Panetta signs letter urging Trump to admit more refugees

By KELLY NIX

THE 45,000 refugees that the Trump administration has said it would allow into the United States in 2018 is “woefully insufficient,” and the country should resettle more than twice that number, according to a letter signed this week by Congressman Jimmy Panetta and 100 of his colleagues in the House of Representatives.

On Wednesday, Panetta joined dozens of other members of Congress in decrying President Donald Trump’s refugee admissions for next year, urging him to increase the refugees to 110,000 — the number admitted under Obama administration guidelines this year.

“Failing to do our part to alleviate this global crisis undermines our leadership, diplomacy and national security,” the Oct. 18 letter said.

According to Democrats, Trump’s call for 45,000 refugees, which they say is the lowest in the “nation’s history,” is “woefully insufficient when compared to the millions of people who have been forced to flee their home countries.” They pointed to the 85,000 that the Obama administration accepted into the country in 2016.

On Thursday afternoon, Panetta told The Pine Cone why he believes allowing more refugees to resettle into the country would benefit American citizens.

“One, we are living up to the ideals of our country as a nation of immigrants,” he said. “Two, we are also living up to our role as an international player, as an international leader, as a country that people look to for enlightened leadership.”

Local towns included

The freshman congressman referred to the refugees who have settled in Monterey County and other areas of the 20th Congressional District, including three in Carmel.

“Since 2002 to 2016, we had six refugees settled in Santa Cruz County, 13 in Gilroy, 21 in Salinas, 19 in Monterey, three in Carmel, 10 Pacific Grove and six in Seaside,” said Panetta, citing figures from a Jan. 30 article in the Sacramento Bee.

The Bee article, which contains a map where it says refugees have resettled in the United States, also indicates that 18 refugees settled in Marina and four in Sand City.

When asked whether he believed resettling refugees from war-torn Syria would be more feasible than creating “safe zones” for people who have been displaced by violence,

Big Sur parties as long isolation ends

By CHRIS COUNTS

AFTER EIGHT months of being stranded on “Big Sur Island” — where simply buying groceries or doing the laundry meant making a difficult hike — residents who live south of the Pfeiffer Creek Bridge literally danced in the street when a throng of dignitaries arrived Oct. 13 to herald the reopening of Highway 1.

More than 100 people — including residents, business owners, community leaders, elected officials from as far away as Washington D.C., and even a local bluegrass ensemble — met at the site of the new Pfeiffer Creek Bridge in Big Sur for a ribbon-cutting ceremony.

Later the same day, motorists were able to drive from Carmel to Nepenthe restaurant and other popular tourist destinations in less than an hour for the first time since February, when cracks were discovered in the Pfeiffer Creek Bridge and the arduous process to replace it began.

The mood at the ceremony was festive, and the weather was perfect. The speakers included State Sen. Bill Monning, who thanked Caltrans and the project’s contractor, Golden State Construction Company, for their efforts. He also paid tribute to the Big Sur community, which has long endured despite the never-ending threat of fire, mudslides and road troubles. “Despite very different opin-

Cocoa bar runs into thicket of restaurant rules

By MARY SCHLEY

DOES THE size of your counter define the type of restaurant you have? Should photos of food be considered signs subject to regulation, or are they protected by the First Amendment?

The city council delved into those issues Oct. 3 after Mayor Steve Dallas and council members Carolyn Hardy and Jan Reimers challenged the planning commission’s 3-2 vote in July to allow the couple who own the Carmel Coffee and Cocoa Bar to run it as a regular restaurant, with table service, but keep the long counter, as well as menu boards and photos of their dishes on the walls.

After an hour-long discussion, the council (minus Reimers, who had to step down because she owns property within 500 feet) didn’t take away Mira and Mathew Porgess’ ability to run the former coffee shop as a sit-down restaurant, but they told the couple they need to remodel the interior to make it look more like one.

LOCALS OFFER AID AFTER DEVASTATION IN WINE COUNTRY; SMALL FIRES HIT MoCo

By MICHAEL TROUTMAN, MARY SCHLEY and CHRIS COUNTS

THE HORRIFIC wildfires in and around the wine country of Napa and Sonoma counties — which have taken at least 42 lives and damaged or destroyed thousands of homes and at least 22 wineries — are now approaching containment, and evacuation orders are being lifted in some areas. The impacts of these incidents will, of course, be felt for decades to come, but the efforts of people from the Monterey area are already making things a little better. On Tuesday, Jack and Dawn Galante led a convoy of three SUVs that delivered food, relief supplies and money to Santa Rosa. Dawn’s Dream Winery and Galante Vineyards put the word out to their club members, friends and the community, raising $5,493 for the North Bay Fire Relief Fund and a mountain of goods for the Red Cross.

“Our team immediately went into motion when we heard about the fires,” Dawn Galante said. “For Jack and me, helping others was the whole mission of starting Dawn’s Dream

Winery. Our local community really stepped in, and a few hundred people donated goods and money. People always seem to have room in their hearts when there’s a crisis like this.”

Cal Fire Chief Mark Mondragon of Salinas is in charge of food operations for hungry firefighters at the Sonoma County Fairgrounds.

QUESO WAS a beautiful show dog, destined to be his breeder's next stud, with the promise of many more champions to come. But when it was discovered he was sterile, he became a pet in the breeder's busy life – so busy that Queso got little attention. Until he was adopted by his forever family.

Having come from a litter where everybody was given a "cheese name," Queso's registered name is "Tri-Ivory Bleu Cheese." Queso is his nickname. When the breeder got a message from a pair looking for a pet, she sold him to the Reno-based couple, who regularly come to Carmel on vacation.

"So we got a purebred that can't breed," his person said. "Queso's a pretty expensive reject, but he's a perfectly beautiful pet. Everyone who speaks Spanish questions his name, but we're used to it. He's a great dog who loves company, his Frisbee, and any chance to get out and go for a run."

Queso's couple also had Izzie, another Australian Shepherd, who was quite old. Yet their person, who volunteers at the SPCA of Northern Nevada, soon fell for Rocket, a Border Collie, maybe mixed with some Australian Shepherd. She texted her husband to come see "this sweet, mellow dog." He ignored her texts, ultimately saying there was no way he'd get a third animal.

She persisted, finally getting her husband to come take a look at Rocket on February 14.

"I told my husband, 'It's Valentine's Day, and this is my present.' So, Rocket came home with us."

Her husband actually liked Rocket almost as much as she did, but neither liked his name. So, they shifted to something similar, "Radda," a nod to their trip to the Radda wine region in Tuscany. A friend soon told them that Radda, with an umlaut, means "rescue" in Swedish.

Today the couple is down to two dogs, Queso and Radda, who behave like brothers.

Dog walker trips on sprinkler, sues

By KELLY NIX

AN AFTERNOON stroll on the most traveled pathway in Carmel ended badly when a man tripped over a sprinkler head next to the path and suffered serious injuries, according to a lawsuit he filed against the city seeking monetary damages.

Alfred Robb Johnson alleges that he and his wife were walking their dog in October 2016 when they reached an area just west of the Scenic Road walkway that had been “obscured by years of pedestrian activity.” The area — while not actually part of the walkway — is a “commonly used extension” of the path, according to the Oct. 13 lawsuit filed in Monterey County Superior Court.

“As Johnson was walking in this area, his right toe caught an exposed sprinkler head, which caused him to fall,” the civil complaint, filed for Johnson by Salinas attorney Robert E. Rosenthal, indicates.

Carmel city attorney Glen Mozingo couldn’t be reached for comment about the lawsuit.

The mishap, which happened near 13th Avenue, caused Johnson to get a laceration on his forehead, bruising on his shoulder, “wrist popping” and numbness, and severe skin tears to his left forearm below the elbow, his lawsuit says.

“In addition to physical injuries, Johnson suffered emotional damages, including significant stress, worry, anxiety and concern,” he contends in the suit.

The area where Johnson fell has only loose dirt and sparse woodchips, and no foliage, his suit says, apparently making it appear that it is part of the Scenic Road pathway. Thousands of people every year use the bluff-top walkway, which is nestled between Scenic Road and Carmel Beach and was built in 1988.

Johnson’s complaint cites a plan by the city that has yet to be implemented that called for the renovation of five areas along the Scenic Road pathway, including the avenues of Eighth, 10th, 12th, and 13th — where the accident occurred — and Santa Lucia Avenue.

“The landscape design included, among several other improvements, a redesigned and refurbished sprinkler system,” according to the suit, which claims there are 700 drip sprinklers along the Scenic Road pathway that are inspected annually by the city.

Before Johnson filed the lawsuit, he submitted a claim with the city in April seeking monetary damages. The claim was rejected May 22.

Johnson alleges dangerous condition of public property and negligence. The city, he contends, “allowed exposed sprinkler heads to exist in the walking portion of the Scenic Road pathway, creating a risk that passersby would trip and fall.”

Furthermore, he says, Carmel failed to provide and maintain the Scenic Road pathway “in an adequate and safe condition by covering sprinkler heads, thus eliminating the hazard” of the sprinklers, and “failed to redesign and replace and outdated and obsolete irrigation system.”

City seeks $$$ for Mission Trail

CITY OFFICIALS are hoping the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District will part with $25,000 in taxpayer funds to match the $50,000 already budgeted for work in Mission Trail Nature Preserve, according to city administrator Chip Rerig.

The grant money would cover the cost of hiring a consultant “to analyze the stability of Mission Creek and develop a design for comprehensive urban stream restoration,” he said, and would also “allow for the installation of improvements within the preserve, including trail signage, safety rails, native plant augmentation, and removal of invasive species (eucalyptus and Acacia trees, ivy, and other non-native plants).”

Verdicts, pleas and sentencings announced by The Monterey County District Attorney

Aug. 21 — Salinas resident Mark Trinidad, 44, was sentenced to two years in prison after entering pleas of no contest to possession of stolen property and evading police officers.

On August 27, 2014, deputies responded to a residential burglary in unincorporated Monterey County. The victim reported that Trinidad drove onto his property, entered his home, and stole a pellet rifle. The missing pellet rifle was later found in Trinidad's home.

On August 10, 2016, a CHP officer attempted to stop a motorcycle for speeding on Highway 101. The driver, later identified as Trinidad, refused to yield and instead accelerated. Officers initiated a vehicle pursuit, during which Trinidad drove upwards of 75 mph in a 50-mph zone. Trinidad also drove into oncoming traffic, which caused drivers to pull to the shoulder to avoid him.

At one point, Trinidad accelerated so quickly that his passenger, later identified as his girlfriend, fell off the back of the motorcycle. The officer ended the pursuit to check on Trinidad's girlfriend. Trinidad ignored the officer's commands to stop, yelled at his girlfriend to get back on the bike, and then took off when she ignored him and remained on the ground.

