinner made for them for a change. All in all, military spouses are an indispensable part of the military system. They are highly adaptable and resourceful individuals who make immeasurable contributions toward ensuring the "combat readiness" of their active duty spouses. Military spouses are very special people, and it is with great pride that the Armed Forces honors them on "Military Spouse Day."

Spouse Day discount offered

To honor Spouse's Day, the Air Station's Pizza Parlor will be offering a 25 percent discount on all food purchased on May 23, from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Spouses must present their military identification card to receive the discount.

Book profiles Marines in Vietnam

The History and Museums Division, HQMC, has published U.S. Marines in Vietnam: Vietnamization and Redeployment, 1970-1971, by Dr. Graham A. Cosmas and LtCol. Terrence P. Murray. The book is the fifth in a projected 10-volume operational history series of the Marine participation in the Vietnam War. Written from the perspective of the III Marine Amphibious Force and the 3d Marine Amphibious Brigade, the volume describes the redeployment of Marine ground and air units from Vietnam during 1970-71, while turning more and more of the war over to the Vietnamese. Although written from the perspective of III MAF and the ground war in the northern provinces of South Vietnam, the volume treats the activities of Marine advisors to the South Vietnamese Armed Forces, the Seventh Fleet Special Landing Force, and Marines on the staff of the U.S. Military Assistance Command, Vietnam, in Saigon. There are separate chapters on Marine air, artillery and logistics. An attempt has been made to place the Marine role in relation to the overall effort.

New deployable medical system speeds treatment to front lines

Active duty and Reserve component medical personnel will soon get a chance to train using the Defense Department's newest deployable medical system, DEPMEDS.

Scheduled for official introduction later this year, the system will be the first to be used by all four military services to treat combat casualties.

Providing the best wartime medical care possible has always been a major concern of the military. But with the new deployable medical system, improved health services will be offered closer to the front lines than ever before.

This will allow medical personnel to tend to casualties with fewer delays, speeding up injured service members' recovery and return to duty.

And because the system is standard for all service, it is being bought in larger quantities, at a lower per-unit cost than those it replaces, according to Wilbur J. Balderson, assistant staff director of the Defense Medical Standardization Board.

Balderson said the new deployable system consists of medical specialty sets, housed in newly designed expandable shelters or tents.

These modules can be positioned together into about 15 different configurations, depending on the size, mission and location of the facility.

In the case of a 356-bed hospital to the rear of the combat zone, for example, about 25 of the basic deployable medical system's modules can be positioned together.

This was the configuration used by the Army's 21st Evacuation Hospital at Fort Hood, Texas, which gave the new system the thumbs-up after testing in late 1984.

The unit positioned these modules to provide operating rooms with six operating tables, X-ray rooms, a pharmacy, laboratory, blood bank, triage, emergency and pre-operation area, patient wards, a physical therapy area, and optometry and general dentistry clinics. Separate modules were used for central material services and medical supply areas.

Balderson said each DEPMEDS unit will be equipped with the surgical sets and other medical and non-medical support equipment needed to operate it.

Many of the items used in the Army's MUST (Medical Unit Self-Contained Transportable) system, such as the Army-developed operating table, hospital bed, anesthesia apparatus and surgical instrument tables, were adapted to DEPMEDS.

Red Cross volunteers thanked

By Patricia Gail Sears

The American Red Cross, here, expresses a special "Thank You" to those who responded to the appeal for clinic volunteers. "Thirty-two new volunteers signed up, and 20 attended an orientation at the old clinic on April 29," said Helena King, chairman of volunteers.

King also expressed appreciation to Diane Daniell, honorary chairman of volunteers; Judith Cantel state chapter representative; and LtCmdr. Toni Kuehnie, charge nurse at the clinic Acute Care Center, for their participation in the orientation. The Hawaii State Chapter will honor these and other volunteers during a recognition luncheon at the Hale Koa Hotel on May 29.

Although community response to the appeal was tremendous, more volunteers are needed to help operate the new clinic. "We still need at least 30 more volunteers to insure the system operates efficiently and provides the best possible care for patients," said King. "Volunteers not only have a new experience, but also provide a greatly needed service for their community."

Anyone interested in helping should call Helena King or Jeff Meister at 257-2606.

Marine Exchange opens convenient phone center

Marines and sailors here can now save time and money on long distance phone calls to family, friends and sweethearts at the new MCX phone center.

The center, located on Selden St., next to Marine Corps Exchange, eliminates the need for change, collect calls and third party call, and the rates are 10 percent lower than commercial companies in town.

In addition to lower cost, the center provides customers with comfortable surroundings. It has 16 private telephone suites, quiet and furnished with a swivel chair and indirect lighting.

The center is open seven days a week from 9 a.m., to 9 p.m. A cashier will be on duty to collect charges for calls after they are placed. Customers can use cash, checks, Mastercard, Visa and Discover cards to pay the bill.

There is no limit to the time spent, or amount of calls made. All services are on a first-come, first-served basis.

"This is our 30th phone center," said C. Keith Capehart, vice president and general manager of the military Communications Center. "They've been well received at every military installation we've placed them."

There is also an MCC wire gift service available, and prices range from $15 to $30. This service ensures delivery within 7-14 days of selected gifts.

Tips for balancing your checkbook

Having trouble getting your checkbook to balance with your statement to the penny or even coming close?

Try following these steps:

1. Make sure that each transaction on your statement appears somewhere in your checkbook record and that the amounts match. This includes checks, "money machine" transactions, deposits and service and penalty fees. It also covers any transactions you may have authorized your financial institution to do automatically, such as transferring money from checking to savings or paying bills. Most checkbook registers have a column or blank place on each line where you can make a mark to show that you matched that item with the same item on the bank statement.

Don't proceed until you have completed this step.

Check your arithmetic. One way to double-check your figures is to add up all deposits and withdrawals from the total deposits. This should match the running total in your checkbook record.

If you carefully do the steps above, you will have covered the source of most checkbook balancing problems.

Now for the balancing act. This can be done two ways: Adjust your checkbook balance so that it equals the statement balance. Or adjust the statement balance so that it equals your checkbook balance. Either way is fine, but the following steps use the second method.

Add to the bank statement balance all deposits you have made that are not on the bank statement.

Subtract from the results of step 3 all withdrawals in your checkbook that are not on the bank statement. This includes, of course, outstanding checks, money machine withdrawals, fees and automatic bank transactions. Note any long overdue checks.

