ACKNOWLEDGMENT

The material for this bulletin was collected by Charles William Martin, A.M. Fellow in Education, and Nettie Alice Doolittle, A.M. Instructor in Education.

SCHOOL OF EDUCATION UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI

This bulletin contains the names of the graduates of the School of Education whose addresses could be obtained, and who replied to letters of inquiry during the school year 1927-28. Those members of the class of 1928 who received the degree Bachelor of Science in Education, and whose present addresses could be obtained were added to the list. It also contains in a supplementary section a list of the students who have received the degree Master of Arts from the University of Missouri with a major in Education. Since the School of Education was organized as an independent degree-granting division of the University in 1903, 3002 students have received the degree Bachelor of Science in Education and 306 students have received the degree, Master of Arts, with a major in professional education courses.

FIRST STATE UNIVERSITY TO ESTABLISH TEACHER TRAINING

The University of Missouri was the first state University in the country to undertake the professional training of teachers as a regular part of its collegiate work. In 1849, just ten years after the founding of the University, the General Assembly of the State passed an act which provided that the county court of each county should select "one boy to every representative, who upon entering the University should sign a pledge to teach at least two years in the schools of the State." In order to provide training in methods of teaching, the General Assembly established "a normal professorship" and made an appropriation for the payment of his salary.

GENERAL STERLING PRICE, FIRST INSTRUCTOR

Although the authorization came in 1849, the actual teacher training work did not begin until 1857 when Professor Sterling Price, who was then a regular member of the University Faculty began to give lectures on the subject of Methods of Teaching. During the Civil War the University was in confusion and the program of teacher training was dropped.

A COLLEGE OF NORMAL INSTRUCTION ESTABLISHED

In the constitution adopted in Missouri just after the Civil War, there was a provision which stated that "there is required to be established and maintained at the University of Missouri, a department of instruction in teaching". Following up this constitutional mandate, the General Assembly of Missouri provided for a "College of Normal Instruction", thus giving the State of Missouri the distinction of being the first state in the Union to provide an independent collegiate department of instruction for the training of teachers in connection with a State University. The University catalog containing announcements for the school year 1867-68 said, "It should be understood that the College of Normal Instruction is a professional department of the University just as much as the College of Law. Its distinct design is to fit teachers for their peculiar vocations." In line with this statement, there was established at the University of Missouri the first College of Normal Instruction in connection with a State University.<sup>1</sup> Along with this teacher training college there was established a model school which was "to present as nearly as may be a perfect school conducted upon the best methods and exhibiting as near as possible the highest results."

THE FIRST STATE UNIVERSITY HEAD OF COLLEGE OF NORMAL INSTRUCTION

The Board of Curators chose Professor Erastus L. Ripley as head of the first College of Normal Instruction, and he began his work in September 1868. Professor Ripley was a graduate of Yale University and had been a principal of an academy in Vermont before graduating from college. After completing his work at Yale, he became Superintendent of Schools at Jackson, Michigan, and after seven years in this position, he spent another seven as a teacher in the Michigan State Normal School at Ypsilanti from which position he came to the University of Missouri as Professor of "Pedagogics" and Dean of the Faculty of the College of Normal Instruction.

The first professorship for college instruction in professional education courses for teachers was at New York University in 1832.<sup>2</sup> Horace Mann, as President of Antioch College, established a college course for training of teachers in 1853.<sup>1</sup> Brown University established a Chair of Education in 1850,<sup>1</sup> but so far as the records go, no State University had made provision for the training of teachers on a collegiate level before the establishment of the College of Normal Instruction at the University of Missouri by official action taken on the fourth Monday in September, 1867.<sup>3</sup>

At the University of Iowa a professorship of Mental Philosophy, Moral Philosophy, and Didactics was established in 1873<sup>4</sup>, and in 1879<sup>4</sup> a Professor of Science and Art of Teaching was employed at the University of Michigan.

<sup>1</sup>The College of Normal Instruction was the first division of the University to receive a special appropriation from the State. In 1868, one and three fourths per cent of the revenue of the State was appropriated for its support.

