Predicament of a Man Who Was Robbed of His Clothes

By MAURICE BROWN PHIPPS

The newly risen moon was flooding the steep path when Stotesworthy St. John turned his back upon the radiant scene and wheezily stumbled up the hillside.

For many minutes after the robber's last brutal laugh had floated back to him on the evening breeze, Stotesworthy remained motionless, an unbroken statue of humiliation and despair.

Stotesworthy calculated that it was about 8 o'clock; the hotel was fully lit, a half-way and a few yards he could have seen the path descending and the door leading to the lobby. He was in a situation of embarrassment.

At all events, the other guests of the hotel were not to expect it. When one is forty-five, both in years and in waist measure, somewhat asthmatic and has to be careful about exposing a thin, bony chest to the evening air, one does not linger long over romantic memories aroused by the slivery orb of night.

Stotesworthy he had been conscious of the close proximity of something about which he had many times glibly written, but with which he was entirely unfamiliar.

One was arrayed in the costume of colonial days, sword and all; another had apparently deserted the fall round-up without discarding the sheepskin drape and some were hidden in the voluminous folds of nightgown and slippers of various colors, and all wore masks.

Stotesworthy gazed in fascinated amazement. There were other ridiculous costumes than his own about that evening, and for a moment he felt a little easier. And then a light dawned upon him, and he exclaimed aloud:

That's what it was! He had forgotten all about his mask! And it would be 12 o'clock in the morning before the fools would think of such a thing as sleep; hence the groan.

Stotesworthy, hurrying as fast as his hobbling sheet would allow, squeezed himself through the doorway. Unfortunately, the courtier was far too interested in trying to establish the identity of the two masked women, who at that moment entered from the passage, to pay much attention to the unhappy Stotesworthy, and he did not notice that he was standing on a corner of the Roman senator's toga.

Neither did the Roman senator notice that anything was wrong until the first glimpse of light which carried him through the narrow opening.

He had gone through with a sort of rotary motion, something similar to the "revolving wedge" of the football field at this time, however, executed by a single player; something of a feat in itself.

But, as fate would have it, he had rotated in the wrong direction; had put a reverse English on himself, as it were, with the result that the sheet, or most of it, remained in the cloakroom.

Immediately upon Stotesworthy's disappearance Tommy took it upon himself to slam the door. Again fate, in the guise of a spring lock, played the trouble-hardened author a scurvy trick.

The bang of the door was followed immediately by a vicious bombardment of knobs and kicks from Stotesworthy's side, and he bellowed:

"Open this door!" he bellowed. "You open this door, I say!"

"S-sh," cautioned Tommy in a stage whisper. "Wait just a minute; they're still here."

"Open this door, I tell you! I don't care who's there," screamed the author, seemingly in a fury over something.

"Open this door, you fool, or I'll break your confounded neck."

one, after gathering up his new acquaintance's donation to the poor, did a most singular thing.

He hurried the band, shining impudently, one end of which had coiled round Stotesworthy in the passage to the lobby. The other end, passing over the head of the robber, was fastened to the door of the passage.

It shattered into a thousand tinkling pieces.

Stotesworthy St. John had been held up, robbed, divested of his clothing and his self respect by the grinning muzzle of an empty whisky flask.

For many minutes after the robber's last brutal laugh had floated back to him on the evening breeze, Stotesworthy remained motionless, an unbroken statue of humiliation and despair.

the author's fantastic costume. "What are you rigged up to represent, anyhow—a Roman senator?"

Stotesworthy did not answer. He was struck with another idea.

"Ha—yes, yes!" he said at last. "A Roman senator, and I've lost my mask!"

"I'll see if I can find another for you," Tommy, unnecessarily agreeable, volunteered.

"No, no; wait!" Stotesworthy exclaimed. "I'll see if I can find another for you."

Tommy nodded and turned once more to the floor opening into a passage that led to the lobby, adjusting his mask as he went.

The door had scarcely closed behind Tommy before it opened again, and his gallant figure reappeared.

"Some one's coming down the passage," he explained. "Thought you'd better get out of sight if you don't want to be recognized."

"Some one coming?" Stotesworthy gasped. "Who is it?"

"How do I know?" the courtier of Louis XV. demanded. "They're all masked."

