NEW YORK — Hideo Nomo became the first Japanese player picked for an All-Star game, and six Cleveland players were chosen for the first time since 1955.

Ken Griffey Jr., Matt Williams and Ozzie Smith were elected as starters Sunday even though they're injured and will miss the July 1 game in Arlington, Texas.

Among the Indians, second baseman Carlos Baerga and outfielder Albert Belle were voted in as starters, and AL manager Buck Showalter said Kenny Lofton will take Griffey's place in the starting lineup.

The other Indians picked were outfielder Manny Ramirez and pitchers Dennis Martinez and Jose Mesa.

"I could have easily chose a few more," said Showalter, the manager of the New York Yankees. "I thought long and hard of Eddie Murray. He certainly was worthy of consideration."

Murray got his 3,000th Friday night but broke two ribs Sunday. The Indians are 42-18, the best record in baseball, and have a 10-game lead in the AL Central.

"Now people have to realize what good players we have around here," Baerga said.

With his selection, Lofton's salary next year automatically jumps from $3.1 million to $3.5 million.

"I'm still pretty new and so I'm still not sure what it'll be like," he said. "But it is an honor, especially to go with so many teammates."
Nomo, the Los Angeles Dodgers pitcher with a 2.05 ERA, was among five first-time All-Stars on the NL staff, joined by Denny Neagle of Pittsburgh, Carlos Perez of Montreal, and Tyler Green and Heathcliff Slocumb of Philadelphia. "I didn't think I could come this far," Nomo said through a translator.

Anyway, now that I've had a few days to recover from bonehead checks like Caffey, I've put together a few things that crossed my mind. I scanned this year's draft list.

Orlando brought in Tree Rollins to give Shaq a breather, while Houston's Charles Jones played a quality minutes when Hakeem Odeje was out.

Fraud costs UI $500,000

Iowa state universities lose nearly $1 million in investment scandal

Patricia Harris
The Daily Iowan

Fraudulent transactions by a securities trader have cost the UI about $500,000 in lost interest on $40 million in university investments.

The Common Fund, a non-profit organization run by 1,400 U.S. colleges and universities — including the UI — announced Sunday the details of the fraudulent trade. Common Fund hires managers to handle investment for colleges and universities.

All three Iowa state universities — the UI, Iowa State University and the University of Northern Iowa — lost money in the venture. Collectively, the fraudulent trade cost the schools almost $1 million.

Kent Ahrens, a trader for First Capital Strategists, a money-management firm from York, Pa., made unauthorized trades resulting in lower interest rates for some UI investments. First Capital was contracted by Common Fund to handle some securities trades.

Representatives for Common Fund said the loss of interest started about three years ago, when Ahrens lost money on an unauthorized trade. Instead of telling superiors about the loss, he tried to repair the damage through other unsanctioned trades, but the losses piled up. Common Fund discovered the fraud last week.

Doug True, UI vice president and treasurer for Finance and University Services, said the $500,000 lost from the trade had not yet been earmarked for anything specific at the UI, so the loss will have no immediate effects on programs or projects.

"We don't spend money before we get it," True said. "There will be no programs affected by this; we haven't used this money for anything."

The Common Fund Intermediate Cash Pool, the fund affected by the fraudulent trade, contained $40 million of the UI's operating fund — 12 percent of the UI's total operating fund. The principle on the investment — or the entire amount invested — remained unchanged. But the trade affected the cash pool's interest rate.

The investment was intended to fetch an interest rate of 8.2 percent for the three state universities; instead, due to the fraudulent trade, the rate was 6.9 percent for

How the UI lost in the Common Fund

The UI lost $500,000 in interest on a $40 million investment in the Common Fund, a non-profit organization run by 1,400 colleges and universities nationwide. Iowa State University, the University of Northern Iowa, and the UI collectively lost nearly $1 million when Kent Ahrens, a trader for First Capital Strategists, which represents the fund, made unauthorized trades.

- Ahrens makes unauthorized trades which results in lower than expected returns.
- Ahrens secretly continues trading to recover initial losses, but fails; instead of an 8.8 percent return on investments, the three universities profit only 6.9 percent over 11 months.
- The UI has been affiliated with the fund for nine years.

Women choosing between job, kids

Christie Midthun
The Daily Iowan

For women of the 1980s, life was a circus.

They carefully juggled careers, family and housework, trying hard not to drop the ball. These women wanted it all — they strove to sustain a successful career and a happy family. But in the '90s, studies show women are shying away from the three-ring circus and making a choice between career and family.

In a poll conducted by the Roper Organization, 79 percent of 1,027 adults surveyed said the key to being a successful person is having a happy family life. The study also found personal fulfillment is top priority on Generation Xers' lists.

While baby boomer women saw their mothers trapped in domestic drudgery, many Generation Xers see themselves as victims of parental neglect. "Twentysomething: Managing and Motivating Today's New Work Force," a book by Claire Raines and Lawrence

'Maybe the rain will wash away the stupidity'

It was a really beautiful Fourth of July, huh? Rockets' wet glare, the bombs bursting in the clouds. The thunderstorm really stole the show. (It rained on our parade, so to speak.)

But the inclement weather didn't keep stupid people off the street — or stupid things from happening. But let me start with a personal story about some people who needed a clue.

Last Wednesday, I called the electric company to get the power turned on in my new apartment. They said, "OK, but it'll cost extra to do it after hours." (I had called at 4:59 p.m.; they close at 5 p.m.)

I told them it was no problem, to go ahead and do it. I started moving my stuff from my girlfriend's apartment (sniff!) to my new place.

At midnight, it was still pitch black, so I called and told them to wait until Thursday so I wouldn't have to pay extra. The electric company said no problem. Thursday goes by with no electricity. I'm thinking, "What the hell is going on here?"

So I call one more time, and then I leave town. On Sunday, I come back, and there's still no damn power. It usually only takes 30 minutes to turn on the power, and Iowa Illinois Gas & Electric Company told me I didn't need to be there to have my power turned on.

Guess what? I called again. (At least the phone company turned on my service on time!) This time, the woman assured me her records showed my electricity was on, and told me to check all the switches in the breaker box. I turned them all off and back on, just like she said.

Nothing. I'll be damned. So after a phone call in the most irate voice I could muster, the woman on the other end told me to call my landlord, because something must be wrong with my apartment.

Like what? The alternator was broken? My apartment needed new spark plugs? I ran down to the apartment-parts store and then stopped at Jiffy Lube to ask them for advice.

Late Sunday night, my landlord plugged an extension cord into the hall outlet for me and plugged in a light, so when I got home from work at about 2:30 a.m., I could see to go to the bathroom.

Monday morning, 9:30. The phone rings — it's the electric company telling me someone will be there that morning to turn on the juice. To me, morning ends at noon. The electric company's morning ends around 4 p.m. They asked me to leave my apartment open for them, because they just realized someone had to get in to light the pilot light.

Six days later, my electricity was turned on. Why did it take so long, you ask? Because the electric company went to North Linn Street, not South Linn Street, like I told them. Absolutely brilliant, eh? I guess that's why we have anti-trust laws — so I could call the other guy (if there were one).

So there, Iowa Illinois. Nana nana boo-boo, stick your head in doo-doo. And you know what else? I'm smarter than the electric company's computers. Computers don't know anything — they're trying to take over the world — sort of like H.A.L. in "2001: A Space Odyssey."

And they're going to do it by turning off all the electricity — and then all the water and soon it'll be like "Maximum Overdrive." The cars and trucks are going to rebel, and even televisions will get into the act, showing only infomercials (with fake phone numbers) and reruns of the "700 Club" and "Gerald."

Be afraid. Be very afraid. It's not really going to happen, unless you are on acid, and then it'll only happen for eight to 10 hours or so. But anyway, let me tell you about this guy I saw over the weekend.

I think he was a real-life Butt-Head, escaped from MTV. He was walking around the Ped Mall, and as he walked behind a girl in a skirt he said, "Heh-heh, bend over, girl."

I could have sworn she was going to, but she saw he was wearing a sleeveless flannel shirt and jeans. It may not sound bad on paper, but think about it. If it's hot enough to wear a shirt with no sleeves, it's probably too hot for jeans.

I hate that. Even if you have big muscles — or a lot of tattoos or something like that — get some #$$ sleeves. I think sleeveless flannel shirts are stupid anyway, but with long pants — damn, get a clue. Might as well wear a down jacket with shorts, smart guy.

Oh well, not everyone can be the outstanding fashion plate I am. To each his own. In any case, maybe the rain will wash away the stupidity. Let's hope so.

Oh, to those of you who didn't have a great Independence Day, there's always July 8, which is when Coralville is holding its fireworks. The people in Coralville must have asked Iowa Illinois to help out with the lighting.

Settlement approved in suit over musician Vaughan's death

DALLAS (AP) — The family of blues guitarist Stevie Ray Vaughan has settled its lawsuit over his death in a 1990 helicopter crash for an undisclosed sum.

Vaughan

An Illinois judge approved the settlement between Vaughan's mother, brother and Omniflight Helicopters Inc. of Dallas, Tom Davis, an Austin lawyer for the Vaughans, said Monday.

The helicopter crashed into a ski hill near an Elkhorn, Wis., amphitheater, where Vaughan had completed an outdoor concert with Jimmie Vaughan, Eric Clapton, Buddy Guy and Robert Cray. Vaughan, 35, was killed along with the pilot and three Clapton associates.

The lawsuit alleged Omniflight was negligent in allowing an unqualified pilot to fly the helicopter and the pilot was negligent for taking off in a dense fog. A National Transportation Safety Board investigation found that "improper planning-decision" by the pilot was the main probable cause of the crash.

Omniflight in November 1992 settled a lawsuit with the families of two of the other crash victims for more than $2 million.

