The sweet onions are coming!

Georgia Agriculture Commissioner sets official Vidalia pack date

ATLANTA – Mark your calendars, Vidalia® onion lovers, because America's favorite sweet onion is set to ship next month. The Georgia Department of Agriculture and the Vidalia Onion Committee announced April 12th as the official pack date for the 2022 Vidalia onion season.

"Each year I, along with the Vidalia Onion Committee, look forward to sharing when Vidalia onions will be on their way to stores, so I'm pleased to announce April 12th as the official pack date this season," said Georgia Agriculture Commissioner Gary W. Black. "Cultivated for more than 80 years, Vidalia onions mean a great deal to the state of Georgia, earning a renowned reputation for their sweet distinct flavor and versatility beloved by chefs and home cooks alike."

Only available for a limited time each year, Vidalia onions hitting grocery store shelves often signals spring has sprung for fans near and far from the onions' home state of Georgia. The pack date is determined by growing season soil and weather conditions to ensure the highest quality Vidalia onions. The Vidalia Onion Advisory Panel unanimously voted April 12th as the 2022 pack date.

The pack date rings in the start of the Vidalia onion season, where shoppers can get their hands on the famous seasonal treat between April and August. Known for their sweet, mild flavor, these onions compliment any dish – from soups to salads and even desserts.

"In the 2022 season, approximately 10,000 acres of Vidalia onions were planted by 60 registered farmers across 20 southeastern Georgia counties," said Vidalia Onion Committee Chairman Cliff Riner. "Representing about 40 percent of the sweet onion market across America, Vidalia onions are sold in all 50 states and most of Canada."

Discovered by accident in the 1930s during the Great Depression, Vidalia onions have grown to be a favorite across America. The Vidalia Onion Act of 1986 trademarked the name "Vidalia onions" and defined the growing region in South Georgia. Vidalia onions are grown from a distinctive Granex seed, then packed and sold on or after the official pack date annually.

More information about Vidalia onions can be found at vidaliaonion.org, and updates on this season's news will be shared on Vidalia Onion Committee's Facebook, Twitter, Instagram, Pinterest and YouTube accounts.

About the Vidalia® Onion Committee

Because Vidalia® onions are sweetly unique, farmers united to seek legal protection for their crop and its name. Federal Marketing Order No. 955 was established in 1989, to stipulate where the crop can be grown and help with research and promotion of Vidalia onions. The Vidalia Onion Committee administers FMO No. 955 and authorizes production research, marketing research and development and marketing promotion programs. This federal program along with Georgia state laws that protect the Vidalia trademark have provided a legal framework for the industry. So, you can try to grow a sweet onion elsewhere, but you cannot call it a "Vidalia," unless it is from Georgia! For more information, visit VidaliaOnion.org.

Protect backyard flocks from avian influenza

By Carly Alyse Mirabile
University of Georgia
College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences

Biosecurity is the practice of minimizing the spread of disease into a flock of birds or, in the event of disease occurrence, preventing the spread of disease-causing organisms off the premises.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, new outbreaks of avian influenza (flu) have been detected in U.S. aquatic birds, commercial poultry and backyard flocks since January. Although avian influenza is not a threat to human health or food safety in Georgia, avian flu presents a risk to all poultry operations, from hobbyist flocks to the state's $22.8 billion commercial industry.

The key to preventing the spread of the disease is biosecurity.

Often heard but frequently misunderstood, biosecurity refers to a set of practices that all poultry owners should know and implement to protect their poultry flocks from disease.

Birds that are raised under pastured or free-range management systems need added attention due to birds' increased exposure to environmental disease sources. Symptoms of avian flu can be found at preventai.uga.edu and agr.georgia.gov/avian-influenza.aspx.

What is biosecurity?

Biosecurity is the practice of minimizing the spread of disease into a flock of birds or, in the event of disease occurrence, preventing the spread of disease-causing organisms off the premises. This is accomplished through practical, common-sense prevention measures.

Common routes of infection

- Exposure to diseased birds, either wild or from purchased stocks of questionable origin.
- Introduction of healthy birds who have recovered from disease but are now patho-

Of all the possible breakdowns in biosecurity, the introduction of new birds into an existing flock and contaminated foot traffic pose the greatest risks to bird health. Properly managing these two factors should be a top priority for poultry owners. (UGA CAES Photo) gen carriers.