To summarize, add deposits, then subtract withdrawals from the statement balance. The resulting figure should equal your checkbook balance.

Here are some other tips: If you have a joint checking account, work out a system to enter the transactions of each person promptly in the checkbook register.

Balance your checkbook as soon as possible after you receive your statement. The sooner you reconcile the statement with your own records, the sooner you can deal with discrepancies.

If you find a discrepancy that you are sure is not your own error, notify the bank at once.

If you can't get your figures to balance and can't determine the cause, contact your institution. Someone there can help you unravel a problem. However, some places charge for balancing your checkbook for you.

Also, you might seek assistance from a community service organization on or near your installation.

From the Curtiss Pusher plane, to the V-22 Osprey, and to the travels in space, Marines remain in the forefront of aviation 'firsts'

AVIATION from A-1

that is today the hallmark of Marine Corps aviation.

Marine pilots, led by Maj. Ross E. Rowell, were the first to use dive-bombing techniques and air-to-ground communications against an organized enemy while fighting in Nicaragua.

Another development that came out of the Central American fighting theater was the use of aircraft to evacuate wounded. The most famous use of this new technique was in January 1928 when 1stLt. Christian Shilt made 10 flights under fire to land on a makeshift airfield near Quilai, Nicaragua, to rescue 18 wounded Marines. The aircraft he was flying had no brakes. On each landing, Marines on the ground had to run out and grab the wings of the plane to stop it.

Not content with expanding just the boundaries of air warfare, Marine pilots also pushed the limits of the entire science of flying, establishing new records every chance they had.

On July 21, 1930, Capt. Arthur H. Page touched down in Washington, D.C., after a 1,000-mile flight from Omaha, Neb., setting a record for instrument flying.

As World War II broke out, Marines stood ready to apply the lessons they had learned. By war's end, Marine aviators shot down 2,355 enemy aircraft, producing 120 aces, with five of them downing 20 or more aircraft each.

It was during this time that Marines set another record. In December 1942, 17SB2U "Vindicators" from Marine Scout Bomber Squadron arrived on Midway Island as reinforcements after a 10-hour flight that set a record for the longest mass over-water, single-engine flight up to that time.

The war continued to challenge Marine pilots, and each time they rose to meet it. From January to April 1945, Marine pilots took the concepts of close-air support developed earlier; and, for the first time, applied them on a large scale supporting Army and Philippine guerilla units on the island of Luzon.

During this same time, Marine pilots expanded the boundaries of close-air support to include aircraft carriers for the first time, as fighting squadrons operating from the USS Bennington, Wasp, and Bunker Hill gave air support for the landing forces on Iwo Jima, and later on Okinawa.

By 1950, Marine air units were again in the Far East, this time in Korea, where Marine pilots set a whole series of "firsts."

They were the first to insert troops into combat by helicopter; the first to use a transport-type aircraft as a Tactical Air Direction Center in conducting effective close air support operations; and the first to conduct a night medical evacuation.

With the close of the Korean War, Marine pilots stayed busy pushing themselves and their aircraft to their limits to set new records.

On July 16, 1957, Maj. John Glenn completed the first non-stop, coast-to-coast supersonic flight in an F8U-1 "Crusader." Three years later, on September 5, 1960, LtCol Thomas Miller Jr., set a world speed record on a 500-kilometer closed course flying at 1,216.78 miles-per-hour in an F4B "Phantom."

Glenn, then a lieutenant colonel, again set an aviation first when, in 1962, he became the first American to orbit the earth as a member of NASA's Project Mercury.

Within a few years, Marine aviation found itself involved in the Vietnam conflict, again using the concepts of close-air support to stunning effect. On Nov. 13, 1965, Marine pilots chalked up yet another first as they conducted the first night heliborne assault in history, inserting Marines from 2/3 into a valley 12 miles north of Da Nang.

But the superlatives didn't stop there. In April 1975, helicopters from Marine Aircraft Group-36, including some from HMH-463, conducted the largest helicopter evacuation in history, taking almost 7,000 people out of Saigon during Operation Frequent Wind.

Since that time, Marines have used the relative quiet of peacetime to continue expanding the boundaries of flight. On May 31, 1985, Marine flyers pulled off an aviation first when they refueled two CH-53 helicopters from a KC-130 Hercules while each was carrying a 23,000 pound Light Armored Vehicle externally.

In keeping with its traditional role of aviation innovators, Marine aviation is now in the process of incorporating the use vertical lift and tilt-rotor aircraft, the V-22 "Osprey."

Marine Aviation has come a long way in only 75 years, continually expanding their role in the Marine Corps mission, advancing the boundaries of aviation, and like Marines everywhere, leading the way.

Squadron Insignias

Thirty years after 1stLt. Alfred A. Cunningham began the historical maiden flight of Marine Corps aviation, Marine Aircraft Group-24 was activated on March 1, 1942, at Marine Corps Air Station, Ewa, Oahu, Hawaii.

The first squadrons assigned to MAG-24 were Fighter Squadrons 211 and 212, followed by Marine Scout Bombing Squadrons (VMSB)-242, 243 and 244.

During World War II, MAG-24 deployed detachments to Midway, Johnson and Palmyra Islands in January 1943, and in November and December moved to Banika in the Russell Islands. Then, it moved to New Piva Field, Bouganville for a year.

In 1945, the Group moved to New Guinea where, under

With its 11 squadrons, MAG-24 plays an important role in air superiority

heavy enemy fire, the forward echelon began to construct Mangalden Field. In only two weeks, the airfield received its first two aircraft. Afterwards, MAG-24 and MAG-36 were combined during the Luzon campaign as part of the 5th Air Force in support of the 6th Army.

Two months later, MAG-24 joined MAG-32 and MAG-12 to form the Marine Aircraft

Group Zamboanga, which received praise from ground forces for its support of missions in Mindano and Sulu Archipelago.

Their last mission of World War II was dropping copies of the Japanese surrender to enemy units before moving to North China to become part of the multi-national force there.

With the defeat of the Japanese forces, the Group was ordered to North China as a part of the repatriation/occupation force. In 1947, the Group moved to Guam; and two years later, was transferred to MCAS, Cherry Point, N.C., as a component of the 2d Marine Aircraft Wing.

Marine Aircraft Group-24 was not deployed to Korea during that conflict; however, a large number of pilots, crewman and individual squadrons received pre-deployment training from MAG-24.