On August 15, Monterey County Superior Court Judge Robert A. Burlison sentenced Trinidad to two years in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation.

Aug. 21 — Yefry Mata-Diaz, 20 of Seaside, was sentenced to four years in prison for first-degree residential burglary, which he committed while he was on probation for another first-degree residential burglary.

On May 14, 2017, Mata-Diaz was caught trying to force a neighbor's window open with a screwdriver. He had unsuccessfully attempted to pry open the door before he tried to go in through the window. At the time, Mata-Diaz was on probation for breaking into another home in 2015.

Mata-Diaz was sentenced by Monterey Superior Court Judge Carrie M. Panetta. The case was investigated by Seaside Police Department Officer Kevin Miller.

Aug. 22 — Richard Anthony Sanchez, 48 and Daniel Ray Ramos, 32, pled guilty to First Degree Residential Robbery and Evading a Peace Officer.

On October 10, 2016, Sanchez arranged to meet with the victim at the Motel 6 in Salinas and was driven to the location by Ramos. When Sanchez arrived at the hotel room he knocked on the door. He and the victim engaged in a short conversation. The victim had turned her back on Sanchez and when turning back around, found that he had put a gun to her head. He told her to give him all her jewelry and then lay down on the bed. He pointed the gun at her while he went through all her belongings. He threatened to shoot her, her friend and her dogs if she did anything other than what he commanded her to do. Sanchez stole her laptop, her tablet, about $6 in cash and a few pieces of jewelry. He then commanded that she move to the bed farthest from the door and wait 15 minutes before she got up. Sanchez then fled.

The victim was able to track the defendant's location after the crime through her stolen tablet. She went to that location and saw Sanchez and Ramos in a car together. She immediately called 911. Police attempted to initiate a traffic stop on the vehicle Sanchez and Ramos were in but they failed to yield. A high-speed pursuit ensued during which time Sanchez threw items out of the car, including a gun. The pursuit reached speeds in excess of 116 mph and lasted 93.8 miles. It ended when Ramos crashed the vehicle into a guardrail. The victim's tablet and cell phone were recovered in the vehicle Ramos and Sanchez were in.

Ramos was sentenced to 6 years 8 months in the CDCR, with execution of that sentence suspended for 3 years and was placed on felony probation. Sanchez was sentenced to 7 years in the California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation.

City gets low grades from public works director

By MARY SCHLEY

THE MILE-LONG white sand beach may be world-famous for its beauty, and a key part of marketing efforts to attract visitors, but in the eyes of new public works director Robert Harary, it gets a D+, not an A+.

The grade was part of an “infrastructure report card” Harary presented during a city council workshop focusing on public works Oct. 2. In it, he assigned letter grades to various aspects of the city his department oversees: Pavement on the 27 miles of roadway through town got a C+, storm drains and the like got a D-, city buildings collectively received a C-, the fleet of 41 vehicles got a C, and forestry and parks got the best of the bunch — a B.

Most of the problems stem from lack of money and manpower, he said at the workshop, the first of what will become an annual report on public works and conditions in the city. Harary first explained his department’s mission — “to provide and maintain public infrastructure, services, facilities and equipment that contribute to the health, safety, and well-being of the community, and do so in an efficient and cost-effective manner with minimal detrimental effects on the environment” — and noted its annual budget of $3.3 million and staff of 16 people, although it’s authorized to have 21.

Lots to do

On the administrative side, he and his assistant prepare agenda reports and budgets, handle purchasing and invoices, tackle personnel matters, and support a couple of commissions. Environmental programs include storm-water runoff issues and compliance, garbage and recycling, and energy use, while facilities oversees the maintenance of 33 buildings totaling 146,200 square feet, handles urgent repairs, and supports capital improvement projects.

The forest, parks and beach division tends to the city’s 10,000 trees, 150,000 square feet of open space, the 34-acre Mission Trail Nature Preserve, the 22-acre beach and shoreline, the forest and beach commission, and tree permits.

The streets division takes care of the town’s roads, sidewalks, gutters and curbs, garbage cans, and signs, and does street sweeping and inspections. It’s also in charge of heavy equipment.

“As a whole, the department enjoys strengths, including dedicated employees, teamwork, excellent inter-departmental collaboration, diversity of projects and tasks, strong community support, and Measure D funding,” he said, referring to the 1 percent sales tax that voters approved in 2012.

But public works doesn’t have enough employees or enough money to maintain the city’s infrastructure at a good level of service. Finding contractors to do various jobs is difficult, and the corporate yard is outdated, the public works building leaks, and Harary’s city vehicle is a dilapidated cart.

Unreasonable expectations?

Ever-increasing federal and state regulations present further challenges, as do the expectations of the city’s residents and business owners.

“We feel that our resources are light, but the community expectations are heavy,” Harary said. “The community, we believe, expects perfect quality of services, but we can’t make our few resources achieve perfection.”

The beach, for instance, with its fire pits, 30-year-old walkway, hazardous stairs and revetments, erosion, mutt mitts, trash cans and limited parking is “very high maintenance,” but only has the equivalent of one staff member to do all the work, he said. Hence, the D+ grade.

And the roads, many of which are patched and cracked, average a score of 62 out of 100, which is within the “fair” range of 50 to 70 — but which become exponentially more expensive to fix as they degrade further.

While the city’s drainage system is meeting its storm-water runoff requirements, the city has no drainage master plan, suffers from localized flooding and ponding, and has drainage channels running across private property without easements. There are no aerial maps of the system, either. All of that, and more, is why it got the lowest grade of the bunch.

Work on the city’s buildings, which are worth about $45 million, has been more responsive than proactive, according to Harary’s assessment. The department has only one person overseeing facilities, while the industry average would be 2.5

P.B. property cleared for housing

By KELLY NIX

WORK CREWS have finished clearing more than 700 oak and pine trees, and lots of brush, from a Pebble Beach parcel to make way for an apartment complex that will provide housing for Pebble Beach Company workers and others.

On Sept. 14, a tree company began cutting down the 725 trees for the 24-unit affordable complex, and that work has been completed.

A visit this week to the forest area showed a clearing bordered by tall stands of Monterey pine trees.

With the trees and brush gone, construction workers have moved on to the next phase of the housing project.

"The current work consists of grading to prepare the site for construction," Mark Stilwell, a consultant for the Pebble Beach

Company told The Pine Cone this week.

Grading will continue until December, at which point utility work will begin, he said.

Workers are using backhoes, bulldozers, rollers and other heavy machinery to prepare the property on Congress Road for the development.

Tall privacy screens have been put up around the construction site to prevent people from straying into the area.

The entire development will be on 13.2 acres, with the apartments sitting on 2.7 acres. There will be 10.5 acres of preserved Monterey pines. Monterey County required the Pebble Beach Company to build the housing as part of the company's final build-out plan approved in 2012 which includes new hotel rooms, conference facilities, a spa and home lots.

The plan also preserves more than 600 acres of forested open space.

This used to be a "degraded" forest in Pebble Beach, but it's been cleared to make way for lower cost housing for Pebble Beach Company workers and others who qualify.

Man pleads guilty to ramming wine tour tractor, sentenced to probation

By MARY SCHLEY

JEFF MOSER, the 37-year-old Carmel Valley man who injured a woman when he rammed his truck into a vintage tractor and trailer carrying people to tasting rooms in the Village last November, was sentenced this week by Monterey County Superior Court Judge Carrie Panetta to five years' probation DUI causing great bodily injury.

The afternoon of Nov. 6, 2016, Moser ran his Ford F-150 pickup truck into the back of the tractor and trailer driven by "Tractor Pete" Azevedo, scaring the eight passengers — including a 4-year-old girl — and throwing a woman off the side of the trailer onto the road. According to prosecutor Meredith Sillman, the woman, Kristin Guidi, suffered a broken rib, among other injuries.

The entire ordeal was captured on video, which was later posted on YouTube and viewed more than 20,000 times. "You can see the defendant honking his horn, waving his hands and flipping off the trailer right before he crashed into it," Sillman said. "The defendant claimed he was attempting to 'mess around' with his friend, Pete, the driver of the trailer, when he mistook the accelerator for the brake."

After the crash, an ambulance responded to the 911 call, and the fire captain in charge told the dispatcher several people were intoxicated. He also reported the truck driver had left the scene. Guidi was taken by ambulance to Natividad Medical Center. Moser returned, and the CHP conducted a DUI investigation, finding his blood alcohol level was .21 percent — almost 3 times the legal limit — Sillman said. However, Moser only "admitted to consuming one vodka cranberry cocktail but stated he felt fine to drive."

Had he tried to fight the charges and lost, Moser would have faced up to six years in state prison. Instead, he waived his preliminary hearing in June and later pleaded guilty to felony DUI causing great bodily injury, and Panetta sentenced him to probation this week. If he violates any of the terms, though, he could be sent to prison.

Meanwhile, the couple who filed suit against Moser in June for injuries sustained in the collision were told last month they can't seek punitive damages against him. Pebble Beach residents Kristin and Jonathan Guidi sued him for negligence and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Their daughter, Julia, who was 4 then, is also a plaintiff.

"Defendant's conduct turned an otherwise peaceful day in Carmel Valley into one of tragedy and trauma," the Guidis said in the complaint. They argue Moser was negligent because he chose to get behind the wheel of his truck while drunk, and said they suffered not only physical injuries, but "emotional distress." They also said Moser's decision to drive drunk was "in all respects malicious, willful and oppressive," justifying punitive damages.

But Moser's attorney countered, "Driving while intoxicated, absent aggravating circumstances, is insufficient to justify punitive damages."

In September, Monterey County Superior Court Judge Thomas Wills agreed, limiting the case to traditional damages like medical bills, lost wages, and pain and suffering.

A settlement conference has been scheduled in the case for August 2018, with a jury trial set to follow in November 2018 if the parties don't reach agreement before then.

By ELAINE HESSER

A SOFT-SPOKEN man in his mid-20s, Javier Martinez divides his time among biology classes at Hartnell, the fields where he and his relatives harvest vegetables, and the halls, patient rooms and operating theaters at Natividad Medical Center.

There, he recorded the soundtrack for a video — 20,000 lines of spoken words in his native language, Triqui — to explain to new moms in Salinas Valley how to care for their babies, from feeding them, to taking their temperatures. He's monitored and reported pain levels of women giving birth via Caesarian section to doctors, to make sure the patients remain comfortable.

Triqui is a language common among the natives of Oaxaca, Mexico, and it's the language of Martinez' family. He learned Spanish while living in a city in Mexico, and English after his family brought him here as a child. Martinez is a "Dreamer," brought to the United States illegally but protected from deportation and able to work here legally under the Obama-era executive action, Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals, or DACA.