<sup>3</sup>At the Iowa State University there were provisions for the training of teachers as early as 1855, but the work was not recognized as of collegiate grade until 1873. A department of pedagogy was established at the University of Iowa in 1890, a School of Education in 1907, and a College of Education in 1913.

DIFFICULTIES

The high plane upon which the training of teachers was organized at the University of Missouri did not prove to be a continuous policy. There is some evidence to show that while the Missouri General Assembly was in favor of a professional department in the University for the training of teachers on a basis equivalent to that employed in the training of lawyers, physicians, etc., there was opposition from within the University Faculty. At any rate, the model school which had been used for practice teaching was abolished and a make-shift plan adopted of using the preparatory department of the University for demonstration and practice teaching purposes. All attempts to connect the professional instruction of the University with actual elementary and high school classes ceased.

Professor Ripley was followed by Miss Grace C. Bibb (later Mrs. T. K. Sudborough) in 1879, first as Acting Dean of the Normal Faculty and then as Dean from 1880 to 1883. When Miss Bibb left the University, the professional training of teachers as it had been established under Professor Ripley was, in effect, abolished.

AN INTERIM

For the next eight years the direction of the teacher training work at the University was under the heads of the Department of English. The first of these was Professor David Rice McAnally, who was nominally head of the teacher training work from 1883 to 1885. He had been principal of the Carondelet High School for three years and for two years President of Arcadia College before coming to the University of Missouri as a Professor in the Department of English. From 1885 to 1891 Professor Edward A. Allen was Acting Dean of the Normal Faculty. There was, however, during this time no special normal faculty, and although Professor Allen was supposed to give lectures on the Methods of Teaching, he stated that he did not do this. There was no model school, no training school, no observation of work in any public school, and only by the greatest stretch of the imagination could this professional work be looked on as helpful training for future teachers and school administrators. The school people of the State were apparently not satisfied with the type of teacher training work which was being done in the University at that time, and a strong demand was made for improvement. To meet this demand, Professor J. P. Blanton was elected in 1891 to become Dean of the Normal Department and Professor of Theory and Practice Teaching<sup>1</sup>.

THE COLLEGE BECOMES A DEPARTMENT

The change of name to Normal Department meant that the separate and independent college division of Education which had been established in 1867 was abolished and that a Department of Education was established in its stead. Professor Blanton was not able to secure a model school for practice teaching and demonstration purposes but was able to secure from the Columbia Board of Education the privilege of having students in Education observe the work in the public schools of Columbia. Professor Blanton made vigorous attempts to bring the work of the Department of Education in line with the educational needs of the state and during his period of service at the University started a short course for the training of teachers running from the first of April to the first of June of each year. Altogether 326 teachers enrolled for this short course work from the smaller schools of the state.

On the resignation of Professor Blanton in 1898, Professor J. M. White, who was inspector of high schools for the University, became Dean of the Normal Department and Professor of Theory and Practice Teaching. Professor White continued the work of the Department of Education along the general lines followed by his predecessor.

THE REESTABLISHMENT OF THE COLLEGE

At about this time, President R. H. Jesse of the University came to conceive of a College of Education which would place the training of teachers on a complete professional basis and which would be in charge of people specially and professionally prepared for the work of teacher training.

