A COMMITMENT TO ORGANIC EXCELLENCE.

With 37 years of experience in the seed industry, I have seen organic rise and flourish in a short amount of time. I am humbled to be a part of an organization that recognizes the benefit of organic and is continuously innovating to provide the best solutions for farmers. Whether you are looking to diversify your farm or you are a current organic grower, you can trust Beck's to provide you with the best organic seed quality with the Great Harvest Organics lineup.

Editor's Note

Welcome to The 2023 Organic & Non-GMO Sourcebook, the 22nd edition of the world's only "farm to fork" directory to the global markets for organic and non-GMO seeds, grains, animal feed, food ingredients, and food products.

The Sourcebook is the essential guide to suppliers serving the two markets, which continue to grow as more and more consumers want foods produced without pesticides and genetically engineered ingredients. Here are indications of the growth of the two markets:

- A SPINS survey of product sales during the pandemic from 2019 to 2021 found that products labeled certified organic saw a sales increase of 16.8%, while sales of Non-GMO Verified products increased by 17.7%. Sales of products with both labels increased by 19.8%.

- U.S. organic food sales increased to $57.5 billion in 2021. Overall, organic food sales have grown 103% since 2012.
- Sales of non-GMO foods are now $40 billion per year. There are 64,000 non-GMO verified products from 3,000 brands.
- Two leading companies in the global sugar industry, Raízen and ASR Group, whose sugar brands include Domino®, C&H®, Florida Crystals®, and others, announced a partnership to create a sustainable, fully traceable, and non-GMO certified raw cane sugar supply chain.
- Almost four out of five liters (4.2 quarts) of milk in Germany are non-GMO, including organic; the market share is now almost 80%.

The Organic & Non-GMO Sourcebook remains the most comprehensive directory of suppliers to the organic and non-GMO markets. This year's edition features nearly 900 suppliers as well as businesses and organizations offering related products and services. You'll find suppliers of the following:

- Organic and non-GMO grains, including corn and soybeans, small grains such as rice, wheat, and oats, and ancient grains like sorghum, einkorn, and quinoa.
- Ingredients such as flours, oils, and proteins as well as minor ingredients such as lecithin, citric acid, and enzymes.
- Organic and non-GMO planting seeds and animal feed.
- Related products and services such as organic, non-GMO, and glyphosate-free certifications, GMO testing and pesticide residue testing labs, industry associations, advocacy groups, and more.

All the businesses and organizations listed in this year's edition can also be found on our website, www.nongmosourcebook.com, which offers a searchable database.

Whether you are a farmer looking for organic corn seed or a food manufacturer needing sunflower oil, The 2023 Organic & Non-GMO Sourcebook offers a valuable resource for your business.

Important Note about Non-GMO Claims

To be listed as a supplier in The 2023 Organic & Non-GMO Sourcebook, companies must provide information on how they verify the non-GMO status of their products. This information is given by each company when listing or updating a listing on our website. While this serves as an initial screen, we cannot guarantee or confirm the non-GMO claims of these companies.

Non-GMO claims are verified by the supplier, the customer, and preferably, a third-party certifier. To protect themselves and their customers, suppliers that make non-GMO claims should implement rigorous systems of identity preservation/traceability combined with GMO testing and third-party verification to validate the accuracy of such claims.

Likewise, companies that buy products claiming to be "non-GMO" should ask suppliers for documented proof of such claims to protect their interests.

The Non-GMO Project standard is the most commonly accepted non-GMO verification program in North America (see page 90). Companies that have products verified through the Non-GMO Project are highlighted with the Non-GMO Project logo next to their company listing.

WHO HAS U.S.-MADE ORGANIC YEAST?

Lesaffre does. In fact, our Red Star® Organic Yeast is the only commercially available organic yeast made in the U.S. The organic bakery market continues to rise, and bakers who seek to rise with it must use organic yeast to earn 100% organic certification. Organic & Non-GMO Market News

Organic markets continue their search for stability

Organic prices and production on track to bring more market turmoil over the year ahead

BY RYAN KOORY, VICE PRESIDENT OF ECONOMICS, MERCARIS

Market fundamentals for organic corn and soybeans appear set to diverge again over 2022/23 as U.S. production and imports continue to buck expectations. After two years of record supplies, organic soybean markets have begun the 2022/23 marketing year with noticeably bearish price pressure. In contrast, organic corn prices have found solid footing, with a significant possibility of sustained price support through the first half of 2023.

