DIRECTORY OF TRADING HOUSES

This directory, listing some six hundred and forty trading companies, is the product of three year's research and preparation by the Trading House Section of the Distribution Services Branch, in co-operation with the following Branches of the Federal Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce: Corporate Systems (BOSS); the Public Information Directorate; the Trade Commissioner Service and the Regional Offices.

The directory was compiled on the basis of replies by private trading companies to the Business Opportunities Sourcing System, which is maintained by the Department. It cannot claim to be a complete listing of trading houses in Canada and inclusion of a company does not constitute an endorsement of its credit or integrity. The directory fulfills the requirement for an official listing of trading houses in Canada and updates the "Directory of Private Export Trading Houses in Canada" produced in the mid-nineteen seventies by the Canadian Export Association with the support of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The purpose of the directory is to identify trading companies in Canada and their individual and collective capabilities. It is hoped that this directory will be useful to Canadian manufacturers and producers, in particular those of small and medium size, seeking to benefit from established export marketing services, to foreign buyers seeking Canadian trading contacts, and to government personnel both in Canada and abroad who are involved in the promotion of international trade. It is anticipated that this directory will be updated annually so as to maintain current information on companies and areas of expertise.

Trading houses not listed, but desirous of being included in subsequent issues of the directory should contact the ITC Regional Office, (see page VIII), in the province where the inquirer is located, or the Trading House Section, Distribution Services Branch (88), C.D. Howe Building, 235 Queen Street, Ottawa, Ontario, K1A 0H5.

Definition:

For the purposes of this directory, a trading house is defined as: a company engaged in exporting, (and in many cases importing), goods produced by others on a commission, retainer or merchant basis and who looks on international marketing business as a significant source of revenue or as a separately managed profit centre.

THE ROLE OF EXPORT TRADING COMPANIES IN CANADA

by

A.D. Burford, Burford International Ltd.
Chairman, Trading House Committee,
Canadian Export Association

Public discussion in Canada is increasingly focusing on the role of trading houses in stimulating new exports and in playing a key role in the Canadian export scene. This successful endeavour should be recognized in light of the fact that a considerable proportion of Canada's export trade is conducted between goods-producing companies and their foreign affiliates which leaves little potential for the market-bridging function performed by trading companies.

It is perhaps surprising how little is known about Canadian trading houses by the producing sectors of the economy, the government, and the general public. Recognizing that this information gap is partially the responsibility of the trading house community, it is hoped that this Directory will serve to enlighten the business community in Canada and abroad, the government and the general public in Canada as to the sourcing capabilities and the international trading capability of the firms listed herein.

SERVICES PROVIDED BY TRADING HOUSES

The central function of a trading house is to market in one country goods produced in another. Generally export trading firms located in Canada concentrate their activity on exporting Canadian goods. However, when Canadian goods are either unavailable or not competitive, trading houses may use their worldwide contacts to buy and sell in different third countries, returning the profit on the transaction to Canada thereby maintaining a market presence for future sales of competitive Canadian goods when they become available.

A wide range of activities are undertaken by different types of Canada-based trading companies. However, these companies have in common a specialized knowledge of foreign markets; they know the buyer's needs, customs and language, and understand the market's peculiarities and special requirements; they have an unrivalled knowledge of the techniques used in exporting; they deal with all the complexities involved in international trade such as packing, documentation, shipping, insurance, import regulations, tariffs, quotas, licences, exchange and payment terms. These are things which just cannot be picked up overnight. They are the fruit of years of experience and they are yours to command. By pooling its experience in buying and marketing a range of complementary goods and services around the world (or in specific geographic areas of concentration), the trading company is able to reduce the overhead costs which would otherwise accrue to individual producers seeking to develop their own in-house export marketing capability. The export trading house provides a ready-made and experienced export department, or, if acting for the foreign buyer, a knowledgeable resident Canadian contact who can source Canadian goods competitively.

WHO USES TRADING COMPANIES?

- Buyers in other countries seeking Canadian goods.
- Producers and manufacturers inexperienced in export.
Producers and manufacturers who do not have the resources to establish their own export department, or who do not wish to do so because they are unable to determine whether a remunerative export market exists.