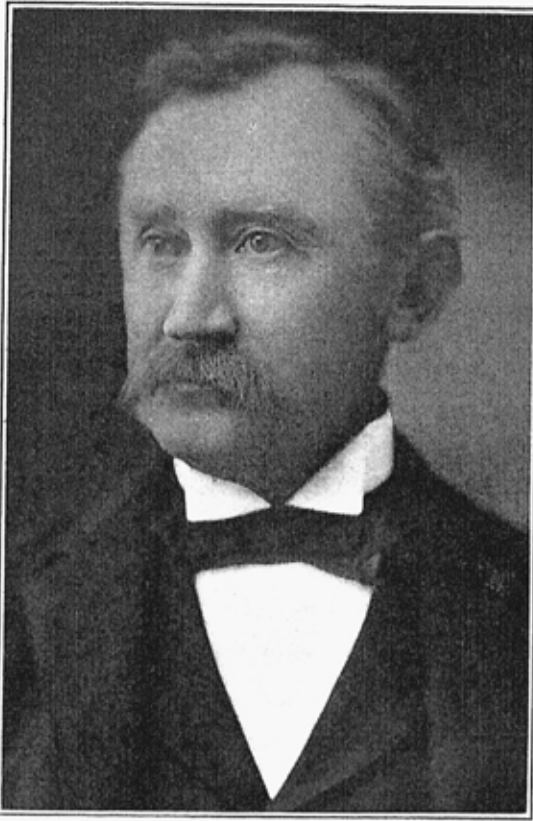

In 1903 Dr. Jesse said,<sup>1</sup> "It is the purpose of the University to make this Teachers College better than any Department of Education now in existence in any American State University. This would not be a very difficult task. We do not expect to stop in our ambition here. We aim to make it as good a teachers college as can be found in the Union. This will involve an expenditure of much money and a thorough reorganization".

In another report Dr. Jesse said,<sup>2</sup> "This college is not a mere annex to the academic department in the form of a few courses on Theory and Practice Teaching. It is a professional college for the training of teachers co-ordinate in rank with the College of Agriculture, Engineering, Law, and Medicine. Its purpose is to train efficient teachers for all grades of school work, but it is especially well equipped for the training of city superintendents, and principals and teachers for high school."

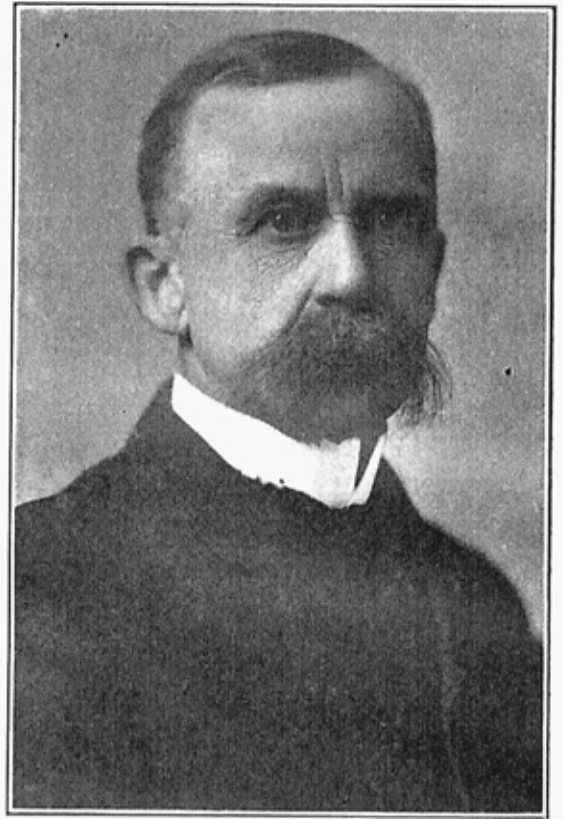

When the Department of Education was changed to a Teachers College, Dr. A. Ross Hill was brought from the University of Nebraska to become its Dean. Dr. Hill had studied at the Universities of Heidelberg, Berlin, and Strassburg, and at the age of twenty-six had received the degree Doctor of Philosophy from Cornell University. He brought to the University of Missouri a new conception of putting the training of teachers on a scientific basis. This conception was just beginning to take form in State Universities at that time. The University of Missouri was the first of the state universities in the country to establish an independent College of Education which was to bring to the problem of training teachers the scientific methods which were extending so rapidly into other fields of human activity. The University of Virginia which established an independent School of Education in 1905 was the second of the state universities to adopt this procedure. Since that time practically all of the state universities of the country have established either departments or independent schools and colleges of education along the lines followed in 1903 by the University of Missouri.

THE UNIVERSITY SCHOOLS REESTABLISHED

With the reorganized work for the training of teachers which was inaugurated at the University of Missouri in 1903, the so-called model school of the University was reestablished to include high school grades as well as those of the elementary school. The University Elementary School was used for demonstration, experimental and practice teaching purposes, and the University High School was used largely for practice teaching purposes by students in the College of Education who were preparing for high school teaching. During the first five years of the College of Education students were admitted at the beginning of the freshman year and their professional training was distributed through the entire four years of their college course. This practice was continued until 1909, when the College of Education was changed to the School of Education. This change in no wise affected the independence of the School of Education among the divisions of the University but was in line with a practice advocated in a large number of Universities at about that period to base all types of professional training on two years of college work. The wisdom of this change may be open to question, as it postponed all direct consideration of professional problems until half of the student's University course had been completed. With the exception of eliminating professional training from the first two years, the School of Education went on very much the same as had the College of Education, although the rate of increase in enrollment was somewhat decidedly checked.

