Disembarking from the Rushmore from over the horizon, these amphibious behemoths transported detachments from Landing Support Co., BSSG-1; India Co., 3/3; and Alpha Co., 3d Recon Bn. during a week-long exercise here.

Manning these water-borne machines are sailors from Assault Craft Unit 5, Det. A, home-based at Camp home-based at Camp Pendleton, Calif. Each craft has a crew of five: a craftmaster, a navigator, an engineer deck mechanic and a loadmaster.

"The craftmaster drives the LCAC and is in charge of the craft," said PO1 Pat Doyle, LCAC-4 navigator. "The navigator communicates with the ship and shore party and navigates the boat's route.

The engineer is responsible The engineer is responsible for the entire propulsion system and the deck mechanic is the eyes and ears of the engineer. The loadmaster handles the loading and unloading of Marines and equipment from the deck and is also the port lockout." Presently, only ACU 4 and 5 have LCACs. ACU-4, homeported in Little Creek, Va., supports East Coast MAGTFs and ACU-5 supports the West Coast. About 40 LCACs are presently in operation, Doyle said.

There isn't a specific LCAC-crewman MOS, Doyle said. Crewmen are qualified in different Navy MOSs, and then train to be LCAC crewmen. Other LCAC MOSs include boatswains mate and gas turbine technicians.

According to Doyle, the LCAC is able to travel at more than 40 knots an hour (46 statute miles an hour) with a full payload, scale a 10-degree incline or a 4-foot wall or traverse a 4-foot ditch, carry 60 tons and has a range of more than 200 miles. LCACs can carry 29 troops, not including those who could be added by attaching personnel modules to its deck. "LCACs can land on 80 percent of the world's beaches," Doyle said, "as opposed to the 17 percent that Mike boats (landing craft, mechanized) can."

LCACs ride on a cushion of air, generated by engines that force air into a bag or skirt underneath the craft, which holds the air and distributes it evenly. A skirt can still function with a 10-foot rip in the side. Two huge reversible pitch propellers at the rear steer the craft. For defense, the crewmen have two M60 machine guns and M16 rifles with M203 grenade launchers at their disposable.

Compared to Mike boats and AAVs, the LCAC ride is smooth.

"Since we ride on a cushion of air, the waves aren't really felt that much," Doyle said. "But if the ocean swells are deep, we follow the swells."

The craftmaster, navigator and engineer all man the control cabin on the starboard side of the LCAC. Their control panel resembles one from an aircraft with its complicated looking mass of computers, radar and digital See LCAC, A-4

Separation incentives explained

By Sgt. Jason Erickson

Many eligible Marines are starting to think seriously about starting to think seriously about taking a voluntary separation incentive. Several have already decided for sure it's the right step for them. However, those who are selected by Headquarters Marine Corps for the program have another tough choice to make – which of the two programs is right for them. In a recent Navy Times article, Christopher Jehn, assistant secretary of defense for force management and person-force management and person-nel, said he is disturbed by what he considers to be poorly in-formed servicemembers when it comes to the voluntary separa-tion incentive and the special separation benefit programs. He said he personally doesn't care which one they take, but thinks many may regret their move further down the road. While the Marine Corps and each of the services has particu-lar criteria for eligibility, we benefits themselves are standard throughout the military. Jehn told Navy Times that he believes several separating mem-bers are choosing the wrong benefit for their particular needs based on poor knowledge of the facts.

The two programs differ considerably in terms of monetary and non-monetary benefits See Pay. A-5

BARKING SANDS, Kauai —They hit the beach with the grunts. They secure and patrol their compounds like grunts. Wherever grunts are, they can be found nearby, directing supplies, reinforcements or helicopters their way. Just don't call them grunts.

The Marines of Landing Support Co., BSSG-1, have their own vital mission to conduct, but they also must have essential infantry skills that not only ensures the completion of their mission but their very survival in a combat environment.

completion of their mission but their very survival in a combat environment.

A detachment from LSC conducted some of their mission operations while also sharpening their infantry skills during a week-long training exercise here recently. Working for the first time with landing craft, air cushion boats, the "red-patchers" disembarked from the USS Rushmore (LSD 47) and were transported from over the horizon to the beach where they set up a Landing Force Support Party compound.

