Air warriors return

First aircraft units come home, describe air strikes on Iraq

Hawaii Marine Staff Writer

At approximately 3:15 a.m. March 14, six bus-loads of eager Marines touched Air Station soil for the first time in several months. Portions of Marine Fighter Attack Squadron-235 and Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron-24 were among the first of the Hawaii-based aircraft squadrons to return home from the Middle East.

Not even the cold, stiff breeze blowing through the giant doors of Hanger 105 or the early morning darkness could overshadow the bright smiles and welcome-home banners for the 214 returning Marines.

One of the returning Marines, Maj. James Hunter, executive officer of VMFA-235, described some of his squadron's busy schedule during an interview with a Marine reporter while in Saudi Arabia.

"The three Kaneohe-based F/A-18 squadrons that were deployed to Bahrain attacked deep inside Iraq early on," he said.

One of VMFA-235's F/A-18 Hornet pilots, Capt. Rod K. von Lipsey engaged in his first combat mission while flying over Southeastern Iraq.

According to von Lipsey, he knew that he would be on the first wave of attack from previous planning. As a surface-to-air missile hunter, von Lipsey would be responsible for supporting a U.S. Navy A-6 Intruder and a Saudi Arabian Tornado aircraft during a strike. Being tasked with supporting a suppression of defenses, the Kaneohe-based pilot was highly exposed to Iraqi air defenses.

"We encountered very heavy Triple-A and SAM activity," he said. "It was quite an impressive show of lights. I'll have to admit, there were some tense moments."

Von Lipsey added that within five minutes of crossing the border, he heard that someone's wingman had been shot down. "A SAM went off fairly close to us; so close that my flight leader thought I had been hit," he said. "It was an awful first taste of flying into Triple-A and SAMs."

Portions of the other three returning squadrons, Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron-463, Marine Medium Helicopter-165 and Marine Air Control Squadron-2 arrived at Hanger 105 at about 1:30 p.m. Thursday.

Capt. Edward H. Minchin, III, MACS-2 Tactical Aircraft Operation Center's officer in charge said their manning of seven early warning systems and two main TAOCs was "pulled off without a hitch."

According to Minchin, before the war started, their TAOC was integrated with the Eastern Sector Coordination Center of the Saudi Arabian Air Defense. "In other words, all combat air patrols and other flight missions in that sector had to be cleared through the Saudi Arabian Coordination Center," said Minchin. "But after the war started, we began working on our own."

Minchin added that when the war started, the TAOC coordinated more than 14,000 combat missions without any problems.

"The squadron performed well above expected," he said.

The largest group of Marines returning that afternoon (about 122) were from HMM-165 with commanding officer, 1st Lt. Sam Hall. According to Hall, the helicopter squadron stayed combat ready all through Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm.

"Before the war started, our squadron, combined in a joint Marine Aircraft Group-16 and MAG-26 operation. The task was supporting troops and transporting them and equipment to various locations in the desert," he said. "But when the war started, our primary mission was to act as a medevac unit for injured troops. Luckily, due to so few casualties, our role quickly changed," he added.

Hall said the 26 pilots in his squadron began transporting Iraqi prisoners of war from Kuwait to western Saudi Arabia where enemy POW camps were set up.

However, the squadron of CH-53 Sea Stallion helicopters had to overcome a few hardships during the earlier stages of their deployment to the Middle East.

Battling 135 degree heat and "horrendous" sand storms, the helicopters' ability to lift heavier loads was affected, according to Hall.

"The temperature inside the cockpit combined with the fine 'talcum powder' sand got to be very uncomfortable at times," said Hall. "The sand storms would be so bad at times, it became nearly impossible to see. We called that 'brown outs.'"

To get accustomed to the harsh and unpredictable conditions, Hall said a building-block type of training was implemented. Using this method, the pilots and crew began operating at a higher level of altitude until they were more accustomed to the terrain and conditions. Gradually, the pilots worked their way closer to the desert floor.

"By the time the war started, we were working 50-100 feet from the ground," he pointed out. "To sum up our entire war efforts, our pilots and their crew performed every mission they were tasked with efficiently and quickly."

Families anxiously awaited the return of HMM-165 Marines and sailors from the Persian Gulf March 14.

Terrorist threat has not ceased

Although the cease fire in the Persian Gulf is holding, and deployed servicemen and women are coming home, people should not be lulled into a false sense of security.

According to officials here, terrorist activity is still a possibility as a result of tensions in the Middle East. The American Forces Information Service reports that the threat of global terrorism by supporters of Iraq is on the rise, and experts say the best defense is vigilance.

William Sessions, FBI director, recently said that Americans should go about their normal business, but be vigilant as to what is going on around them. They should report any activity out of the ordinary immediately to the FBI, the police or appropriate military authority. Three general rules should be followed: be alert, keep a low profile, and be unpredictable.