THE BUILDINGS ARE STILL LACKING

At the time of the establishment of the Teachers College in 1903, the need of educational building facilities for the division was very keenly felt. The College of Education was housed temporarily in offices and classrooms in Jesse Hall, a building used for the most part for the College of Arts and Science. The newly established practice schools, the University Elementary School and University High School, were accommodated in rented buildings a short distance from the campus. President Jesse said in 1906,<sup>1</sup> "The growth of the Teachers College renders imperative the still farther development and improvement of these schools as laboratories for education, both for the training of teachers and for conducting educational experiments that will be of value to the whole school system of the state. At present two buildings are temporarily used by these schools, neither of them adequate. The greatest single need of the teachers college today is a building in which to offer courses primarily for teachers, and in which the work of observation and practice may be carried on".

President Jesse said again in 1908,<sup>2</sup> "The most pressing need of the College (of Education) is a building planned to meet the needs of the work that is being done." During the twenty years that have passed since this statement was made, the enrollment in the School of Education has increased by more than 600 per cent and the number of graduate students is fifty times as great, but there has been practically no increase in the building facilities provided. A temporary frame structure was built in 1915 on one corner of the campus to house the University Elementary School. This four room building was inadequate at the time of its construction and affords extremely poor facilities for the type of demonstration, observation, and practice work which needs to be done in the field of elementary school teaching and supervision—to say nothing of the fact that the building is a fire trap and that it embodies practically none of the features which characterize modern elementary school buildings. The University high school is housed in an abandoned dormitory building which is extremely unsatisfactory for classroom work. Its poor arrangement, poor ventilation, and general dingy appearance makes it an extremely undesirable place for either high school students or teachers in training to work. With the maximum enrollment that can be accommodated in these buildings, the School of Education has now practically one practice teacher for every practice school pupil. The accompanying photographs show the nature of these two buildings.