Rock memorabilia rolls into new hall of fame

CLEVELAND (AP) — The rock has landed. With the Rock 'n Roll Hall of Fame and Museum set to open Sept. 1, the installation of exhibits began this week.

A blue suede jacket worn by Elvis Presley, a sequined white outfit worn by Carl Perkins, Roy Orbison's glasses, Johnny Cash's guitar and tuxedos from the Temptations are among the first brought out of storage.

The artifacts, part of exhibits on Memphis in the 1950s and a separate rhythm and blues display, will be assembled over the next several weeks, said Ileen Sheppard Gallagher, director of exhibitions.

The I.M. Pei-designed building alongside Lake Erie is finished, but installers "need every hour" to get the collection and its interactive audio and video exhibits ready, executive director Dennis Barrie said.

"This is the time when you see the heart and soul of the place," he said.

Singer Jarreau's melodies cover all categories

MONTREAL (AP) — Singer Al Jarreau has no complaints about his career, even if some people can't decide where he fits in — pop? jazz? or rhythm and blues?

Jarreau, who has won Grammys in all three divisions, said he's "an R&B and pop singer, as well."

Jarreau, whose career took off in 1977 with "Look to the Rainbow," had his first-ever appearance at the Montreal International Jazz Festival on Monday.

At a news conference before the concert, Jarreau said the traditional live-music club scene is becoming extinct.

"It's dinosaur stuff," said Jarreau, who wanted to call his latest album Dinosaur, but could not convince the recording company.

"I'm a dinosaur. Proud of it," said a finger-snapping Jarreau, looking anything but prehistoric in a stylish black T-shirt and cap. "We're dealing with decision-makers who get nervous about everything."

Coffeehouse

Moir Crowley
The Daily Iowan

Whether it be a delicate Vietnamese roast in hand-painted china or a full-bodied cup of Folger's a chipped ceramic mug, all coffee drinkers have their preferred drink.

Tara Cronbaugh, owner of the Iowa City Coffee Co., 15 S. Dubuque St., and The Java House, 211 1/2 E. Washington St., will venture to New York City Thursday to help other coffee entrepreneurs learn to brew the perfect blend.

The coffee seminar is sponsored by The Specialty Coffee Association of America, the largest specialty coffee trade association in the United States. Executive Director Ted Lingle said the association is dedicated to fostering coffee excellence through education and information exchange.

"The coffee industry is a growing business," Lingle said. "In 1991, the association had 35 members. Today, we have more than 2,200."

Even though the coffee shop business is experiencing a cross continental boom, Lingle said the market has yet to be saturated.

"Think of it like a restaurant," he said. "If a town only had one place to eat, dinners on Friday and Saturday nights would become boring. By having several coffee shops in town, people are given some variety."

The two-day seminar will teach proper brewing technique for espresso and cappuccino, and students will also refine their flavor recognition. It's imperative to know the difference between coffee imported from Columbia and from Kenya, Lingle said.

Cronbaugh, who has been in the coffee trade for 18 months and is the youngest member of the association, said she will gladly offer help and advice to anyone starting their own business.

"There are some people in the organization who have 50 stores and who have been in business for 20 years," she said. "We

"Think of it like a restaurant," he said. "If a town only had one place to eat, dinners on Friday and Saturday nights would become boring. By having several coffee shops in town, people are given some variety."

The two-day seminar will teach proper brewing techniques for espresso and cappuccino, and students will also refine their flavor recognition. It's imperative to know the difference between coffee imported from Columbia and from Kenya, Lingle said.

Besides the quality of beans and necessary steps to follow, Bradley Hamilton, an employee at The Java House, 211 1/2 E. Washington St., said making a good cup of coffee also involves "a little bit of love in every cup."

grounds."

With the preponderance of flavored coffees, chocolates and whipped cream concoctions, America's taste buds have become more discriminating. Lingle said people can no longer tolerate cold, gas station coffee with grounds swirling to the bottom.

"The specialty coffees have made commercial coffee barely palatable," he said.

Even though the specialty-coffee bandwagon is traveling at warp speed, some die-hard caffeine junkies refuse to become part of the trend.

For the past two months, cross-country traveler Matthew Grieshaber has been living in his Volkswagen Microbus and waking up to instant coffee.

Grieshaber said his two cups in the morning are compulsory — strong and black — swigged out of his favorite ceramic mug with "hallelujah" scratched in one side.

Grieshaber said he gets just as much delight out of instant coffee than the specialty coffees and doesn't understand what all the fuss is about.

"I'll just pour some boiling water over rocks and I'm there," he said.

Calif. governor visits Iowa during campaign trailblaze

Mike Glover
Associated Press

CLEAR LAKE, Iowa — California Gov. Pete Wilson on Tuesday said his Republican presidential rivals will be "bitterly disappointed" at his ability to organize a grassroots campaign for the party's nomination.

"They don't know any better," said Wilson. "They're finding out the hard way."

Wilson was short on substance, but long on campaign color as he wrapped up a long holiday weekend stumping in states holding important early tests along the trail of primaries and caucuses that will yield a nominee.

He trudged through a Fourth of July parade under leaden skies and huddled with backers in local restaurants in a small resort city jammed with holiday vacationers.

Critics like GOP Gov. Terry Branstad have labeled Wilson a media politician unsuited for the folksy, grassroots style of small states like Iowa, which hold key early tests along the campaign trail.

Pumping hands and greeting backers, Wilson dismissed that criticism.

"You know the ones I hear that from?" said Wilson. "The ones who hope it's true and are being bitterly disappointed because they are discovering that it isn't."

While Wilson conceded his most recent campaigns for U.S. Senate and governor have been expensive, high-profile races dominated by television, he harkened back to earlier campaigns.

"I've been doing this for, I hate to tell you, pretty close to 30 years," he said. "When I first ran for the Legislature, I went to, I think, damn near every house in the district."

The weekend swing through Iowa was Wilson's second trip to a state where precinct caucuses in February mark the first test of the campaign trail, and those events generally draw a relative handful of people. About 125,000 are expected to attend, and campaigning for them puts a premium on face-to-face stumping, attracting backers one at a time.

It's a style Wilson said he knows well.

"I've been doing this for a long time," he said. "The false hope on the part of the competition is that because California is a large state and obviously you have to do television, they don't think I've ever done it."

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole is generally considered the prohibitive favorite in the state, with his home in nearby Kansas and a long political history in the state. State Republican leaders argue the race is shaping up as a contest to see who can emerge as the alternative to Dole.

Wilson conceded that will be a demanding and time-consuming task, but said he will be able to devote attention to the campaign trail despite the pressures of running the nation's most populous state.

Some critics had pointed to his weekend campaign swing as an example of the competing demands on his time. California ended its budget year on Friday without a new spending plan in place and tough legislative bargaining continues.

Wilson dismissed that worry, saying the budget is likely to be resolved by later in the month and he will be freer to campaign.

"Once we've got the budget done, the next constitutional responsibility that I have that is somewhat time-consuming is the bill signings when the Legislature goes home," said Wilson.

That will come in September, well before most primary voters are paying much attention to the campaign, he said.

Other critics have said Wilson is beginning the run for the party's presidential nomination well behind other candidates. While Dole's history in Iowa dates to 1978, other rivals have had campaign organizations in place in the state for months and were active aiding other Republicans in the last election.

Wilson said he's assembled a full-blown campaign staff in the state and begun recruiting important local backers such as state Senate Republican leader Jack Rife of Durant, Iowa.

Tugboats detach ships rammed together by crash

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Two cargo ships were wrenched apart by tugboats Tuesday after being jammed together for three days since they collided in the Gulf of Mexico.

The bow of the empty Greek freighter Alexia had been embedded in the side of the Enif, a Singapore-flagged vessel carrying 1,500 tons of steel.

Salvage experts had been concerned because of heavy seas and rising wind, so crews worked through the night to cut away tangled metal, said Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Jim Obermeyer.

The ships were finally pulled apart by tugs.

"There were three tied off to the two vessels and they basically pulled them apart as if they were tugs," said Coast Guard Lt. Scott Weems.

Tugs were in place to stabilize the ships, especially the Enif, which could have listed dangerously after the vessels were separated, said Cmdr. Phil Glenn.

Neither was in any danger of sinking, he said.

The Enif spilled about 93,000 gallons of fuel into the Gulf of Mexico, but the Coast Guard said there was no immediate environmental danger.

Weems said salvage crews would remove the remaining fuel from the Enif, which has no power, before moving it to port.

Potential toxic gas emitter found in Tokyo station

TOKYO (AP) — Rush-hour passengers were evacuated Tuesday when a device that could have released a lethal gas was found in a Tokyo subway station. No one was injured, and the container was removed before it could work.

Police were treating the incident as a case of attempted murder, but said there was no immediate link with the cult accused in the March 20 nerve gas attack that killed 12 people and sickened 5,500 in Tokyo's subways.

Kyodo News Service said the chemicals found in the device at the Kayabacho subway station could kill about 8,800 people if they were combined to form the gas.

About four hours later, mysterious fumes were reported at a toilet in Tokyo's central railway station, and three people complained of teary eyes, police and fire officials said. Their condition was not immediately known.

A police official who spoke on condition of anonymity said a cleaning woman found the device Tuesday in a women's toilet at the Kayabacho station during evening rush-hour, put it in her trash bag and reported to police.

Irish violence continues over release of murderer

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Violence sparked by the release of a British soldier convicted of murder eased Tuesday, but a day was set on fire and a hospital was evacuated after a bomb threat.

Prime Minister John Major accused Sinn Fein, the party allied with the Irish Republican Army, of orchestrating rioting Monday in which more than 100 hijacked vehicles were set afire.

Speaking in the House of Commons, Major denied there was any political motive in the release of Pvt. Lee Clegg, a paratrooper sentenced in 1993 to life in prison for shooting a Roman Catholic teenage girl to death.

