All About Radio Parts

Everyone who constructs a radio set should know the simple fundamentals of the various parts of his set. The E. I. Company has set these forth in a compact little book that is valuable at all times.

Book No. 8—Price 25c

History and Operation of the Vacuum Tube

The Vacuum Tube is a marvelous piece of apparatus. A short study of it as given in this book gives you the principle on which every Vacuum Tube Radio Receiver operates.

Book No. 9—Price 25c

The Neutrodyne—All About It

Everybody knows the famous Neutrodyne hookup. One of the finest Radio Receivers in use today. This 54-page E. I. Company book gives an explanation of every detail of the Neutrodyne and how it all works.

Book No. 10—Price 25c

How Radio is Received

The simplest and yet most complete Radio Guide Book for any amateur broadcast listener. In print only two weeks, fresh from the press.

Book No. 11—Price 25c

How to Locate Troubles in Your Radio Set

Anyone with this handy book as a guide can repair and keep in order his own radio set. Covers every detail of the modern radio sets and tells how to locate and repair any trouble.

Book No. 12—Price 25c

Radio Reflex Receivers

Just off the press. Hookups galore on the finest and most up-to-date reflex circuits in use today. Diagrams and descriptions on every modern reflex.

Book No. 13—Price 25c

Tips for the Radio Amateur Constructor

Many men fail in building their Radio sets because of some trivial error that could easily have been corrected before it was too late. The E. I. Company has compiled a book that will help you avoid all the common pitfalls while building your Radio sets.

Book No. 1—Price 25c

How to Make PRACTICAL Radio Receiving Sets

The man who wants to build only those PRACTICAL Radio Sets that are guaranteed to give good results when properly constructed will need this book. Gives the principal successful hookups of practical Radio Construction.

Book No. 2—Price 25c

Radio Questions Answered

Question No. 1—What is Radio? This is the nature of the questions that this book answers. Then it answers questions on all the principal parts of a Radio Receiver. It is a handy book to keep in your Radio File.

Book No. 3—Price 25c

Radio Frequency Amplification

Distance lends enchantment—and it's the Radio Frequency Amplification that brings in the distance on your Radio Receiver. If you contemplate adding any Radio Frequency to your set you will want this book at your side.

Book No. 4—Price 25c

How to Tune Your Radio Set

Don't struggle in the dark, looking for stations—here is an inexpensive book that gives you detailed instructions on just how to handle your Radio set. You will be surprised at the increased results that can be obtained through proper tuning.

Book No. 6—Price 25c

100 Radio Hookups

No better book for your work bench. Gives diagrams, hook-ups and details on Radio Hook-ups galore. One of the most complete hook-up books published. Authentic and up-to-date in every respect. Third edition now ready.

INFORMATION FOR THE RADIO BROADCAST LISTENER

RADIO is one of the most fascinating pastimes that has ever been placed in the hands of mankind. Aside from being a mere form of pleasure, it also has educational features that cannot be overlooked. The radio public's acknowledgement of its utility and necessity in every American home cannot fail to interest and convert all those who have not as yet taken advantage of this novel form of diversion and education.

The curious are led to investigate this new art with possibly a bit of skepticism, but with keen interest, nevertheless. They are in a fair way of becoming one of the vast radio legion whose daily pass-word is, "Were you listening in last night?"

However, newcomers may lose the enthusiasm common to seasoned radio fans for the reason that their radio apparatus may either not work at all, or may fail to live up to their expectations. Such a condition is by no means unusual. Even the most enthusiastic fan has once passed through a similar stage. Do not think for a moment, though, that it is necessary to meet with disappointment. On the contrary, if you know your wants, and select a set of a reliable make to suit them, you should not experience disappointments. You ought also to keep in mind that, knowing only a little of radio, it would be folly on your part to attempt to place a set in operation without adequate directions.

WHAT RECEIVING SET SHALL I BUY?

This question is a problem to be solved by yourself. You must first decide what you expect of a radio set. Think over the following questions: Do you want a receiving set that will receive over long distances or will the reception of local stations satisfy you? Do you wish a set that will operate a loud-speaker so that every one in the room can hear the received concerts or lectures, or will headphones suffice? Can you erect an outdoor aerial or is your situation such that it is necessary to use an indoor antenna? All these are important considerations and should be given due thought. From the following classifications of receiving sets you will be able to determine what type you will have to purchase to fill your requirements.

THE CRYSTAL RECEIVING SET

This is the simplest and most inexpensive form of radio receiving set that can be purchased. It consists chiefly of some form of a tuning unit and a mineral detector. An outdoor aerial is required for its operation and its average receiving range is not over 25 miles. The quality of received concerts, however, is exceptionally good. There is no upkeep cost as no batteries are required to operate it.

VACUUM TUBE RECEIVING SETS

All receiving sets aside from the crystal set employ one or more vacuum tubes. The sensitivity of the receiver and the amount of volume it produces depends on the number of tubes employed.

THE NON-REGENERATIVE RECEIVER

This is the simplest type of vacuum tube receiver. A set of this type employing one vacuum tube will give reception on the headphones over a distance of about 50 miles, using an outdoor aerial. This set will not operate a loud-speaker unless an amplifier is added.

REGENERATIVE RECEIVERS

This is a very popular type of radio receiving set. It is extremely sensitive to weak signals and has, under normal conditions, a range of from 500 to 800 miles employing an outdoor aerial. Using one tube, it will be found that signals have excellent volume. Under certain conditions and operating close to a powerful broadcast station, signals of loud-speaker volume can be obtained. Sets of this type are sold under various trade names and circuit names, but one is about as efficient as the other. The most suitable type is known as the "single circuit" or "tickler feedback receiver."

AUDIO FREQUENCY AMPLIFIERS

An audio frequency amplifier, which usually consists of two vacuum tubes, is designed for the purpose of amplifying received signals after they have passed through the detector tube of the receiving set, so that a loud-speaker can be operated. An audio frequency amplifier can be combined with practically any form of radio receiving set, irrespective of the type.

RADIO FREQUENCY AMPLIFIERS

A radio frequency amplifier consists of one or more tubes, generally with a radio frequency transformer for each tube, and is designed for the purpose of amplifying weak signals before they reach the detector tube of the receiving set, thus building up the strength of signals that otherwise would not operate the detector tube. A radio frequency amplifier is employed when long distance reception is desired or when it is necessary, due to location, to use an indoor, or loop aerial.

RADIO FREQUENCY RECEIVERS

A radio frequency receiver is really just a combination of a radio frequency amplifier, a detector and usually an audio frequency amplifier. These sets are built into one cabinet and are primarily designed for long distance reception. The usual radio frequency receiver has five tubes and will receive over an average range of 1,000 miles on the loud-speaker with an outdoor aerial, and approximately 500 to 800 miles employing a loop aerial.

REFLEX SETS

The average reflex or inverse duplex radio receiving set employs from three to four vacuum tubes of either the dry cell or storage battery type, and has from one to two tuning controls. Such sets operate well on a loop aerial and have an average range of from 500 to 1,000 miles with enough volume to operate a loud-speaker. In many cases a crystal detector is employed for the purpose of clarity of reception.

The reflex sets on the market can be relied upon for stability, but to build one yourself and have it operate satisfactorily is rather difficult, as many of the peculiarities of such outfits are problems for laboratory solution. Purely as a matter of experimenting, some interesting experience and quite often remarkable results can be obtained in this way.

NEUTRODYNE SETS

The most popular form of radio frequency receiver has the trade name of Neutrodyne. These are very sensitive sets and have an average range, employing an outdoor aerial, of from 1,500 to 2,000 miles under favorable conditions. They employ four or five vacuum tubes; two as radio frequency amplifiers, one as a detector and either one or two as audio frequency amplifiers. Most of the stations received can be reproduced on the loud-speaker.

SUPER-HETERODYNE SETS

The Super-Heterodyne is the most sensitive type of receiving set in existence at the present time. The standard Super-Heterodyne employs eight vacuum tubes, although some of the newer types have only six tubes. There is no real advantage in using an outdoor aerial with this set. The results are just as good on a small loop aerial for the reason that there is less interference from conflicting stations. The average range of the Super-Heterodyne receiver is 1,000 to 1,500 miles and it should operate a loud-speaker on stations within this radius.

RADIO SET ACCESSORIES

Very few companies sell radio sets complete and ready for operation. The accessories usually have to be purchased separately. To place a receiving set in operation, you will require (1) one or more vacuum tubes, depending on how many the set calls for; (2) an "A" battery for lighting the filaments of the vacuum tubes; (3) a "B" battery for furnishing the energy to the vacuum tubes; (4) a pair of headphones, or a loud-speaker, if the set is provided with an amplifier; (5) about 100 feet of copper aerial wire and 50 feet of rubber-covered wire for the aerial "lead-in" to the set and for the connection to the ground; (6) a ground clamp; and (7) two porcelain insulators for insulating the aerial from its supports. (Items 5, 6 and 7 are not required if the radio set works on a loop aerial, which generally comes with the set, or may be purchased separately.)