- Shoes and clothing of visitors or caretakers who have been in contact with other birds.
- Use of borrowed equipment that is contaminated with disease organisms.
- Rodents, insects and free-flying birds gaining access to feed sources.

Know the warning signs of avian flu

Early detection is important to prevent the spread of disease. Look for the following:

- Changes in eating, drinking, behavioral habits, and for signs and sounds of respiratory distress.

- Sudden increase in bird deaths.
- Sneezing, coughing and nasal discharge.
- Lack of energy and poor appetite.
- A drop in egg production or an increase in soft- or thin-shelled eggs.
- Swelling around the eyes, neck and head.
- Purple discoloration of the wattles, combs and legs.
- Tremors, drooping wings or twisting of the head and neck.

Good To Grow: Conifers add low-maintenance, year-round beauty to the landscape

By Jay Jones
jay.jones@agr.georgia.gov

Conifers, commonly known as evergreen trees and shrubs, are ancient and new at the same time. Hardy and adaptable to different environments, conifers have been around for millions of years. Their low maintenance needs and appearance make them favorites for landscaping and gardens.

Conifers are all around us in Georgia, from the mountains of the north to the swamps of the south. In between, there are junipers, hemlocks, cypresses, yews and cedars growing across the state. They are also unique from other plants in that they have male and female strobili instead of wind-pollinated flowers, according to Tom Cox, owner of Cox Arboretum in Canton.

Cox explained that most conifers bore their seeds from cones and described them as being born naked. “You think of a pear or an apple, that seed is enclosed in something, but with a conifer, a pine, you get a cone,” he said. “The cone opens up, the seed is inside, but it’s not enclosed in anything. It’s naked.” Junipers and other low-laying bushes are the exceptions in that their seeds, technically a cone, have the appearance of berries.

Cox started his arboretum in 1990 after retiring from the U.S. Army. He became an expert on conifers from the fascination he found in their beauty and resilience. He noted that conifers grow on every continent except Antarctica. The earliest conifers dated in fossil records go back to 300 million years ago. They were the dominant trees spe-

The evergreen miniature white pines, “Shaggy Dog,” left, and “Ground Hugger” were created using cuttings from witches’ broom, a mutated part of the tree that forms a mass of dense, deformed twigs and foliage. Horticulturists graft the witches’ broom to another conifer to create new varieties of evergreens. (Jay Jones/GDA) cies on earth until modern hardwoods appeared.

Cox explained the conifers’ hardiness is reflected by the fact the oldest tree in the world today is a conifer – the 5,000-year-old Great Basin Bristlecone pine in the White Mountains of California and Nevada.

Another conifer, the dawn redwood in China, was thought to have been extinct for millions of years until one was found in a remote, mountainous part of China in 1944. Today, dawn redwoods are favorite trees in parks in the United States and across the northern hemisphere.

John Ruter, a professor with the University of Georgia Department of Horticulture, who has researched ornamental plant breeding for many years, said conifers are usually happier in northern Georgia with lower temperatures and higher precipitation. However, other conifers have been developed to adapt well to warmer weather and occasional drought conditions in central and south Georgia.

Speaking recently to the Georgia Master Gardeners’ Thoughtful Thursdays monthly online discussion series, Ruter said conifers can survive in warmer and drier areas with supplemental watering depending on weather conditions. He added extreme changes in the weather from drought to heavy rainfall can impact the plant or tree and may cause root rot.

Cox advised that planting coniferous trees and shrubs on a slope is best for good water drainage. Other than that, Cox said conifers are low maintenance plants. Local retail nurseries will offer suitable plants for the area, and there are more choices from suppliers online.

The new varieties are created by grafting cuttings from different trees. Cox explained that a unique feature of conifer trees called “witches’ broom” is prized by horticulturists. Witches’ broom is a mutated part of the tree that forms a mass of dense, deformed twigs and foliage. Horticulturists graft the witches’ broom to another conifer, which retains the genetics to keep their tight, low shape while providing different shades of blues, purples, oranges, greens and grays, and the characteristics of the other plant.

Cox said the possibilities are endless for finding a variety that works in any landscape or garden from the witches’ broom cuttings.

“You can produce a garden-worthy plant that a homeowner would go crazy over,” Cox said. “They’re small, they fit the modern landscape, and it’s not some 80-foot pine that’s going to blow over, and it gives you year-round color. It is impossible to find those colors and textures from any other group of plants.”