Conservative lawmakers, army officers and newspapers campaigned for Clegg's release. The decision came just a day before Major faced a Conservative Party leadership election.

Patients at South Tyrone Hospital in Dungannon were moved from their wards while bomb disposal experts checked a stolen bus parked outside. No bomb was found.

The leader of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, Cardinal Cahal Daly, described the release of Clegg as "a grave blunder" that overrode the course of law.

"There must now be urgent action in the case of other prisoners who had the experience of being caught up at a young age in troubles which they did not have any control over," Daly said in an interview on Irish radio.

'Cosmic ballet': Docked ships part

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Astronauts and cosmonauts watched their ships part and fade into the blackness of space Tuesday in an orbital pirouette ending five days of flying as a single craft.

"We're just shaking our heads at how quickly this has all gone by," said the space shuttle Atlantis' pilot, Charles Precourt. "It's as if it were a dream, that we didn't really live it, it happened so fast. ... But what a great time, what a great effort."

For a half hour, three craft hovered a few hundred feet from each other while hurtling around Earth at 5 miles a second: the Russian Soyuz capsule with two cosmonauts, Atlantis with eight passengers and the temporarily unstuffed Russian space station Mir.

Both crews recorded the historic moment on video and film, but the sun's glare spoiled many of the pictures.

"It's been an inspiring visit with our neighbors in space. We look forward to returning," said NASA's Mission Control.

"We agree with that ... we agree 100 percent," Atlantis' commander, Robert "Hoot" Gibson, replied as he backed the shuttle away from the station. "In one of the simulations, the words 'cosmic ballet' came to mind and I guess that's where we are now."

Atlantis is due back at Mir in late October with another crew. Altogether, six more dockings are planned over the next two years as a prelude to the construction of an international space station later this decade. And astronauts and cosmonauts already are talking of a shared trip to Mars.

NASA's Tommy Holloway, manager of the docking program, couldn't resist comparing this mission to the near-fatal Apollo 13 flight 25 years ago that's currently being glamorized by Hollywood.

"In the 'Apollo 13' movie, the character of (flight director) Gene Kranz said just prior to the entry that this will be NASA's finest hour," Holloway said. "Gene, I'm here to report to you that ... this is NASA's finest hour, and I expect it will continue for many years to come."

Cosmonauts Anatoly Solovyev and Nikolai Budarin began the undocking sequence by shoving off from Mir in the small Soyuz capsule and backing away 300 feet. They took the only videotape and photographs of the world's largest spacecraft in its entirety — the 100-ton Atlantis joined to the 123-ton Mir, each more than 120 feet long.

Video from Mir showed a grainy picture, with the joined shuttle and station off-center.

On the shuttle, the push of a button released the hooks binding the two craft together. Springs gently eased Atlantis away from Mir and the craft slowly separated.

At about that time, Mir began drifting off-course, possibly because of an on-board computer failure. Russian flight controllers ordered Solovyev and Budarin to hustle back to Mir; their Soyuz redocked safely.

For nearly 1 1/2 hours, Atlantis flew around Mir for picture-taking, then fired its thrusters 245 miles above South America to move into its own track.

"Bye-bye," Solovyev said softly.

Atlantis launched with seven occupants and will land Friday at Cape Canaveral, Fla., with eight. It is returning NASA astronaut Norman Thagard and Russian cosmonauts Vladimir Dezhurov and Gennady Strekalov, who had been living on Mir since mid-March.

Also aboard are hundreds of pounds of saliva, urine and blood collected by the three during their mission, as well as Russian equipment.

By the time Atlantis lands, the three will have spent 115 days in orbit; that's a U.S. record for Thagard.

FALSE RUMORS CLOUD RISK

HIV threatens Angolan soldiers

Christopher McDougall
Associated Press

SAURIMO, Angola — Dangerous ideas fly around an Angolan army campfire — sex with a virgin is a miracle cure, condoms cause impotence, girls can't get AIDS and a smelly root paste will clear it right up, anyway.

Soldiers relaxing with beers shout agreement — unaware they and their comrades are likely to kill more of their compatriots in the coming years of peace than they did during 20 years of civil war.

While other nations are mobilizing to combat the deadly virus, two decades of relentless fighting has turned Angola into "a lethally perfect petri dish for HIV," says Dr. Eben Moussi of the World Health Organization.

"Combat killed 500,000 Angolans; the first years of peace may kill 1 million," Moussi said. "Psychologically, physically, economically — Angola is not prepared for a disease that will hit with epidemic force."

Also at risk are more than 7,000 international troops and tens of thousands of aid workers from around the world who will soon be deployed across the southern African nation under a U.N. reconstruction plan.

Soon-to-be demobilized government and UNITA rebel troops pose the greatest threat. According to the Center for International and Strategic Studies, infection is so high among African soldiers they run a far greater risk of dying from AIDS than from warfare.

At least 65 percent of army hospital beds in Uganda and Zaire are filled by soldiers with AIDS. More than half of Zimbabwe's soldiers are infected with HIV, the virus causing the disease, according to the center's study.

Moussi believes at least 100,000 Angolan government and rebel troops — half the fighting force — are HIV-positive. They are marching home to civilians so war-weakened and vulnerable to disease Moussi calls them "lambs for the slaughter."

The fighting that broke out on the eve of Angola's independence from Portugal in 1975 has demolished hospitals, bankrupted health care coffers and crowded more than 80 percent of Angola's civilians into the government-held coastal region.

Forced migration to overcrowded refugee camps, combined with a life expectancy of 45 years, has broken down sexual taboos that would help restrain spread of the disease, said Angolan Public Health Director Dr. Antonika Hembe.

"And when you warn people about AIDS, they shrug," Hembe says. "Danger to them are mines, bandits, starvation. AIDS is at the end of the list."

And the rape and prostitution that trailed combat and helped spread the disease were further aided by sexual myths specific to Angola.

"Legend has it that sexual relations with a virgin girl can cure a man with a sexually transmitted disease," said Filgueiras.

Young Angolan girls are now five times as likely to be infected as boys of the same age.

"And people believe these tribal healers who tout a noxious ointment they say will cure AIDS, which they call 'war fatigue,'" Filgueiras added.

The rebels' top medical officer, Dr. Anastasio Sikato, contacted government doctors two days after the peace treaty was signed in November to ask for help battling the spread of AIDS among his troops.

"I am more fearful for the boys' lives now (more) than ever before," Sikato said by satellite phone from rebel headquarters.

Transfusions for wounded rebels have been arm-to-arm, with no screening for HIV, Sikato said. Condoms are not standard-issue in the guerrillas' field packs.

The disease is not strictly a health issue. Because AIDS attacks the country's most productive members — men and women between 16 and 35 years old — it will cut right to the heart of Angola's effort to rebuild and feed the two million people battling famine.

Predictions by Moussi:

- More teen-agers in AIDS wards

- Half the armed forces wiped out by the disease
- Growing famine as farms — short-handed — fail
- Industries collapsing through lack of managers
- A wild scramble to emigrate

LONDON — Pulling off the biggest gamble of his career, Prime Minister John Major defeated a right-wing challenger Tuesday to remain leader of a shaken and still deeply unpopular government.

"The time for division is over. We have made our choice. It is a clear-cut choice beyond any doubt whatsoever."

British Prime Minister John Major, who defeated a right-wing challenger in Tuesday's election

claimed a decisive victory and said he would announce a new Cabinet today.

John Redwood, who quit the 22-member Cabinet last week to run against Major as Conservative Party leader and prime minister, got 89 votes. He acknowledged defeat and said Major "has won fair and square."

"The time for division is over," Major said, appearing outside his Downing Street office soon after the result was announced at the nearby House of Commons. "We have made our choice. It is a clear-cut choice beyond any doubt whatsoever."

With 218 votes, Major was well past the 50-vote margin he needed

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Sarajevo resounded with the boom of artillery battles in the suburbs Tuesday, and Bosnian Croats blocked the arrival of British and Dutch troops sent to protect harassed peacekeepers.

At least one person was killed by rebel Serb shelling in Sarajevo and 12 wounded, according to the Bosnian Health Ministry. Sirens sounded a general alert and the streets of the capital were largely deserted.

A spokesman for the Bosnian Croats, allies of the Muslim-led government, said the British and Dutch troops — blocked at the main border crossing into Bosnia — wouldn't be allowed in until their mission is explained more fully.

The Muslim-Croat federation appears to be worried the new force could report on its military maneuvers against rebel Serbs.

Planes carrying equipment for the new force and 76 logistics workers — mostly from the U.S. Air Force — landed Tuesday in the Croatian port of Split, said Lt. Col. Ray Shepherd, a U.S. spokesman.

LONDON — Pulling off the biggest gamble of his career, Prime Minister John Major defeated a right-wing challenger Tuesday to remain leader of a shaken and still deeply unpopular government.

Major, with two-thirds support in a secret ballot among the 329 legislators of his Conservative Party, claimed a decisive victory and said he would announce a new Cabinet today.

"The time for division is over. We have made our choice. It is a clear-cut choice beyond any doubt whatsoever."

John Redwood, who quit the 22-member Cabinet last week to run against Major as Conservative Party leader and prime minister, got 89 votes. He acknowledged defeat and said Major "has won fair and square."

"The time for division is over," Major said, appearing outside his Downing Street office soon after the result was announced at the nearby House of Commons. "We have made our choice. It is a clear-cut choice beyond any doubt whatsoever."

With 218 votes, Major was well past the 50-vote margin he needed over Redwood. But he was short of the 220 to 230 votes most commentators and some legislators considered would make him totally secure.

In addition to votes for Redwood, standard-bearer of opposition to closer European union, eight legislators abstained, 12 filled out their ballots in invalid ways and two didn't show up — all signs of dissent in the secret ballot. It meant one-third of legislators failed to support the 52-year-old British leader.