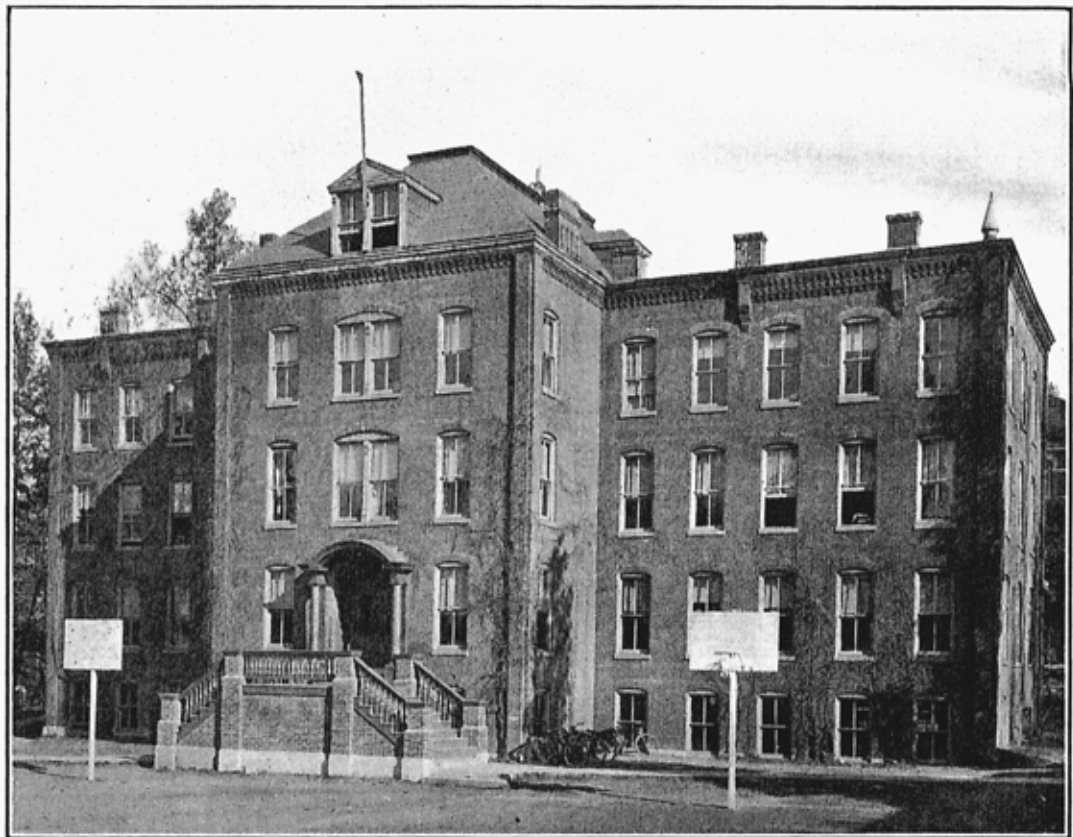

The classes of the School of Education during the first semester of the school year 1927-28 met in Jesse Hall, the Engineering Building, the Physics Building, the High School Building, the University Elementary School Building, the Agriculture Building, the Vocational Home Economics Building, the Industrial Arts Building, and in various other buildings on the campus. The need for building facilities for an adequate teacher training division of the University of Missouri grows more and more apparent each year as the enrollment increases and as the need becomes greater for more adequate and more varied training for educational work in Missouri.

THE GROWTH OF THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION

Since the College of Education was organized at the University of Missouri in 1903, 3002 students have received the degree, Bachelor of Science in Education. From nineteen graduates in 1905, the number receiving the degree increased to 77 in 1910, 84 in 1915, and so on up to 212 for the school year 1928. Table II of the appendix shows, in addition to the number of graduates, the total number of students registered in the School of Education during the regular school year. In addition to the 464 undergraduate students enrolled in the School of Education during the academic year 1927-28, there were 515 undergraduate students registered in the summer session, seventy graduate students specializing in Education during the regular session and 445 such graduate students during the 1928

ABANDONED MEN'S DORMITORY NOW USED FOR UNIVERSITY HIGH SCHOOL

Constructed over forty years ago as a dormitory this building is about as unsuited for high school work as it could possibly be. It is dingy, dark, poorly ventilated and generally unfit for school purposes. A Legislative committee reporting April 1, 1889 composed of Champ Clark, N. M. Shelton, W. P. Shelton, George Houck and W. L. Webb said, "The unhealthiest and most unsightly spot on the entire University Campus—a sort of sink hole at the confluence of three drains— was selected as a place for the erection of this building."

summer session. This makes a total of 1494 graduate and undergraduate students taught in residence during the entire school year.

In addition, members of the Faculty of the School of Education taught 403 teachers in extension classes and offered correspondence courses in professional education courses to 420 others. The School of Education thus reached 2317 students in the school year 1927-28 through instruction given by members of its Faculty.

INCREASE IN SUMMER SESSION GRADUATE WORK

The large number of students taking graduate work in the University of Missouri during the summer session is a comparatively recent development. In 1920 the total number of semester hours of graduate work taken in professional education courses was 65; in 1924 the number of semester hours was 691; in 1925, 1118; in 1926, 2186; in 1927, 2350; in 1928, 2831.