For example, if you see someone watching you, your home or your place of work, report it immediately to the authorities. The same rule applies to suspicious-looking vehicles, especially those that appear to be following you.

Teach your children not to talk to, or leave school with strangers, nor should they or adults open their residence doors without knowing whom to expect.

Be especially suspicious of bulky mail from people you don't know. Also, look for these flaws on mailed packages:

- No return address
- Excessive postage
- Mailed from a foreign country

- Badly typed or written
- Misspelled words, addressed to person's title only
- Wrong title or name
- Restrictive markings, such as "For Eyes Only" or "Personal"
- Rigid or bulky
- Lopsided
- Only stains on the wrapping
- Protruding wires
- Strange odor such as almonds

These simple rules could save you, your co-workers, friends or loved ones from being the victim of terrorism.

Rundown: Who is back, and who isn't

Editor's note: The following story is a compilation of information about Marines and sailors who returned from Operations Desert Shield/Storm through Tuesday.

Many Marines and sailors from 1st Radio Battalion, Fleet Marine Force, Pacific have returned.

Aircraft units have also begun to return. Marine Aircraft Group-24 has seen the return of: Marine Fighter Attack Squadron-235; Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron-165; and Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron-463.

While Marine Air Control Squadron-2 and Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron-24 still have deployed personnel, several members of those units have returned.

MAG-24 units still to return are Marine Wing Support Squadron-174; Marine Fighter Attack Squadron-212; Marine Fighter Attack Squadron-232; and Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron-265. All F/A-18 (Hornet) aircraft are scheduled to return at a later date.

Also still deployed are Marines and sailors in Brigade Service Support Group-1, the combat support element of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Brigade. This unit is continuing to supply necessities to servicemen and women who are still deployed.

Roughly 1,950 Kaneohe-based Marines and sailors have returned to the 1st Marine Expeditionary Brigade here, during the first 10 days of redeployment from Operation Desert Shield/Storm. About 5,500 more servicemen and women are scheduled to return.

Arrivals began March 9 with two flights of returning warriors from 3d Battalion, 3d Marine Regiment. While most of 3rd Battalion has returned, the regiment still has personnel from 1st and 2nd Battalions deployed as well as several Marines from its Headquarters element.

Servicemen from Battery A, 1st Battalion, 12th Marines, the "artillery arm" of the 3d Marine Regiment, began to return Sunday. Three additional batteries of the battalion are still deployed. Also, the Reconnaissance, Combat Engineer and Assault Amphibian Vehicle companies of 3d Marine Regiment are still in South West Asia.

Cheney discusses future structure for military

American Forces Information Service
 The new Defense Department budget request continues the about-face in defense planning reflected by world events.
 The military's force structure won't be geared for global conflict with the Soviet Union on short notice, said Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney. The strategy will focus more on being prepared for a quick, mobile response to any place in the world.
 Atlantic forces will be configured to meet the requirements of the Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty. Pacific forces will provide regional access and a base for power projections, Cheney explained.
 A U.S.-based contingency force will be able to deploy quickly to trouble spots around the world for crises limited in scope and time, Cheney added. "We can now focus more upon regional contingencies as being the driving factor in force size rather than the need to be prepared for a global conflict with the Soviet Union on short notice," he said.

 The fiscal 1992-93 Department of Defense budget addresses this strategy, said Cheney. Rapid response to global crises requires superior U.S. force capabilities.
 This requires high-quality personnel, vigorous defense research and development, advanced military systems, an ability to deploy military power rapidly to areas of U.S. strategic interest and preservation of an industrial and technological base. To ensure nuclear deterrence, DoD will maintain strong offensive nuclear forces, said the secretary.
 The budget request includes a downsizing of the Marine Corps from three to roughly two and a half expeditionary brigades.

 The Navy will face a 20 percent reduction of its fleet. For example, the number of aircraft carriers will be reduced from 13 to 12. This includes retirement of the USS Midway, USS Forrestal, USS Saratoga and USS Ranger. Carrier wings will be cut from 15 to 13 by 1995, and all battleships will be taken out of service. The fleet of 545 ships will be slashed to 451.
 The budget request includes a downsizing of the Army from 28 divisions in 1990 to 18 by 1995.
 The Air Force will reduce its tactical fighter wings from 36 to 26. It will cut its strategic bombers from 268 in 1990 to 181 in 1995, reflecting retirement of B-52H strategic aircraft over the next few years. The F-111 will convert from a strategic to a conventional role. DoD anticipates that 13 B-2 advanced technology bombers will be on-line by 1995.