Cox has several new varieties, including the white pines “Shaggy Dog” and “Ground Hugger” on display at his arboretum. Another popular witches’ broom variety is the Biltmore Blue dwarf pine, which was created from a witches’ broom cut from a common white pine to a Mexican White pine.

Conifers also have a significant impact in Georgia beyond the front yard. Georgia leads the nation in lumber production, with half of the trees harvested being loblolly and slash pine. According to the Georgia Forestry Commission, the state is also a leader in pine straw and pulpwood production.

According to the UGA Center for Agribusiness and Development, Christmas trees are another significant conifer crop in Georgia that contributed $5 million to the state’s economy.

Cox and Ruter co-wrote Landscaping with Conifers and Ginkgo for the Southeast, covering plantings, care, pest and disease prevention. The book is available at several online book retailers.

The Cox Arboretum is open to visitors by appointment only. To learn more, or to set an appointment, go to <https://coxgardens.com/>

The University of Georgia Extension Service offers gardening tips and guidance online through its library of circulars and bulletins. Two of the best resources for evergreen trees and shrubs are Native Plants for Georgia Part I: Trees, Shrubs and Woody Vines, Bulletin 987, and Soil Preparation and Planting Procedures for Ornamental Plants in the Landscape, Bulletin 932. Both can be found at <https://extension.uga.edu/publications.html>

Warmer, drier conditions are forecast for the upcoming growing season Drought is possible in summer, according to prediction

By Pam Knox
University of Georgia

On Feb. 17, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Climate Prediction Center released its latest three-month climate outlook for the United States. What does this mean for conditions in the Southeast in the coming growing season?

The Climate Prediction Center outlook shows a continuation of the current La Niña pattern of warmer and drier conditions across the Southeast that has occurred over most of the winter. La Niña is related to unusually cold water in the Eastern Pacific Ocean and often pushes the jet stream that steers low-pressure areas across the region to the north, leaving the Southeast in warm and sunny conditions.

Despite the La Niña, however, there have been occasional storms that have brought cold and wet conditions to the region in January and February, causing frost damage to blueberries, vegetables, and other early crops.

Frost could occur again this year since most parts of Georgia and the Southeast (except for Florida) have not yet passed their average date of last frost.

The La Niña is expected to transition back to neutral conditions by mid-to-late spring. The outlook shows that the entire Southeast has a better than usual chance of above-normal temperatures for the March through May period as the La Niña weakens.

The upward trend in temperature over time is also contributing to the likely warmer conditions. There is a slightly increased chance of dry conditions in southern Georgia and into Florida, especially in March.

Severe weather is also more likely in a La Niña spring due to the presence of warm air flowing into the region from the Gulf of Mexico. La Niña and neutral conditions are also associated with more active Atlantic hurricane season from June through November, but the paths of the storms cannot be predicted this far ahead.

Areas near and to the east of the paths of this coming year’s storms could see a lot of rain, as occurred last year. However, if the storms track west into Texas or up the East Coast instead, the Southeast could see drought conditions return to the region next summer. This is especially true if the current moderate drought and abnormally dry conditions in the Georgia coastal plain continue into the growing season.

FORESTRY MATTERS: Georgia's fire use/wildfire risk on the rise

By Stasia Kelly
Georgia Forestry Commission

It's that time of year when many Georgia landowners and managers turn to "good fire" for the numerous benefits it provides. Whether it's preparing lands for agriculture crops, removing accumulations of natural vegetation, increasing forage for livestock and improving habitat for wildlife, or just "opening up the woods" for aesthetics, prescribed fire is the tool that does it all.

While burn permits are no longer needed for the backyard leaf pile, they are required for prescribed burning. Certified burners now have a more efficient way to receive their permits through GFC online, up to 24 hours in advance, after an account has been created: <https://gatrees.org/fire-prevention-suppression/certified-burners-early-permit-system/>.

No matter what the purpose, anyone who strikes a match outdoors must be keenly aware of local weather conditions, because this is also the time of year when conditions can change rapidly.