After 20 years at Cherry Point, MAG-24 moved to MCAS, Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii in April, 1968.

Today, MAG-24 is comprised of 11 squadrons, and is the only Marine Aircraft group with both tactical jets and assault support helicopters!

"The Marines of our intermediate maintenance activity and Group Supply, along with the individual squadron maintenance departments, are the backbone of our efforts to provide MAG-24 aircrews with the most safely flyable aircraft possible," said Col. William R. Gage, commanding officer of MAG-24. "Their enthusiasm, cooperation and dedication to this effort is truly exemplary," added Gage.

Three F-4 Phantom squadrons provide close air support for ground elements, as well as providing air superiority throughout the amphibious objective area in its fighter role. Five helicopter squadrons, utilizing three different types of aircraft support the 1st MAB in inserting/extracting troops and cargo, supply an aerial mobile command posts and a reconnaissance platform.

Marine Aircraft Group-24 has operated here as an important part of the Marine Air-Ground Task Force for more than three decades.

Headquarters and Maintenance Squadron-24 provide the Group with a maintenance facility, and is the home for TA-4 Skyhawk jet aircraft. This aircraft fills the role as a tactical observation post and forward air control platform, as well as an adversary during training in air combat maneuvers.

"The group enjoy its role as the supporting air arm of the 1st MAB. We're looking forward to expanding the opportunities to train with the 3d Marine Regiment (Rein) and BSSG-1 on MPS-3 and amphibious assault mission," said Col. Gage. "Given the ongoing requirement to refine our combat capabilities through mutual exchange of thought and ideas, having the major subordinate commands in such close proximity is very beneficial.

"We are constantly striving to ensure that our ability for command, control and communication will enable the 1st MAB to exploit the combat air power of MAG-24 to its fullest when necessary," concluded Gage.

The 'good wings' people keeping the airspace safe

Story and photos by Sgt. Diane Oban

On June 30, 1972, a new unit was born; and an old one became a part of history. Station Operations and Headquarters Squadron's (HEDRON) colors were cased for the last time, and Station Operations and Maintenance Squadron's were unfurled.

Upon the activation of SOMS, its mission increased to conducting air operations, maintaining a flight line for assorted types of aircraft, and providing local airborne support. "Our mission is strictly to support the brigade. Everything we do is tailored to that," said LtCol. V.G. Medinger, SOMS commanding officer.

SOMS supports flight operations of tenant units by providing a "ready deck" and all the support necessary to conduct flight operation safely and efficiently. "We support approximately 20 trans Pacific operations each year for the Brigade," said Capt. L.F. Halverson, OIC of weather operation.

The mission is accomplished by the squadron's numerous sections; Search and Rescue (SAR); Crash Boat Service; Crash Fire and Rescue (CRF); Weather Forecasting; Explosive ordnance Disposal (EOD); Air Traffic Control (ATC); Military Affiliate Radio System (MARS); Ground Electronics Maintenance and Telephone Service; and Aircraft Maintenance.

SOMS' safety record speaks for itself. Until 1978 they reached 15,000 accident free hours. In 1982, they reached 20,000 safe hours. Then in 1986, the squadron logged in over 25,000 flight hours without major aircraft accidents. They have also participated in numerous search and rescue missions saving lives of both military personnel and civilians. In 1972, a civilian surfer was rescued from an area near Pond Road; and three Fish and Game Commission personnel were rescued from Bird Rock in 1974.

SOMS

In March 1980, two rescues were accomplished on the same day. Three people were rescued from a 21-foot Boston Whaler, and later that evening nine more people were rescued from a 52-foot sailboat that struck a reef.

"From the past six years of accumulative data, SOMS has a yearly average of 43 SAR launches, saving eight lives, and does approximately 400 waterfront launches," Halverson said.

In addition to its numerous safe flight hours, SOMS has logged in many hours of community service from hosting JROTC units, Blue Angels air shows, to the joint sponsorship with the Station Chaplain's Office for the first Marine Corps "Just Say No" program.

SOMS has been awarded the American Defense Service Streamer, American Campaign Streamer, Asiatic-Pacific Campaign Streamer, World War II Victory Streamer, and National Defense Service Streamer with one bronze star.

The squadron has also received two Naval Weather Service Awards "for outstanding performance of the assigned mission in providing weather service support of Marine operations," and several aviation safety awards, the Commandant of the Marine Corps Certificate of Commendation and many other letters of appreciation and commendations.

SOMS' logo represents the various aspects of the squadron. On the letter to the Chief of Naval Operations requesting approval of the logo it stated:

"The Hawaiian warrior's lance represents the squadron ordnance support function. The warrior, towering majestically over all the islands, represents the control required in the exercise of the Air Traffic Control and the Communication-Electronics function. The aircraft with their trail blazed across the sky represents the Airfield Operations function and the squadron operating area, the Hawaiian Islands. The aircraft fan represents the SAR support for the fixed wing and helicopter composition of the squadron and tenant aviation units.'

Our chicken is too good to fry. Because we start with fresh, whole chicken. Not frozen chicken parts. We slowly marinate our chicken in fruit juices, zesty herbs and spices, then char-broil it over open flames.

So all you taste is crisp, juicy chicken. Not a fried coating. We serve it hot off the grill with warm tortillas and our fresh salsa for a wholesome new taste. Try the sizzling new chicken sensation from El Pollo Loco (l pō-yō lō-cō). You won't get fried again.

Arlington Cemetery: a 'living' memorial

Thousands of visitors trek to Arlington National Cemetery every year. Memorial Day is a particularly poignant time for them as they visit this solemn, yet majestic, tribute to America's heritage.

Buried within the grounds of Arlington National Cemetery are more than 200,000 people who together built the America we know today: presidents and privates, officers and enlisted men, Supreme Court justices and unknown slaves.

Arlington's glory belies its humble beginnings. The home of Confederate Gen. Robert E. Lee at the outbreak of the Civil War, it was seized by Union soldiers. Without fanfare, Arlington was declared a national burial ground for those who died unknown or whose families couldn't afford a private burial service. More than 2,000 unknown soldiers of the Civil War were buried in a Tomb of the Unknowns in 1866. Today, visitors to Arlington pay tribute to the unknowns of every U.S. war since the Civil War. An honor guard keeps a 24-hour vigil at the tombs of the unknowns from World Wars I and II, the Korean War and the Vietnam conflict.