The vacuum tube is the "nerve center" of a radio receiving set. It has many and varied uses, and in a receiving set may play the part of a detector, an oscillator, a radio frequency amplifier or an audio frequency amplifier. There are several types of vacuum tubes, some of which work on dry cells and others that require a storage battery. The storage battery tubes have the greater capacity when used as audio frequency amplifiers. It is to be understood though, that the dry-cell tubes are hard little workers and will produce good volume of sound in a loud-speaker. The Vacuum Tube Table on one of the following pages will give you sufficient information on all well-known types of vacuum tubes that you can intelligently select the type most suited to your requirements.

RADIO BATTERIES

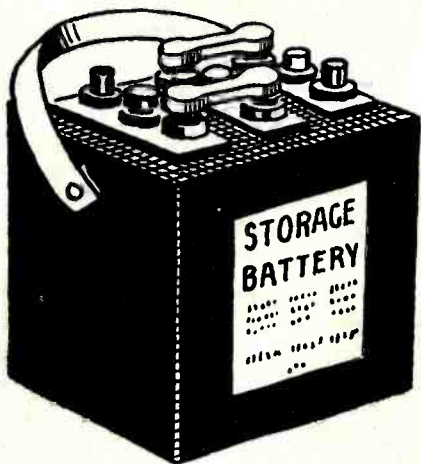

Batteries are a very important part of a radio set. Without them the vacuum tubes would be useless (crystal radio sets do not require batteries). There are three types of radio batteries and you should clearly understand what each is for, otherwise there will be serious trouble.

THE "A" BATTERY

First there is the "A" battery, which is employed for lighting the filaments of the vacuum tubes. In the case of one WD-11 or WD-12 tube, only one dry cell is required as the "A" battery. If three of these tubes are used, as an amplifier receiving set, three dry cells are required and they are connected in parallel, as shown in Fig. 1. In the case of one UV-199 tube, three dry cells are used, but they are connected in series, as shown in Fig. 2. If three of these

1 1/2 Volt Dry Cell Battery

6 Volt Storage Battery

tubes are used, the three dry cells are still sufficient, as a UV-199 tube draws very little current. The six-volt tubes, as listed in the table reproduced on another page, require a six-volt storage battery. Where only one tube of the UV-201A type is used, it will be possible to use four dry cells connected in series. The life of the cells, however, will not be great, and for all practical purposes it is not only more economical in the long run, but more efficient to employ a storage battery. In purchasing a battery of this sort it is generally best to obtain one of high capacity. That is to say one having a rating from 60 to 100 ampere hours. Thus, it would be theoretically possible to draw a current of 2 amperes from a 60-hour battery for a period of 30 hours. In practice it will be seen that this is not feasible, however. For example, drawing 2 amperes each hour for a period of 30 hours would completely drain the charge of a 60-ampere

Fig. 1. Three Dry Cells Connected in Parallel Give 1 1/2 Volts for W D 11 or W D 12 Vacuum Tubes storage battery. At the end of 15 to 20 hours the charge would be so low as to seriously affect the operation of the tubes and therefore it is necessary to charge the battery before this point is reached. In order to determine the safest point at which to re-charge, it is advisable to have a hydrometer, as shown in Fig. 3. Instructions in detail on this point are given later on.

Both dry cells and storage batteries sooner or later run down and become inoperative. The life of their life depends on how much current is drawn from them. When a dry cell runs down, it is no longer of any use; it must be replaced by a new one. The advantage of the storage battery is that it can be re-charged when it runs down. In other words, current is again put into it. This is done by means of a "battery charger" which connects directly to any electric light socket. There are numerous types of "battery chargers" on the market and any standard make will do. Directions come with every charger showing how to connect it to your house current and to your battery. If the electric lights in your house run on direct current, you should purchase a "direct current" battery charger, while if the lights run on alternating current, which is more likely, you must get an "alternating current" charger. Make sure on this point, as a direct current charger will not work on alternating current and vice versa.

If your house is equipped with direct current, it is possible to charge your storage battery by the use of a number of electric light bulbs connected in parallel. The accompanying diagram on this page shows how this can be done.

Fig. 3. A Hydrometer Used for Testing the Specific Gravity of the Electrolyte in a Storage Battery

Five 32 candlepower lamps are used to form a "lamp bank," and this bank is connected in series with the light line and the storage battery. When the switch is closed the lamps will burn dimly. It is very important that you connect the positive terminal of the light line to the positive terminal of the storage battery. If this should be reversed, the storage battery would discharge instead of charge, and if it were left on long enough, the plates within the battery would buckle and the battery would be ruined.

You can determine which is the positive and which is the negative wire of the direct current light circuit by dipping the ends of the two wires in a glass of water containing a spoonful of salt. When the current is turned on, bubbles will appear at the end of the negative (—) wire. Put a knot in this wire, to mark it so that there will be no confusion later as to which is which.

A six-volt storage battery has three cells and in each of these is a liquid which is called the "electrolyte." It is the condition of "specific gravity" of this electrolyte that determines whether or not the storage battery is fully charged. In order to measure the specific gravity, an instrument called a hydrometer is employed. It is shown in Fig. 3. It consists of a glass tube with a soft rubber bulb at one end and a roft rubber tube at the other end. Within the glass tube is a glass bob weighted at one end, and with a graduated scale at the other. By unscrewing the cap of one of the cells and inserting the rubber tube of the hydrometer into the opening, some of the electrolyte can be drawn up into the glass tube by squeezing the rubber bulb and then releasing gravity of the electrolyte in all three cells should never be allowed to drop lower than 1,200. When it gets to this reading, the storage battery should be put on charge and left until the hydrometer again reads 1.270 for all three cells of the battery. Ordinarily as a battery on charge approaches a fully charged condition, the liquid bubbles or gasses. It is it. There should be enough of the liquid in the tube so that the bob inside can float. Care should be taken to allow the electrolyte to be drawn up gently into the barrel of the hydrometer. Carelessness in this respect may result in a best, however, to take occasional readings with the hydrometer.

You can generally tell when a dry-cell or a storage battery is running down by the reduced brilliancy of the vacuum tube filaments and a consequent dropping off in signal volume in the headphones or loud-speaker.

THE "B" BATTERY

In order to show clearly the purpose of a "B" battery in a radio set it will be necessary first to offer a brief explanation of the action within a vacuum tube in operation as a detector or amplifier. The illustration below shows the arrangement of elements within a vacuum tube. The filament consists of a very fine wire, similar to that in an electric light bulb. The grid is a coil or lattice arrangement of much heavier wire immediately around the filament and the plate is of thin metal surrounding both filament and grid. Two connections are provided for the filament, one for the grid and one for the plate. These are usually marked on the broken bob. The reading on the scale is the specific gravity of the battery.

A storage battery, when fully charged, has a specific gravity reading of 1.270 or slightly higher. When completely discharged, the reading is 1.150 or lower. The specific vacuum tube socket next to the binding post terminals, as F, F, G and P. The action of the tube is as follows: When a metal filament is heated in a vacuum, negatively charged particles, known as electrons, are sent into the surrounding space within the tube. Thus when the filament is lighted by the "A" battery, these electrons are thrown off into space. Now, by connecting the positive (+) side of a "B" battery to the plate of the tube, we place a positive electric charge on that element. As in the case of a magnet, where the opposite poles (north and south) attract each other, we find that the positive plate attracts the negative particles (electrons) thrown off by the filament. In this manner a continuous flow of negative electricity takes place from the filament to the plate. As the plate captures and holds these particles, they cannot return to their source (the filament) and a uni-directional or one-way, electrical path is established. It will be clearly apparent then, that the positive (+) "B" battery must be connected to the plate in order to insure this flow of electrons, as a negative charge on the plate will repel the negative electrons and drive them back to the filament, breaking the path from filament to plate. In the case of a crystal detector, electric flow is only in one direction through the crystal. This changes the alternating signals from the antenna to a one-way or direct current. This direct current then operates the headphones and becomes the audible signal. The effect of a vacuum tube detector is essentially the same in this respect, inasmuch as the one-way electrical path established between the filament and plate allows the oscillations or signals to travel only toward the plate. With a vacuum tube used as an audio frequency amplifier as in the average three-tube set, the plate must also be given a positive charge in order to insure passage of current in that direction. By means of an audio frequency transformer the signals are then stepped-up or increased to loud-speaker intensity or volume.