Friends of his who speak other indigenous languages recorded videos in front of a medical transport unit, explaining that a newborn is being taken from Mee Memorial in King City to the neonatal ICU at Salinas Valley Memorial Hospital, so a new mom understands where her baby has gone.

Weighty job

Martinez has also had to tell people that they're not going to live as long or as well as they might have hoped, or that their kids aren't going to make it through the night. It's a weighty job, and he's one of 200 interpreters who's completed a program at Natividad called Indigenous Interpreting+.

The relatively new program provided him with training, certified him as an interpreter and pays him 16 to 20 hours a week. It's a necessity that came to Linda Ford's attention several years ago, when she began hearing that doctors and patients couldn't understand each other.

Ford, who lives not far from La Bicyclette, is the president and CEO of Natividad Medical Foundation, which supports Indigenous Interpreting+, along with other private donors.

Estimates set the number of immigrants in the Salinas Valley who are primarily indigenous language speakers at 30,000 or more, many rely on Natividad's taxpayer-funded medical services to get emergency treatment or to stay healthy.

Ford explained that several years ago, she naively thought there were maybe five indigenous languages that were spoken in Monterey County. When she heard there was a need

Woman sues after hurting self while boarding airplane in Monterey

By KELLY NIX

A MONTEREY County woman who says she was seriously injured while getting onto an airplane at the Monterey airport is seeking monetary damages from an airline and the company that provides the stairs used for boarding, according to a lawsuit filed last week.

Norma Smith was in the process of boarding an Allegiant Air flight on Dec. 26, 2016, when her foot somehow got wedged between the stairs and the aircraft, she alleges in an Oct. 11 complaint filed in Monterey County Superior Court.

“As Smith attempted to board the plane, her foot got stuck in an aperture between the entrance to the airplane and the end of the staircase,” according to the complaint filed for her by Culver City lawyer Daniel E. Prescod.

“As a result, Smith lost her balance and fell onto the staircase, sustaining immediate, short-term and long-term injuries,” the suit says.

Smith, who claims the incident happened because of negligence, is suing Allegiant Air and Aviation Port Services — the company which provided the staircase for the airplane — in the lawsuit. She’s seeking an undisclosed amount in monetary damages exceeding $25,000.

Smith claims Allegiant and Aviation failed to take steps to protect her against the “dangerous condition,” and alleges an Allegiant employee told her and others after the accident that “the staircase was not correctly aligned.”

Smith’s “serious injuries” included a fractured right hand and right knee, wrist injury and left calf injury. She was forced to miss work because of the accident and has incurred lost wages and loss of earning capacity.

Smith claims that her injuries “will result in some permanent disability to her.” Apart from hospital and medical expenses, she wants to be awarded damages for loss of “past and future earnings,” attorneys’ fees, and other costs.

Aviation Port Services attorney Paul A. Rachmuth told The Pine Cone the company could not comment specifically on the allegations, but that it was aware of the lawsuit. Allegiant Air spokeswoman Krysta Levy said the airline hasn’t been served with the complaint and couldn’t comment on the claims.

Monterey Regional Airport is not listed as a defendant in the case.

Allegiant Air offers nonstop service from Monterey Regional Airport to Las Vegas, Nev.

Fundraiser for film commission

CIBO RISTORANTE in downtown Monterey will donate 20 percent of its dinner and drink sales to the Monterey County Film Commission on Wednesday, Oct. 25 — as long as customers mention the commission when they arrive or make their reservations.

From 5 to 10 p.m., diners are invited to join the Alvarado Street restaurants in its efforts to support the commission, which has helped bring more than $104 million to local communities from film productions since it was created by the board of supervisors 30 years ago. Diners will also receive complimentary Monterey movie maps, meet film commissioners, and enter to win door prizes. From 7 to 10 p.m., jazz band Andrea’s Fault will play.

To reserve, call Cibo at (831) 649-8151.

One dead, three badly hurt after high speed chase ends with crash

By CHRIS COUNTS

ONE SUSPECTED car burglar died and another two sustained major injuries when the Acura they were driving in collided with two other vehicles Oct. 18 after a high speed chase along Highway 1.

The incident happened at the intersection of Palo Colorado Road and the scenic route, just south of Rocky Point restaurant and shortly before sunset. The Monterey County Sheriff's Office identified the man who was killed as 18-year-old Emel Shivers of Oakland.

A man who witnessed the crash posted a video of the aftermath on social media, and he described what had just happened. "The guy was going about 80 MPH on Highway 1, weaving in and out of cars — he almost took me and four others out," said Bradley Douglas, whose video shows a pile-up with flames and black smoke billowing. "I saw a heavy flame and a slight explosion."

Oscar Loza of the California Highway Patrol said a Monterey County Sheriff's deputy began pursuing the suspects at about 5:30 p.m.

"They were traveling on Highway 1 south of Palo Colorado in the Big Sur area," Loza explained. "The suspect vehicle was an Acura and the deputy was driving a truck. The Acura accelerated away at speeds estimated over 100 MPH and the truck could not keep up."

Just as it was passing the intersection of Palo Colorado Road and Highway 1, the suspects' car collided with a three-quarter ton truck with a solo occupant, causing "major injuries" to the driver.

Another "small utility vehicle driven by a solo occupant was struck," but the driver was OK. But the suspected burglars didn't fair as well.

"Of the three suspects in the Acura, one received fatal injuries and two sustained major injuries," Loza added. "Out of the three suspects, the driver has not yet been determined."

According to the sheriff's daily patrol log, the suspects "broke into multiple vehicles along Highway 1" before the chase began. It mentions that the suspects' vehicle crashed into oncoming motorists, confirming a head-on collision.

Gang member arrested for having stolen gun

By MARY SCHLEY

A 21-YEAR-OLD busboy who's also a gang member with a felony record was caught with a stolen handgun and ammo, and taken to Monterey County Jail early Tuesday morning, after a traffic stop at Junipero and Ocean for minor violations, according to Carmel Police Sgt. Luke Powell.

At around 12:40 a.m. Oct. 17, Cpl. Ken Shen pulled over a red Dodge Durango for expired registration and a broken taillight, according to Powell. The passenger, Martin Arango-Cruz from Marina, told Shen the Dodge was his mother's and that he'd asked a coworker to drive, because he'd been drinking.

But he also admitted he was out on parole following conviction for being a felon in possession of a sawed-off shotgun, and had waived his search-and-seizure rights in order to get released from jail more quickly.

After confirming the man's parole status and search terms through a computer records check, Cpl. Shen and officer Jacob Clifford, who had arrived to help, searched Arango-Cruz and the Durango. Although Shen didn't find anything incriminating on the suspect, Clifford discovered a loaded handgun under the rear passenger seat, and a records check revealed it had been stolen during a vehicle burglary in San Jose in May, according to Powell.

Arango-Cruz was "immediately arrested without incident," and offered no explanation for why he had the loaded stainless steel Kimber 1911 9mm handgun in the car.

"Arango-Cruz declined to provide Cpl. Shen with a statement or a reason for being in possession of a stolen handgun by stating, 'I have nothing to say,'" Powell said.

State Parole placed a hold on the suspect, and he was taken to Monterey County Jail, where he was booked on felony charges of being a gang member in possession of a concealed, loaded, stolen firearm. He was also charged for being a gang member in possession of ammunition. In addition to the eight 9mm Luger rounds in the gun, police found one stray round of .40 caliber ammunition, which would not have fit that weapon.

He remained in jail Thursday on $60,000 bail.

Health officials trying to prevent Hep A outbreak in Monterey County

By KELLY NIX

MONTEREY COUNTY has so far been spared the hepatitis A outbreak that other California counties have seen — including neighboring Santa Cruz County, which has had dozens of cases — and health officials in this county are doing all they can to make sure it stays that way.

In California, nearly 600 people have been infected with hepatitis A and 18 have died. In Santa Cruz County alone, 73 people have contracted the liver infection since April. Caused by the highly contagious hepatitis virus, hepatitis A is usually spread when someone ingests food or drinks contaminated by feces from an infected person — circumstances that never arise when water and food are handled properly, but can be commonplace among the homeless and other people who live in substandard conditions.

In Monterey County, there have been three cases of hepatitis A this year, but none of them related to the statewide outbreak, which prompted Gov. Jerry Brown to declare a state of emergency on Oct. 13.

Monterey County Health Department epidemiologist Kristy Michie said the department is doing what it can in hopes of preventing an outbreak in the county.

“We have been reaching out to medical providers who offer services to homeless to let them know what they can do to serve their clients who might be at risk,” Michie told The Pine Cone Monday.

Michie said the county health department is informing those at risk about how the virus is spread, offering food-handling safety tips,

Cachagua church backers will have to wait another week for supes' decision

By CHRIS COUNTS

SUPPORTERS OF a proposed church in Cachagua argued at an Oct. 18 meeting of the Monterey County Board of Supervisors that two conditions placed on the approval of the plan by the county's planning commission — one that would require church leaders to reapply for their permit in two years, and another that would limit events to 65 people — are unfair.

After listening to lengthy testimony on the topic from both sides, the supervisors decided to continue the hearing to Oct. 24, because one of them, John Phillips, had to leave early.

Twenty residents, including many who live in Cachagua, voiced their support for or opposition to the church, which would be located on 10 acres at 19345 Cachagua Road, where there's already a 1,926 square-foot main residence and a caretaker's unit. The proposal calls for building a 744 square-foot addition on the residence and adding a basement.

Former Monterey County Herald photographer Orville Myers would serve as pastor.

Opponents took aim at the plan, which they said would put a strain on the church's septic system and bring unwanted traffic from outside the area.

Marge Viales told supervisors she's worried the septic system is inadequate, while a neighbor, Greg Martin, said he's concerned his well will be polluted if the septic system fails.

'Cars will affect everyone'

Mary Martin wants the plan sent back to the Cachagua Land Use Advisory Committee, which previously approved it. She's particularly concerned about traffic in the neighborhood. "Cars coming in will affect everyone," Martin said.

Matt Shea, the chair of the Cachagua Land Use Advisory Committee, said despite the earlier vote, he also would like to see it go back to the LUAC for more review. Shea said the proposal goes "against the wishes of the Cachagua community," and the church is "positioning itself for further growth" — something he said the LUAC didn't evaluate.

Dave Bonsper compared opponents to the hero in the biblical story about David and Goliath. He claimed the congregation is backed by "a big church and a big lawyer. "Make no mistake — we are David," Bonsper said.

While some worry the church would bring in traffic, Leslie Voss countered that if the church didn't exist, residents would still need to use Cachagua's roads to travel somewhere to find a church. "Everyone who wants to worship will have to drive there," Voss said.

Gary Tate, who waged numerous battles against development permits when he was head of the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District, told supervisors, in this case, it would be unfair to make the church go through a lengthy and costly reapplication process.