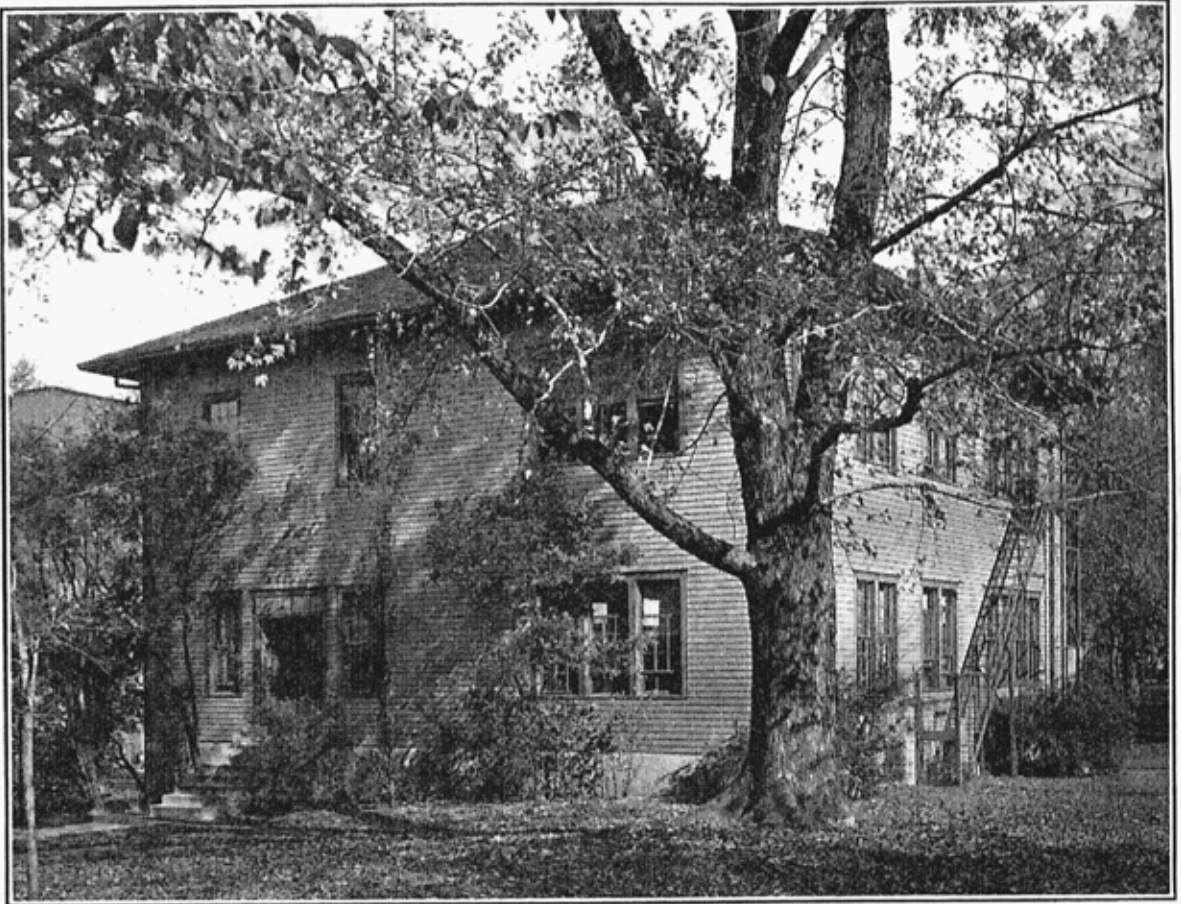

This great increase in the number of graduate students attending the University of Missouri makes very much more pressing the need for building facilities for the teacher training division of the University which have existed for the past quarter of a century. The men and women who come to the State University to prepare themselves for leadership in the field of Education, for service as city school superintendents, high school principals, elementary school principals, general grade supervisors, teachers of Education in normal schools and colleges, heads of academic departments in high schools, and for a large number of other types of administrative and supervisory work are entitled to facilities for study, research and experimentation which will put training for public school work on a thoroughly modern and adequate basis.

WHAT GRADUATES OF THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION DO

Of the graduates listed in this bulletin approximately 75 per cent are still engaged in educational work. Taking the entire group, graduates and undergraduates approximately 15 per cent are engaged in administrative work. This classification includes city superintendents, college presidents, college deans, college executive officers, state superintendents of schools, directors of bureaus of research, elementary school principals, junior high school principals, senior high school principals, and county superintendents. Slightly over 12 per cent of all the graduates listed in this directory are college teachers; approximately 30 per cent are senior high school teachers, and about 12 per cent are teaching in elementary and junior high schools. The remaining 6 per cent of the total number of graduates still engaged in educational work are for the most part librarians, substitute teachers, psychologists, and students in the graduate departments of various universities. Approximately 15 per cent of the students from whom reports were received are married and not teaching. Incomplete reports were received on 5 per cent and the remaining 5 per cent have quit teaching and are now engaged in business or professional work of various kinds. It is a rather remarkable showing that only 5 per cent of those who have received either undergraduate or graduate degrees in Education have quit school work for other lines of business and professional endeavor. It is also somewhat remarkable that those who have married and stopped teaching constitute only 15 per cent of the total group of graduates here reported. Of the 75 per cent of the graduates still engaged in educational work, slightly more than 70 per cent are still in the State of Missouri. The remaining 30 per cent, as the directory shows, are scattered through the various states of the Union and a number of foreign countries.