"B" batteries come in 22½-volt blocks and 45-volt blocks. The usual vacuum tube detector works best with a "B" voltage of 22½, although some tubes take as much as 45 volts. The amplifier vacuum tubes take from 45 to 100 volts, depending on their capacity. The accompanying Vacuum Tube Table will tell you the normal "B" voltage for each type of tube when employed as a detector or an amplifier.

A "C" Battery with Two "Taps" for 3 and 4½ Volts

It is not necessary, except in unusual cases, to use separate "B" batteries for each vacuum tube. Just as one "A" battery supplies the current for the filaments of all the tubes employed, one set of "B" batteries will supply the actual operating current for all the tubes. In order to impress a lower voltage on the detector tube, a tap is taken off at 22½ or 45 volts as the particular tube calls for. To get the high voltage, all the "B" batteries are connected in series. Fig. 4 illustrates this. E consists of two 22½-volt "B" batteries connected in series; that is, the positive (+) pole of one is connected to the negative (-) pole of the other, and consequently the total voltage is 45. F consists of one 22½-volt block and one 45-volt block connected in the same manner. The total voltage is, of course, 67½ volts. G shows two 45-volt blocks connected in series to give a total voltage of 90. H shows four 22½-volt blocks connected in series for a total of 90 volts. You will note that no matter what the number of batteries connected in series, there are only two terminals left open, one being positive and the other negative. To take a tap off for the detector tube, the voltage can be considered as zero at the negative pole and increasing as we run towards the open positive pole. Consequently the tap-off in E of Fig 4 is at 22½ volts, in F 22½ volts, in G 45 volts and in H 22½ volts.

"B" batteries run down, just as "A" batteries do, but they last much longer. Nevertheless, they must be given frequent attention, or the first thing you know, the received signals will become weak and will be accompanied by scratching noises. The only way to keep an eye on the "B" batteries is by the use of a voltmeter. This instrument, which is illustrated in Fig. 5, will give you the direct reading of the voltage of a "B" battery by connecting its terminals to the two poles of the "B" battery. When a "B" battery having a normal voltage of 22½ drops down to 10 volts, it should be replaced by a new one. A "B" battery of 22½ volts should be read quite often after passing below 17 volts, for from there on the voltage will drop very rapidly. Be sure the voltmeter you purchase has a scale reading up at least 50 volts. Never connect the voltmeter across a bank of batteries having a higher voltage than the scale reading, otherwise the voltmeter may burn out or the delicate mechanism be injured.

One of the newer types of "B" battery is known as a storage "B." These are similar in nature to the ordinary storage battery, but with more cells and a much lower capacity rating. This is due to the fact that very little current or heat is required for the "B" battery, the voltage being the main essential. This form of battery has many advantages over the regular type, as it can be recharged when the voltage falls below a certain point. Further than this, due to the fact that the voltage remains fairly constant at all times, many of the noises in a set, due to "B" batteries, are eliminated.

THE "C" BATTERY

It is by no means necessary to employ a "C" battery for the operation of a radio set. When, however, you wish to use high "B" battery voltages to get the greatest amount of amplification from your audio frequency amplifiers and you find that the received and amplified concerts are distorted, then is the time to install a "C" battery. With UV-199 vacuum tubes distortion often occurs when a voltage of 45 is employed. UV-201-A's will distort when voltages above 90 are used. Consequently if your amplifier distorts, use a "C" battery. It has the further advantage of decreasing the amount of current drawn from the "B" batteries without a sacrifice of volume.

The method in which a "C" battery is connected in the circuit of a two-stage amplifier, is clearly shown in Fig. 6.

The voltage of a "C" battery, which ranges from 2 to 4½ is the important factor. No current is drawn from this battery, hence it will last a long time without going dead. Nevertheless it is a good policy to renew the "C" battery every six or eight months.

ERECTING THE AERIAL

Every locality has its own difficulties, insofar as the erection of an aerial is concerned. That is one of the points that you will have to overcome yourself.

An aerial consisting of one wire, with a length, including the lead-in wire, of from 100 to 125 feet is the best for receiving purposes. It should be strung clear of all objects such as houses, trees and particularly metallic structures. This does not mean that it is highly objectionable to string your aerial between the house and a nearby tree. It means, though, that the wire itself should not come too close to either. Support it at each end with a strong rope and have the rope extend out beyond the house at one end and the tree at the other end. In order to preserve the minute amount of energy picked up by the aerial it is necessary that the aerial be well insulated. Therefore, the rope should be insulated from the aerial wire at each end by the insertion of a porcelain insulator.

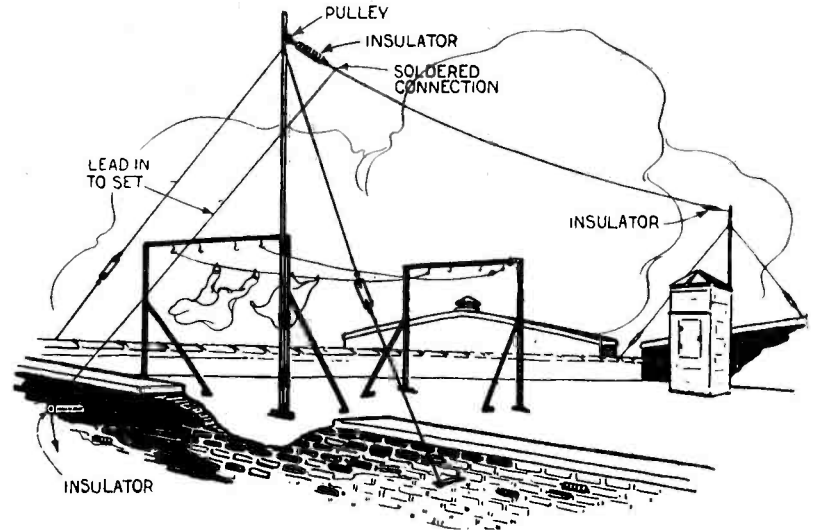

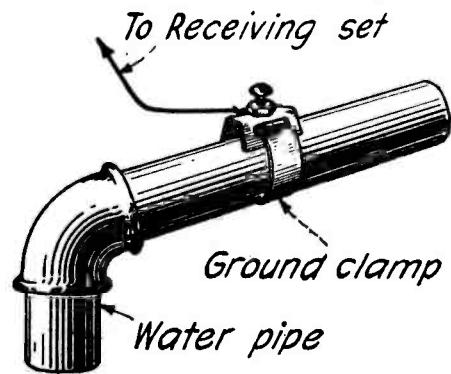

Fig. 7. A Typical Aerial Erected on Top of a House

The lead-in wire that runs down to the receiving set is connected to the near end of the aerial and should be soldered there to insure a perfect electrical contact. Fig. 7 illustrates a good aerial, well insulated and well strung.

MAKING A GROUND CONNECTION

It is as important to have a good ground as it is to have a good aerial. The ground connection can be made to the radiator or to the water pipe. The water pipe is by far the best connection. The pipe to which the connection is to be made should first be scraped clean of paint and rust until it shines brightly; then the ground clamp is placed around the pipe at this location, and fastened tightly in place so that it cannot be turned. One end of the rubber-covered copper wire should now be scraped clean of its insulation for a space of about one-half inch, the wire cleaned and then fastened to the ground clamp by the bolt provided for this purpose. The other end of this wire leads to the radio set.

A Ground Connection Showing How the Ground Clamp is Attached to the Water Pipe

CONNECTING UP YOUR SET

You are now ready to connect up your set for operation. First of all, connect the aerial lead-in wire to the aerial binding post, and the ground wire to the ground binding post. If the receiving set employs a loop aerial you will find two binding posts marked "Loop," to which the two-loop aerial wires should be connected.

Now connect the dry cell or storage "A" battery, as the case may be, to the binding posts on the set marked A+ and A-, being sure that you get the A+ pole of the battery to the A+ binding post of the set. Next connect up the "B" batteries in series, as previously described, and take the negative(-) pole that is left free and connect it to the binding post on the set marked B-. The next "B" battery connection is for the detector tube and should be taken off at 22½ or 45 volts, as the tube requires, and led to the binding post on the set marked "Detector," or "22½ volts B," or similarly. The free + pole of the "B" battery is now connected to the second binding post marked B+. This second B+ binding post is present only when the set is equipped with a radio or an audio frequency amplifier, or both. The only thing left to do now is to place the vacuum tubes in their sockets and connect up the headphones or loud-speaker to the binding post so marked, or plugging them into one or another of the jacks if they are provided. The set is now ready for operation.

HOW TO OPERATE YOUR SET

With all connections made, turn the rheostat knobs until the vacuum tubes are well lighted. No doubt you will hear some form of noise immediately, showing that the circuit is alive. The next procedure is to tune in a station.