Major's supporters, though, shouted with relief. He would have had to resign if he lost or face a second ballot if he won only narrowly.

The victory gives Major breathing space to redesign the Cabinet and means he will now probably lead the Conservatives into national elections, which must be held by April 1997.

As polls stand now, the Conservatives would be trounced by the left-of-center Labor Party, which has held record leads of up to 30 points for more than a year.

Legislators who backed Major, or said they had, lined up for broadcast interviews to declare an end to one of the darkest episodes in Conservative Party history.

"I think we are out of our agony," said Peter Temple-Morris, a Major supporter. "It is time to unite and get on with it."

But Major remains vulnerable to dissent because the Conservatives hold only a nine-seat majority in the 651-member House of Commons. Some party rebels immediately signaled they would carry on.

"His position since the election has been decided is worse than it was before," said Nicholas Budgen, an anti-European Redwood supporter. "He thought he was dealing with a small minority. One hundred and nine people is not a small minority."

Major, who succeeded Margaret Thatcher 4 1/2 years ago, forced the showdown June 22 by resigning the party leadership in a back-me-or-sack-me dare to dissidents.

Labor leader Tony Blair scoffed at the result and said any new show of Conservative unity would not fool voters.

"Mr. Major may struggle on, but he struggles on with a party that is fundamentally divided," Blair said. "They are not governing the country any more; they are trying to prevent their party from falling into complete shambles and chaos."

Thatcher, who resigned after failing to defeat a similar challenge in November 1990, congratulated Major on a "clear and decisive victory" but said Redwood's "very respectable vote does justice to his decision to stand."

A second ballot would probably have brought in Major's Employment Secretary, Michael Portillo — another prominent right-winger — and the flamboyant Trade Secretary Michael Heseltine, a pro-European on the left of the party.

There was speculation that Heseltine, 62, among the party's best orators, will take over as party chairman in hopes of averting electoral disaster in 1997.

PROTECTION FORCES HELD AT BORDER

Bosnian Croats stall arriving troops

Srecko Latal
Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Sarajevo resounded with the boom of artillery battles in the suburbs Tuesday, and Bosnian Croats blocked the arrival of British and Dutch troops sent to protect harassed peacekeepers.

At least one person was killed by rebel Serb shelling in Sarajevo and 12 wounded, according to the Bosnian Health Ministry. Sirens sounded a general alert and the streets of the capital were largely deserted.

A spokesman for the Bosnian Croats, allies of the Muslim-led government, said the British and Dutch troops — blocked at the main border crossing into Bosnia — wouldn't be allowed in until their mission is explained more fully.

The Muslim-Croat federation appears to be worried the new force could report on its military maneuvers against rebel Serbs.

Planes carrying equipment for the new force and 76 logistics workers — mostly from the U.S. Air Force — landed Tuesday in the Croatian port of Split, said Lt. Col. Ray Shepherd, a U.S. spokesman.

In Sarajevo, several shells landed near the headquarters of the French peacekeepers, near the western front line, and close to the main U.N. compound downtown.

Attacks on the capital have increased since the Muslim-led Bosnian army launched an offensive June 15 along a half-dozen fronts to end the Serb siege of the city and cut rebel supply lines.

The shelling near the U.N. facilities followed a 30-minute skirmish Monday night between French peacekeepers on Mount Igman, southwest of Sarajevo, and nearby Serb gunners who have been firing at U.N. convoys.

Mount Igman, the government's only connection between Sarajevo and central Bosnia, has been a focal point of the offensive.

U.N. officials said more convoys with supplies for peacekeepers were planned for Tuesday night, despite continued Serb fire on Igman.

Two French peace keepers were wounded Monday night, when a U.N. aid convoy came under Serb tank and anti-aircraft cannon fire as it crossed Mount Igman. It was the fourth time that day Serbs had fired on U.N. vehicles.

French peacekeepers stationed on Igman responded to the attack with a 120-mm mortar round — the biggest in their arsenal — as well as shells from a U.N. light tank and four smoke grenades to obstruct Serb gunners' view of the road, said U.N. spokesman Lt. Col. Gerard Dubois.

The seven-truck convoy was carrying 70 tons of flour and was escorted by U.N. armored vehicles.

With Sarajevo's airport and humanitarian airlift closed by Serb threat since April and food shortages looming, U.N. officials expanded their week-old military resupply effort over Igman to include humanitarian aid.

U.N. peace keepers transported 62 tons of flour for Sarajevo residents on Saturday night. Monday night's convoy was the second carrying aid over Igman.

"When you only get eight percent of what's required into the city in a given month, people are going to really start feeling the effects of this — malnutrition, disease, other illnesses," said Ron Redmond, spokesman in Geneva for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic warned Tuesday "if offensives continue, we will switch from passive to active defense, and even to counter-offensive," the Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA reported.

Bosnia's war began with a Serb rebellion in April 1992 after the republic voted to secede from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia.

ACCESS TO COURTS HAMPERED

Tobacco industry opposed

University of California-San Francisco is going to challenge the power of one of the nation's largest industries. The New York Times reported Tuesday UCSF is going to display hundreds of documents outlining the widely held assertion that the tobacco industry deliberately withheld its knowledge of the addictive qualities in nicotine and the damaging effects of smoking tobacco.

The decision by UCSF to display the information (distributed on the Internet at <http://www.library.ucsf.edu/tobacco>) is significant for a number of reasons.

The decision comes after the California Supreme Court rejected a request by Brown & Williamson Tobacco to block publication of the documents. The result will be an increased pressure on the tobacco industry to release information about the damaging effects of its products and heightened awareness for American consumers.

Brown & Williamson argues the decision will adversely affect the process of document discovery in lawsuits, claiming plaintiffs can steal documents and "launder" them by way of public display so the documents can then be considered public.

What the decision actually does, 24 years to the day after the Pentagon Papers decision in the U.S. Supreme Court, is assure the flow of information to the public will continue unhindered unless it threatens national security or the lives of citizens.

The documents arrived at UCSF in 1994, when they were anonymously mailed to a professor of medicine and to several media organizations. Brown & Williamson claims the documents were stolen from the company by a paralegal who worked for the legal department.

Perhaps the most important part of the Supreme Court's decision is it comes at a time when pressure on the industry has gotten very tight. Within the last year, Dr. David Kessler, commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, has recommended a review of nicotine as a drug and the naming of the tobacco industry in one of the largest class-action lawsuits in American history.

While Brown & Williamson maintains the documents at UCSF cannot be used in litigation against the company, the Supreme Court's decision clears the way for honest document discovery. Some of the documents in the collection are up to 30 years old and clearly display knowledge (on the part of the company's executives) of nicotine's addictive power and a willingness of Brown & Williamson to manipulate the drug in their cigarettes.

A disturbing trend in Washington exists right now to restrict punitive damages and hamper access to the courts. What the California decision does is guarantee the flow of information that can open the door to America's courts.

REQUEST IS A FARCE

Killer was granted stay

Last Friday, The Daily Iowan printed an Associated Press article ("Killer's execution delayed for organ donation appeal" DI, June 30) about a convicted murderer who — minutes from execution — was able to delay his death by winning a stay, which stemmed from his wish to donate his organs.

Larry Lonchar, a convicted killer of three, had his ankles and head shaved and had been served his last meal when the U.S. Supreme Court decided to consider his request to die by lethal injection and donate his organs. Now, instead of dying in an electric chair, Lonchar may receive a mere injection — a far less painful death.

"I believe that death row inmates should be given the option after their appeals to be put to sleep and donate organs," he said.

This man lost all rights to anything when he killed three people. Lonchar should suffer — as his victims did — when he dies. Instead, he may die a painless death, simply because he says he wants to donate his organs.

Lonchar is asking the Legislature to change laws so he may die more humanely and help others by donating his organs. According to the article, the Supreme Court most likely won't hear Lonchar's case until October, at the earliest. A convicted murderer, who was supposed to be executed last Thursday, has been allowed at least three more months to live.

Even if he is executed by lethal injection, his organs may not be usable. Consequently, Lonchar's plea to donate his organs would be for naught.

Lonchar got what he wanted. By coming up with this excuse to extend his life, he's able to live a little longer and may die with virtually no pain.

It is very doubtful Lonchar really wants to donate his organs. This is just a last-minute attempt to die without suffering — and perhaps extend his inevitable death a few more months. If he really wanted to save lives, he should have started with the three people he murdered.

Lonchar could have prevented the deaths of two men and one woman by not losing his temper and killing them over a $10,000 gambling debt. Ironically, a man who is responsible for murder now wants to save others by giving them a piece of himself.

CHELSEA CAIN

I visited California last month. It was OK.

I have been trying to understand this whole "Jim's Journal" thing since I moved to Iowa City in August. I want to get it. I try to get it. I read it every day. I just don't think it's funny.

My friends get it. They huddle around the paper giggling and saying things like, "Boy, that Jim sure is a hoot!" or "Can you believe he did that? I've done that" or "Look at that — he picked up the phone. Ha!"

"I don't get it," I say, but they are still laughing and nobody hears me.

My cousin says I don't get it because I am a Californian and am unable to grasp the concept of simplicity. She says "Jim's Journal" is tribute to the pure zainness of everyday life and possibly the most politically devastating comic strip of our time.

I tell her I worry that when they are sifting through the wreckage of our culture they will find an old "Jim's Journal" anthology and think we were all bunch of dopes.

"You worry too much," she says. About a month ago, the two of us drove to Los Angeles because she had never been there and I was bored. I hadn't been back in almost a year and was looking forward to the Pacific Ocean — and local news in which the top story isn't a tractor show in Des Moines. We were snowed in two nights in Denver and spent the third night at the Vagabond Inn on the Las Vegas strip. (My cousin tried to convince the hotel manager we were vagabonds ourselves — and therefore should receive a vagabond discount — but the Grateful Dead was in town and he assumed she was hallucinating.)