"In our company, we do it all," said Sgt. Robert Hays, squad leader. "Usually in a landing support battalion, one company will handle helo support teams, one will do beach and terminal operations and another will be deployed most of the time. We do almost as much as a battalion."

For this exercise, Hays and his fellow LSC Marines first secured an area on the beach and in the hinterland. They next set up a defensive perimeter and set up the beach for simulated amphibious landings, erected supply dumps in their compound, and dug in to provide security against aggressors. Marines from Alpha Co., 3d Recon Bn. were tasked with scouting their area for an assault later that week by India Co., 3/3.

"We usually send in an advance party in about the third wave of an amphibious assault." said Sgt. Neil Hagan, another LSC squad leader. "They will recon the beach to find an area suitable for landing zones and then set up beach markers." These design and color-coded markers are easily visible by approaching landing craft and guide them to the correct zone. Some markers designate tracked vehicles, others denote landings for vehicles carrying ammo, rations, fuel or medical supplies. According to Hagan, Navy beachmasters are responsible for landing crafts from the sea to the beach high-water mark; LSC takes over from the high-water mark inland. Once the LFSP area is set up and secured, LSC Marines begin to expedite the incoming troops and supplies to the front lines. But during their training exercise, this time was used for infantry skills instruction and weapons and equipment classes.

"We have the know-how to run the service support element during a beach assault," Hagan said. This includes providing bulk fuel, communications, maintenance, medical, and ammunitions support.

"We would have detachments with us to provide support," Hays said, "such as MPs to help with EPW processing. But if needed, any one of us can be pulled to help in maintenance or help out the docs at medical." According to the two Landing Support Marines, wherever the front lines of combat go, LSC won't be far-behind.

"Moving supplies and troops by helos is the fastest and usually the most reliable way," Hays said. "They can drop off their load and get out quick, which vehicles can't do. But if the front lines move too far, we pack up and follow but leave a beach party behind to handle the landings. We're responsible for the rear area security wherever we go.

the landings. We're responsible to the themselves we go.

"If worse comes to worse on the front lines and they need reinforcements, they grab the closest Marines to fill in — and that's us." he said.

"Our basic mission is to facilitate the movement of "Our basic mission is to facilitate the movement of "We do this

"Our basic mission is to facilitate the movement of troop supplies and equipment," Hagan said. "We do this at airfields, landing zones, ports or by rail."

"Pretty much everytime something moves, we're the ones moving it," Hays said. "In Hawaii, we offload an MPF ship once a year, go to PTA twice a year and CAX once a year." Other committments include supporting the helicopter squadrons whenever they need HSTs and providing groups to faciltate the arrival and departure of UDP units.

"We have to be as quick and expedient as possible."

UDP units.

"We have to be as quick and expedient as possible, especially in combat," he said. "If we're not, we're hurting the people on the front lines and hampering the operation. If we have to work 24 hours to get the job done, we do it. For this reason, safety has to be our number one priority. We can't get the job done if we're getting hurt or breaking equipment because we weren't working safely."

Once the overall Marine combat mission is accomplished, the mission of LSC is only half complete. All the equipment, troops and unused supplies that were brought in now have to be retrograded.

"Being a good leader is not one who can yell the loudest or thinks he is always right." Sgt. Chambliss

When LSC Marines came here to train in a week-long exercise recently, an infantry skills instructor was tasked to help them with their defense. Since India Co., 3/ 3, was scheduled to attack the LSC position at the end of the exercise, one of their guides was selected to be that instructor and was attached to them for the exercise's duration.

"Our mission was to teach the BSSG Marines correct infantry skills and infantry skills and techniques," said Sgt. William H. Chambliss. Assisting him was LCpl. Jose Lugo Diaz from his platoon.

Teaching comes naturally to Chambliss, a more than nine year veteran of the Corps, who recently returned from the drill field. His previous years in the Corps previous years in the Corps have been with line units. The 28-year-old

The 28-year-old Chattanooga, Tenn., native joined the Marines right out of high school. He says he was fascinated by the Marines bearing and their "take-charge" attitude. they had to do out here and then turn around and do what the infantry does." Chambliss said he also learned from the BSSG Marines during his brief stay with them.