Now, the directions for tuning a set must necessarily be general, since no two radio sets are alike. You will gain more knowledge of the tuning of your set by practical experience than you possibly could from mere written directions. Nevertheless, it is well worth while to acquaint yourself first with the various controls on a radio receiving set, so that you can go about the operation in an intelligent manner.

Every radio set has one or more knobs and dials which are employed for the specific purpose of adjusting the receiver to the wave-lengths of broadcast stations. On regenerative receiving sets, one knob and dial is employed for controlling regeneration. Neutrodyne sets have three knobs and dials for tuning only, while some reflex sets have only one dial.

By moving a knob and dial from the zero setting toward 180 degrees, or whatever the maximum reading on the dial may be, the wave-length to which the receiver tunes automatically increases. Thus by moving the knob and dial towards maximum one can receive the long wave broadcast stations, and by moving it towards zero the short wave stations can be heard as they are progressively reached. The point to keep in mind is that if you want to listen to a broadcast station on some particular wave-length you must bring your receiving set in resonance or tune with that wave-length. Having the receiving set variable as to wave-length adjustment allows an immediate shift from one wave to another.

DESCRIPTION

Receiving sets with more than one knob and dial have two or more circuits to be brought into resonance. The first or primary circuit of a receiver is brought into tune with a broadcast station by the adjustment of the first knob and dial, and the second circuit of the receiver is brought into tune with the first circuit by the second knob and dial. There are three circuits to tune in a Neutrodyne, consequently there are three knobs and dials.

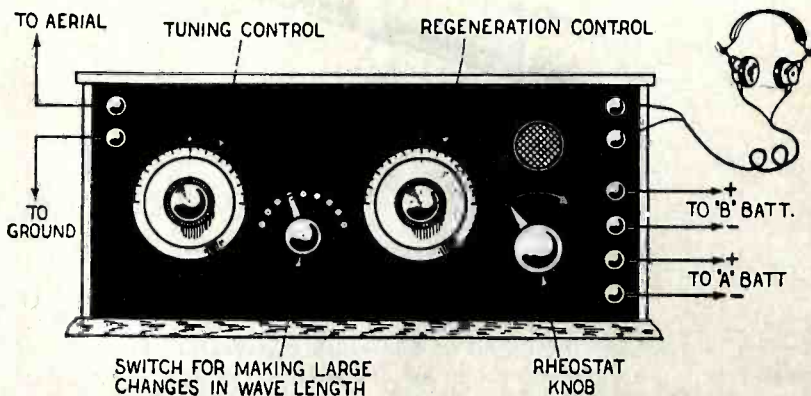

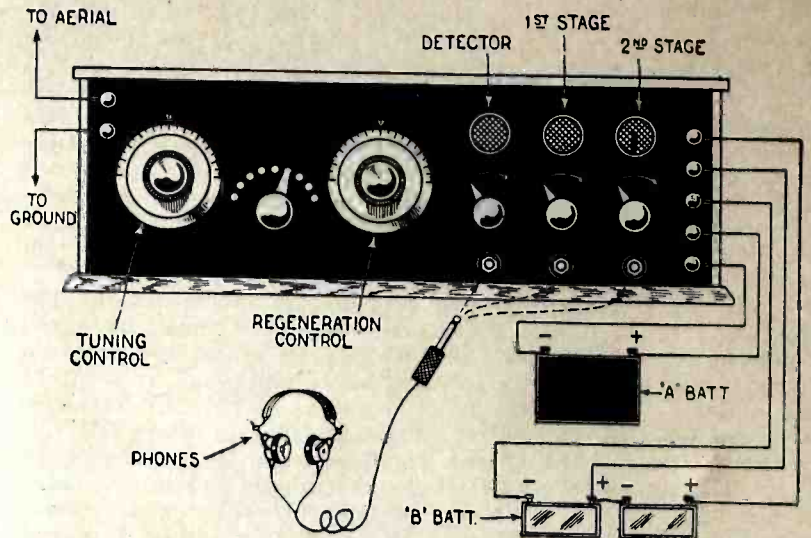

Fig. 8. Illustrating a Two-Control Regenerative Receiving Set with Connections for Aerial, Ground and Batteries

As an example, we will go over the tuning of a two-control regenerative receiver, as this is a very popular type of set. This receiver is illustrated in Fig. 8. The first knob and dial on this type of set is for tuning and the second for regeneration. After lighting the vacuum tube by means of the rheostat knob, turn the right hand knob and dial towards maximum (usually 100 or 180 degrees) until a clicking noise is heard in the headphones; then turn it back about five degrees. Now move the first or tuning dial along its scale until a station is picked up, and increase the volume of the signal by again moving the second knob and dial towards maximum. A point will be arrived at where any further increase of this control will cause the circuit to squeal or create distortion of the signal. Never remain or go above this point, for then your set will radiate radio waves and interfere with your neighbor's reception on his set and possibly a good many others in the near vicinity. If at any point on the adjustment of the first knob and dial you hear the click or squeal, move the second knob and dial further towards the zero setting. After a bit of practice you will find it an easy matter to tune in and out the different broadcast stations.

FADING AND STATIC

Unless a receiving set is of a very sensitive type, reception from distant broadcast stations is not always satisfactory. This is for the reason that long distant signals have a habit of fading in and out, sometimes vanishing completely, only to come back to original intensity, without moving any of the controls on the set. This is a circumstance that cannot be overcome. It is more noticeable with some broadcast stations than others.

Static is a form of atmospheric electricity and is more prevalent during the summer months than at any other time of the year. It is absorbed by any type of aerial and there is no effective method of eliminating the resulting interference it creates in the set, in the form of crackling, rushing and grating noises. A loop aerial absorbs less static than other types of aerials, hence it is of advantage to use one if the receiving set it is to be incorporated with, is a sensitive one. To properly operate a loop, one or more stages of radio frequency amplification is generally necessary.

LOCAL INTERFERENCE

There are so many forms of electrical devices used today in a commercial capacity which are apt to produce interference in radio receiving sets that there are very few localities that are absolutely devoid of such nuisances. X-ray or high frequency apparatus employed in hospitals and by doctors is probably the worst offender. Power lines, arc lights and the regular commercial lighting systems are also apt to create considerable interference. Interference from power lines is usually due to leaky insulators. Arc lights always produce interference, but it is not of a serious form, unless the receiving set is very near by. Interference created by house or street lighting lines may be due to any number of causes. The most common cause is a partial ground of one of the wires of the line, through the branch of a tree. A contact of this sort eventually rubs the insulation from the wire and the bark from the branch of the tree in making the contact. The current from the wire then flows through the tree to the ground. During a windy day the contact will be made and broken regularly as the tree sways, and this creates small sparks which cause the interference experienced. Battery chargers in garages, if close by, will also create considerable interference, particularly if the charger is of the Mercury Arc type.

It is usually not easy to determine what form of apparatus is creating the interference by the noise, since all of them produce a harsh, grating noise in the head-phones. In the case of X-ray or high frequency machines, though, the noise will be more constant; in fact, it is heard as a continuous buzz, the strength of which depends upon how near your receiving set is to the disturbing apparatus.

The only practical method of tracing the source of any form of interference is by the use of fairly sensitive receiving set and a loop aerial. The whole outfit should be placed in some sort of conveyance and the locality searched. Since a loop aerial has directional characteristics, one can determine the general direction of the interference by swinging the matter, as leaky lines mean loss of energy and consequent monetary loss to the company.

METERS AND KILOCYCLES

Most everyone is acquainted with the fact that radio broadcast stations send out electrical waves through the medium known as the "ether." In order that one broadcast station does not interfere with another which is sending out waves of a like character, each station is given a definite wave-length to work on. These are measured in meters in-the loop until the noise is heard with greatest volume. Since the loop aerial has two ends, there are two directions from which the noise may be coming. Presuming that the ends of the loop aerial are pointing north and south, if we move to the north and the noise gets weaker it is evident that the source is south of your position and not north. The noise will become louder and louder as you approach it, and the nearer you get to it the easier it is to determine the exact source. It may prove to be in front of one of the lighting line poles along one of the streets. The thing to do then is to inform the Lighting Company, who will be only too glad to look into stead of feet, and we say the wave of such and such a station has a length of 360 meters. Just so long as these waves are of different lengths they will not interfere with each other ordinarily. At the receiving end we have controls, so that the receiving set can be tuned to the various wave-lengths being transmitted on.

Now, every wave-length is equal to a definite frequency. That is, each wave-length has a certain number of vibrations per second. Thus, a wave having a length of 300 meters has a frequency of approximately 1,000,000 cycles or 1,000 kilocycles ("kilo" meaning one thousand). It is becoming the practice to designate the frequency of a wave instead of its length.

