Currently there is a HUGE Demand for Gunsmiths.

Millions of guns need fixing. Most of the old-time gunsmiths have retired and haven't been replaced because previously there wasn't a cost effective way to quickly train individuals to become gunsmiths and help them make money fast. This has created a chronic shortage and a huge opportunity for you.

Gunsmithing is a recession-proof business. Even in tough times people spend money to get their guns repaired or professionally cleaned. It's a lot cheaper than buying a new one and they still want and need them for hunting and self defense. You can even work part-time right from your home. Your one time investment in the course could provide you with a lifetime of income and opportunity.

Here's how AGI's Professional Gunsmithing Course changed Robert Briskey's life: "Within one short year I opened up my own firearms repair and custom refinishing shop. My business is exceeding my dreams. The freedom I enjoy being self-employed is priceless. Without the opportunity that AGI's course offered, my dream would be just that, a dream."
Robert T. Briskey, Battle Hen Armory

You don't have to wait to start gunsmithing! It only takes a relatively small investment to get started. As soon as you begin watching the videos you will be able to start making repairs. Anytime you run into a problem, you just pop in the DVD on the subject or model gun that you need information on and do a quick review.

Couldn't get a better recommendation: "I made the mistake of taking another cheaper gunsmithing course. I knew I made a mistake when I read in one of my lesson books that for further instructional help, go to the AGI website and get a DVD on the subject. When other schools are giving YOU that kind of acknowledgement, then you have to be the best."

Build Those Skills

Aside from squeezing the trigger on a .22 on more squirrels and soda cans than I can count, most of my shooting adventures as a teenager took place from the butt end of a scattergun. Deer hunting in the southeastern Virginia county where my father was a member of the now-defunct United Hunt Club was done using buckshot. As to other local game such as ducks, rabbits, turkeys and doves, it was largely a matter of scaling down on the size of the shot.

Even after I became old enough to make trips with friends to the mountains of the Old Dominion, where I would tote a .30-06 or my dad's old Savage Model 99 in .300 Savage, I think my longest shot was never more than 80 yards. Hunting among stands of big timber has a tendency to limit the distance of one's shots.

It wasn't until my 20s when I took my first trip West to pursue Wyoming mule deer that I finally cracked the 100-yard mark on a shot at live game. In fact, by my childhood standards, I shattered it, shooting from rim to rim across a brushy canyon and dropping my muley from 300 yards away. Since that time I've become a pretty fair rifle shot, though I'm hardly any threat to the competitive elite at Camp Perry.

So it was that I recently found myself among a group of former military operators, law enforcement veterans and serious big game hunters at Castle Valley Outdoors in Utah. We were assembled to test some of Trijicon's battle-grade optics on targets both near and far—mostly far. Following the steps on pages 26-28, it didn't take long before I was consistently hammering targets out to 900 yards with ease.

I was relieved I was able to go largely target-for-target in such elite company and encouraged that two of the best shooters in one of the courses of fire were two of the older guys in the group (since I too am getting older). It reminds me that shooting is a sport that can be enjoyed—and mastered—by young, old, male, female and even fit and the not so fit. With that in mind, we hope the stories in this issue of Gun Digest inspire you to hit the range soon and begin improving your shooting skills for a lifetime of enjoyment and readiness.

Triggered My Curiosity

I really enjoyed the article titled "The Striker-Fire Challenge," however, I noticed something odd. The article states that the Springfield Armory XDm is the only one that you don't have to pull the trigger on to field strip. Interesting because I know that you can do the same thing with the Smith & Wesson M&P by utilizing its sear deactivation lever and then you don't have to pull the trigger for it. So, why the statement that, "The Springfield Armory XDm is the only gun in the group that can be disassembled without pulling the trigger?" Can you explain this to me? Great article otherwise; keep up the great work. A fool, perhaps, but a contrary opinion is always helpful to initiate thought.

—Daniel Erickson, via email

Author Dick Jones replies: Perhaps I should have stated it differently. You are correct in saying the sear activation lever can be switched to remove the slide. Also, the trigger can be pulled to remove the slide on the M&P. With the Glock, you must pull the trigger, with the S&W you must toggle the sear deactivation lever or pull the trigger. With the XD, you simply run the slide off the rails. There is no need to deactivate the sear or pull the trigger on the XD, making it the simplest and/or safest gun to field strip in my opinion.

Small Bore Small Talk

It seems Gun Digest readers love to talk about small calibers and the .22 is always a favorite topic. It seems the same applies for shotguns as a recent post on Gun Digest Facebook asked a simple question: "What Do You Think about the .410?" A huge discussion came about and here are some selected comments.

One of the most versatile rounds out there. Still my favorite.

—Roy Sheppard

I have hunted grouse with one for more than 45 years. Just requires you to be able to aim.

—Jerry Stott

A .410 slug has enough stopping power to kill a deer. Used one as a kid. Kind of an all-around beginner gun.

—Brian Anthony

They shoot .410s in sub gauges in sporting clays. And they are by no means worthless. That little .410 will challenge your shooting abilities.

—John R. Romanko

An effective round used by people who know its limits and with way less recoil than a larger gauge.

—Andrew Kovacs

Being from the South, I use my Judge for snakes while fishing the backwaters. Also a perfect home defense gun.

—Johnny B. Jackson

My old .410 double has put many meals on the table. She's retired now, but could still put meat in the pot.

—Tracy Minor

I have an over/under .410/.22 that I have hunted partridge with for years. Full choke chambered in 3 inch. Any bird out to 30 yards is going down.

—Robert A. Sibley

One of the best rounds ever for home defense. Also good for walking in the woods; a snake killer .410 shotgun will take care of most anything you need to do, and they are a lot of fun to shoot.

—Roger Hicks

I've got a Mossberg 500 chambered in .410 that I've had for 15 years. It's accurate and delightful to shoot. In my opinion, .410 is very much underrated.

—Ken Jones

This is the universal shotgun. Has the power for self-defense and won't evaporate small game depending on the shot type.

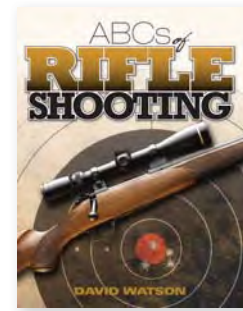

—DiveMaster Shawn

I love my .410 "Snakecharmer." Great for hunting rattlesnakes. And yes they taste like chicken.

—Douglas Whitlow

ABCs of Rifle Shooting

The ABCs of Rifle Shooting by David Watson holds to the idea that shooters should hone their skills and streamline their equipment to achieve the desired results, rather than merely seeking out the newest pieces of equipment. Explore techniques for making yourself a better shooter, like hand position, trigger operation, shooting positions and more. Putting these components together the right way can make all the difference between being an amateur shooter and being an accurate one.

Shooting with Corrective Lenses: Bad Eyesight and Concealed Carry

"Legally carrying a gun concealed is not just for young adults with 20/20 vision. Take me for example, for whom the days are long gone when I pounded out groups that could be covered with one hand. As time went on, my groups opened up a bit but were all center mass. Several years before I retired, I had to start choosing between seeing the sights or seeing the target. I observe lots of good folks with corrective lenses and I shouldn't chuckle when they squint with noses held high in the air using bifocals to see the front sights."

White House Blocks Importation of Collectible M1 Rifles

Vermont firearms importer Century Arms International recently laid off 41 workers and credited the Obama Administration with that decision, “because the government blocked [Century’s] plan to bring nearly $30 million worth of antique, American-made military rifles home from South Korea,” the San Francisco Chronicle reported.

At issue: World War II-era M1 Garand rifles, once used by the South Korean military, that Century wanted to re-import. The rifles were withdrawn from service in 2009. But an executive order President Barack Obama signed last year stopped all such re-importations, to keep “military-grade firearms” off the streets, according to a White House press release.

“This importation was denied despite our explaining that the denial would harm the company and pointing out that there is no rational gun-control reason to block the importation of these historic, 70-year-old firearms,” the company said in a written statement.

CITIZENS IN ACTION

An 83-year-old resident of Huntsville, Ala., heard a knock at his back door, then a man’s voice at the door claiming to need help. But before the resident could get there, a would-be burglar kicked in the door and entered the house. At which point, according to WAFF.com, the octogenarian grabbed his handgun and fired once, hitting the burglar in the chest. The burglar dove out a window; police had yet to find the man.

In Maries County, Mo., a homeowner discovered someone inside his home and held the thief at gunpoint until police arrived. “The suspect is very lucky he wasn’t legally shot in this situation,” said Maries County Sheriff Chris Heitman. “I am a big supporter of the Second Amendment, and with the victim’s help, this career criminal has been brought back to justice,” KRCC 13 News reported.

BY THE NUMBERS

How Do Shooters Describe Themselves?

Some gun enthusiasts own firearms to hunt. Others simply like to target shoot. So where does the majority fall? The National Shooting Sports Foundation recently commissioned a survey to find out.

Shooting Ranges in Big Demand in North Carolina

Demand for shooting ranges is at an all-time high around Charlotte, N.C., with two new shooting ranges under construction. As WCNC Television News Charlotte explained, “Experts say the Charlotte area could have 12 to 15 gun ranges in business in the next few years, compared to two or three private ranges a decade ago.”