"We should work more with other units within the MEB to help us both accomplish the mission." He said the infantry strives to be well-rounded, and this could be another way to accomplish this.

"For example, if there comes a time to extract supplies, we could call for a helicopter and do it ourselves.

Once the landing crafts hit the beach, Marines and during Desert Shield and Desert Storm, Marines were even faster.

"The Marines we were carrying usually got off the boats in about seven minutes," he said. "They weren't

"Since the boat is small, we are all pretty close and it gives us a chance to know and learn how each other work," said POS Maurics Miller.

Pay

as well as obligations.

The main difference is that each year for twice the number of years they served, VSI recipients will receive 2.5 percent of their yearly regular pay, multiplied by their years in service. Meanwhile, SSB choosers will get one lump sum on the day they're separated. This sum is computed by taking 15 percent of their annual basic pay and multiplying it by their years of service.

Depending on the number of

of service.

Depending on the number of years served and the rank of the individual, the difference between the total amount given between the total amount given for each incentive can be quite vast. For a gunnery sergeant with just less than 19 years of active service, VSI would provide $11,427 every year for 38 years. This comes to a total of $434,240. The SSB incentive would put a lump sum of $68,568 into their hands the day they separated.

On the other hand, a sergeant with six years active service would rate an annual payment of $2,379 for 12 years (total $28,551) or a one-time SSB payment of $14,276. The SSB would yield half that of the VSI and carry the value of today's dollar. Someone intending to invest their SSB money could make far more than the VSI in much less time. But if the person had to rely on that money for income while finding a job or needed money to supplement their income, he or she might prefer to get annual payments,

According to the Navy Times,
Marines are currently choosing SSB over VSI just more than four to one.

Jehn said that conversations with unit commanders On the other hand, a sergeant

Jehn said that conversa-tions with unit commanders suggest Marines favor VSI due to one of three main reasons:

• A dislike of VSI's reserve service requirements and pay service requirements and pay deduction policy. Those opting for VSI must remain in the ready reserve throughout the time they receive payments. This does not mean they must continue to drill. The Individual Ready Reserve requires no actual training or service time, but if there is a war, members actual training or service time, but if there is a war, members could be recalled.

Additionally, according to current policy, members who join the selected reserve will only be paid the amount for their service that exceeds that of VSI. This is done because many people who serve in the reserve and up remaining until retireend up remaining until retirement. These people can not receive both voluntary separation pay and reserve retirement pay, so it must be recouped.

Because it is much less money, this was not done with the SSB incentive, but those who receive this payment and go on to retire in the reserves will also have to pay back their separation incentive.

Unique personal circumstances. Several Marines prefer the SSB because they need/want immediate cash to pay for school.

or set up a business or some other costly venture.

• Mistrust of the government is also big on the list of reasons for picking SSB. Jehn said his conversations with commanders suggest some members do not trust the government to honor trust the government to honor its promise to make annual VSI payments, according to Navy Times.

Times.

Other factors in favor of SSB include a wider range of transition benefits, such as transitional health care and extended commissary privileges. However, Jehn pointed out that the value of these extra benefits is not necessarily in and of itself worth forfeiting the vastly larger worth forfeiting the vastly larger sums of money provided by VSI.

Wives should unite, work as team

Editor's Note: The fol-lowing article was submitted by a concerned Hawaii Marine reader. The Hawaii Marine reader. The Hawai Marine appreciates hearing from its readers and will publish appropriate articles, on a space-available basis.

By Gwen Rollings

There was an old saying in the Marine Corps that went something like this: "If the Marine Corps had wanted men to have wives, they would have issued them." From the very highest levels of authority, the value and contributions of the military wife have been acknowledged.

The commandant of the Marine Corps has been firm and resolute in his establishment of a support network among the Marine families. And that is good. Any wife who has had a husband gone on deployment knows how important it is to have support when the car breaks down, the kids are sick or any number of other minor and major crises

"We didn't receive your help then, and we don't want it now!"