The unit of length in radio is the meter, which corresponds to 39.03709 inches, or a little over one yard. Radio waves travel at a speed of approximately 300,000,000 meters per second—about 186,000 miles.

The accompanying table will be found very useful in the conversion of meters to kilocycles, or vice-versa. To obtain the frequency in kilocycles of any wave not given, divide 300,000 by the number of meters; to obtain meters divide 300,000 by the number of kilocycles. For example, 1,000 meters equals 300 kilocycles, and 3,000 meters equals 100 kilocycles.

WAVELENGTH ALLOCATIONS

As previously explained, in order to prevent radio transmitting stations from interfering with each other, or creating interference at a receiving station, various wave-lengths have been allotted to each type of service. Amateur transmitting stations can work within the wave-length band of 150 to 220 meters. Wave-lengths below 150 meters are employed by the Signal Corps for experimental purposes. Radio broadcast stations work within the wave-length band of 220 to 550 meters, only in this form of service each station is allotted a definite wave-length on which they must stay. Commercial ship and shore radio telegraph transmitting stations employ a 450 meter wave-length for emergency purposes, notwithstanding the fact that this is the wave-length band of the broadcasting stations, but their actual working wave-length is approximately 600 meters. A wave of 800 meters is employed for radio direction finding. The United States Navy Utilizes the waves from 800 to 3,000 meters for special work, but the 600 meter wave is employed by the Navy land stations that handle traffic with ships. The high-power Trans-Atlantic stations work on wave-lengths ranging from 9,000 to 23,400 meters.

By separating the stations in this manner, interference is materially eliminated. Without such an arrangement it would be impossible to carry on any form of radio service, due to the "jamming" of the ether resulting from too many stations operating at the same wave-length.

HOW A BROADCAST STATION IS OPERATED

The operation of a broadcast station is by no means small work. The chief operator has about a hundred and one things to do at once. From the artists' studio, where the main microphone is placed, word comes to him that all is ready. The transmitting apparatus is then set in operation and he "flashes" signals to the studio, where all is in readiness for broadcasting.

The transmitting apparatus produces the radio waves called "carrier waves" upon which the voice or music from the studio is impressed. First, though, whatever comes from the studio microphone must pass through a speech amplifier, so that it has sufficient energy to effectively operate the "modulator" vacuum tubes. These tubes modulate the electrical oscillations of a frequency above the audibility of the ear, produced by the oscillator vacuum tubes. The modulated oscillations from the oscillator tubes are then forced into the sending aerial of the broadcast station and hurled through space. These modulated oscillations, after leaving the aerial take on the form of waves, and if they could be seen they would have the appearance of water waves. They are called the "carrier waves" for the reason that they carry the voice or music on their crest.

At a receiving station the receiving aerial absorbs a certain amount of energy from the passing wave and introduces it into the main circuit of the receiving set, where the carrier portion of the wave is eliminated and the speech or music is left, to be heard in the headphones or loud-speaker.

In order that transmission from a broadcast station be perfect at all times, it is necessary for the operator to keep careful watch over the "modulation" meter, which tells him at a glance whether or not the carrier wave is being under or over-modulated. Different voices or different forms of music require different degrees of modulation. By an adjustment here or there the operator keeps the entire transmitter in perfect balance.

RADIO TELEGRAPHY

Before going further let it be understood that "Radio" and "Wireless" are one and the same thing. Some people have the idea that Radio is an invention of late years pertaining to the transmission of speech and music through the air. They class Wireless as pertaining to telegraphy through the air only. It happens that the word Wireless is very seldom used any more. There is Radio Telegraphy and Radio Telephony.

Anyone who has ever had the opportunity of listening in on a radio receiving set has heard the dots and dashes of the radio telegraph stations. To one not knowing the code it means little, but to one who can read what they are saying, they have a fascination exceeding that of listening to Radio Broadcast programs.

The Morse code is employed by line (wire) telegraph companies, but in Radio Telegraphy the Continental or International Morse code is employed, and this is universally employed with the exception of Japan. The Japanese operator, however, must know enough of the Continental code to be able to make use of the International abbreviations. (A system of abbreviated forms for questions and answers that are most frequently used.)

The Continental code is made up of dots and dashes, and in transmission, the dash has three times the duration of the dot. The letter A, for example, is sent as a dot and a dash and when heard sounds like "dit dah" (. —); B is a dash and three dots and sounds like "dah dit dit dit" (— . . .). The initiated read these by sound only; that is, no time is required for thought as to the number or combination of dots and dashes sent. It becomes automatic. It is for this reason only that it is possible to send and receive at great speed.

Radio Telegraph transmitting stations do not all employ the same type of transmitters. There is what is known as the spark transmitter and the "CW" or continuous wave transmitter. The latter form usually employs large transmitting vacuum tubes similar to the type used by radio broadcast stations. The spark transmitter employs some form of spark gap such as the rotary spark gap or the quenched spark gap. Spark transmitters quite often create interference with the reception of broadcast programs, but in time they will all disappear and be replaced by "CW" transmitters, which do not interfere.

Inasmuch as "CW" or "undamped" wave transmitters are coming more and more into use, a brief explanation of the difference between spark and "CW" may be of interest. When the ordinary spark signals are sent out they travel in the form of a series of waves. A number of these waves make up what is known as a "wave train." Each individual wave has a crest similar to that of an ocean wave. In a spark wave train, much the same as with ocean waves, the peak of each succeeding wave in a train is lower than the last. Thus, after a certain number we find them diminished to zero, or damped. Now, in the case of "CW" a wave train appears as a line of waves, each having a peak of the same height or, technically, amplitude. Thus "CW" is really a form of transmitting wave trains wherein each wave maintains its peak and does not decrease in power as it passes along in the train.

"CW" signals can be easily distinguished from spark signals by their high pitched, singing tone, whereas spark signals usually make a harsh metallic noise.

HOW TO USE THE STATION LOG CHARTS

The use of the blank Station Log Charts given on pages 12 and 13 of this book, is the most simple, accurate and rapid means of keeping a tuning record of all broadcast stations. What the chart really is when once plotted, is a wave-length curve of your receiving set; that is, the scale numbers on your tuning dial plotted against the wave-lengths.

Here is the way to plot the wave-length curve. Start in at zero on your tuning dial and turn towards 180 degrees until a broadcast station is heard. Adjust your controls for the loudest signal; wait until the station gives its call letters and then look up that station's wave-length. Suppose, for an example, that the listed wave-length is 280 meters and the tuning dial is set at 15. Now on the chart find the vertical lines corresponding to 280 meters and the horizontal line corresponding to a scale reading of 15. With a pencil make a dot at the point where these two lines intersect.

Continue with your tuning dial and "Log" every station in the same manner, up to the end of the dial, placing a dot on the chart at the point that corresponds to the wave-length and dial settings of each. When you have logged a goodly number of broadcast stations, connect all the points on the log chart with a line. This, no doubt will take the form of a curve (see example of station log chart reproduced herewith), and the more points you have on the chart the more accurate this wave-length curve will be.

It is a good idea to use ink in marking all the dots and the curve as well and insert the call of each station in front of the dot that corresponds to its setting on the dial.