 To preserve the technological superiority of U.S. forces, the fiscal 1992 research, development, test and evaluation budget authority will be 10 percent above fiscal 1991 levels. DoD technology base funding - $3.9 billion for fiscal 1992 and $4 billion for fiscal 1993 - includes high-performance computing and improved materials for electronics, gas turbine engines and airframe components, continued Cheney.
 The force structure will include high airlift and sealift capacities, substantial and effective maritime and amphibious forces, a full array of combat aircraft and both heavy and light Army infantry divisions, he added.

 The budget calls for six C-17 strategic transports in fiscal 1992 at a cost of 2.8 billion, with an additional 12 planes in 1993 for $4.2 billion. Airlift capacity will remain at current levels through fiscal 1995, then modestly increase, as the fielding of C-17s exceeds the retirement of C-141 airlift aircraft.
 DoD also plans to improve response time to problem areas with its sealift program in 1993, using funds already appropriated by Congress, said the secretary. The Ready Reserve Force will increase from 96 tanker and cargo ships to 142 by 1994.
 DoD is reorienting the Strategic Defense Initiative to provide global protection against limited ballistic missile strikes. This defensive concept, known as Global Protection Against Limited Strikes, includes theater missile defenses to protect U.S. and allied troops deployed abroad.

 Consistent with streamlining its force structure, U.S. military manpower levels will decline because fewer people are needed for a smaller force, continued Cheney. By the end of fiscal 1995, active military will decrease to 1.653 million, about 24 percent below the post-Vietnam peak of 2.174 million in fiscal 1987.
 Force structure changes will reduce the reserve strength at the same time the active military is being cut. For every Army division deactivated, a roundout component from the reserves will be deactivated. In general, however, the reduction for reserves is slightly less than on the active side.

American POWs speak about capture, captivity

By Lt. Col. Michael A. Large
Headquarters Battalion, Headquarters, U.S. Marine Corps

HENDERSON HALL — With their heads held high with pride and confidence, the seven returning prisoners-of-war walked into their press conference at the Bethesda Naval Hospital to finally give America the answers to their burning questions about being held captive by Iraqi troops.

The five Marines and two Navy POWs were introduced to the anxiously awaiting press. They were: Lt. Col. Clifford M. Acree, Maj. Joseph Small III, Capt. Michael C. Berryman, Capt. Russell A.C. Sanborn, CWO-4 Guy L. Hunter and Navy Lt. Lawrence Slate and Jeffrey Zaan.

Acree, who is from Seattle, and stationed with the Marine Air Support Squadron out of Cherry Point, N.C. described his time in captivity.

"My experience was just about like everyone else's," he said. "In my mind, I knew I had to take it one day at a time.

"My thoughts were primarily centered around my family, whom I love, and about the welfare and safety of the other prisoners. America should be proud about how the POWs did," said Acree.

He also went on to describe the details of his capture and subsequent injury to his neck when his OV-10 Bronco was shot down over Kuwait Jan. 18.

"When my plane was hit, I went to pull the ejection handle and did not eject at first, so I looked back and saw that CWO-

They were interrogated, given 'inadequate' food, medicine

4 Hunter was still in the plane.

"Everything happened so slowly. So I bent down to pull the ejection handle again, which is the worst possible position to have your neck in and then that's when I hit it and injured the neck," he added.

Small, who is from Racine, Wis. and is stationed at the Marine Aerial Observation Squadron-1 at MCAS New River, N.C., also described his time in captivity.

"I was captured on the second day of the ground war, so I had a pretty good idea what the Iraqi troops were doing to the prisoners," he said. "I had landed in the middle of an Iraqi infantry unit with no real chance to escape. I went through several interrogation sessions and was eventually put in a cell in Baghdad."

"During that time I prayed and thought of my family at home," he added. "I would like to thank the American people for the support they have shown."

Berryman, originally from Broken Arrow, Okla., is stationed with the Marine Attack Squadron-311, Marine Aircraft Group-13.

"You don't even begin to realize what you have in this world until you lose it," he told the press. "I just kept thinking about my family and how they were holding up during all of this."

Sanborn, who was born in Arcadia, Fla., and is assigned to Marine Attack Squadron-231, Marine Aircraft Group-13, fielded questions about the bleak conditions they were held under.

"To be brief, it was a terrifying experience. I was put into a solitary cell and suffered mistreatment and abuse.

"I underwent several interrogation sessions. The food, as well as the medical care, was very inadequate," he said.

Sanborn was listed as missing in action Feb. 9, when his AV-8B Harrier failed to return from a combat mission.

Hunter was with Acree when he was captured. He was born in Moultrie, Ga. and was stationed with the Marine Aerial Observation Squadron-2, Marine Aircraft Group-39 before his capture. He told the press about how he felt when he was forced to make statements on Iraqi television.

"I felt really bad about what we were forced to do," he said. "Afterwards, when all the prisoners were put together, I had found out that they were forced to make statements, also. When we were together, we had lengthy talks about what had happened."