Since reaching a peak average of $39 per bushel over June, delivered U.S. Corn Belt organic feed-grade soybean prices have steadily fallen to nearly $30 per bushel over October. The long-supply position contributing to this situation emerged somewhat unexpectedly, as organic soy imports exceeded expectations over 2021/22 contributing to large organic soybean and soybean meal carryover stocks. Mercaris estimates U.S. organic soy carryover stocks reach the equivalent of 4.5 million bushels at the start of 2022/23, or 43% of 2021's U.S. organic soybean harvest. These carryover stocks, in combination with another record U.S. organic soybean harvest, are expected to push organic soy supplies above 16.4 million bushels over the first quarter of 2022/23, or up 34% year-over-year.

In contrast, organic corn appears to have found a firm floor over the summer months of 2022, with delivered U.S. Corn Belt prices for organic feed grade corn consistently between $11 and $12 per bushel since April of 2022. The support for organic corn prices appears at first unexpected, as the 2022/23 marketing year is estimated to have begun with 4.5 million bushels of carryover stocks. However, these supplies are expected to be largely offset by a 6% drop in U.S. organic corn production this fall. Furthermore, reduced production in Argentina and Canada, as well as supply constraints within the Black Sea region, are expected to pull U.S. organic corn imports lower over 2022/23 further tightening U.S. supplies.

With market fundamentals pushing organic corn and soybean prices in opposite directions, Mercaris anticipates 2023 will bring a substantial shift to U.S. organic acreage. After increasing by nearly 100,000 acres over the past two years, Mercaris projects U.S. organic soybean area could decline 25% over 2023, or by about 80,000 acres. Half of these acres are expected to rotate into organic corn production, driving organic corn harvested acres up 11% year-over-year. Assuming yields achieve trend levels, Mercaris estimates U.S. organic corn production will reach a record-setting 52.8 million bushels over 2023 while organic soybean production declines to only 9 million bushels.

These swings in U.S. production are likely to result in additional price risks for both producers and purchasers of organic commodities. Assuming markets follow current expectations, organic soybean prices are expected to find stability by the fall of 2023 as organic corn prices lose support and begin moving lower. However, as acreage works to respond to changing price levels, the risk imports and weather pose to these markets will remain heightened. Any market shock could quickly move supplies into either short or long positions again, further extending this period of oscillating prices and perilous price risk. ■

Specialty Oil Processing Assured Identity Preservation

AgCertain is one of the most adaptable edible oil refiners in the industry. AgCertain processes Non-GMO, organic, high performance and conventional oils. Multiple processing lines provide built in capacity to scale and diversity in order to grow with evolving market demand. Montana lentil farmers go against the grain to build thriving organic business

BY KEN ROSEBORO

David Oien doesn't seem like a renegade. He's a friendly, down-to-earth, third-generation Montana farmer. But David and his fellow farmers at Timeless Seeds are renegades. In Montana, a state dominated by conventional wheat, David and Timeless Seeds went against the grain by growing organic lentils and other specialty crops in a region where they had never been grown before. And they've been successful doing it while building healthy soils on thousands of acres in Montana and helping to revive rural communities.

“We needed to build soil health”

Back in the late 1980s, David and his three fellow organic farmers, Bud Barta, Jim Barngrover, and Tom Hastings had no plans to build a business growing and selling organic lentils for food. They just wanted to build soil health.

Wheat is king in Montana with 12 million acres of it grown each year. The state's farmers grow wheat and then let their fields lay fallow, exposed to the elements. This combined with years of tillage badly eroded Montana's soils.

“We needed to rebuild fertility, soil health, organic matter, and biological activity,” David says.

In 1987, the farmers launched Timeless Seeds, aiming to grow and sell Black Medic, leguminous cover crop, as a way to help farmers rebuild Montana's soils. But conventional farmers who were used to using synthetic nitrogen fertilizers didn't take to the cover crop. The four farmers thought they could also sell Black Medic to the state's organic farmers. But back then, they were few and far between.

“It was a terrible business model,” David says. “Any rational person could have seen that. But it had to be done because cover crops were needed.”

“Zero pulse crops grown in Montana”

To keep their business going, the farmers turned to growing organic lentils for food, which no one else in Montana was doing.

Protein-rich lentils have been a food source for thousands of years. Lentils are drought-resistant, making them an ideal crop to grow in Montana's dry climate.

In 1994, Timeless landed a contract to supply French Green lentils to retail grocery chain Trader Joe's, which would sell them under their own brand.