- Small manufacturers and producers who do not have sufficient production available for export to warrant the costs of establishing their own export department.
- Organizations already exporting but who wish to make use of an export trading company's contacts in a particular market, or markets.
- Organizations already exporting to major markets but who cannot justify the cost of servicing smaller markets, and therefore wish to take advantage of an export trading house's ability to "pool" travel and shipping costs, etc. with other producers to service the smaller markets.

HOW DO TRADING COMPANIES OPERATE

Trading companies export goods and services on a wide variety of contractual bases with the producer. Some companies operate on a commission basis, whereas others are prepared to negotiate any contractual relationship which is mutually satisfactory to the parties involved. Basically three major divisions may be found in the classification functions performed by trading companies. These are:

1. Trading houses acting for the producer who is the principal.
2. Trading houses acting for themselves as principal.
3. Trading houses acting for buyers who are the principals.

Over the years a number of terms commonly used to describe these basic functions have become blurred by imprecise usage - a situation which has been caused in part by the variety of sub-divisions to these functions (one authority has defined twenty-seven types of export trading companies). Nevertheless, to indicate the wide flexibility of contractual arrangements which may be negotiated with trading companies, the following amplification is offered. It should be emphasized this is merely a guide and should not be considered exhaustive of contractual possibilities.

1. Trading houses acting for the producer: This arrangement normally involves the trading house being retained on a commission or retainer basis. Representations will typically be offered on an exclusive basis to the trading house either to all export markets or to contractually defined markets. The trading house will be responsible for the whole, or part, or none of the del credere (final buyer) risks depending on the degree to which the producer wishes to be party to the export operations and credit risks. On the one side of this spectrum is the commission agent who operates as the "export department" for the principal (now sometimes referred to as a combination export manager or export management company) and on the other, the commission agent operating on a non-exclusive basis who retains freedom to purchase on commission from suppliers of his choice.
2. Trading houses acting for themselves as principal: Usually termed an export merchant, the export trading house operating as principal buys outright from the producer and in effect turns the transaction from the Canadian producer's point of view into a domestic transaction. The export merchant markets the product abroad and normally accepts on his own account all financial risks including credit, foreign exchange and shipping risks. Although the export merchant often retains the freedom to buy from whom so ever he wishes, in some cases Canadian export trading houses working on this basis will undertake to represent abroad exclusively specific producers with whom suitable contractual arrangements have been concluded. An exclusive representation in some or all foreign markets is usually a prerequisite if product promotion such as advertising is to be undertaken.

3. Trading houses acting for buyers who are the principal: Foreign buyers often look to Canadian trading houses for assistance in sourcing their Canadian purchases. Although there are different types of trading houses engaged in this field in Canada, many enter it as a natural extension of reciprocal two-way trading arrangements with affiliated trading organizations abroad.
4. Miscellaneous specialized activities: In addition to the foregoing basic methods of operation, there are trading companies who specialize in:
 - representing abroad, on an on-going basis, a group of complementary products (or sometimes, with the producer's concurrence, competing products) in the manner of export consortia;
 - putting together ad hoc consortia to go after specific foreign capital projects involving a variety of equipment and know-how;
 - arranging licencing and other types of know-how agreements involving supplementary exchanges of goods and services;
 - providing export consulting services which may involve providing export trading facilities and/or recommending appropriate export marketing channels and techniques;
 - piggyback operations, where the facilities and experience of an established producer's export department are used to export complementary or non-competitive lines for other producers.

SUMMARY

Canada's trading community offers specialized entrepreneurial services to Canadian producers and to foreign buyers. There are specialists available in most product lines, primary materials, forest products, grain, agricultural products, livestock, and most manufactured products. Some specialize in the Caribbean, others in Eastern Europe, the EEC, Latin America, Africa, Asia or the Middle East. No matter what the product or the geographic region, there are specialists available. The rich diversity of services performed by export trading companies constitutes a pool of expertise and export capability which stands ready to serve foreign buyers and all producers of exportable goods. A trading house is in a position to reduce both the costs and the risks in export transactions, and to establish Canadian products firmly in foreign markets.