Stotesworthy, hurrying as fast as his hobbling sheet would allow, squeezed himself through the doorway. Unfortunately, the courtier was far too interested in trying to establish the identity of the two masked women, who at that moment entered from the passage, to pay much attention to the unhappy Stotesworthy, and he did not notice that he was standing on a corner of the Roman senator's toga.

An Awkward Position

By REV. J. H. RALSTON

Rev. J. H. Ralston, Secretary of the Free Bible Institute of Chicago

Peter's position as indicated by this question depends on two or three things; the person to whom it was addressed, the person referred to in the closing pronoun, and the circumstances that the question involved.

governor; Peter was in an outer hallway warming himself by a fire; one of the maids connected with the household of the governor recognized Peter as one that she had seen in the garden of Gethsemane with Jesus and she at once accused him of being a disciple of Jesus by asking the question of the text. Out of the question that indicated Peter's position grow some helpful suggestions.

Companionship Indicates Discipleship. If Peter was with Jesus he was prima facie his disciple. When Jesus was gathering his disciples his frequent word was, "Follow me." We read that Matthew left all and followed Jesus, and so with other disciples. "Sell that thou hast and follow me." "Whoever will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." We find that the disciples attached themselves to the person of Jesus because they were his disciples or learners, keeping within easy reach of the great teacher's voice. Jesus Christ does not ask this mark of discipleship without guaranty of reciprocal companionship. He fulfilled, to the letter, the promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

Disciple Cannot Escape Recognition. Christians are marked men; not with the stigma such as St. Francis fancied he carried, but with marks easily discovered by the world. A professor in a theological seminary, addressing a "new class entering" the institution, startled them by saying, "You are marked men." They soon found out that on the streets, in the stores, in social circles and, elsewhere, they were recognized as theologues. The disciples of Christ are usually marked by a public union with the Christian church and thus recognized as church members. The world primarily understands that church membership means true discipleship, however false many church members are to their vows; yet the least distinguishing mark of the Christian is his profession. He must be about with him every day the marks of the Lord Jesus as Paul did. He must be always doing the will of God, going about doing good, manifesting his true character as a servant of all, and showing the spirit of self-sacrifice, even unto death.

Test of Discipleship. The test of Peter's discipleship here was the most trying one that could have been put on him, and at the same time it gave him an opportunity of showing the true fiber of his character and thus proclaiming his loyalty to his master. "It is not difficult to be a Christian on the Lord's day or in the revival meeting, but it is difficult to be a Christian when one is surrounded by drunkards, profane swearers and the licentious. It was a hard thing for a believer to be a Christian in Rome, for that city was notorious in its impiety." It was hard for Peter to be sincere where he was, and this difficulty primarily had its root in his folly in being where he ought not to have been. The greatest pains the Christian suffers are the reproofs he receives from the world because of his inconsistencies. There is a peculiar delight among the people of the world in casting up the inconsistencies of Christians to them. Peter was true enough in the garden, but before the servants he was as false as a man could be. He was brave enough in the garden, but before the kitchen maid he was a coward.

But it is before the world that the true testimony can be made, indeed, it is in the Christian's business to witness in a world of sin. The testimony of the master himself was given in the world, and for two thousand years that testimony has stood and is as effective today as when first given, even the memory of Jesus Christ, as we might say, the tradition of Jesus Christ, his place in the world that nothing else can take.

And there is an incidental suggestion in connection with Peter's base denial, in that the step from close companionship with Jesus Christ to apostasy is not a long one. Peter was in a true sense a prelate among the disciples, yet his base denial of his Lord is told as widely as the parody of Judas Iscariot himself.

To rest in any relationship to Jesus Christ with too great confidence is dangerous.

"HA! YES, YES," HE SAID AT LAST. "A ROMAN SENATOR!"

Stotesworthy, hurrying as fast as his hobbling sheet would allow, squeezed himself through the doorway. Unfortunately, the courtier was far too interested in trying to establish the identity of the two masked women, who at that moment entered from the passage, to pay much attention to the unhappy Stotesworthy, and he did not notice that he was standing on a corner of the Roman senator's toga.

Neither did the Roman senator notice that anything was wrong until the first glimpse of light which carried him through the narrow opening.

"S-sh," cautioned Tommy in a stage whisper. "Wait just a minute; they're still here."

"Open this door, I tell you! I don't care who's there," screamed the author, seemingly in a fury over something.