Trying to separate family concerns from any association with the military structure is to ignore the contributions families have made to the well-being of the military member. Marine wives have given support and encouragement to one another through the years another through the years – many times without a formal organizational network beorganizational network be-cause none had been estab-lished. Being strong and resourceful by nature and/or necessity, wives have kept the home fires burning, allowing their men to be gone for extended periods of time in order to perform their duties.

Although the value and

Although the value and welfare of the family has gained considerable importance during recent years, the establishment of a unified key wives network is a relatively new concept. It is like the birth of some a relatively new concept. It is like the birth of something long-awaited and welcomed. However, there is some birthing pain involved in the process. There must be stretching, flexing of muscle and continual growth. Flexibility must be the operative word. Flexibility to take the basic idea of what is an excellent concept—military and families working together for the good of all—and giving the nourishment and freedom of expression to develop to its full potential. Flexibility to be open-minded enough to let go of past programs or procedures that might need to change with the times or situations. the times or situations Flexibility enough to try something new and not doom it to failure with the self-fulfilling prophesy, "This will never work!" Flexibility enough to realize that a particular plan for one group of wives might not be exactly suited to the circumstances and concerns of another, Finally, the flexibility, insight and determination to modify any program to best suit the needs of those particular families.

It would be unwise and It would be unwise and self-defeating now to resent the assistance the military structure is offering by proclaiming, "We didn't receive your help then, and we don't want it now!" On the other hand, the military personnel tasked with imple-

Education is first-line defense against abuse

By Cpl. J. Kinchen-Schneider

Please don't hurt me!
This is the silent cry of far too many children in society today. Child abuse — a sad and often tragic circumstance and often tragic circumstance in many families in America has risen greatly over the years. April has been designated as National Child Abuse Prevention Month and with the ever rising statistics, protection agencies are more dedicated to putting an end to the violence. It is required by law that any case or suspected case of child abuse or child neglect be brought to the neglect be brought to the attention of the proper authorities,

Child abuse is the Child abuse is the mistreatment or neglect of a minor by a parent, guardian, caregiver or family member. Although there is a fine line in distinguishing whether the child was simply disciplined or abused, there are a few consistent factors in determining the cause of child abuse. child abuse.

For example, first time For example, first time parents, especially young parents, may have difficulty adapting to the pressures of parenthood. Adjusting to a new way of life without the security of stability can be stressful to new parents, especially those in the military.

Therefore, the military, through its Family Service Centers, Child Development Centers, Family Advocacy Centers and other programs, has implemented a variety of workshops and classes to help families cope with their situations. Here, the Family Advocacy officer, ASYMCA, Early Childhood Education Program and the Family Service and the ramily Service Center work together in offering and conducting workshops and classes that help to prevent child abuse. Because of the efforts of these organizations, this year's reports of child neglect or abuse have decreased or abuse have decreased greatly from last year's reports. Another reason for this, according to Owen Norton, clinical supervisor and family advocacy program manager, "is the support of concerned citizens in the community," he said.

"There's more awareness and

"There's more awareness and now we're trying to get a good intervention and prevention program going."

"In 1990. there were more than 2.5 million reports of child abuse...a 100 percent increase since 1980."

In response to the positive support and reports, Maj. Paul Chase, the Family Advocacy Program officer here, is re-establishing a family advocacy committee made up of principal department heads throughout the Station. The committee's job will be to view issues regarding child abuse and domestic violence. But the hope and dedication of everyone concerned is to stop neglect or abuse before it happens. Statistics from the U.S. Statistics from the U.S. House of Representative's Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, show that in 1990 there were more than 2.5 million reports of child abuse, this is an increase of more than 30 percent since 1985 and 100 percent since 1980.

Also, a 1990 survey of child maltreatment indicated that 27 percent of reported child maltreatment indicated that 27 percent of reported abuse cases were due to physical abuse, 46 percent to neglect, 15 percent to sexual abuse and 13 percent to emotional maltreatment or others such as abandonment and dependency

Moreover, it is estimated that 1,211 children from 39 states died from abuse or neglect, a 38 percent increase nationwide; 53 percent were infants under age 1.

With reports like these it's no wonder that DoD is stressing the importance of child abuse prevention. According to Jana Lee Sponberg, an analyst with the Family Policy, Support and Services office, more than 1.5 million dependent children help make up the DoD family.