“I didn't know who they were,” David says. “I thought the name was funky.”

Unfortunately, the Trader Joe's contract was short-lived but David saw it as a learning experience.

“To have any hope of our survival we needed more control and a line of products under our own brand,” he says.

That's what they did, creating their own Timeless Natural Food® retail line of lentils, peas, chickpeas, and heirloom grains in 2001. The business grew, and they began sourcing lentils and other crops from more farms.

Their Black Beluga Lentils®, a unique black lentil, became the best-selling lentil on the market. “It's our calling card in the industry,” David says. “It looks like caviar.”

Timeless sells its lentils like Black Belugas to leading restaurants.

“Chefs at high-end and farm-to-table restaurants appreciate the quality and unique nutrition of our lentils,” David says.

“What’s in our heart is to transition more land to organic”

What started as the seed of an idea to rebuild Montana’s soils has grown to become a successful organic business creating a positive impact on the state’s farm economy.

Today, Montana—led by Timeless Seeds—grows half of America’s lentils.

David’s vision is to increase organic farmland in Montana and beyond. “What’s in our heart is to transition more land to organic production,” he says.

On his organic farm, David achieved his original goal—to build soil health. Soil organic matter, which reached a low of 1.5%, is now 3.5% to 4.0% after 40 years of organic farming.

“The take home message is that we can make improvements, and it takes time, patience, and markets that support that improvement in soil health,” David says. “You can impact rural economies one bite at a time.” ■

USDA to invest $300 million to help farmers transition to organic production

In 2022, the U.S. Department of Agriculture announced details of a framework to transform the food system to benefit consumers, producers, and rural communities by providing more options, increasing access, and creating new, more, and better markets for small and mid-size producers.

A key aspect of the framework is investing up to $300 million in a new Organic Transition Initiative to provide comprehensive support for farmers to transition to organic production. Organic production provides producers with the ability to demand a premium in the marketplace and thus take home a greater share of the food dollar; there can also be climate and environmental benefits. This initiative will deliver wrap-around technical assistance, including farmer-to-farmer mentoring; provide direct support through conservation financial assistance and additional crop insurance assistance, and support market development projects in targeted markets.

This action builds on the Organic Certification and Transition Cost Share program that was previously announced that provides pandemic assistance to producers and handlers of agricultural products who are obtaining or renewing their certification under the National Organic Program (NOP).

Organic groups praised USDA’s initiative to support farmers transitioning to organic.

“Organic has grown from a niche industry to a $63 billion plus market—but for the industry to continue meeting demand and providing economic opportunity to U.S. farmers, production must be scaled up,” says Organic Trade Association CEO and executive director Tom Chapman. “USDA’s new Organic Transition Initiative will jumpstart that growth by making the organic transition process more accessible and impactful; particularly for beginning and socially disadvantaged farmers and ranchers, who experience unique challenges to accessing resources and support programs.” ■

Organic Agriculture Worldwide 2020

Global organic market: Unprecedented growth in 2020—organic retail sales grew by $15 billion and exceeded the $132 billion mark

Organic farmland and retail sales both continued to show strong growth worldwide, according to data from 190 countries (data as of the end of 2020). Published by FiBL and IFOAM – Organics International, the 23rd edition of “The World of Organic Agriculture” shows the positive trend seen in past years continued into 2020.

The global organic market continues to grow

Against the backdrop of the pandemic, the global market for organic food showed its highest growth ever in 2020, exceeding 120 billion euros ($132 billion)—a total increase of 14 billion euros. The United States continued to be the leading market (49.5 billion euros/$55 billion), followed by Germany (15 billion euros/$16.5 billion) and France (12.7 billion euros/$14 billion). In 2020, many major markets showed extraordinarily strong growth rates; the German market, for example, grew by more than 22%! Swiss consumers spent the most on organic food (418 euros/$459 per capita in 2020), and Denmark continued to have the highest organic market share, with 13% of its total food market. The global COVID-19 pandemic resulted in a significant increase in demand for organic products in many countries, but there were also challenges:

3.4 million organic producers worldwide

In 2020, 3.4 million organic producers were reported, an increase of 7.6% compared to 2019. India continued to be the country with the most organic producers (1.6 million). The majority of small-scale producers are certified in groups based on an internal control system.