Memory's Tribute.
Mary Jane Macomber was born in the town of Springport, N. Y., Sept. 15, 1822, on the place now known as the Dills farm. Her death occurred at her home in the town of Venice, Tuesday morning, Oct. 26, 1915, her age being 93 years, one month and three days.
While a young girl her parents moved into the village of Union Springs, occupying what is now called the Thomas house.
Her mother's health being poor, the care of the household rested upon her, faithfulness characterizing the discharge of those duties to parents and brothers. She was married to Andrew J. Culver, Sept. 16, 1845, 59 years being allotted them together. To them were given two daughters and one son, yet living. Three grandchildren remain and one great grandson. The golden wedding anniversary was made the occasion of a celebration.

A few years after their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Culver purchased the farm now in possession of Joseph Fowler, where they resided for 17 years, and 49 years ago the family removed to the present home. For several successive years on her birthday anniversary, Mrs. Culver had visited these former homes, around which clustered hallowed memories. The last one was not observed in this manner, because of failing strength.
Her parents were of the Friends faith, serving the church with fidelity and honor. In the hearts of their children were sown the seeds of divine truth, reverence for God and His house. In the fall of 1874 at a general meeting held in the North Street meeting house, Mrs. Culver with her husband experienced more deeply the things of God. The Bible became her daily companion and she enjoyed constant communion with her Master. She manifested her devotion to God by faithful attendance upon church services and exemplifying the Christian virtues of patience and forbearance; her influence was ever on the side of moral reforms. Through loyalty and tenderness of loved ones, her life closed peacefully. Death had no sting, the grave no victory. By her death, the church loses a valued member, the community one of its oldest and most highly esteemed residents, and her children a faithful mother, who has fought a good fight, kept the faith, and is now in the possession of the crown that fadeth not away.
The large assemblage at her late home on the afternoon of Oct. 28, manifested the attachment toward this aged mother in Israel. The officiating clergyman, Rev. W. J. Reagan, presented excellent thoughts for the occasion, reading a favorite hymn of the deceased, "Thy Dearest Friend" and "Crossing the Bar." The selection of the 103rd Psalm by Mrs. Culver was read by Rev. G. P. Sewall of Aurora, who also offered prayer. Mrs. Trumpeter of Levanna sang, "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere" and with Rev. G. P. Sewall, the duet, "Looking this Way." The body was committed to its final resting place in the family plot in Ridge-way cemetery.

We print note heads, letterhead and envelopes for the farmer or business man at reasonable prices.

Just The Right Present.
Don't take chances in the matter of Christmas presents. You don't want yours, like so many others, to be received with indifference or worse, and ten days after Christmas to be cast aside and forgotten.
You take no such chance in giving The Youth's Companion for a year. Did you ever know of a home where it came amiss, or of one in which it was not conspicuous on the library table or in some one's hands all through the year?
It is worth while to make a gift of that sort, and it is worth while to receive it, too, for the companion illustrates the best traits in American life in its stories and sketches, upholds the best standards in its articles and other contributions, and combines the practical and informing with the entertaining and blood-stirring.
If you do not know The Companion as it is to-day, let us send you one or two current issues free, that you may thoroughly test the paper's quality. We will send also the Forecast for 1916.
Every new subscriber who sends $2.00 for the fifty-two weekly issues of 1916 will receive free all the issues for the rest of 1915 and The Companion Home Calendar for 1916.

Build Up From Within.
If a psychologist can contribute anything to the progress of mankind he must first of all offer the advice not to rely on plans by which the attention is focused on the disasters which are to be avoided. Education by forbidding the wrong action instead of awakening the impulses toward the right one is as unpromising for peoples as it is for individuals. We must truly build up from within.—Hugo Muensterberg.

Hagin's Grocery and Book Store. 27tf

—F. C. Hagin was the victim of an accident, Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock, which appeared very serious for a time, but fortunately did not prove to be. A cut in the temple and a bruised nose, aside from the nervous shock, were the extent of his injuries. Mr. Hagin had been waiting upon a lady customer in a carriage in front of his store, and had just turned to re-enter the store when a boy riding a bicycle at a rapid rate, ran into him, throwing him several feet. When picked up, Mr. Hagin was unconscious and blood was streaming from his head and nostrils. He was carried into the store and later taken to his home nearby. He remained in an unconscious state for about half an hour, and for several hours was only semi-conscious, not realizing what had happened to him. He remained in bed nearly all the following day, suffering from severe headache, but was at the store on Wednesday. An older person in the same place might have been killed. Boys who ride on the sidewalks (if they can't ride anywhere else) should never go so fast that they cannot turn out for people, they should always ring their bells as a warning, and at night have lights on their wheels.