One big trend apparently driving demand: “The Mecklenburg County Sheriff’s Office issued nearly 7,000 more gun permits in 2013 than it did in 2012,” and all those new CCW permit holders need someplace to train and practice. GDTM

.270 Winchester

Designed by Winchester in 1925 for its Model 54 bolt-action rifle, the .270 caused quite a stir in shooting circles. The cartridge is based on the .30-06 case necked down to .277 inch. The case neck is .05-inch longer but, except for the neck and headstamp, the .270 Winchester is otherwise identical to the .30-06. This cartridge was a long-time favorite of the late, well-known gun writer Jack O'Connor, who probably contributed more to popularizing the .270 than any other individual. Along with the .30-06, this is one of the most accurate and effective all-round American big-game cartridges. Although not intended as a varmint cartridge, the .270 will serve very well in that capacity when loaded with bullets of 90 to 110 grains. The 130-grain bullet at 3,100 fps muzzle velocity is considered adequate by many experienced hunters for any North American big game. The present 150-grain bullet at 2,860 fps is intended for maximum penetration on heavier animals such as elk, moose or bear. GDTM

Six Ways to Bag More Birds

Whether busting birds means heading afield with a brace of pointing dogs or traveling to the range to smash orange discs, here are six ways to improve your overall score.

BY BRAD FITZPATRICK

UNBELIEVABLE!

The target just vaporized in mid-air, a big orange cloud. Like magic!" I'll never forget seeing the wonder on that new shooter's face as one of the instructors at our shooting club clocked a pair of doubles from skeet station 2, taking the two crossing birds out in rapid succession and leaving nothing but a dull dusty cloud to mark where the clays had been. Shooting can be magic when you manage to launch a swarm of shot that perfectly intercepts and destroys a fast-moving aerial target. But sometimes, it can feel like a curse. You swing on the target, press the trigger and watch as the clays sail slowly back to earth without a blemish. That's not such a magical feeling.

Clay target shooting is fun, and if you're a hunter, it's also one of the best ways to prepare for the field. But it can be frustrating, especially when we miss and don't understand why. Shooting paper targets with a pistol or rifle usually gives you some indication of why you're missing. Shooting clay targets with a shotgun doesn't always offer that instant feedback, and it can be very frustrating if you miss and have no clue as to what you're doing wrong. Here's a primer on the skills you need to develop to make you a better overall shotgunner, and how to approach some of the most common target presentations.

1. Stance and Approach

Shotgun basics begin before you're on the range or in the field. First of all, you need to understand the basic tenets of successful shooting. Developing a proper shooting stance is the first step in successful shotgunning.

To begin, your front leg (opposite your shooting hand) should be slightly forward, and your knees roughly shoulder width apart and bent slightly. Your feet should be firmly planted, but you should be comfortable, and your foot position shouldn't impair your swing. For lateral movements, you rotate at the hips; the upper body remains fixed, you should maintain a good cheek weld on the shotgun and the shoulders and head should move with the gun as one solid unit. Elevation

If you're serious about killing more birds, join a club. The skeet range will help you learn to swing-through crossing shots and smash incoming targets, and the trap field will help you develop the skills needed to drop an outgoing bird. Sporting clays or five-stand will help make you a more versatile, well-rounded shooter. Author Photo changes are accomplished by flexing the back. It's important that the gun comes up to your eye and that you don't plant the gun on your shoulder and lower your head to meet the gun. The butt of your shotgun should always land in the same point on the shoulder, and once you've got the gun mounted, maintain a steady lock between the upper body and the firearm.

Above all else, remain target focused. Unlike pistol and rifle shooting, which require you to align the sights on the target, shotgun shooters devote total concentration to the bird. If you don't believe me, there are a number of serious shotgun shooters who don't even have a bead on their gun, yet they still manage to run 25 or 50 straight on the skeet range.

THE GREAT 28

There are a lot of reasons to love the little 28 gauge, and every year more and more shooters are trading in their hard-kicking heavy 12-bores for these lighter guns. The 28 gauge still packs plenty of power for most upland situations, and there are now a number of manufacturers producing fine 28s for the field and range. If you prefer classic doubles, check out Fausti's beautiful DEA side-by-side, a svelte, gorgeous little double that weighs right around 5 pounds and could only have come from Italy (faustiusa.com). If you prefer an over/under, Franchi now offers its round-body, which tips the scales under 6 pounds and features a case-hardened receiver and oil-finished walnut stock (franchiusa.com). If you're looking for a budget 28, Weatherby's SA-08 28-gauge Deluxe offers superb balance and handling, and the gas system virtually eliminates felt recoil. ## 2. The Crosser

Crossing shots are common in the field when hunting doves or ducks, and the skeet range is the best place to develop your skills. New shooters are often fixated on lead, and they ask how far ahead of the target they should be at every station on the skeet field. If you learn sustained lead, you can do pretty well shooting the invariable list of shots you'll see at the skeet range, but that isn't very practical for the field—doves and ducks rarely give you the time to decipher whether you need to be three or five feet ahead of the target.

Instead, learn to shoot swing-through. Simply keep your eyes on the target, swing the gun to catch up and press the trigger as you catch and pass the bird. The faster the target is going (say, a dove rocketing by at 60 miles an hour), the faster you'll be swinging. It takes practice, and you must keep the muzzle moving after the shot, but it will make you a better target and field shooter. Rotate from the hips, and remember to keep your upper body locked to the gun as you swing. Practicing this shot will pay off in a big way for hunters.

3. Incoming

You'll see incoming targets on the skeet range, and it's a common shot

Focus and gun mount are critical. The shooter must always remain target focused, and the gun should rise up to meet the eye. Author Photo on decoyed waterfowl. The incoming shot should be relatively easy, but it's often missed because it happens quickly, and the shooter doesn't understand the physics of the shot. Unlike crossers, you don't get behind and swing through an incomer; rather, focus on raising the muzzle up to meet the flight path of the target, and when these two lines intersect, fire and keep swinging. Often the muzzle will cover the target, and you should fire as the gun is coming up and just a bit ahead of the target's position so that the shot string intercepts the target. Incoming shots require practice to master, so be sure to spend plenty of time on the skeet range and stay target-focused.

4. Outgoing

This is the classic trap shot and is often encountered when hunting game

THREE GREAT WINGSHOOTING DESTINATIONS

You've practiced until you're proficient, and now you want to test your skills in the field. Consider heading to Winghaven Lodge in Providence, Ky., for a few days of quail hunting behind superb dogs in the heart of bourbon country. The food is excellent, and the quail hunting is equally as good. (winghavenlodge.com). If you're interested in chasing wild birds in some breathtaking and remote country, check out Heaven's Gate Outfitter's wild chukar, hun, quail and grouse hunts in Idaho's Seven Devils Range (hgoid.com). For the real adventure lover, Heaven's Gate offers horseback hunts for mountain grouse in some of the country's most magnificent wilderness areas. Duck hunters should plan on heading to Texas to try out Bay Flats Lodge, where tens of thousands of migrating waterfowl pass along the Gulf Coast on their southerly migration every fall (bayflatslodge.com).—B.F.

WARNING PRODUCT SAFETY RECALL

Remington Arms Company, LLC ("Remington") is voluntarily recalling Remington Model 700™ and Model Seven™ rifles with X-Mark Pro® ("XMP®") triggers, manufactured from May 1, 2006 to April 9, 2014.

Remington has determined that some Model 700 and Model Seven rifles with XMP triggers could, under certain circumstances, unintentionally discharge. A Remington investigation has determined that some XMP triggers might have excess bonding agent used in the assembly process. While Remington has the utmost confidence in the design of the XMP trigger, it is undertaking this recall in the interest of consumer safety to remove any potential excess bonding agent applied in the assembly process.

HOW TO DETERMINE IF YOUR RIFLE IS SUBJECT TO THE RECALL

1. Identify the serial number (Located on the left side of a right handed receiver and on the right side for left-handed receivers) and provide it to Remington's recall support team, either by entering it at xmprecall.remington.com or calling 1-800-243-9700 (Prompt #3 then Prompt #1) Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. EDT.
2. You may also determine if your rifle is subject to the recall by a visual inspection. If the face of the trigger is ribbed, your rifle does not have an XMP trigger and is NOT subject to this recall. If the face of the trigger is smooth, your rifle has an XMP trigger and IS subject to this recall.

REMEDY / ACTION TO BE TAKEN

STOP USING YOUR RIFLE. Any unintended discharge has the potential to cause injury or death. Immediately cease use of recalled rifles and return them to Remington free of charge. Rifles will be inspected, specialty cleaned, tested, and returned as soon as possible, at no cost to you. DO NOT attempt to diagnose or repair recalled rifles.

TO PARTICIPATE IN THIS RECALL PROGRAM

Visit xmprecall.remington.com or call 1-800-243-9700 (Prompt #3 then Prompt #1) Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. EDT. You will be asked to provide your name, address, telephone number, and rifle(s) serial number.

SAFETY FIRST: Always follow the Ten Commandments of Firearm safety whenever you handle any firearm. Visit Remington.com for more information.

Remington is deeply sorry for this inconvenience, but we believe in safety first. It is imperative that Model 700 and Model Seven rifles subject to this recall are not used until they have been inspected and specialty cleaned by Remington.