As James Edward Peters points out in his book, Arlington National Cemetery: Shrine to America's Heroes, Arlington is a tribute not to the deaths of those buried there, but to the contributions made during their lifetimes. Those contributions tell the story of American history.

One such story is that of James Parks. Parks was born in the mid-1800s to slave parents living at Arlington, when it was owned by George Washington's adopted son, George Washington Parks Custis. After Custis' death, Parks was freed, but attached himself to a military unit that occupied Arlington during the Civil War. At the war's end, he became a grave digger and maintenance man for the cemetery until his death in 1929.

Across the grounds from Parks' grave, Air Force Gen. Daniel "Chappie" James Jr. is buried. James joined a segregated unit as a flight officer in the early 1940's. He experienced many obstacles encountered by blacks at the time. For example, he was once barred from leaving the base in uniform so white enlisted men would not have to salute him. James overcame these obstacles and rose to become the first black American to attain four-star rank.

One hundred sixty-four victims of the explosion that destroyed the USS Maine in 1898 are buried at Arlington. The Maine had been sent to patrol Havana Harbor to help reduce mounting tension between Spain and Cuba.

Also at Arlington is a memorial to the 241 Marines, sailors and soldiers killed in 1983 when an explosion leveled the Marine Corps barracks in Beirut, Lebanon. Those killed were members of a multinational peacekeeping force sent to Lebanon.

Arlington is the final resting place of Navy RADM Robert Peary, the first man to reach the North Pole, and Navy RADM Richard E. Byrd, leader of several expeditions into the Antarctic, both during the early 1900's.

Across the grounds are buried two later explorers — Air Force LtCol. Virgil I. "Gus" Grissom and Navy LtCmdr. Roger Bruce Chaffee. They were among the three Apollo 1 astronauts killed in 1967 while training for a mission that would launch America's program to put the first man on the moon.

In 1986, the remains of two of the seven astronauts killed during the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger— Navy Cmdr. Francis "Dick" Scobee and Air Force Capt. Michael J. Smith — were also interred at Arlington.

Arlington National Cemetery is far more than a military burial ground. It stands as a memorial to the lives of thousands of Americans — all heroes in American history.

Military advertising

Television changing face of recruiting

“You begin with raw steel. Shape it with fire, muscle and sweat. Polish it to razor-sharp perfection. What you end up with is a Marine. We're looking for a few good men with the mettle to be Marines.”

This 30-second commercial changed the face of military advertising.

Never before had a military recruiting ad cost so much to air — an estimated $450,000 for one showing alone — or reached such a tremendous audience: 85 million Super Bowl XIX fans.

And never before did a 30-second commercial have such a powerful impact on recruiting.

The ad demonstrated once and for all what many had already come to recognize: the days when posters of Uncle Sam in front of post offices and recruiting stations brought enough high-quality volunteers into military service are gone.

The main targets of military recruiters, 17- to 24-year-old males, are more sophisticated and worldly than ever.

DoD has brought out the big artillery: a powerful $200 million-a-year advertising program guided by marketing strategies and opinion polls. Direct mail is the most commonly used form of advertising and the best for generating the names of prospective recruits. Each service makes extensive mailing to America's youth.

Early this year, the Defense Department launched a different type of direct mail campaign. Futures for the Class of '87, a 48-page magazine with youth-oriented articles, was sent to the homes of 3.1 million high school seniors. Military recruiting ads were placed throughout the magazine to help increase students' awareness of military service as a career option.

Selectively placed ads in other magazines, radio spots and posters are other parts of DoD's advertising program. But of all the different media used, television has the most impact, according to Army LtCol. John A. Ford Jr., DoD's assistant director for advertising.

Public service announcements were the first televised military ads. Today, only the Air Force continues to rely on them exclusively; the other services have turned increasingly to paid advertising that allows them to better target specific audiences on specific programs at specific times.

“You have no control over the placement of PSAs (public service announcements),” Ford said. “The people looking at a PSA at 1 a.m. might not be the target audience you're shooting for.”

That, according to LtCol. James T. Luken, head of the Marine Corps' marketing branch, was the thinking that led the Marine Corps to air its “sword” commercial during the 1985 and 1986 Super Bowls. Budget cuts forced the Marines to scrap plans to advertise during the last Super Bowl and to renew emphasis on public service announcements.

The thing you have to understand about advertising is that you get what you pay for,” Luken said. The first Super Bowl ad reached 85 million viewers at the cost of about one-half cent per viewer. The second Super Bowl ad reached closer to 100 million people.

“Sixty-one percent of all men who come into the Marine Corps are high school athletes,” Luken said. “By focusing Marine Corps advertising on sporting events and quality prime-time programs, we're working to make an impact not only on young men, but also on the people who influence them.”

The creative minds behind military advertising campaigns have to consider more than just their recruiting targets. Their ads have to talk to the teachers, school counselors and coaches who help influence their career decisions.

So ads are built around themes that appeal to both groups: adventure, camaraderie, travel, self-pride, leadership and success.

Military advertising is a two-tiered program. The DoD joint service advertising program, with the “It's a great place to start” theme, focuses on promoting a positive attitude toward military service.

The targets of this campaign are high school students trying to decide between college and other career options. “We try to pre-empt them, but also a good first step in reaching them,” Ford said.

Single-service advertising is the second type of military advertising. Its targets are those people who have decided to enter the military but haven't yet determined which service. In some cases, single-service advertising encourages them into specific career fields.

Each service builds its advertising campaign on a different theme.

The Army, with the “be all you can be” theme, bills itself as a springboard to success. Army ads often show soldiers earning money for college and gaining valuable career skills.

The Navy promises, “it's not just a job, it's an adventure,” appealing to those in search of excitement and travel. The Air Force theme, “aim high,” plays on themes of challenge and, indirectly, high technology.

The Marine Corps, in contrast, makes few promises. Its ads simply state that “we're looking for a few good men” and to stick to images of pride, glory and being part of an elite group.

Military ads might be as sleek and persuasive as any on the market, but DoD officials recognize that they can't promise something they don't deliver.

“We can't afford to lie or oversell because not only do we have to recruit people, we also need to retain them,” Ford said.

“Good advertising may sell someone a product one time, but if the product's no good, no amount of advertising is going to make them buy it a second time or recommend it to someone else.”

include standardized non-medical equipment: generators, food service systems, water distribution and utilities support systems, hospital baths, oxygen generating systems, special water-production systems, power distribution systems and environmental-control units.