Furthermore, according to the latest figures, of the 20,000 reported child abuse cases in the military almost half were substantiated.

This is why, Norton explains, prevention is so important. "If we're working together, there is an awareness and people help each other. The risks get minimized." minimized prevention efforts work.

The reality is that

Programs that reach parents before they become abusive reduce the probability of abuse. Also, sending children to programs designed especially for them can help them avoid an abusive environment.

"Of the 20,000 reported child abuse cases in the military almost half were substantiated.'

Some helpful hints for parents, caregivers, guardians or family members who may have the tendency to be abusive are as follows:

• Talk to someone. Don't hesitate to seek counseling if the situation becomes difficult.

• Find a support group. It's important to discuss the situation with others who have been through the same experience.

• Stick to a routine. A daily routine will help you cope and help you to feel more in control of your situation.

• Set up a discipline plan for your children. Decide ahead of time what punishments should follow what misbehavior and make sure that everyone knows the,

 Avoid physical punishment. Instead, concentrate on applying logical consequences or withdrawal of privileges.

• Anticipate your responses to upsetting situations. Plan ahead for what you will do and react in a way that does not involve the children in angry.

· Control emotional responses to your children... Count to 10 or 20, call a friend, take a bath or read a • Respect you children's individuality. Remember, they are their own person. Children are not possessions.

Find a new hobby or rediscover an old one. It helps to find and do something that makes you feel good.

• Get out of the house occasionally. Trade off babysitting with another parent so you can have time for yourself.

• Have responsible relationships. Especially single parents. Sometimes in loneliness people open their homes to others who may be abusive to them and to their shilden.

Amendment protects against self-incrimination

By Capt. Louis J. Puleo

"No person...shall be com-pelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself." The Fifth Amendhimself." The Fifth Amendment is a Constitutional right embodied in the Bill of Rights which prohibits one accused of a crime from being forced to incriminate himself. Although not unique to the American system of justice, very few nations recognize this fundamental principle which serves to protect individual liberties and assures a fair trial. and assures a fair trial. The right against self-incrimination exists in both the civilian and the military justice systems.

The history of this right finds its roots in the opposition to the ex officio oath used by the ecclesiastical courts of England during the 11th, 12th and 13th century. Such oaths consisted of a such oaths consisted of a compurgation oath in which the accused party swore, with the assistance of those acquainted with him, as to his veracity or innocence. This was later replaced by the inquisitional oath which involved the active interaction. the inquistitorial oath which involved the active interrogation by the court of the accused and was not limited as to the subject of the accusation. Thus, the judge ex officio (by virtue of his office as a judge) could summon an individual to the court and engage him in a broad inquiry as to his affairs without regard to the nature or strength of the accusation against him.

The use of this procedure, which subjected the accused to a broad inquiry, was adopted by two courts whose function was essentially political. During the late 1400s, the Court of the Star Chamber, and again during the late 1500s, the High Commission in Causes Ecclesiastical, adopted similar broad inquisitional practices. In criminal trials the accused was required to take an active role in the proceedings and was examined by the justices of the peace. His testimony was then preserved for use against him at a later trial. Once accused, the individual was required to plead and submit to a trial during which the accused was subject to vigorous interrogation. Failure to submit to the courts authority often resulted in torture. The opposition catalyst to

The opposition catalyst to the practices of the Star Chamber and the High

Commission came in 1637 when John "Freeborn John" Lilburn was arrested for printing and importing heretical and seditious books. Freeborn John, a political rebel opposed to the ruling royal family, denied the charge against him but refused to take the oath or answer any questions outside the scope of the accusation. For his failure he was whipped and pilloried. Public denunciation of Freeborn John's trial brought reform lic denunciation of Freeborn John's trial brought reform and in 1641, Parliament passed a bill abolishing the Courts of the High Commission and the Star Chamber and prohibiting the use of ex officio oath in criminal proceedings. The principle against self-incrimination was adopted by the courts of common law and was later embodied in the early Colonial experience. Embodied in the Fifth Amendment, this rule eignifies an attempt to adopt certain fundamental rights for a nascent nation. The development of the Fifth Amendment in Ameri-can jurisprudence, and in the military justice system.