Beverly Tenneson also spoke out in favor of the church. "We need a sanctuary in our community," Tenneson suggested.

BRIDGE

ions at Big Sur Multi-Agency meetings, in the face of disaster, this community comes together,” Monning declared.

The state senator noted that Big Sur plays a key role in tourism along the Central California coast. “Your perseverance, your patience and your support for this project restores the connectivity of the economy from Santa Cruz to Santa Barbara,” he said.

Also attending the ceremony was Congressman Jimmy Panetta, who a day earlier on the Senate floor, praised local residents, government officials and work crews for their efforts to reopen the highway. He lauded “the record pace of construction” and “the government working together,” and he commended “businesses that struggled but remained open.”

“They demonstrated a lot of grit, guts and determination,” Panetta said. “They listened to each other, and they came together to fix this bridge.”

The speakers included Kirk Gafill of the Big Sur Chamber of Commerce and general manager of Nepenthe. A lifelong resident, Gafill said the Big Sur community hasn't experienced anything quite like the recent lengthy closure of Highway 1.

“We survived and we thrived after 10 week closures in 1983-84 and 1998, which were two big El Niño winters,” Gafill recalled. “We're now in week 34 of this event.”

Gafill called the effort that went into rebuilding the bridge as quickly as possible “extraordinary,” and he suggested the reopening of the scenic route will be an economic boon to the region.

“This was affecting the hospitality industry from Santa Cruz to Santa Barbara,” he added “The ability to reconnect the industry and the state is of profound importance.”

The project cost the taxpayers about $24 million to complete.

Now that easy vehicle access has been restored to Big Sur, the area's largest resort, Ventana Big Sur, is preparing to reopen in the very near future — after an ambitious makeover. Ventana's Sur House restaurant, meanwhile, will begin serving dinner Friday, Oct. 20. “It's time for the finishing touches — we're almost there,” the resort posted on social media this week.

South of Carmel, 62 miles of Highway 1 are now open to motorists. But the scenic route is still closed at Mud Creek, where one of the largest slides in California's history dumped five million cubic yards of rock, dirt and debris on the scenic route in May. Repairs at that site are expected to be completed by late summer 2018. The work is expected to cost about $40 million.

John Hammond, meanwhile, wondered what everyone is so worried about. “I don't know of any community that a church has ruined,” he said.

A Cachagua resident who is not a member of the congregation said he supports the church — in part because the pastor is such a great guy. He also said he would gladly trade a problem neighbor for the church.

“The pastor is the kind of neighbor you would want,” he declared. “I would love to have a church next door to me.”

Attorney Tony Lombardo, who is representing the church, objected to claims that the plan has expanded since it was introduced.

“No one has been deceived by anything,” Lombardo insisted. “The church is really trying to provide something good for the community.”

Fifth District Supervisor Mary Adams chimed in after the public comment, and he urged the two sides to try and work something out before next Tuesday's hearing. “See if you can come to some closure on this,” she added.

CLAYTON G. BERLING

November 25, 1930 ❖ October 5, 2017

Clayton G. Berling, 86, of Carmel passed away Thursday, October 5, 2017 at Carmel Hill Care Center. Clay was born on November 25, 1930 in Escalon, California, the only child of Gus and Iris Berling, who had emigrated from Malmo, Sweden to create a new life in America. Clay grew up in San Francisco, Raised his family in Albany, California and spent the last 20 years in Carmel.

Clay attended Lowell High School and San Francisco City College before transferring to UC Berkeley, graduating in 1952, the year in which Clay and Ruth were married. Drafted by the U.S. Army, he served 2 years in Germany, where their first of six children, Lynn, was born. Upon leaving the military, Clay and Ruth settled in Albany. In 1961, he joined the State Farm Insurance Company and launched his agency, which he operated until his retirement.

In 1967 Clay took his family to see the Oakland Clippers play because the soccer game presented the only affordable opportunity to bring his entire family to the Oakland Coliseum, which had been constructed the preceding year. For less than $10 Berling and his family watched the Clippers, part of the National Professional League, in action. He left impressed with the skills and teamwork, saw what he believed was a perfect sport for children and immediately got involved in Northern California youth and adult soccer, serving in many capacities including league commissioner.

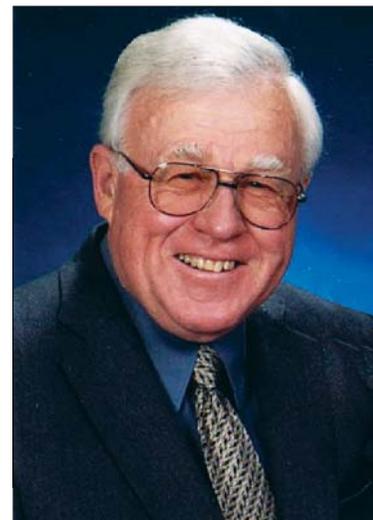

He launched a biweekly newsletter called Soccer West that quickly went national and was renamed Soccer America in 1972. At one point it grew to 23 employees and it exists to this day. Clay's wife, Ruth, was his partner in the venture and worked in the production department until her death in 1991. Clay was inducted as a Builder of the sport in to the U.S. Soccer Hall of Fame in 1995, in recognition of how important the publication had been in providing communication and information for the development of soccer. He was inducted into the California Youth Soccer Association Hall of Fame and Clay and his daughter, Lynn Berling-Manuel were voted into the California Soccer Association North hall of Fame in 2011. In 1997, Clay was given the National Soccer Coaches Association of America Honor Award, their highest honor.

Also in 1997 Clay married Sarah McCloud Wedge. Both soon retired and moved to Carmel. Clay had many interests besides soccer. He adeptly served on the Civil Grand Jury and several committees in the local city. He was on the Monterey Symphony Board and was one of the founders, on the board and the treasurer of the Interfaith Outreach of Carmel, whose mission is to help the homeless through the funds earned by its store, Joining Hands. He was the Lay Leader of the Church of the Wayfarer for several years. His passions included ideas and discussions and he led a discussion group at the church for many years.

Clay is survived by his wife, Sarah, and his children Lynn Berling-Manuel, Janet Ceja-Orozco, Sheryl Berling-Wolff, James Berling, Alan Berling and Ken Berling, and seven grandchildren and five great grandchildren.

A celebration of Clay's life will be held 11:30 a.m. Sunday, October 29 at the Church of the Wayfarer in Carmel. It will be a modest, personal service and all are welcome. It will follow the church's regular Sunday morning service. The church is located at Lincoln and 7th Ave. A light lunch will follow the celebration.

Clay's family asks that in lieu of flowers, donations be made in Clay's name to the Church of the Wayfarer, Box 2205, Carmel, 93921, the United Soccer Coaches Foundation at unitedsoccercoaches.org/store/donation.aspx or the charity of your choice.

Wiener recommended the council allow the commission's decision to stand, and Mira Porgess defended her business and its appearance, saying she hung the food photos to help overcome the language barrier that many visitors, especially those without a lot of money, experience when they come to Carmel.

"We provide quality food at a location that's convenient and at a speed that works for them, because they're here for an hour," Mathew Porgess added. "We're fulfilling a need that's really needed in Carmel."

Resident John Wolf, however, said the cocoa bar "is not designed to be for residents, at all," and urged the council to rule against them.

"If the owners of the cocoa bar want to become a full-line restaurant, then they have to look like a full-line restaurant," commented resident Barbara Livingston. "They can't have the best of both worlds." She said they shouldn't be able to have a long counter with refrigerated desserts and a cash register, and photos of the food on the wall.

But resident Jeff Baron, who frequents the restaurant, said it should remain as-is.

"I like everything about the place," he said. "It really disappoints me that the city has not moved forward with what the idea of a restaurant is."

He called the decision makers' take on the topic "outdated," and said the Carmel Coffee and Cocoa Bar "makes this town a more welcoming place," especially for people who don't speak English.

But if to-go food sales are "incidental" to sit-down service, Hardy said, then the counter should be, too. She wanted it to look more like a full-service restaurant and said the food photos and menu boards are "overwhelming."

Councilman Bobby Richards was reluctant to say what a restaurant "should" look like, though.

"That's not for me to decide," he said. "What I'm basically going on is, are they in compliance with our codes?"

If the code says full-line restaurants can only have small counters and no food photos, that's one thing. "However, if there's no rule against them, I have to work within the parameters that we have."

"As a business here in Carmel, if somebody was trying to dictate how my lobby was set up in my hotel, I would take offense to it, because there is no ordinance here that is specific to that," councilwoman Carrie Theis agreed. Plus, people can't see the cocoa bar from the street, so how much is it really bothering anyone, anyway?

Back in 60 days?

City attorney Glen Mazingo said telling the Porgesses what kind of photos they can have on the wall could interfere with their First Amendment rights, and Theis wondered how they differ from the photos real estate agents place in their windows.

"We need to apply the rules the same way to everybody," Theis said.

"This reminds me of a McDonald's and picking from a menu, period," Dallas objected.

Hardy suggested continuing the hearing so the Porgesses can redesign the layout of their café, include a seat count, and come back in 60 days. The motion didn't include changing the photos.

"A good architect could figure this out," Hardy said, and the council voted 4-0 in favor of her motion.

Afterward, Mira Porgess protested that she can't afford an architect and another remodel, since they just expanded their restaurant a couple of years ago.

"We did not put ourselves in this position," Dallas chastised her. "You put yourselves in this position. So, thank you very much."

and letting people know how they can avoid contracting it (frequent hand washing is highly effective). The department is also working with hospitals, medical clinics and treatment centers on how to vaccinate those who are most at risk — homeless people, men who have sex with men, and users of illicit drugs. The virus can also be spread by touching objects or eating food that someone with the virus has handled.

“The hepatitis vaccine is a series of two shots; one shot, then another six months later,” Michie said. “That provides lifetime immunity. The first dose is about 80 percent effective, and the second dose brings it up to about 96 percent. It’s a really effective vaccine.”

The health department is also offering the vaccine through its Whole Person Care program, which provides medical services for indigent and homeless people.

FIRES

Monday," Mondragon said. "One day, there were 500 gallons of coffee just in the morning, and so far, we've gone through about three-quarters of a million pounds of ice, 200,000 bottles of water, 450,000 eggs and 30,000 sack lunches."

He said all that food not only gives the firefighters the nutrition they need to handle the grueling work, but also provides them with psychological relief under very difficult circumstances.

"It's so important to get firefighters a good meal in the morning before they go out," Mondragon said. "The sack lunches alone are at least 3,000 calories, and we serve a buffet-style breakfast and dinner that are easily 2,000 calories each. If I can give them a little comfort, I've done my job."