By day four, we were reading William Stafford poems to each other in the car and shaking our Magic Eight Ball every few minutes to see if we would ever make it to our destination. Despite its vague ambiguities ("Reply hazy," "Ask again later"), somehow, finally — like sweaty cowboys just home from the range — we rode into town just short of high noon.

But the city was not what I remembered. There were more cars and cement and people. I had forgotten how traffic just stops on the freeways and how, when the smog gets bad in the city, you can't see the end of the block. My old friends didn't understand why I wasn't thrilled to be back. They wanted to go to coffee houses and smoke cigarettes while discussing the latest evidence against O.J. Simpson ("Are they covering that case in Iowa?" they kept asking).

I wanted to sit by myself at Prairie Lights with one of those giant bran muffins that take four days to eat and even longer to digest, next to the photograph of Gertrude Stein with the note about how she almost came to Iowa City. I tried to explain to one of my California friends the beauty of a place honoring someone for almost visiting, but she didn't get it. "Gertrude Stein made a special point of coming to California," she said.

After three days of this, my cousin and I decided to head north to Santa Cruz to clear our heads. We drove pretty much in silence up the road through the central valley and the garlic fields to the coast. We pulled into a parking lot carefully paved around trees on the University of California-Santa Cruz's campus and walked out to a bench overlooking the athletic track. Below the track was the rest of the town and beyond that, the blue Pacific Ocean. We sat there for a long time, smelling the grass.

"Well," my cousin said after a while. "Finally."

We stayed there on that bench for about an hour, and then we got back in our car and drove straight through back to Iowa.

We've been back awhile now, but I am still relieved to be off those freeways. I am still grateful for clean air and occasional quiet. I am still in awe of a town where no one seems to put much weight on the concept of curtains.

I don't know what it means, but about a week ago, when I was reading "Jim's Journal," an amazing thing happened.

I laughed.

GUEST OPINION • SEN. BOB DOLE

Coarsening of our culture is not a partisan matter

When I spoke out three weeks ago about the mindless violence and loveless sex infecting our popular culture and threatening our children, I had no idea what a firestorm would ensue. The furor has yet to abate as the unreconstructed left and the largely unrepentant leaders of the entertainment industry struggle with the idea that there might be a credible view of morality in conflict with their own.

They have shouted from the rafters about free speech in an effort to shout down speech which they do not agree. Rather than engage in what may be one of the most interesting and urgent national debates of our time, a flood of artists and pundits have filled hours of air time and pages of column inches with personal invective and diversionary attacks. Because I am running for national office, the main theme goes: I have no standing to speak of.

But I will speak. I, and many millions of other Americans, believe we have reached the point where popular culture in America threatens to undermine our character as a nation. Groups like Cannibal Corps and movies like "Natural Born Killers" have pushed a tolerant society beyond its tradition of patient silence on these matters.

An extreme of depravity has mobilized a mainstream of worried parents and concerned citizens. Across America, people are alarmed our sense of decency is being dulled, and our ability for outrage smothered, by an entertainment industry ridiculing our values.

We do not call for censorship. Our right to free speech is precious, and the thought of government controlling our culture seems an Orwellian nightmare. We need no legislation, no policies, no intimidating resolutions and no harassing practices from Big Brother.

But we are issuing a call for the leaders of the entertainment industry to defend America's children, to rejoin the community of responsible adults dedicated to the idea that the first goal of a civilized society must be to ensure the rising generation reaches adulthood able to function in freedom — whole in heart as well as mind.

One need not be a conservative Republican — as I am — to object to corporations making millions from gangsta rap reveling in the "pleasures" of ripping apart women. Or to a movie industry raking up profits by dulling respect for human life. Or to television storylines with heavy-handed, cruelly wrong messages that casual, meaningless sex is the norm in adult America.

As I said in Los Angeles, the coarsening of our culture is not a partisan matter. Democrats as well as Republicans, liberals as well as conservatives, can and do share this view. America needs all our voices.

However, some have questioned whether political figures should raise these issues. It is a sad and cynical world view that permits no honorable motives among those seeking to lead our country.

I believe — more than ever before — candidates for office are obliged to speak out about moral issues. Issues of national character hold the key to the future and are central to problems we must struggle to overcome.

Yes, moral arguments are controversial. But it is exactly this kind of controversy, which so riles the entrenched elites, the First Amendment was written to protect. I will use my candidacy for president to speak about my beliefs as forcefully and convincingly as I can. I will use the bully pulpit of politics without apology in an attempt to call our people to their better nature and our country to its more noble endeavors.

Ironically, our critics are using the reverse argument for my silence — for them, everything must be made political and I have not been political enough. In order to observe aloud the degeneration of our culture, they insist, one must produce a catalog of offending productions, studios and artists.

Critics insist it be meticulously divided according to the political parties individuals may support, with exhaustive "disclosure" of those with whose political beliefs an individual may agree. This is a weird idea, and dangerous if taken to its logical end.

Still others — who seem to have a vested interest in misunderstanding my point — are resorting to tactical diversions to avoid straightforward debate. For example, in my speech I refuted Hollywood's usual claim that it only responds to market demands.

I quoted Michael Medved, a leading film critic and author of "Hollywood vs. America," who has pointed out the most profitable films are often the most friendly to the family. To back that up, I listed the top five films last year, according to Entertainment Weekly: "The Lion King," "Forrest Gump," "True Lies," "The Santa Clause" and "The Flintstones."

Now obviously, not every one of these movies is family friendly. "True Lies," starring Arnold Schwarzenegger, is a violent action-adventure film not suited for small children. If I had it to do over again, I would make that more clear, but my point is the same: Family-friendly films sell well and studios — if they choose to respond to that market — can be good corporate citizens and make big bucks as well.

And if that's not incentive enough, I've got some news for entertainment executives who continue to tolerate, promote and profit from this assault on America's families: The heat from this issue won't let up in a week — or a month or a year.

I, and others who care about the family, will continue to speak out about the threat you pose to our children and our culture until you show some sign that you recognize the responsibilities of freedom and are ready to shoulder your share.

 Bradford, discusses the trends of '90s workers.

"Generations are motivated by what they were deprived of when they were kids, and for this generation, that was time with their parents," Raines said.

The book states 40 percent of Generation X was raised by divorced or separated parents. Many times, the single parent raising the child was the mother. After watching their mothers struggle to work, raise children and take care of household duties, many women of this generation said it's not possible to have it all.

Hannah Brenner, who earned her bachelor's degree from the UI in 1994, has decided to put off having a family to attend law school. She said she would rather concentrate on her career and her marriage at this point in her life.

"I would like to have kids, but I don't want to be the one to stay home with them. I'm not going to be the supermom, like the women of the '80s," Brenner said.

When she was growing up, Brenner said she wanted to be a single mother with a job. She felt she wouldn't need a partner to share the duties of child care. Today, Brenner said those notions are completely idealistic and unrealistic.

"Men should take more responsibility in child-rearing," she said. "When a mother works, it's like she has two full-time jobs. It sounds great, but having it all is not possible."

A 1993 study by the Families and Work Institute found 60 percent of workers under age 25 with children would sacrifice a lot of money and opportunities for career advancement to devote more time to their families.

For Tammy Evans, an elementary school teacher in eastern Iowa, this is true. After five years of teaching full-time and being a mother for her 3-year-old son, Noah, Evans has decided to teach part-time in the fall.

"I felt like I was sinking," she said. "I couldn't give my best to teaching and my child all the time. Being a working mother was harder than I ever dreamed it would be."

Working part-time was the best solution for Evans.

"It was the perfect opportunity," she said. "I didn't have to give up my career and I can have dinner on the table before 5."

Some women disagree with Brenner and Evans and said they still believe it's possible to have it all.

"I think it's difficult to have a career and a family, but it's also possible," said Julie Klaver, who received her bachelor's degree from the UI in 1993.

Klaver, a first grade teacher in Houston, plans to take only a few months off when she has children.

She said Xers might make a choice between family and career because they have higher expectations for themselves.

"The careers that women are choosing are more challenging," Klaver said. "They don't have jobs that end at 5 p.m. Many times, women bring work home with them."

Having a supportive spouse and job sites offering child care would make the balancing act easier, said Beverly Miller, manager of John's Grocery Inc., 401 E. Market St.

"Men need to realize housework isn't women's work," Miller said. "It doesn't matter who does it; it all needs to get done."

Jungle cat classified rabies-free

Greg Smith
 Associated Press

Health officials have determined the jungle cat that attacked a 2-year-old Illinois girl does not have rabies, but an attorney for the girl's family said the finding doesn't alter a court order that the cat be destroyed.

"There is still an order from an Illinois court, and when he is served, he must comply," attorney Richard Stavins said Monday about the cat's owner, Tom Harmon of Downers Grove, Ill.

Johnson County health officials signed the cat's release early Monday to end a 14-day quarantine period, although the animal remained at the All Pets Veterinary Clinic, 512 S. Dubuque St.

Harmon hasn't reclaimed the cat, Cabo, because he would have to abide by an Illinois court's order to have Cabo killed and tested for rabies in that state, officials said.

DuPage County Circuit Judge Bonnie Wheaton in Wheaton, Ill., had ordered Cabo be destroyed and tested for rabies after it attacked 2-year-old Alice Mintz on June 18. The girl needed 200 stitches to her face and scalp and a series of rabies shots that won't be completed for another two weeks, Stavins said.

Stavins also said Harmon has not been served with the court order and added the clean bill of health from Johnson County does not diminish Wheaton's order that Cabo be destroyed.