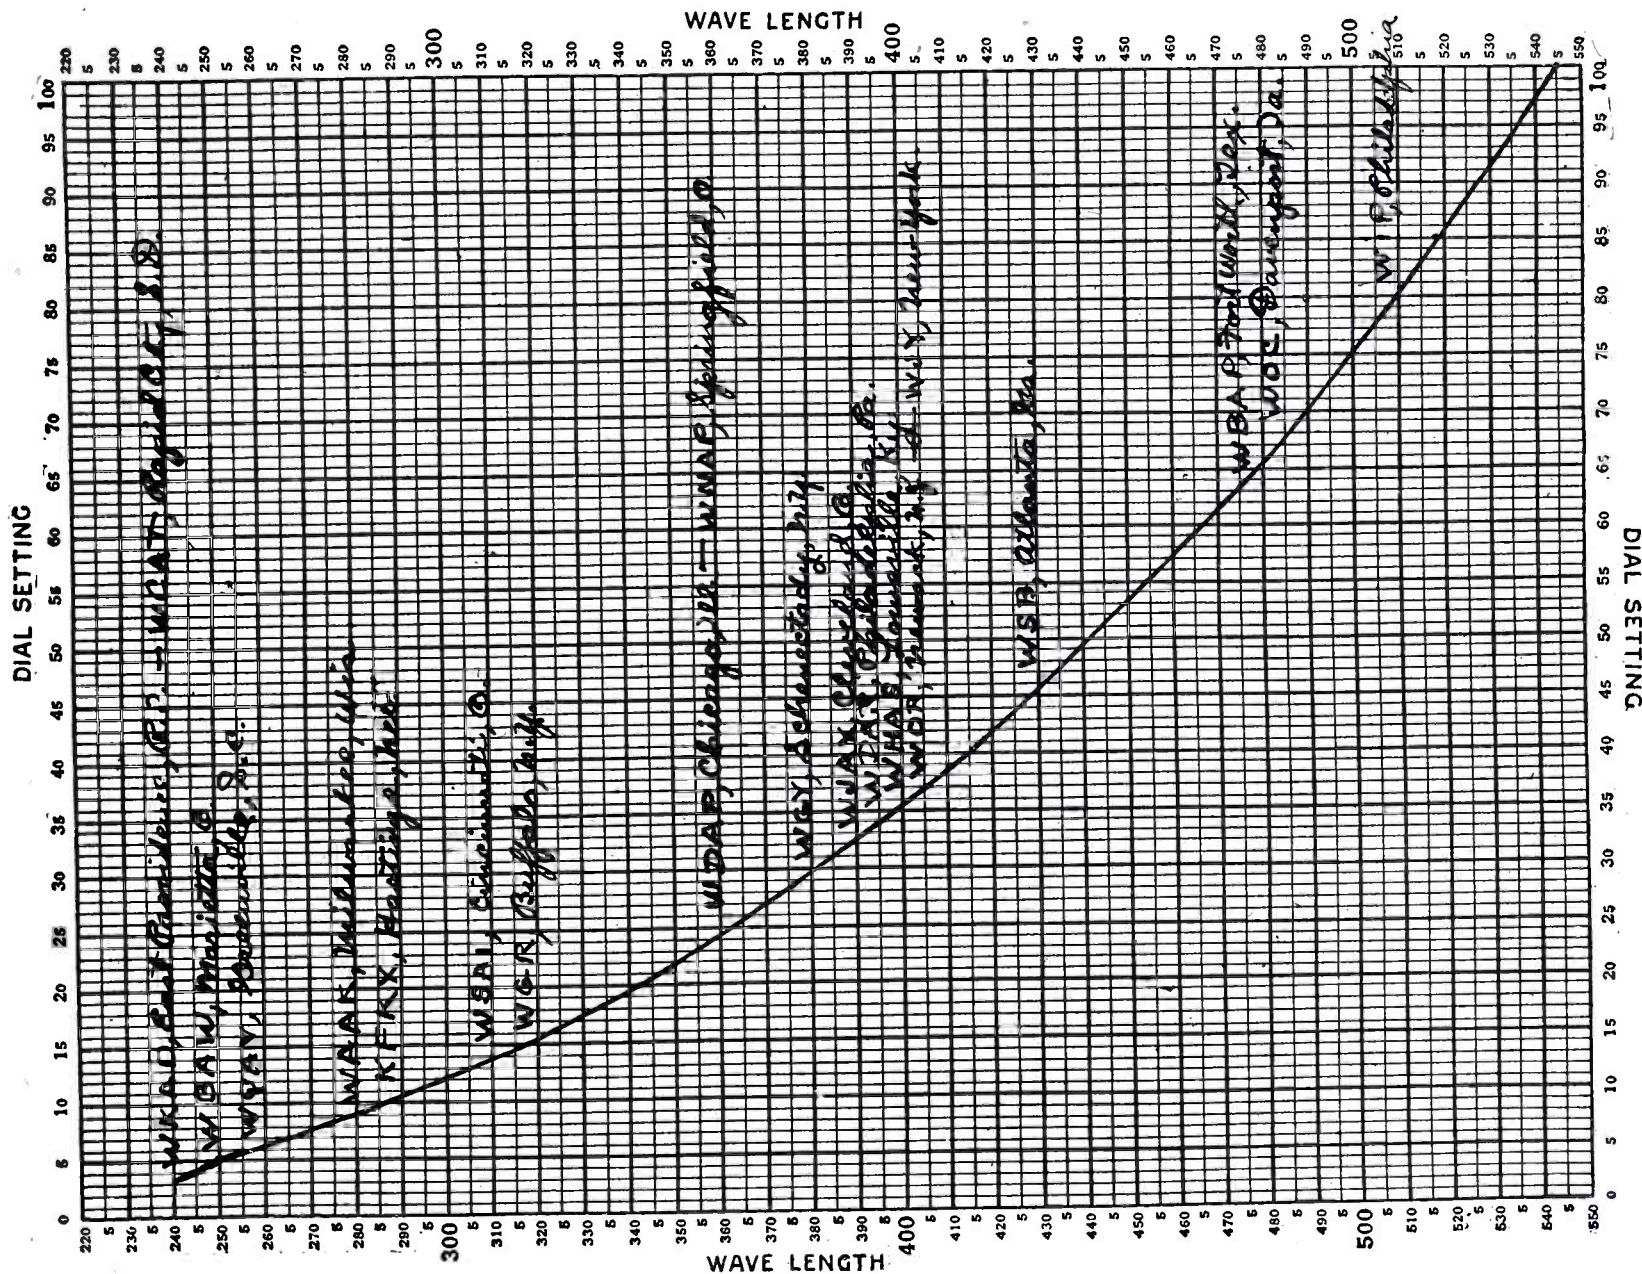

Suppose now that you have a 280 meter and a 300 meter station logged, and there is a station listed having a wave-length of 290 meters that you wish to hear. By referring to the log chart you will at once see that the station can be found somewhere in between the two scale readings corresponding to the 280 and 300 meter wave-length stations.

What is more, if you pick up an unknown station and the dial reading is, say, 40, by running along the line corresponding to this reading until the curve is intersected, you can read down the line at this point and determine the approxi-

M. Each goes after the distant programs on his set and, within that period, records of the various stations heard. Notations are made as to the nature of programs from each station and other distinguishing features.

Now suppose Jones hears a total of ten stations other than locals. The distance air-line to each of these stations is then recorded. Of these stations the nine that are farthest away are considered as "drives." For instance, among mate wave-length of the station being received. If you miss the station's call you can refer to the list of broadcast stations and find which station is working on this wave-length.

HOW TO PLAY RADIO GOLF

A simple and interesting form of amusement for long distance radio fans who live in the same vicinity can be had by playing what may be called Radio Golf.