Bill Cox with U.S. Foods in Del Rey Oaks works with Mondragon's team to develop menu ideas, ordering for 5,000 meals a day and handling logistics for up to four 48-foot trailers a day to keep the food supply line full. But Cox also played a critically important role even before arriving at the fire camp.

"Word got to me Sunday night that there was a fire in Santa Rosa, so I immediately called a childhood friend who lives in Sonoma, waking her up," he said. "She immediately started to alert her neighbors along with her husband; one friend lived in Glen Ellen, and from what I'm told, they barely made it out, and soon after their home was consumed. All I did was make a phone call. I'm still in a fog as to the chain reaction it started to warn people."

In the coming days and weeks as the smoke clears, the heroic efforts will continue in the long process to rebuild and restore communities destroyed by this horrific firestorm, and Monterey Peninsula residents will continue to play critically important roles in the ongoing recovery.

■ Power lines spark fire in P.B., cigarette blamed for York blaze

DOWNED POWER lines evidently started a grass fire on the side of Lopez Road near the Poppy Hills Golf Course in Pebble Beach around 1 p.m. Monday, but firefighters quickly got it under control, keeping the blaze to just three-quarters of an acre, according to Cal Fire public information officer Kim Bernheisel.

The response was swift and extensive, with nine engines, two hand crews, two air tankers, a helicopter, another aircraft, and two bulldozers deployed to stop the fire from spreading, which they did at around 1:50 p.m.

"Upon arrival, firefighters reported power lines down across Lopez road and the vegetation fire to be approximately a quarter-acre in size, burning in grass and brush, with a moderate rate of spread," Bernheisel reported. "Firefighters from four engines were able to minimize the spread of the fire and contained it at 1:56 p.m."

The Pebble Beach fire came a day after a brush fire ignited off of South Boundary Road near Del Rey Oaks, forcing evacuations along York Road. By the time firefighters got there, Bernheisel said, the fire was about 2 acres in size and spreading.

Cal Fire and other local departments sent more than a dozen engines, as well as hand crews, four air tankers, another aircraft and a pair of helicopters, along with two bulldozers. Four-and-a-half hours later, the fire was stopped at 31 acres, and firefighters stayed at the scene overnight to ensure no hot spots developed or sparks started another fire.

The 50 residents in the York Road area who were evacuated were allowed to return home that evening, and South Boundary Road was reopened after a four-hour closure. No one was injured.

Berneisel said investigators from Cal Fire and Seaside Fire Department found a cigarette at the origin of the fire.

■ Clueless camper causes fire in Big Sur

BIG SUR residents got a scare Oct. 16 when an illegal camper started a fire in the Partington Cove area. But firefighters and residents quickly arrived on scene and doused the flames, which had spread to about one-fourth of an acre.

Monterey County Sheriff's Office reported that Michael Manneback of Cape Coral, Fla., was arrested for starting the fire. He was later booked on felony charges of arson and possessing stolen property, and misdemeanor charges of violating probation and disorderly conduct.

The sheriff's office said the man made it to stay warm, but it "caught sections of dry needles and grass on fire."

The Big Sur Volunteer Fire Brigade received word of the fire at about 9 a.m.

"All the homes up on Partington were in the crosshairs once again," volunteer fire Chief Martha Karstens reported. "Brigade Capt. Jon Knight was on scene very quickly with another firefighter. They started to fight the fire with their hand tools the best they could."

More volunteers soon arrived on scene.

"They did an excellent job controlling the fire and deploying a pump in the river for a continuous water supply," Karstens explained. "They were able to stop the spread in short order, avoiding what could have been a devastating result had it spread up the hillside to the homes above."

Firefighters from the United States Forest Service also responded to the fire. "Several hours later we turned the fire area over to them," Karstens continued.

She said the operation went off without a hitch.

"This was again an example of the initial response by the fire brigade making a difference," she said. "We had an excellent response, with over a dozen brigade members and three engines on scene."

The volunteer fire chief said she was shocked to learn that people are still making illegal campfires at a time when wildfires are literally terrorizing California. Just this month, thousands of homes have been lost and tens of thousands of residents displaced.

"This fire was started by an illegal campfire," she added. "Two nights ago, we were paged out for two other campfires. It is unbelievable to me why, with half the state on fire, anyone would think it was a good idea to have any fire."

The sheriff's office gave the volunteer firefighters a shout-out — and reminded the public that campfires are not permitted outside designated campfire use areas.

"They risked their lives by placing themselves in danger to suppress the spread of the fire," the sheriff's office added. "This bought time for local fire agencies to arrive and fully extinguish the fire. This section of Los Padres National Forest had not burned during the Soberanes Fire, so there was still a lot of fuel."

PANETTA

which Trump supports but which critics have said could further increase the United States' involvement in the conflict there, Panetta said, if there was a "possibility of keeping people in their own country, I'm sure they would have stayed in their own country."

The Democrats, in the letter, also opposed a plan by the Trump administration to consider whether refugees meet "certain criteria that enhance a refugee's likelihood of successful assimilation and contribution in the United States." The information was taken from a Trump administration document that was leaked to the press.

Panetta didn't specifically weigh in on that aspect of the debate, but said refugees and other immigrants who come to the United States should try to fit in, including learning the country's primary language.

"Look, I believe people who do want to come here and assimilate and be a part of our culture and our country should take [English] language classes," he said.

In late September, a bipartisan group of 34 U.S. senators, including Arizona Sen. John McCain and Alaska Sen. Lisa Murkowski, both Republicans, also urged Trump to increase the number of refugees.

'False narrative of war'

To support their claim that not allowing enough refugees into the United States puts the country at risk, House Democrats said that "severely limiting the number of refugees the U.S. admits perpetuates extremist organizations' false narrative of a war between Islam and the West."

They also cited a 2015 letter penned by Leon Panetta, Henry Kissinger and 18 other national security leaders, that noted "resettlement initiatives help advance U.S. national security interests by supporting the stability of our own allies that are struggling to host large numbers of refugees."

Panetta and his colleagues called the refugee vetting in the country "robust," and said the United States screens refugees more stringently than other travelers. The roughly two-year vetting process includes checking fingerprints and other biometric data against terrorist and criminal databases, and multiple interviews with several federal agencies.

"I've actually sat down and talked to member of Department of Homeland Security, as well as members of border patrol that are part of the vetting process, and they have talked about how strict it is and they have the utmost confidence in their ability to do it," Panetta said.

hire five interpreters.”

That was before she learned that there were more than 15 indigenous languages she — like most other Anglos — had never heard of in the county, like Nahuatl, Amuzgo, and Mixteco, which has 81 dialects.

Further, when there are bilingual speakers, they are usually patients’ family members, and their second language is Spanish. That means questions, answers and instructions undergo translation from, Trique to Spanish, then Spanish to English for the doctor, then back again. It was like the old game of “Whisper Down the Alley,” or “Telephone.”

Except that it involved life-and-death decision making, postoperative instructions, patient education on managing diabetes, or directions for taking medications. And some of the cultures just didn’t have context for all of that. For example, in Zapoteco (spoken in Oaxaca, Veracruz, Pueblo and Guerrero), the name of tuberculosis roughly translates to, “The devil is strangling my neck.”

Most healthcare providers will tell you that having family members translate for one another is inherently risky, because even if relatives do understand the technical aspects of what the doctor or nurse is saying, they sometimes intentionally omit information that they think may upset the patient, or soften important facts.

Not just local

So, beginning in 2004, Ford set about creating an interpretation training program from scratch. She brought in experienced language curriculum authors Katharine Allen and Marjorie Bancroft, and later got funding from a Salinas-based group called The Ag Leadership Council (founded to support farmworkers’ healthcare) and went looking for indigenous speakers. They also received donations from Driscoll and the Packard Foundation along the way.

Said John D’Arrigo, who in addition to being president and CEO of D’Arrigo Brothers Co. is president and CEO of the leadership foundation and a member of the Natividad Foundation board, “All of us at Natividad were surprised that the doctors couldn’t talk to some of the patients, and the patients couldn’t talk to some of the doctors about their illnesses or injuries. We were initially dumbfounded that they didn’t speak or understand Spanish.”

The resulting program is no longer just a local endeavor, either. Ford said they plan to open-source the teaching curriculum in the near future, meaning that it will be available at no charge to any group which wants to use it.

The organization has a contract with the Mayo Clinic in Minnesota, and provides ongoing support to a court in Virginia that’s hearing a child abuse case.

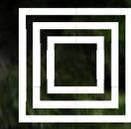

The more than 200 interpreters the group has trained also work with agencies like the FBI and Homeland Security, and universities like Stanford and UCLA, as well as UCSF.

Ford said the group is known at the Hague, home of the International Court of Justice and the International Criminal Court, among others. “The BBC even did a podcast about us,” she said.

“In our wildest dreams we never expected this pioneering program — solving a desperate need that most of us never knew even existed — to go statewide, national and even get international recognition,” D’Arrigo said.

Martinez added, “I like learning new things, and making new friends with doctors. I have so much gratitude.”

people, or one per 60,000 square feet of floor space.

But, he said, his department has benefited a lot from the additional 1 percent in sales tax Carmel voters approved in 2012 — which ends in 2022 — and he's working on other solutions, like streamlining the process of getting qualified contractors to help with city projects, and bundling certain jobs, like the HVAC systems for both libraries.

A new engineer?

He also suggested ending the 101-year-long practice of contracting with Neill Engineering and instead hiring an in-house engineer. That would be cheaper, Harary said, and would mean having someone to call on for smaller projects. In the 2016-2017 fiscal year, Neill Engineering received $112,983 for its work for the city.

City administrator Chip Rerig also commented about the difficulty of finding enough employees, because the city won't pay enough to attract qualified candidates, as has been the case in the search for a project manager

"We're not financially competitive," he said.

"We just need to find the bodies and fill the vacancies," commented city councilwoman Carolyn Hardy. She noted that it's challenging because of the housing crunch and cost of living.

Mayor Steve Dallas also issued a call for volunteers and asked the support groups like the Friends of Mission Trail Nature Preserve to raise more money for public projects.

"Volunteers are needed to help" with restoring the Scenic pathway and other city efforts, he said. "By paying prevailing wages, it costs a fortune. But if we can get volunteers to come in and do some of the work," it will get done more quickly.

"I'm looking forward to more volunteerism in our city," he said.

Festival not just about film as musicians gather at 'music cafe'

BESIDES BRINGING the buzz of Hollywood to town, the Carmel International Film Festival will showcase talented singer-songwriters from near and far.

Providing a stage for a series of musical performances is the Forge in the Forest, which will double as the film festival's Music Cafe Oct. 20-21. "Relax and groove while you network with filmmakers and industry insiders," reads an invitation to the "cafe."

Carmel singer-songwriter Mark Governor assembled the lineup of performers and will serve as emcee.