can jurisprudence, and in the military justice system, prohibits one from being called as a witness against himself in a criminal trial. Thus, one accused of a crime has the absolute right to remain silent and need not take the stand in his own defense. The court is prohibited from drawing any defense. The court is prohibited from drawing any adverse inference from the accused's exercise of that right. The Fifth Amendment protects the individual even prior to trial. Before one answers questions about a crime for which he is suspected, the individual servicemember must be informed of his rights pursuant to Article 31 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice. This requires that the servicemember be advised of the nature of the charges against him, that he has the right to remain silent and, if he does choose to speak, that his answers and statements may be used against him at a criminal proceeding. This ensures that the individual makes a voluntary and informed decision about his rights prior to making a rights prior to making a statement. Failure to abide by these rules may be grounds to suppress the statement at trial.

The right against self-incrimination is a right which has developed over centuries of legal experience and continues to be devel-oped and refined.

Four of the brothers served in the military. "Before World War II, there were no Oriental commissioned officers in the Navy," said Sing, 68, who runs his own environmental consulting business in Syracuse, N.Y. Reminiscing about his experiences as one of the Navy's first jet pilots, Sing said he wasn't discriminated against during World War II. But once they realized that I was a commissioned naval officer and had qualified as a pilot, I was just another number."

FHTN spreads the word to hometowns across U.S.

By 2dLt. David Steele

Recently, I decided to see just how "important" the Fleet Hometown News program was to the Marine Corps. I decided to call a friend of a guy named Jim, who I knew in boot camp. I asked the friend if he knew what has happened to Jim. Here's what he said: "Yeah, I remember Jim. He was a great guy. We went to the same high school, even played football went to the same high school, even played football together. He was a pretty good player, too. I thought he would go on to play college ball, but for some reason he joined the Marine Corps instead. After that, I don't know what happened to him.

"Actually, I saw him once, a few years ago, before his parents moved. He was wearing his dress blues. He looked like one of the Marines you'd see on a recruit-anything that would suggest he's still alive. It's as if he

This type of impression

This type of impression exists in the minds of many other people in communities all over the country.
In reality, what happened was a good person joined the Marine Corps, and for whatever reason, did not take advantage of one of the most influential programs the Navy and Marine Corps has FHTN provides deserved recognition to individuals in their home communities.

Because the FHTN program was not used in Jim's community, his teachers, his friends and acquaintances, the church he grew up going to, even his Boy Scout troop, no longer knows what happened to him.

After going to boot camp, he didn't look like the same person. Now he has short hair, a stronger body, a hair, a stronger body, a military presence, a sense of tradition and pride.

But he really didn't change that much. He still plays football. In fact, he was on last year's championship team. As for college, he is attending courses in his off-duty time and recently completed his associates degree with honors.

On duty he is also a success. His desire to excel has brought him recognition as Marine of the Month, meritorious promotions, a

He remembers the community he grew up in and the Marine who gave him his first through the Toys for Tots program. That example of involvement has prompted him to give some time and effort to the children in his community. He has helped with Toys for Tots and is frequently found helping kids from the YMCA with special projects or teach-

Some of the MCIs he has completed, such as Natural Disasters and First Aid for Marines, have helped him respond to life-threatening situations. Like many others, this Marine does what he does, not to be a hometown hero, but because he enjoys being a Marine and all that it stands for.

a Marine and all that it stands for.

There's no way to know for sure why this Marine has not participated in the FHTN program. Maybe the program was not stressed by the command. Maybe the unit information officer did not know the forms could be sent directly to the FHTN Center. Maybe the Marine involved did not realize the impact the program has on the image of the Marine Corps. We can avoid giving our country the impression the Marine Corps is a black hole waiting to take in its next victim, by simply using the FHTN program to release the information about the achievements of our Marines.