UNIVERSITY ELEMENTARY SCHOOL

This temporary frame structure, erected in 1915, is poorly ventilated, poorly arranged, too small, and generally inadequate for a demonstration and experimental school.

GROWTH OF UNDERGRADUATE WORK IN SCHOOL OF EDUCATION 1905-1928.

The number of graduates of the School of Education has increased from an average of 30 a year in 1905, 1906 and 1907 to an average of 217 a year in 1926, 1927 and 1928.

FINANCIAL RETURNS

A study made of the graduates of the School of Education during the school year 1924-25 shows that a woman graduate of the School of Education, who has the salary advance represented by the average student, may expect to get for high school teaching during the first five years of her service $1,403.00 a year; for the second five years $1,632.00, and for the next ten years approximately $2,000.00. On the same basis the average salary expectation of a woman college teacher would be $1,854.00 for the first five years, $2,150.00 for the second five years and $2,500.00 thereafter. For women in the field of administration and supervision the average is about $2,000.00 during the first and second five year periods, $2,625.00 for the third and more than $4,000.00 for the fourth.

The salaries of men who go into the field of high school teaching average approximately $2,000.00 for the first five years, $2,400.00 for the second five year period and $2,700.00 thereafter. For men who go into the field of college teaching, salaries average $2,500.00 for the first five years after graduation, $3,125.00 for the second five years, $3,375.00 for the third, and approximately $3,600.00 for the fourth. Salaries are highest for men in administrative and supervisory work. For the first five years after graduation men in this type of work receive an average salary of $2,600.00. For the second five years the average salary is $3,218.00, for the third $3,875.00 and for the fourth five year period $4,125.00.

The figures presented in the foregoing paragraphs are averages and obscure the fact that maximum salaries are much higher than those indicated for some of the graduates. For women the maximum salaries exceed $4,500.00 a year and for men $12,000.00 a year.

While it is true that motives other than those connected with financial rewards should mainly determine one's decision on a professional career in the field of education, the figures quoted show that properly trained persons may look forward to compensation that is far beyond that shown in the usual averages involving salaries of teachers with varying degrees of training.

THE FUTURE OF THE SCHOOL OF EDUCATION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI

This general sketch of the history of the School of Education shows that through the demands of the school people of Missouri and the action of the General Assembly, the University of Missouri was one of the first, if not the first, of the state universities in the country to undertake the training of teachers for the public schools of the state on a collegiate basis. The sketch also shows that the development of professional training for teachers at the University of Missouri met with many obstacles and that its growth was slow and its place uncertain in the University organization up to the time of the organization of the College of Education in 1903. Since that time the growth of undergraduate work in the School of Education has been on the whole steady and substantial until in 1927-28 it had more graduates than any other division of the University. The report shows that from a dozen or so graduate students at the beginning of the present century, the number of advanced students has increased to more than five hundred including those registered in the summer session. There has also been some increase in the contacts of the School of Education with the public schools of the state, through school surveys, experimental work carried on by the Faculty in public schools, co-operative supervisory projects, and extension class courses offered by members of the Faculty of the School of Education. The School of Education has also co-operated extensively with various groups of teachers in the state and with the state superintendent of public schools in the preparation of courses of study in elementary, junior high, and senior high school work.

CHART 2

GROWTH OF GRADUATE WORK IN EDUCATION

The remarkable growth in graduate work in Education during recent years is clearly shown in this chart. Many other state Universities have experienced a similar increase.