"What makes this unusual is that most performers actually have songs in films that will be shown at the festival," Governor told The Pine Cone. "All different kinds of music will be represented."

Fifth and Junipero.

The film festival, which continues through Oct. 22, features 19 feature-length films, nine documentaries and dozens of short films at six local sites. Tickets to individual films are $10 for general admission, and $5 for students and military. For ticket packages and more details, call (831) 625-3700 or visit www.carmelfilmfest.com.

Blues rocker at Golden State

Twenty-seven years after bursting on the music scene and making blues-rock hip again, one-time Black Crowes frontman Chris Robinson plays a solo acoustic concert Oct. 21 at Golden State Theatre in Monterey.

With Robinson at the helm, the Black Crowes sold millions of the records in the 1990s, lighting up the charts with hits like "Hard To Handle," "Jealous Again" and "She Talks To Angels."

The singer and guitarist is now touring with the Chris Robinson Brotherhood, a group he formed in 2011 during a hiatus from the Black Crowes. Robinson describes the band's sound as "psychedelic filling in a folk-blues pie."

Also performing Saturday at Golden State is Vetiver, a San Francisco-based indie folk project that showcases the music of underappreciated singer Andy Cobic.

Showtime is 8 p.m. Tickets are $35 to $55. The theater is located at 417 Alvarado St. Call (831) 649-1070 or visit goldenstatetheatre.com.

HELP FOR FRIENDS IN NAPA, VILLAGE CORNER MOVIES, AND GOLF FOR CHEFS

WINERIES AND grape growers throughout the county have joined a statewide effort to help those in the industry who have lost their wineries, vineyards and homes in the Wine Country fires that ignited with a fury almost two weeks ago. Nearly two dozen wineries and vineyards have suffered damage — some of them, complete destruction — alongside the 7,000 buildings that have burned to the ground. Considered the most devastating in the state's history, the fires are also blamed for 42 deaths (so far), with many more people injured or missing.

Through the end of the month, the CAWineStrong Network, a group of industry leaders — including the Monterey County Vintners & Growers Association — is asking wineries, tasting rooms and restaurants to share their profits with the victims. All donations will be distributed to the Napa Valley Community Foundation's disaster relief fund, the Community Foundation of Sonoma County Resilience Fund, and the Community Foundation of Mendocino County.

In addition, the group has created an online resource database where vintners can find or offer resources like generators, trailers, lodging and manpower. Businesses that want to help can sign up at CAWineStrong.com, and those in need can search for help there. Cash donations can be made online, as well.

So far, nine local wineries have signed on to donate part of their earnings: Bernardus, De Tierra, Cima Collina, Folktale, J. Lohr, Odonata, Scheid, Scratch and Windy Oaks. But new businesses are signing on daily and can be found on the website.

■ Village Corner to show movies

The Village Corner's new owners received permission from the city last week to show two films in their patio each month for family movie night, and chef/co-owner Soerke Peters (who is also chef and owner at Basil) said he plans to create menus to match the themes of various foodie films, like "Ratatouille," "Chef" — and "Titanic."

"I always wanted to do this kind of thing, when it comes to being the chef — cooking and movies, and to combine the experience," he said. "For example, 'Titanic,' when the Titanic sank, what was the last meal these people had?"

The picturesque patio at the Village Corner will soon be the setting for family movie nights, since the planning commission last week approved the restaurant's request to show them on a 5-by-10-foot screen two times a month. Chef Soerke Peters said he looks forward to creating menus to match the themes of films like "Chef," and "Ratatouille."

Peters and Ken Spilfogel, who also runs Flaherty's, applied for a six-month permit to show movies at the Village Corner, which they and Amy Stouffer took over in September. They asked for permission to show the films between 6 and 9 p.m. on a 10-by-5-foot screen, and senior planner Marnie Waffle said they would have to keep the sound level to 55db at the property line, just as restaurants with live music do, and they can't add a lot of chairs to the patio area, keeping it at 32.

"It's nice to get out of the house instead of being glued to the television, and actually have a dining experience with that particular movie that will be shown," Peters said.

Commissioner Gail Lehman wanted assurance the movie nights wouldn't morph into weekly showings of Monday Night Football, and the like. "It's not going to become a sports bar," she said. She also cautioned them to not conflict with the Films in the Forest series at the Forest Theater, where movies are shown in May, June and July.

"A fun night downtown — we don't have things like that," Spilfogel said. "It's a little bit different than going to Barmel on a Friday night, and I think it will be a good, healthy thing for our community."

Commissioners Stephanie Locke, Julie Wendt and Michael LePage were enthusiastic in their support. "I love the concept of pairing movies and food," Locke said.

Chair Don Goodhue was more subdued, wondering if the commission should only allow the films for a few months, but planning director Marc Wiener said there are plenty of protections to ensure the movie nights don't become a nuisance, and the commission unanimously OK'd them.

■ Cheese and wine for cause

The Central Coast Cheese & Wine Celebration benefitting the Resource Conservation District of Monterey County — which seeks to protect and conserve local farmland, wildlife and waterways — will take place at Happy Girl Kitchen Oct. 20 from 5 to 8 p.m. The RCD assists Monterey County landowners and managers in their voluntary efforts to protect the soil, water and wildlife on their properties.

Guests will enjoy tastes of award-winning sheep, goat and cow's milk cheeses from Central Coast farmstead cheesemakers Garden Variety Cheese, Schoch Family Farmstead, Stepladder Creamery and Central Coast Creamery, along with wines from Odonata and Cima Collina. Happy Girl's preserves, honey from Las Lomas Lavender and Honey, jam from Friend in Cheeses, and

Library wines at Galante

Jack Galante will pour samples of some of his older wines during a special gathering Oct. 20 from 4 to 6 p.m. at his tasting room on Dolores Street south of Ocean Avenue. Featured in the lineup will be 1996 Merlot, 1996 and 2002 Red Rose Hill Cabernet Sauvignon, and 1996 and 2002 Blackjack Pasture Cabernet Sauvignon. Those were similar years in terms of weather, from a growing standpoint, according to Galante, and tastings will be offered side by side, so guests can pick up on the subtle differences between them. "It is a rare treat to be able to taste wines this old that have not moved from the cellar since they were produced," he said.

The tasting costs $25 ($15 for club members), and discounts of up to 40 percent will be offered on the featured wines. RSVP by calling (831) 624-3800 or emailing danielle@galantevineyards.com.

Happy birthday, Morgan!

Morgan winery will celebrate the 10th anniversary of its

Crossroads tasting room Saturday, Oct. 21, from noon to 4 p.m., by sharing older wines from its library, and serving tacos, nachos, loaded fries and other indulgences.

Founders Dan and Donna Lee, along with winemaker Samuel Smith, will be there from 2 to 4 p.m. to meet fans and sign bottles, as well as to talk about this year's harvest.

The $25-per-person cost includes food, wine, and entry into a drawing for a wine gift basket. For more information, visit (831) 626-3700. Tickets can be purchased at www.morganwinery.com.

Bee lessons

Jake Reisdorf, the local teen who founded the Carmel Honey Co. and opened a store in Carmel Plaza this summer, also offers short classes all about his favorite sweet and the insects that produce it. Guests sample several different honeys to see how the pollinators' choices affect the flavor and color of the final product.

For $35 per person, a half-hour session with Reisdorf or one of his cohorts (perhaps his mom) includes three honey samples, as well as other treats to pair it with, and a coupon for 15 percent off any purchases that day, while a full hour costs $50 per person and includes six honey samples, honeycomb, bee pollen and a logo gift, as well as the discount.

To reserve, email info@carmelhoneycompany.com.

Make Mondays better

Jeninni Kitchen + Wine Bar owner Thamin Saleh has gotten in the habit of improving the first night of the week by featuring fried chicken in various forms on the menu each Monday. A fried chicken sandwich with herbed tahini and harissa vinaigrette showed up on a recent Sips + Snacks Happy Hour menu available from 4 to 6 p.m., for example, while that night, the crispy and succulent chicken was served with mac 'n' cheese that included pecorino and bacon.

Jeninni is located at 542 Lighthouse Ave. in Pacific Grove. Call (831) 920-2662 or visit www.jeninni.com for more information.

Monterey hires Aqua Terra

Following a nine-month bidding and vetting process, chef Dory Ford's Aqua Terra Culinary landed the catering contract for the Monterey Conference Center, which has been undergoing a $60 million renovation. Ford predicts the job will double sales at his catering company, which is already well entrenched in the events business and provides lunches for some local schools.

Aqua Terra oversees food service at Point Pinos Grill at the P.G. Golf Links, A Taste of Monterey on Cannery Row, Middlebury Institute of International Studies, Monterey Bay Aquarium, Pebble Beach Concours d'Elegance and the Monterey Jazz Festival, to name a few.

Eddison & Melrose has moved

Karen Anne Murray, chef and owner of Eddison & Melrose, recently moved her business to Pacific Grove and has added a takeout version of her English tea service.

She continues to make her popular Karen Anne's Granola and other treats at her new shop at 1180 Forest Ave., Suite G, where customers can pick up sausage rolls, cupcakes, macarons and other goodies, along with plenty of tea.

Call (831) 601-4851 or visit www.eddisonandmelrose.com. It's closed Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

Variety show offers respite 'from cares of the world'

By CHRIS COUNTS

TO RAISE money for local nonprofit theater groups, a cast of stage performers will present "Carmel Pops" Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 21-22, at Forest Theater.

Presented by the Forest Theater Guild, the event will showcase the 40-piece Carmel High School String Orchestra, which will play the musical themes from "Hamilton," "La La Land," "Game of Thrones" and other shows. Actress Gracie Poletti will serve as host.

Also, dancers from the Carmel Academy of Performing Arts and Dance Kids of Monterey will perform excerpts from "An American In Paris," "Swan Lake" and "Nutcracker."

"The Forest Theater is known for Broadway musicals and Shakespeare," said Walt DeFaria, who is helping to organize the event. "We're adding a new concept to those successful presentations with a variety show of music, song and dance — an evening to sit back and forget about the cares of the world around us."

Proceeds will benefit the Forest Theater Guild, The Forest Theater Foundation, CAPA Dance Kids and the Carmel High School orchestra.

Saturday's performance starts at 7:30 p.m., while

Sunday's begins at 5:30 p.m. Tickets are $25 for adults and $10 for students, seniors and active military. The Forest Theater is located at Santa Rita and Mountain View. For tickets, visit www.brownbagtickets.com

'Antony and Cleopatra' opens

One of literature's most tragic romances will be revisited when Shakespeare's "Antony and Cleopatra" opens Saturday at the Circle Theatre.

Presented by PacRep Theatre, the play tells the story of two very powerful people — Roman politician and general Marc Antony and Egyptian ruler Cleopatra — whose love affair eventually leads to the demise of both.