As proven during the test, the individual modules are easily transportable and can be quickly disassembled, repacked, transported to a new field site and reassembled. They can be strategically airlifted as well, providing a flexibility not available in the systems they replace.

All services appear to have big plans for DEPAMEDS; each will use DEPAMEDS equipment to outfit its combat zone and communications zone hospitals.

To be pre-positioned throughout the United States and overseas beginning this year, the systems will increase military medical readiness. Primary users will be members of the Reserve and National Guard, who would provide a large portion of the military's medical support during wartime.

We the People

of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, We ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Article III explained

Editor's Note: The text of the Constitution is printed below in regular type, retaining the original spelling and capitalization. Comments by Harold W. Chase on its provisions are printed in boldface type.

ARTICLE III

Section 1. The judicial Power of the United States, shall be vested in one supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior Courts, shall hold their Offices during good Behaviour, and shall, at stated Times, receive for their Services, a Compensation, which shall not be diminished during their Continuance in Office.

Nowhere in the Constitution is the Supreme Court explicitly granted the power of judicial review, that is, the power to declare acts of Congress and state legislatures and the actions of national and state officials unconstitutional and to reverse the decisions of state courts on constitutional questions. The power accorded to the supreme Court is tersely described in Article III as "the judicial Power"; the institution of judicial review has grown out of the interpretation of that power. The initiative was seized by Chief Justice Marshall in MAR-BURY vs MADISON (1803), who took upon himself the power to interpret the Constitution as necessary to reach a decision in the case.

Judicial review has become an integral part of the U.S. political system, and it would take nothing less than a constitutional amendment to do away with it. A lively dispute, however, has been going on throughout U.S. history about the extent to which the power should be exercised. Some believe in judicial self-restraint — that is, that the Court should assume that the acts and actions of coordination departments of the national government and of state governments are constitutional unless it is convincingly demonstrated that they are not. Others, who are often called judicial activists, feel that the Court should be quick to exercise the power of review. They assert that they too believe in judicial self-restraint as a general proposition, but they maintain that when it comes to important rights, the constitution itself requires that the acts and actions of others should not be assumed constitutional.

Section 2. The judicial Power shall extend to all Cases, in Law and Equity, arising under this Constitution, the Laws of the United States, and Treaties made, or which shall be made, under their Authority; — to all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls; — to all Cases of admiralty and maritime Jurisdiction; — to Controversies to which the United States shall be a Party; — to Controversies between two or more States; — between a State and Citizens of another State; — between Citizens of different States; — between Citizens of the same State claiming Lands under Grants of different States, and between a State, or the Citizens thereof, and foreign States, Citizens or Subjects.

In all Cases affecting Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, and those in which a State shall be Party, the supreme Court shall have original Jurisdiction. In all the other Cases before mentioned, the supreme Court shall have appellate Jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the congress shall make.

The Trial of all Crimes, except in Cases of Impeachment, shall be by Jury; and such Trial shall be held in the State where the said Crimes shall have been committed, but when not committed within any State, the Trial shall be at such Place or Places as the Congress may by Law have directed.

Section 3. Treason against the United States, shall consist only in levying War against them, or in adhering to their Enemies, giving them Aid and Comfort. No person shall be convicted of Treason unless on the Testimony of two Witnesses to the same overt Act, or on Confession in open court.

The Congress shall have Power to declare the Punishment of Treason, but no Attainder of Treason shall work Corruption of Blood, or Forfeiture except during the Life of the Person attained.

Section 2 of Article III concerns jurisdiction of the courts. Jurisdiction is the authority of a court to exercise judicial power in a particular case. As indicated earlier, Congress may not enlarge or diminish the power that the Constitution vests in the courts. But Congress is granted vast power in Section 2 with respect to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. Paragraph 2 of that section indicates the relatively few cases in which the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction (the power to be the first court to hear a case), but provides that "in all other Cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to Law and Fact, with such Exceptions, and under such Regulations as the Congress shall make."

Thus, there is no doubt the Congress has the constitutional authority to enlarge or diminish the Court's appellate jurisdiction (its power to review decisions of lower courts). Congress sometimes tries to curtail the appellate jurisdiction of the Court, especially when it is unhappy with recent Court decisions. such efforts may be unwise, but they are not unconstitutional.

A squad leader from the 10th Princess Mary's Own Gurkha Rifles passes on an operational order to his troops prior to a combined exercise with Co. A, 1/3.

A Gurkha rifleman, part of the 10th Princess Mary's Own Gurkha Rifles, takes part in a forward reconnaissance patrol with Co. A, 1/3.

British Gurkhas train with Co. A, 1/3

"The Gurkhas serve as the British Army's light infantry, and have fought in almost every corner... of the British Empire."

Story and photos by Sgt. Stephen Frank

British soldiers from Co. D, 10th "Princess Mary's Own Gurkha Rifles" recently concluded two weeks of combined training with Marines from Co. A, 1/3, here.

The Gurkhas, recruited from the mountainous country of eastern Nepal, are members of a regiment that dates back to 1815 and the British colonial empire. This particular unit is part of a battalion homebased in Hong Kong, which, according to Maj. Mike Trueman, commanding officer of the 10th Gurkha Rifles, has few areas to get realistic training.

The Gurkhas arrived here on April 29, and almost immediately began training with the Marines of Alpha, 1/3.

The first part of the combined exercises took place at Bellows AFS, as the 1/3 Marines, along with Marines from Det. A, 3rd AAVs, staged an amphibious assault. After watching the Marines storm the beach, the Gurkhas climbed aboard the AAVs and repeated the attack.

The training continued through the rest of the day, with the Marines and Gurkhas demonstrating their various methods of assault and movement under fire. During slow moments, the Marines and Gurkhas would gather around to examine each others weapons, field rations, uniforms, and anything else common to troops everywhere.

The first day of training ended with the Gurkhas and Marines making a combined night assault, while Gurkha bagpipers played in the background.

The following day, the two units got to know each other better as the Gurkhas walked through a static display set up at Bellows by 1st MAB Marines. The display included weapons and support equipment used by Marines at the company level, such as the M2 .50 caliber machine gun, the Light Anti-Armor Weapon (LAAW) and the Shoulder-fired, Multi-purpose Assault Weapon (SMAW), as well as communications and surveillance equipment. There was also a demonstration by snipers from STA platoon.