Wildfire activity has increased across the state and the short and long-term predictions for Georgia call for mounting wildfire potential over the next three months. Grasses, forest shrubs, fallen leaves/needles, and limbs from hardwood trees and pines are dry and have been cured out by frost and freezes. When high, gusty winds, low relative humidity, and infrequent rainfall combine, the risk of wildfire goes up. Many times, what starts as an intended "good" fire turns into an unwanted fire that may become uncontrollable, cause damage to property, and put burners and others at risk for injury. Other than lightning or naturally occurring fires, all other wildfires are caused by humans.

How can you stay safe? Your main defense is knowledge. These days, there's no excuse for not knowing the weather forecast. A variety of tools are available through a number of sources, including local and national media outlets and the Georgia Forestry Commission's fire weather system: <http://weather.gfc.state.ga.us>.

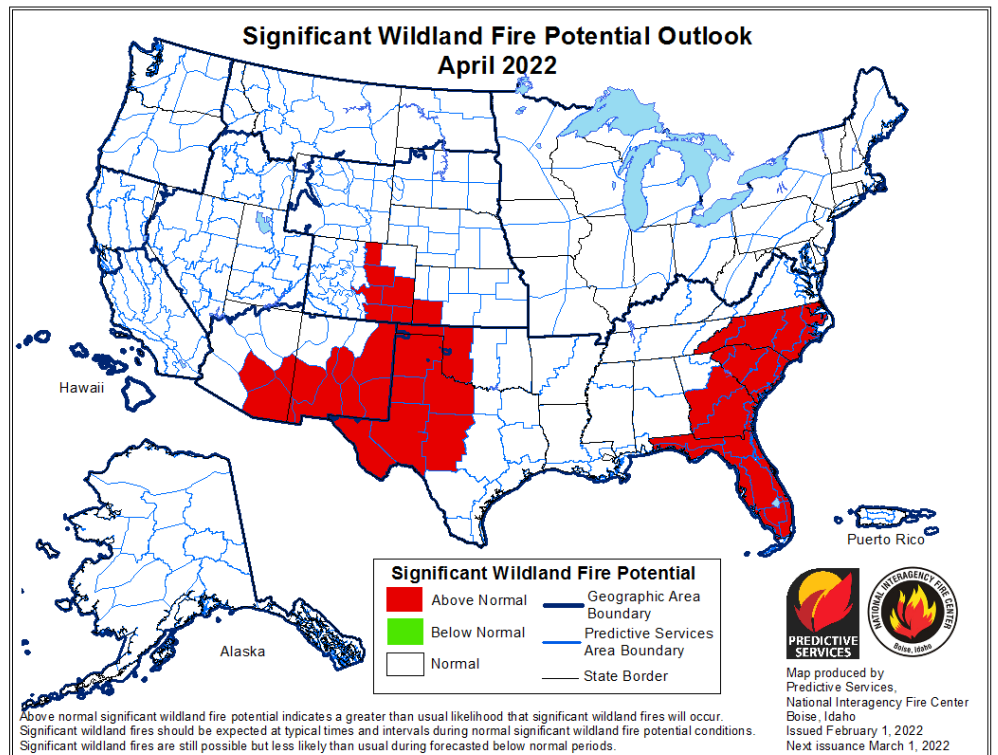

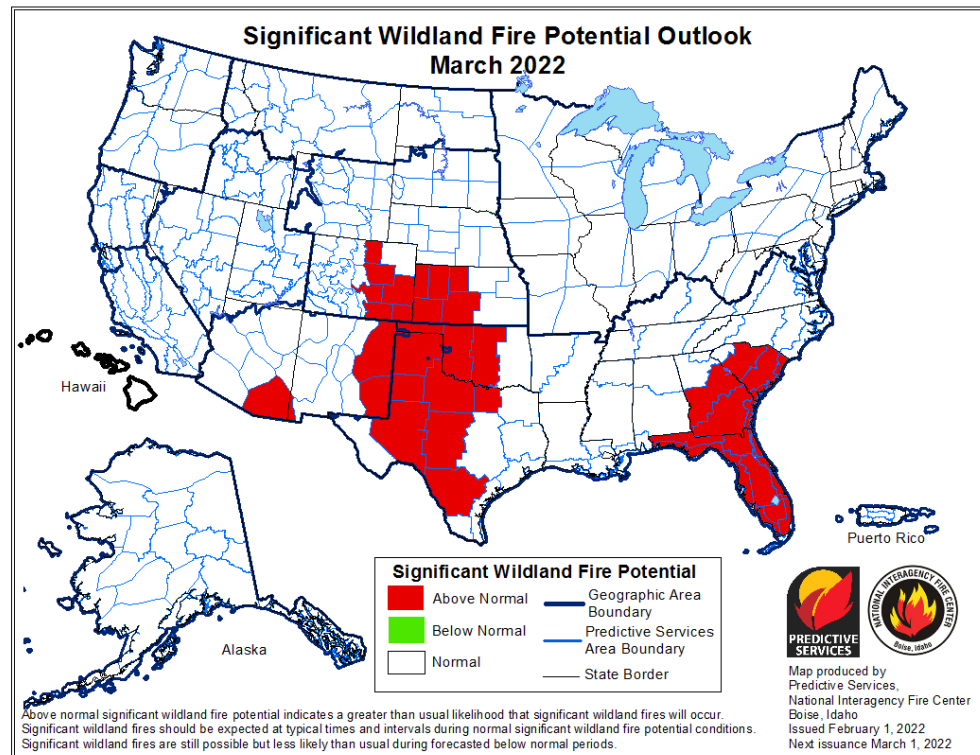

Please take time to consider how you can take ownership to prepare yourself and your home and property from wildfire. Actively evaluate your surroundings and take necessary actions, with a mindset of what property would survive and what could be destroyed, should a wildfire occur.

Someone once said, "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and that's proven nowhere better than in the case of fire. We've all seen too many news stories about the human suffering caused by dead fire detectors, flammable materials piled too close to a house, and burning embers swept from a backyard leaf pile. Each of us can take some action now to make our surroundings safer in the case of fire.

The National Fire Protection Association's Firewise Program is an excellent resource for information about guarding against fire hazards. Being "Firewise" means understanding and applying basic practices on your property, which will increase survivability. Find out more here: <https://gatrees.org/fire-prevention-suppression/firewise-usa-program/>.