Last year's winner, H&S Co., 1st MEB (B team), got off to a slow start this year with a loss to MALS-24 by eight strokes:

Meanwhile, H&S Co., BSSG-1, had a day that will be tough to beat throughout the remainder of the season. Led by the net 55 card of Tautalafua Tauanauu, who grossed an 83 net 55 card of Tautalafua Tauanauu, who grossed an 83 despite a 28 handicap, the team carded a combined net total of 189 - 27 strokes under par. Team Coach Sanuel Faifili feared people would think his group was "a bunch of sand-baggers," but assured the Hawaii Marine that it was primarily a fluke. "We just had a great day and (Tauanauu) was on fire." Faifili did say however, that Tauanauu's handicap was established at another course before he got here, and that it will likely be going down soon. "He's probably more like a 21

BSSG was not the only team to turn in an impressive card. 1st Radio Bn.'s EM (Electronic Maintanence) team with a 192 wasn't far behind. Their score was largely a credit to Jim Lewis. Lewis, who shot an 85 to card a net 58, said he had his best day ever. "I had an 86 the week before and before that my best was a 98."

The popularity of Hawaii as one of the world's top vacation spots may give its tourists and military members a false sense of security when they enter the water at the state's many beaches.

water enthusiasts go up against the ocean, one thing is certain: heed water safety precautions and respect the local sea conditions or your day at the beach could be your last.

On Station beaches this year alone, Marine lifeguards have performed 25 rescues and assists that could easily have resulted in tragedy.

Bob Pecoraro, MWR water safety manager, explained that from the moment Marines first arrive at Kaneohe Bay, they are instructed about the hazards that local waters present.

"When Marines are in the Joint Reception Center, they are shown a film which explains the dangers of Hawaiian beaches and gives water safety precautions," he said.

Napu Thompson, Joint Safety Center director, said Station Marines who arrive with their families are also given a similar brief.

Some common hazardous conditions that exist at the beaches here include sharp coral, dangerous shorebreaks which can slam swimmers onto the beach and strong rip currents which can wash people out to sea. But there are many services the Station provides for family

Before children leave Mokapu Elementary School for the summer, an MWR team of instructors visits each class, talking to the students about water safety at the pools and beaches. Children age 10 and under must pass a practical application swim test given by MWR before they can swim unsupervised by Saturday, Cub Scouts and Boy Scouts from Pack 225 here held their annual Soap Box Derby. The derby is the final event for the scouts this month. Each month presents a different theme for them to learn.

"This month's theme was based on mobility and things that go," said Jerry Norris, the pack cubmaster.

The Scouts conducted three types of derbies. First was the Space Derby which is a wooden space ship put together by the boys and their fathers. Second is the Pinewood Derby which is a carved wooden car. The third, and biggest event, is the Soap Box Derby, a wooden car big enough for the boys to sit in.

Although the derby was originally set for Scouts of Pack 225, Norris invited Pack 220 from Kaneohe to join them.

Pack 225, Norris invited Pack 220 from Kaneohe to join them.

For the boys of Den One, Pack 220, who only entered one car, it certainly seemed to work because they raced away with the top honors in the den race.

Derick Ching took first place with a time of 15.71 seconds. Arjun Kinchen took second place with 16.30 and Tim Schutt took third with 16.40. Al Schutt, the pack's cubmaster, took first in the leader's race with a time of 16 seconds.

But that really didn't seem to matter much because all the Scouts enjoyed the thrill of racing and cheering on each other's den.

"This is a good thing because it promotes good citizenship, sportsmanship and competition," Norris said. "It brings the kids together."

Tour orients new arrivals

The Station Family Service Center eases this problem by introducing newly arrived Marines and their families to the island of

The introduction starts with a new arrival orientation in which they see a video – Marine Corps Hawaii. The video basically shows the Marine Corps history and role in Hawaii. They also receive maps, resource materials, learn some Hawaiian phrases, learn of recreation opportunities and what medical services are avail-

Once the orientation comes to an end, the new arrivals are ushered to a bus to begin the all-day island tour. The tour begins with a ride around North Shore.

The volunteer tour guide, Lambert Davids, who has lived here for 30 years, tells the history of the island and it's sites.

"That little island is Chinaman's Hat," he said.
"It's called that because it looks like a 'coolie' which is a chinese shade hat. But Hawaiian legend says the rock formation is the tail of a giant lizard which was destroyed by the goddess Hi'iaka, Pele's sister. How-ever, geologists classify it as a 'sea stack' left by erosion."