Following the static display, the Marines and Gurkhas conducted a combined field meet and party to celebrate the Gurkha Regiment's birthday. The competition was fierce; the Gurkhas beat the Marines in the five-man and 10-mile relay race, but the Marines redeemed themselves when they defeated the Gurkhas 3-2 in soccer.

During the party, Marines mingled with the Gurkhas presenting them with mugs inscribed with the Alpha 1/3 logo, and then watched the Gurkhas demonstrate various traditional Nepalese dances. Not to be outdone, the Marines gave several impromptu "breakdance" demonstrations.

That evening, the NCOs of Alpha 1/3 held a Mess Night in honor of the Gurkhas.

Since most of the Gurkhas are Hindu, and cannot eat beef, the traditional mess night meal of roast beef was replaced with roast chicken. The highlight of the evening came when the President of the Mess ordered the steward to "parade the bird," and then pronounced the fowl "tasty and fit for consumption."

After a weekend of liberty, the Marines and Gurkhas jumped back into the training cycle embarking aboard helicopters enroute to Molokai where the Gurkhas set up a defensive position and waited for the Marines to attack.

From Molokai, the two units were scheduled to make a helo assault on another training area on a neighbor island, but bad weather made it impossible to land on the target island. The day ended with Gurkhas and Marines scattered on four different islands, waiting for the weather to clear.

When the weather cleared, the two units reassembled and continued their mission, which included live fire exercises, and a run through a newly constructed company-level assault course, complete with Soviet-style trenches and fortifications.

"This has been a very good experience for us," said Lt. Vaughan Prentice, platoon commander of the 12th platoon of Gurkhas. "I think that the main thing our troops learned from this exercise is how other troops operate, which is always very useful.

"It's unfortunate that the weather marred part of the exercise; but one thing I will always remember is making a night amphibious assault alongside the United States Marines Corps."

The Marines were equally appreciative of the chance to train with the Gurkhas.

"This is one the best allied units I've ever trained with," said 1stLt. Robert Sinclair, executive officer of Co., A, 1/3. "They're a lot more like us than I'd have thought. For instance, the way they issue operating orders is almost identical to ours, using a sort of "SMEAC," or five-paragraph order. Their tactics are a little different, like patrolling, but we got some good cross training out of it," said Sinclair.

One Gurkha quality in particular impressed the Marines. "Like us, these Gurkhas are very tenacious, they never give up, which, I think is one reason why we worked so well together, and developed the closeness we did," said Sinclair.

The Gurkhas will remain in Hawaii until the first week in June, training with the Army's 25th Infantry Division. They are now on the Big Island, acting as aggressor forces in a joint/combined exercise being conducted at the Pohakaloa Training Area.

Gurkhas proud of faithful service

Story by Sgt. Stephen Frank

During the second half of the 18th century, Prithwi Narayan Shah, king of the small principality of Gorkha, in what is now the Kingdom of Nepal, began wars of expansions using an army comprised of hillman. By the beginning of the 19th century, he had conquered all of his neighbors and was making incursions south into India.

The Indian territory he and his troops were attacking were, at that time, the property of the British East India Company. By 1814, the incursions were so deep into British territory that the Governor-General was forced to declare war.

The Gurkhas were finally defeated, but only after two long, bloody years. The British were so impressed with the fighting skills and tenacity of the Gurkhas that they immediately recruited four battalions into their service.

Various units have been formed, disbanded, and reformed as the needs of the times demanded. But Gurkhas have served continuously with the British since the early 19th century; First for the East India Company

Williams, both machinegunners from Weapons Co., 1/3, explain the features of the M2 .50-caliber heavy machinegun at a static display set up at Bellows AFS.

Kukri knife: national weapon of Nepal

Rifleman Prem Subang Limbu (r) demonstrates how the notches at the base of the Kukri knife can be used to trap an opponents blade. Once the blade is trapped a simple backhand twist will usually disarm the opponet.

Crossed Kukri knives, is the symbol of the Brigade of Gurkhas. Every Gurkha troop and officer is issued one of these traditional and versatile knives.

Story and photos by Sgt. Stephen Frank

When the forces of King Prithwi Narayan Shah invaded the Nepal Valley, they faced superior forces armed with the conventional edged weapons of that day, including various styles of swords and sabers, spears and daggers. The invaders were armed with short, heavy, strangely curved knives that proved almost impossible to parry. These knives, known as the kukri, were partly responsible for the invaders' victory. The kukri's superiority as a weapon resulted in its being named the national weapon of Nepal. Today, every soldier in the Army of Nepal, as well as the Gurkhas in the British Army, are issued kukri knives.

Most "hill" people in Nepal carry the same style knife, using it as a general purpose tool for defense, tree cutting and whatever other chores are needed.

"The invaders were armed with knives that proved almost impossible to parry."

The kukri has become such an important symbol of the Nepalese people that when the king of Nepal is absent, his kukri is placed on the throne; officially, the king is present through his knife. The knives vary in quality from locally produced blades made from old suspension springs, to the finest quality steel that will hold an edge indefinitely.

The knives have single-edged blades that are usually over a foot long, curving downward, opposite of conventional blades.

The hilt does not have a guard, but two notches at the base of the blade serve the same purpose. The notches can also be used to catch an opponent's blade. A backhand twist by the kukri wielder will usually disarm the opponent.

The shape of the kukri has changed very little since 1627 when Rajadras Shah, the king of Gorkha, carried the earliest known kukri knife. That knife is now preserved in the Nepal National Museum in Kathmandu.

HISTORY from B-1

Army; then the Bengal Presidency Army; later the old Indian Army; and now in both British Army and the new Indian Army.

The modern-day Gurkhas are usually recruited from family clans high in the Himalaya mountains, which run through most of Nepal. The land is rugged and sparsely populated, and the people who live there are hardy and self-reliant; the same people act as Sherpa guides for expeditions into the Himalayas. By western standards, the people are materially poor, living in a way that hasn't changed for centuries.

The British Army does its recruiting in Nepal once a year, from one of four major clans: the Magars and Gurungs in the west, and the Limbus and Rais in the east. Former servicemen bring a predetermined number of potential recruits to central points where former Gurkha officers make the first selections.

Those left, about twice the number actually required, are then sent on to recruiting depots where the final selections are made. It is estimated that approximately 300 young men apply for every available slot; those who finally make it, are sent to recruit training in Hong Kong.