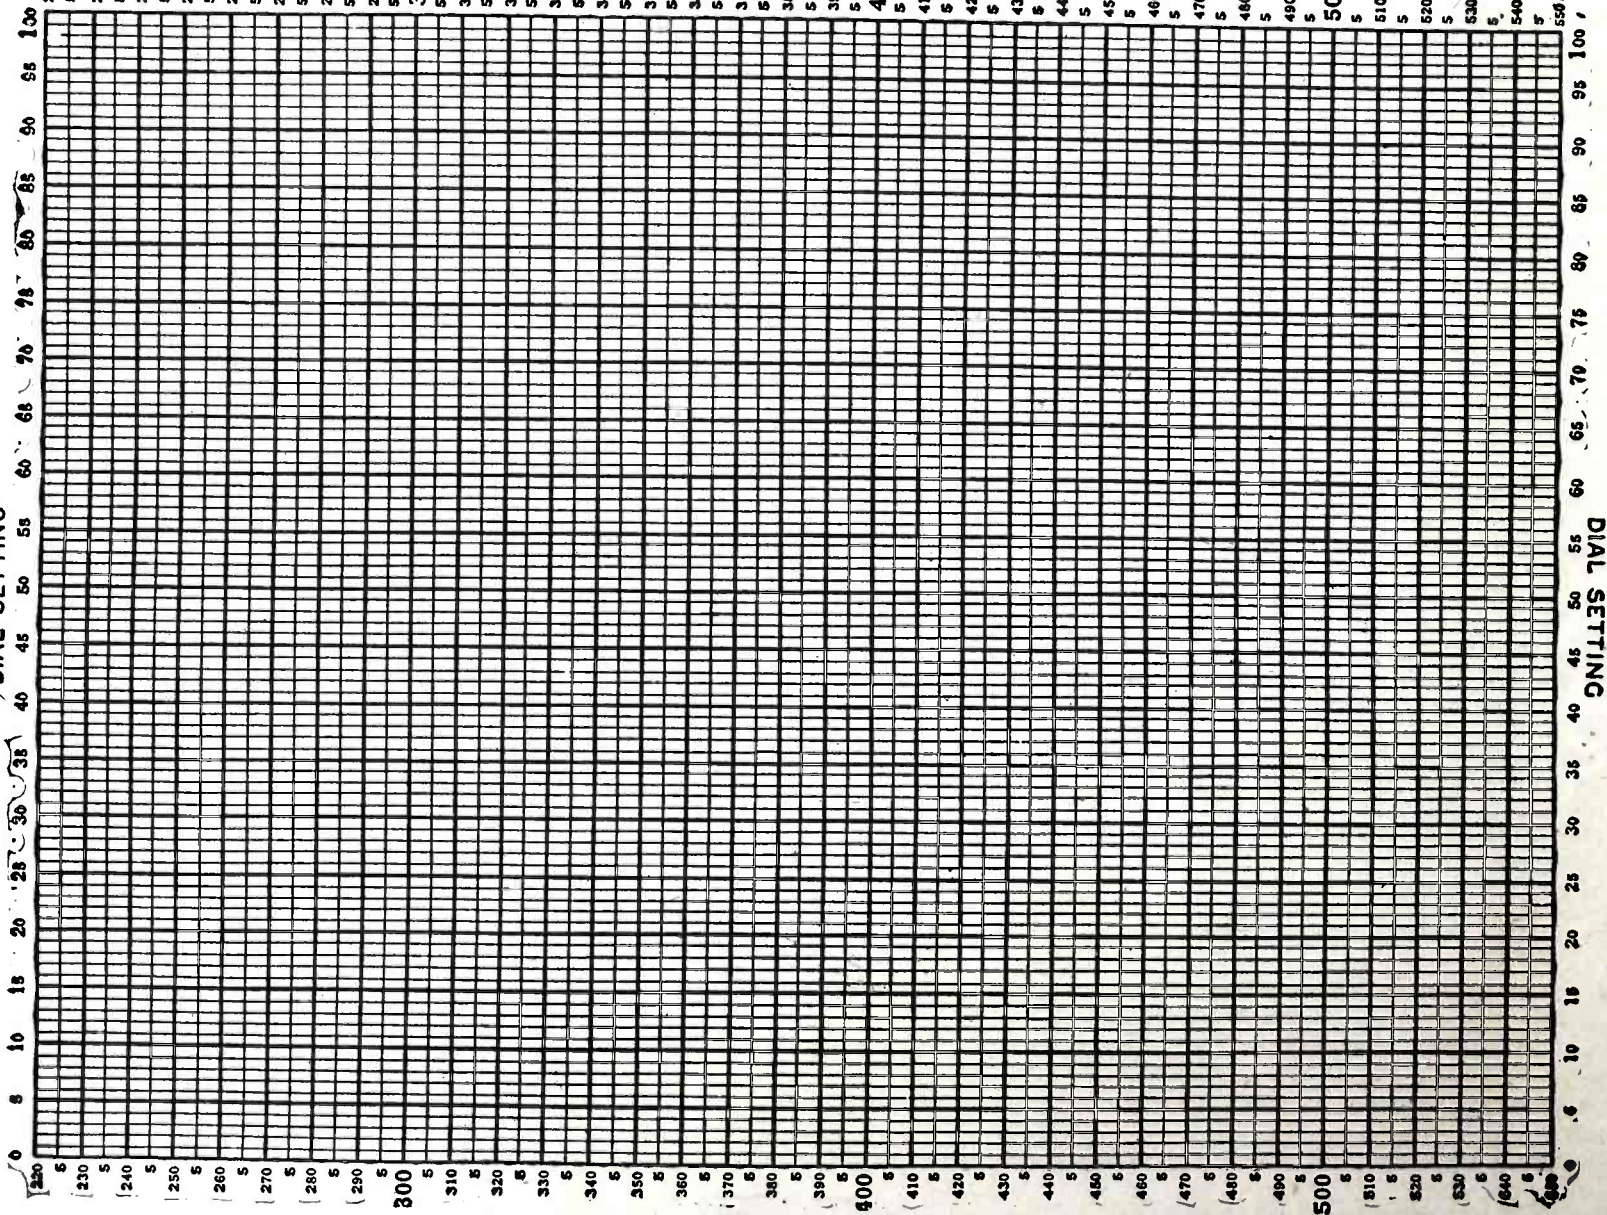

Let us say, for example, that Jones and Smith live a few blocks apart and that each is a "DX" (distance) artist. Their sets, we will assume, are both of the three-tube order and there is a great deal of good-natured rivalry as to which gets the most "distance." They decide to play a nine-hole game of Radio Golf, with a time limit from 10 to 12 P.

others KYW and WDAF are recorded. Let us say the first is 800 miles distant and the second 1,250 miles. Thus, in two drives Jones has covered 2,050 miles, which will reduce to 2,050 yards to prevent embarrassing the golf "duffer" who might chance to see the figures. Many forms of charts are available for the purpose of showing the point to point distances of radio stations, or any good map will have a fairly accurate scale.