Iraqi troops 'eagerly waited' to surrender

By Cpl. Steve Nelson
1 Marine Expeditionary Force

Kuwait—One of the primary contributing elements to a quick and decisive victory for allied forces here was the rapid, massive surrender of thousands of Iraqi troops only hours after the ground offensive began.

As front line Marine units pressed forward, destroying virtually every enemy tank, vehicle or bunker in front of it, Iraqi soldiers began appearing out in the middle of the battlefield with their hands up and waving white flags or holding on to some kind of white material.

Dressed in threadbare olive drab uniforms, the enemy troops appeared tired and seemed to be content with their capture.

"The majority of Iraqi soldiers were sent to Kuwait under pressure from Saddam Hussein," said 1st Lt. Abdullah Nahr Alanzi, a Kuwaiti Air Force officer, who served as an interpreter with the 3rd Tank Battalion. "If they would have gone back (to Iraq) they would have been killed. And if they would have surrendered, their families would have been killed. They know themselves that they were fighting for nothing. They weren't fighting for their country, their people or their families. They were down here in Kuwait for one reason: Saddam Hussein."

Many wanted to escape Hussein's 'long arm'

The 37-year-old civil engineer also learned from the EPWs that most of the enemy troops were eagerly waiting for allied forces to launch their attack so they could surrender. "It was their chance to get to Saudi Arabia or any other place to get out of Saddam's control. A lot of Iraqis were killed in the Iran-Iraq War for nothing. The same thing would have happened with Kuwait."

During 3rd Tank Battalion's advance, Iraqi soldiers began surrendering in small groups. As the assault continued, hordes of enemy troops began forming up and walking south toward EPW collection points.

"I saw one Iraqi jump in the air, land, kiss the ground and come up smiling because he was so happy that we finally arrived," said LCpl. Robert Bolling, an amphibious assault vehicle crewman.

There's no question that the troops who surrendered, as many as there were, would have put up a good fight had they stood their ground. But their surrender enabled them to escape the long arm of Saddam Hussein; something most of them have been trying to do for months, perhaps years for those involved the Iran-Iraq War.

"As soon as Saddam heard that his army was giving up, he announced that his people should withdraw," Alanzi continued. "He just wanted to save himself and say, 'Nobody pushed my people out of Kuwait. I told them to withdraw.'"

As more troops surrendered and allied forces continued the annihilation of the Iraqi Republican Guard, it became clear that Hussein's plan to cover up the defeat of his army, which used to be approximately 1 million strong, was headed for a fall.

Softball player finds sport in giving to others

Hawaii Marine Staff Writer

He loves softball. That's why he turned to the sport when he wanted to raise money for fellow Marines deployed to the Persian Gulf.

Sgt. George Hartman decided several months ago to hold a weekend softball match as a fund-raiser. Rainy weather conspired against him, though, delaying the event until a significant day in January that most people will remember as the beginning of the war.

They actually began playing Jan. 15, Saddam Hussein's deadline day to get out of Kuwait. As CNN reporters in Baghdad were telling the world about the start of the war, Hartman, along with six male and five female teams, were midway into the three-day event.

The $485 raised was presented to the Enlisted Spouses' Center for "whatever they need to spend it on," as Hartman, a maintenance controller from the Power Plant put it. Originally, he'd intended for the money to be used for care packages, but he said the war was over too quick for that plan to come together.

Judy Conlen, co-president of the Spouses' Center, said the money will be used to fund a big party they plan to have when all of the deployed troops get back.

Hartman said he gave the money to the Spouses' Center for two reasons. The first was that he knew they could use the donation and they'd put it to good use. Secondly, he and his wife Lori are neighbors and good friends of the Conlens.

"I guess the reason I know about the Spouses' Center and what they do over there is because I know Judy so well," Hartman said. "I figured it was a good cause."

Hartman, while the originator of the idea, said he does not deserve full credit. He said that the staff at Athletics was key to pulling the tournament off.

"If I needed something, they went out of their way to help me get it done," he explained. "It wouldn't have happened without them working on it with me."

Hartman also credits the people who played. "They also knew this was a worthy cause, and they made it a great tournament."

He said some people who'd signed up for the tournament when it was to be held in December were unable to compete in January, but told Hartman to "keep the cash." They were more interested, he said, in the cause than they were in playing softball. "I'm glad we did this," Hartman said. "I got a chance to play some good softball and we did a good thing."

'The first thing I did was ...'

Some Marines and sailors returning from Operations Desert Shield/Storm were asked "What's the first thing you'll do (did)?" by Cpl. Reginald M. Cole, Hawaii Marine staff writer. Here's a sampling of the responses:

"As you can see, being with my kids, Chad and Lisa, after a four-month separation, was tops on my list," said Sgt. Robert Coffman, Weapons Co., 3d Bn, 3d Marines.