The Remington team is committed to the quality and safety of its products.

Remington®

birds in the field. Bring the gun up to the target, and don't forget that any angling outgoing shot requires some lead, though it won't be as dramatic as when shooting hard crossing targets. Your gun's point of impact is particularly important here; some guns shoot very flat, so you'll have to position the gun higher for the shot. Others, particularly guns designed for trap, tend to have a higher point of impact, often 80/20 (80 percent of the shot will strike at a point above the rib) or even more.

5. High Overhead

This is a common shot for duck and dove hunters. If the bird is coming at you, you'll need to swing through and actually cover the target when you shoot. If the bird is going away, swing ahead and follow through as you press the trigger. Keep the upper body fixed with a good cheek weld on the gun and bend your back. This requires practice, and one way you can accomplish this is to raise an unloaded gun to your shoulder and run the bead up and down the length of a vertical target (trees work well), maintaining your focus on the target while flexing and extending your back to track the bead.

6. The Rabbit

Ah, the rabbit—bane of every sporting clays shooter. These deceptive targets bounce along the ground leaping and lunging in a fashion that seems out-of-sorts with the smooth travel of an aerial clay. Rotate at the hips, keep your eyes on the target and swing through after the shot. If the rabbit is rolling along the ground, it works in much the same way that a crossing target does, but if it takes a bounce, you'll need to be tracking through the arch and keep the gun moving as you fire. You'll need to shoot a bit ahead of the target (most rabbits are missed behind) and, above all else, keep that muzzle moving. GDTM

FAST & ACCURATE

Handgun Shooting

Master these five basic steps for speed and accuracy.

BY ROBERT SADOWSKI

Speed and accuracy with a handgun are skill sets that can be easily learned. It is why military operators spend hours of trigger time sending lead down range and why law enforcement personnel devote hours upon hours to training. Civilians should train or practice with the goal to build on skills sets, too. Mastering the five basic steps—stance, grip, sight picture, trigger press and follow-through—will help you to shoot faster and more accurately in pressure-intense competitive matches or when defending your life. The reason we train is to create muscle memory. Repetition builds a reflexive response.

I trust what I hear from my pal, David Bahde, who has had a 20-plus-year law enforcement career that includes being a SWAT team leader, tactical commander and firearms trainer.

“There is no difference between well-trained officers and well-trained civilians,” explains Bahde. “Accurate and controlled fire applied as fast as possible given the circumstances is universal. I teach officers exactly the same things I teach civilians. The difference is in the mindset, application and the circumstances under which they are applied.”

Chris Edwards, firearms instructor and Glock Sport Shooting Foundation (GSSF) coordinator, sees competitors miss steel plates and become discouraged. In GSSF, one stage requires competitors to knock down six 8-inch-diameter steel plates with 11 rounds as fast as they can. It sounds easy but can be daunting for some.

“When I see a shooter miss plates, I try to take them aside and instruct them on sight picture and trigger press,” Edwards says. “It is usually shooters jerking the trigger. Shooters have to release the trigger without moving the muzzle.”

“Shooting fast and accurately is about proper aiming, where possible, coupled with proper trigger manipulation,” says Bahde. “It is all about getting on target and pressing the trigger.”

Breaking it down into chunks makes the learning process less daunting and easier to retain.

Here are the five basic steps in order of progression. Remember to apply these steps with no unnecessary movement. Movement affects bullet strike. You also need to relax tense muscles that will also throw shots.

Step 1: Stance

If you have boxed or studied martial arts, you may already have the basic stance. First, place your feet at least shoulder width apart or slightly more. Stand with your shooting foot (if you are a right-hand shooter this is your right foot) slightly to the rear to help with stability during recoil. Make sure your knees are slightly bent and about 70 percent of your weight is on the balls of your feet. Second, your torso should be straight but slightly leaning forward from the waist. Third, extend your arms forward as far as they will go without locking your elbows, and keep your head upright. If you roll your shoulders forward, you will create more tension in your shoulders, and your head will drop slightly, causing you to lose peripheral vision.

Step 2: Grip

A good grip gives you leverage on the pistol. First, place the web of your shooting hand (that's the fleshy part between your thumb and index finger) as high as you can on the back strap of the pistol, with the second knuckle of the middle finger directly under the trigger guard and the thumb

Note how the knees are slightly bent and the feet are shoulder width apart. Author Photos

GUN CONSULTANT: STEVE KIENE

Torso is upright and slightly bent at the waist.

Arms are extended as far as possible without locking elbows.

high so it can manipulate the thumb safety on pistols equipped with thumb safeties. The trigger finger should be outside the trigger guard. The closer the pistol's bore center axis is to your shooting hand, the less muzzle flip and perceived recoil you will feel. Note the portion of grip exposed; the supporting hand will grasp this. Next, with the support hand grasping the top of the shooting hand, so the second knuckle of the index finger of support hand is under the trigger guard, twist your support hand slightly forward so the support hand fills the exposed portion of the grip. The thumb of your support hand should be under the thumb of your shooting hand.

Lastly, the general rule is to apply about 70 percent tension with the support hand and 30 percent with the shooting hand. With less applied tension of the shooting hand, you are better able to manipulate the trigger. Try to use as much of the grip texture as possible. The white-knuckle rule says if your knuckles are white or your hand is slightly shaking, then you are gripping too hard.

Step 3: Sight Alignment And Picture

Learn to shoot with both eyes open. If you are cross-eye dominant (as in, you shoot right-handed, but your left eye is dominant), then you need to orient the pistol under the dominant eye. Sight alignment is placing the front sight into the rear sight notch, so the top of the front sight is flush with the top of the rear sight. Take that sight alignment and place it on a target, and this is called sight picture. The sight picture should be center mass of the target—the center of a round steel plate, the center of a cardboard tombstone target, etc. Your focus is on the front, thus the rear sight and the target aiming point will look fuzzy.

Step 4: Trigger Press

When ready to shoot, place the pad of the trigger finger on the trigger. The trigger should be pressed backward smoothly. Note that as you apply initial pressure, you are taking up the slack in the trigger before the pistol fires. If shots go too far left or too far right, re-examine the placement of your finger on the trigger. You might be pressing the side of the trigger. Dry fire practice with an unloaded pistol to learn how far you can press the trigger or take up the slack before it breaks. When the shot breaks, you only need to release the trigger enough for the sear to re-engage. You will feel the trigger click when it is reset.

Make sure your trigger finger only touches the trigger and does not drag along the pistol frame or touch the support hand. If it does, accuracy can be adversely affected. Both Bahde and Edwards agree that trigger press is the most difficult skill to master.

"I use a technique the LAPD used when transitioning officers from revolvers to semi-automatic pistols," says Edwards. He has the shooters get a sight picture with the pistol, and once they have the sight picture, he has them press the trigger. This way the student understands how sight picture and trigger press work together.

"Trigger press is the most perishable and most difficult to apply under stress," says Bahde. "A good trigger press can make up for most all else."

Step 5: Follow-Through

If you have followed all the steps as described, your first shot should be true. Shooting another round, and another faster and faster is mastered with follow-through. In follow-through, you recover from the previous shot and return the pistol and yourself to the beginning. If you follow steps 1 through 4, your recovery time will be minimal and smooth, allowing you to shoot faster and more accurately. Remember to start off slowly and strive to be smooth. You do not want to sacrifice speed for accuracy. GDTM

Perhaps no feat better epitomizes the marriage of precision firearms technology and marksmanship ability than long-range shooting. But it takes more than just a suitable caliber, a quality rifle, a top-shelf optic and a steady trigger finger. Every one of those components must work together like a finely tuned instrument in the hands of a skilled musician. Most importantly for the long-range shooter, placing consistently successful shots out to 500-plus yards can only be achieved through extensive practice in a variety of conditions and with the benefit of ample homework.

“Long-range shooting is not just pulling the trigger, long-range shooting is about thinking,” says Tom Maciak, technology development engineering supervisor for Trijicon. Maciak recently showcased some of his company’s marquis products with dedicated long-range capability, including the sniper-friendly 3-15x50 TARS (Tactical Advanced Riflescope) and the brand new 1-6x24

VCOG (Variable Combat Optical Gunsight).

Before guiding our group in their practical application among the steep hillsides and open range of the Castle Valley Outdoors shooting and hunting resort in Emery, Utah, the longtime shooter and engineer shared his behind-the-rifle experience by summing up the 12 keys to successful long-range shooting.

A photograph of a rifle mounted on a tripod in a desert landscape. The rifle is in the foreground, and the background shows a vast, open desert with sparse vegetation and hills under a clear sky. The title text is overlaid on the image.

12 STEPS TO LONG-RANGE ACCURACY

Hit targets at 500, 800 and 1,000-plus yards like they're a chip shot.

BY DOUG HOWLETT

1. Fit the Rifle to You—Ensuring proper fit of a firearm is more than just properly placing your head and eye behind the optic. It's about being able to control the firearm and establishing consistent attachment to the rifle every time the shooter brings it to his shoulder.