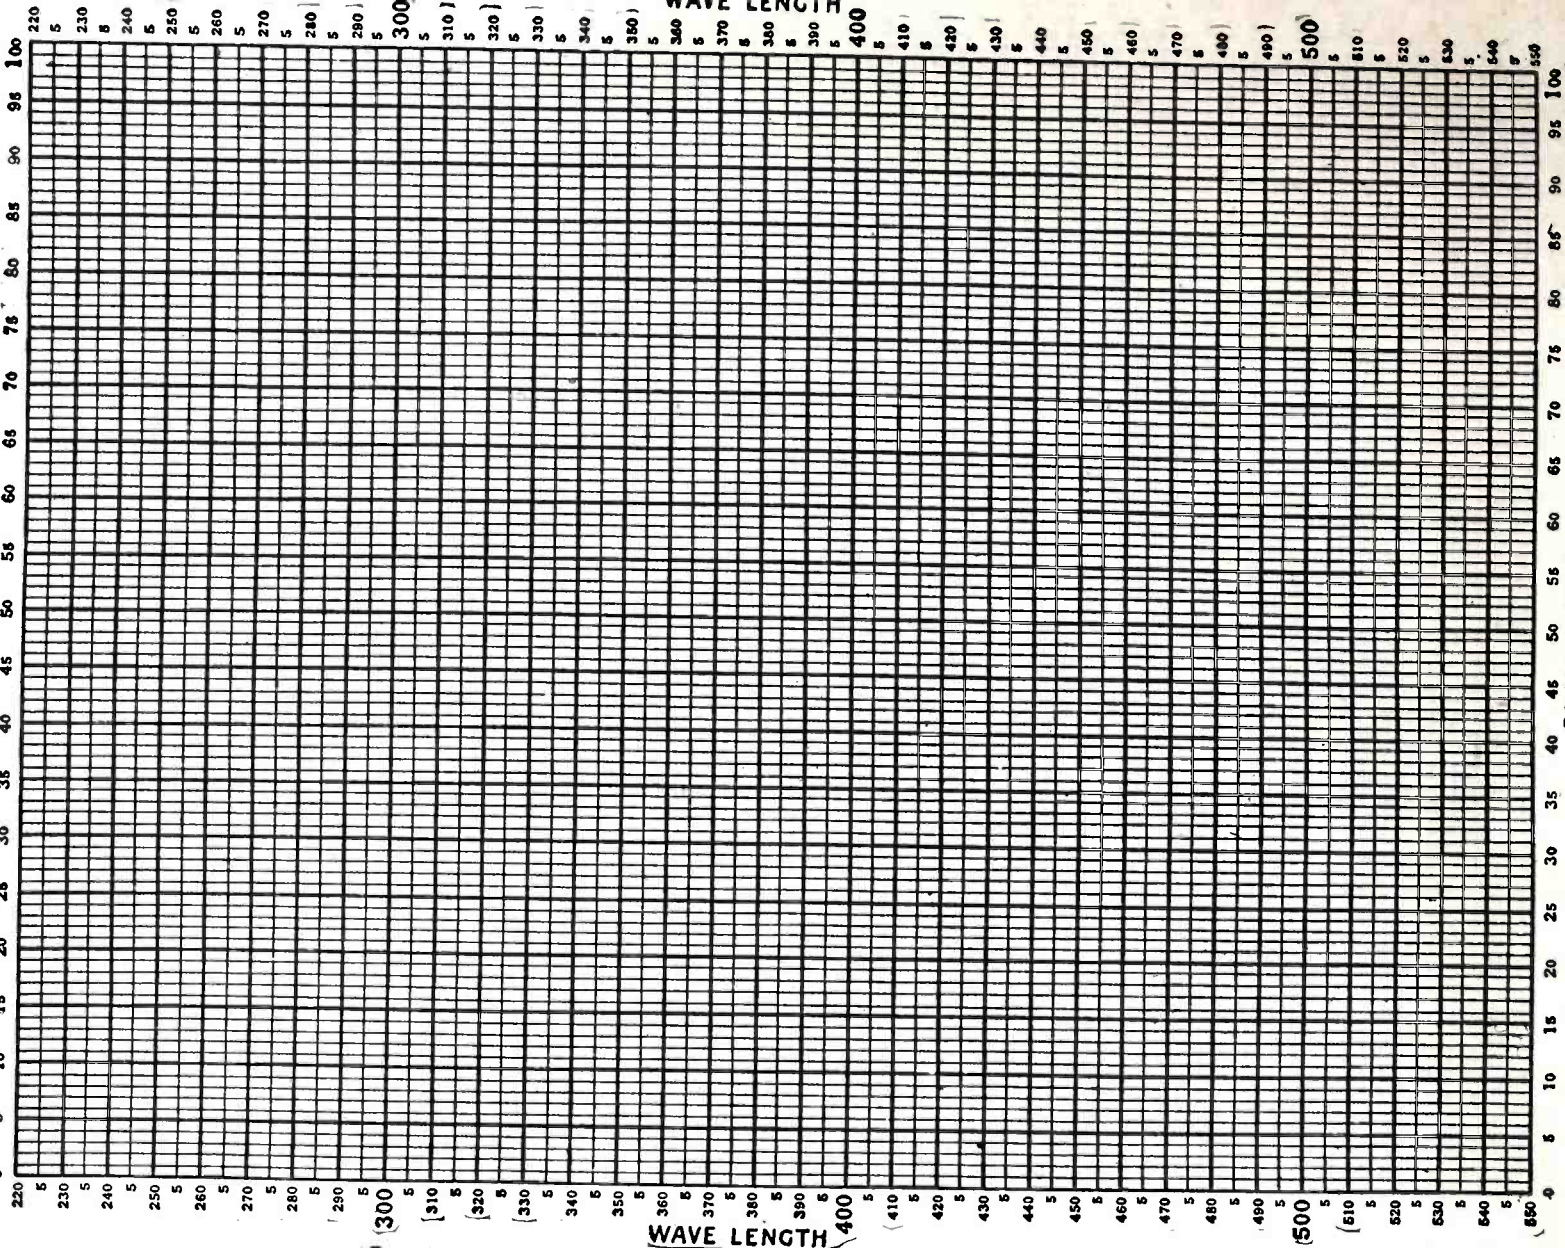

At the end of the time limit each player totals the nine greatest distances recorded, and at the first opportunity the scores are compared. It will be seen that many variations are possible and a great fund of amusement can be derived from this source.

RADIO BROADCAST STATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

Indexed alphabetically by Call Letters

The following list of stations has been so arranged that it can be readily referred to in finding the location, name, power, wave length, frequency and time of a station, providing the call letters are known. The list also serves another purpose and that is for logging the stations received. On the blank side of the page, alongside of a station which has been received on your set, the date, time, dial settings and general remarks of reception can be written directly on the page.

TIME IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD

WEATHER AND HYDROGRAPHIC REPORTS

UNITED STATES

Naval coast stations in the United States and Alaska will, upon receiving information concerning any danger to navigation (wrecks, light vessel off station, storm warnings, etc.), immediately broadcast such information on 600 and 952 meters, and again thereafter at 8:00 A. M., Noon, 4:00 P. M. and 8 P. M. (Local Standard time.)

At noon and 10:00 P. M. (75th meridian time) Arlington, (NAA) immediately after time signals, will broadcast the same information on 2650 meters and Key West (NAR) on 1500 meters. For complete list of stations sending weather reports see next page. In addition to the above information the Weather Bulletin is broadcasted at 10:00 P. M., which, in addition to the actual weather conditions along the coast at important points, contains weather forecasts for the North Atlantic, Middle Atlantic, South Atlantic, and Gulf Coasts.

Weather Bulletins commence "USWB" for United States Weather Bureau, and then the weather conditions are given by a number of groups of five figures, preceded by one or two letters which are used to indicate the point from which the weather conditions are reported. (See attached list of abbreviations.) The first three figures of each group represent the barometric pressure in inches (002=30.02), reduced to sea level, the next figure is the direction of the wind, where "1" indicates "N" wind, "2" indicates "NE," "3" "E," "4" "SE," "5" "S," "6" "SW," "7" "W," "8" indicates "NW," etc. and "0" "calm." The fifth figure is the force of the wind, using Beaufort scale. Where force is above "9" it is spelled out.

If the weather conditions from any station can not be supplied, the initial of the station will be given, followed by the word "missing," and if any portion of a report can not be furnished such portion will be replaced by an equivalent number or the letter "x."

5—Fresh breeze	20	17.3	12—Hurricane	90 and over	78.1 and over
6—Strong breeze	25	21.7

Reports of the same character are also sent by Great Lakes (NAJ) on 1500 meters, at noon and 10:00 P. M. (75th meridian time), and by North Head Wash., San Francisco, Cal., and San Diego, Cal., at noon and 10:00 P. M. (120th meridian time), immediately after time signals. The Pacific Coast stations broadcast the information first on their working wave; next on 952 meters, and then on 600 meters. Reports are preceded by "USWBSF," the "SF" standing for San Francisco. At Great Lakes, storm warnings are sent out as soon as received and broadcasted every four hours next day.

All Pacific Coast stations also broadcast their weather reports at 8:00 A. M., Noon, 4:00 P. M. and 10:00 P. M. Cape Blanco broadcasts. North Head and Eureka weather after local report. At 8:00 A. M. and 8:00 P. M. Eureka broadcasts the 6:00 A. M. and 6:00 P. M. weather conditions at Farallones; Farallones broadcasts the 6:00 A. M. and 6:00 P. M. weather conditions at Eureka, and 7:00 A. M. and 7:00 P. M. conditions at Pt. Arguello, while, at the same time, Pt. Arguello broadcasts the 7:00 A. M. and 7:00 P. M. weather conditions at the Farallones.

Arlington—Time Signal—2500 Meters

Note. The Arlington Station sends time signals on a wave length of 2500 meters commencing at 11:55 A. M. and 9:55 P. M. every day. Final signals at 12 Noon and 10 P. M. are for the meridian of 75 degrees west of Greenwich. Every tick of the standard clock of the Naval Observatory, Washington, is transmitted as a dot, omitting the 29th second of each minute, the last five seconds of each of the first four minutes and finally the last ten seconds of the last minute. The 12 Noon and 10 P. M. signal is dash.

TRANSMISSION OF TIME SIGNALS BY NAVAL RADIO STATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

The transmission of time signals to vessels at sea by means of radiotelegraphy was first accomplished in the United States in 1905, and this service, enlarged and extended, has continued to the present time. This service is of the greatest value to mariners, as it furnishes a means by which the time, as given by the transmitted signals, may be compared with a ship's chronometer and the error of the chronometer found. Similar comparisons over a number of days enable data to be obtained by which not only the error may be found but also the chronometer rate, that is, the rate at which it is gaining or losing.

The noontime signals on the Atlantic coast are sent out through the coast radio stations by connection with Western Union telegraph lines from the United States Naval Observatory at Washington, D. C. By the operation of proper relays in electrical circuits, the beats of the seconds of a standard clock in the observatory are sent out broadcast as a series of radio dots, commencing five minutes before the time of the final signal. By omitting certain dots in a series, the comparison between the dots and the beats of the chronometer seconds can be checked until the instant of local noon (seventy-fifth meridian time) is reached. This is marked by a longer dot, which gives the time of exact noon. A comparison with the chronometer time at that instant gives its error referred to the seventy-fifth meridian time. Applying the difference in longitude, namely, five hours, between the seventy-fifth meridian and Greenwich, which is the standard meridian (or 00 longitude), the error of the chronometer referred to Greenwich time is determined.

Table For Making Time Transitions

Eastern Standard Time	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11	12
Central Standard Time	12	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10	11
Mountain Standard Time	11	12	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	10
Pacific Standard Time	10	11	12	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

HOW TO USE THE TIME TRANSITION TABLE

If a station is giving a program at 8 o'clock Mountain time and you wish to find what this is equivalent to in Central time, find 8 o'clock in the third or Mountain time row. Then immediately above it in the same vertical column will be found the figure 9 in the Central time row. This indicates that the program would be heard at 9 o'clock Central time.

AMERICAN RADIO RELAY LEAGUE

This organization was formed in 1910 by Mr. H. P. Maxim, the inventor, and is purely an "amateur" organization in that it exists for the benefit of the art and is not in any way a profit-making organization. The primary purpose of the League is the relaying of messages to all parts of the country. To accomplish this end a traffic department is in existence by which the United States and Canada are divided into a number of divisions as shown, each having a Division Manager in charge. Each state is under the jurisdiction of an Assistant Division Manager who has in turn District Superintendents under him in such number as the population and size of the state warrants. Cities of 25,000 or more have City Managers and smaller cities have official relay stations. By means of this organization it is possible to transmit messages throughout the country without any charge to the sender.