Steady increase of organic farmland

Almost 75 million hectares/185 million acres were organically managed at the end of 2020, representing a growth of 4.1% or 3 million hectares/7.4 million acres compared to 2019. Australia had the largest organic agricultural area (35.7 million hectares/88.21 million acres), followed by Argentina (4.5 million hectares/11.1 million acres) and Uruguay (2.7 million hectares/6.6 million acres). Organic area increased across all continents in 2020. Half of the global organic agricultural land is in Oceania (35.9 million hectares/88.7 million acres). Europe had the second largest area (17.1 million hectares/42.2 million acres), followed by Latin America (9.9 million hectares/24.4 million acres).

Ten percent or more of farmland is organic in 18 countries

In 2020, 1.6 percent of farmland around the world was organic. However, many countries have far higher shares: Liechtenstein had the largest organic share of total farmland (41.6%), followed by Austria (26.5%) and Estonia (22.4%). In 18 countries, 10% or more of all agricultural land is organic.

Sugar industry leaders create world's first, large-scale non-GMO cane sugar supply chain

BY KEN ROSEBORO

When genetically modified soybeans and corn were introduced in the late 1990s, grain suppliers created supply chains to provide non-GMO alternatives of the two crops for customers who preferred non-GMO options. Now that is happening with cane sugar. Raízen, the world's largest sugar exporting company, and ASR Group, a leading refiner and marketer of cane sugar, announced their partnership to create a sustainable, fully traceable, and non-GMO certified raw cane sugar supply chain. The initiative aims to ensure a reliable supply of non-GMO cane sugar for processors and consumers worldwide.

The partnership stretches from Raízen's sustainably certified sugarcane farms and bioenergy parks in center-south Brazil to supporting the brands that make up ASR Group's cane sugar consumer products in North America and Europe.

Both companies are major players in sugarcane processing. Raízen produces ethanol, biogas, bioelectricity, and solar energy. The company, which has 40,000 employees, has a sugarcane crushing capacity of up to 105 million tons. ASR Group is the world's largest refiner and marketer of cane sugar, with an annual production capacity of more than 6 million tons of sugar. The company's brands include Domino®, C&H®, Florida Crystals®, Redpath®, Tate & Lyle®, Lyle's®, and Sidul®.

"Non-GMO is really what the world is demanding,"

According to Alan Wood, ASR Group's senior vice president of global sugars, the two companies have had a working relationship for many years, and the non-GMO cane sugar partnership with Raízen is a “natural fit.” The non-GMO cane sugar supply chain is large scale. Raízen has developed a closed-loop system to supply the sugarcane starting from the farms to 15 dedicated mills where it is processed to an inland terminal and then to a dedicated port facility at the Port of Paranaguá in Paraná State, Brazil.

The entire supply chain is traceable and certified non-GMO by FoodChain Global Advisors, a leading certification firm.

In addition to carrying non-GMO status, the raw cane sugar is certified according to the standards of Bonsucro, the leading global sustainability platform and standard for sugarcane.

The non-GMO cane sugar supply chain has been established in response to the commercialization of genetically modified sugarcane in Brazil. The GMO sugarcane, developed by Centro de Tecnologia Canavieira, is genetically engineered with the Bt gene to resist the cane borer insect, which is responsible for $1.5 billion in annual losses to Brazil’s sugarcane producers.

Wood says his company is strictly non-GMO and that GMOs are a “red line” for consumers in Europe.

“Non-GMO is really what the world is demanding,” he says. When I say the world, I mean the people we sell our sugars to, the likes of Coca-Cola and Nestle and all of these big players.”

ASR Group sugar brands Domino, C&H, Florida Crystals, and Red-path are all Non-GMO Project Verified.

The Non-GMO Project sees the non-GMO sugar supply chain as a major step to protect non-GMO options.

“ASR Group seems to recognize that the future is non-GMO, and we welcome Raízen’s contributions to this new chapter in sustainable food production and distribution,” says Hans Eisenbeis, Non-GMO Project’s director of mission and messaging. “We hope this will influence all cane growers, processors, and brands to keep GMO sugarcane out of non-GMO supply networks.” ■

U.S. organic crop acreage increased by 3% in 2022

Non-GMO corn and soybean acres declined

USDA-certified organic land reached nearly 8.7 million acres across the U.S. during 2022, according to organic and non-GMO market data firm Mercaris.