Alice's parents, Judy and Bill Mintz, had asked prosecutors to drop the case to preserve family harmony, but Stavins said the couple is now "outraged" and wants Cabo destroyed.

After Cabo's attack on Alice Mintz, Sari Mintz, Alice's aunt, whisked Cabo across state lines to the Iowa City clinic, where it was put under a two-week mandatory quarantine by Johnson County health officials.

Sari Mintz, Harmon's fiancée, claimed to be Cabo's owner at the time and gave her permission last Thursday for the animal to be destroyed in Johnson County. But Harmon intervened to forbid Johnson County authorities to destroy Cabo.

BILLIONAIRES

 Stock in Buffett's investing company, Berkshire Hathaway, rose 38 percent in the past year.

It was the first time in the nine years Forbes has been compiling the list that two Americans were on top.

Japanese real estate magnate Yoshiaki Tsutsumi, who had held the No. 1 spot for the last eight years, fell to a third-place tie even though the stronger yen made his net worth climb $500 million to $9 billion.

The heirs of the late retailer Sam Walton remained the world's richest family with $23.4 billion, slightly less than a year ago.

Forbes said it excludes from its list royal families and heads of state, because their fortunes come more from political heritage than efforts in the realm of economics.

That excludes the Sultan of Brunei, head of an oil-rich Pacific island nation and often described as the world's richest man. His family's oil, gas and real estate fortune has been estimated at upwards of $30 billion.

Microsoft stock has been rising in spite of well-publicized setbacks for the world's largest maker of software for personal computers. It dropped a $2 billion bid for Intuit Corp. in the face of opposition from the Justice Department, which also is investigating the proposed Microsoft Network on-line service. Lengthy delays have plagued the release of Microsoft's Windows 95 operating system, now due out in late August.

As a group, the billionaires club is growing. Forbes counted 388 private individuals or families with at least $1 billion net worth, up from 358 last year. The group has a total net worth of $893 billion.

Asia was well represented among the richest.

"Where there's extraordinary growth, there's extraordinary opportunity," Forbes said.

A year ago, Mexico had 24 billionaires, the most except for the United States, Japan and Germany. But the peso's devaluation late last year cut 14 Mexican billionaires off the list.

This year, the United States had 129 billionaire fortunes, followed by Germany with 53; Japan, 37; Hong Kong, 14; Thailand, 12; France, 11; and Indonesia and Mexico with 10 each.

OKLAHOMA CITY

 was the first time the flags at the Capitol were raised to full-staff since the bombing.

Keating said the U.S. flag has a special meaning for Oklahomans.

"It flew from the damaged building, it shone proudly from the uniforms of the rescue workers and it draped the caskets of the victims," he said. "It was stained and it was torn, but it was beautiful."

Shortly after the bombing, recovery workers gave Keating the first flag recovered from the wreckage of the federal building, where 168 people were killed and more than 500 were injured.

At 9:02 a.m., the time of the explosion, members of military, law enforcement and relief groups raised clean, new flags up 14 flag poles on the south steps of the state Capitol, accompanied by a drum roll and the roar of four F-16 fighters flying overhead.

Volunteers and rescue workers from Virginia, California, Maryland, Florida, Arizona and other states joined in the ceremonies.

"I'm overwhelmed," said Deborah

Hartwig, an American Red Cross volunteer who served food and drinks to the rescue workers.

"It's just a lot of painful memories," she said.

Peggy Brawner, who used her dog, Hooch, to help comfort recovery workers and survivors, saw the celebration as upbeat.

She and a friend brought their dogs Tuesday. Brawner's Dalmatian was dressed as Uncle Sam, with a beard and star-spangled top hat, and the other dog was costumed as Lady Liberty, gripping a stuffed cloth torch in her mouth.

"I think it is going to make kind of a big jumping-off point in terms of healing," Brawner said of the flag-raising. "It's a shame that it takes a tragedy like this for people to put aside their differences and realize they can work together."

Mayor Ron Norick said the events signaled a time to move on.

"I think today is the best day for us ... to have the governor raise the flags so we can get back to the lives we love so well," he said.

Some who joined in the three-mile parade that followed said they have already moved on.

 are willing to sit through rain," he said.

The festival has expanded greatly since it first started five years ago. Only 500 people came to the festival the first year, when it started out as a one-day event, Ginsberg said.

Next year, Ginsberg said he hopes to expand the event even further, running it all day on both July 3 and 4.

Mike Davis, an Iowa City high school student, played in the Iowa City Unified Jazz Ensemble, which included members from City High School, 1900 Morningside Drive, to play in front of such a large audience," he said. "It was neat to open for the Jazz Festival."

The festival attracted spectators from across the state. Victoria

Bruner and Carl McPherson, who danced to salsa music in the street, said they came from Des Moines just to hear Orquesta de Jazz y Salsa Alto Maiz.

"They are my favorite salsa band in Iowa," Bruner said. "Of course, that is also because they are the only (salsa) band here."

McPherson, who is originally from Jamaica, said the band provided something hard to find in the United States.

"We love that Latin, Caribbean beat," he said. "It's music of the soul. Salsa is not a music understood by many Americans, so it's not played in many places. It's hard to find a place where you can dance to this kind of music."

The festival provided additional business for local merchants, who set up carts and stands along Washington Street.

Sarah Jaquay, marketing assistant for New Pioneer Co-Op Fresh Food Market, 22 S. Van Buren St., said selling at the festival was profitable.

"Business has been great. People have been in good spirits," she said.

Newspaper finds Louisville recruiting violations
LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A newspaper reported today it uncovered two apparent violations of NCAA rules in its investigation of the Louisville men's basketball program.

According to telephone records obtained by The Courier-Journal, assistant coach Larry Gay apparently made improper phone contacts with at least two top Kentucky high school juniors during the 1994-95 school year.
The story comes just five days after the school announced it had completed an internal investigation of the program and found no violations.
According to NCAA bylaws, coaches can't call prospects or their parents before July 1 following the end of the prospect's junior year in high school.

Records of calls billed to Gay's extension indicate he called the Bowling Green office of Charles Fishback, father of Greenwood star Daymeon Fishback, in January, and the Hopkinsville home of University Heights Academy star Lamont Barnes in March, the newspaper said. Both were still in their junior year.

Charles Fishback said he initiated contact with the university and the school was responding to his interest.

"I called him (Gay). I called him to ask about the official visit he would make and if they would be interested in Daymeon. ... I knew they weren't allowed to initiate contact with us," he said.

However, NCAA rules do not allow return calls. The records show Gay talked with Charles Fishback for 31 minutes.

Neither Lamont Barnes nor his grandmother, Cornelia, with whom he lives, recalled speaking to Gay. But athletic director Bill Olsen said the school, after a call from The Courier-Journal, confirmed the two-minute call did occur.

If the NCAA decides that Louisville gained an unfair recruiting advantage, the school could be prohibited from further recruiting either player.

Magic gets the OK from L.A.

Associated Press

LAHAINA, Hawaii — The Los Angeles Lakers want Magic Johnson back, and Johnson is getting interested.

"The Lakers have asked me to return," he said in Tuesday's editions of The Honolulu Advertiser. "We're talking about it, so we have to see what happens. It's nothing that's definite yet."

Magic Johnson

Johnson has previously hinted at rejoining the NBA, but this is believed to be the first time the Lakers have publicly said they are considering such a move.

Johnson, who turns 36 next month, says he must soon decide on his plans, and his biggest concern is the rigors of NBA life and the time he would have to spend away from his family.

The Los Angeles Lakers great, now part-owner of the NBA team, twice retired since announcing in 1992 he has the AIDS virus.

Johnson ended a comeback bid after some players said they were worried about possibly contracting the virus should he spill blood while on the court.

Johnson was in Maui for his fantasy camp, along with Lakers general manager Jerry West, who said times and attitudes about AIDS have changed since Johnson last attempted a comeback.

"I think the decision he made four years ago to retire was a decision I think he regretted," West said. "Now there's so much more information about health concerns that I think it's easier for him to make a decision today."

The Lakers will hold their training camp in Hawaii this fall, if the lockout ends. Until then, the Lakers would be barred from signing Johnson to a player contract. Johnson, if he decides to play, would have to give up his ownership rights to the team.

"There's a very definite possibility that he will play," West told the Honolulu Star-Bulletin. "We would like an answer soon so we can start doing things for the season, and I think it would help put his mind at ease."

Since retiring, Johnson briefly coached the Lakers at the end of the 1994 season and toured the world with his own team. He has expressed an interest in playing at the 1996 Atlanta Olympics.

"I still love to play," Johnson said. "Even if I don't come back, I'll always play somewhere."

Nelson appears to be the man in New York

Hal Bock
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Later this week, the New York Knicks are expected to make it official and announce Don Nelson as their new coach.

Now if only he could bring a couple of draft choices with him. Nelson will inherit a team that faces some problems.

Because of previous trades, the Knicks had no picks in last week's NBA draft. Last year's two first-round picks, Charlie Ward and Monty Williams, had precious little playing time in mostly wasted rookie seasons for New York.

With no picks, the Knicks had hoped to mine the free agent market, starting with Anthony Mason, who was suspended twice in the last two years and seemed certain to sign elsewhere had Pat Riley remained New York's coach. But the NBA lockout prevents any signings, closing that option — at least for the time being.

Then there is the age problem.

Top four women advance to semis

Steve Wilstein
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — In a zone of her own and still unbeaten in 1995, Steffi Graf surprised even herself with a stunning performance that led a march by the top four seeded women into the Wimbledon semifinals.

Graf slugged so many clean winners with her forehand, her backhand and her volleys she might as well have been playing against a ball machine as she stretched her record for the year to 30-0.