"The same thing has got to happen the same way every time you shoot the rifle," says Maciak. For serious long-range shooting, you'll want a rifle with a stock that permits instant adjustment to the length of pull and the cheek rest. Take time to adjust the bipod or rest and any rear support before getting in position to shoot. Failing to do so will make it impossible to achieve a consistent weld to the gun and will increase the likelihood of scope shadowing, where the full visual diameter of the scope cannot be seen.

2. Adjust the Eyepiece/Ocular Diopter—A clear, focused reticle is critical for precise shot placement and will focus differently when looked at by different eyes. A good long-distance scope will allow for this adjustment. Focus the reticle using the ocular adjustment while viewing it against a plain background such as a wall or the sky. The human eye makes adjustments to what it is focusing on, so don't look at the reticle while adjusting. Dial a quarter of a turn and look and repeat the process until the reticle is clear and crisp.

3. Parallax—Parallax is the apparent movement of the reticle when viewing it at different, distance magnifications. At 9x and below, it's not an issue. At 10x and above, if the reticle appears to wave inside the scope when viewed, parallax needs to be adjusted or it will affect your point of impact. Turn the parallax adjustment all the way out to infinity and bring it back in focus. The reticle should stop moving. Like focus, parallax may have to be adjusted at every distance.

Clockwise (from top left): Cheat sheets with ballistic drop aid the shooter on the spot; a good spotter to determine down-range winds and bullet strikes is critical; position your body squarely behind the rifle to better manage recoil; make adjustments prior to shooting based on your data. Author Photos

4. Reticle Illumination—If your scope has an illuminated reticle, you don't want it on when using the scope for ranging. Blooming, the affect created when viewing a lit object with the human eye, thickens the size of the reticle and disrupts focus for ranging.

5. First or Second Focal Plain—When ranging a target using a ranging reticle, understand that first focal plain ranging will work at all magnifications. Second focal plain ranging only works at the highest magnification. How do you know which one you have? When adjusting magnification, if the reticle size adjusts with it, yours is in the first focal plain. If it doesn't change size, it's a second focal plain reticle. The first focal plain offers more flexibility, though you might have to dial down the magnification to find the target because full magnification creates a narrow field of view, but ultimately it's a personal preference.

6. Place Your Body Behind the Scope—Watch most shooters and they will stand or position themselves behind the rifle at an angle. But all that recoil is transferred to your body, and if the mass of your body is largely to the side of that energy, it will jerk the body more. For long-range accuracy, square the body behind the target to provide a more reliable. This position helps you stay on target throughout recoil for follow-up shots or to simply observe where your bullet strikes.

7. Ensure Reticle is Horizontal—Ballistics are made to operate with relation to a horizontal reticle, so if the scope is mounted improperly or not sitting on its rest so that the reticle is

EYES WIDE OPEN?

Despite the fact that many shooters tend to close an eye when lining up a sight or scope, proper shooting form dictates that we leave both eyes open for better situational awareness and overall sighting performance. At 6x or lower, the eyes can easily accommodate the visual difference, and shooters should adhere to the “both eyes open” dictate. But above that, particularly when going above 10x, doing that can be difficult since the eyes are trying to focus on two drastically different focal points. If you need to close an eye when sighting a long-distance target through a scope, so be it. Go with what works best for you. —D.H.

level, make the necessary adjustments to correct it. An angled reticle can alter the relationship of your aim to the actual trajectory of the bullet and lead to missed shots at long distances.

8. Adjustment Dials and Come-Ups—This is where a shooter’s homework and knowledge of long-range ballistic performance is critical. First, you need to determine how much each click of adjustment of the scope will move your point of impact and whether that measurement is in MOA or mils. The farther you plan to shoot, the more adjustment will be needed in the elevation department, so you need to make sure the scope has enough adjustment. (For a rough example, when shooting a .308 at a target 2,000 yards away, the bullet would have to arc to a height equivalent to a five-story building so that it would drop in and strike the target. That’s a lot of adjustment.)

You also need to understand dope sheets and come-ups or dopping elevation, meaning you have to know how much your bullet will drop at the distances you’ll be shooting. Other factors include velocity of the load at various ranges, elevation where the shot will take place, temperature, relative humidity, difference between the plain of the bore and the optic, and then you need to be able to make accurate calculations for the particular bullet to be shot. Maciak likes JBM Ballistics’ website at jmballistics.com as a good resource for developing his data. “Do your homework beforehand, and you don’t have to worry about that when it’s time to make the shot,” he says.

9. BDC Reticle—If the scope you are shooting has a BDC (Bullet Drop Compensating) reticle, the calculations are somewhat already done for you, but remember those reticles are made for a particular caliber or bullet at a specific elevation. They also tend to have been calculated based on average loads rather than specific ones, so you will still need to shoot your specific load and determine the actual drop with relation to the reticle’s hash marks in order to score downrange.

10. Wind—Entire books could be written on how to negotiate wind when shooting at distance, so we’re not likely to nail it down in a paragraph or two. Suffice it to say, understanding a bullet’s performance in the wind is a true art form, and the only way to begin mastering it is to spend a lot of time shooting windy conditions. Remember, wind where you are may be different than where the target is and can be influenced by the terrain the bullet must travel over. One trick is to use mirage, visible through a high-power optic to read the wind near the target and determine how far off to the side you must aim .

11. Shoot On the Bottom of Your Exhale—When you’re locked on a target, there is a rise and fall of your reticle from breathing and heartbeat. Remembering consistency is critical to shooting, if we shoot on the exhale, it gives us a consistent trigger time at a moment when the body is most relaxed. Hold that breath at the exhale for no more than three or four seconds. If you do, the body will start shaking because it’s technically becoming oxygen deprived. If you don’t make the shot in those three or four seconds, hold the shot. Wait, take another breath and settle back in.

12. Trigger Follow-Through—Pull the trigger back and hold it. Don’t slap it; don’t lift your head off the stock. You want to see the bullet impact through the scope, and holding the trigger prior to resetting it will help you retain sight of the target when you cycle the bolt for a second shot (if using a bolt-action). You won’t have to reposition the scope and your body because they are pretty much the same. Keep in position until the shot strikes the target. “Remember, you’re not done shooting until the bullet hits the target, which might be several seconds in long-range situations,” says Maciak. GDTM was getting closer to the target. I eased off the gas and slowed down to a crawl. According to my GPS, the target was somewhere out there hiding amongst the sagebrush and juniper trees. I edged the ATV farther along the trail, and there it was about 20 yards away. I dismounted, unholstered my pistol and crouched behind the ATV, keeping it between me and the gnome-sized steel target. I fired and hit. I holstered the pistol, took a look at the GPS screen and fired up the ATV. There were more targets to track down in the desert chaparral and the GPS would lead me to them.

The popular outdoor sport of geocaching involves getting some GPS coordinates from someone that has hidden a “treasure” out in the woods. You plug the coordinates into your GPS and set off to find the treasure. Usually it is a waterproof box where people swap some trinkets and sign and date a logbook leaving comments like, “Great hike with nice scenery” or “Sneaky spot—clever hiding place.”

The great thing about geocaching is that it gets you off the beaten path and encourages you to explore places you normally wouldn't know even existed. The coordinates could lead you to hidden valleys, lost waterfalls or even a forgotten cemetery.

At Gunsite, the 2,000-acre firearms academy near Paulden, Ariz., Ruger firearms and Yamaha four wheelers were added to the mix. A Garmin GPS would lead you to the treasure and the treasure was the target. The satisfaction was locating and navigating to the target in the middle of the high desert and then making the shot.

Like geocaching, geoshooting can be anything the course designer dreams up. Locating the treasure/target could involve a brutal hike or pleasant walk in the woods. Anything is possible with this new, perhaps unintended, shooting sport. Following is some of the gear used at Gunsite to offer an idea of how you might create your own geoshoot.

GARMIN TACTIX

The best thing about the Tactix was something I took for granted and only realized later how important it was: no-hand operation. When handling a long gun, it was extremely convenient to look at the watch-design GPS. I couldn't imagine being in a tactical or hunting scenario and fumbling with a hand-held unit or having to stuff it into a pouch while moving with a rifle.

The Tactix, branded as a "Tactical Ops GPS Watch," lives up to its name with almost all the same features you would find on a regular GPS unit plus some more for the Rambo crowd. It's night vision compatible; has tide data and skydiving software; an altimeter, barometer and compass, and a green backlight that doesn't glare.

RUGER SR45

Who says the GPS has to lead you to a target? A geoshoot could be rigged so that you start off with limited ammunition and you must find extra ammo along the way. That is what I thought of when I ran out of ammo at the last target—that it would be fun to hunt down a stash in the desert scrub and get back in the game.

We were using Ruger's SR45 and the geoshoot course had targets hidden along an ATV trail. Depending on where you stopped or if you moved in for a closer shot, many of the targets were out past 20 to 30 yards or more. That meant for some challenging long-distance pistol shots if you stuck close to the trail.

The SR45 performed exceptionally well and is an accurate and reliable shooter that had even less experienced handgun shooters hitting their targets reliably. The 8-inch overall length of the gun provided for an ample sight radius along which to aim, and the length combined with the 30.15 ounces of weight (unloaded) and semi-auto action mitigated the recoil sometimes associated with the heavy .45 ACP load allowing for quick follow-up shots when necessary.