"A lot of people wanted to suck down a beer or get out in town, but for me, I had to take care of my shower needs before doing anything," said LCpl. Ashley Steele, HOSVCo. 3d Bn, 3d Marines.

"Head straight for the beach," said LCpl. Norvel Batacandolo, HOSVCo., 3d Bn, 3d Marines. "Believe me, I didn't miss the sand part — I missed the surf."

"Me and my wife, Amanda are going to take a long, long, long bath together," said Sgt. Gary Blume, Communications platoon, HOSVCo. 3d Bn, 3d Marines.

 • A dependent spouse was stopped by military police after trying to drive aboard Camp Smith at its main gate. MPs smelled alcohol on her breath, and she failed a field sobriety test. She was taken to Camp Smith's Military Police Department, where she refused all tests. During processing, she was uncooperative and had to be restrained.

Other incidents
 • Three dependents were charged with Disturbing the Peace, Larceny of Private Property, Provoking Speeches and Gestures and Curfew violations after a dependent spouse reported to MPs that she heard yelling outside. The MPs found that a Marine had seen some one taking balloons from his garage. He confronted three dependents and began arguing with them. A neighbor came outside and asked them to be quiet. The dependents yelled profanities at the neighbor. All have had prior incidents.

• A Marine was charged with Larceny of Government Property after fifteen M-16 magazines and a M-203 sight piece were found in his barracks room wall locker. MPs found that an arrest warrant had been issued for him by the Honolulu Police, for a traffic violation.

• A Marine was arrested for driving on base suspension after he attempted to enter the Station at the H-3 Gate.

• A Marine was arrested for burglary by Honolulu Police.

They found the Marine was a deserter, and he was released to Pearl Harbor Brig personnel.

• A Marine was arrested for outstanding traffic violations, driving on a suspended Hawaii driver's license and for transporting a concealed weapon after MPs stopped him on Mokapu Road. After processing at the Military Police Department, he was released to a Honolulu Police Officer.

• A Marine was arrested for desertion after he entered the Station through the H-3 Gate. MPs recognize him as deserter from Camp Pendleton, Calif. He was released to Pearl Harbor Brig personnel. The Marine had been stationed here a few months ago and had three prior incidents.

Scouts, MPs work together on pond

 Military Policemen and local Girl Scouts recently assisted the "Hawaiian Stilts" to get a fighting chance for survival by remodeling their homes. The Hawaiian Stilts are endangered birds that nest in the Air Station's Nu'upia Ponds.

under the supervision of Station Environmental Protection Specialist Dr. Dianne Drigot, six Marines and approximately 30 Girl Scouts from Troops 88, 29 and 156 worked in knee deep waters to repair nesting homes. By filling old tires with pickleweeds and mud, the birds' nesting and feeding habitats are enhanced, giving them a better chance for survival. According to Drigot, the success of the Hawaiian Stilt is attributed to three key factors: Assault Amphibian Vehicles plowing up thick pickleweed, the trapping of predators by the Military Policemen and auxiliary game wardens, and volunteer groups like the Marines and within historic preservation and endangered species laws set by the federal government." Because Nu'upia Ponds is a protected wetland, an endangered species habitat and protected national historic property, the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA) has required all federal agencies to consider the impact of all actions on the environment. Additionally, the Secretary of the Navy has established a policy to prevent loss and to avoid impacts on wetlands wherever possible on Navy Department lands.

Girl Scouts who are helping to keep the ponds cleared. "This is the girls' fourth time out here," said Lori Foxworth, Jr. Troop leader for Troop 88. "Whenever they come, they have a great time. Among the fun, they realize the importance their part plays in the birds' future," she added.

Girl Scouts and MPs work together to clean Nu'upia Ponds of weeds in order to enhance the survival of Hawaiian Stilts, which are endangered birds.

According to Foxworth, the girls' volunteer work at Nu'upia Ponds will apply to environmental badges for their groups.

"Before the Marines and the girls came today, there weren't any birds around the tire nests," said Drigot. "But on the way out from the ponds, they looked back and saw them (birds) flying to the tires. So, we are doing some good here and not just getting muddy."

According to Drigot, between 1984 and 1991, the Air Station's Stilt population has steadily grown from 60 to 130-160 birds.

The Hawaiian-native bird is found on the islands of Oahu, Maui, Kauai, Molokai, Niihau, and a few on the island of Hawaii.

"Nu'upia Ponds here is considered one of the top three breeding grounds for the Stilt," said Drigot. "The upkeep of the ponds is crucial to promote national goals, and to stay

"It wasn't the first idea that popped in my mind on a Saturday morning," said Sgt. Jonas Sanjurjo, a military policeman here. "But it was worth it and it wasn't that bad."