Directed by Kenneth Kelleher, the play stars Michael Storm as Antony and Julie Hughett as Cleopatra. The cast also includes Howard Burnham, Justin Gaudoin, Justin Gordon, Jeff Heyer, Jennifer LeBlanc and others.

"Antony and Cleopatra" continues Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays through Nov. 5. All shows start at 7:30 p.m. expect matinees on Oct. 22 and Oct. 29, which begin at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are $8 to $38. The Circle Theatre is located on Monte Verde between Eighth and Ninth. KINKADE'S FIRST STUDIO AND GALLERY TURNS 25

By CHRIS COUNTS

FIVE YEARS after its namesake painter passed away, the Thomas Kinkade gallery on Der Ling Lane (a small passageway near Dametra restaurant on Ocean Avenue) will mark its 25th anniversary with three days of events.

The celebration starts Thursday, Oct. 26, when the downtown gallery hosts a ribbon-cutting ceremony from 5 to 6:30 p.m.

Before he became one of the best-selling painters in human history — and a target for critics who complained his work was too commercial or sentimental — Kinkade was walking around Carmel one day in 1991 when he stumbled upon the perfect place to establish his first studio and gallery.

“He was just exploring,” recalled Carolyn Keeler, who oversees three local Kinkade galleries. “He wandered down Der Ling Lane and found what was then a gardening shed.”

It took a year, but eventually Kinkade was able to lease the shed and make improvements to the space. “He got excited, and he made it happen,” Keeler explained.

Earlier in his career, Kinkade frequently painted in the gallery and studio. “He would come down, set up his easel, and interact with collectors,” she added.

Besides Thursday’s ribbon-cutting, the 25th anniversary celebration includes events at several locations Oct. 27-29.

Friday’s festivities include a 4 p.m. reception at the gallery, and a 7:30 p.m. screening of the 2008 film “Christmas Cottage,” which is based on Kinkade’s life, at the Church of the Wayfarer.

On Saturday, from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m., the late painter’s brother, Patrick Kinkade, and nephew, Zachary Kinkade, will share stories about him at gallery in Carmel. The pair will do the same Sunday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the Monterey Kinkade gallery, which can be found at 381 Cannery Row.

Call (831) 624-3363 or visit www.thomaskinkade.com.

■ Hello Carmel Valley

A gallery that has been a familiar site along Highway 1 in Big Sur for 17 years, Local Color is making the move to Carmel Valley Village.

Owners Francesca Mellinger and Ondine Gorton — who represent numerous Big Sur artists — have opened what they are calling A Taste of Local Color in the Big Sur Vineyard tasting room at 1 Del Fino Place.

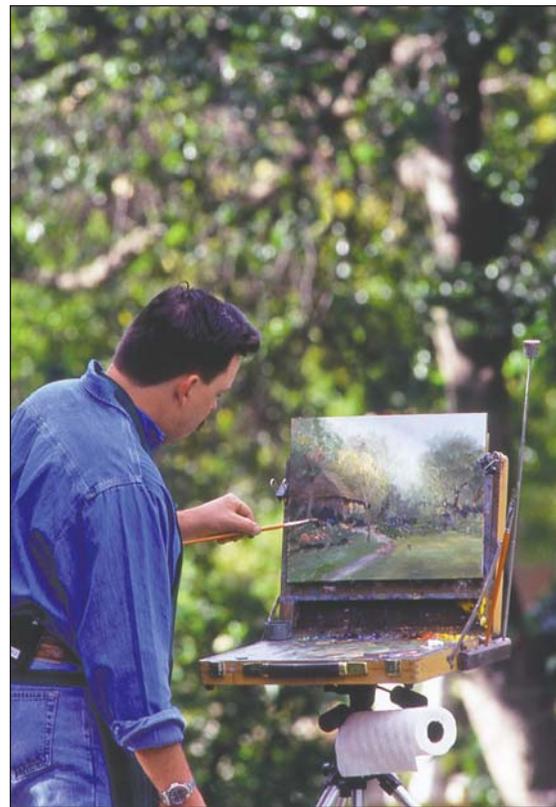

The gallery has long been located in the Village Shops, a small shopping center just south of the Big Sur River Inn. But the recent sale of the shopping center made the move necessary. “A developer bought the building we are in, and we’re not in their plans for the future,” Mellinger explained.

After Lenora Carey offered the Mellinger and Ondine 200 square-feet of space in her tasting room, they made the move.

Mellinger said she’s optimistic that the gallery — which will showcase Big Sur painters Erin Gafill, Tom Huntington and Dale Diesel among many others — will prosper in Carmel Valley, although she said the business will eventually need a larger space.

“Until then, we’re a perfect pair with Lenora’s yummy wines,” she added. “We love being in the valley.”

The new gallery is open Wednesday through Sunday. Call (831) 652-3020.

Served Noon-8pm Thanksgiving Day

Run harder, run smarter, but most important of all, stick together to win

CELEBRATIONS AWAIT the athlete who scores a touchdown, dents the volleyball court with a noisy spike, or serves a sizzling ace.

When cross-country runners await the starter's gun, the only guarantee is this: 10 minutes down the road, each of their bodies will feel like a wolverine is trying to claw its way out.

Runners are a lonely breed. They don't compete for the pep rallies, bonfires, leaping cheerleaders, and newspaper headlines. They only expect aching legs and flaming lungs, and maybe a stabbing sensation in the ribcage as they fight their way up a diabolical hill in Toro Park, with a mile still to run.

"You have to want it. You have to be willing to hurt," said Carmel High cross-country coach Tom Clifford. "You have to be mentally prepared to push yourself through exhaustion, and that's a really hard thing to do. You have to be willing to suffer."

For a coach, that's a tough sell — it's much easier for a kid to sit on a sofa and play video games with a bowl of Cheetos — but Clifford sounds like a doting father when he discusses his Padres, who are entering the homestretch of their 2017 season.

The boys squad, led by seniors Kenshi Husted, Nathan Suess, and Ryan Chaney, are looking for a way to sneak past powerhouse rivals Pacific Grove, Greenfield and King City, and win the Mission Trail Athletic League championship. Clifford doesn't sugarcoat the reality that they'll have their work cut out for them when the league convenes at Toro Park for the MTAL Championships on Nov. 2, and again at the same venue on Nov. 11 for the Central Coast Section meet.

A group effort

Husted ranks among the league's best with a season-best time of 16 minutes, 33 seconds, for the traditional 3.1-mile (5-kilometer) distance, and an expectation that he could beat last year's personal record — 15:56 — before he's done. Suess ran a season-best 17:04 at Clovis on Oct. 7, where Chaney had a personal-record 17:42.

But, there's an odd little secret about cross country: It's a group effort. Seven varsity runners compete in a big meet, and everybody needs to grind hard.

"I had a coach at Stanford who said cross country is the most individual sport, and also the most team sport, simultaneously," Clifford said. "You can have a guy who blazes, and sets record, but if your team is going to win, you need seven guys who are going to run hard. You might have the first four runners across the finish line, but if your fifth guy is, say, third from last, you're probably not going to win the meet."

Cross-country runners strive to achieve a pack mentality, bunching together as they run, supporting each other through the exhaustion and the pain. Teams that bunch well tend to score well. Teams whose runners are spread widely across the course ... don't.

While Carmel's boys have a dark-horse chance of winning the league, the girls loom as the MTAL's thoroughbreds.

"We are the hunted, as opposed to the hunters," said Clifford, whose girls squad presents the most-pleasant kind of problem for any coach: Depth. Nine of his athletes have varsity-level times in a sport that only allows a seven-person varsity roster.

Juniors Colleen Lang and Sarah Tuck, and freshman Rachel Suess have emerged as the top three, but sophomore Pascale Montgomery, juniors Sarah Morgan and Maggie Ellison, sophomores Gianna Herrera and Natalie Mazaud, and freshman Alana O'Brien provide the kind of cohesiveness that could take Carmel all the way to state as a team.

A secret weapon, said the coach, is the camaraderie of the girls team. They like each other, hang out with each other, push each other to get better. The team dynamic could make a difference when the trophies are on the line.

"We'll have to run smart to make that happen," Clifford said. "That means don't get ahead of ourselves, know what our mile paces should be, work together as a team."

"We have some really fast teams in our section, but we'd like to qualify for the state meet," he said. "In fact, I think it will feel like a disappointment if we don't."

Looking ahead (Oct. 20-26)

- Carmel High field hockey will host

Salinas on Monday, Christopher on Tuesday, and San Benito on Thursday, all with 3:30 p.m. starting times.

■ The Padres' girls golf team competes Tuesday at the MBL Championship tournament, scheduled for 12 noon.

■ Girls tennis entertains Gonzalez on Tuesday (2:45 p.m.) and travels to Oakwood on Thursday (3:30 p.m.)

■ The cross-country squad, boys and girls, will compete in Thursday in a 4 p.m. dual meet at Pacific Grove.

■ Girls volleyball is home against Gonzales on Monday, then plays its regular season finale against King City on Wednesday. Both matches start at 6 p.m.

■ Carmel girls water polo is in San Jose on Friday (3 p.m.) and Saturday (all day) for the Lincoln High Invitational. The Padres play Tuesday and Saturday in the Monterey Bay League tournament (Times and locations TBA).

■ Carmel High football has a bye week and will return to action on Oct. 28 at home against King City at 2 p.m.

Small touches make a life beautiful

ALTHOUGH HER passion for her adopted hometown made her rather vocal during the parking meter kerfuffle awhile back (she was agin 'em), Sheree Smith, who has been the owner of Carrigg's at Ocean and San Carlos since 2013, is normally pretty quiet.

She prefers to let her design esthetic do the talking, and talk it does. The furniture and decorating shop is already brimming with 15 trees decked out for the upcoming Christmas season. There's also a whole display of ornaments painted by a local artist and another one dedicated to ornaments depicting various dog breeds.

"It wouldn't be Carmel without dogs," she explained. When the holidays haven't taken over, the shop is a go-to spot for people who want a beautiful, rustic dining room table or a comfy leather chair — or maybe a hippo sculpture to perch on a coffee table, or a custom-made wrought-iron chandelier.

There's also a near-life-size portrait of Gene Kelly, looking suave and debonair as ever, not to mention blinged-out frames for your family photos.

Sheree originally came to work at the store because she's a helpful sort of woman. And because she grew up in Elk Grove, near Sacramento, with Jo Anne Smith (no relation), who's the younger sister of Carrigg's former owner, Mary Ann Carrigg.