With short and long-term fire predictions indicating an increase in significant wildfire potential for most of Georgia over the next three months, it's imperative that landowners and homeowners take note now. Plan ahead, take actions that will prevent wildfire, and protect property from damage. That "ounce of prevention" truly could make the difference of a lifetime.

GEORGIA COOKING: Strawberry cornmeal shortcakes

Georgia Grown cornmeal and Richland Rum's Almost Rum syrup make for a unique twist on this classic dessert. Try blending a local goat cheese or Sweetgrass Dairy's fresh, spreadable "Lil Moo" cheese into your whipped cream for a luxurious topping that is at once tangy, creamy and slightly savory.

CORNMEAL SHORTCAKES

Ingredients

- ½ cup self-rising cornmeal
- 1 ½ cup self-rising flour
- ¼ cup sugar
- 2 Tbsp butter
- ¼ cup shortening
- ¼ cup sour cream or yogurt
- ½ cup buttermilk
- Zest and juice from one lemon

Directions

Preheat oven to 450 degrees.

Whisk cornmeal, flour, and sugar in a large bowl. Make a well in the center of the bowl, and place butter, shortening and sour cream in the middle. Blend only these ingredients into a paste with your fingers. Add buttermilk, lemon juice and zest and combine with butter mixture. Work flour gradually into liquid mixture until a sticky dough is formed. Turn out onto floured surface, sprinkle a little flour on top of the dough, and knead a few times until dough is smooth and no longer sticky.

With a rolling pin or with your hands, press or roll dough out to 1 inch thickness. Cut out 8-12 shortcakes with a 2-3 inch biscuit cutter, gathering up and re-rolling excess dough as necessary. Bake for 10-14 minutes on ungreased baking sheet until golden.

RUM-SOAKED STRAWBERRIES

(to top 8-12 shortcakes)

Ingredients

- 1 cup trimmed, halved and sliced strawberries
- 2 tsp sugar
- 2 Tsp lemon juice
- 1 tsp lemon zest
- 1 Tbsp + 1 tsp rum (optional)

Directions

Combine all ingredients, cover and let sit for at least 30 minutes until strawberries release their juices. Refrigerate until ready to use.