The ballistics of the .45 lent themselves to the more distant shot presentations, but a geoshoot could be set up to allow for virtually any caliber.

RUGER SR-762

While preparing for the geoshoot, the Gunsite instructors worked us through a number of drills as we familiarized ourselves with the SR45 and the SR-762, burning through boxes of Hornady ammo. One of the drills was the Scrambler, a rifle course that requires the shooter to fire from field positions at near- to mid-range targets moving quickly from one shooting position to the next.

Some spots required the shooter to lean into a gnarled dead tree, another forced them to crawl into a doghouse-sized wooden box and take the shot from a prone position. While grubbing around in the desert grit, the shooters and the rifles got filthy but neither wanted to stop. It turned out the Scrambler was the most popular shooting drill and people kept lining up to run it again and again.

One of the reasons the shooters were so eager to keep running the Scram-bler was because the SR-762 has a mild recoil for a .308 caliber rifle. It was easy on the shoulder and didn't leave anyone feeling like they had enough punishment to rack their rifle for the day.

The SR-762 is as about as perfect as you can get for an all-around geoshooting rifle. The .308 can handle long-range sniper shots and the AR platform is perfect for tracking GPS targets in a tactical setting. The rifle is lightweight and with the collapsible stock, compact for toting on an ATV.

ARMED OPTIONS

Geoshooting can be what you make of it, and it starts with what kind of firearm you want to use and the environment and theme of the course of fire. Here are a few ideas:

- SNIPER FIRE: Use your GPS to mark a waypoint for the exact spot where you take the shot. The longest shot wins.
- AIR RIFLE: Perfect for Scouting groups. The young shooters hunt for small-game targets with their GPS.
- BIG GAME: Create a geoshoot to prepare for a Western hunt. Use life-size targets hidden in the far yonder.
- BIRD HUNTER: Use your GPS to find secret coverts. Portable and hidden traps fling clays imitating grouse.
- TACTICAL RIFLE: The GPS could lead you to a good guy or a bad guy or both.
- HANDGUNNER: You located the right spot but nothing is there. Then a target pops up. Make ready to draw fast.
- COWBOY ACTION: Use the GPS to track a band of scattered outlaws trying to outrun the posse (you).
- MUZZLELOADER: The coordinates follow a trapline being robbed by a four- or two-legged varmint.
- BOWHUNTER: Geoshooting is for all shooting sports. For archers, this can up your stalking game.

YAMAHA GRIZZLY 700 EPS

New for 2014, Yamaha introduced two new Tactical Black special editions for the Grizzly and the Viking (see below). Besides the black paint job, the Grizzly Tactical Black has a new camshaft, longer suspension, new chassis dimensions and new tire construction.

We tested the models on the trails of the Gunsite hinterlands that held washed-out gullies and boulder-studded streambeds. The steering and overall system were intuitive, which meant later during the geoshoot I could focus on finding the targets and not be distracted.

YAMAHA VIKING EPS

In the Gunsite back forty, I lost the trail and drove up an extremely steep hill, and I felt like I wasn't going to make it, like I was going to flip the thing and create all sorts of havoc. At the peak, the Viking felt like an Abrams tank cresting over an obstacle. I was impressed with the power but also impressed with the comforts. It has three individual seats when other competing models have only two. There are seatbelts and headrests for each person. Handholds are everywhere. Driving it feels like a cross between a Cadillac and a monster truck. GDM

THE MEANS OF PURSUIT

You must reach your target somehow. It could be 200 yards away or two miles. The event I attended and could be used as a geoshoot blueprint had ATVs and UTVs, and they added an element of excitement. The terrain and available space can make getting around half the fun during a geoshoot.

- ON FOOT: The simplest of all. This geoshoot could be a hike in the woods or a grueling test of endurance.
- ATV/UTV: Perfect for a geoshoot that requires you to cover lots of ground. Could be timed to test driving skills.
- BACKPACKER: See you in two days. The geoshooter must carry everything on his back over mountainous terrain.
- WATERCRAFT: The GPS leads you into a dark and maze-like swamp. Pick up your paddle and hunt for the targets.
- SKIS: Replicate a biathlon course where the winter snipers must stalk targets in the snowy woods.
- SNOWSHOES: A perfect match-up with a muzzleloader to mimic a trapper hunting through a frozen forest.
- HORSEBACK: Obvious for cowboy-action shooters. This geoshoot could be a multi-day trail ride or a quick shoot-out.
- SNOWMOBILE: Like ATVs, these are fun, and half the battle is keeping your eyes on the trail while looking for the target hidden in the thickets.

GEOSHOOTING: LOCATION & SAFETY

A facility like Gunsite is an obvious choice as a venue to host a geoshoot because of their professionalism and dedication to firearms safety. Around the sprawling range, signs are posted along the boundaries warning passersby they are nearing an impact area, and it would be prudent and life affirming not to enter. Many safety considerations have to be addressed when organizing a geoshoot.

The first question is public or private land. On some public lands, target shooting is not allowed so that nixes that idea. And even where allowed, it can be difficult if not downright impossible to control who enters an area and safety for competitors or passersby must always be of paramount importance.

Private land is a better option as it allows a course organizer to post warning signs to trespassers and also to design a geoshoot in ways that would be difficult on public land. Heavy steel targets could be left in place, various props can be used and the host can determine what restrictions, if any, to place on using motorized vehicles.

The AR-15 platform is known for its versatility, but the CMMG Mk4 RCE in 300 Blackout may just be one of the most adaptable and useful rifles on the market.

BY BRAD FITZPATRICK

The Renaissance Rifle

It's no secret that the AR-15 platform is reliable and versatile, and over the past five years these rifles have become commonplace from the hunting fields to long-range shooting matches, as well as in the home for defense. There are countless models, makes, chambers and configurations of the AR-15, and accessories abound. With the current availability of rifles and products, you can have a rifle designed to fit your particular needs and wants; it's a truly personalized weapon.

The AR-15 platform deserves the attention it is receiving, but for someone looking for an AR, perhaps their first AR, the choices can be overwhelming. There are dozens of companies offering a host of different rifles in every flavor, but picking the right gun for you can be a chore.

CMMG is one of the U.S. companies currently producing AR uppers, lowers, accessories and finished rifles, and if you believe that they're a new company that emerged in the middle of the AR boom you'd be mistaken. CMMG has been building AR parts and finished rifles since 2002, and as the brand has expanded so has its product line. Today, there are dozens of different versions of CMMG ARs.

I had a chance to test CMMG's new Mk4 RCE rifle in 300 Blackout, one of many AR rifles I've had in my hands this year. Frankly, I was assuming that the CMMG rifle would, in essence, be just like the others, and while the basic function and design of the rifle is similar to other ARs, the Mk4 RCE isn't your run-of-the-mill black gun. For starters, the design allows it to be accurate, versatile, compact and light. The M4 upper and AR-15 lower are both forged of 7075-T6 aluminum, which is durable and lightweight, and the flat-top receiver is perfect for mounting a variety of optics from iron sights to reflex optics or magnified scopes.

The 16-inch, matte-finished 416 stainless steel barrel is lightweight and corrosion resistant, and it's topped with CMMG's SV 4140 steel muzzle brake with a nitride finish. The free-floated aluminum handguard has a 1913 Picatinny rail on top, and at the 3, 6 and 9 o'clock positions it has KeyMod slots that allow you to mount optics, lights, lasers or anything else that you choose with the help of the KeyMod accessory rails. The trigger is a Geissele Automatics SSA two-stage model, and the collapsible stock a Magpul CTR with a Magpul pistol grip and trigger guard. In short the CMMG has all the parts needed to make an accurate, versatile and dependable rifle that's comfortable to shoot.

BARNES' VOR-TX AMMO IN .300 AAC BLACKOUT

Barnes revolutionized the design of all-copper bullets, and their VOR-TX line features ammunition loaded with their TSX, TTSX and TSX-FN bullets, all of which are designed for optimum accuracy and devastating energy transfer on game. Barnes' all-copper bullets have grooves in the shanks to help reduce drag and increase velocity. The 300 AAC Blackout ammunition tested utilizes the 110-grain TTSX bullet, which leaves the muzzle at 2,350 feet per second and generates enough energy for taking big game.

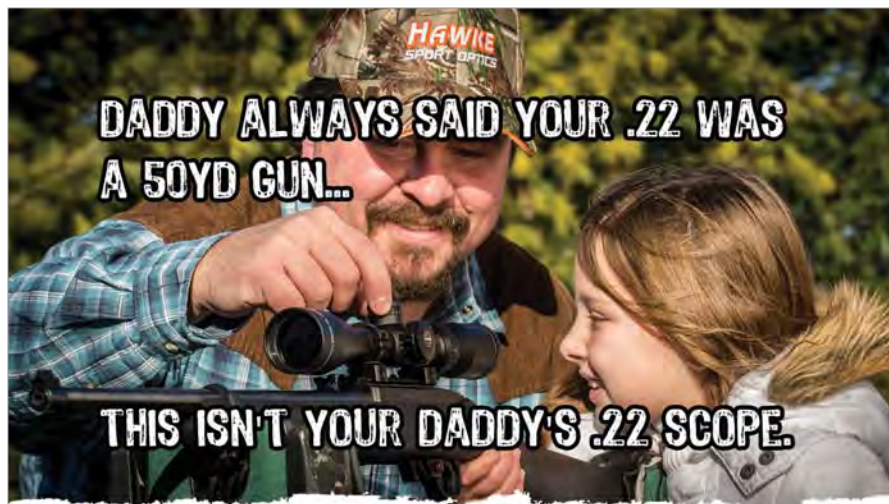

The VOR-TX bullets performed well in the CMMG RCE, producing sub-MOA groups at 100 yards and consistent velocities close to the advertised figures. Barnes features a wide variety of different loads in their VOR-TX lineup, which now also includes VOR-TX Safari and VOR-TX Handgun variants. No matter the game, Barnes offers an all-copper bullet in their VOR-TX line that will help produce superb accuracy and quick, clean kills. Visit their website at barnesbullets.com.—B.F.