HOW TO CHOOSE A TRADING HOUSE

This Directory contains five separate sections:

- (i) Company Profiles
- (ii) Markets Served
- (iii) Company Listing by Products
- (iv) Company Listing by Province
- (v) Addendum: additions to Company Profiles

Manufacturers interested in initiating contact with appropriate trading companies should first identify those companies currently exporting similar or complimentary products to their own. A list of products by Standard Industrial Classification categories is given at the beginning of Section III. Similarly, companies can also be identified by markets served and by province.

It is recommended that a number of potential companies be identified and preliminary discussions should be held with them to determine mutual interest and capability. The following guidelines should be considered in choosing a trading house, keeping in mind that there are many combinations possible and that the significance of each will vary with the volume and importance of the expected business and with the objectives of the manufacturer or producer.

- (i) Develop a strategic plan and a commitment to exporting. This cannot be over emphasized. This is the most critical of all decisions you will make. You can damage both your company's reputation and that of the trading house if you give only a token effort to exporting. Many examples exist of companies turning to exporting only when domestic sales are slow and then abandoning the foreign markets once domestic sales pick-up. A long-term commitment is required and overnight successes should not be expected.
- (ii) Investigate your choices properly through normal commercial channels and through discussions with company personnel. Assess and compare their personnel, financial and marketing capabilities with other companies. Two or more trading houses may be appropriate if they serve different market areas.
- (iii) Before entering into a long-term agreement a trial arrangement should be tried and possibly limited as to time, products or markets. This trial run can be expanded or extended if results justify it.
- (iv) Learn the market area you are exporting to. Visit it if the potential business warrants it to gain first-hand knowledge and assurance that the trading house is doing the job expected of it.
- (v) Maintain flexibility to allow for differences in marketing practices and product requirements in other countries.
- (vi) Develop mutual trust. Many manufacturers have been reluctant to deal with a trading company simply because such arrangements are unfamiliar to them. The reputation of a trading company rests on its ability to represent its clients effectively. Learning to work with a trading house is similar to working with any other domestic distributor except that a greater deal of trust is involved. More patience and care in communications are required.

Export Marketing Arrangements and Agreements

As mentioned in the previous article, "The Role of Export Trading Companies in Canada", there are a number of methods in which the trading house may act. Two of the most common are when the trading house acts for the producer as an agent or for itself as the principal. Both forms have different legal implications, the latter being the simplest form of transaction and not unlike a domestic sale.

Agency distribution agreements on the other hand require careful drafting as an infinite variety of arrangements are possible. In drafting such an agreement it should be kept in mind that its purpose is to build up a lasting relationship and that it should be fair and equitable to both the manufacturer and trading house. Particular attention should be paid to the requirements of the trade.

In view of the variety of forms that can exist it is not possible to give an exhaustive list of clauses that can be included in these agreements. It is recommended that any final agreement be examined by legal counsel. However, the main points to be considered are outlined below:

(i) Definition of Territory

- the geographical definition of territory
- the extension of territory at a future date
- the manufacturer's obligation not to sell directly to customers in the territory
- the manufacturer's obligation to refer direct inquiries from consumers in the territory to the agent
- the trading house's obligation not to resell outside his territory

(ii) Definition of the Goods

- the contract may refer to some or all of the goods produced by the manufacturer
- methods of defining goods include attaching a schedule of goods identified by the manufacturer's catalogue name or more generally "all kinds and types of goods, machinery and equipment designed for use in a particular industry"
- the contract should cease to apply with respect to goods discontinued or allow for extension to new lines

(iii) Exclusivity or Non-Exclusivity

(iv) Clauses relating to Restraint of Trade

(v) Conditions for termination of agreement

(vi) Duties of the Agent

- compliance with the instructions of the principal and the use of reasonable diligence in doing so.
- not to accept bribes or to make secret profits
- not to divulge secret information
- obligation to reveal important facts concerning the final customer
- to account to the principal

(vii) Duties of the Manufacturer

- to pay commission or remuneration (including repeat orders)
- to pay agent's expenses and indemnity
- to compensate for (or include) orders emanating from agent's territory but not procured by him