After a few brief stops and lunch at Haleiwa Beach Park, the tour continued on to Schofield Barracks and then Honolulu before heading back to Kaneohe and the Station Station.

Davids said he enjoys doing the tour because it helps people to understand Hawaiian customs.

Families who are new to the island are encouraged to take the tour. For more information, call the FSC at 257-3655.

Therapeutic massage lessens stress

Story and photos by Cpl. J. Kinchen-Schneider

Tension knots his spine. It seems that everything that It seems that everything that could have gone wrong today, did. First, the machines broke down, then the boss dropped a special project on his desk, and the tension shot up his spine to the back of his head... Most of the little aches and pains people feel are due to stress. Stress can affect anyone especially affect anyone, especially people who work in high pressure jobs such as the military, businesses, medicine and so forth.

Recently, the ASYMCA here held a Therapeutic Massage workshop The workshop was given by Greg Johnson, owner of Massage Professionals located in Kailua.

Johnson, who is also a Marine staff sergeant with MALS-24 here, first started giving massage lessons 21 years ago in his karate

"Muscle massaging helps the blood circulation," he said. "It helps to keep your muscles balanced and resil-ient. It also increases flexibility and mobility."

After taking over 1,500 hours of classes on the history and massage tech-niques, he decided to open his business here.

"My parlor is strictly therapeutic massaging," he explained. "I want people to know that therapeutic massaging really works. It helps to relieve stress, sports injuries and injuries that aren't sports related."

During the workshop, Johnson and his employees demonstrated how to relieve tension in the head, neck and shoulders that could be caused by stress or injury.

According to Johnson, many people don't believe that therapeutic massages can help with these prob-

"Massages help the cleansing and rejuvenation functions of the muscle system and allow the muscles to relax and stay relaxed longer," he said. "It also stimulates the circulation of blood to all areas of the body. This in turn, helps to maintain health in all the body's organs and calms and soothes the nervous system. This is especially good for Marines and sailors who are under a lot of stress in their jobs or who are very athletic."

It has been proven that

It has been proven that therapeutic massages can help relieve intense chronic migraine headaches, hypertension, peptic ulcers, depression, insomnia or restless sleep periods and digestive tract irregularity. Additionally, it helps with lower back pains or spasms, irritating neck or shoulder pains, whiplash from auto accidents, work-related inju-ries and tension as well as constant nagging headaches.

The American Medical Association has stated that approximately 80 percent of all illnesses are stress related and the American Academy of Family Physicians stated that two-thirds of all doctor's office visits are due to stress-related symptoms.

According to a brochure published by the Stressless Hawaii Corporate Team, which is a group of dedi-cated and highly trained therapeutic professionals, a 15-minute vitality massage, which can be given on-site, will leave a person feeling alert, awake and prepared to carry on his daily routines.

Johnson offers this type of massage. "We concentrate on the scalp, neck, shoulders, upper and lower back, arms and hands," he said.

"Through pressure applied at specific stress release points and gentle muscle manipula-tion, the body is encouraged to throw off tension and increase systematic circula-tion."

Johnson and his group also offer 30-minute demo strations for groups and offices.

Safety

presence. The Station beaches have also been closed due to a lightning storm and question-able water quality during a sewage spill.

A combination of picture and word signs are also used to warn beachgoers of hazardous conditions, Pecoraro said. He stressed that two signs positioned 200 yards from the lifeguard stations warn swimmers they are outside the safe vision of the lifeguards and are entering the water at their own risk.

Basic water safety tips every-one should follow anywhere in Hawaii include:

- Swim in lifeguarded areas.
- · Never swim alone.
- Don't dive into unknown water or into shallow breaking
- Always check with lifeguard for beach and surf conditions before swimming.
- If you are unable to swim out of a strong current, call or wave for help.
  - Rely on your swimming ability rather than floatation

Thompson, who has lived here her entire life and is also a surfer and bodyboarder, stressed that newcomers to the island must learn the characteristics of the ocean and not to just jump in when they first arrive.

"Ma'ais a Hawaiian word which means having a good familiarization of the ocean," Thompson said. "People need to take responsibility and remain aware of the dangers to themselves and their families while at the beaches here."