According to CMMG's Tyson Bradshaw, it's no accident that the RCE is so versatile. He says that was the goal of this rifle from the beginning.

"We realize that a lot of our customers are using their CMMG rifles for more than one purpose, whether it's target shooting, 3-Gun competition, hog hunting or just home defense," Bradshaw says. "With the RCE, we wanted to come out with a superior firearm that could be used for anything and everything. To do this, we knew it had to be lightweight, accurate, fast shooting and comfortable. Everything that you see on the gun is there to achieve these ends. The RCE is a truly complete rifle, and it's already one of our hottest sellers."

Easy To Accessorize

The CMMG RCE is a light rifle, weighing 6.5 pounds unloaded, so it's easy to carry even on long shooting courses and extended hunts. The six-position stock is a nice feature and provides immediate changes in length of pull. One of the other nice features is the full-length handguard with the Key-Mod design. AR's are versatile in part because they're easily mounted with a variety of accessories, depending on what you're using the rifles for on a particular day. Yet guns that feature full-length Picatinny rails at the 3, 6 and 9 o'clock positions are heavier and less comfortable to hold, and odds are you aren't going to use the full length of the rails anyway.

The KeyMod system allows for the shooter to place the accessory rails in a variety of different locations as needed, while the majority of the handguard remains uncluttered and comfortable to hold. Changing the location of the KeyMods is simple, requiring only a Torx wrench to loosen the bolts enough to slide them into position in the handguard and tighten them into position.

On the range, the CMMG RCE performed well, proving that it's accurate enough for long-range shooting and hunting applications. The test ammunition was Barnes' VOR-TX loaded with 110-grain TTSX bullets, an accurate load that is an excellent choice for varmints, predators, hogs and deer. From 100 yards, the Barnes bullets averaged just over an inch and produced consistent velocities; the factory claim is 2,350 feet per second, and out of the CMMG's 16-inch barrel the chronograph showed that the velocities averaged 2,344 fps with very little variance. For an optic, I used Aimpoint's Micro H-1 4 MOA, selecting it because it was lightweight, durable and consistent. The combination of the CMMG RCE in 300 AAC Blackout, the Barnes VOR-TX ammo and the Aimpoint Micro H-1 proved to be a useful and functional shooting package.

I would have no qualms about hunting deer at moderate ranges with this setup, and it's light enough and maneuverable enough for competitive shooting and home defense. It would also serve well for varmints and predators in cover, but is perhaps the ultimate rig for hunting hogs. All of this versatility comes at a reasonable price ($1,400 suggested retail), and if I were looking for one do-all AR that was easy to shoot, fun to carry and deadly accurate, this rifle would definitely be at the top of my list. GDTM

Gemini Custom Ruger SP101

The Ruger SP101 is a workhorse of a revolver that is pretty darn good right from the box, but it can be slicked up, and this one from Gemini Customs is about as slick as they come. Gemini Customs specializes in working on Ruger revolvers, Smith & Wesson revolvers and 1911 semi-auto pistols. I was fortunate to get the opportunity to test drive this “Geminized” Ruger, and it is the best small revolver package I have ever shot. I was glad to see that the SP101 had a 3-inch barrel, as I believe that this barrel length provides the best compromise between ease of concealment and in-the-hand performance. You get a little more velocity and more sight radius, both of which help with accuracy and in putting increased energy into an attacker. Cosmetically, I think the 3-inch barrel just helps the SP101 look sleeker, too.

Ports & Grips

The two most recognizable features of the Gemini Custom SP101 are the grips and the barrel porting. I will be honest; at first when I saw the Hybra-Port porting I was a bit apprehensive. It did help control recoil and muzzle rise when using hot defensive ammo, but if you were warding off a combatant at close quarters with your non-dominant hand while trying to draw your weapon and fire from the hip, all of those hot gasses coming from the porting would be jetting right up into your face. Then, after much further consideration I realized that if you have an assailant in your face, a little hot gas is among the least of your immediate worries.

This brings us to the grips. Gemini Customs makes outstanding exotic wood grips with generous finger grooves. At first, the grips may seem to have a rather odd appearance as they angle farther away from the revolver than the standard Ruger grips; however, just because you may not have experienced grips like these before doesn't mean they're bad. In fact I found them to provide a solid hold that was comfortable and helped make the revolver a natural extension of my hand. Most small revolvers tend to bust my middle finger's knuckle and slam back into the web of my hand, making them painful to shoot after a short period of time. That didn't happen with the Gemini SP101, and I attribute that to the angle and hand-filling design of the grip. Gemini's exotic grips have become so popular that they can no longer supply them as an a la carte purchase and only offer them to customers who are purchasing a complete custom upgrade package for their handgun.

Triggers & Sights

The Ruger SP101 trigger is pretty good right out of the box and better than most of their small-frame competitors, which is good news. Better news is the fact that a good gunsmith can im-

PACKAGE DEAL

Currently the cost of Gemini's standard package for the Ruger SP101 is $460 on the customer's supplied revolver. The wait time on this one ran about five months, which was about what I would have expected. So here's what you get for your wait time and money:

- Ported barrel
- Action tuning
- Trigger is polished and recontoured
- Recrowned barrel
- Cylinder is tightened to eliminate end shake
- Cylinder throats are chamfered
- The hammer spur can be bobbed and the hammer mirror polished
- Dehorned
- Plunger and pins are polished
- Superfine matte glass bead finish
- The Gemini Customs logo is etched on the barrel prove the trigger pull and such is the case with the Gemini Customs SP101.

The trigger pull comes in at 9 pounds, 10 ounces for double-action and 2 pounds, 6 ounces for single-action. Both pulls are much smoother and lighter than the stock trigger, which also greatly aids in the accuracy the shooter can expect with the Gemini Custom revolver. In all, I was deeply impressed with the way the smooth and lighter trigger allowed me to keep the front sight on target all the way through the pull.

Straight out of the box the Ruger SP101 comes with a fixed notch rear sight and a black ramped front sight. On this custom model, Gemini Customs replaced the black ramped front sight with an XS Big Dot night sight. Gemini also offers a host of other sight options, including their branded Small Wonder fiber optic sights.

On The Range

Shooting the Gemini SP101 was pleasant. I did not fire .357 Magnum ammo through the SP101, but I did put several hundred rounds of 158-grain Magtech full metal jacket and 158-grain Remington Ultimate Home Defense lead hollow-point ammunition through the small revolver. I set a Birchwood Casey 3-inch target down to 15 feet in order to get to know the revolver a little better. I had been warned by the gun's owner that the large XS sight tended to push the shots a little low, and this turned out to be the case as all 15 rounds landed a little low and to the right.

I then ran another target down to 21 feet. I made sure the entire Big Dot was above the rear notch and centered on the target and was rewarded with a little wider but better centered group. From there I sent an 8-inch target out to 50 feet. The group was certainly wider, but all shots remained within the 8-inch circle, and quite frankly, this is pretty good darn shooting for me at 50 feet.

I then loaded the customized SP101 with the hotter Remington +P hollow-point ammo, and at 21 feet, I kept 11 out of 12 rounds within the 3-inch target. Lastly, I ran a standard silhouette out to 35 feet and put 20 rounds into the kill zone.

The Gemini Customs Ruger SP101 is a great little revolver, and the custom work from Gemini is surprisingly less expensive than I would have thought. I'll put it this way, you can buy a new Ruger SP101, send it to Gemini and get back one heck of a great revolver for less than you would spend on your next new 1911. GDTM

Don't Buy Survival Food... Until You Read This!

Bad news...

There are some people out there who think folks like you and me are a bit "odd".

They think having a stockpile ready for a disaster is something they can put off for "someday" or "never".

But those people are just hiding their heads in the sand. They are dead wrong -- and you are dead right.

You've seen the evidence and you know the situation is way too serious not to do something about it. When a crisis hits, you'll be ready. You'll make darn sure your family won't go hungry.

The fact is, if you don't take action or if you stockpile the wrong foods, you could be setting your family up to starve. It sounds harsh, but the truth is too many people with good intentions are making critical mistakes with their food stockpiles.

MISTAKES LIKE...

- Buying MREs (meals ready to eat) with a 5 year shelf life (depending on where you buy them, they could be nearly expired)...
- Getting gross survival foods that taste terrible and are so high in salt, MSG and preservatives you could clog your arteries and get yourself sick...
- Or simply buying the wrong foods and leaving a critical hole in your meal plan, which means your family can become malnourished...