She jumped on Mary Joe Fernandez's serves as if they were traveling in slow motion. From the end of the first set through the first three games of the second set, Graf won 14 consecutive points en route to a 6-3, 6-0 romp. "Perfect," Graf said, abandoning her usually harsh self-criticism as she assessed the second set. "I felt I could do anything that I wanted to."

It didn't worry the top-seeded German that she might have peaked too soon as she pursues her sixth Wimbledon title.

"Whenever I play that kind of tennis, it doesn't matter — first round, last round," Graf said. "It's really special to be out there. It's such a joy that it doesn't really matter to me when it is. That's what I'm playing for."

Next up for Graf on Thursday is Jana Novotna, the player who virtually handed Graf the winner's silver platter two years ago in one of the worst chokes in Wimbledon history. Novotna, a 6-2, 6-3 victor over Kimiko Date, will have to overcome the memo-

Labor wars, strikes and double homicide

Here we go again. Just days after the end of the season and we have an NBA lockout. This is getting old.

Baseball and hockey have already had their day in the sun. Baseball's 1994 World Series was canceled due to a labor dispute. Hockey players were locked out for the first third of their season.

I guess it is the NBA's turn. There was a time when I was utterly confused by all of the issues in the labor disputes. Salary caps, luxury taxes, arbitration, free agency, rookie salaries. It seemed so confusing.

After extensive research, however, I now realize what is at stake. The players want more money and the owners want more money.

Interestingly, the players in the middle of the conflict are such stars as Michael Jordan and Patrick Ewing. They don't feel the players association has protected their interests well enough.

With the salary and endorsement money made from basketball, Jordan makes roughly a hundred times as much as the President of the United States. Of course, Jordan did have a better year than Bill Clinton.

The NBA work stoppage caps off a rough couple of years in the world of professional sports.

In addition to the labor problems, the four major professional leagues have had problems staging a competitive championship.

In the NBA finals this year, Houston swept the inexperienced

Young wrestlers flock to UI for lessons from legend

Shannon Stevens
The Daily Iowan

The kids come in all shapes in sizes, but they all have the same goal: to learn as much as they can from a wrestling legend.

Nearly 1,900 boys from the ages of nine to 17 will flock to Iowa City this summer to participate in one of Dan Gable's training and technique camps.

Gable, who has coached the Iowa Hawkeyes to 13 national wrestling championships, is the main attraction for most camps according to Iowa assistant coach Jim Zalesky.

"That's who they come to see,"

Zalesky said. "When he talks they're really attentive. It's like that (E.F. Hutton) commercial. When Dan Gable talks people listen."

Gable coaches several of the wrestling sessions and also gives motivational speeches to the kids.

David Wendt, a camper from Clemson, S.C., said Gable was a real crowd pleaser.

"He's a real inspiring man," Wendt said. "He makes you want to go out there and try your best."

Gable has been working with various wrestling camps since 1972. He said his main goal was to help kids become better wrestlers on and off the mat.

"It's almost like a great concert that's coming to town and all the kids that are a certain age go to it," Gable said. "A lot of the kids that come here are very impressionable."

WIMBLEDON

ry of that capitulation to Graf after coming within a point of a 5-1 lead in the third set.

"I tend to think that she can," Graf said, sounding not at all certain. "It's difficult to say because you can never put yourself into somebody else's mind."

Novotna, who choked even worse in the French Open last month when she blew a 5-0, 40-0 lead in the third set against Chanda Rubin, brushed aside concern about the 1993 Wimbledon final haunting her.

"Really, not at all," Novotna said. "We are two years further ... It's going to be great to be back on the Centre Court again playing Graf, and we'll see."

While Graf and Novotna won so easily, Spaniard's Conchita Martinez and Arantxa Sanchez Vicario took tougher paths to reach the semis against each other.

Martinez's reign as Wimbledon champion teetered precariously, like a ball atop the net cord, until it landed luckily in her favor in a nervous struggle against Gabriela Sabatini that ended with a 7-5, 7-6 (7-5) triumph. Throughout the tournament, Martinez has sort of drifted through, overlooked because of the dominance of Graf.

"I'm the defending champion," Martinez said defensively when asked if she felt Graf moving toward another title. "I'm the Wimbledon champion. Nobody can take it away from me."

Sanchez Vicario rallied from a break down in each set to beat Brenda Schultz-McCarthy 6-4, 7-6 (7-4). The tiebreaker went with serve until Schultz-McCarthy mis-hit a volley to give Sanchez Vicario a 6-4 lead. The match ended on the next point with another error by Schultz-McCarthy.

The victory marked a breakthrough for Sanchez Vicario, who had failed to progress past the quarterfinals in eight previous Wimbledon appearances. She had reached the quarters twice before, in 1989 and 1991.

"This is one of the happiest days of my life," Sanchez Vicario said. "This is the best Wimbledon of my career so far. My goal was to try to pass the quarters. Now that I've done it, it feels great."

Of the four women's quarters, none matched the Martinez-Sabatini duel for the combination of quality and drama.

This was Martinez at her best, playing the way she did to win the title a year ago and the way she rarely has since. And it was Sabatini at her best, attacking the net with more confidence than she usually shows, playing gutsy tennis even after blowing some big opportunities.

Sabatini served for the first set at 5-4 but double-faulted at 15-40 to allow Martinez to tie it up. After Martinez held to 6-5, Sabatini again dug herself into a 15-40 hole and should have lost the set on the next point when a linesman missed an obviously long backhand. Martinez argued with the umpire to no avail, but got another break point and cashed in this time with a forehand volley that Sabatini netted.

Sabatini's head slumped and she wore the look of a loser as Martinez picked up the pace and raced to a 5-1 lead in the second set with the help of a couple of lucky net cords along the way.

Martinez played stronger, steadier tennis, seemed to be in position more often, ran less and moved Sabatini around the court, letting her make mistakes. Martinez moved to the net only occasionally, but when she did it was with confidence and careful execution, and her deep groundstrokes kept Sabatini pinned on the baseline.

The match appeared all but over until Sabatini somehow clawed her way back, suddenly finding the range on her groundstrokes and going for broke at the net. Instead of a wipeout, the two now engaged in solid, spirited tennis.

Sabatini won four straight games to tie the set at 5-5, along the way fighting off two match points at 15-40 on serve when Martinez led 5-2. When Sabatini broke Martinez to make it 5-4, they put on a show of great shotmaking. In that exchange, Martinez drilled a backhand down the line, Sabatini lunged out with a forehand volley, Martinez tried a forehand pass, and Sabatini went the other way for a backhand volley that Martinez finally netted.

The level of play got better as the match wore on, Martinez suddenly vulnerable and Sabatini gaining confidence with the help of most of the crowd cheering her on. Fittingly, the tiebreaker and match ended with a crisp rally when Martinez slugged a deep backhand, Sabatini sent back a forehand crosscourt and Martinez put it away with a volley.

"If you're going to win this match," Martinez said, "it has to be because you're aggressive, not waiting until Gaby makes the mistake. She didn't make many mistakes."

CANCER VICTIM

Tennis legend Gonzales dies at age 67

Steven Wine

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Hall of Famer Pancho Gonzales, one of the greatest and most colorful players tennis has known, died of cancer at age 67 in Las Vegas, Nev.

Ralph Gonzales told The Associated Press Tuesday that his older brother died Monday night at Sunrise Hospital after stomach cancer had spread throughout his body. A spokeswoman at the hospital confirmed Gonzales' death.

"We had a terrific report from doctors three weeks ago," Ralph Gonzales said. "Everything seemed to be going so well. But a week ago Wednesday he became sick and he entered the hospital. He just deteriorated very quickly. The cancer showed up in his ribs and all over his body. At the end, he didn't suffer much."

A Los Angeles native, Gonzales came from a poor Chicano family and had a history of truancy, factors that worked against him as he struggled to win acceptance in the tennis community. But he would not be denied and rode a thundering service game to U.S. national singles titles in 1948 and 1949.

He beat South African Eric Sturges for the 1948 title and then, as defending champion, dropped the first two sets of the 1949 final to top-seeded Ted Schroeder 16-18, 2-6. Then he came off the deck to win the next three, 6-1, 6-2, 6-4 for the title.

After helping the United States hold the Davis Cup against Australia in 1949, Gonzales turned pro, touring against Jack Kramer, Tony Trabert, Frank Sedgman, Lew Hoad and others. He won eight professional singles titles from 1953 to 1961 and also captured doubles titles at Wimbledon and the French Open in 1949.

In 1969, as a 41-year-old grandfather, Gonzales won the longest singles match in Wimbledon history, beating Charlie Pasarell in 112 games — 22-24, 1-6, 16-14, 6-3, 11-9. The match, suspended because of darkness, took five hours, 12 minutes and lasted two days.

"In the locker room, I helped Charlie get to the massage table," Gonzales recalled in a 1988 interview.

Gonzales was married six times. Among his ex-wives was Andre Agassi's older sister Rita, and the Agassi family remained very close to him. He was an early influence on Agassi's career.

Gonzales was survived by his two brothers, four sisters and seven children.

KNICKS

The Knicks, who reached the seventh game of the NBA Finals two years ago, never made it out of the Eastern Conference playoffs last season. And instead of getting younger with new players, they are getting older with the same ones.

Charles Smith turns 30 later this month and John Starks gets there next month. The three other starters are past that plateau, led by Derek Harper, who will be 34 before next season starts.

The co-captains, Patrick Ewing and Charles Oakley, both struggled with leg and foot injuries last season. Ewing will be 33 next month and Oakley is 31.

None of this will deter Nelson, who bounced off the coaching deck when Riley quit and Chuck Daly, the Knicks' first choice as a replacement, turned down the job.

Nelson, the sixth winningest coach in NBA history, left Golden State last February under unpleasant circumstances. There were confrontations with a number of younger players, including one that forced the trade of 1993 top draft pick Chris Webber to Washington.