Students listed in this bulletin who have graduated from the School of Education, or who have received the degree Master of Arts under the direction of members of the Faculty of the School of Education are, however, not so much interested in the past history of the professional training of teachers at the University of Missouri as they are in its future. As school administrators, college teachers, supervisors, or classroom teachers in Missouri, they may well ask themselves what contribution the University of Missouri may be expected to make in the future toward educational progress in this state. No one knows the answer to this question, but in line with the great development of public education in the past, and the important place which educational activities occupy in the life of the state, it would be reasonable to look forward to a number of developments in connection with professional training in the field of education at the University of Missouri. Among these may be:

I. ADEQUATE BUILDINGS

This will include space for college classes in Education now scattered through the various University buildings on the campus, and modern school accommodations for the University Elementary School and University High School. It will be impossible for the School of Education to measure up to its obligations to the present and future teachers of the state until building facilities which have been needed for a quarter of a century are provided.

II. FACILITIES FOR RESEARCH

Training of educational leaders of the future cannot be done by rule of thumb methods or through making teachers in training acquainted with mere technique and the devices used by teachers. There is now need for the same type of research in connection with the development of teaching, administration of schools, and caring for children that we now have in practically every field of industry. To carry out this idea there should be research laboratories for both graduate and undergraduate students in education with all the necessary equipment for modern research and with sufficient appropriations to make the results of this research available not only to students at the University but to all the school authorities of the State.

III. FACILITIES FOR CO-OPERATION WITH SCHOOLS OF THE STATE

The School of Education which attempts to carry on its instruction within classroom walls alone without direct contact with public schools of the state would fall as far short of its responsibilities as a College of Agriculture which attempted to carry on instruction in the feeding and care of animals without actual farm contacts and actual experimental work in the feeding of animals. It would be similar to a College of Engineering which attempted to give instruction without extensive laboratory facilities and without the utilization of experimental projects on construction work of many types. Modern college teaching is conceived of as being something very different from academic lectures, the reading of books, and the copying of notes by students. It must provide for actual contact on the part of instructors and students with the type of work which students are being prepared to do after they leave school. Extensive contacts with actual school work being done throughout the state is desirable, not only because it would improve the instruction in professional education courses at the University, but because it is necessary for assisting in the continuous improvement of the educational practices of the state.

IV. FOLLOW-UP WORK

It would seem highly desirable that facilities be provided for keeping in touch with graduates of the School of Education and with students who have completed the work for advanced degrees in the various fields of Education after they have left the University so that they might be stimulated professionally throughout their entire careers. The School of Education of the future may be expected to provide such facilities as a Bureau of Recommendations which would serve all students who have graduated from the School of Education or who have trained themselves for school work in the graduate school of the University irrespective of whether they are recent or old graduates. This type of work would not only benefit the student who has graduated, but would of great service to school authorities interested in securing the best possible persons available for vacancies.

V. SERVICE TO THE STATE

We may expect the School of Education at the University of Missouri in the future to be so maintained and supported that it will render a large number of types of educational service to the school systems of the State. This service may consist in giving professional education courses for teachers in service wherever a sufficiently large group of teachers may assemble and where the proper conditions for this work may be provided. It may consist in such service as is now being rendered by most state universities, in connection with school building surveys, assisting boards of education in making plans for school buildings and in many other aspects of school administration. It might consist of sending University Faculty members to assist boards of education in establishing desirable educational procedures of many sorts. The ideal School of Education of the future should be, in addition to its work as a teacher-training institution, a service division in the field of education for the entire State.

NOTE TO SUPERINTENDENTS, PRINCIPALS, TEACHERS

The illustrated story sent you herewith was prepared primarily for parents and pupils. This card calls your attention to professional opportunities for you.

The School of Education is one of the professional schools of the University. It ranks with the schools of Law, Medicine, Engineering, etc. This School of Education conducts a high school and an elementary school. These two schools are known as the University Schools and are used as "laboratories" in the study of Education and the training of teachers.

The University High School is primarily a practice school. The Elementary School is primarily an observational school. In both schools opportunities are offered advanced students of Education to study special problems.

The illustrated story of the Elementary School suggests some of the problems now being studied in that school. The public school curriculum is just now the leading problem. Other problems are taken up to meet the needs of advanced students of Education.