Well, I decided to stop worrying. Obviously, waiting for the government to give me a hand-out in a disaster just wasn't an option for me. And I was completely turned off by the crazy prices of survival food sold by most stores.

So I got in touch with my buddy Frank Bates and put my order in for his Food4Patriots survival food kits.

This is Frank's new line of survival food:

- Food4Patriots is an incredible value. This high quality survival food is without any fillers or poor-quality "franken-food" that the other guys use to pad their survival meals. They are made and packaged right here in the U.S.A. You won't believe the prices on these kits -- a fraction of the price that other brands charge.
- There's no fancy packaging, it's military-grade sturdy stuff and can stand up to the crazy things that happen in a crisis. This food has a shelf life of up to 25 years, so you have complete peace of mind for the long term. And he's using the most compact kits so you can store them anywhere in your home without any extra hassle. They're sturdy, waterproof and stack easily. And extremely covert too.
- You can make these meals in less than 20 minutes; just add boiling water, simmer, and serve. I tried 'em and I think they taste as good or better than any other survival food I've EVER had. And you get a whole slew of choices for breakfast, lunch and dinner so you don't get stuck eating the same thing day-in and day-out.
- Frank has come up with some impressive FREE bonuses that are ONLY available to folks who purchase one of his kits on a first-come, first-served basis. For example, my 3-month kit came with 5,400+ heirloom survival seeds, 4 hard copy books, an 11-in-1 survival tool, and some other cool stuff.

Protect your family in a crisis with 25-year shelf life survival food from getfood70.com

I want to make sure you don't miss out on this because this is the #1 item to hoard today.

Here's why... If you don't take action to get your food stockpile right now, you'll be in the same boat as the brainwashed masses who think "everything is fine." And if a crisis hits and your family asks, "What are we going to eat?" your mouth will go dry and you'll feel powerless.

But what if you decide right now to secure your food stockpile instead? Just imagine how much better you'll feel right away. And if a crisis hits and your family asks, "What are we going to eat?" you'll calmly reassure them that they're safe and they will have plenty to eat.

Listen, I can't predict the future. I don't know exactly when or how a crisis will hit. But from everything I see, it could be soon and it could be a big one. That's why I really want you to get the same peace of mind that I do.

P.S. Got a call from Frank and you'll never believe who just tried to buy up his entire supply of food! You'll be shocked!

How a one-man operation in a Montana milk house became a major producer of bolt-action rifles.

BRAD FITZPATRICK

Jeff Sipe

When Brian Sipe of Montana Rifle Company realized that he needed a reliable, affordable action with a very specific feature list, he didn't wait for another company to design one for him. He made one himself. Today, Brian's son Jeff and his friend David Wisher are at the helm of Montana Rifle Company, and now in its 15th year of production, the M1999 rifle action has gained an impressive following.

How did Montana Rifle Company begin?

My dad, Brian, began as a gunsmith in 1990 in a 300-square-foot milk house, doing custom gunsmithing and building rifles. In 1991 he began building barrels. Later, he realized it was tough to find a custom action that was reliable and affordable, so he set out to build one. That became the Model 1999, named for the year it was completed. In 2003, the barrel facility was expanded, and he was building custom rifles on the M1999 action. In 2006 the barrel company expanded rapidly, and that growth continued until 2013 when we sold it. By 2007, the action company realized we couldn't source out our finishing work. We wanted a high-quality rifle, so we were going to have to do the finishing in-house.

What about your barrel-making division?

My father began as a barrel maker, and by 2006 that side of the business was really starting to expand quickly. In the beginning, we had the capability to produce about 10,000 barrels a year, but when we sold the barrel-making company in 2013, we were producing barrels for a number of companies and had the ability to make upwards of 600,000 barrels a year. [Author's note: The brand's barrel-making division, Montana Rifleman, was sold, but Montana Rifle Company is still building production and custom bolt actions in their Kalispell facility].

In the late 2000's, your company made some major changes. What happened?

We reorganized the company in 2011, and we named it the Montana Firearms Group, which included the rifle and action-making divisions. We began building complete production rifles and had our barrel making operation next door, so we could keep track of every facet of the rifle-making process. Those rifles began gathering the attention of the public when they won [some awards]. That's when things began to turn around and the public began to realize how good our guns really were.

What does the future hold for Montana Rifle Company?

In the future, we're going to start building our own custom synthetic stocks. The new high-speed molds that we are going to use allow us to set up a stock in about an hour, which is very quick considering that these are still carbon fiber, Kevlar-reinforced stocks. The old XWR rifles will be replaced and will now become known as the X2 line, and they will feature our in-house stocks. I'm really excited about the new design. It will also allow us to speed up production because we aren't relying on a stock maker to provide us with our synthetic stocks. GDTM

DROPS DEER LIKE MAGIC.

Sabots are known for accuracy. But, most sabots can't match the stopping power of a Brenneke® shotgun slug. Now, our new 12 Ga. Red Magic Sabot™ combines the legendary power and massive frontal of Brenneke™ slugs with the velocity and accuracy of a sabot. . . up to 3000 ft. lbs. of energy at 1,756 fps. Is it magic? No. It's Brenneke®.

Available for 2 3/4" and 3" chambers.

Exceptional performance in rifled or smoothbore barrels with any choke.

LEAD-FREE. SAFE FOR HUNTERS. NOT SO SAFE FOR DEER.

Our revolutionary new TKO™ (Tin KnockOut) shotgun sabot is the world's first lead-free slug designed for use in both smoothbore and rifled barrels, using any choke.

After years of painstaking R&D, we've created a 12 gauge projectile made of tin—yes, tin—that provides outstanding penetration, stopping power, accuracy, velocity and energy (2607 ft. lbs at 2001 fps), yet is completely safe for you and other living creatures. Unless you're a deer.

MULTI CALIBER ADAPTERS

ADAPTER & CONVERSION UNITS OF ALL TYPES:

- INSERTS FOR BREAK-OPEN SHOTGUNS
- CHAMBER ADAPTER FOR RIFLES
- CHAMBER ADAPTER FOR SPECIALTY PISTOLS
- ANTIQUES & WILDCATS CUSTOM MADE!

These inserts/adapters allow rifle owners to target practice at local indoor ranges where full power loads are prohibited, or take small game without the noise, meat destruction or the expense of full loads. As a survival device, my adapters are unequalled, allowing a single rifle or pistol to fire a variety of ammunition. New shooters will learn marksmanship without fighting recoil and loud muzzle blast.

STOP BURGLARS BY FORCE

It takes more than bells and sirens to protect your property. Even monitored alarms are too slow to trust.

The BURGLAR BOMB AB-2000 uses OC pepper spray to stop burglars before they take anything. A single BURGLAR BOMB controls up to 2000 square feet of indoor space.

Installs in 5 minutes. Airs out in 4 hrs. No cleanup required.

Can protect homes, businesses, garages, sheds, boats, travel trailers, gun cabinets, safes and more.

A Texas customer says our devices stopped 3 burglary attempts. A Florida customer reports no losses after 7 burglary attempts at his property.

Consignments Wanted

For Important Firearms Auction ~ October 7, 8 & 9, 2014

For years, the Julia Firm has consistently conducted the highest grossing Firearms Auctions in the industry. Their March 10, 11 & 12 auction was true to form and generated a new world record over $19.2 million. Also for years, Julia's has touted that they sell the greater number of high end expensive firearms. Once again, their historic March auction proved that. Over 550 lots generated $10,000 or more; over 49 lots generated $50,000 or more; and over 13 lots generated $100,000 or more. In addition, recently Julia's claims to handle the greater number of renowned collections in the firearms industry and indeed this was the case here. The headlines touted 12 phenomenal collections from iconic firearms collectors (but also included various others whose names could not be advertised). The sale was widely watched and anticipated by gun collectors, dealers, and gun enthusiasts. Most nearly any major niche in the current gun world was represented in proliferation, in both quality and quantity. Julia's is now amassing special consignments for their upcoming October sale which, based on collections in-house now, will once again prove to be a phenomenal auction. Whether you have one item or an entire collection, call today to be part of our Important Fall 2014 Auction.

Sampling of the Extraordinary Evergreen Ventures, Inc. Collection (McMinnville, Oregon) An extraordinary collection of Class III (Sold in Two Sessions. Session One will be included in our October Sale)

The Extraordinary Springfield Arsenal LLC Collection put together by renown artillery and cannon expert John Morris. We believe this will be the largest, most diversified and significant collection of antique cannons and artillery to be offered at auction in years. (Sold in Two Sessions. Session One will be included in our October Sale) Below is just a sampling of the many treasures to be offered.

NO REFUNDS GIVEN FOR CANCELLATIONS

HOW TO BUY GUNS THROUGH THE MAIL. Call the seller and talk. Don't ever call collect. Review the description of the gun. Double-check the specifics: caliber, barrel length, non-factory add-ons. Be thorough in detailing wear or damage that reduce the value. Be sure the seller will take the gun back within the standard five-day return period if it is not as described. The item must be returned prepaid. Send a certified check in payment for the gun and shipping. Personal checks will be held for clearance. Send a copy of FFL (Federal Firearms License). If you are not a dealer, contact your local gun store or pawnbroker. They will usually handle your transaction for a nominal fee. There are 88,423 FFL holders nationwide.