Drigot said with everyone's continued support, she is optimistic that the Hawaiian Stilt will one day be taken off the endangered list.

"We have received a steady stream of support from the Marines and Girl Scouts, but we are always looking for more," said Drigot.

Anyone wishing to volunteer for environmental projects aboard the Air Station, may contact Dr. Dianne Drigot at 257-2175.

There are times when there's just not enough you can say. Right now, for instance, as we search for the right words to salute you, the men, women and families of the U.S. military. # Ombudsmen's toils and troubles take their toll

By Cpl. Jason Erickson
Hawaii Marine Staff Writer

You know those seemingly armor-plated monuments of strength we like to call ombudsmen? Well, startling new information has just come in—they're human too. Yes, it's really true. In fact, the toils of their jobs are starting to show. Look closely, you'll see what I mean.

There's one. She's smiling and wearing a patriotic T-shirt, although you might not notice it beneath all those yellow ribbons. Look at her face though; better yet, look at her eyes. Stop staring at the sleepless bags beneath them for a second and look a little closer. See the dilation of the pupils at the center of those bloodshot squiggly lines? That's one of the early signs of what doctors are calling ombudsodisorientidus. The symptoms get worse. You might wonder why she's got that crook in her neck. Surely you see it, her head's almost touching her shoulder. Not quite, though. There's just enough room to stick a phone receiver in between. She's lucky, some of the ombudsmen wedged that phone in there just one time too many and it's stuck. You can bet they're thankful that receivers can be unplugged from the rest of the phone. It's sad, but what do you expect, they spend most of the day talking into their phones.

It wouldn't be so bad if they had a free hand to hold it. But as fate would have it, one's busy writing while the other's busy keeping little ones from mischief.

Some of the visionaries anticipated this crooked-neck problem early on, and tried alternating the phone from ear to ear to heat it. It's too bad. It seemed like such a good idea at the time. Don't worry, though, doctors at the medical clinic here say they should be able to support the weight of their heads within a few months, a year at the most.

It's those tiny dots all around their ears and cheek that have doctors most baffled, though. Who would have imagined that the little holes in the phone receiver would actually make permanent marks? Maybe that's something phone makers should look into.

If you think about it, it's a miracle they can still move their jaws enough to talk. The darn things are swollen up from talking so much that they make people who just had their wisdom teeth pulled look gaunt. The ombudsmen say ice packs help a little, but I don't believe 'em.

They'll also tell you their's is a tough job, but that it's therapeutic to help other people. Let's ask the one we were just staring at.

"Iwths mead theu stwonga, n be..."

Whoops, sorry about that. I forgot about the swelling around her jaw. I'd better just tell you what she said. After a while, you learn to decipher what they mean.

"It's made me stronger, and better equipped to handle my own stress. Sure it's a tough job—long hours, phone calls in the middle of the night and the like. But the satisfaction I get from knowing I'm helping other families go through what I'm going through is immensely satisfying."

That's probably so, but she doesn't argue that her job brings on another form of stress. The result of this stress is also apparent if you pay close attention.

You notice how she keeps starting to walk off in different directions? Psychologists say that's caused by the peculiar position she and her fellow ombudsmen hold as middlemen between the military and the military family. It's a form of temporary schizophrenia (that is, they hope it's only temporary). Apparently, this strange phenomenon is caused by not knowing just which of these two communities they are speaking on behalf of. The fact is, it's both.

Not that the two are on different sides, mind you. But there is a gap. That's one of the main reasons these ladies hold the position of ombudsmen that they do—to bridge that gap.

They have to take the information they learn from the military, which isn't always good news (i.e. we don't know when your husbands are coming home) and try to present it to the wives in a way that won't cause an all out riot.

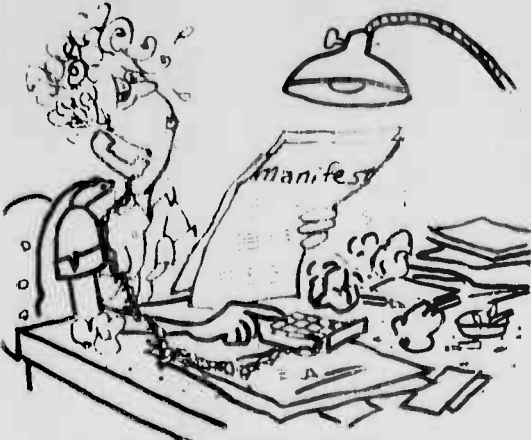

Meanwhile, they've also got to take the complaints they get from their families (i.e. How come Milly knows when her husband is coming home and I don't? Grrrrrrrrrr) and work their way skillfully through the military system, like a guide through the jungle, to get the best possible answer to explain the situation.