The Warriors were 14-34 when Nelson was hospitalized with viral pneumonia and replaced by Bob Lanier.

Nelson's deal with New York is expected to pay him $2 million per year, $1 million less than the team offered in a five-year contract extension to Riley, who quit on June 15.

A three-time NBA coach of the year, Nelson began his coaching career at Milwaukee in 1976 and spent 11 seasons there before moving to Golden State in 1988. In 17 seasons, Nelson has had nine 50-win seasons, but just two in 6½ seasons with the Warriors. His career coaching record is 815-604.

It was in Milwaukee that he made Ernie Grunfeld the Bucks' first round draft choice in 1977. Grunfeld is now the Knicks GM and the man in charge of hiring a new coach.

"If I knew this was going to happen, I'd have played him more," Nelson quipped last week as negotiations between his attorney and the Knicks heated up.

WESTERN OPEN

Woods — and wrist — return

Mike Nadel

Associated Press

LEMONT, Ill. — With four little words, Tiger Woods gave golf fans and PGA Tour officials reason to smile: "The wrist is good."

Woods, who at 19 years old has become one of his sport's most popular figures, said Tuesday the two-week layoff from an injury that forced him to withdraw from the U.S. Open cleared his mind and helped his game.

"I feel like I'm playing better now," said the reigning U.S. Amateur champion, who tees off Thursday in the Western Open. "I haven't had time to rest up and get my mind clear because of school and all the studying I had to do. Then I had to go straight to the Open, so I haven't had a break. That two-week break really felt good."

Woods, who just completed his freshman year at Stanford, sprained a ligament in his left wrist while trying to hit out of the deep rough during the second round of the U.S. Open.

He skipped the following week's Northeast Amateur and just resumed practicing.

Woods expects no problems this week at the $2 million Western Open at Cog Hill Golf and Country Club.

He'll be trying to become only the third amateur in the last four decades to win a PGA Tour event, joining Scott Verplank and Phil Mickelson.

Verplank won the Western at Butler National in 1985.

Woods' father, Earl, suggested Monday his son might not remain an amateur because of the long and detailed list of NCAA rules. But Tiger Woods, who served a one-day suspension for having diaries published in two golf magazines, said he expected to play in the 1997 U.S. Amateur at Cog Hill.

"I won't turn pro until 1998, after college," he said. "The only thing that's really annoying about the NCAA is trying to get used to the rules and regulations. Once you understand them, then it's not bad. It's not going to force me out."

The only governing body he had dealt with was the U.S. Golf Association.

"Under the NCAA now, it's a whole new ball game. The rulebook is about 'yay' thick," Woods said, holding his fingers several inches apart. "I'll give you an example: Say I'm out here playing in a college event and you're there at the turn and you offered me a drink or something, that would be illegal. You would have to get the entire field a drink. Little things like that are annoying and you've got to watch it."

Woods is the only amateur playing in the Western. The other 155 golfers will be competing for the $360,000 top prize.

WIMBLEDON NO-SHOW

Missing player had simply gone fishing

Paul Mulvey
Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Missing tennis player Murphy Jensen went to the country to relax on Tuesday after easing his anxious family with a telephone call to say he was safe.

The 26-year-old doubles star disappeared from Wimbledon before a mixed doubles match Monday. His family called police and local hospitals when he failed to return to their rented house that night.

The family issued a statement Tuesday which said he had "taken a few days by himself in the country to relax."

The British domestic news agency Press Association said it was "understood" that Jensen had gone fishing in the north of England.

Jensen called his sister in Atlanta on Tuesday morning and a former college roommate in Los Angeles and said he was safe, but couldn't get through to the house his family is renting in Wimbledon because the line was always busy.

"Everything is A-OK," Jensen's brother and doubles partner Luke said. "We're not sure why he did it. He's trying to get in touch with us. I'm very relieved. It wasn't any kind of kidnapping or any kind of physical accident."

"I knew he could take care of himself in tough situations. I was just worried about personal injury, or, being a high profile tournament, someone may have wanted to get some attention."

Murphy Jensen left his friend and mixed doubles partner Brenda Schultz-McCarthy waiting court-side for their mid-afternoon match against Kelly Jones and Katrina Adams. Umpire Roland Herfel waited the required 15 minutes before ruling the match a default.

"I had no idea what happened, and first I was very disappointed. I was very mad and then cooled off," Schultz-McCarthy said.

"I was waiting there and I was like 'I knew you were not going to show up.' That's Murph."

"We won the first match and he was all excited. He was saying 'Man it's great to be at Wimbledon and to be playing here. I'm all fired up and it's great.'"

Luke Jensen and Schultz-McCarthy played down rumors that Murphy Jensen disappeared to avoid drug testing or that he had emotional problems including thoughts of suicide.

Schultz-McCarthy said she thought it was simply a matter of him missing the match because it came up sooner than expected and he was too embarrassed to stay around.

Schultz-McCarthy's singles match went longer than expected, and the only match between that, and the mixed doubles lasted only 45 minutes.

"It was just one of those days that everything went really quick and sometimes, things happen," she said. "Everybody is going to almost miss a match once in his life. You just make it and you get lucky, but now this happens."

"If he wants to play mixed doubles again, I'll play with him again."

His mother Patricia would not reveal his exact whereabouts but said she still had not spoken directly with him. She insisted it wasn't a publicity stunt.

Continued from Page 1B. I think we're able to make some really positive impressions on kids as they are in their life where it really makes a big difference.

Baseball players and best friends Darryl Stawberry and Dwight Gooden have been in a friendly competition to see who can be arrested and suspended for substance abuse more often.

Stawberry was recently signed to play for the New York Yankees. Dwight Gooden is expected to sign with them next year after his suspension is over.

The one-time Mets stars will join Yankee reliever Steve Howe who has a pretty broken baseball's and the NBA continues to be one of the best.

Texas runner Eric Fox slides home to score ahead of the throw to Indians catcher Tony Pena Tuesday.

Indians drop close one to Texas

Associated Press
CLEVELAND — Mark McLemore hit a two-run double in the eighth inning Tuesday as the Texas Rangers, who had blown an early four-run lead, came back to beat the Cleveland Indians 7-6.

Texas ended its three-game losing streak while handing the Indians their second loss in nine games.

Carlos Baerga, Jim Thome and Ruben Amaro homered during a six-run fourth inning that made Cleveland the first team to reach 100 home runs this season.

With 100 home runs in 62 games, the Indians are on a pace to hit 232 during this strike-shortened, 144-game season — eight away from the 162-game record of 240 hit by the 1961 New York Yankees.

The Rangers trailed 6-5 entering the eighth, but Eric Fox drew a one-out walk from Julian Tavarez, and Rusty Greer's pinch single off Paul Assenmacher (2-2) sent Fox to third.

Yankees 4, White Sox 1
CHICAGO — Mariano Rivera, recalled earlier in the day from the minors, gave up two hits in eight shutout innings and struck out 11 Tuesday as the New York Yankees beat the Chicago White Sox 4-1.

Frank Thomas lined a single to right in the first and grounded a single to left in the sixth, the only hits allowed by Rivera (2-2), who walked four in only his fifth major league start.

Rivera's longest previous outing for the Yankees was 5 1/3 innings. He began the season at Triple-A Columbus, was recalled on May 16 and then sent back on June 11.

During his second minor-league stint he made only one start because of a sore shoulder but threw a five-inning no-hitter in that game.

Alex Fernandez (4-5) allowed six hits in 8 1/3 innings, struck out five and walked two.

Athletics 5, Brewers 3
OAKLAND, Calif. — Mark McGwire hit his 23rd homer and Terry Steinbach hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning Tuesday, rallying the Oakland Athletics over the Milwaukee Brewers 5-3.

With the A's trailing 3-2, Rickey Henderson led off the eighth with a walk and McGwire was hit by a pitch two outs later. Steinbach followed with his ninth homer, a drive off Mike Ignasiak (2-1).

Rick Honeycutt (4-1) got three outs. Dennis Eckersley, making his 500th appearance for Oakland — two short of Rollie Fingers' club record — got three outs for his 18th save.

B.J. Surhoff hit his first homer for Milwaukee in more than a year to break a 2-2 tie in the seventh.

McGwire hit a two-run drive in the first, a drive that went about 460 feet to left.

Twins 6, Orioles 3
BALTIMORE — Scott Erickson allowed three hits in eight innings and Pedro Munoz homered and had three RBIs as the Minnesota Twins beat Baltimore 6-3 Tuesday night in a game delayed nearly three hours by rain.

Erickson (4-6) gave up one run, walked five and struck out two in his longest outing of the year. He was 0-1 since June 14 and came three outs short of his 15th career complete game, the first since May 8, 1994, in Texas. Rick Aguilera relieved to start the ninth and gave up three hits, including a two-run single to Curtis Goodwin.

The Orioles had won three straight and 10 of 15. Cal Ripken scored twice and became Baltimore's career leader in runs with 1,233, one more than Brooks Robinson.

Scott Klinglebeck (2-2) allowed three runs and six hits in six innings.

He walked three, struck out two and failed to retire the side in order.

Tigers 9, Mariners 8
DETROIT — John Flaherty singled home the winning run with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning Tuesday night, giving the Detroit Tigers a 9-8 victory over the Seattle Mariners.

The win, which came after a rain delay of 37 minutes in the top of the ninth, moved Detroit (33-32) over .500 for the first time since opening day.

Mike Christopher (1-0), a replacement player for the Tigers in spring training, won in his season debut. He pitched one scoreless inning after being called up from the minors Monday night.

Chad Curtis tied it at 8 when he led off the Detroit eighth with his 11th home run, tying a career high, off Bobby Ayala (2-2).

Franklin Stubbs drew a leadoff walk from Ayala in the ninth, and Bobby Higginson sacrificed pinch-runner Joe Hall to second.