■ Advertising Policy

Buyers and sellers are required to know and comply with all applicable state and federal laws.

GUN DIGEST reserves the right to keep this publication strictly gun- and knife-oriented. The publisher may refuse ads which do not relate to knives, firearms and the shooting industry. The publisher also reserves the right to reject or withdraw any ad not in keeping with the standards of the publication.

GUN DIGEST has developed and maintains a series of advertising policies designed to facilitate the buying, selling and trading of knives, firearms and related merchandise and services through its pages. A copy of the current ad rate card containing those policies is available by contacting the ad sales staff. All ads which conform to the policies printed in our current advertising rate card will be published.

GUN DIGEST assumes no responsibility for misprints or claims and actions by advertisers. Gun Digest is not responsible for errors. All copy should be submitted electronically. However we do maintain a customer service department to investigate and act upon written complaints arising from transactions originated in our pages. Persons who encounter dishonest treatment should address a detailed written report to our Customer Service Department. Advertisers who are in violation of our policies may be subject to penalties including, but not limited to, suspension or revocation of advertising and/or subscription privileges, at the sole discretion of the publisher. The publisher reserves the right to - without prior notice - suspend application of these policies, to amend any policy or to create a new policy which in his sole opinion will facilitate fair play in a specific transaction or among the firearms collecting hobby in general.

Only guns will be allowed under specific headings for makes and models. Other items will be placed in classifications that are best-suited according to publisher's discretion.

GUN DIGEST FIVE-DAY RETURN PRIVILEGE

The cornerstone of the GUN DIGEST ad policies is the standard return privilege which applies to all transactions originating in the pages of GUN DIGEST, with the exception of layaways. That policy reads:

Unless stated otherwise in the ad, the buyer has five business days (M-F) to return merchandise from the time he receives the item from an advertiser. (Return package must be post dated no later than five business days after arrival of item to buyer's or FFL holder's address). The buyer does not have to give a reason for a return and can demand a refund less postage costs. The buyer can request, but not demand, a replacement. If the buyer requests it, the seller must refund the purchase price, rather than issue a credit or exchange. Merchandise returned must be in the same condition it was sent. In the event of a return, the seller may demand that the entire order, rather than a portion, be returned for a refund. We agree to restocking fees when the sale involves a new, in the box, firearm or if the buyer is legally unqualified to take possession of the firearm. There are no returns or refunds on custom work.

In the case of firearms shipped through a third-party FFL holder, the return period will begin the day the intermediary FFL holder receives the gun. It is the responsibility of the buyer to make arrangements to examine the gun and comply with the return policy while the gun is in the possession of the FFL licensee when federal, state or local laws prohibit its delivery to the buyer within the standard five-day period.

The Big Picture: Gun Sales Are Down

People in the shooting industry referred to it as "The Surge," that period from the end of 2011 through most of 2013 where retailers and FFL's sold AR-style rifles, handguns, ammunition and high-capacity magazines at a record pace. People bought and bought, prices went crazy and manufacturers and retailers posted record sales and profits.

Well, The Surge is over, and if the retailers, FFL's and shooting range operations that Gun Digest the Magazine have interviewed are any indication, much of the shooting industry is now in "The Slump."

"The firearms market seems to really be grinding to a halt all of the sudden," says John Lewis, firearms and hunting department manager for Herb Bauer

Sporting Goods in Fresno, Calif. "I am not sure if it is due to market saturation or summer preparation for vacations. Maybe fears of looming economic problems have people saving their money? But all of our distributors are saying the same thing nationwide—The Slump has arrived!"

During The Surge, gun shops couldn't keep many products on the shelves and racks, including AR-style rifles. Gun shops put out orders upon orders for these rifles. Manufacturers did what they could to respond, adding shifts and boosting production. After two years of relentless AR production, the inventory pipeline is now pretty full. But it isn't moving very fast at all.

"Many retailers are starting to dump now," says Miles Hall, co-founder of H&H Shooting Sports in Oklahoma City, Okla. "Dump," meaning slashing prices to move inventory. "The exception is the higher-end platform rifles in that $1,800 to $2,100 range. There's still a lot of demand for those rifles. But the entry- and mid-level platform rifles, in that $700 to $800 range? They are extremely hard to sell right now."

Unless those rifles are on sale. So the potential upside of The Slump, for consumers, is that the prices of many firearms and accessories are down. A recent and widely distributed analysis of the ammunition market also predicted a big drop on ammo prices in the very near future. That has yet to materialize, though retailers like Lewis and Hall note that their ammo shelves are relatively well stocked (the exceptions being .22 LR and .380 ACP).

One definite bright spot: handguns, especially the smaller models for concealed carry and self-defense, are still selling well. Lewis rates handgun sales at his Fresno store as "fairly strong," not bad for California, where lawmakers have tried to do all they can to block gun sales.

Nationally, as a report by CNN Money noted, "Smith & Wesson handgun sales jumped by nearly a third at the end of last year, and Colt Manufacturing sold 12 times as many handguns early this year as it did in 2013. And now Colt is moving to boost its handgun production by 50 percent."

"Our best scenario," says Lewis, "is to survive through the summer, get into August, and we should see a rebound with hunting firearm sales."

Concealed Carry and Creative Marketing Keeping Things Afloat

John Lewis — Herb Bauer Sporting Goods, Fresno, Calif., herbbauersportinggoods.com

While Herb Bauer's has definitely seen the effects of "The Slump," gun department manager John Lewis rates concealed carry handguns sales as, "fairly strong," especially for Smith & Wesson Shields, the Sig P238 in .380 and all Glock subcompacts.

"We just started offering a law-enforcement-only section of inventory, too," Lewis adds. "These are handguns not currently listed on the California Department of Justice Approved Roster. We can sell these to police through a practice known as Single Shot Exemption. It's been a help."

The gun department also got creative and offered a Mother's Day promotion package that featured a new Smith &

Wesson Shield, 50 rounds of ammunition and a free two-hour handgun orientation course for Mom taught by Lewis.

"It was a smashing success," Lewis says. "We sold well over 50 units."

The S&W Shield sold well in a Mother's Day promotion.

Snake Guns, Long and Short Barreled, Commanding High Prices

Scott Weber — The GunRunner Auctions, gunrunnerauctions.com

As "Market Trends" reported a couple months ago, Colt "Snake Gun" revolvers—the Anaconda, Boa, Cobra, Diamondback, King Cobra, Python and Viper models—are a hot collectible item. And they keep getting hotter.

At his June auction, Scott Weber, owner of the GunRunner Auctions, saw huge prices being paid, and veritable bidding wars staged, over a number of Colt Snake Gun revolvers he had for sale.

"A two-and-a-half-inch barreled nickel Python, with an original box, brought $3,670," Weber says. "A blued Python, also two-and-a-half inches, brought $2,440—without a box! And a two-and-a-half inch Diamondback .22, blue, $2,780. Amazing."

Weber also sold an 8-inch Python Nickel Target .38 Special for $3,110, a 4-inch nickel Python for $2,700 and a 6-inch nickel Python, with original box, for $2,920. "These are huge prices!" Weber notes, in some cases over $1,000 of what collectors were paying just two months before.

In collectible long guns, The GunRunner placed a very good condition Sharps Model 1853 "Slant Breech," .52-caliber percussion, single-shot carbine at $3,360. This was a seldom-seen early Sharps model "John Brown" with Sharps pellet primer system just forward and behind the hammer, a 21.5-inch round barrel, brass patchbox, brass barrel band, ladder rear sight and long ring bar with saddle ring.

Additionally, a Winchester Model 1873 in .44-40 caliber, a military lever action with an excellent bore, went for $5,700 on some spirited bidding; 39 bids were made before the hammer came down.

Old Bricks of .22 Long Rifle Bring Big Prices

Curt Kramer — Kramer Auction Service, LLC, Prairie du Chien, Wis., kramersales.com

Ammunition was a top seller at Kramer Auction Services' most recent auction. "Older stock .22 LR was bringing $50 to $75 a brick," notes owner Curt Kramer. "Most of the .22 LR we had was from the mid-1990s—not new, but not old enough to be considered collectible. Any good factory ammo sold for retail prices or better, especially in the odd calibers."

Kramer has also seen a growing demand for Japanese Nambu pistols from World War II. At this auction, he sold an 8mm Nambu, dated July 1942, for a somewhat surprising $1,430. That pistol was in very good condition, in a blued finish and came with the original wooden grips, a leather clam shell holster with strap, an extra, unmatched magazine, cleaning rod and 36 rounds of original ammunition. Another Nambu, with holster and magazines, sold for $1,210.

"Nambu pistols seem to be very collectible right now, especially if they have an original holster rig with them and matching magazines," Kramer notes. "If it's just the pistol, and it's in good condition, most of them sell in the $500 to $700 range."

The top spot at the auction, though, went to a Winchester 1873 Ulrich Engraved Deluxe Rifle, a .32-caliber long gun manufactured in 1889. The rifle's overall condition was nice but certainly showed some use. Yet the rifle, with a 24.25-inch half round, half octagon barrel, and engravings of white-tailed deer on the right and left side plates, still fetched an amazing $35,200. GDTM