Another symptom you might notice in ombudsmen is their inability to distinguish between their own family and those within their units. The experts explain this as "a side-effect caused by their involvement with so many different families." They suggest name tags to help differentiate.

Take our study, for example. Just now, her 10-year-old came over and asked for soda-money. She told him he'd have to ask his mother first. When the confused boy told her SHE was his mother, this ombudsman replied that of course she was, and told him to stop asking OTHER people for money.

With that, she turned and walked off in a zig-zag pattern, head crooked to one side, down the street and around the corner. Let's just hope she's on her way home, because there are several messages from the families of her unit waiting on her answering machine. Ombudsodisorientidus or not, she still has a very important job to do, and she pushes on, along with the rest of the ombudsman crew here.

National Nutrition Month

It takes planning, long hours to feed 6,000 hungry Marines

Story and photos by Cpl. Reginald M. Cole
Hawaii Marine Staff Writer

The cooks and staff at an eating establishment here say serving hungry Marines and sailors nutritious, well-balanced meals, is their sole purpose for existence. They boast that up to 6,000 discriminating palates can be satisfied in one day's business.

Prior planning, ordering, preparing food and serving thousands of people is an arduous task for the men and women at Pless Hall Dining Facility. They spend more than 19 hours a day there.

Capt. Dan Spino, Air Station food service officer, takes his job seriously and the food prepared at Pless Hall even more.

"The job of feeding our Marines and sailors three well-balanced, nutritious meals every day takes a lot of planning," Spino said. "That job will get even tougher when all of our Marines and sailors return from Saudi Arabia, but we're ready to feed them all," he added. "There will be no food service problem here."

Spino attributes their success to 49 cooks and a handful of civilian mess attendants, sometimes referred to as "the bread and butter of the chow hall." According to Spino, most of the cooks are on the mess deck by 2:30 a.m. and don't leave until after nine in the evening. To help reduce the time of figuring out what to prepare, the cooks and crew follow a pre-planned schedule of meals.

That schedule is more commonly known as the master menu which all Marine Corps dining facilities must abide by. The master menu rotates every 30 days and is based on guidelines and nutritional standards set by Marine Corps Order P10110.17C. However, some meals in the master menu can be changed locally to suit the needs of the Marines and sailors, according to Spino.

In order to satisfy requests from the people aboard the Air Station, the master menu is monitored and modified by Spino, medical representatives, the senior enlisted food technician, mess manager and a representative from every unit. They also solicit units to find out if any special food items are requested.

According to Spino, several considerations go into a master menu to make Kaneohe's patrons diet unique to the Corps.

"We take into consideration the climate and the type of training and work environment our Marines and sailors are in," said Spino. That in turn, helps us decide the calorie intake needed and finally assists us in designing a master menu specifically for Hawaii-based personnel."

On special occasions, Pless Hall will sponsor special meals to honor a specific event. Ethnic observances, Marine Corps Birthday and Christmas meals are a few.

"When our guys return from the Middle East, we plan on having a steak dinner to honor them and to let them know we missed them," said Spino. "They are our customers and a welcome-home dinner is in order."

Spino said Marine Corps food teams routinely visit Pless Hall to ensure Marines and sailors who dine there are getting quality food and service. These teams inspect all Marine Corps dining facilities. According to Spino, the teams let "no crumbs slip through the cracks" when it comes to food service.

Some argue that the Navy's chow is better than the Army's or the Air Force's is better than the Marine Corps', but according to Spino, there isn't any difference.

"All military services use the Armed Forces Recipe Service," he said. "Lasagna in the Marine Corps is made the same way as lasagna is in the Air Force."

The health-consciousness sweeping the nation's attitudes about food has also swept into the Marine Corps diet, according to Spino. Spino said the dining facility here uses only 100 percent beef and cholesterol-free oil. He also added that most foods such as meat, fish and poultry are broiled and baked instead of deep fried.

"We are starting to do most of our cooking with convection (warm air) ovens and the dry-heat method of cooking," Spino added. "The cooking techniques are getting better which will help reduce saturated fat and salt intake," he pointed out. "Most of all, if our customers are happy, we are happy."