"LIL MOO" OR GOAT CHEESE WHIPPED CREAM

Ingredients

- 4 oz softened fresh cow's milk cheese such as Sweetgrass Dairy "Lil Moo" or goat cheese
- 1 cup heavy whipping cream
- 1 tsp vanilla
- ¼ cup sugar

Directions

Whip cream on highest setting until cream

Georgia Grown in Season

- Cabbage
- Carrots
- Citrus
- Collards
- Kale & other greens
- Lettuce
- Mushrooms
- Spinach

- Strawberries
- Turnips

can hold soft peaks. Add cheese, scrape bowl while incorporating cheese, add vanilla and sugar and continue to whip until stiff peaks are formed. Refrigerate until ready to use.

To assemble shortcakes:

- 1 recipe cornmeal shortcakes
- 1 recipe rum-soaked strawberries
- 1 Tbsp Richland Rum "Almost Rum" syrup per serving, or light molasses (avoid blackstrap)
- 1 sprig of mint, or 1 tsp of chiffonade mint leaves per serving

Cut each shortcake in half. Drizzle Almost Rum syrup or molasses on bottom half. Top with strawberries, cream, and a sprig of mint.

Georgie's Drive Thru Stuckey's

Hello! I'm Georgie, the Georgia Grown mascot. I travel thru Georgia promoting the Peach State's No. 1 industry, agriculture! This week I'd like to offer you an ode to a Southern landmark born right here in Georgia:

Once upon a time, above the city of Rhine, there lived an enterprising young man.

He had a thought, so pecans he bought, and sold them at a roadside stand.

He moved to Eastman to build on his dream, to sell snacks made from pecans,

He worked night and day, out of his car with help from his friend named John.

Through the Depression and World War II, he built an empire of stores.

Along the roads, you couldn't resist, his endless lineup of billboards.

From vacation spots back to their homes, the stores sat on the northern route.

Selling candy, drinks, food, and maps, and clean restrooms to boot!

Black walnut divinity, fudge, pralines, and the famous pecan log rolls,

Filled the shelves and filled the back seats of travelers' Buicks and Olds.

He stretched his empire from sea to sea, from Florida to Gettysburg.

Mile after mile, the signs counted down, the distance to just one word:

Stuckey's.

Stuckey's was a mandatory stop on every family vacation or road trip in the mid-20th century. (Lee Lancaster/GDA)

AVIAN INFLUENZA: Vigilance is warranted for backyard poultry keepers, commercial growers

Disease prevention practices

Because of the destructive potential that a contagious poultry disease could have on the commercial industry and small flocks alike, poultry owners are encouraged to adopt the following:

- Prevent wild birds, particularly waterfowl, from mingling with the flock. This may require penning poultry during times of heightened concern for the spread of avian influenza.
- Avoid contact with other birds and flocks, particularly birds with questionable origin, such as auctions and live bird markets.
- Purchase new stock from reputable dealers, preferably those that participate in the National Poultry Improvement Plan. New birds represent a greater risk to biosecurity because their disease status is often unknown. These birds may have an infection or become susceptible to an infection that is already present in birds that appear healthy in the existing flock.
- Quarantine all new birds away from the existing flock for at least three weeks. This will help identify birds recently exposed to disease, although it will not identify those that have previously been sick and have recovered and continue to shed pathogens. Sick birds that survive such viral disease become carriers of the virus and can infect unexposed birds.

- Wear dedicated footwear that can be sanitized after every visit when attending to birds. Disinfectant footbaths may help to decrease the dose of organisms on footwear that can be tracked into poultry enclosures.
- Do not share equipment, tools or poultry supplies with neighbors or other bird owners. If you do bring these items home, clean and disinfect them before they reach your birds.
- If your birds are sick or dying, call your local University of Georgia Cooperative Extension office or the Georgia Poultry Laboratory Network located in Gainesville. Experts in these offices can use a disease diagnostic questionnaire to help identify the severity and level of concern over the symptoms your birds are experiencing.

During this time of heightened concern over the threat of avian influenza, vigilance is warranted for backyard poultry keepers and commercial growers alike. To report a case or ask questions, contact the avian influenza hotline at the Georgia Department of Agriculture by calling 770-766-6850.

For more on avian influenza, visit preventai.uga.edu and agr.georgia.gov/avian-influenza.aspx.