“Following a decline in certified organic pasture and rangeland, area dedicated to organic field crop production is expected to account for the largest share of total certified organic land,” says Vice President of Economics with Mercaris Ryan Koory. “Land utilized for organic field crop production is expected to increase 3 percent from 2021 totaling nearly 3.8 million harvested acres through 2022.” Those 8.7 million acres comprise more than 19,700 farms.

Acreage gains are not expected for all organic field crops, with organic wheat and corn harvested acres expected to decline by 1 percent and 2 percent, respectively.

“The decline we expect in organic wheat and corn harvested acres is attributed to a combination of challenging growing conditions and elevated organic soybean prices,” says Koory. “However, harvested acres of organic oilseeds are expected to increase by 16 percent year-over-year with organic soybean harvested acres alone expected to increase by an impressive 18 percent year-over-year.”

While certified organic acreage is expected to experience another year of expansion, land planted with non-GMO corn and soybean seeds is estimated to have fallen by more than 900,000 acres over 2022. In Mercaris’ September acreage update, U.S. non-GMO corn and soybeans planting declined 8 percent year-over-year to fewer than 10.7 million acres through 2022, according to USDA data. This decline follows reduction in both non-GMO corn and soybean acres as well as a general increase in the use of GMO seeds across the country. (SOURCE: Mercaris)

New Identity Preserved program aims to help U.S. ag exporters better compete in international markets

BY KEN ROSEBORO

The Specialty Soya and Grains Alliance (SSGA) introduced U.S. Identity Preserved, a quality assurance program that U.S. grain and oilseed exporters can use to help market their products to international buyers and educate them about their value. SSGA calls the program “a significant advancement in food traceability for food manufacturers, processors and exporters.”

The global agriculture market increasingly values grains with specific traits and qualities such as variety, protein and sugar levels, color, size, or flavor as opposed to generic commodity grains. The U.S. Identity Preserved program aims to assure international buyers that the products they buy contain those traits and qualities, and that they are traceable from the farm.

The U.S. Identity Preserved program standard was developed over a 2½ year period in consultation with overseas buyers and U.S. companies, according to Eric Wenberg, executive director, Specialty Soya and Grains Alliance.

“Grain suppliers in the north central region wanted a brand, and buyers overseas have been asking for this,” he says. “Buyers want more information and security in their purchasing, and they’ve expressed satisfaction with identity preservation.”

Identity preservation (IP) basically means preserving the unique identity or purity of a product, grain, or oilseed through all aspects of production, processing, and transportation.

Many U.S. grain suppliers have had IP systems in place for many years to preserve the purity of non-GMO soybeans that they sell to overseas buyers, particularly in Asia.

U.S. Identity Preserved provides those suppliers—as well as other suppliers of IP grains and oilseeds—the third-party assurance that their overseas buyers want.

“With our U.S. Identity Preserved designation, we’re delivering a quality assurance plan that brings together the U.S. IP industry and reinforces the United States as a quality origin for those IP crops,” Wenberg says. “U.S. Identity Preserved will help U.S. processors and exporters broaden access and open more foreign markets, as well as better compete in the international market.”

U.S. Identity Preserved companies can use the program’s logo on marketing materials such as packaging, business cards, and tradeshow signage. ■

Food brands seeking out Regenerative Organic Certified ingredients

BY KEN ROSEBORO

It didn't take long for food brands to learn that Breathe Deep Farm, based in New York's Hudson Valley, was producing regenerative organic certified grains. Organic baby food manufacturer Happy Family Organics had been looking for Regenerative Organic Certified oats for their Organic & Regenerative product line. They contacted Breathe Deep Farm through the farm's website after learning about them from the Regenerative Organic Certification (ROC) pilot program.

"I was surprised when Happy Family came along, and said 'we want 25 tons of hullless oats,'" says Chris Cashen, Breathe Deep Farm's manager.

That was the beginning of partnerships between Happy Family Organic—along with organic and fair-trade chocolate manufacturer Alter Eco—and Breathe Deep Farm. In the process, the brands support farms like Breathe Deep while advancing regenerative organic agriculture.

Revive tradition of grain production in Hudson Valley

Breathe Deep Farm was founded in 2015 thanks to a collaboration between several farms, conservation groups, and Armonia, a group that has been making long-term investments in projects that promote regenerative agriculture for the past decade. The groups saved an old dairy farm from being developed as a real estate project.

Breathe Deep Farm encompasses about 1000 acres, with 400 to 600 acres planted with crops each year; the rest is forest and wetlands.

Organic crops grown on the farm include corn and soybeans, as well as small grains such as barley, oats, rye, and buckwheat.