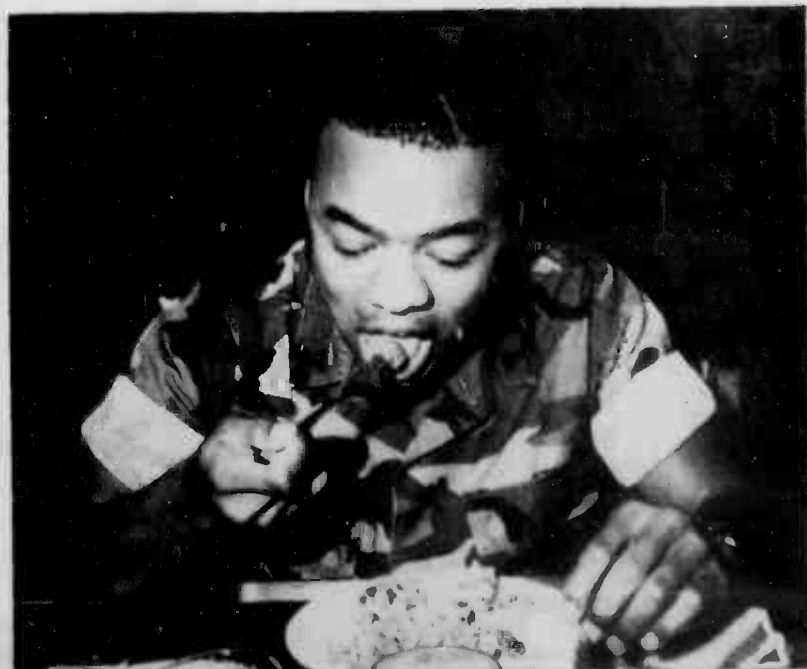

Cpl. James Phifer, a cook at Pless Hall, mixes 50 pounds of ground beef in anticipation of the onslaught of hungry Marines and sailors during the day.

Winnie Labador, a civilian mess attendant here, gives hungry Marines and sailors an order of pasta during lunch hour.

'The job of feeding our Marines and sailors three well-balanced, nutritious meals every day takes a lot of planning.

Military encouraged to enjoy Hawaii

JPAO
The next nine months may be the ideal time for military and their families to explore entertainment and travel opportunities throughout the Hawaiian Islands.

That seems to be the ulterior motive behind Hawaii Gov. John Waihee's newly announced "Aloha R & R" program, which was created as "our special way of expressing gratitude to the men and women who brought us victory in the Persian Gulf," according to a news release from the governor's office.

Through the program, airlines, hotels and other travel-related businesses are now offering discounts of 50 percent or more for all active and active reserve U.S. military personnel and their family members, and for all allied Desert Storm forces. These discounts will be offered through Dec. 15. A complete listing of all businesses participating in the program will be released soon.

Additionally, numerous other businesses are offering discounted or complimentary hotel rooms services, products and shows to the military and their families for a limited time.

Some of the "Aloha R&R" discounts and other deals include:

- A Desert Storm victory celebration featuring a variety of musical entertainment, polo matches and skydiving demonstrations will be held at the Hawaii Polo Club at Mokuleia Sunday, beginning at 11 a.m. All military personnel and their families will be admitted free of charge by showing their identification cards at the gate. All proceeds from concessions will be shared with the Military Ohana Fund. For more information, call Paula Jansen at 946-4263 or 637-POLO.

- U-Haul is offering one month of free storage to servicemen and women who served in Operations Desert Shield and/or Storm, to assist in their transitions back to the mainland. All military personnel need to do to get the free storage is to show their forms verifying a one-way, do it yourself move and their military IDs.

- ITT Sheraton Hotels are offering a 50 percent discount for active and active reserve military personnel staying at any of its Hawaii properties, which include hotels and resorts on Oahu, Maui and Kauai.

- Outrigger Hotels are offering a special $55 rate for military personnel and their families on rooms at three of their Waikiki hotels. Rates normally range from $100 - $170 per night. They're also offering a $75 rate on rooms at Outrigger resorts in Kauai, Maui and the Big Island, which normally run from $100 - $195. In addition, military who served in the Persian Gulf will be treated to upgraded rooms. The discounts run through Aug. 16. For more information, call Mildred Courtney at 941-2204.

- The Waikiki Beachcomber Hotel is offering a special $65 "Return to Paradise" rate for Desert Storm/Desert Shield military personnel. Rates normally range from $105 - $115, depending on the season. 254-3581.

For more information on "Aloha R & R" offerings, contact the Air Station LIFECO at 254-3581 or the Camp Smith LIFECO at 487-1567.

TWO PROPERTIES MAY NOW BE PURCHASED SEPARATELY
 Call to see three waterfront structures creating a totally unique property on Kaneohe Bay. Experience the nostalgia of old Hawaii in the blend of early architecture and scenic beauty. Each dwelling has its own personality; one reminiscent of an elegant plantation home, one a quaint bungalow for guests and another a nautical retreat. All at water's edge. Mature tropical foliage brightens the manicured grounds while brick paths wind about each home. Perfection in restructuring with attention to each minute detail has resulted in a creation of profound beauty. Pleasant pastels carry a theme throughout all dwellings with a charming touch of pickled floors, wainscoting and wooden framed french doors and silders. Each structure is situated to face the water, each partakes of one of the world's most beautiful views. How could you resist an introduction to such a magnificent property? Now offered at $1,595,000 and $650,000. FEE SIMPLE. Lister is owner.