Elk Grove is where the whole story starts. Sheree said she comes by her creativity naturally. Her great-grandmother on her mother's side was a real original, who, for recreation, liked zipping around the countryside on her Indian motorcycle. Her grandmother (motorcycle mama's daughter) was a wiz of a designer, who could decorate a room, start to finish. "There was nothing she couldn't do," said Sheree. "She could hang wallpaper, paint — she could do it all."

Carrigg, who's 10 years older than Sheree, made a solid impression, too. "She put on fabulous parties for Halloween. I was always in awe," Sheree said.

Great Lives

By ELAINE HESSER

For Sheree's mom and dad, Christmas was "a big deal." So, naturally, her mother designed and sewed matching Mr. and Mrs. Claus costumes for them, and they'd have anywhere from 50 to 75 kids over to the house (in addition to Sheree and her three younger brothers) for goodies. Her grandfather's contribution, since he was a welder with the railroad, was to make Santa's belt buckle.

Then they got the idea to visit nursing homes and let residents get their pictures taken with Santa. Some of them, who were kids during World War I, had never had a photo with the jolly old elf, and were particularly delighted. Sheree said her mother

INSIDE THE MIND OF THE ARTIST — WITH THE PIGS AND THE FAIRIES

SHE CONSIDERS herself a recluse. What Dolores Chiappone enjoys most, she says, is solitude, particularly the sanctuary of her own art studio, when she's in "the zone" — that intensely private place in the mind where she goes to be alone with her art.

"It's an inner world, and I don't know how to describe it," Chiappone said. "I look at my work afterward and I'm always amazed. I wonder where it came from."

Her paintings are fantasy — things we might see in our wildest dreams, if we're fortunate enough to dream in vivid color about hybrids of people, animals and plants, surrounded with orbs or skulls. A monkey wears a pretty, white bow in her hair. A beauty sits in a forest, her bare leg draped over two serene-looking pigs. A man in an open robe dances with a skeleton.

Sometimes her beings wear masks ... or sunglasses. They are playful, or haunting, or peaceful — sometimes in equal parts.

"I live inside my own head, but I can't paint what I see in my head. It's just too complicated," said Chiappone, who hints that her next show, scheduled in June at the Carmel Art Association, might include "a few fat fairies." She believes in fairies, she says, because, at age 86, she has given herself permission to believe.

An immigrant's daughter

Chiappone's father, a Sicilian immigrant, brought their family of four from Rochester, N.Y., to Southern California during World War II, working as a furniture finisher. Dolores, still a child, often decorated that furniture with her fanciful artwork.

But fantasy and real life seldom intersect. Her father was an abusive man, and Dolores grew up to marry somebody just like him. For whatever reason, she tended to attract that type, she said.

The birth of Dolores' second son sent her life into a tailspin in the early 1950s, a time when nobody had ever heard of postpartum depression. Her children were taken away and sent to live with her husband's parents, who wouldn't allow her to visit. At her breaking point, she scooped up the boys and fled to Mexico, landing in Mazatlan.

She and the boys were found. Her sons were taken away again and raised by her in-laws. She was emotionally crushed — even suicidal, she said — but knew it was for the best. "I was not doing well down there, alone and depressed with two children," she said.

Chiappone dissolved into her art, surviving as a furniture maker and as a painter. She also fell in love with Mexico.

"The color, the light, the people ... the energy there was so different from anything I had ever experienced. It was a different world," she said. "Sometimes it's easy to believe in past-life memories. It's a feeling that maybe, somewhere in your genetic structure, there are memories of a different culture."

Although the Mexican government required her to leave the country every six months, Chiappone usually made a U-turn and came right back in, settling in a different location. She lived and worked there, on and off, from 1960 until 1978, enjoying the culture and the adventure in Mexico City, Puerto Vallarta, and Tlaquepaque, a small village near Guadalajara.

Some of it was harrowing. She said Mexican bandits commonly blocked the road would run the film down to the drugstore and get the prints developed during two-for-one sales.

Meanwhile, Sheree got into arts and crafts, including tole painting, which enjoyed a resurgence of popularity in the 1970s. It's a decorative form of folk art fairly common in New England and Pennsylvania, where artists paint flowers, patterns or other designs on furniture and other objects found around the house.

She married the boy next door. There was a seven-year age difference between them, so back when he went off to serve his country in Vietnam, she was a gawky 14-year-old. When he came back several years later, however, they started dating.

After the wedding, she bought her first set of furniture from Mary Ann — who by then was already in business — including a big French farmhouse table Sheree simply adored. They raised two sons, and lived happily for quite some time. Sheree worked for the state water board and had a part-time job with a friend who had a decorating business.

Out of the blue

However, after 26 years of marriage, Sheree's husband was diagnosed with brain cancer in his early 50s. He was gone within six months, leaving behind Sheree and her two sons, who were then in their late teens. Not long after, doctors discovered she had breast cancer. She said she was terribly worried that she'd also die, and her sons would be left with no parents.

Sheree said that at the worst of chemo and radiation, she could see the fear in their eyes, because she was so emaciated. Even so, she turned her attention to helping others in the only way she could come up with. During her chemo sessions, using a Martha Stewart pattern, she made stuffed dogs out of socks and handed them out to the other patients.

After Sheree recovered, she found herself taking care of her parents. Her father had Parkinson's disease, and her mother had cancer. She also took care of her aging in-laws. "You do what you need for your family, you know?" she said.

All the while, she'd remained friends with Jo Anne and Mary Ann. One weekend, while she was still caring for her parents, she and Jo Anne came here to visit with Mary Ann, who promptly broke her ankle, and asked if Sheree could mind the store.

Why not? She stayed at Mary Ann's house and drove back and forth to check on her folks. After a while, she decided to stay and continue to work at Carrigg's as a salesperson. She just liked the people, and working with all the beautiful items in the shop. She also enjoys decorating people's homes and businesses, especially at the holidays.

She rented out her house in Elk Grove and sent for her furniture — except the farmhouse table, which was too large for the small rental she'd found here. She passed it along to a young couple who needed it.

Some months later, that couple bought her Elk Grove home, and moved the table back in. That pleased Sheree immensely. She now lives in the northwest end of town. And in 2013, when Mary Ann decided to retire, Sheree bought the business from her, "to keep it in the family," she said.

You see, everyone who becomes close to Sheree becomes part of her extended family. That includes elderly customers she helps shepherd around on their daily errands, sometimes sending her son or nephew along to make sure they get to their next stop safely.

Now she's gearing up for another season of fancying up Carmelites' mantles and trees. There's also a fundraiser for Dance Kids Nov. 18-19, when 20 percent of her sales will go to support their production of "Nutcracker."

She's happy giving back to her community. "It's such a charming place," she said softly, with a smile.

Musical chairs for judges

By KELLY NIX

A LONGTIME Monterey County Superior Court Judge will take over as the county's presiding judge, while a judge who has been assigned to the civil division for the past seven years will handle misdemeanors when the new year kicks off, according to the newly released list of judicial assignments.

The 2018 list, which indicates the types of civil and criminal cases Monterey County judges will be assigned to, shows that Judge Lydia M. Villarreal will take over as the presiding judge. She's currently the assistant presiding judge.

Monterey County Superior Court Judge Thomas Wills will move from being the supervising judge of the civil division in Monterey — where he's been since 2010 — to handling misdemeanor criminal trials in Salinas.

Other shakeups in the system include transferring Heidi K. Whilden from the Family Law Division in Monterey to Salinas, where she'll handle DUI treatment court, veteran's treatment, mental health and juvenile cases and other cases.

On Wednesday, Monterey County presiding judge Mark Hood announced that Julie R. Culver will take over as the assistant presiding judge in 2018. Villarreal, who currently handles prison and parole cases, will handle complex civil cases, judicial administration and jury orientation in 2018, while Timothy P. Roberts will go from overseeing juvenile delinquency cases to filling Villarreal's current role. Hood will go from handling felony arraignments, jury orientation and being the Monterey County Grand Jury's legal advisor, to handling felony domestic violence and trials.

Also, Robert A. Burlison, who handles felony cases, is assigned to handling combined drug court and appellate cases in 2018, while Stephanie E. Hulseley will go from overseeing misdemeanor arraignments to being a legal advisor to the grand jury and handling juvenile delinquency cases.

on horseback. If a car stopped, the occupants would be robbed. Chiappone eventually learned to extend an arm and signal to the bandits, then step on the gas, a technique that invariably sent the horsemen scurrying. "I did that several times," she said.

On another occasion she went with a friend to a local nightclub, where they were befriended by "beautiful people" who had sailed into Puerto Vallarta on a yacht.

"They invited us to join them for dinner, but shortly after we sat down we were surrounded by federal police who arrested everybody at the table," she recounted. "They took us all to jail, where I watched the police torture the others. They put guns to their heads and made them stand with their arms extended."

The next flight home

Chiappone learned that her new "friends" apparently had been running drugs on their yacht. She, too, was in trouble for being an associate.

"I had lived in Mexico long enough to understand how things worked," she said.

The federales took her to a local bank, where she withdrew $1,000 to hand over to the chief, along with her promise to exit the country. At the last moment, the chief inexplicably showed mercy and returned her money, but put Chiappone on the next flight to the United States anyway. She was forced to leave all of her worldly belongings behind.

Again, she returned to Mexico, but by 1978, she was ready to leave for good and was invited by Larry and Dee Dee Loftus — Carmel gallery owners and longtime patrons of her artwork — to come to the Monterey Peninsula.

For 28 years, her art was showcased at Luciano Antiques on San Carlos Street, co-owned by Luciano Tempo and Traylor Dunwoody. It was there that she also met employee Inge Kessler, who, nearly five decades later, remains one of her closest friends. Kessler helps her today as an assistant.

"I sincerely appreciate people who like my work, and buy my work — it's just miraculous to me, because it's kept me going all these years," she said. "It's still a thrill when somebody buys one of my paintings, because somebody sees you, and somehow what you've done is meaningful to them."

Chiappone was juried into the Carmel Art Association in 1982. Her work can be seen at the CAA gallery on Dolores Street, between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

Foundation offers Medicare update

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

THE CARMEL Foundation, the nonprofit that serves members age 55 and older, is bringing in an expert to talk about Medicare Wednesday, Oct. 25, from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Tamara McKee from Alliance on Aging will discuss the costs and changes to Medicare for next year. Open enrollment for the government-funded healthcare plan began Oct. 15. The talk will take place in the foundation's Diment Hall at Eighth and Lincoln, and is free and open to the public.

The foundation provides the bulk of the city's senior housing, serves low-cost meals, loans out medical equipment, facilitates shopping excursions and field trips, holds a wide range of classes, and offers other services. It's funded by dues, fees, donations and grants, but no tax dollars. For more information, contact Leticia Bejarano at (831) 620-8705 or email lbejarano@carmelfoundation.org.

You can ride around all day with your broker and talk about the houses you like, or get the deal done on the one you want.