As of Feb. 16, all poultry exhibitions, shows, sales, swaps, and meets in the State of Georgia are suspended until further notice. Highly Pathogenic Avian Influenza (HPAI) has been identified in commercial poultry operations and backyard flocks in several states. There have been NO cases of avian influenza (AI) identified in commercial or domestic poultry in the State of Georgia. The Georgia Department of Agriculture is monitoring the development of this situation closely. If you suspect your birds have avian influenza, call the AI Hotline at 770.766.6850. Testing is free through the gapoultrylab.org/avian-influenza-hotline/. For more information regarding Avian Influenza, visit agr.georgia.gov/avian-influenza.aspx.

Georgia Cattlemen's Association celebrates 60th anniversary

New book chronicles the history of state's beef producers

By Jay Jones

jay.jones@agr.georgia.gov

The Georgia Cattlemen's Association is celebrating its 60th year serving the state's beef producers with the release this month of the book Herds & Heritage – The History of Georgia's Cattle Industry.

GCA members marked their work in advocacy, education and promotion of an industry that touches every corner of Georgia during their annual convention Feb. 16-18 in Savannah. The highlight was the unveiling of Herds & Heritage, a project that began in 2019 to document the GCA's history and the state's 250-year history with cattle and the impact of the cattle industry today.

Coweta County cattleman John Callaway helped organize writing and publishing the book. The idea came from Callaway collecting state-specific cattle history books when he served as GCA president. "I saw one from Virginia, then a really good one from North Carolina, and I thought we needed to have one for Georgia," he said.