Once they've completed their training, the Gurkhas are assigned to one of four infantry battalions, or one of three support units, which make up the Brigade of Gurkhas now serving with the British Army.

These seven units were the only ones retained by the British Army when independent rule was granted to India in 1947. All the other Gurkha units were disbanded or became part of the Indian Army.

The Gurkhas serve as the British Army's light infantry, and have fought in almost every corner of what was once the British Empire, in both major conflicts and small expeditions.

Starting in 1817 with the Sikh Wars in India, the Gurkhas have stormed into battle waving their wicked Kukri knives in such far-flung places as Burma, Afghanistan, Samailan, Malta, Cyprus, Malaya, South Africa and China.

During World War I, Gurkhas fought in almost all theaters of the war, in Flanders, France; Mesopotamia, Persia, Egypt and the Suez Canal; and Gallipoli, Salonika and Palestine.

During the World War II, 40 Gurkha Battalions saw combat in the North African desert, Italy, Greece, and throughout the Far East in places like Burma, Rangoon and Singapore.

Since the war, Gurkhas have served in the Middle East, Dutch East Indies, Vietnam, Laos, Cambodia and Borneo, as well as patrolling the New Territories borders near Hong Kong. Their latest active service took place in 1982 when they fought the Argentinians during the Falklands War.

Starting as bitter enemies, the Gurkhas have since given the crowned heads of Great Britain over 160 years of faithful and loyal service. All is summarized in the words of the late Sir Ralph Turner, "Never had a country more faithful friends than you."

Hawaii Marine NEWS CARRIER OF THE WEEK

This week's HAWAII MARINE "Carrier of the Week" is James Steele. James has been providing outstanding HAWAII MARINE service for more than one year.

My job has taught me how to handle money," James said. "I am able to save some of my earnings for a car. The people on my route make my job fun, too."

James attends the seventh grade at Kailua Intermediate School where he has developed a serious interest in the Japanese language. His future plans include attending the Naval Academy and joining the military. "I think it would be fun to be in the military and transfer to different locations," James explained.

When he has spare time, James likes to spend it with the Boy Scouts. "I am a patrol leader and I get to work on camping plans for the Boy Scouts."

Congratulations, James, for being selected as "Carrier of the Week," and thank you for a job well done.

Sponsored as a public service by... BURGER KING Carrier of the week receives a FREE Whopper Meal!

The HAWAII MARINE, Hawaii's leader in community news coverage, is delivered by carrier each week to all homes and apartments in our distribution area.
Your carrier is an independent business person who has entered into an agreement to provide his or her customers with good delivery service.
Every four weeks, your carrier will call on you, and your voluntary $1 payment is a way of rewarding him or her for a job well done, in addition to providing an added incentive for excellent delivery service.
The young person pictured above is a local business person — a HAWAII MARINE carrier. Most likely, delivering the HAWAII MARINE to you each week is a beginning business venture for your carrier. But, it's also an important educational experience, and as a customer of this carrier, you can help make this experience a way to genuine achievement and growth.
If you have any comments about your delivery service, please call 235-5881.

The HAWAII MARINE has openings for carriers. Responsible HAWAII MARINE workers can earn $15.00-$45.00 per month for only one delivery each week. If you want a business route of your own near your neighborhood, please mail in the application for information.

Women and credit: knowing your rights

Kay Brown had a long history of paying bills on time — for utilities, the mortgage, credit card accounts — but when she applied for credit on her own after her husband went on overseas duty, her applications were repeatedly denied. The reason? Charges had been billed to her husband so there was no record of her good bill-paying "history." After completing nurses training in Wisconsin, Marie

Billings accepted a commission in the Navy and was stationed in California. When she tried to buy a car there, she was denied credit because she had no record with the local credit bureau. You may have faced similar problems when you applied for credit. The first example above is typical of what might happen to a woman married, divorced or widowed who simply wants credit in her own name. A newly married woman may have the same problem if she had established credit under her maiden name and the information was not transferred to a listing under her married name.

The case of the newly graduated nurse is an example of what might happen to anyone just starting out, with little or no credit background. There are steps you can take to fill an empty file with your past credit history or to start up a file with new information.

But first, know your rights under the law. There are two federal laws that protect your credit history and make it easier for you to obtain credit:

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act prohibits a creditor from discriminating against you on the basis of sex or marital status. This act also forbids discrimination on the basis of your race, color, age, national origin or religion, or because you receive public assistance payments or exercised rights under federal consumer credit protection laws.

The Fair Credit Reporting Act protects consumer privacy and safeguards the accuracy of credit bureau reports.

If you have never had credit, start building a good record now. A local bank or department store may approve your credit application even if you do not meet the standards of larger creditors. Then buy something on credit and pay for it. But do not apply for a lot of new accounts all at once. Some creditors may deny credit if they think you are trying to open too many new accounts too quickly.

If you have shared accounts with your husband or former husband, visit or call your local credit bureau. Most U.S. cities have two or three. They are listed in the phone book under headings such as "Credit" or "Credit Rating and Reporting Agencies." Ask that a file be established in your name listing these shared accounts or any information that was reported only in your husband's name. A small fee may be charged for this service. If you were married or divorced recently and changed your name, ask your creditors to change your name on your accounts. Once these accounts are in your new name, your complete credit history should be reported correctly to the credit bureau. If you have had credit before under a different name or in a different location, call each local credit bureau to find out if they have a file on you. Make sure they have complete and accurate information about you in a file under your current name. Information or assistance might also be obtained from a military family services center or community services organization at or near your installation.

Safeguarding computers against unlawful entry

Using a personal computer in his bedroom, a high school student inadvertently launches a nuclear attack against the United States.

The plot to the movie "War Games" is far-fetched, but it drives home a strong point about the importance of computer security.

Defense officials are quick to point out that the scenario in "War Games" could never happen in real life. Throughout the Defense Department, classified information is processed and stored on special computers that are protected from entry by unauthorized users.

However, these same safeguards are not used for sensitive information. That makes it vulnerable to computer crime.

"We're fortunate that our country has not yet suffered a major disaster because of inadequate security in our hardware/software systems," according to Robert Brotzman, former director of the National Computer Security Center.

Computers are expanding man's capabilities well beyond levels ever thought possible.

In the workplace, more than 7 million Americans use computers to increase efficiency and reduce tedium. Experts estimate that by the year 2000, 70 percent of all jobs will involve computers.