STATE SHOULD AID CONSUMPTION WAR

Governor Whitman Speaks at Conference.

PRaise FOR PRIVATE HELP.

Chief Executive of State Says Movement For Suppression of White Plague Should Have Greater State Support.

"The greatest asset of a state is its people. Nothing more intimately and directly concerns the state's welfare than the conservation of the health, vitality and efficiency of its people." Thus Governor Charles S. Whitman summed up his address before the tuberculosis mass meeting in Albany the reason for the public interest in the tuberculosis campaign and the reason why, according to the governor, there should be even greater activity in the future, by state and local agencies than there has been of the past.

The meeting at which the governor spoke was the chief session of the annual state conference of tuberculosis workers held under the auspices of the State Charities Aid association. Meeting at the same time was the north Atlantic states' tuberculosis conference, held under the auspices of the National Tuberculosis association.

Public and Private Cooperation. Cooperation with the two private organizations was the state department of health. The meetings were held in the state education building. These facts lent particular interest to the governor's comments on one of the distinguishing characteristics of the tuberculosis movement, the cooperation between public authorities and private organizations.

"The skill and success with which a co-operative understanding was secured and has been maintained between public authorities and private initiative in the tuberculosis campaign," said Governor Whitman, "should long serve as an example and an inspiration for similar co-operative efforts in many other lines of social betterment and human welfare. This is the potential of the state as a whole, but also of the various cities, towns and villages."

Must Have Private Aid. "The state alone, for it is already attaining its maximum of efficiency in administration. We cannot depend upon private initiative alone. The state's authority is limited and its resources also, inadequate. It is only by the most far-reaching co-operative action of both the state and local authorities and of all private organizations willing to lend a hand can any large result in public health or in any other field be achieved."

The governor expressed considerable surprise that the state and taken so small a part, relatively, in this "wide and sweeping movement." While it had developed the capacity of the hospital at Ithaca for incipient tuberculosis, had enacted a number of important laws dealing with hospitals and sanitary supervision of cases in their homes, and while it had reorganized the state department of health, largely because the anti-tuberculosis movement revealed the necessity for it, nevertheless the division of tuberculosis in the state department of health existed only in statute, no funds having been provided last year or this year for the organization of this important division.

Hope For Appropriation.

Many of the governor's hearers believed that this reference to the tuberculosis division of the state department of health meant that an appropriation for the work of this division during the coming session of the legislature would have his support. In commenting upon the part played by the State Charities Aid association in the tuberculosis movement outside of New York city, Governor Whitman said:

"It is gratifying that so large a part has been taken in the tuberculosis movement by interested citizens and lay organizations. We need these local associations and societies to hold the local authorities to a high sense of duty and to furnish the stimulus for securing funds with which to carry on the work. Aside from the department of health, the leadership in the movement in the state outside of New York city has been taken from the outset by an organization presided over by my long time friend and counselor, the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, who has placed the state, already deeply indebted to him, under further and lasting obligations by giving the prestige of his name and by giving his own personal presence and participation on repeated occasions and his wise counsel at all times to this campaign."

A CLEAR CUT PROGRAM.

"I am glad that we have in this state a well defined policy and a clear cut program for the control of tuberculosis. Eight years ago the anti-tuberculosis movement in this state was planned on definite lines and since then has been very effectively organized. We are not groping in the dark as to facts; we are not arousing the interest and sympathy of the people without pointing out what to do about it, and we are seeing to it that the necessary steps are actually being taken."

Gov. CHARLES S. WHITMAN.

Revised Versions. Handsome is that handsome's side. Necessity is the mother of invention. Life is a long journey. These who live in glass houses should always have the least stones thrown. Nothing fails like success. Necessity is the mother of invention. Life is a long journey.

Discontented Wife.

"Discontented Wife." Several of the men whom I refused when I married you are richer than you are now. The husband that's rich is the one who is not. "If all worked for the attainment of their wishes there would be fewer trials of the waiting."

Gornish and Squab Pie.