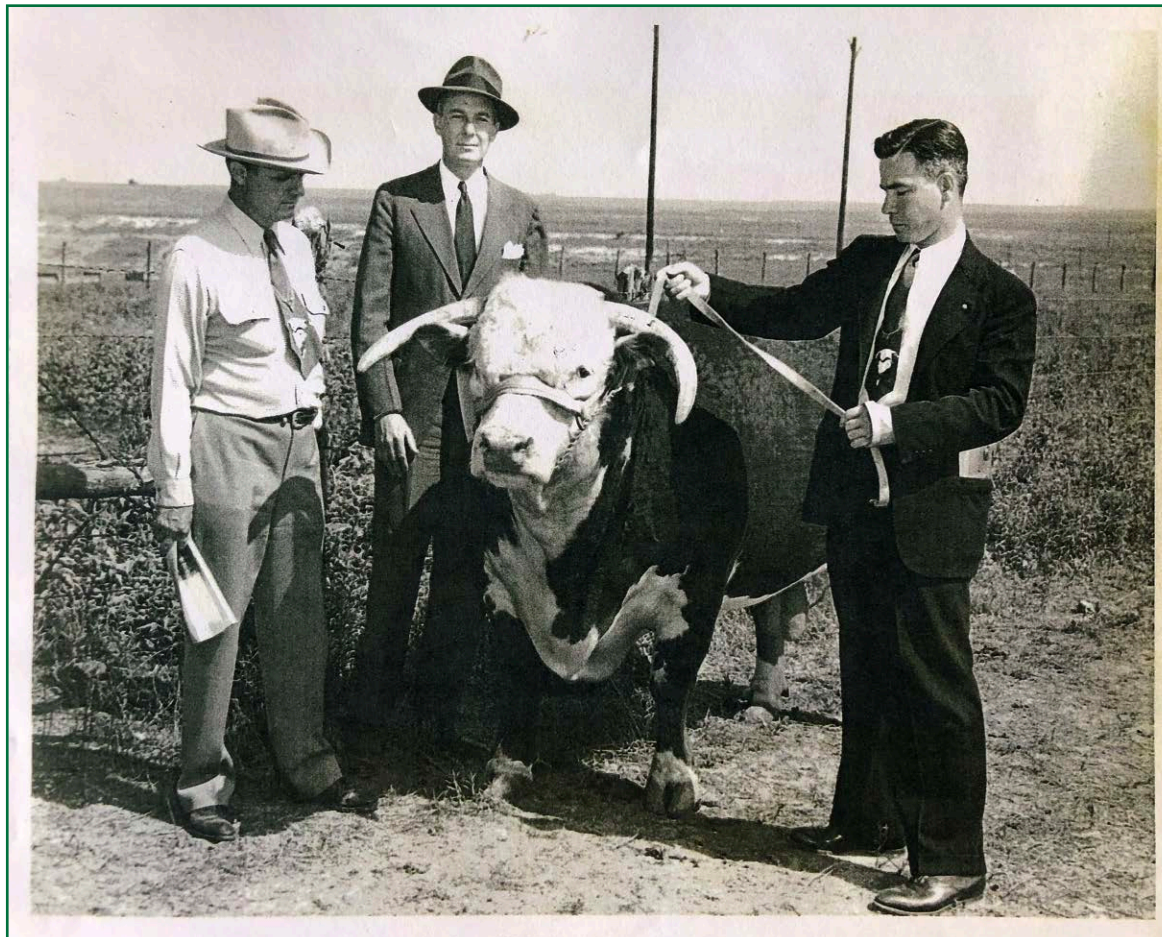

The book is a link from the past to the future. All proceeds from book sales will support college scholarship programs of the Georgia Cattlemen's Foundation.

Callaway said working on the book gave him and others at the foundation insight that raising cattle is very familiar to Georgians and has a rich history here. Cattle is the only commodity produced in every county in Georgia and includes producers of all sizes.

"The average cow herd in the state is like 25-30 head of breed cows, so the association doesn't just represent the large cattle owners. It represents everyone big and small," Callaway said.

LaGrange author Jackie Kennedy culled information collected from over 150 interviews in writing the book. Callaway said the papers and photos from William "Tap" Bennett and Johnny Jenkins were also a significant benefit to the book. Bennett played a prominent role in shipping purebred bulls from the west to Georgia in the 1930s and 1940s. Jenkins was editor of the Livestock Breeder Journal published out of Macon. Former GCA staff member Paul Wall had saved those documents. The book project was the perfect place for them.

"Thank goodness none of that got trashed when those gentlemen passed away," Callaway said. "Paul said, 'I'm giving it to y'all. They've been in my basement since both of them passed away, and we need to do something with them.' So, we met on Saturday at the GCA building in Macon and had the best time going through all that stuff."

The Georgia Cattlemen's Association released the history book Herds & Heritage – The History of Georgia's Cattle Industry, this month to recognize the group's 60th anniversary. The book documents efforts to promote beef over the years including this photo from 1984 of UGA football coach Vince Dooley, seated at center, displaying a dish of choice beef, during June Beef Month that year. From left front: Don Griffeth, Dooley and Mike Darnell. Back: Harris Brantley, Harvey Lemmon and Curly Cook. (Photo courtesy of GCA)

Callaway also noted that the cattle industry in Georgia is very much a local industry. County and area cattlemen's association chapters are active in providing resources and social events for their members. Callaway said that much hadn't changed over the years when neighbors helped each other, capable of in the future. The work is so important, and it's something we must do."

and it is a strength of the GCA.

The GCA was founded in 1961, pulling away from the Georgia Live-stock Association that represented pork, cattle and dairy producers. Today, the association has 5,000 members who are part of an agricultural sector responsible for $3 billion in economic impact to the state.

Advocacy is an integral part of the GCA's work at the state level and nationally through the National Cattlemen's Beef Association. Dale Sandlin, GCA executive vice president, said the work at local and state government levels is ongoing to keep up with issues and challenges facing the industry each year.

Most recently, the GCA supported the passage of Georgia Senate Bill 211 last year, which requires clear labeling of nonanimal products used in packaged meats. The law also requires that all packaged food identified as meats include a minimum of 90 percent sourced from animals harvested, covering cattle, swine, sheep, goats, fish, and poultry.

"One of the biggest challenges coming up is the potential for alternative protein sources and knowing they are competing in our marketplace and trying to go after our same book of business, as far as consumers are concerned," Sandlin said. "SB 211 is one of the things GCA has done to try to be proactive in working with our legislators."

Incoming GCA 2022 President Rodney Hilley said he believed the GCA must also build for the future with the ongoing support of scholarship programs and interacting more with animal science programs across Georgia.

"We get a lot of support and a lot of help from the University of Georgia, obviously, but these smaller colleges have animal science programs, and they are capable of giving good input to the cattle industry. I want to tap into that if we can," Hilley said.

Hilley added that learning from the past helps those heading into the future, and the Herds & Heritage book is essential reading for anyone interested in cattle in Georgia. Hilley recalled growing up on the farm and his grandfather introducing him to cattle on his dairy farm. For him, Hilley said raising cattle is a life-long passion.

"I'm 68 now, so it has been quite a while. What the GCA has meant to me is a lot different from somebody joining today because I know what it's done in the past and what it is