The Defense Department has been quick to adapt computers to its needs; DoD ranks as the federal government's biggest user. Of the tens of thousands of computers in use throughout the government, the Air Force claims the biggest chunk of 17.6 percent, followed by the Navy, at 14.4 percent. The Army trails at 8.5 percent.

Unfortunately, the increase in computers and people able to use them has brought with it a surge in computer crime.

Computers have become the tool of hackers who commit theft at all levels — from welfare fraud to embezzlement. Experts say losses from computer theft run into the millions — or even hundreds of millions — of dollars every year. They admit they don't know the exact severity of the problem because so few incidents ever get reported.

But computer crime goes beyond theft. It also occurs when someone enters a system to get information he's not authorized to have, destroys or alters data or denies others use of the system.

This is where computer crime takes on serious national security implications.

Virtually all U.S. government classified and sensitive information is stored in, or passes through, computers, word processors or other electronic information-handling systems.

The Department of Defense Computer Security Center was established in 1981 to help protect classified and sensitive DoD information from computer crime. Three years later, the center's charter was expanded to include the entire federal government.

Since its establishment, the center has worked to increase computer security awareness, both in the computer industry and among day-to-day users.

One goal is to get computer manufacturers to think security at the design stage. That is where the highest-level protections must be built into a system.

The center has established a program to promote computer security awareness in the universities, where today's computer science students will become tomorrow's computer users.

Two other goals of the center are to get computer users to recognize the sensitivity of the information they use and to ensure that their computer systems are sufficiently secure.

The center has a technical program in which computer products are tested to determine their security levels. The results of these tests are provided to federal agencies to guide them in computer purchases.

Representatives of the center are frequently invited to visit federal offices to help review their current and projected security needs and evaluate the appropriateness of existing computer equipment. They also provide assistance on education and training and conduct security awareness presentations.

But one of the center's most important goals is to create computer security awareness among day-to-day users.

Officials at the center encourage agencies to teach users to operate the system securely, including procedures for handling, marking, storing and disposing of sensitive information.

Other good security tips identify systems used to process sensitive information and isolate them if necessary; apply strict maintenance procedures; and let users know their responsibilities and encourage them to report any evidence of tampering.

All are basic, common sense items, but not given a great deal of significance until a security mindset is established, according to a DoD official. "Awareness, education and proper procedures are the foundation of any security program," he said.

SAFETY advisory

The Federal Fire Department reports that more than 62,000 persons are injured annually in lawn mower accidents.

Many of these injuries are burns caused by careless use of the mower. Before using or cleaning your mower, follow these safety tips:

Do not smoke while fueling lawn mowers. Wait for machines to cool before refueling. Wipe up spilled fuel immediately. Never fuel a running mower.

Store and pour gasoline carefully and keep it in an approved container with a tight-fitting lid.

Check electric mower cords for frayed or damaged spots. Frayed insulation added to a metal mower, damp or wet grass, can cause lethal shocks or severe electrical burns.

Asthma help for sufferers

The American Lung Association of Hawaii is sponsoring several programs for people who suffer from asthma attacks, May through August. According to ALAH officials, asthma deaths and people affected by it has been on the rise in Hawaii, despite the medicines and technology that is available to cope with this condition. Experts agree that patient education is an answer to many of the problems asthmatics have.

Lung Association Family Asthma Program participants test their "lung power" as they learn how to control and cope with asthma.

To help asthmatics, ALAH is offering summer programs to teach families and their children how to cope with this condition. Four Family Asthma Programs will be offered, and two of the programs have openings in July and August. They are:

The Waianae Family Asthma Program is for children ages 5 through 14, and will be held at Waianae High School, and pool, July 20, 22, 24, 27, 29 and 31 from 1 to 3:30 p.m. Parents' sessions will be at Waianae Sacred Heart Church on July 15, 22 and 29 from 7 to 9 p.m.

The Kailua Family Asthma Program is for children ages 5 through 8, and will be held at Kailua Intermediate School and the Kailua Recreational pool on Aug. 4, 6, 11, 13, 18, 20, 25 and 27 from 9 to 11:30 a.m. Parents' sessions will be at Kailua Recreation Center on Aug. 5, 12 and 19 from 7 to 9 p.m.

The programs combine fun for the children including self-help activities geared toward preventing and controlling wheezing attacks. Youngsters learn about asthma by using anatomical models, visual aids and games.

Physical conditioning is also included through exercise and swimming. Parents will be able to share common experiences, discuss specific concerns and learn from medical professionals about the emotional, as well as medical, effects of asthma.

The program at Kailua costs $10 for all sessions and materials, and tuition fee waivers are available to qualified families. The program at Waianae is free.

For more information, call 637-5966.

Dance Class

A new country and western dance class will be held at the Makai Recreation Center at Hickam from 7 to 8:30 p.m., Sundays. Twelve people are needed for the class to begin. Cost is $36 for singles, and $70 for couples for six weeks.

The screening consists of five blood tests taken from a single blood sample, and a 12-hour fast is required before the sample is taken. The tests determine blood levels of HDL cholesterol, total cholesterol, triglycerides, glucose and uric acid.

Participants also complete an extensive lifestyle questionnaire and a blood pressure check. Completing the questionnaire and the blood draw take about 40 minutes. The fee $20.

The next Heartbeat screening is scheduled for June 28.

Teen Modeling

Teens who are interested in developing poise, wardrobe planning and makeup application can sign up for the Hickam Teen Modeling Class at the Youth Center. The class is from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m., Tuesdays at the Teen Center. The cost is $20 for four weeks.

8:45 to 10 a.m., starting May 23. Participants should go to the Diamond Head end of Ala Moana Beach Park by Life Tower 1E. Preregistration is not necessary, and the second session will begin July 11.

"Swim to Live Program for Adults" will be held in three sessions, of nine classes each, held on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 5:15 to 6 p.m. The first session begins June 8; the second July 6; and the third Aug. 3. All classes will be held at Ala Moana Beach Park.

The celebration begins at 5:30 p.m., with cocktail music, and continues with dinner at sunset, followed by an evening of songs and dances of the islands.

Tickets are $21.95 for adults and $12.95 for children under 12, and are available four weeks in advance at the hotel Activities Desk or any Special Services ticket office. Tickets may also be charged by phone to major credit cards by calling 955-0555.