There are few, if any, conger eels in American waters; they are to some people a most unpleasant looking fish. Cornwall, England, esteems them highly and makes them into pie with mushrooms and parsley. Gornish, Mrs. Florence Coalg Albrecht explains in a National Geographic society bulletin, makes any number of things into pie and calls the product invariably "squab pie," though all things but squabs are among the materials. "Squab pie" gave rise to the following Cornish story repeated by the writer:

"The devil came one day to the banks of the Tamar, the rippling river that divides Devon and Cornwall, and looked over at the rocky land beyond. His majesty considered the swift current and shook his head. 'No,' he said finally, 'No, that's no place for me! Every one who goes there is turned into a saint and everything else into squab pie. I'm fit for neither one nor the other!' And he stayed in Devon."

What the Duke Said.

The Duke of Wellington, of course, never said "Up, guards, and at 'em!" at Waterloo, but it is generally known how near he came to saying it? Sir Herbert Maxwell in his biography of the duke points out what is the probable origin of the pleasing legend. Late on the afternoon of that memorable 18th of June the First and Second battalions of the Third cheshires were foremost in the attack on Mount St. Jean. They had reached a crossroad unaware that British troops were lying behind the wayside banks according to orders to remain prone when under fire, but not actually engaged. Then at the proper moment Wellington's voice was heard: "clear above the storm," "Stand up, guards!" It was Mailland's brigade of guards that thus "stood up" and with a victorious rush swept the cheshires out of the combat. London Mirror.

Thick and Thin Shells.

There are several kinds of high explosive shells, which have been designed for various purposes. For instance, there are the shells the case of which is very thin, so that their capacity for containing explosive may be increased. These explode instantly at the slightest contact and are used as mines, or, in other words, they cause damage not by the impact of their mass but by the fierceness of the explosion. Another kind of explosive shell is made by increasing the thickness of the steel case and reducing the charge of explosive. The explosion of this missile is calculated to take place a little after contact. This type is used for the destruction of solid defenses, like walls, earthworks, etc., as the thickness of the case and the slowness of expansion permit them to penetrate the mine before exploding. London Standard.

Bill Nye's New Law.

Austria by the Duke of Buckingham.

A twin brother of Louis XIV. and Count Matthiol, secretary of state to Charles III. The last two may be termed the favorites.

Beetles of Pray.

Many beetles are bugs of prey. Predacious insects generally have wonderful appetites. The so called "green fly," otherwise popularly known as "golden eyes," is, as a larva, a tremendous gobbler of plant lice. It thinks nothing of devouring 100 of them, one after another, at a meal. Thus insects themselves do much to keep the numbers of other insects down. But not even with their aid nor with all our ingenuity in devising methods of destruction could we maintain a successful fight against injurious bugs were it not for the help given by birds.

A Foxy Reply.

One of the most caustic replies ever made during an election campaign was that of Fox when he called at a shop during one of his candidatures. The shopman happened to be a rabid opponent. Taking hold of a piece of rope, he said savagely: "Vote for you! I'd sooner hang you with this rope!" "Very interesting," remarked Fox blandly, examining the cord. "A family relic, I presume."—London Mail.

Growing Truth.

An argument is usually a tug-of-war, and a tug-of-war does not bring people together, yet we are often deceived into thinking that we can bring the other man over to our side by arguing with him. Even when an argument does convince it is not usually the best way of convincing. It is so much better to suggest to people than to argue with them. If you have convinced a person he is trying to remember what you have said. But if you drop a seed in his mind it will quietly work in him. Growing truth is more effective than driven truth.

Wily Elephants.

An elephant that is going to make trouble turns his back on his intended victim and begins to swing his great body from side to side. Then in a flash he wheels, catches the offender with his trunk and hurls him perhaps twenty feet away, following swiftly to crush the life from his body with his mighty knees.

Curious Shoes.

In India the lowest classes wear as shoes a flat block with a large knob which slips between the first and second toes. They are so skilled in wearing these that they are able to keep them on and walk or run with great speed.

—Some hunters seem to think they own the earth. They will drive their auto into a man's dooryard, unload their outfit of dogs and guns, take possession of the premises outlying and slam away without asking permission of the owner. If he has stock pastured within the confines of said premises, he takes his chance on their being peppered. He must needs go over his fences, too, occasionally to see if any boards, offering an impediment to free circulation over the territory have been kicked off. Does the property owner enjoy this? The thoughtlessness or maliciousness of the few leads to hardship for all decent sportsmen for it leads to posting against trespass.—Ex.