The farm began transitioning to organic in 2016 with the help of Stone House Grain, a local organic grower and feed mill. Cashen, who has 25 years of experience with his own organic farm, knew the transition process. The entire farm was certified organic in 2019.

Breathe Deep has found local markets to sell their organic grains. They sell small grains such as barley to Valley Malt, in Hadley, Massachusetts, which processes them into malts for breweries. The farm recently connected with Mi Tierra, a tortilla manufacturer also in Hadley, which buys the farm's organic corn.

ROC: "North Star to guide our work"

As part of its commitment to regenerative agriculture, Armonia encouraged Cashen to seek Regenerative Organic Certification.

Breathe Deep Farm joined ROC's pilot program in 2019. "We wanted to have a north star to guide our work and to make sure we were being rigorous in developing our regenerative approach," Kissel says.

Breathe Deep Farm was the first farm in the U.S. audited for Regenerative Organic Certification and received certification in 2020 at the silver level. ROC awards certification at gold, silver, and bronze levels depending on different production practices.

Breathe Deep Farm's Regenerative Organic Certification paid immediate dividends when Happy Family Organic contacted them about buying ROC oats.

"It was a relationship that was based on their desire to immediately have a product in their line that was ROC certified," Cashen says.

Happy Family Organics needed hullless oats, which Breathe Deep Farm was growing. Most varieties of oats have a hull covering the germ that must be removed through processing. But with hullless oats, the hull falls off during harvest, making it easier for processing into flour.

The oats are used in three of Happy Family's Happy Baby® Organic & Regenerative products—Pear, Raspberry & Oats; Apples, Kale & Oats; and Pears, Squash & Oats.

Alter Eco purchased oats for granola product

Antoine Ambert, Alter Eco's senior director of innovation and sustainability, learned about Breathe Deep Farm's oats through his purchase of Happy Family Organics' products for his twin babies.

"I was purchasing their baby pouch that is made with regenerative oats and when I saw that, I reached out to Happy Family and said, 'Where do you source those?'"

Alter Eco purchased oats from Breathe Deep Farm in August 2021 for new no-added sugar organic granola products that launched in January 2022 in stores nationwide.

According to Ambert, it was the first time Alter Eco had purchased an ingredient in North America; they source cocoa from Ecuador.

"They were one of those companies that were really looking forward to getting in this regenerative organic marketplace and supporting it from the get-go," Cashen says.

Ambert values the relationship with Breathe Deep Farm. "I think that direct relationship is the best way to serve farmers from an economic point of view to put the most money in their pocket. One of the beauties of regenerative is that it really supports that principle." ■

Non-GMO Project has grown “organically” to provide non-GMO food for the past 15 years

BY KEN ROSEBORO

In less than 20 years, the Non-GMO Project has grown from being a grassroots campaign started by a natural food store employee stocking shelves to the leading non-GMO verification program in the U.S. with product sales topping $40 billion.

The growth of the Non-GMO Project has been organic. In 2003, The Natural Grocery Co. in Berkeley, California and The Big Carrot in Toronto, Ontario, launched the “People Want to Know” campaign with the aim of organizing natural food retailers to persuade natural food companies to reveal the GMO status of their products. Growing to 161 natural food stores and cooperatives, the campaign became the Non-GMO Project in 2005, when FoodChain Global Advisors, an Iowa-based company with expertise in GMO testing, was asked to provide technical assistance to verify the non-GMO status of products. (The Organic & Non-GMO Report played a role in connecting FoodChain to the Non-GMO Project.)

The Project gained critical mass in 2007 with the involvement of Whole Foods Markets and United Natural Foods, as well as participation from a growing number of organic food manufacturers, including Straus Family Creamery, Eden Foods, Nature’s Path, and Lundberg Family Farms. Leaders of these companies were concerned about the incursion of GMOs into organic foods. The Non-GMO Project was officially launched in 2007 along with a standard for non-GMO verification.

Since launching in 2007, the Non-GMO Project has become the de facto non-GMO standard in the U.S. because the U.S. government has not developed a national non-GMO standard.

According to a 2020 survey by Linkage Research, Non-GMO Project Verified and USDA Organic are by far the most recognizable and most sought after certifications on food products in the U.S.

In just 15 years, sales of Non-GMO Project Verified products have grown to $40 billion per year. There are 64,000 Non-GMO Project Verified products from 3,100 brands. About 45% of the verified products are also certified organic. ■
